40, sq.). Thus it is meant, that if his very life's blood should be poured forth as a libation by martyrdom, in promoting so acceptable an offering to God as their faith, he should rejoice, as they would have reason to do, in the consolations of the Gospel; or, if he be even offered up in sacrifice for the service of their faith, that he may present them as a sacrifice to God accepted in faith; see Theophylact. Accordingly we have here a breviloquentia, for σπένδομαι ἐν τῇ θυσίᾳ ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ καὶ ἐν λειτουργίᾳ τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν. See also Theodoret.

Of the next words the sense is well expressed by Theophylact as follows: ὅμως οὐχ ὡς ὁ ἀποθανούμενος λυποῦμαι, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαίρω, καὶ συγχαίρω πᾶσιν ὑμῖν—χαίρω ὅτι σπονδὴ γίνομαι· συγχαίρω δὲ ὅτι τὴν πίστιν ὑμῖν ὡς θυσίαν προσάγω τῷ Χριστῷ.

19. Verses 19—31 form the second part of the Epistle. See Steiger.

— ἐν Κυρίῳ 'I.] To whom he refers his hopes, as well as every thing else. The words following the κἀγὼ are used elliptically; the full sense being, 'to send Timothy, that not only you may be fully assured of my state, but that I also, being assured of your condition, may be easy in my mind.'

20. ἰσόψυχον] i. e., as it were, one endued with the same soul and disposition, a second self. The word is very rare, though occurring in Ps. liv. 13, and the Schol. on Eurip. Androm. 419, ἰσόψυχα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις εἰσὶ τὰ τέκνα. Γνησίως means, 'with the same sincerely faithful feelings as he did;' compare 1 Tim. i. 2. So, in a funeral inscription, cited by Wetstein, on iv. 3, Μάριος Πούδης τῇ ἰδίᾳ συμβίῳ ἀρετῇ ζησάσῃ γνησίως καὶ σωφρόνως μετ' αὐτοῦ, 'faithfully and virtuously.'

21. οἱ πάντες] for οἱ πολλοὶ, the great bulk, supposed to be those of the Judaizing party. The οὐ may be taken with limitation, for non tam—quam. With the sentiment compare Josephus, Ant. iii. 8. 1, φύσει πάντας εἶναι φιλαύτους.

22. τὴν δοκ. αὐτοῦ γιν.] Meaning, 'the proof of him (i. e. his fidelity and constancy) ye have had and known.' So 2 Cor. ii. 9, ἵνα γνῶ τὴν δοκιμὴν ὑμῶν.

23. μὲν οὖν.] The force of this particle is resumptive: 'Him, then,' &c. 'Ως ἂν, 'as soon as.' So 1 Cor. xi. 34, ὡς ἂν ἔλθω. The full sense is, 'as soon as I shall have seen and ascertained the state of my affairs [so as to be enabled to say something positively].'

25. ἀναγκαῖον δὲ—ὑμᾶς.] The δὲ signifies, however; and Heinrichs thinks it stands for a clause; q. d. 'However (since these things, though probable, are yet uncertain, that you might not be any longer ignorant of the state of my affairs), I judged it necessary to send Epaphroditus, though he be not quite restored to health; yet, lest you should hear any false tidings of my fate or his, I thought it better to send him now, without waiting for another opportunity.'

— συστρατιώτην] 'colleague;' literally, 'comrade in the welfare of the Gospel.' An expression, it must be observed, among the ancients far more significant than with us; see Horne's Introd., vol. iii. p. 22. It is not agreed whether ἀπόστ. signifies messenger, or Bishop, or teacher, i. e. minister. The first-mentioned sense, occurring in John xiii. 16, and adopted by Theodoret and some eminent modern Expositors, seems to deserve the preference; for of the other significations there is very slender proof. Λειτουργ. τῆς χρ. is, I conceive, intended to complete the designation of Epaphroditus's office; namely, that of legate from the Philippians to Paul on the affairs of the Church, and bearer of the contribution which they had sent for his relief and support. See 2 Cor. ix. 12.

26. ἐπιποθῶν ἦν] 'he has been longing [to see] you all;' see Note at i. 8. Καὶ ἀδημ., &c. Render, 'and was much troubled on [learning that] ye had heard he had been sick.' So Hippocrates, cited by Wetstein, ἀλύων καὶ ἀδημονέων ὁ θυμός.

27. παραπλ. θαν.] Heinrichs thinks that propriety of language would require ἕως θανά-

Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἠλέησεν· οὐκ αὐτὸν δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμὲ, 28 ἵνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ λύπῃ σχῶ. Σπουδαιοτέρως οὖν ἔπεμψα αὐτὸν, ἵνα ἰδόντες αὐτὸν πάλιν, χαρῆτε, κἀγὼ ἀλυπότερος ὦ.
29 [y] Προσδέχεσθε οὖν αὐτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ μετὰ πάσης χαρᾶς, καὶ y 1 Cor. 9. 14. & 16. 18.
30 τοὺς τοιούτους ἐντίμους ἔχετε. [z] ὅτι διὰ τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Gal. 6. 6. 1 Thess. 5. 12.
Χριστοῦ μέχρι θανάτου ἤγγισε, ‡ παραβουλευσάμενος τῇ 1 Tim. 5. 17. Heb. 13. 17.
ψυχῇ, ἵνα ἀναπληρώσῃ τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα τῆς πρός με z 1 Cor. 16. 17.
λειτουργίας.
1 III. [a] ΤΟ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ· τὰ a 2 Cor 13. 11. infr. 4. 4. 1 Thess. 5. 16.
αὐτὰ γράφειν ὑμῖν ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐκ ὀκνηρὸν, ὑμῖν δὲ ἀσφαλές. James 1 2. 1 Pet. 4. 13.

του, as in Isaiah xxxviii. 1. This, however, is hypercritical. The Greek Versions and MSS. there differ; and, probably in the time of St. Paul, some copies might have παραπλ. τῷ θανάτῳ. That the Apostle had that passage in view is very probable, since he has no where else used the word. To the adverbial use of παραπλήσιον for παραπλησίως, no reasonable objection can be made, since it occurs in Thucydides, Herodotus, Polybius, and Lucian; and sometimes with a Dative, as Polybius iii. 33. 17. That it should be used with θανάτῳ is not strange, since Xenophon, Cyrop. v. 1. 11 (Ed. Thiem.), has παραπλησίως διακεῖσθαι· and Aristotle, ap. Steph. Thes., speaks of a disorder as μανία παραπλήσιον. But what decides this point is, that Hippocrates, Epid. I. (cited by Wetstein), has καὶ οὗτός γε πλησίον ἧκε τοῦ θανάτου κατ' ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν—πλησίον ἀφίκετο θανάτου, where πλησίον is, in like manner, an adverb.

— αὐτὸν ἠλέησεν.] An expression used agreeably to the uniform doctrine of the Holy Scriptures, that recovery from dangerous diseases is to be regarded as proceeding from Divine interposition, and as a mark of God's mercy.

— ἵνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ λύπῃ σχῶ.] The expression may be compared with one in Æschyl. Pers. 537, μὴ κᾶτα πρὸς κακοῖσι πρόσθηται κακόν. These words strongly attest the affectionate tenderness of the Apostle's heart; as the words ἀδημονῶν—ἠσθ. in the verse preceding do that of Epaphroditus.

28. σπουδ.] This is well rendered by the Vulgate, festinantius, and by Theophylact, ἀνυπερθετῶς, 'more hastily [than I otherwise should],' namely, for the reason mentioned at ver. 25. The words ἵνα ἰδόντες—ὦ contain another instance like those noticed on the preceding verse. Κἀγὼ ἀλυπ. ὦ, viz., by knowing that the person so much beloved by us all is restored to health again.

30. παραβουλ. τῇ ψυχῇ] 'not regarding his life;' literally, 'consulting ill for his life;' if, at least, παραβουλ. be the true reading; but some of the most ancient MSS., a few Versions, and some Fathers, have παραβολ., which is preferred by Salmas., Scaliger, Casaubon, Grotius, Newcome, Wakefield, Winer, Wahl, and most Critics; and has been edited by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. The common reading has, however, been ably defended by Hammond, Wolf, Heumann, Bengel, Elsner, Matthæi, Michaelis, Knapp, Schleusner, Storr, Heinrichs, Nolan, and Rinck, who urge, that though παραβουλεύεσθαι does not elsewhere occur, yet no authority is required for so ordinary a compound. I would add, that as to the authority of MSS. and Versions for the other reading, the MSS. are very few in number, and, though very ancient, are such as have been every where altered by the early Critics, who changed the popular expressions into Classical ones. And with respect to the Versions, they are worded so ambiguously, that it cannot be pronounced with certainty what the Translators read; though the sense 'not regarding his life,' or 'despising his life,' seems more to favour the old than the new reading. As to the authority of celebrated Greek Scholars, it cannot decide a question of this kind; for we may account for their predilection, in the same way as for the correction of those Critics who emended the MS. A. B., &c.; namely, from the perpetual occurrence of παράβολος and παραβαλέσθαι in a sense not unsuitable to the present passage; and the very great rarity of παραβουλεύεσθαι, which has been found no where else, except in the Greek Fathers. But that is no valid argument against the existence of it, since it is formed analogically. Thus it seems derived from παράβουλος, synonymous with κακόβουλος; and, though that word be rare, it is found in Du Cange's Gloss. Græc., accompanied with two authorities, and δυσπαράβουλος, in the sense here required, occurs in Æschylus, Suppl. 113. Also κακοβουλεύεσθαι in Euripides, Ion, 877, ψυχὰ δ' ἀλγεῖ, κακοβουλευθεῖσ' ἐκ, κ.τ.λ., and κακοβουλία in Josephus, Bell. i. 32, 3, though no example is adduced, even in the last edition of Steph. Thesaur.

From the nature of the expressions following, the best Commentators are inclined to think that the danger of life above adverted to was brought on by Epaphroditus's hastening forward to reach Rome, in order to fulfil his commission from the Philippians, in spite of a severe fit of illness which seized him, and with which he struggled so as to reach his destination and fulfil his commission, though almost at the expense of his life, since the disorder had become so aggravated as to prove nearly fatal.

III. 1. τὸ λοιπόν.] This may be rendered, henceforth, or as to what remains; for, as Steiger says, 'Il forme une transition des nouvelles précédentes à un sujet nouveau;' but the sense of this term and χαίρετε depends upon the point whether this verse be connected with the preceding, b Isa. 56. 10. 2 Cor. 11. 13. c Deut. 10. 16. & 30. 6. Jer. 4. 4. John 4. 24. Rom. 2. 29. & 4. 11, 12. Col. 2. 11. d 2 Cor. 11. 18, 21, 22. Rom. 11. 1. Acts 23. 6. e Gen. 17. 12.

[b] Βλέπετε τοὺς κύνας, βλέπετε τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργάτας, βλέ- 2 πετε τὴν κατατομήν· [c] ἡμεῖς γάρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομὴ, οἱ 3 πνεύματι ‡ Θεῷ λατρεύοντες καὶ καυχώμενοι ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἐν σαρκὶ πεποιθότες· [d] καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων 4 πεποίθησιν καὶ ἐν σαρκί. Εἴ τις δοκεῖ ἄλλος πεποιθέναι ἐν σαρκὶ, ἐγὼ μᾶλλον· [e] ‡ περιτομῇ ὀκταήμερος, ἐκ γένους Ἰσ- 5 ραὴλ, φυλῆς Βενϊαμὶν, Ἑβραῖος ἐξ Ἑβραίων, κατὰ νόμον or with the following; on which see Rec. Syn. Χαίρ. denotes such a cordial profession of the Gospel, as results from an adequate conception of the love of Christ. By τὰ αὐτὰ are meant 'the same things which we have urged to you before;' viz. by word of mouth; for it is not necessary, with some, to take γράφειν as put for λέγειν. Ἀσφαλὲς ὑ., 'makes you safe;' since, in the words of the adage, 'litera scripta manet.' With the antithesis here I would compare that in Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 5. 7, εὑροῦσα ἐπιστολὴν—ἐπικινδύνως ἐμαυτῇ, σοὶ δὲ ὠφελίμως ἀπέστειλά σοι.

2. The Apostle now subjoins an exhortation to depend on the Gospel alone for salvation, to the entire disregard of the Law; and warns them of the evil arts of deceivers. Βλέπετε is a strong expression, in which we have a metonymy of antecedent for consequent, and may be rendered, 'look to;' i. e. beware of. So 2 John 8, βλέπετε ἑαυτούς. The more usual syntax is with ἀπὸ and a Genitive, as in Mark viii. 15, and elsewhere. The persons designated by the term dogs (a word of reproach common to both the East and the West, and expressive of impudence and rapacity), are supposed to have been Jews, and those Judaizers who had privily crept in, and were sowing the seeds of Judaism. And as the persons in question had probably called the Gentile Christians of Philippi by this name, the Apostle retorts it on them. The expression also occurs in Rev. xxii. 15. Ἔξω δὲ οἱ κύνες καὶ οἱ φαρμακοὶ καὶ οἱ πόρνοι καὶ οἱ φονεῖς καὶ οἱ εἰδωλολάτραι. By the force of the Article, τοὺς κύνας should be rendered 'the (i. e. those) dogs;' and τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργ. 'the evil workers;' i. e. those who are performing an evil work, viz., the introducing of the law; corresponding to the ἐργάται δόλιοι at 2 Cor. xi. 13. So Theodoret, who explains, οὐ γὰρ οἰκοδομοῦσιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν οἰκοδομίαν κατασκάπτειν ἐπιχειροῦσι.

To the reproachful appellation τοὺς κύνας, the Apostle subjoins a sarcastic one in τὴν κατατομὴν, which the recent Expositors in general regard as denoting the action itself, and as opposed to περιτομή; q. d. 'beware of this mingling of the flesh [for it is no more], which they call circumcision.' But that would perhaps require ταύτην τὴν κατ. At any rate, on account of τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργ. preceding, to which this corresponds, τὴν κατ. must refer to persons, as indeed is plain from the next verse, ἡμεῖς γάρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτομή. The expression seems rightly regarded by Vorstius, Gataker, Grotius, Rosenmuller, and Wahl, as abstract for concrete, to denote those who maintained the necessity of circumcision, which is styled concision (or mangling), by way of contempt.

3. ἡμεῖς γάρ ἐσμεν ἡ περιτ.] Render, 'for we are the Circumcision;' i. e. we Christians are alone the professors of true circumcision; q. d. 'They ought not to arrogate to themselves alone the title of circumcision; for we Christians are (i. e. possess) the true circumcision, even that of the heart.' See Rom. ii. 10. 'It was,' observes Heinrichs, 'then customary with Christians to claim to themselves those appellations on which the Jews prided themselves.' Οἱ πνεύμ. Θεῷ λατρ. Render, '[we are those] who worship God spiritually,' i. e. pay that spiritual service enjoined by Christ, John iv. 23, or the reasonable service mentioned in Rom. xii. 1, 'and which (observes Bp. Middleton) made the essence, as distinguished from the barren ceremonial observances, on which principally the Jewish opponents of Christianity appeared to set a value.' Compare Rom. ii. 25 to the end of the Chapter. Instead of Θεῷ very many MSS., early Editions, and Fathers have Θεοῦ, which is adopted by Wetstein, Matthæi, and Griesbach, but without sufficient reason; since (as Bp. Middleton has shown) 'the propriety of the Article, as well as the context, exclude Θεοῦ, and require Θεῷ.' Καὶ καυχ. ἐν Χ. Ἰ., 'and who make our boast [not in Jewish rites and privileges, but] in Christ Jesus [only].' Σαρκὶ, i. e. carnal and external, as opposed to internal and spiritual religion.

4. καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων, &c.] Supply εἰμὶ, and render: 'Although I am one having (i. e. one who has) confidence.' The Apostle does not mean that he feels this confidence, but that he has or should have this ground of confidence, if such existed; and that he does not recognise such grounds, appears by the δοκεῖ of the following sentence; which, therefore, is not, as it is by some Commentators supposed, pleonastic. He means to hint, that he does not depreciate such grounds of confidence because he possesses them not. Nay, he goes still further,—declaring that he has more grounds of such confidence than any other; for that is undoubtedly the sense of the words εἴ τις—μᾶλλον, which are considered by most Commentators as a mere Hebraism. Yet I have remarked something similar in a passage bearing strong resemblance to the present, in Diog. Laërt. iii. 43, where he gives us the Inscription on the tomb of Plato: Εἰ δέ τις ἐκ πάντων σοφίης μέγαν ἔσχεν ἔπαινον, Τοῦτον (scil. τὸν ἔπαινον) ἔχει πλεῖστον. The brevity at ἐγὼ μᾶλλον appears to have arisen from the writer's wish to avoid seeming to recognise such grounds.

5. In proof of the assertion in ἐγὼ μᾶλλον, the Apostle here states the principal grounds of confidence on which the Jews trusted.

— περιτ. ὀκταήμ.] The sense of this idiomatical clause is, as Bp. Middleton remarks, 'being, in respect of circumcision, [circumcised] on the eighth day.' On the reading here, however, there has been some doubt. The Edit. Princ.

6 Φαρισαῖος, [f] κατὰ ζῆλον διώκων τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, κατὰ δικαι- f Acts 8. 3. & 9. 1.
7 οσύνην τὴν ἐν νόμῳ γενόμενος ἄμεμπτος. [g] Ἀλλ' ἅτινα ἦν & 22. 4. Gal. 1. 13.
8 μοι κέρδη, ταῦτα ἥγημαι διὰ τὸν Χριστὸν ζημίαν. [h] Ἀλλὰ g Matt. 13. 14.
μενοῦν[γε] καὶ ἡγοῦμαι πάντα ζημίαν εἶναι διὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον h Jer. 9. 23. John 17. 3. Col. 2. 2. τῆς γνώσεως Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου μου· δι' ὃν τὰ Wisd. 7. 9. πάντα ἐζημιώθην, καὶ ἡγοῦμαι σκύβαλα εἶναι, ἵνα Χριστὸν i Rom. 10. 3. & 1. 17.
9 κερδήσω, [i] καὶ εὑρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ, μὴ ἔχων ἐμὴν δικαιοσύνην & 3. 21, 22. & 9. 30.
τὴν ἐκ νόμου, ἀλλὰ τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ k Rom. 4. 25 & 6. 3. & 8. 17.
10 δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει· [k] τοῦ γνῶναι αὐτὸν, καὶ τὴν 2 Cor. 4. 10, 11.
δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστάσεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν κοινωνίαν τῶν 2 Tim. 2. 11, 12. 1 Pet. 4. 13.

has περιτομῇ; while the Editions of Erasmus, Stephanus, Beza, and Elzevir have περιτομή. Yet περιτομῇ was afterwards introduced into the textus receptus; and the MSS. would seem to be decidedly in favour of it. It is moreover preferable; since (as Bp. Middleton observes) περιτομὴ would require the Article ('my circumcision was an eighth-day one'), and thus the usus loquendi, by which adjectives of time in —ημερος and —αιος are applied to persons, not things, would be violated. The Jews regarded circumcision before the eighth day as no circumcision, and after that time as of little avail.

— ἐκ γέν. Ἰσρ., φυλ. Βενϊαμίν.] Render: 'by nature an Israelite, by tribe a Benjaminite.' I would compare what Josephus says of himself in his Preface to Bell. Jud. § 1, γένει Ἑβραῖος. This he mentions in order to show the genuineness of his Judaism, viz. as being a Jew by birth, not one become so by proselytism; and that birth of a tribe not contaminated by foreign admixture. Ἑβρ. ἐξ Ἑβρ., scil. πεφυκὼς, 'a Hebrew descended from parents who were both Hebrews.' By the same idiom it is said, Eurip. Alc. 677, Θεσσαλὸν κ' ἀπὸ Θεσσαλοῦ πατρὸς γεγῶτα. Liban. Or. 651, ἐλεύθερός τε καὶ ἐξ ἐλευθέρων. Lysias: δοῦλος καὶ ἐκ δούλων. Propert. iv. 2, 'Tuscus ego Tuscis orior.' Carpzov observes, that the appellation is not properly synonymous with Ἰσραηλίτης, which is a religious, as that is a political designation. By νόμον must (as the best Commentators are agreed) mean the ἔθη peculiar to Pharisaism: a very rare signification, but of which I have myself adduced two examples in Rec. Syn., Aristoph. Av. 1343, and Thucyd. vi. 16.

6. κατὰ ζῆλον διώκων τὴν ἐκκλ.] The sense is: 'As to zeal, that was attested by my persecution of Christians.' Κατὰ δικαιοσύνην — ἄμεμπτος. It is commonly supposed that δικ. here denotes a diligent observance of the law; q. d. 'as far as regards an exact observance of the law, I was irreprehensible.' But the sense seems to be: 'As far as regards the justification to be obtained by the law, I was irreprehensible.'

7. ἅτινα] i. e. the things just mentioned and such like. Under ἀλλ' ἅτινα there is much meaning couched, which may be thus unfolded: 'These things were such as to bring me into great credit with our ecclesiastical rulers; these gained me reputation (see Acts ix. 1), and would have raised me to dignities and emoluments, as introduction into the Sanhedrim, &c., but all these opportunities of advancement (on my change of views and conversion to Christ) I no more regarded than if they had been sources of loss, i. e. I regarded them not only as useless, but injurious.' So, in the next verse, he says he accounts them as not merely valueless, but contemptible.

8. ἀλλὰ μενοῦνγε—Κυρίου μου.] This is partly explanatory of the preceding, and partly said per epanorthosin. The full force of the words is, 'And not these things only, but all other things of the flesh, which are thought honourable and profitable, did I despise. Nay, to the present time I continue to think all things but loss,' &c. Διὰ signifies 'on account of,' which implies comparison with. Τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γν. is for τὴν γνῶσιν τὴν ὑπερέχουσαν. It was the excellency of that knowledge which induced the Apostle to make the sacrifice of whatever came in competition with it. Σκύβαλα is by some eminent Commentators interpreted, not dung, but dross, dregs, refuse. But of that signification there is no good proof. As illustrative of the sentiment, Wetstein cites Apuleius Flor. 2, 'Cratetem rem familiarem abjecisse, velut onus stercoris, magis labori quam usui.' Plaut. Truc. ii. 7. 5, 'amator, qui bona sua pro stercore habet.'

— ἵνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω] i. e. 'obtain the benefits purchased by the sacrifice of Christ.'

9. καὶ εὑρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ, &c.] This is explanatory of the nature of the benefit from Christ, and has an allusion to the mode by which it is effected. Εὑρ. is not (as most recent Commentators suppose) put for ὦ, but there seems to be an allusion to the judgment of the great day. Thus the sense is: 'and be [at the last] found united to him in faith and obedience.' Ἐν αὐτῷ denotes the spiritual union mentioned by our Lord in John vi. 56, ἐν ἐμοὶ μένει, κἀγὼ ἐν αὐτῷ; and the next words hint at the means by which it is to be effected. Μὴ ἔχων, &c.; i. e. 'not having, as a dependence, the righteousness obtainable by the law (see Rom. iii. 20), but the justification [obtained through faith in Christ].' The next words, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικ. ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, are exegetical of the preceding, where at ἐκ Θεοῦ sub. διδομένην. Ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει, 'on condition of faith.' See Whitby.

10. τοῦ γνῶναι αὐτόν.] Sub. ἕνεκα. It is put for ἵνα γνῶ, 'so that I may [but] know him,' &c., intimating the difficulty of the thing, in order to excite them to exertion. This must be connected with the first clause of ver. 8, the words δι' ὃν—ἐπὶ τῇ πίστει being in some measure parenthetical. It is well remarked by Bengel, 'reassumit mentionem cognitionis ver. 8, fac-l Acts 26. 7. παθημάτων αὐτοῦ, συμμορφούμενος τῷ θανάτῳ αὐτοῦ, [l] εἴπως 11 m 1 Tim. 6. 12. καταντήσω εἰς τὴν ἐξανάστασιν ‡ τῶν νεκρῶν. [m] Οὐχ ὅτι 12 Heb. 12. 23. ἤδη ἔλαβον, ἢ ἤδη τετελείωμαι· διώκω δὲ εἰ καὶ καταλάβω, ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ κατελήφθην ὑπὸ [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ ['Ιησοῦ]. 'Αδελ- 13 n Ps. 45. 11. Luke 9. 62. φοί, ἐγὼ ἐμαυτὸν οὐ λογίζομαι κατειληφέναι· [n] ἓν δὲ, τὰ μὲν 14 1 Cor. 9. 24. 2 Tim. 4. 7. Heb. 12. 1. ὀπίσω ἐπιλανθανόμενος, τοῖς δὲ ἔμπροσθεν ἐπεκτεινόμενος, κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω ἐπὶ τὸ βραβεῖον τῆς ἄνω κλήσεως τοῦ tam, nunc uberius explicandam.' By knowing Christ we are to understand, not a bare or theoretical knowledge of him, but a practical and experimental one,—one accompanied with a spiritual gust,—a lively perception of the virtue of his death and resurrection,—a full and experimental knowledge of the Gospel, through which salvation is offered. 'The Apostle,' says Hyperius, 'divides this knowledge into two parts, namely, into knowledge of Christ glorified by the power of the resurrection, and of Christ humiliated by his afflictions.'

By τὴν δύναμιν τῆς ἀναστ. α. is meant its efficacy in confirming our faith in, and hope of salvation through, him (see 1 Pet. i. 3, 4); for, as Calvin observes, 'tum rite cognoscitur Christus, dum sentimus quid valeat mors ejus, et resurrectio, et qualiter in nobis sit efficax.'

By γνῶναι τὴν κοινωνίαν τ. παθ. is meant 'to experience a participation in his sufferings,' i. e. to know them experimentally, and feel their necessity. The next clause is explanatory of the preceding, showing the mode of that knowledge, and the sense is, 'being conformed, or likened, unto him in his death.' See Calvin and Hyperius, Whitby and Scott.

11. εἴπως] for ἵνα, ut, as often in the New Test., or rather, 'in order that by any means, by any sacrifice,' as it is taken by Theodoret. See also Beng. and Scott. So the Editor of Steiger remarks, 'Exprime la difficulté et la langueur de la carrière, à travers de souffrances.' It is strange that any doubt of the resurrection should ever have been thought to be imported; for by ἐξανάστ. is denoted not simply resurrection, but the resurrection of the just, in order to be received into celestial glory. So Dr. Worthington, Serm., p. 476, observes that 'the word here means the resurrection, as viewed in the happy consequences of it,—glory, honour, and immortality.' The word is one of very rare occurrence, elsewhere signifying only a rising up from ambush. The Editor of Steiger observes, that by this modest expression, εἴπως, &c., Paul paves the way for the subsequent thought at ver. 12.

12. οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη ἔλαβον.] The Editor of Steiger well remarks, that the ὅτι has reference to ver. 8, the principal proposition; q. d. 'In saying that I regard all these things as mere loss and as dung in comparison with the excellent knowledge of Christ, I mean not to say that I have arrived at perfection.' In short the full sense of this elliptical expression is, 'Not that I mean to say, I have already attained [the certainty of salvation].' See 1 Cor. ix. 27. Τετελ. is usually rendered, 'were made perfect.' But the best Expositors are agreed that in this (as well as in διώκω, καταλάβω, and other terms occurring in this and the next verse), there is an agonistic metaphor, as in Luke xiii. 32, and Philo, p. 74, ὅταν, ὦ ψυχὴ, τελειωθῇς, καὶ βραβείων καὶ στεφάνων ἀξιωθῇς. From which, and other passages, it is clear that τελειοῦσθαι was a word denoting to reach the goal as victor, and receive the prize. At εἰ καὶ καταλ. there is (as at Acts viii. 22, and often) the ellipsis of some verb of striving; i. e. 'striving that I may reach;' for εἰ is equivalent to ὅτι, intimating, however, a modest doubt of success.

The words ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ κατελ. are obscure, and variously interpreted. The ancient Commentators and Grotius were, I think, right in recognising at κατελήφθην an allusion to the extraordinary manner in which Paul was, as it were, pressed into the Christian stadium. Thus the sense appears to be, 'in order that I might obtain that for which I was even laid hold of by Christ [at my conversion].' So the Pesch. Syriac and Vulgate well render comprehensus sum. There seems to be an allusion to the impressment of soldiers, sailors, or labourers, for the public service, of which we occasionally read in the Classical writers. Thus Thucyd. vi. 22, ἄγειν σιτοποιοὺς ἐκ τῶν μυλώνων ἠναγκασμένους ἐμμίσθους, where see my Note. The Editor of Steiger remarks, that Paul meant to express the analogy which subsists between these two actions,—that of Paul in grasping at perfection, and that of Christ in seizing Paul; and this was expressed by the double καὶ, put before and after the particle, which binds the two analogous thoughts; thus expressing two ideas at once.

14. ἓν δέ.] This is, Steiger observes, in opposition to what follows, and we must supply σκοπῶ or διώκω from the subsequent context. 'Επιλανθανόμενος, 'unheedful of,' as in Heb. vi. 10, and elsewhere. Τὰ ὀπίσω must at least include all his past attainments and services for the Gospel. The term ἐπεκτεινόμενος is highly appropriate to the racer,—whether on foot, or on horseback, or in the chariot; since the racer stretches his head and hands forward in anxiety to reach the goal. So, in the passage of Horace, Sat. i. i. 115, cited by the Commentators: 'Instat equis auriga suos vincentibus, illum Præteritum temnens extremos inter euntem.' In this and other passages here cited, the racer is graphically described as thinking not of the space already run ('nil credens actum, cum quid superesset agendum,' as says Lucan, Phars. ii. 657), but looking solely to what remains; and, regardless of the progress made, stretching forward to traverse that which separates him from the goal. I would compare a similarly metaphorical passage in Diog. Laërt. v. 20, ἐρωτηθεὶς πῶς ἂν προκόπτοιεν οἱ μαθηταί; ἔφη, ἐὰν τοὺς προέχοντας διώκοντες, τοὺς δὲ ὑστεροῦντας μὴ ἀναμένωσι.

15 Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [o] Ὅσοι οὖν τέλειοι, τοῦτο φρο- [o] 1 Cor. 2. 6. Gal. 5. 10 νῶμεν· καὶ εἴ τι ἑτέρως φρονεῖτε, καὶ τοῦτο ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῖν 16 ἀποκαλύψει. [p] Πλὴν εἰς ὃ ἐφθάσαμεν, τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν [p] Rom. 12. 16.
[κανόνι, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν]. & 15. 5, 7. 1 Cor. 1. 10. Gal. 6. 16.
17 [q] Συμμιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, ἀδελφοί, καὶ σκοπεῖτε τοὺς [q] 1 Cor. 4. 16. & 11. 1.
18 οὕτω περιπατοῦντας καθὼς ἔχετε τύπον ἡμᾶς. [r] πολλοὶ 1 Thess. 1. 6. [r] Gal. 6. 12.

The expressions βραβεῖον and ἄνω κλ. have allusion to the βραβευτὴς or ἀγωνοθέτης, who sat on an elevated seat, and called forward the candidates for the βραβεῖον or prize.

15. There is here (observes Aretius) an inference subjoined to the argumentation, wherein the Apostle concludes what he had to say on this subject, and draws forth a common rule to be observed in this whole question. One cannot but observe the address and delicacy with which the Apostle passes from the indirect admonition of the preceding verses, 8—11, to the direct exhortation contained in the present; and that first introduced, per κοίνωσιν, with 'we,' but immediately changed to 'ye.' Τέλειοι the best Commentators interpret of 'full growth in Divine knowledge,' the sense being, 'fully instructed in the Christian religion,' as in 1 Cor. ii. 6. So also ταῖς φρεσὶ τέλειοι γίνεσθε, 1 Cor. xiv. 20. But it may better, with most Expositors, be taken of persons who have attained to a comparative perfection, i. e. far advancement in moral and religious knowledge and Christian virtue, especially the latter. So Matt. v. 48. xix. 21. Col. i. 28. iv. 28. James i. 4. iii. 2. Ephes. iv. 13. So Ecclus. xliv. 17. Isocr. Panath. p. 239, τελείους ἄνδρας εἶναι, καὶ πάσας ἔχειν τὰς ἀρετὰς, and Simplic. on Epict., p. 289, who says, 'Make it your study to live ὡς τέλειον, οὐχ ὡς τέλος ἀπειληφότα,' &c. i. e. the life of a perfect man, not as though you had already attained perfection, but as always advancing towards it. Τοῦτο φρ., 'let us aim at being thus disposed,' i. e. (says Calvin) 'abdicando rerum omnium fiduciam, ut in sola Christi justitia gloriemur, et, posthabitis omnibus, aspiremus ad communicationem passionum ejus, quæ nos ad beatam resurrectionem ducat.' The next words, καὶ εἴ τι—ἀποκαλ., are obscure; but the best Commentators are agreed that there is an allusion to the prejudices of weak, but sincere, Jewish converts, and the misconceptions of others. Thus the sense is, 'And if there be aught wherein ye are of different sentiments from the foregoing views, this prejudice, or error, God will, I trust, even remove, and thus open to your minds the light of truth.' We need not, however, understand by ἀποκαλ. any supernatural revelation, but such an enlightening as would result from the diligent exercise of the understanding, under the ordinary influences of the Spirit. See John i. 17. Ps. xxv. 12.

16. πλὴν εἰς ὃ—φρονεῖν.] Of this passage both the reading and the interpretation have been controverted. Some ancient MSS. and Versions omit κανόνι — φρονεῖν; others, κανόνι only; others, again, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν; and in some the words are transposed. Griesbach has cancelled all the words. Vater has bracketed them. Tittman brackets only the τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν. The first-mentioned Editor seems to have been induced to cancel them all, from a rule in criticism,—that a passage which is variously read in the MSS. is probably spurious. That rule, however, has many exceptions; and, among others, when a passage is obscure, and there are many alterations, whether by omission, alteration, or transposition, all tending to remove the difficulty. Now to cancel such a passage would be as uncritical as cancelling a passage merely because it is difficult. Of this kind is the passage before us; and therefore I agree with Wolf, Wetstein, Matthæi, Rinck, and Scholz, that the words must not be cancelled, nor even altered, since the transposition arose from certain words being first omitted, ob homœoteleuton, and then introduced in the wrong place. Besides, the cancelling would compel us to take τῷ αὐτῷ for τούτῳ, which cannot be allowed; not to say that ἐν τούτῳ or ἐν αὐτῷ would have been required, as in Col. ii. 6: and the sense, 'that they should use the knowledge they had attained unto, and apply it to practice,' though good, seems not to be the whole of what was meant. The Apostle intended, I conceive, to engraft on that admonition another, viz. to preserve unity of doctrine and concord in general. The Apostle, I apprehend, intended to include both the above-mentioned senses,—the latter as connected with the former; τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν, which is equivalent to τὸ ἓν φρονεῖν, being added, to engraft the one upon the other, as in Rom. xii. 16. xv. 5. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. Indeed, as in many other passages of St. Paul, two clauses are here blended into one, and consequently there is a peculiarity of phraseology as well as a brevity. If written at length, the passage would have run thus: Πλὴν εἰς ὃ ἐφθ., τούτῳ [δεῖ] στοιχεῖν· τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι. The πλὴν is very elliptical, and may mean, 'But [be that progress what it may].' So in a kindred passage of Rev. ii. 25, πλὴν ὃ ἔχετε, κρατήσατε ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἥξω. Thus the general sentiment has been well expressed by Hyperius thus: q. d. 'Verum quidem est, non omnes æquè perfecti sunt, et parem adepti cognitionem; nihilominus tamen contenti quisque cognitione et perfectione, quam adepti sumus, debemus paribus animis, et æquè ardenti studio eniti, semperque elaborare, ut indies perfectiores evadamus, summâ inter nos concordiâ, eandem sententiam de salute per Christum parandâ tueamur.' The expression τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι is parallel to that at Gal. vi. 16, ὅσοι τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ στοιχήσουσι. The rule here meant is that of the right doctrine of faith just laid down.

17. συμμιμ. μου γίνεσθε.] The Apostle concludes with a weighty exhortation. 'Be joint imitators of me,' i. e. unite in following my example. The συν is used as at συναθλοῦντες, i. 27. Σκοπεῖτε—ἡμᾶς. Meaning, 'And observe [for imitation] those who so act, as you see us acting, and have us for an example [therein].' On τύπον see Acts vii. 44.

γὰρ περιπατοῦσιν, οὓς πολλάκις ἔλεγον ὑμῖν, νῦν δὲ καὶ
s Rom. 8. 5. & 16. 18. 2 Cor. 11. 12, 15 Gal. 6. 13. t Eph. 2. 6. Col. 3. 3. 1 Thess. 1. 10. Titus 2. 13. Heb. 13. 14. u 1 Cor. 15. 43, 51. Col. 3. 4. 1 John 3. 2. Eph I 19 κλαίων λέγω, τοὺς ἐχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ Χριστοῦ· [s] ὧν 19
τὸ τέλος ἀπώλεια, ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ἡ κοιλία, καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχύνῃ αὐτῶν, οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρονοῦντες. [t] Ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ 20 πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς ὑπάρχει, ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν· [u] ὃς μετασχηματίσει τὸ 21 σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως ἡμῶν, [εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ] σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ

18, 19. These verses are in some measure parenthetical. After περιπ. the Commentators suppose an ellipsis of καθὼς, or ἑτέρως; but there seems rather to be an aposiopesis, for delicacy's sake. In the place of a term to characterize their conduct, the Apostle chooses to describe the persons,—first generally, as enemies of the cross of Christ; then under their principal individual characteristics. First, then, they are designated generally, as the enemies of the cross of Christ; i. e. inimical to the doctrine of a crucified Redeemer, through the sacrifice of whose death circumcision was become unnecessary (see Notes on Gal. v. 11. vi. 12. 14), and in general utterly averse to the humbling and spiritual doctrines of the Gospel. Of these it is first said, for warning to others, that their end is destruction; meaning, that their conduct, if persisted in, must terminate in their perdition. See Jude 13, and compare a similar sentiment of a Rabbinical writer, cited by Wetstein: 'Quorum finis est in destructionem.' They are then characterized by their chief personal traits,—sensuality, a shameless impudence in glorying in their false doctrines and licentious practices, and a general worldly-mindedness. Of these the first is expressed by a comparison used in Rom. xvi. 18, where see, and elsewhere. Several parallel sentiments are adduced by Grotius, Wolf, Alberti, and Wetstein, the most apposite of which are the following: Eurip. Cyclop. 335, ἃ 'γὼ τινι θύω, πλὴν ἐμοὶ (θεοῖσι δ' οὔ), Καὶ τῇ μεγίστῃ γαστρὶ τῇδε δαιμόνων· Ὡς τοῦ πιεῖν γε καὶ φαγεῖν τοὐφ' ἡμέραν Ζεὺς οὗτος ἀνθρώποισι τοῖσι σώφροσι. So the life of the glutton is well depicted by Epictetus ap. Stob. Serm. C. 120. frag. 94. Ed. Schweigh., νάττω τουτονὶ τὸν θύλακον (I stuff up this sack), εἶτα κενῶ.

19. καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῇ αἰσχύνῃ αὐτῶν.] Denoting a hardened insensibility to shame,—a glorying in that of which they ought to be ashamed. So Polyb. cited by Raphel., ἐφ' οἷς ἐχρῆν αἰσχύνεσθαι, ἐπὶ τούτοις ὡς καλοῖς, σεμνύνεσθαι καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖν. Cicero, in Verr. lib. ii. 47, 'homines quos——ipsius nequitiæ fama delectat.'

— οἱ τὰ ἐπίγεια φρ.] Render, 'whose minds are devoted to earthly things;' of course, to the neglect of heavenly ones. See Col. iii. 2. Wetstein compares Hom. Od. xxi. 85, ἐφημέρια φρονέοντες. To which may be added Æschyl. ap. Stob. p. 98, ὅ τι γὰρ βρότειον σπέρμ' ἐφημέρια φρονεῖ.

20. This verse connects with ver. 17, to which the γὰρ refers, vv. 18 and 19 being parenthetical. Πολίτ. may denote either conduct, manner of living, ἀναστροφὴ, as it is commonly interpreted, or citizenship, as many modern Commentators explain; or, again, community, political society, as Parkhurst and Wahl: which last sense, as it is most agreeable to the context and the usus loquendi of the later writers, so it is also confirmed by the expression of Eph. ii. 12, ἡ πολιτεία τοῦ Ἰσραήλ. Thus a clause will have to be supplied; q. d. 'thither therefore our minds ought to be directed.' So Philo says, ἐν οὐρανῷ πολιτευόμεθα; and Anaxagoras, ii. 7, on being asked what was his country, answered by pointing to heaven.

— ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα Κ. Ἰ. Χ.] The ἐξ οὗ is for ἐξ ὧν, scil. οὐρανῶν, by a common figure. The words have reference to the omitted clause, and suggest a reason why we should give our chief attention to heavenly things, namely, because we expect from thence the Saviour, who will richly reward all our patient endurance here; see 2 Tim. iv. 18. Ἀπεκδεχόμεθα denotes anxious expectation.

21. In touching on the redemption to be bestowed on all who make good their title to the heavenly citizenship, the Apostle, with admirable address, adverts to that which is (as we learn from 1 Cor. xv.) to be the commencement of the rewards Christ will bestow, and, as it were, a pledge for the rest. On this point he has, with great judgment, taken his stand; since it suggests a strong motive to resist temptations to sensuality, selfishness, and worldly-mindedness; namely, Why should I take so much thought for this wretched and perishable body—this paltry self—when by resisting temptations I may expect that this very body will by my Saviour be changed into a body similar to his glorious body, and be made capable of pleasures, 'such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive?'

— ὃς μετασχηματίσει, &c.] Μετασχηματίζω signifies, to change the σχῆμα or form of any thing, as 2 Cor. xi. 13. 15. 1 Cor. iv. 6. The words εἰς τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ, not found in some MSS., are rejected by most Critics, and are cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz.

'Σύμμορφον,' observes Steiger, 'indicates the result of the μετασχημ. It is the predicate. Σύμμ. means of the same form and nature (see Rom. viii. 29) with Christ's (a change necessary previous to our admission, 'for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal put on immortality,' 1 Cor. xv. 25); namely, his glorified nature.' And Steiger remarks, 'that as Christ has taken the μορφὴ of the human nature in all the misery of that μορφὴ, so shall we obtain the μορφὴ of the nature of Christ in all its glory;' for, as Bengel remarks, 'non mors salutem dabit sed gloriam.'

— κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν—πάντα.] We have here 'an argument à majori ad minus, meant to 1 δύνασθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι ἑαυτῷ τὰ πάντα. IV. [a] Ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ καὶ ἐπιπόθητοι, χαρὰ καὶ στέφανός 2 μου, οὕτω στήκετε ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀγαπητοί. Εὐωδίαν παρακαλῶ, καὶ Συντύχην παρακαλῶ, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν Κυρίῳ.

3 * [b] Ναὶ ἐρωτῶ καὶ σὲ, σύζυγε γνήσιε, συλλαμβάνου αὐταῖς, αἵτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ συνήθλησάν μοι, μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν συνεργῶν μου, ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς.
4 [c] Χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ πάντοτε· πάλιν ἐρῶ, χαίρετε. [d] Τὸ 5 ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν γνωσθήτω πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις· ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς.

a 1 Cor. 15. 26, 27. 2 Cor. 1. 14. supra 2. 16. 1 Thess. 2. 19, 20. b Ex. 32. 32, 33. Dan. 12. 1. Luke 10. 20. supra 1. 27. Rev. 3. 5. & 13. 8. & 20. 12. & 21. 27. c Rom. 12. 12. 2 Cor. 13. 11. 1 Thess. 5. 16. supra 3. 1. d Heb. 10. 25.

silence all unbelief, the power he hath to subdue all things having subdued even death' (Theophylact); see 1 Cor. xv. John xi. 25. Τοῦ δύνασθαι is for τῆς δυνάμεως; but the verb is used in order to suspend upon it [ὥστε] ὑποτάξαι.

IV. 1. This verse forms the conclusion of the exhortation (as at 1 Cor. xv. ult.), and should not have been separated from the preceding chapter. The ὥστε is conclusive, and may be rendered, So then; q. d. 'Such an expectation being held out.' Ἐπιπόθ. is not synonymous with ἀγαπ., but a stronger term, which may be rendered exoptati; also denoting his anxious desire to see them again; see i. 27—30. Χαρὰ καὶ στέφανος; i. e. a cause of rejoicing and of glorying to me. On the expression στ. ἐν Κυρίῳ, see 1 Cor. xv. 1. xvi. 13. Gal. v. 1.

2. τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν ἐν Κυρίῳ.] This expression may denote both unanimity in doctrine, and concord in views and objects. The persons in question were probably deaconesses of the Church.

3. ναὶ ἐρωτῶ.] For καὶ most of the best MSS., Versions, and many Fathers, and all the early Editions, have ναὶ, quæso, which is approved by almost all the Critics, and adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. It is on all accounts greatly preferable, being so suitable to ἐρωτῶ, q. d. 'Now, I beseech you.' The word, probably from the Hebr. נא, has this sense also in Philem. 20, ναὶ, ἀδελφὲ, and Rev. xxii. 20, ναὶ ἔρχου, Κύριε.

— σύζυγε.] On the sense of this word Commentators are not agreed. It seems rightly taken by Heinrichs to denote a closer connexion than συνεργὸς, supra ii. 25. Otherwise it might be supposed to designate Epaphroditus. It would, therefore, seem to mean colleague, and to be meant for the Bishop, or principal presbyter, of Philippi (vide supra i. 1), who was, in some sense, Paul's colleague; comp. Arist. Plut. 945, ἐὰν δὲ σύζυγον λάβω τινά. And this is confirmed by the use of γνησίως, supra ii. 20. Συνήθλ. denotes co-operation in the furtherance of the Gospel (so at Rom. xvi. 3, he calls Priscilla his συνεργὸς), but in what precise way is uncertain.

— Κλήμεντος.] This is said by the ancients to have been Clemens Romanus, one of the Apostolical Fathers; but the tradition has been generally rejected by the moderns.

— ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλῳ ζωῆς.] This expression may be supposed employed in accommodation to the image by which the future life is represented a little before (iii. 20) as a πολίτευμα, which supposes a list of the citizens' names, from which the names of the unworthy are erased; see Rev. iii. 5, and the Note there. Thus the names of the virtuous are often represented as registered in heaven; see Luke x. 20, and especially Rev. xiii. 8. So also in the Rabbinical writers we read of a book of eternal life in which the names of the just are inscribed. Nay, the same image is found in Mal. iii. 16.

4. χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίῳ π.] A repetition of the injunction at iii. 1, which the Apostle here, in the warmth of his feelings, repeats. This must, of course, be understood of spiritual joy; intimating, too, as Hyperius suggests, that 'all the unkindly and uncharitable feelings should be laid asleep.'

5. τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν, &c.] Τὸ ἐπιεικὲς is obviously put for the more ordinary Greek term ἡ ἐπιείκεια; though what is the exact force of the term is not so clear. By the recent Commentators it is in general interpreted, mildness, gentleness, lenity, forbearance; by the earlier ones, moderation. The former sense is quite agreeable to the usus loquendi, both in the Classical and Scriptural writers (as 1 Tim. iii. 3. Tit. iii. 2. 2 Cor. x. 10), and is supported by the Pesch. Syr. and Arabic Versions, and Theophylact; but it is not so suitable to the context as the latter sense, which is supported by the Vulgate Version modestia (as used in that sense which it bears in Cicero, Tusc. iii. 8); though the Interpreters by whom it is adopted are not agreed whether it means moderation of one's desires, or moderation in bearing injuries. It would rather seem that the Apostle intended a sense far more extensive than either of those interpretations comprehends. Upon the whole, it seems best to understand the expression, with Abp. Secker, of that reasonableness of mind (the philosophic μετριοπάθεια, expressed in Latin by modestia or æquitas) which curbs the exuberances of all our passions, confining us to proper degrees of being affected by the things about us, and of exerting ourselves in relation to them, comprehending the due restraints of desire and anger, fear and sorrow; and such was, I find, nearly the view adopted by Calvin. Of course, mildness, gentleness, and long-suffering will here be included. It is, indeed, difficult to find a single term to express so much meaning; but the Latin modestia and the English moderation or equanimity come the nearest. This will carry with it e Ps. 55. 22. Matt. 6. 25. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

f John 14. 27. Col. 3. 15. Rom. 1. 7.
g Rom. 12. 17. & 13. 13. 1 Thess. 4. 3, 4, 5. & 5. 22.

[e] Μηδὲν μεριμνᾶτε, ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ τῇ προσευχῇ καὶ τε 6 δεήσει μετὰ εὐχαριστίας τὰ αἰτήματα ὑμῶν γνωριζέσθω πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. [f] καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡ ὑπερέχουσα πάντα 7 νοῦν, φρουρήσει τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.
[g] Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί· ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνὰ, ὅσα 8 δίκαια, ὅσα ἁγνὰ, ὅσα προσφιλῆ, ὅσα εὔφημα, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ that holy indifference to the things of this world so proper to those who 'have no continuing city, but seek one to come.'

The expression following, γνωσθήτω πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, is very significant, importing that it should be well known by its effects (so Calvin and Hyperius explain), not only by our own family and friends, but all those with whom we have to do, thus letting the light of our example 'shine before men.'

— ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς.] Most recent Expositors take the meaning to be, 'The Lord (i. e. God) is at hand [for help; and therefore there is no cause for over-anxiety];' comparing Psalm xxxiv. 18. This is, however, not a little harsh. Far better is it, with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors, to understand the words as spoken of Christ; not, however, as denoting, what many suppose, the day of judgment. Nor need we, with others, interpret it of the second advent of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem, though the opinion is ably maintained by Whitby. I agree with Scott in understanding the expression of that advent of our Lord which takes place at death, and is to every man the same as the final advent of Christ to judgment; 'it being,' as he says, 'the manner of the sacred writers to consider all temporal things as short, and the end of them as at hand; and as death cannot be far from any man, and the final consummation of all things is, when measured with eternity, as it were at hand, so the judgment may be said to be near, even at the door.' It is surely, as observes Abp. Secker, a most weighty consideration, that the time which we have, either for busying and gratifying ourselves here, or preparing for hereafter, is of small duration; for 'the Lord is at hand.' All that we can hope or dread, enjoy or suffer, in the present state, will soon be over, possibly very soon; and all that we can do to qualify us for the next, how much soever we want, must be done in a very short space of time. See Rev. xxii. 12.

6. μηδὲν μεριμν.] Render, 'be not anxiously solicitous about any thing;' see Matt. vi. 25, and Note. Ἀλλ' ἐν παντὶ, scil. πράγματι; see Notes at Rom. xii. 12, and Ephes. vi. 18. Μετὰ εὐχαρ., 'with thanksgiving,' viz., for what God shall be pleased to grant, implying acquiescence as to what he may see fit to withhold.

7. καὶ] 'and [thus];' viz. by so doing; intimating the effect and high advantages of such a practice; namely, in procuring that peace, which God, by the Gospel and the influences of his Spirit, bestows; see Isaiah xxvi. 3. Ἡ ὑπερέχουσα πάντα νοῦν, 'which surpasseth all comprehension.' Comp. Eph. iii. 20.

— φρουρ. τὰς καρδίας—Ἰησοῦ.] This is by many eminent Expositors supposed to mean, 'will support and preserve you in the faith of Christ;' i. e. guard you against all temptations to desert the faith. That sense, however, is frigid, and not agreeable to the context. The interpretation of many good Commentators, 'will preserve you in a Christian frame of mind,' might be admitted, were it not certain that φρουρ. must be referred to μηδὲν μεριμνᾶτε a little before. As it is, the sense seems to be, 'will fortify your hearts and minds by Christ and his religion [against such over-anxiety].' And truly, the experience of that peace which the God of peace imparts by the Gospel is the mind's best safeguard against such an evil disposition. We thus feel fulfilled in us the words of the Prophet (Isa. xxvi. 3), 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee.' By the words of the preceding clause, ἐν παντὶ—τὸν Θεὸν, the Apostle meant to show how that peace could be most surely procured in the time of need, and for the time of need; namely, by prayer and supplication in the Spirit.

It is worthy of observation, that two terms, καρδίας and νοήματα, are here made use of, though one might have seemed sufficient; since, as Calvin and Hyperius well point out, the Apostle thus meant to comprehend the whole of the immaterial part of man, consisting both of the intellectual faculties and the affections or passions; both of which require to be fortified, the former against the deceits of carnal reasonings, the latter against the allurements of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

8, 9. τὸ λοιπὸν, &c.] The Apostle here briefly sums up the foregoing practical exhortations, and in a manner the most impressive,—giving the Philippians to understand that Christian faithfulness cannot rest on the discharge of any one virtue, but on the uniform observance of the whole of what is enjoined in the Gospel, and hath been urged upon them by himself; and that then 'the God of peace would be continually with them.'

— ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, &c.] Ἀληθῆ signifies, 'truly virtuous,' ἐνάρετα, as Theodoret explains. Σεμνὰ, 'honourable, or respectable.' Προσφιλῆ, 'amiable,' meaning that quality which conciliates love and respect. So Ecclesiast. xx. 13, ὁ σοφὸς ἐν λόγῳ προσφιλῆ ποιήσει. By this the Apostle seems to advert to that in which religious persons are too often deficient, who, by an austere and ascetic demeanour, not a little prejudice the cause of religion.

— εἴ τις ἀρετὴ, &c.] Meaning, 'Whatever else there be of what is virtuous and praiseworthy, think of and study to practise them.' Σχολάζετε τούτους, or πρὸς ταῦτα, would have been more Classical Greek than ταῦτα λογίζ.; see Note on 1 Cor. vii. 5. On this text Dr. Is. Barrow has excellently treated, Serm. vol. i. p. 46.

9 καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε. [h] ἃ καὶ ἐμάθετε καὶ h Rom. 15. 33.
παρελάβετε, καὶ ἠκούσατε καὶ εἴδετε ἐν ἐμοὶ, ταῦτα πράσσετε· 2 Cor. 13. 11.
καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν.
10 [i] Ἐχάρην δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ μεγάλως, ὅτι ἤδη ποτὲ ἀνεθάλετε i 2 Cor. 11. 9 τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν· ἐφ' ᾧ καὶ ἐφρονεῖτε, ἠκαιρεῖσθε δέ.
11 [j] Οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστέρησιν λέγω· ἐγὼ γὰρ ἔμαθον, ἐν οἷς j 1 Tim. 6. 6, 8.
12 εἰμὶ, αὐτάρκης εἶναι. [k] Οἶδα [δὲ] ταπεινοῦσθαι, οἶδα καὶ k 1 Cor. 4. 11.
περισσεύειν· ἐν παντὶ καὶ ἐν πᾶσι μεμύημαι καὶ χορτάζεσθαι 2 Cor. 11. 27.

9. Here the Apostle refers them to his own doctrines, precepts, and example; which, according as they follow, so will they attain the peace of God. The terms ἐμάθετε and παρελάβετε are not the same in sense, but are well distinguished by Grotius, the latter as being the more formal and special term, denoting knowledge gained by actual instruction. Of ἠκούσατε καὶ εἴδετε ἐν ἐμοὶ the full sense is, 'have heard to be in me and see to be in me;' i. e. practised by me. Steiger aptly compares from Cicero: 'Didicimus, accepimus, legimus.' Πράσσετε should be rendered, not do, as if ποιεῖτε had been written, but practise, the term being used of a course of action, of what is done continually and habitually. This is required by the seeming antithesis with λογίζεσθε.

10. ἀνεθάλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρον.] Some eminent Commentators take ἀνεθ. in a Hiphil sense, 'have made your cause to flourish.' But for that there is no authority; and it is better, with others, to suppose at τὸ φρον. an ellipsis of κατὰ or εἰς. As to ἀνεθ., I have, in Rec. Syn., shown at large that there is no reason to abandon the common interpretation, 'that ye are revived in your care of me,' which, by hypallage, may mean, 'that your care of me hath revived.' Comp. Ezek. xvii. 24. But as the term is properly used of a tree or plant growing green again, or as an annual is again re-produced in the spring, so this may be the source of the metaphorical allusion here. Φρονεῖν is here for φροντίζειν. The next words ἐφ' ᾧ—ἠκαιρεῖσθε δὲ are, like the last, rendered obscure by the delicacy and modesty of the writer. He means to suggest the best excuse for them, by presuming that they had not before had an opportunity of sending, or were destitute of the means. Ἠκαιρ. may be understood of either. See Note on Acts xxviii. 14—16.

11. οὐχ ὅτι—εἶναι.] Meaning, 'I do not say this with reference to any necessity to which I have been reduced; for I have learnt, in whatever circumstances I am, therein to acquiesce, and accommodate myself thereto.' At οἷς supply πράγμασι. Αὐτάρκης is used both of a thing sufficient for the purpose intended, and of a person who feels sufficiency, and is therefore content. So Seneca, de Vita Beata, 6 (cited by Wetstein), says, 'Beatus est qui præsentibus, qualescunque sint, contentus est.'

These deeply affecting words show that the Apostle had been suffering under a decrease of his usual means of subsistence; yet that he had been endeavouring to reduce his desires to a level with his means, so as to be content. The true character of the words has been best seen by Hyperius and Calvin, who notice that they are said per correctionem, to preclude any idea of pusillanimity, as if what he had said was meant to reproach them with his penury, or as if he himself had not sufficient fortitude to bear it. See on the present text two powerful sermons by Bp. Sanderson. He regards this and the following verses, up to ver. 19, as a prolepsis to prevent any unjust opinion of him, as if he sought theirs more than them; q. d. 'True it is when I received from Epaphroditus the things that were sent from you, it was no small rejoicing to my heart, to see your care of me (after some years' intermission) to flourish again; and I cannot but warmly commend your charity, for you have done well to communicate with my afflictions. Yea, I should derogate from the grace of God, which worketh in you, if I should not both acknowledge your free benevolence towards me, and approve it as an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable to God; which I speak not with a greedy mind, to make a gain of you, nor for a cloak of covetousness (God is my witness), nor any other way so much in reference to my own private interest as for the glory of God and the comfort of your consciences; inasmuch as this fruit of your faith thus working by love redounds to the honour of the Gospel in the mean time, and shall in the end abound to your account in the day of the Lord Jesus. Otherwise, as to myself particularly, although my wants were supplied, and my bowels refreshed through your liberality (which, in the condition I was in, was some comfort to me), yet if that had been all I had looked after, the want of the things you sent me could not have much afflicted me. The Lord whom I serve is God, All-sufficient, and his grace had been sufficient for me, though your supplies had never come. He that enables me [however unable of myself to do any thing, yet] to do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me, hath framed my heart by his Holy Spirit, and trained me hereunto in the school of affliction, to rest contented with his allotment, whatsoever it be, and to have a sufficiency in myself, though in never so great a deficiency of outward things [not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content].' Which words contain a protestation, and the reason of it; and first, in order to prevent any misconstruction of his commendation of their charity, as if he had some low covetous end therein, he utterly protested the contrary; and then, to make that protestation the more credible, he assigns as the reason thereof the contentedness of his mind.

12. Δὲ is, in several Versions and Fathers, not found, and has been cancelled by most Editors; perhaps rightly. Internal evidence is certainly against it. Moreover, the Asyndeton l John 15. 5. 2 Cor. 12. 9. καὶ πεινᾷν, καὶ περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι· [l] πάντα ἰσχύω 13 ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με [Χριστῷ]. Πλὴν καλῶς ἐποιήσατε 14 m 2 Cor. 11. 8, 9. συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τῇ θλίψει. [m] Οἴδατε δὲ καὶ ὑμεῖς, 15 Φιλιππήσιοι, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῇ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ὅτε ἐξῆλθον ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας, οὐδεμία μοι ἐκκλησία ἐκοινώνησεν εἰς λόγον δόσεως καὶ λήψεως, εἰ μὴ ὑμεῖς μόνοι· ὅτι καὶ ἐν Θεσσα- 16 n Rom. 15. 28. Titus 3. 14. λονίκῃ καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δὶς εἰς τὴν χρείαν μοι ἐπέμψατε. [n] Οὐχ 17 ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ τὸ δόμα, ἀλλ' ἐπιζητῶ τὸν καρπὸν τὸν πλεονά-o 2 Cor. 9. 12. Heb. 13. 16. ζοντα εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν. [o] Ἀπέχω δὲ πάντα, καὶ περισσεύω· 18 πεπλήρωμαι, δεξάμενος παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν, p 2 Cor. 9. 8. Ps. 23. 1. Eph. 3. 16. ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, θυσίαν δεκτὴν, εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ. [p] Ὁ δὲ 19 Θεός μου πληρώσει πᾶσαν χρείαν ὑμῶν, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον αὐτοῦ ἐν δόξῃ, ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. Τῷ δὲ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ 20 ἡμῶν ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων· ἀμήν.

Ἀσπάσασθε πάντα ἅγιον ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀσπάζονται 21 ὑμᾶς οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ ἀδελφοί· ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς πάντες οἱ ἅγιοι, 22 μάλιστα δὲ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος οἰκίας. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου 23 ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Φιλιππησίους ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης δι' Ἐπαφροδίτου.

here has great strength, and is much in the Apostle's manner.

— ταπεινοῦσθαι.] This term signifies, 'to be in lowly and necessitous circumstances,' as the antithetical one signifies 'to have a superfluity.' The sense here is rendered plainer by the words following, καὶ χορτάζεσθαι καὶ πεινᾷν. In περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι we have a more significant expression than ταπ. καὶ περισσ., ὑστ. signifying, 'to be in utter want of the necessaries of life.' In the expression μεμύημαι ('I am initiated'), there may be, as many Commentators suppose, an allusion to initiation into the Heathen mysteries. At all events, it is a very energetic term, signifying thorough knowledge by long experience. So Marc. Anton. says of Socrates, καὶ ἀπέχεσθαι καὶ ἀπολαύειν ἐδύνατο τοῦτο.

13. πάντα] i. e. all things connected with my Christian duties. He then shows the source of his ability, even the aids afforded to him by Christ, through the Holy Spirit.

14. πλὴν—ϑλίψει.] This is added to preclude any idea of his depreciating the gift, or misconceiving the intentions of the donors. Though he had learnt to endure poverty without murmuring, he was not the less entitled to assistance. And they had done a good work in communicating aid to him in his distress; for that is the sense of the words συγκ. μ. τ. ϑ., which are for συγκ. μοι ἐν τῇ ϑλ. μου. The ἐν is supplied in Revel. i. 9, συγκ. ἐν τῇ ϑλίψει.

15. ἐν ἀρχῇ τ. εὐαγγ.] 'at the beginning of the Gospel's being preached among them.' In εἰς λόγον δόσ. καὶ λήψ. there is an allusion to the ratio acceptorum et datorum among the Romans, and that to intimate a regular reciprocation of giving and of receiving. If any other Church gave, it was something not worth noting down.

16. καὶ ἅπαξ καὶ δίς.] This is by many Commentators supposed to signify, 'pretty frequently;' but may be taken literally.

17. ἀλλ' ἐπιζητῶ—ὑμῶν] q. d. 'I feel pleasure in the gift; not so much on my own account, as yours; considering the fruit that will redound from it, in the praise of men and the recompense of God.'

18. Ἀπέχω is for ἔχω, as in Philem. 15, and Arrian, Epict. iii. 24, τὸ γὰρ εὐδαιμονοῦν ἀπέχειν δεῖ πάντα, ἃ ϑέλῃ, πεπληρωμένῳ τινὶ ἐοικέναι. Πεπλ. is added in order to strengthen the sense, and to show that he wants no more. On the expression ὀσμὴ εὐωδ., see at Eph. v. 2, 2 Cor. ii. 14; and on ϑυσ. δεκτ. see at Rom. xii. 1.

19. πληρώσει—ὑμῶν.] Render, 'will abundantly supply all their need,' spiritual and temporal. Of the phrase χρείαν πληροῦν another example occurs in Thucydides, i. 70, ἢν δ' ἄρα που καὶ πείρᾳ σφαλῶσιν, ἀντελπίσαντες ἄλλα, ἐπλήρωσαν τὴν χρείαν. By the riches here spoken of may be meant riches of grace and beneficence; for τ. πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, as is fully expressed at Ephes. i. 7, κατὰ τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ: comp. Ephes. ii. 4, πλούσιος ὢν ἐν ἐλέει, and Rom. x. 12.

Ἐν δόξῃ may be construed either with πληρώσει, and taken adverbially for ἐνδόξως, or with πλοῦτον, and taken adjectively for ἔνδοξον: but the latter is the more natural construction, and is confirmed by Ephes. iii. 16.

— ἐν Χριστῷ] 'per Christum;' Christ being considered as the medium 'through whom all blessings flow.'

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΚΟΛΟΣΣΑΕΙΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 I. ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος a Rom. 1. 7. Gal. 1. 3.
2 Θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφὸς, [a] τοῖς ἐν ‡ Κολοσσαῖς ἁγίοις Eph. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

COLOSSÆ was a large, populous, and wealthy city of Phrygia (whose site has been at length determined to be the present Khonæ), at which there was a flourishing Christian church; but by whom planted, we have no certain information. From some passages in the Epistle (as i. 21. 25. ii. 5, 6), and from the probability that it should have taken place (as he had twice visited Phrygia), there are some reasons to think that it was St. Paul; while, from other parts of the Epistle (as, for instance, ii. 1), the contrary would appear: and as there seems to be something like positive proof that he was not the founder,—while there are only arguments of probability that he was, we seem authorized to rather embrace the negative. Yet, though not literally the founder, he might, in a qualified sense, be termed such; since the Gospel dispensed to the Colossians (i. 21—25) came mediately, though not immediately from him. Who was the actual founder, the learned are not agreed. Some say Epaphras; others, Timothy. The latter supposition has most probability in its favour. Be that as it may, it seems that the Church at Colossæ had been planted and watered, and brought to a flourishing state, by both those two active fellow-labourers with Paul in preaching the Gospel. With respect to the date of the Epistle, the internal evidence supplied by the Epistle itself shows that it must have been written at nearly the same time as that to the Ephesians, but a little after it. The two are, in fact (as Paley says), 'twin Epistles, being written nearly together; insomuch that many expressions in the one were made use of in writing the other.' The difference in them is well pointed out by Hyperius thus: 'Licet hac epistolâ propemodum eadem omnia contineantur, quæ habita sunt in illâ ad Ephesios, non tamen eodem modo partes hujus epistolæ constituendæ ac distribuendæ;' the present Epistle being mainly directed against the tenets and practices of certain false teachers, who had crept in, and disseminated erroneous and superstitious notions respecting the worship of angels, self-mortification, and the observance of the Jewish Festivals, and indeed of the Mosaic ritual Law in general, as necessary to salvation. Who these persons were is not agreed. See the Introductions of Schott and Boehmer. The truth seems to be, that, though the notions of the Essenes were most in accordance with the errors here condemned, yet that the false teachers were not of one particular class, but were composed of fanatics and ascetics of various classes, chiefly Judaizers, and for the most part such as had taken up the dogmas of the Essenes,—but also Platonizers, Gentile converts, who blended Platonic notions with the doctrines of the Gospel. Nor probably were there wanting some who had been professors of what is called the Oriental Philosophy (for asceticism has been ever prevalent in the East), and had, on becoming Christians, retained several of their superstitious and ascetical notions. Hence the scope of the Epistle is, 1. to lay down the grand purpose of the Gospel, and to show how far it surpasses the law of Moses as well in glory, as in greatness, and comprehension; and especially to point out that all hope of man's redemption is founded on CHRIST, our Redeemer, in whom alone all fulness, perfection, and sufficiency are contained. 2. To caution the Colossians against the insinuations of the Judaizing or philosophizing teachers, as inconsistent with the grand doctrines of the Gospel; after which follows an interesting description of believers acting uniformly under the influences of the Gospel, and an earnest exhortation to walk in their steps. Having finished which, the Apostle concludes with general admonitions and affectionate salutations.

From a comparison of this Epistle with that to the Ephesians, it will be obvious that the substance of the former is found in the latter. The two consequently reflect great light upon each other, especially the former upon the latter, of which it is indeed often the best comment. Insomuch that it will, in many instances, be only necessary for the reader to refer to the parallel passage in the Ephesians, and consult the full explanations given in the Notes thereon. In order to facilitate such reference by the reader, even when not indicated in the Notes, I have καὶ πιστοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ· χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν [καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ].

[b] Εὐχαριστοῦμεν τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν 3 Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ πάντοτε, περὶ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, [c] ἀκού- 4 σαντες τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, [d] διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τὴν ἀποκει- 5 μένην ὑμῖν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· ἣν προηκούσατε ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, [e] τοῦ παρόντος εἰς ὑμᾶς, καθὼς 6 b Eph. 1. 15. Phil. 1. 3. 1 Thess. 1. 2. 2 Thess. 1. 3. c Eph. 1. 13, 15, 16. Philem. 5.

d 1 Pet. 1. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 8.
e Mark 4. 8. & 16. 15. John 15. 16. Phil. 1. 11.

carefully indicated in the margin the corresponding passages of the Epistle to the Ephesians, as in that Epistle I have done those to the Colossians.

2. Κολοσσαῖς.] Many MSS. and early Editions, and several Versions and Fathers, read Κολασσ., which is preferred by most Critics, and adopted by Wetstein and Matthæi. Yet there can be but little doubt that the common reading is correct, at least according to the orthography of the inhabitants themselves, as we find from the coins, of every age, which may be seen in Eckhel, Doctr. Num. Vet., vol. iii. p. 147, sq.; and as the ο is found in all writers down to the time of Polyænus (in whom we first find the α), there is little doubt that, after the time of St. Paul, the spelling was corrupted, from provincial pronunciation, and it seems probable that the alteration was introduced by those who lived distant from the place.

The words καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, absent from not a few ancient and very many modern MSS., together with several ancient Versions, including the Pesch. Syr., have been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, perhaps rightly; for internal evidence is rather against them: the words being probably introduced from the parallel passages in the other Epistles (ex. gr. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. i. 2. Gal. i. 3. Eph. i. 2. Phil. i. 2. 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 2. 1 Tim. i. 3. 2 Tim. i. 2. Tit. i. 4. Philem. i. 3), and most probably from that of the twin Epistle to the Ephesians. Certainly we can thus easily account for their insertion, though by no means for their omission; unless, indeed, we suppose that the Apostle wrote εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, where the recurrence of the words ἡμῶν might, as in a thousand other instances, occasion the accidental omission of the scribes; and as this is not improbable, I have chosen to leave the words within single brackets.

3. The punctuation at πάντοτε—προσευχόμενοι is doubtful, most Editors placing a comma after Χριστοῦ, and thus connecting πάντοτε with προσευχόμενοι; while others place it after πάντοτε, thus connecting πάντοτε with εὐχαριστοῦμεν. Of these two methods, the former is supported by Rom. i. 10 and Phil. i. 3; but the latter by many other passages, as Eph. i. 16. 1 Thess. i. 2. ii. 13. 2 Thess. i. 3. ii. 13. Philem. 4, and those more parallel. The sense is well expressed by Steiger, 'en chaque fois que je me souviens de vous, en tout temps, dans chacune de mes prières, faisant la prière pour vous avec joie.'

4. ἀκούσαντες τὴν πίστιν, &c.] 'since or because we have heard,' &c.; this serving more particularly to denote the cause or subject of the action of thanksgiving just before mentioned. Theophylact and Hyperius explain ἀκούσαντες by διότι ἠκούσαμεν. It were scarcely necessary to mention this, but that some eminent Critics would place v. 4 in a parenthesis; thus uniting προσευχόμενοι with διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα. Τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν, &c., 'your faithfulness,' or constancy in the faith. (Compare v. 2.) A sense of πίστις, as is shown by Locke and Pierce, required by the context.

5. διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα, &c.] Some doubt exists as to the construction of these words. By many modern Translators and Expositors they are connected with εὐχαριστοῦμεν—προσευχόμενοι at ver. 3; ver. 4 being regarded as parenthetical. This, however, is quite inadmissible: not, indeed, for the reason usually assigned, that no example is to be found of εὐχαριστεῖν followed by διὰ with an Accusative, but because the method in question involves a considerable harshness of construction, and yields a sense somewhat jejune. Hence it is better to refer the words to the verses immediately preceding, especially as the most simple and natural construction is always, cæteris paribus, to be preferred. Yet the reference is, I apprehend, not to ἀγάπην, &c. only, as some Expositors suppose, but to πίστιν also; the latter springing out of the former,—love being ever the fruit of a true faith (see Gal. v. 6), and both together forming, as Gomar observes, the two members of the Christian religion. And this hope (meaning, as at Tit. ii. 13, the thing hoped for,—the object of this hope), is by the διὰ represented as the impulsive cause of their faith and love; q. d. 'which faith and charity ye have exercised in consequence of,' &c.: for, as Dr. South well observes, 'Hope and fear are the great handles by which the will of man is to be taken hold of, when we would either draw it to duty, or draw it from sin.' In the expression there is (by way of expressing the certainty of the thing) an allusion to money or rewards laid up in a treasury, to be distributed to conquerors in the games, and which they are so certain of receiving, that each one's share may be said to be laid up ready for him. So Plutarch, cited by Heinrichs, τοῖς εὖ βεβιωκόσιν ἀπόκειται γέρας ἐν ᾅδου. Compare 2 Tim. iv. 8. By the προ (aforetime) we are to understand, at the beginning of their faith. The expression hearing has reference to the oral and catechetical instruction of the primitive times. Ἐν τῷ λόγῳ τῆς ἀληθείας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, i. e. 'in the true doctrine preached to you of the Gospel.' See 2 Cor. vi. 7. Eph. i. 13.

6. τοῦ παρόντος] for ὃς πάρεστι, or παρῆν (for we have here the Participle Imperfect), meaning, 'which is come or brought [by preaching] to you.' Παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ may, with some, be regarded as a popular hyperbole (see Note on καὶ ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ· καὶ ἔστι καρποφορούμενον καὶ αὐξα-νόμενον, καθὼς καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀφ᾽ ἧς ἡμέρας ἠκούσατε, καὶ ἐπέ-7 γνωτε τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ· [f] καθὼς καὶ ἐμάθετε f Infra 4. 12. Philem. 23.

ἀπὸ Ἐπαφρᾶ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ συνδούλου ἡμῶν, ὅς ἐστι πιστὸς 8 ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διάκονος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ καὶ δηλώσας ἡμῖν τὴν 9 ὑμῶν ἀγάπην ἐν πνεύματι. [g] Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς, ἀφ᾽ ἧς g Rom. 12. 2. 1 Cor. 1. 5. Eph. 1. 16.
ἡμέρας ἠκούσαμεν, οὐ παυόμεθα ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, & 5. 10, 17, 21.

Matt. xxiv. 14); though, indeed, there were very few countries of the civilized world to which the Gospel had not then been carried; thus going far to make good the words of the Psalmist, xix. 4.

— καὶ ἔστι καρποφ., &c.] 'and is bringing forth fruit [everywhere], as also among you;' namely, the fruit of reforming and blessing men nere, in order to their eternal salvation hereafter. I have followed the recent Editors, Griesbach, Knappe, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, in introducing after κόσμῳ the words καὶ αὐξανόμενον, which are found in very many MSS. (including almost all the most ancient ones), many Versions, together with the Pesch. Syr., and the Italic, several Fathers, and the Editio Princeps, though it is far from certain that they are genuine. They may have been (as Wetstein and Matthæi think they were) introduced from the parallel passage at ver. 10; but it is more probable they were accidentally omitted by the scribes on account of the similarity in ending between καρποφ. and αὐξανόμ.

7. καθὼς καὶ ἐμάθετε, &c.] Meaning, 'which extensive success of the Gospel ye have [doubtless] learnt from,' &c. The καὶ after καθὼς, not found in several ancient MSS., and some Versions and Fathers, and the Editio Princeps, has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but injudiciously; since for its insertion we cannot well account, but for its omission we may very easily; namely, from its seeming to be useless, and the sentence to be overloaded with the copula; whence it was removed by the Alexandrian Critics. But in reality such a use of καὶ (found in the very best writers) imparts no little nerve and vigour to the sentence.

— ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν] 'for your [spiritual] good.' 'The expression (observes Hyperius) is very emphatic, as intimating the care and solicitude of Epaphras for their salvation; and meant also to suggest the correspondent high value they ought to set on him.'

8. ἐν πνεύματι.] This may have the sense assigned by Chrysostom, Beza, Calvin, Hyperius, Casaubon, Crellius, Wolf, and almost all recent Expositors, spiritual; not meaning, however (as most of them explain), merely heartfelt and sincere, but, as Hyperius understands it, evangelical love; so called by way of distinguishing it from that which is only carnal, external, and unaccompanied with any motions of faith: or rather, according to the explanation of some ancient Commentators, as Theophylact, and several eminent modern ones, as Grotius, Whitby, Scott, Boehmer, and Steiger, 'wrought in you by the Spirit, whose fruit is love;' see Gal. v. 22—26. This latter interpretation has most to recommend it, because it will embrace the former, but not vice versâ; and the most extensive is, cæteris paribus, preferable. And thus ἐν πνεύματι will be for διὰ Πνεύματος, as at Rom. xv. 30, διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Πνεύματος, where see Note. And thus ἐν πνεύματι will be used as ἐν Κυρίῳ often is. It is well remarked by Theophylact that this love in the Spirit and by the Spirit is alone stable; all those founded on human nature only are unstable and fleeting.

9—12. Hæc comprecatio est altera pars exordii. Continet autem tria amplissima vota et ordinatissima posita. Primum, ut detur eis plenissimè cognoscere Dei voluntatem de expetendis et fugiendis. Secundum, ut ambulent dignè Deo, id est, præstent opera cognitioni tantæ respondentia. Tertium, quoniam qui piè volunt vivere, plerumque multis premuntur malis, ut roborati et constantes in cognitione illâ ac bonis operibus permaneant, nullisque adversitatibus aut periculis frangantur. (Hyperius.) Verses 9—23 form one single rhetorical period. In this portion St. Paul begins with expressing his earnest wishes and prayers relatively to the progress which they had yet to make, whether in sanctification or in the true knowledge of God, which he tacitly opposes to that knowledge (γνῶσις) by which the false teachers promised the Colossians they would make astonishing advances. This latent polemic, as it may be recognised in the first part of this period, so especially may it from ver. 12, where the Apostle reminds the Colossians that spiritual progress ought to be ever accompanied with gratitude to God; for it is God who hath fitted them to pass from death to life by converting them. Then, ascending to the source of salvation, he adds, 'and it is his Son who hath redeemed us,—his only and eternal Son, creator of the world.' At ver. 16 he enlarges on the exalted character of the Saviour as respects the creatures and the great work achieved by him for our salvation; concluding with an indirect, but most impressive, exhortation, to persevere in the primitive and universal doctrine. (Steiger.)

9. διὰ τοῦτο] 'wherefore [since I have heard so good an account of you].'

— ἀφ᾽ ἧς ἡμέρας—προσευχόμενοι.] Compare Eph. i. 15, 16. The substance of his prayer is, that they may have such an increase of knowledge in Divine things as shall be accompanied with a conduct worthy of their high calling. By the expression ἡ ἐπίγνωσις τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ may simply be understood, a knowledge of what God would have men to believe and to do in order to be saved; compare Acts xvi. 30. xxii. 10: though in the phrase πληρωθῆτε τὴν ἐπίγ. there may be, as Steiger supposes, an allusion to the favourite terms of the Gnostics, πλήρωμα and πληροῦσθαι, γνῶσις and ἐπίγνωσις. On the words ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συνέσει πνευματικῇ, compare Eph. i. 8, 9, and Notes. By πνευματικῇ we are to understand, not any wisdom, but spiritual wisdom, even that suggested

καὶ αἰτούμενοι ἵνα πληρωθῆτε τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ καὶ συνέσει πνευματικῇ· [h] περιπατῆσαι 10 ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρέσκειαν· ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ καρποφοροῦντες, καὶ αὐξανόμενοι ‡ εἰς τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει δυναμούμενοι, κατὰ τὸ κράτος 11 τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, εἰς πᾶσαν ὑπομονὴν καὶ μακροθυμίαν μετὰ χαρᾶς· [i] εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Πατρὶ τῷ ἱκανώσαντι ἡμᾶς 12 εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ φωτί· [k] ὃς 13 ἐρρύσατο ἡμᾶς ἐκ τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους, καὶ μετέστησεν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Υἱοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ· [l] ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν 14 h Eph. 4. 1. Phil. 1. 27. 1 Thess. 2. 12. & 4. 1. John 15. 16. 2 Pet. 3. 18.

i Acts 26. 18. k Acts 26. 18. 1 Thess. 2. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 9. l Acts 20. 28. Eph. 1. 7.

by, or proceeding from, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, as 1 Cor. ii. 13. Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.

10. περιπατῆσαι ὑμᾶς, &c.] Supply ἕνεκα τοῦ or ὥστε, for εἰς τό. Εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρέσκειαν. Supply αὐτοῦ, for ὥστε πάντως ἀρέσκεσθαι αὐτῷ, 'so that ye may entirely please God.' The expression is generally used in a bad sense, but sometimes, in the later writers, in a good one. So Polyb., cited by Raphael, has ἡ τοῦ βασιλέως ἀρέσκεια; and Philo (in a passage adduced by Loesner) says of Adam, εἰς ἀρέσκειαν τοῦ πατρὸς καὶ βασιλέως. The words following suggest how this ἀρέσκεια may be accomplished; namely, 1st, by perseverance in rendering the fruit of good works; 2dly, by patience and constancy in temptation and adversity.

— ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ καρποφ.] Render, 'being fruitful in [the performance of] every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God;' i. e. of his will, ver. 9; one particular being closely connected with the other; for a life and conduct worthy of Christ and his religion was the fruit to be expected from a right knowledge. We have here that allusion to a fruit-tree which is also found at ver. 6.

— αὐξανόμενοι εἰς τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν.] We have here a blending of two modes of expression, the sense being, 'increasing in and attaining unto;' compare 2 Pet. iii. 18. Had Griesbach, Lachmann, and Scholz seen this, they would not have admitted into the text, from a few ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, the reading τῇ ἐπιγνώσει, which is manifestly an alteration, to produce an easier sense. In such a case as this, the authority of Versions and Fathers is very slender. The expression is defended by a similar construction occurring in Ephes. iv. 15, αὐξήσωμεν εἰς αὐτὸν (i. e. Christ), where see the Note. When the nature of the term αὐξάνειν is considered, such a construction will not seem strange. The Apostle has placed the two particulars together, the increase of knowledge and that of virtue, well knowing that they always tend to mutually produce each other.

11. ἐν πάσῃ δυν. δυναμούμενοι.] This adverts to something far beyond knowledge; namely, that mighty energy of the Spirit, whereby they might be enabled not only to know God's will, and act according to it, but to suffer in fulfilling it, and that not only with patient endurance, but cheerfulness. That the strength in question is the strength of the Holy Spirit, is clear from the parallel passage of Eph. iii. 16.

12. Iterum redit ad gratulationem, ut hac occasione recenseat, quibus beneficiis donati sunt per Christum, atque ita ingreditur in plenam Christi descriptionem. (Calvin.)

— εὐχαριστοῦντες, &c.] This is meant to show the grounds of that joy, and to intimate how it should find expression; namely, by thankfully acknowledging in prayer the mercy of God, who had enabled them, though sinful Gentiles, to obtain the glorious inheritance laid up for all faithful Christians. In the term ἱκαν. there is a conjoint notion of enabling and fitting, as in 2 Cor. iii. 6, ὃς ἱκάνωσεν ἡμᾶς διακόνους καινῆς διαθήκης. And the construction in εἰς τὴν μερίδα, &c., is adapted to the latter sense. Τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου signifies, 'the allotted portion;' with allusion to a state, like Canaan, whose citizens have assigned to each of them a μερὶς, portion, or possession (see Gen. xiv. 24), and all these assigned by lot, κλήρῳ. By φωτὶ understand either the light of heaven, where God is represented as dwelling in light, or, the light of Divine knowledge, as respects both the present and the future state, when the light here possessed will be exchanged for a still clearer manifestation of the glory of God. This latter view is strongly confirmed by 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

13. The Apostle now adverts to the mode whereby this blessed change had been effected, and that in words containing a noble amplification of the power of God and his goodness to man. 'Here (says Calvin) we have indicated what may be called the beginning of our salvation, when God snatches us from the depth of that destruction in which we were sunk.' See also Hyperius.

— τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους.] Meaning, the dominion of ignorance and idolatry, and the tyranny of sin and its author; a sense of ἐξ. occurring in Rom. xiii. 1. Heinrichs remarks on the aptness of the term μετέστησε, 'since it is not only used of transferring persons from one country to another, but of changing the form of government under which they live, as from despotism to freedom. So here those who had been under the tyranny of ignorance and Satan are represented as being transferred to the kingdom of knowledge, virtue, and Christ.'

14. Jam ordine persequitur, omnes salutis nostræ partes in Christo contineri; et ipsum solum, ut est principium omnium et finis, debere eminere, et conspicuum cerni supra omnes creaturas. (Calvin.)

— ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ.] This has been explained at Eph. i. 7. The words placed in brackets are in very many τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν [διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ], τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν 15 ἁμαρτιῶν· m ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου, πρωτό-16 τοκος πάσης κτίσεως· n ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, τὰ m John 14. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Phil. 2. 6. Heb. 1. 3. Rev. 3. 14.

n John 1. 3. 1 Cor. 8. 6. Eph. 3. 9. Heb. 1. 2. Rom. 8. 38. Eph. 1. 21, 22. & 3. 10, 11. infra 2. 15.

MSS., Versions, and Fathers, not found, and have been cancelled by almost every Editor; and, I think, rightly: for we may better suppose them to have been brought in from the parallel passage of Ephesians, than to have been omitted by accident.

15. Nunc altius conscendit, disserendo de Christi gloria. (Calvin.) The Apostle now proceeds to set forth the dignity of Christ as superior to that of every creature, in order to explain how it has come to pass, that in Him, and Him alone, God has saved us; and that is, that he is the Son of God. (Steiger.)

— ὅς ἐστιν εἰκὼν—κτίσεως.] Meaning, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, 'who (i. e. Christ) is [in his human nature] the visible image of the invisible God.' In refutation of the Socinian gloss (according to which Christ is here called the image of the invisible God by his having, through his Gospel, made known to us the will of God); see Theophylact and Theodoret, cited in Rec. Syn., and Abp. Magee, vol. i. p. 72. ii. 487. 707. 'Christ (says Whitby) is the image of God, as making him who is invisible in his essence conspicuous to us by the Divine works he wrought, they being such as plainly showed that in him dwelt the fulness of the Godhead bodily; for an invisible God can only be seen by his effects of power, wisdom, and goodness. He, therefore, who, in the works both of the Old and New Creation, has given us such clear declarations of the Divine power, wisdom, and goodness, is upon this account as much an image of God as any thing can be; to which sense the image of God here seems necessarily restrained by the connective particle ὅτι, he is the image of God, for by him all things were created.' See more in Dr. Pye Smith's Script. Test. iii. 297. In short, the present passage is manifestly parallel to that of Hebrews i. 3, ὃς ὢν ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης καὶ χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ; i. e. 'a true copy, similitude, or delineation of the Father,' as fully representing his substance, essence, and attributes, as the impression answers to the seal.

On the interpretation of πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως the opinions of Expositors are very various. But the most natural and best founded view is that of almost all the ancient, and most eminent modern, Commentators, who take πρωτότοκος for πρῶτος (as in John i. 15. 30), and assign as the sense, 'begotten before every creature,' i. e. before any created being had existence; corresponding to what is said, Prov. viii. 25: 'Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth.' So also Bp. Pearson, on the Creed, explains it to mean, 'begotten by God' (as the Son of his love) antecedently to all other emanations; before any thing proceeded from Him, or was framed and created by Him. On which subject see the passages from the Fathers adduced in Suicer's Thes. vol. ii. p. 879, and Dr. Burton's Testimonies of the Anti-Nicene Fathers, pp. 12, 106, 130, 262, 269, 277, sq. 296—8, 312, seq. 334. 390. So also Tatian, in Oratione ad Græcos, p. 145, uses πρωτότοκον ἔργον for πρῶτον ἔργον. How far the words are from proving (what the Socinians maintain) that Christ was a created being is quite obvious; since, as Bp. Horsley observes, we have not πρωτόκτιστος (i. e. πρῶτος κτισθεὶς), but πρωτότοκος. And, moreover (as Dr. A. Clarke remarks), 'had Christ been so called, those who hold such opinions would have gained little, because, according to what they contend, the Apostle is speaking, not of a natural, but a moral or evangelical Creation.' For a refutation of which shallow gloss, see the Note on ver. 16. Πρωτότ. is not well taken by Whitby and others (including Schleusner) in a figurative sense, to denote 'Lord of all things,' as κληρονόμος πάντων, since the word is never so used, except in reference to primogeniture; see Gen. xxvii. 29. 37. 2 Chron. xxx. 3. Jerem. xxxi. 9. And though in Rom. viii. 29, we have τὸν πρ. ἐν πολλοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, yet there his followers are represented not as his creatures, but as his brethren. On which, and other accounts, the interpretation first mentioned (according to which we have here a strong testimony to the eternal filiation of our Saviour) is greatly preferable; and it is clear that verses 15 and 18 are illustrative of the nature, as verses 16 and 17 are an evidence of the pre-existence and Divinity of Christ.

16. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτ. τὰ πάντα.] This, as I have shown at large in Rec. Synop., must not be taken (as it is done by most of the recent Expositors, with Grotius) of a new and moral, i. e. evangelical, creation, but of the natural creation of all things by Christ. 'Not one example (says Dr. Whitby) can be shown, where the creation of all things in heaven and earth is used in a moral sense, or concerning any other than the natural. Moreover, in the first place, "all things in earth," and "things visible," must comprise things without life, the inanimate parts of nature, concerning which it is absurd to speak of a moral creation; 2dly, under "things in heaven, invisible," &c., must be comprehended the whole celestial hierarchy; ii. 15. Ephes. i. 20. vi. 12. But good angels cannot require a spiritual renovation, and Christ came not to convert fallen angels, but to destroy their empire;' see also Bp. Pearson on the Creed, and Dr. Whitby, of whom the former shows that these words supply a proof of the precedency asserted in the foregoing, namely, 'that all other emanations or productions come from Him, and whatsoever received its being by creation was by Him created.' 'Which assertion (continues he) is delivered in the most pregnant expressions imaginable: 1. in the plain language of Moses, as most consonant to his description; 2. by a division, which Moses never used, as describing the production of corporeal substances only. Lest, therefore, those immaterial beings might seem exempted from the Son's creation, because omitted in Moses's description, he adds "visible and invisible;" and lest, in that invisible world, among the many degrees of the celestial hierarchy, any order might seem exempt-ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, τὰ ὁρατὰ καὶ τὰ ἀόρατα, εἴτε θρόνοι, εἴτε κυριότητες, εἴτε ἀρχαὶ, εἴτε ἐξουσίαι, τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν ἔκτισται· καὶ αὐτός ἐστι 17 πρὸ πάντων, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκε· [o] καὶ αὐτός 18 ἐστιν ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῦ σώματος, τῆς ἐκκλησίας· ὅς ἐστιν ἀρχὴ, πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, ἵνα γένηται ἐν πᾶσιν αὐτὸς πρωτεύων. [p] Ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ εὐδόκησε πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατ- 19

o Eph. 1. 22. & 4. 15. & 5. 23. Acts 26. 23. 1 Cor. 15. 20, 23. Rev. 1. 5. p John 1. 16. & 3. 34, 35. infra 2. 9. Eph 4. 10.

ed from an essential dependence on him, he names those which are of greatest eminence, "whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers;" and under them comprehends all the rest. Nor does it yet suffice thus to extend the object of his power by asserting all things to be made by him, except it be so understood as to acknowledge the sovereignty of his person, and the authority of his action; for, lest we should conceive the Son of God framing the world as a mere instrumental cause which worketh by and for another, he shows him as well the final as the efficient cause; for "all things were created by him and for him." Lastly, whereas all things first receive their being by creation, and when they have received it continue in the same by virtue of God's conservation, "in whom we live, and move, and have our being;" lest in any thing we should be thought not to depend immediately upon the Son of God, he is described as the conserver as well as the Creator; for "he is before all things, and by him all things consist."'

— εἴτε θρόνοι, εἴτε κυριότητες.] By θρόνοι understand potentates of the most exalted kind. So in Test. xii. Patr. p. 518, where the seven heavens and classes of angels are described, there are said to be in the seventh θρόνοι, ἐξουσίαι. By the terms κυριότητες, ἀρχαὶ, and ἐξουσίαι, are denoted potentates of an inferior kind. So our great Epic Poet, Parad. Lost, b. iii. 321, has (in imitation of the present passage):

> '—— under Thee, as Head supreme, > Thrones, Princedoms, Powers, Dominions, I reduce.'

Finally, that the words must have the sense of a physical, not a moral creation, has been ably and most elaborately evinced by Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test. l. iv. ch. 4, who gives the following admirable view of the design, as showing the subjects of the passage, and the nature of the work attributed to the Saviour. 'The connexion of this passage shows that the Apostle's leading design is to impress the minds of Christians with admiration and gratitude, in consideration of the divine mercy conferred upon them, through their believing 'the word of the truth of the Gospel.' This design he prosecutes by representing the unspeakable greatness and value of redemption (vv. 13, 14), the dignity and perfection of the Redeemer (vv. 15—18), the rich abundance of the blessings which are at his disposal (ver. 19), and the re-union of the two great parts of the moral universe,—sinless angels, and men recovered by a process of reconciling and restoring grace, in one holy and happy body under Christ as their glorious Sovereign (vv. 20—22).'

16. δι' αὐτοῦ.] By Him, as the efficient cause. Εἰς αὐτὸν, 'for Him, as the final cause, for the manifestation of his power and wisdom in preserving and governing what he had created.' See Phil. ii. 10, sq.

17. πρὸ πάντων.] This evidently denotes, not mere supereminence, but pre-existence, as is plain from the words preceding; this being a further development of the thought there. And as little can the words following, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκε, be taken of the moral preservation and governance of Christ; for of such a sense there is no example: whereas of συνιστ. in the physical sense, consist or subsist, many examples are adduced from Plato, Philo, Josephus, Diog. Laërt., and Aristotle. So Aristotle, in a kindred passage, says, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ τὰ πάντα, καὶ διὰ Θεοῦ ἡμῖν συνέστηκε.

The term is well explained by Dr. Pye Smith, 'are maintained and secured in their station of order and blessedness;' and by Hyperius, 'gubernantur, conservantur.' So also Theodoret: κυβερνᾷ τὴν κτίσιν.

It is manifest that the first clause of this sentence proves the Deity, the second, the omnipotence, and consequently the Deity, of Christ.

18. From the natural the Apostle now passes to the moral or evangelical creation. 'Having (says Theophylact) spoken of the Divine dignity of the Son, he now speaks of his condescending humanity.' So Theodoret remarks: ἀπὸ τῆς θεολογίας εἰς τὴν οἰκονομίαν μετέβη.

— καὶ αὐτός ἐστιν, &c.] Render: 'He is, moreover, the head of the body, namely, the Church.' (See Rom. xii. 5. Eph. i. 22, sq.) '[He it is] who is the beginning (or author and first cause) of all things.' So Rev. iii. 14, he is called ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ. Christ is then said to be πρωτότ. ἐκ νεκρῶν, as at 1 Cor. xv. 20 he is called ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κεκοιμημένων, the first who was raised from the dead, never to die again. See Note on 1 Cor. xv. 20, and Smith's Scrip. Test., vol. i. p. 592. iii. p. 300. Ἐν πᾶσι may be referred to both persons and things, and denote 'in all points of comparison.' See Eph. i. 10. 22, 23.

19. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ—κατοικ.] There is here thought to be an uncertainty as to the nominative to εὐδόκ., which some suppose to be Χριστός. But that is neither agreeable to the context, nor to the tenour of Scripture. Others imagine it to be τὸ πλήρωμα; q. d. 'in him all the fulness [of the Godhead] was pleased to dwell,' comparing ii. 9, ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς. Such a sense, however, of εὐδ. would be very harsh, and the sentiment unsuitable to what follows. It would seem that the true nominative is ὁ Πατὴρ, taken from vv. 12, 13; and indeed vv. 14—18 inclusive are in some measure parenthetical. And so Dr. Pye Smith understands it. The above is, moreover, required by the construction in the next verse.

It is not so certain what is meant by τὸ πλη-

20 οικῆσαι, [q] καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι τὰ πάντα εἰς αὐτὸν, q Eph. 1. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 18.
εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ σταυροῦ αὐτοῦ, δι' αὐτοῦ, εἴτε Eph. 2. 14, 16.
21 τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, εἴτε τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς· [r] καὶ ὑμᾶς ποτὲ ὄντας Rom. 5. 1, 10. r Eph. 2. 1, 2, 12.
ἀπηλλοτριωμένους καὶ ἐχθροὺς τῇ διανοίᾳ ἐν τοῖς ἔργοις τοῖς 22 πονηροῖς· νυνὶ δὲ ἀποκατήλλαξεν [s] ἐν τῷ σώματι τῆς σαρκὸς s Eph. 2. 15, 16.
αὐτοῦ, διὰ τοῦ θανάτου, παραστῆσαι ὑμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώ- Luke 1. 75. Eph. 1. 4. & 5. 26, 27.
23 μους καὶ ἀνεγκλήτους κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ· [t] εἴγε ἐπιμένετε τῇ Titus 2. 14. t John 15. 6. πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι, καὶ μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ εὐαγγελίου οὗ ἠκούσατε, τοῦ κηρυχθέντος ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει τῇ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανόν· οὗ ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ ρωμα. It may denote either 'the fulness of the Godhead,' or, as Whitby explains, 'the fulness of Divine power and authority,' namely, to create, preserve, and redeem the Church, which is his body. So Bp. Sherlock explains it to mean, that Christ should be all in all, the head of the second as well as the first creation. Comp. i. 23, and Note. The latter sense is more agreeable to what follows, but it may include the plenitude of Divine perfections as a Saviour. See Scott. Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 261) explains it, 'the rich abundance, the perfection of all those blessings which the context represents as bestowed by Christ on those who believe in him.' See also Seiler there cited by Dr. Smith.

20. δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι, &c.] Repeat εὐδόκησεν ὁ Θεός. On the expression ἀποκατ. τὰ πάντα, see Note at Eph. i. 10. Εἰρηνοποιήσας is a modification of the sense of ἀποκαταλλάξαι, denoting the bringing about mutual peace. By the αὐτὸν some understand God; others, more properly, Christ. In διὰ τοῦ αἵματος τοῦ σταυροῦ we have a very significant term, meaning, 'by his bloody death on the cross.' See Eph. ii. 14. Εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τ. γῆς—τοῖς οὐρ. must be construed with τὰ πάντα, meaning all intelligent creatures, whether on earth or in heaven, both men and angels. We are not, however, by εἰρηνοπ. to understand any reconciliation of the angels to God, but only the restoration of that amity between angels and men, which had been interrupted by the fall of man, and which could only be restored by the reconcilement of man to his offended Maker; so that both angels and men might, in virtue of that peace (purchased by the sacrifice of Christ on the cross), worship God, as forming one society under one head. See Eph. i. 10. Heb. xii. 22.

21. The Apostle now applies what has been said to the state of the Colossians, as formerly Gentiles, and now the favoured people of God.

— ἀπηλλοτριωμένους] i. e. 'aliens from God,' and consequently alienated, or separated from, deprived of, the Divine promises and benefits. See Eph. ii. 12. iv. 18, and Note. In ἐχθροὺς τῇ διανοίᾳ we have a stronger expression; q. d. 'nay, enemies,' &c. τῇ διανοίᾳ, 'in your hearts and minds;' denoting that the evil was deeply seated in the feelings and affections. So Eph. ii. 3, ποιοῦντες τὰ θελήματα τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ τῶν διανοιῶν. Luke i. 51, ὑπερήφανοι διανοίᾳ καρδίας αὐτῶν. Nor is this mode of expression unexampled in the Sept.

22. ἐν τῷ σώματι—θανάτου.] An energetic mode of expression to signify, 'by his fleshly or incarnate body given up to death:' so said as opposed to his mystical body. At παραστ. supply ὥστε, denoting end or purpose. Of the terms ἁγίους, ἀμώμους, and ἀνεγκλήτους, the first has reference to what takes place between God and man; the second and third, to what passes between man and man: and here there is, as Theophylact and Hyperius observe, an incrementum, or Auxesis,—an advance from weaker to stronger terms; q. d. 'not only holy, but also unblamable and unreprovable (ἀμώμους, for ἀμέμπτους), not only by the world, but even in the sight of God;' their sanctification being rendered as complete as their justification had been. So Eph. i. 4, ἐξελέξατο ἡμᾶς ἐν αὐτῷ—εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους καὶ ἀμώμους κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ. Compare also Eph. v. 27. The force of the expression παραστῆσαι will best appear from a comparison of parallel expressions at v. 28. 2 Cor. iv. 14. xi. 2. Eph. v. 27, and especially Jude 24, τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ φυλάξαι ὑμᾶς ἀπταίστους, καὶ στῆσαι κατενώπιον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἀμώμους, which passages seem to have been written with a view to this of St. Paul and the passage at Eph. i. 4. The nature of the metaphor has been pointed out in the Note on Eph. v. 27.

23. Here we have an exhortation to perseverance, from the consideration that without it all grace hitherto conferred will be fruitless. (Calvin.) They are admonished to be on their guard, and not abandon the hope of the Gospel by following other doctrines. (Steiger.)

— εἴγε, &c.] An elliptical mode of expression, differing from εἴπερ, and which is thus to be supplied: 'And so it will be with you, if at least,' &c. On the next words, ἐπιμένετε τῇ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι, see Note at Eph. iii. 18 and 1 Cor. vii. 37. The scope of the portion from this verse to ii. 7 is, as Hyperius says, confirmation. It is well observed by Calvin, 'Graphice depingit fidei certitudinem, quum in ea jubet Colossenses fundatos esse ac stabiles. Neque enim similis est fides opinationi, quæ variis motibus quatitur; sed habet firmam constantiam, quæ omnibus inferorum machinis resistat.'

— μὴ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ, &c.] The term μετακινεῖσθαι signifies, 'to change one's opinion, &c. by taking up some other views.' So here and at 1 Sam. xx. 30, it is used of being drawn this way or that by persuasion, so as to fall away from a former opinion. Here the sense is, 'not shaken or removed from the hope of the benefits revealed by the Gospel.'

u Phil. 2. 17. Eph. 3. 11, 13. Acts 5. 41. 1 Pet. 4. 13, 16. Phil. 3. 10. 2 Tim. 1. 8. x Eph. 3. 2.
y Matt. 13. 11. Rom. 16. 25. Eph. 3. 9. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Titus 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 20.
z Rom. 9. 23. 2 Cor. 2. 14. Eph. 1. 7. & 3. 8. 1 Tim. 1. 1. a Acts 20. 31. 2 Cor. 11. 2. Eph. 5. 27. b Infra 2. 1. Eph. 3. 7, 20.
a Phil. 1. 30. 1 Thess. 2. 2.

Παῦλος διάκονος. [u] Νῦν χαίρω ἐν τοῖς παθήμασί μου ὑπὲρ 24 ὑμῶν, καὶ ἀνταναπληρῶ τὰ ὑστερήματα τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ σαρκί μου ὑπὲρ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ὅ ἐστιν ἡ ἐκκλησία· [x] ἧς ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ διάκονος κατὰ τὴν 25 οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, [y] τὸ μυστήριον τὸ ἀποκεκρυμμένον 26 ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν γενεῶν, νυνὶ δὲ ἐφανερώθη τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ· [z] οἷς ἠθέλησεν ὁ Θεὸς γνωρίσαι, τίς ὁ 27 πλοῦτος τῆς δόξης τοῦ μυστηρίου τούτου ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, ὅς ἐστι Χριστὸς ἐν ὑμῖν, ἡ ἐλπὶς τῆς δόξης· [a] ὃν ἡμεῖς 28 καταγγέλλομεν, νουθετοῦντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον, καὶ διδάσκοντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, ἵνα παραστήσω-μεν πάντα ἄνθρωπον τέλειον ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [b] εἰς ὃ καὶ 29 κοπιῶ ἀγωνιζόμενος κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐνεργου-μένην ἐν ἐμοὶ ἐν δυνάμει. II. [a] Θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι 1

— ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει, &c.] Meaning all God's rational creatures, both Jews and Gentiles; the expression being equivalent to ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμῳ, supra v. 6. See also ver. 16, and Matt. xxiv. 14, and Note.

— οὗ ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ Παῦλος δ.] This forms a transition to what follows.

24. νῦν χαίρω—σαρκί μου.] The full sense is, 'Now I rejoice at my sufferings [undergone] for you [Gentiles]; and [I consider that] I [thereby] fill up in my flesh what remains of the afflictions to be endured by me for Christ's sake.' His sufferings and his rejoicings therein seem mentioned to show that his profession is founded on solid self-conviction. Compare v. 11. The ἀντι in ἀνταναπληρῶ is not, as it is usually regarded, pleonastic, but may have the sense assigned by Elsner and Abp. Newcome in the following paraphrase: 'I, who formerly persecuted the Church, now, in my turn, fill up, by my bodily sufferings, what remains behind, in the course of my life, of the afflictions allotted to me because of Christ.' See, however, Whitby and Doddridge, cited in Recens. Synop., and also Macknight.

25. The Apostle now drops the image by which the Church was just before compared to a body, and uses terms suited to a house; to which, indeed, the Church is compared at 1 Tim. iii. 15. Now over this house God presides as supreme οἰκονόμος (so it is called τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ); committing, however, this οἰκονομία to others (as here to Paul) who are called διάκονοι. (Heinrichs.)

— κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c.] 'according to the dispensation of God given unto me.' See Note on Eph. iii. 2. Πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ. Meaning, 'to fully promulgate the Gospel [to you Gentiles], so as to leave none unevangelized.' Comp. Eph. i. 10.

26. τὸ μυστ.] 'even the mystery;' namely, that of admitting the Gentiles into the Christian Church, which had been comparatively concealed from preceding ages and generations of men.' See Notes on Matt. xiii. 35 and Eph. iii. 3—6.

27. οἷς ἠθέλ., &c.] Meaning, 'to whom God has been pleased to make known what are the glorious riches and preciousness of this mystery among the Gentiles.' The mystery is the free grace of God, and the remission of sins alone through the blood of Christ.

— ὅς ἐστι Χρ. ἐν ὑμῖν.] "Ος has reference in sense to μυστήριον just before; and indeed some MSS. have ὅ, but doubtless by emendation, though that may serve to show the ancient interpretation. The sense may be expressed, as it is by Newcome, 'which mystery consists in preaching Christ among you as the author of the hope of eternal glory.' Compare Rom. ix. 23.

28. 'Hic ad suam prædicationem transfert, quidquid prius de mirifico et adorando Dei arcano pronuntiavit; atque ita exponit, quod jam attigerat de commissa sibi dispensatione.' (Calv.)

— ὃν ἡμεῖς καταγγέλλομεν, &c.] The full sense is, 'which Gospel we preach, admonishing every man [of whatever nation] of its claims [to his attention], and teaching every man [who attends to the admonition] the duties it enjoins:' probably thereby intimating the manner of the thing, namely, by first preaching the fundamental heads of Christian doctrine, and then building thereon the knowledge of Christian duties. By σοφία must, of course, be understood spiritual wisdom, that which 'maketh' men 'wise unto salvation,' (see Ps. xc. 12,) and which is drawn from Him who is emphatically Wisdom, and 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom.' On the expression παραστ. see Note at 2 Cor. iv. 14 and Eph. v. 27. Τέλειον ἐν Χριστῷ, i. e. 'possessed of a perfect knowledge of Christ and his Gospel,' and exercised in the duties it enjoins.

29. εἰς ὅ] scil. πρᾶγμα. Render, 'unto which purpose also I strenuously labour, according to the energy which operates in me powerfully.' See Phil. iv. 13, and compare 1 Cor. xv. 10. In κοπ. we have a strong expression, illustrated by what is said at 2 Cor. xi. 28, that he has the care of all the [Gentile] churches. 'Αγωνιζόμενος is an agonistic and highly energetic term, expressive of the extreme earnestness with which St. Paul exerted himself to counteract the efforts of the false teachers.

ἡλίκον ἀγῶνα ἔχω περὶ ὑμῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ, καὶ 2 ὅσοι οὐχ ἑωράκασι τὸ πρόσωπόν μου ἐν σαρκί· [b] ἵνα παρα- b 2 Cor. 1. 6. infra 3. 14. supra 1. 9. κληθῶσιν αἱ καρδίαι αὐτῶν, ‡ συμβιβασθέντων ἐν ἀγάπῃ, καὶ εἰς πάντα πλοῦτον τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως, εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ [καὶ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ 3 Χριστοῦ], [c] ἐν ᾧ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροὶ τῆς σοφίας καὶ c 1 Cor. 1. 24.
4 τῆς γνώσεως ἀπόκρυφοι. [d] Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, ἵνα μή τις ὑμᾶς d Eph. 5. 6. infra v. 18.

II. Ceasing to speak of himself, the Apostle now adverts to the Colossians, admonishing them to abide constantly by the pure Christian instructions which they had received from Epaphras, and not to suffer themselves to be led away by the devices of false teachers: an admonition, on account of the many errors of doctrine with which they were carried to and fro, highly necessary. (Heinrichs.) It is well observed by Steiger, that in the first five verses of this Chapter St. Paul appeals to the sympathy of the Colossians. 'He testifies (says Calvin) his love to them, that he may have more credence and authority with them; for we willingly believe those who are solicitous for our salvation.' The labours he underwent for their sake are, by amplification, called contests.

1. θέλω γὰρ, &c.] This has reference to ἀγωνιζόμενος just before; q. d. 'I say, labour earnestly; for,' &c.

— ἀγῶνα περὶ ὑμ.] i. e. 'anxious solicitude and earnest care on behalf of you.' This was natural, on account of the dangers they were in from the arts of wily seducers, both of the Judaizing and Paganizing Christians, who had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel. In ἑωρ. τὸ πρόσωπόν μ. ἐν σ. there is a Hebraism signifying 'to have personal knowledge of.' It is generally supposed that the words καὶ ὅσοι οὐχ ἑωρ. show that Paul had not been to Colosse and Laodicea. But thus we must supply ἄλλοι, which is harsh; and yet it is highly improbable that he should have gone throughout Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6. xviii. 23) without visiting two of its most considerable cities.

2. ἵνα παρακληθῶσιν αἱ καρδίαι α.] Here there seems an allusion to the deprivation of the comforts of the Gospel, arising from the doubts and fears infused by false teachers; whence it was necessary to bring the discordant parties together (συμβιβάζειν), and thus close up the schism. On the expression συμβιβ. see Note at Eph. iv. 16. In this sense, as used of persons, the word occurs in Thucyd. viii. 29, ξυνεβίβασε δὲ τὸν Περδίκκαν τοῖς Ἀθηναίοις.

Here, for συμβιβασθέντων, many MSS., Versions, and Fathers have συμβιβασθέντες, which has been edited by Griesb., Tittm., Vater, and Scholz, but without sufficient reason. The term refers to the means whereby the schism might be closed, and amity restored. The best comment on the sense of the passage is supplied by that of Eph. iv. 13—16, where, after exhorting εἰς τὴν ἑνότητα τῆς πίστεως, the Apostle shows how the want of it leads to schism, and then suggests the cure of it in charity; by the exercise of which, he intimates, the body of Christ, the Church, may be kept whole.

— καὶ εἰς πάντα, &c.] 'As the ἐν before ἀγάπῃ shows the instrument, so the εἰς here denotes the scope and end to which they were to be united; namely, that their minds might be imbued with knowledge far more elevated than the false teachers knew.' (Heinrichs.) In order to heighten the representation, the Apostle, instead of εἰς πάντα or εἰς πλήρη σύνεσιν, says, εἰς τὴν πληροφορίαν τῆς συνέσεως, and, what is yet more, εἰς πάντα πλοῦτον τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως. Then, by apposition, he at εἰς ἐπίγ. τοῦ μυστηρίου, subjoins the cause why he ascribes πλοῦτ. and πληροφ. to Christian knowledge; namely, inasmuch as it leads men to understand the μυστήριον, or divine decree for blessing men by Christ, hitherto hidden.

3. ἐν ᾧ.] Supply Χριστῷ or μυστηρίῳ. According to either, a good sense will arise, but much depends upon whether the words preceding, καὶ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, are, or are not, genuine. Now there is, I apprehend, nothing like sufficient evidence to authorize any one word to be omitted; though Griesbach and others, including Scholz, have cancelled them all. Render, 'of God even the Father, and of Christ;' see i. 26, 27. The ᾧ is better, with most Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to Χριστοῦ. 'It respects (says Whitby) the person of Christ as Mediator, the knowledge of whom, the Apostle declares, hath an excellency beyond all other knowledge, Philip. iii. 8; for ἐν ᾧ περιετμήθητε, in whom ye are circumcised, ver. 11, and ἐν ᾧ συνηγέρθητε, in whom ye are risen again, ver. 12, plainly relate to Christ's person, and his merits as Mediator; and the whole of the following chapter treats of him, and of the benefits we have received by him. The Apostle also applies this to him by saying (ver. 6), as you received the Lord Jesus Christ, so walk in him; and by warning us against the deceit of vain philosophy, because in Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead.'

— ἐν ᾧ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροὶ, &c.] Meaning, 'in whose Gospel are abundantly laid up (as in a treasury) the most precious doctrines of Divine wisdom and knowledge.' By a similar mode of expression it is said, Eurip. Alc. 614, ἐν τοῖς ἀγαθοῖσι δὲ πάντ' ἔνεστιν σοφίας (δῶρα), and Julian, Hymn. in Solem 2, ἀναλαβόντι σοφίας ἀνοῖξαι θησαυρούς. By ἡ σοφ. is meant Divine wisdom (compare Eph. i. 8, and 1 Cor. i. 24. ii. 6, 7); and it is implied that the Gospel alone hath it.

4. τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, &c.] Here there is a reference to ver. 2 (ver. 3 being parenthetical); and the literal sense is, 'This I say, meaning that,' &c.; i. e. 'I mean to say that.' Παραλ. signifies, 1. 'to reckon wrong, make a wrong account; 2. to cause a person to reckon or judge wrongly, to deceive.' Πιθαν. signifies a plausible but false representation. So χρηστολογία in Rom. xvi. 18. Loesner aptly compares, from Philo iv. 14, C., οἵτινες ᾠήθησαν σοφίαν πιθάνων εἶναι παραλογίζηται ἐν πιθανολογίᾳ· [e] εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῇ σαρκὶ 5 ἄπειμι, ἀλλὰ τῷ πνεύματι σὺν ὑμῖν εἰμι, χαίρων καὶ βλέ-πων ὑμῶν τὴν τάξιν, καὶ τὸ στερέωμα τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως ὑμῶν. [f] Ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν 6 τὸν Κύριον, ἐν αὐτῷ περιπατεῖτε, [g] ἐῤῥιζωμένοι καὶ ἐποικο- 7 δομούμενοι ἐν αὐτῷ, καὶ βεβαιούμενοι ἐν τῇ πίστει, καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε, περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

[h] Βλέπετε μή τις ὑμᾶς ἔσται ὁ συλαγωγῶν διὰ τῆς φιλο- 8 σοφίας καὶ κενῆς ἀπάτης, κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, κατὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ οὐ κατὰ Χριστόν· e 1 Cor. 5. 3. & 14. 40. f 1 Thess. 4. 1. Jude 3.

g 1 Cor. 1. 5. Eph. 2. 21, 22. & 2. 3, 18. & 3. 17.
h Jer. 29. 8. Matt. 15. 2. Gal. 4. 3, 9. Eph. 5. 6, 18. infra v. 20. Heb. 13. 9.

λόγων εὕρεσιν, ἀλλ' οὐ πραγμάτων ἀληθεστάτην πίστιν, and 338, E., τὴν τῶν λόγων πιθανότητα.

5. εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῇ σαρκὶ—εἰμι.] See a kindred sentiment in 1 Cor. v. 3, 4.

— χαίρων καὶ βλέπων.] An Hendiadys for, 'rejoicing while I see;' of which several examples are adduced by Wetstein; ex. gr. Josephus, Bell. iii. 9. 2, ὑμᾶς πρὸς τὸ παρὸν εὖ ἔχοντας χαίρω καὶ βλέπω. The term βλέπων may be understood of the certain information received by Epaphras and others; see 2 Cor. vii. 8. Τάξιν stands for εὐταξίαν, denoting (by a military metaphor) subordination to their spiritual pastors and masters. See 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

6. To praise the Apostle now subjoins exhortation, namely, to remain constant in the doctrine of the Gospel. (Calvin and Hyperius.) Verses 6—15 contain an exhortation to persevere in the faith by being on their guard against false teachers; and here we may distinguish three several parts: verses 6, 7 contain a positive exhortation; verse 8 a negative exhortation. In verses 9—15 we have certain reasons which come in aid of his exhortations, forming an exposition of the orthodox doctrine. This part is nearly parallel to that at i. 13. (Steiger.)

— ὡς οὖν παρελάβετε, &c.] 'As, therefore, ye have received the doctrine of Christ, walk,' i. e. continue, in it, and by it regulate your whole conduct. Παραλαμβ. is used of teaching of every kind, both oral and by writing; see 1 Cor. xi. 23, &c. Περιπατεῖν, as Heinrichs remarks, here denotes not merely the habitual regulation of the life, but continuance in doctrine; since the whole chapter is not ethical, but doctrinal.

7. ἐῤῥιζ. καὶ ἐποικ.] See i. 23, and Eph. iii. 18. Βεβαιούμ. is exegetical of ἐῤῥιζ. and ἐποικ. Περισσ. denotes more than περιπατεῖτε just before. So Rom. xv. 13, περ. ἐν τῇ ἐλπίδι. 1 Cor. xv. 58, περ. ἐν τῷ ἔργῳ τοῦ Κυρίου.

8. Postquam hactenus (i. 23. ii. 7) confirmavit Colossenses in doctrina quam semel acceperant, jam avocat a falsa doctrina, quam proponebant adversarii. (Hyperius.) Iterum cum veneno antidotum a se datum opponi debeat, admonet. (Calvin.) As the foregoing portion served for confirmation, so does the present serve for confutation.

— βλέπετε μή τις, &c.] Meaning, 'Beware lest any delude you by means of an empty and deceitful philosophy [whether Gentile or Jewish], which rests merely on what is handed down as wisdom, or what is agreeable only to the imperfect doctrines of the world, and not the Gospel of Christ; compare Matt. xxiv. 4. Συλαγωγεῖν here signifies 'to lead off captive,' make spoil of your Christian liberty. It is well observed by Calvin, 'Verbo utitur admodum proprio: alludit enim ad prædones, qui dum violenter rapere gregem nequeunt, fraude abigunt pecudes.' By a similar mode of expression it is said, 2 Tim. iii. 6, αἰχμαλωτεύοντες τὰ γυναικάρια. In διὰ τῆς φιλοσ. καὶ κεν. ἀπ. most recent Commentators recognise a hendiadys for φιλ. τῆς ἀπατηλῆς; for the Apostle, they think, does not condemn philosophy itself, but only out of its proper limits, and exercised upon matters beyond its scope; see Hyperius, Newcome, Schoettgen, and Lord Bacon's Advancement of Learning, l. ii. 5, p. 5. It would seem, however, that the Apostle does mean to condemn, and caution them against, the Grecian philosophy, as sure to deceive them on matters of religion, and which was a 'vain deceit,' by professing to be what it was not, and promising what it did not perform. This view is, I find, supported by the authority of a very competent judge, namely, Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg. l. iii. § 4, who observes that 'the Apostles always speak in terms of contempt, or abhorrence, of the Grecian philosophy.' And he shows at large that they had good reasons for so doing. It is well remarked by the Editor of Steiger, that the term philosophy is a special one, denoting the system. The expression κενὴ ἀπάτη denotes the general quality of all errors, and especially of this philosophy; and κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων is to be regarded as added to the whole phrase, by way of indicating in what manner the faithful are spoiled.

On the persons here alluded to, see the Introduction to this Epistle. The στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου (on which see Note at Gal. iv. 3), as well as the παράδοσιν τῶν ἀνθρώπων, may relate to both Jews and Gentiles, referring, in the case of the latter, to those systems of religion and philosophy which had been handed down from generation to generation, but rested only on the opinions and authority of men. Thus we may, with Whitby, regard the portion in question as consisting of two heads: 1. Cautions against the seductions of the Jews, zealous for the observation of their rites and ceremonies; 2. against the seductions of the Heathens, by their vain philosophy dressed up by them anew, both in its doctrines and morals, and set off with the most specious pretences, styled a little before πιθανολογία.

9 [i] ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος
10 σωματικῶς· [k] καί ἐστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι, ὅς ἐστιν ἡ 11 κεφαλὴ πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ ἐξουσίας· [l] ἐν ᾧ καὶ περιετμήθητε περιτομῇ ἀχειροποιήτῳ, ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος [τῶν 12 ἁμαρτιῶν] τῆς σαρκὸς, ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, [m] συν-ταφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν τῷ βαπτίσματι· ἐν ᾧ καὶ συνηγέρθητε διὰ τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐνεργείας τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἐγείραντος 13 αὐτὸν ἐκ [τῶν] νεκρῶν, [n] καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς ὄντας ἐν τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ τῆς σαρκὸς ὑμῶν συνεζωο-ποίησε σὺν αὐτῷ· χαρισάμενος ἡμῖν πάντα τὰ παραπτώ-14 ματα, [o] ἐξαλείψας τὸ καθ' ἡμῶν χειρόγραφον τοῖς δόγμα-σιν, ὃ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν, καὶ αὐτὸ ἦρκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου, i John 1. 14. supra 1. 19.

k John 1. 16. Rom. 8. 38. Eph. 1. 21.
l Deut. 10. 16. & 30. 6. Jer. 4. 4. Rom 2. 29. & 6. 6. Eph. 4. 22. infra 3. 8, 9. Phil. 3. 3. m Rom. 6. 3, 4. Eph. 1. 19. & 2. 1, 5. & 3. 7. Gal. 3. 27. n Eph. 2. 1, 11.
o Eph. 2. 15, 16.

9. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ, &c.] The connexion is, 'Beware of any who would draw you away from the truth as it is in Jesus; for,' &c. The expression σωματικῶς is susceptible of three several significations; 1. corporally; 2. truly; 3. substantially; one or other of which has been adopted by the best Expositors. But it has been well shown by Hyperius and Wolf that these merge into one another. And so Whitby, who remarks, 'In Christ the Deity dwells in fulness, as nothing could be added to it; and so in him, bodily, that is, as the sun dwells in the firmament, where the body of it is. The whole Divine nature is not only in part, but fully, without absence of any part of it, in Christ; and that not by species, or image only, but really and substantially; and consequently the will of God must be supposed to be so revealed in Christ, that there can be no need of any addition from the Heathen philosophy, or from the Jewish Law;' see also Bp. Beveridge in D'Oyly and Mant. The full sense will thus be: 'For in Him all the complete perfection essential to the Godhead abides corporally, substantially, and really, and not in the manner of shadows.' If this association of three several significations should be thought harsh, we may take only the second and third,—truly or really, and essentially. So Aristotle, Rhet. i. 1, says that 'argument is the essence (σῶμα) of proof.' We have here, as Dr. Pye Smith observes, a contrast formed with the shadows and mere resemblances, from which the Apostle exerted himself to draw his readers to Christ as the great object of knowledge and faith.

10. πεπλ.] i. e. 'amply provided by him, or by his doctrine,' with whatever is necessary to salvation; without needing any additions from philosophy, or from the law of Moses. Ἡ κεφαλὴ —ἐξουσίας. Meaning, 'who is supreme over every order of intelligent beings, that exercise authority and power.'

11, 12. The Apostle here encounters those who endeavoured to bring in circumcision. In the expressions περιτομῇ ἀχειρ., and ἐν τῇ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τῆς σαρκὸς, and ἐν τῇ περιτομῇ τοῦ Χρ., we have the principal traits of the true spiritual circumcision required by Christ, or which has Christ for its author and object; on which see Rom. ii. 29. Phil. iii. 3, and compare Deut. xxx. 6. Jer. ix. 26. The second and third of the above clauses are exegetical of the first. Thus the sense is, 'Through whom ye have been circumcised with a circumcision not corporeal [but spiritual]; namely, that which consists in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, (i. e. in renouncing the sins to which the body and the flesh are prone,) even with the circumcision of Christ (i. e. that spiritual circumcision which he requires) as it is typified by baptism, [which corresponds to circumcision].' In ver. 12 the Apostle illustrates this by a fresh image, also employed at Rom. vi. 2—4, where see Note.

12. συνταφέντες αὐτῷ ἐν τῷ βαπτ.] Meaning, 'having engaged at your baptism to renounce sin, and walk in newness of life.'

— ἐν ᾧ καὶ συνηγέρθητε, &c.] The sense here is the same as at Eph. ii. 5, 6, where see Note. Διὰ τῆς πίστεως—νεκρῶν. Render, 'through faith in, and dependence on, the power of God, who raised him from the dead, [and can therefore raise you].' The τῶν before νεκρῶν, not found in many MSS. and early Editions, has been cancelled by Bengel, Matthæi, and Griesbach, agreeably to the general usage of the New Test.

13. καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς—παραπτ., &c.] This moral reformation is here illustrated by another figure, found in a very similar passage of Eph. ii. 1—5; see Rom. vi. 3. Τῇ ἀκροβυστίᾳ; i. e. 'your carnal and corrupt state as heathens,' as opposed to περιτομῇ ἀχειροπ. at ver. 11. Several MSS., and some Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, after συνεζ. have added ὑμᾶς, which has been received by Griesbach and Scholz; and others, for ὑμῖν, have ἡμῖν, which has been edited by Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; but, I think, injudiciously; for, as Rinck justly observes, this is closely connected with the preceding; q. d. 'You who were dead in your sins, are quickened, your trespasses being forgiven.' After which, at ver. 14, the general subject is resumed, with the introduction of the first person pronoun possessive.

14. ἐξαλείψας — σταυρῷ.] Compare the parallel passage at Eph. ii. 15. The Apostle here considers the Law as a note of hand, or bond, given by a debtor to his creditor; and, by way of explanation, he adds, τοῖς δόγμασι, where Bp. Middleton supposes an ellipsis of σύν; which is, however, quite unexampled in the New Test.; and the sense arising, 'together with all its coveπροσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ· [p] ἀπεκδυσάμενος τὰς ἀρχὰς 15

καὶ τὰς ἐξουσίας, ἐδειγμάτισεν ἐν παῤῥησίᾳ, θριαμβεύσας αὐτοὺς ἐν αὐτῷ.
[q] Μὴ οὖν τις ὑμᾶς κρινέτω ἐν βρώσει ἢ ἐν πόσει, ἢ ἐν 16 μέρει ἑορτῆς, ἢ νουμηνίας, ἢ σαββάτων· [r] ἅ ἐστι σκιὰ τῶν 17 μελλόντων, τὸ δὲ σῶμα [τοῦ] Χριστοῦ. [s] Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς 18 καταβραβευέτω θέλων ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ καὶ θρησκείᾳ τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, εἰκῆ φυσιούμενος ὑπὸ p Gen. 3. 15. Ps. 68. 18. Isa. 53. 12. Matt. 12. 29. Luke 11. 22. John 12. 31. & 16. 11. Eph 4. 8. & 6. 12. Heb. 2. 14. q Lev. 11. 2. & 23. 2, &c. Rom. 14. 3, 10, 13. Gal. 4. 10. r Heb. 8. 5. & 10. 1.

s Jer. 29. 8. Ezek. 13. 3 Matt. 24. 4. Eph. 5. 6. 2 Thess. 2. 3. 1 John 4. 1. Rev. 3. 11.

nants,' is too feeble for so vigorous a writer as St. Paul. It is better to suppose an ellipsis of ἐν, which is expressed in the parallel passage of Eph. ii. 15, τὸν νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι καταργήσας. Thus it is for ὃ ἦν ἐν τ. δ. Render, 'consisting of the covenants, namely, contained in the various expiations prescribed by the Levitical law.' These ordinances, it is added, 'were in full force against us;' for that is undoubtedly the sense of καθ' ἡμῶν, notwithstanding that some render, 'with respect to us.' The words ὃ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν (which have been variously interpreted by the recent Commentators) seem meant to explain καθ' ἡμῶν, as ἦρκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου (from the Latin è medio tollere) is exegetical of ἐξαλείψας, in which there is an allusion to blotting, and thus annulling, a writing; corresponding to our expression, crossing out. In προσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ there is an allusion to the ancient custom of annulling covenants or bonds, by driving a nail through them. The sense, however, cannot be, 'nailing it to his cross;' for that would involve too great a confusion of metaphor. Rather, 'having driven a nail into it by his cross' (i. e. the atonement through his cross), and therefore annulled it.

15. ἀπεκδυσάμενος—ἐδειγμ.] Here there is a succession of military metaphors. 'Απεκδ. alludes to the stripping and plundering of vanquished foes; ἐδειγμ. to their being exposed to public gaze and derision; παῤῥησίᾳ signifying 'openly, publicly,' as in John vii. 4. xi. 54. Θριαμβεύσας is added by way of completing the idea. So Plutarch, i. p. 153. 1, βασιλεῖς ἐθριάμβευσε. By τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰς ἐξουσίας are meant those so called at Eph. vi. 12; namely, the evil spirits and their agents. See John xii. 31.

16. We have here an inference from the foregoing arguments; what had been before said of circumcision being now extended to the discrimination of meats and days. (Hyperius and Calvin.)

— μὴ οὖν τις ὑμᾶς, &c.] Render, 'Wherefore [such being the case with the ceremonial law] let no one judge you in [respect of any rite connected with] meats.' 'Εν μέρει is used as in 2 Cor. iii. 10. ix. 3; literally signifying, 'in the particular of.' On the thing itself see Rom. xiv. 2—17. 1 Pet. iv. 16.

17. ἅ ἐστι σκιὰ—Χριστοῦ.] Meaning, 'which things [as compared to the future evangelical blessings to be obtained by Christ] are a mere shadow; but the substance is what appertains or relates to Christ and his Gospel.' The best Commentators are agreed that the Genitive Χρ. is put for the Dative with ἐν; q. d. 'the thing (i. e. the truth itself), the future blessings themselves subsist in Christ, resulting from his person, work, and salvation;' for it is not to be understood that these and all other of the ritual constitutions of the Law of Moses shadowed forth some Christian mystery, but only that they were as mere shadows compared to that solid and substantial truth, which Christ, by his Gospel, hath discovered to us.

18. Thus far the Apostle has produced arguments for confutation sought from the things themselves, or from those which properly belonged to the cause, and directly against false doctrine. He now collects other arguments from circumstances, especially from the qualities of the persons, against the false teachers, whom he describes as seducers from the truth. (Hyperius.)

— καταβραβευέτω.] This term (called by Jerome a Cilicism, though it is found in Demosthenes, Polybius, and Plutarch) has been variously interpreted, chiefly from want of a clear notion of the import of the word, which signifies, 1. to give the βραβεῖον, or prize, wrongly, or to artfully disappoint any one of the prize he seeks; 2. to circumvent, like παραλογίζεσθαι, supra v. 4. And although some recent Commentators suppose the sense here to be to condemn, or damnify, or tyrannize over, yet it seems to be rather that commonly assigned, 'beguile, or defraud;' namely, by drawing you off from the true doctrine to a false one: a sense supported by the similar expression, Rev. iii. 11, κράτει ὃ ἔχεις, ἵνα μηδεὶς λάβῃ τὸν στέφανόν σου. Of θέλων the sense is far from clear. By many Expositors it is taken with ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνῃ, and explained, 'delighting in;' while others interpret it, 'affecting;' viz., by a pretended humility and modesty. And so an anonymous writer, cited by Wetstein, says, 'Modestiam simulantes, tumidi sunt.' The above two senses, indeed, merge into each other. I prefer, however, to take the expression, as it has been by some ancient Commentators, with καταβραβευέτω, though not in the sense they assign. The meaning seems to be, 'Let no one gain his will, or please himself, by dissuading you.' Hence I have, with R. Stephens, removed the comma. From the context it is evident that ταπεινοφροσύνη must here be taken in sensu deteriori, to denote an affected humility. Of θρησκείᾳ τῶν ἀγγέλων the sense here is disputed. Some, regarding this as a Genitive of object, render, 'a worshipping of angels' (see Test. xii. Patriarch., cited by Bretschneider, on the word ἐθελοθρησκεία); others, 'a worship of angels,' meaning, such a worship as angels render, a sort of ecstatic devotion, called at ver. 23, ἐθελοθρησκεία. According to the former interpretation (adopted by the ancient and most modern Expositors) the persons 19 τοῦ νοὸς τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, [t] καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλὴν, [t] Eph. 4. 15, 16.

ἐξ οὗ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα διὰ τῶν ἀφῶν καὶ συνδέσμων ἐπιχορη-γούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον, αὔξει τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.
20 [u] Εἰ [οὖν] ἀπεθάνετε σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων [u] Rom. 6. 3, 5. & 7. 4, 6.
21 τοῦ κόσμου, τί, ὡς ζῶντες ἐν κόσμῳ, δογματίζεσθε; "[x] Μὴ Gal. 2. 19 & 4. 9. supra v. 8.
22 ἅψῃ, μηδὲ γεύσῃ, μηδὲ θίγῃς·" [y] ἅ ἐστι πάντα εἰς φθο- [x] 1 Tim. 4. 3. ρὰν τῇ ἀποχρήσει, κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν [y] Is. 29. 13. Matt. 15. 9. Tit. 1. 14.

in question (supposed to be Gnostics), adopting the opinion of the Essenes, Pythagoreans, and Platonists, maintained, from a sentiment of affected humility, that direct access of prayer to the Deity was presumptuous and impracticable, and that prayers could only be presented and accepted through the mediation of the angels; to whom, of course, as mediators at least, worship was to be paid; see Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 7, fin. But how that sense can be extracted from the words I see not. The term θρησκεία signifies, not worshipping, but religious service, or religion, as in James i. 26, τούτου μάταιος ἡ θρησκεία. And so in Acts xxvi. 5, it denotes the Jewish religion. Here it may, according to the former sense, denote that sort of seraphic intercourse with God (in after-times practised by a certain sect in France), and that aiming at a sort of angelic service, in which consists the very essence of fanaticism.

The next words, ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, seem meant to censure generally that prying and speculative spirit, on points not revealed, which had been introduced by the Gentile converts; for ἐμβατεύω (from ἐν and βατεύω, equivalent to βαίνω) signifies 'to go in or into,' and is followed by an Accusative of place, with or without a preposition of motion, or its equivalent, a dative without a preposition. But it is sometimes, though rarely, used figuratively of 'going into, i. e. in investigating' a matter, with the idea of care, diligence, and study. So Philo de Plaut. Noc. p. 225 (cited by Loesner), ἐπιπλέον ἐμβατεύοντες ταῖς ἐπιστήμαις; but as that may be done both for good and for evil, so the term admits of being taken both in bonam and in malam partem, as here and in Aristid. de Socr. p. 240 (cited by Wetstein), ἐμβατεύων εἰς τὰ τῶν Ἑλλήνων πράγματα. Thus the sense here of ἃ μὴ ἑώρακεν ἐμβατεύων is 'intruding or prying into matters which he has not known, and does not know' (see 1 Tim. i. 7), namely, the state of the invisible world. The words following trace this spirit to its origin; namely, in vanity, lightly, inconsiderately, and causelessly taken up, and afterwards fostered by a carnal disposition. Φυσιούμενος, 'puffed up and proud.' So 1 Tim. vi. 4, τετύφωται μηδὲν ἐπιστάμενος.

19. καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλήν.] These words refer to the whole of the preceding verse; meaning, that 'by such worship of angels, and presumptuous intrusion into the secrets of the Lord, they did not hold fast their allegiance to Christ,' the Head and sole Mediator between God and man, and the Revealer of what was proper to be known, but abandoned the grand principle of the Gospel by seeking other mediators. See 1 Tim. ii. 5—7. Of the words following, ἐξ οὗ πᾶν—συμβιβ., the sense will appear from the Note on the parallel passage at Eph. iv. 16.

— αὔξει τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] This may either mean 'the greatest increase' (τοῦ Θεοῦ being taken as an idiom importing the superlative), or rather, 'such an increase as God may grant.'

20—23. We have here a conclusion, introducing an expostulation pointed by interrogation, and the general sense contained in these verses may be this: 'If ye be [as ye profess yourselves at baptism] dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world (i. e. have renounced Jewish ordinances), abolished through Christ (see Eph. ii. 15), why, as if living in conformity to the world, do ye subject yourselves to carnal ordinances, such as, "Touch not [this], taste not [that kind of meat] (1 Cor. vii. 1. 1 Tim. iv. 3), Handle not [that as unclean]?"' &c. On the expression τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, see Note at Gal. iv. 3. Δογματίζεσθε, 'ye suffer ordinances [namely, those of the Jewish law] to be imposed on you.' In μὴ ἅψῃ, &c. we have specified some of the δόγματα in question. Yet the expressions are not (as some consider them) synonymous. Ἅψῃ and θίγῃς seem to refer to a greater or less contact with things ceremonially unclean, though the former might denote the same as γεύσῃ; on which see my Note on Thucyd. ii. 50. The terms are supposed to have reference to certain meats, and, indeed, animal food in general, which was forbidden by the Pythagoreans to be eaten; but surely they must chiefly be meant of what was forbidden by the Jewish law. As to the words following, ἅ ἐστι πάντα εἰς φθορὰν, if ἃ πάντα refer to the meats prohibited, we may best explain, with the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, 'which things are all so far from polluting the user, that they rather themselves perish by using, and tend only to corruption;' and consequently do neither good nor harm, (see Rom. xiv. 17.) conformably to the words of our Lord, Matt. xv. 17, 18. Yet this yields a sense not sufficiently apposite, and it would rather seem that the reference is to the prohibitory ordinances, and that φθορὰν is to be taken in a figurative sense. Thus the meaning will be: 'All which sort of ordinances or restrictions tend only, in use, to the destruction of those who adopt them; being [only] framed according to the commandments and precepts of men, [not of God].' By this method of exposition (supported by the authority of Augustin, Vatabl., Estius, and Wolf) we not only obtain a sense worthy of the Apostle, but also a good construction; for, according to the first-mentioned interpretation, the next words, κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, cannot be referred to what immediately precedes, but to δογματίζεσθε at ver. 20, which is exceedingly harsh. According to the construction I have adopted, ἔστι must be repeated before κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα.

z Supra v. 18. 1 Tim. 4. 8. & 5. 23. a Ps. 110. 1. Rom. 6. 5. Eph. 1. 20. & 2. 6. supra 2. 12. b Rom. 6. 2, &c. Gal. 2. 20. c 1 Cor. 15. 43. Phil. 3. 21. 1 John 3. 2. d Rom. 8. 13. & 6. 13. & 7. 5, 23. Eph. 4. 22. & 5. 3, 5. 1 Thess. 4. 5.

ἀνθρώπων. [z] ἅτινά ἐστι λόγον μὲν ἔχοντα σοφίας, ἐν ἐθε- 23 λοθρησκείᾳ καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνῃ καὶ ἀφειδίᾳ σώματος, οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ τινι, πρὸς πλησμονὴν τῆς σαρκός. III. [a] Εἰ οὖν 1 συνηγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ, τὰ ἄνω ζητεῖτε, οὗ ὁ Χριστός ἐστιν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ καθήμενος· τὰ ἄνω φρονεῖτε, μὴ 2 τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς· [b] ἀπεθάνετε γὰρ, καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν κέκρυ- 3 πται σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ ἐν τῷ Θεῷ. [c] ὅταν ὁ Χριστὸς φανε- 4 ρωθῇ, ἡ ζωὴ ἡμῶν, τότε καὶ ὑμεῖς σὺν αὐτῷ φανερωθήσεσθε ἐν δόξῃ.
[d] Νεκρώσατε οὖν τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, πορ- 5 νείαν, ἀκαθαρσίαν, πάθος, ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν, καὶ τὴν πλεονε-

23. ἅτινα] scil. ἐντάλματα. On this use of the relative, by which it serves to connect propositions, instead of the demonstrative pronoun, see Matth. Gr. Gr. § 477, c., and compare Eph. v. 6 and Col. iii. 6. It is well remarked by Calvin, that 'we have here a pre-occupation of what might be urged by the contrary party; wherein, while he concedes to the adversaries what they might urge in excuse, simul id totum pro nihilo ducit. Λόγον is by many of the later Expositors, from Kypke to Doddridge, explained pretext, pretence; but it seems best interpreted by the ancient ones (including Chrysostom) and most moderns, show, as opposed to δύναμιν or ἀλήθειαν: a sense confirmed by 1 Cor. iv. 20, οὐ γὰρ ἐν λόγῳ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλ' ἐν δυνάμει. The opposition in the present passage is suggested by μὲν, alluding to δὲ understood. Σοφίας here denotes religion.

'Εν ἐθελοθρησκείᾳ may be rendered, 'as evinced in an affected sanctity,' lit., 'a would-be worship.' So Theophylact explains it τὴν ὑποκρινομένην εὐλάβειαν ἐν τῇ θρησκείᾳ, 'scrupulosity of worship;' and so the word is used by the early Ecclesiastical writers. 'Εθελοπερισσοθρησκεία occurs in Epiphanius, cited by Heinrichs. Ταπεινοφρ. must, from the context, denote that spurious humility, under which lurks spiritual pride. With respect to ἀφειδ. σώμ., it denotes harshly treating (see 2 Cor. xiii. 2) by neglecting the comfort of the body as to other things besides food; namely, clothing, warmth, rest, &c.; and the words οὐκ ἐν τιμῇ—σαρκὸς are meant to be explanatory of ἀφειδία. And here it would seem, as the Apostle has shown in what Christian wisdom did not consist (namely, in unnecessary and affected austerities), so now he shows in what it does consist, or is consistent with, namely, τιμὴ πρὸς πλησμονὴν τῆς σαρκός. Τιμὴ here signifies (by a sense also found at 1 Cor. xii. 23, and 1 Tim. v. 17, and elsewhere) a cherishing [of the body]. The words πρὸς πλησμονὴν intimate the kind of care here meant,—namely, the satisfying its wants, so as to keep up its strength for the duties of life, and that the body may thus serve the soul, which an extreme either way would prevent.

III. This Chapter commences with the general conclusion to the whole of the first portion of the Epistle, wherein the Apostle briefly exhorts them that, waving all terrene and corruptible things, such as the decrees about meats and drinks, they should aspire alone after heavenly and incorruptible ones. The general sense contained in the first four verses seems to be as follows: 'If, then, ye have really died with Christ unto the observance of Jewish rites (see ii. 20), and have risen with him to better hopes, and, by his example, profess to pursue better aims, no longer grovel in worldly and carnal superstition, but seek after those observances which are spiritual and heavenly; set your affections on heavenly, not on earthly objects, aiming at those blessings which are deposited where your Redeemer will dispense them, who there sitteth at the right hand of God now and for ever, to bless and reward all his faithful servants.'

1. Φρονεῖν is a stronger term than ζητεῖν, meaning, 'to seek earnestly,' and is so used at Rom. viii. 5. Phil. iii. 10. On this text see Bp. Bull in D'Oyly and Mant.

3. ἀπεθάνετε, &c.] q. d. 'I say, mind not earthly things, since ye have died to the things of this world (ii. 12); and as Christ is invisibly with God, so your life is with God deposited, or treasured up, with Christ, to be bestowed on you in his own good time.' See i. 5, and 1 John iii. 2.

5. 'Here (observes Hyperius) commences the second part of the Epistle, on the doctrine of Christian love, wherein the Apostle first exhorts them to mortify or repress old vices, and to cultivate new virtues;' 'thus introducing (says Calvin) an altior philosophia.'

— νεκρώσατε, &c.] Meaning, 'obtain a complete mastery over earthly and carnal lusts which war in your members.' To make his meaning clearer, the Apostle now subjoins some examples of the lusts and vices which ought to be mortified. Πορνείαν may include adultery. By ἀκαθ. and πάθος are denominated those abominations mentioned in Rom. i.; and that such is the sense is clear from the only two other passages where St. Paul uses the word, Rom. i. 26, παρέδωκεν αὐτοὺς εἰς πάθη ἀτιμίας, and 1 Thess. iv. 5, μὴ ἐν πάθει ἐπιθυμίας; and as in those two passages πάθος is so connected with other words as to show that it must be taken in a bad sense, so here the words following, ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν, are used for that purpose alone. By a similar mode of expression it is said, in Philo-Jud. p. 714, ὁ μὲν τῶν κακῶν καὶ παθῶν ζόφος ἀνασκίδναται.

By τὴν πλεονεξίαν most Expositors, ancient and modern, understand covetousness; while others, consisting of some ancients (as Hilary) and moderns (as Estius, Hammond, Jortin, Doddridge, Locke, Parkhurst and others), objecting

6 ξίαν, ἥτις ἐστὶν εἰδωλολατρεία· [e] δι' ἃ ἔρχεται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ
7 Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας· [f] ἐν οἷς καὶ ὑμεῖς περι-8 επατήσατέ ποτε, ὅτε ἐζῆτε ἐν αὐτοῖς. [g] Νυνὶ δὲ ἀπόθεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς τὰ πάντα, ὀργὴν, θυμὸν, κακίαν, βλασφημίαν, 9 αἰσχρολογίαν, ἐκ τοῦ στόματος ὑμῶν. [h] Μὴ ψεύδεσθε εἰς ἀλλήλους, ἀπεκδυσάμενοι τὸν παλαιὸν ἄνθρωπον σὺν ταῖς 10 πράξεσιν αὐτοῦ· [i] καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι τὸν νέον, τὸν ἀνακαινού-11 μενον εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτόν· [k] ὅπου οὐκ ἔνι Ἕλλην καὶ Ἰουδαῖος, περιτομὴ καὶ ἀκροβυστία· βάρβαρος, Σκύθης· δοῦλος, ἐλεύθερος· ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καὶ e Eph. 5. 6. Rev. 22. 15.

f Rom. 6. 19, 20. & 7. 5. 1 Cor. 6. 11. Eph. 2. 1. & 5. 7, 8. Tit. 3. 3.
g Eph. 4. 22. 1 Pet. 2. 1. James 1. 21.
h Lev. 19. 11. Zach. 8. 16. Eph. 4. 22, 25, 29. & 5. 4.
i Gen. 1. 26. Eph. 2. 10. & 4. 24. k Rom. 10. 12. 1 Cor. 7. 21, 22. & 12. 13. Gal. 3. 28. & 5. 6. & 6. 15.

that such cannot well be reckoned among the lusts in the members, interpret it of that insatiable desire of even lawful sensual gratification, which constitutes a kind of idolatry. This latter view may be well founded; but the argument for its adoption, derived from the incongruity of supposing covetousness to be ranked among the lusts in the members, is not very strong, since the term members is, as Calvin observes, used 'impropriè, sed eleganter,' to designate the vices of our corrupt nature; that being considered as a mass composed of different vices. So Whitby, after Theophylact, well observes, that 'there being in us naturally the old man and the body of sin, the inordinate affections and lustings of it are styled the members of that body, partly because they exert themselves by the members of the natural body, and partly because, as the members of the body are employed to accomplish the desires of the natural body, so these affections are employed to gratify the desires of the body of sin.' And they are called earthly, inasmuch as they drag us down, and keep us down to earth, as the poet says, 'Atque affigit humo divinæ particulam auræ.' (See more in Hyperius, Hammond, and Macknight.) And though from what is said at Phil. iii. 19 it is certain that sensuality may, as well as covetousness, be regarded as idolatry, yet the latter is in Scripture especially represented in that light; and with reason, both for the reason mentioned by Whitby, and because (as Calvin remarks on Eph. v. 5), 'morbus iste late patet, et quasi sua contagione occupat plurimorum animos; neque morbus indicatur, quin potius laudatur communi opinione, ideo durius exagitari a Paulo, ut falsam opinionem ex cordibus nostris evellat;' and though covetousness be not a work of the body, yet it is a work of the flesh; and as the preceding term ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν designates evil concupiscence generally, so does this particularly, adverting to its most dangerous species, 'inasmuch as, (observes Scott,) though it be as contrary to vital Christianity as the grossest sensualities, it is more plausible, and not so easily defined.' Besides, as he also remarks, 'according to the foregoing interpretation, sensuality is supposed to be forbidden with needless redundancy of words; and shall covetousness, the root of all evil, escape without rebuke?'

6. τοὺς υἱοὺς τῆς ἀπειθ.] Meaning the heathens, as Eph. v. 6.

7. ἐν οἷς.] Referring to the ἃ (i. e. which vices and sins) at ver. 6. Ἐν αὐτοῖς has the same reference, meaning the children of disobedience, the heathens. On this and the next three verses, see Eph. iv. 22—29, and compare 1 Cor. vi. 11.

8. On the terms ὀργὴ and θυμὸς, see Rom. ii. 8; and on κακίαν, see Note at Eph. iv. 31. To the present purpose is a maxim of Plutarch, de Educ. § 13, αἰσχρολογίας ἀπακτέον τοὺς υἱεῖς· λόγος γὰρ ἔργου σκιά.

11. ὅπου οὐκ ἔνι—ἐλεύθερος] q. d. 'in which new creation, or regeneration, it matters not whether any one be Jew or Gentile,' &c. See a similar passage in Gal. iii. 28, and compare Acts x. 34. The omission here of καὶ between βάρβαρος and Σκύθης, and between δοῦλος and ἐλεύθερος is remarkable, and has not a little perplexed Interpreters. One thing is certain,—that what is said in the second clause, βάρβαρος—ἐλεύθερος, is, as Calvin says, per amplificationem; and thus the copula was omitted, not for brevity so much as for spirit, to which the asyndeton so much contributes. The ancient Versions, indeed, and likewise the most ancient MSS. supply the copula; and in a modern Version this is probably the best course; for our language, at least, will not admit of this asyndeton. The nor, however, of our common Version spoils the meaning, which, as Prof. Scholefield observes, is, 'in which new creation none of these distinctions have any existence.' Of βάρβαρος, Σκύθης, it is remarked by Heinrichs, that they are not opposites, like the former (otherwise we should have had βάρβ. καὶ Ῥωμαῖος), but that there is a kind of climax; q. d. 'barbarians, nay, the most barbarous of them, Scythians.' As to the former, however, (βάρβαρος καὶ Ῥωμαῖος,) I can by no means agree with him. The Apostle would surely rather have written Ἕλλην καὶ βάρβαρος, certainly not Ῥωμαῖος. See Note on Acts xxviii. 2. Rom. i. 14. 1 Cor. xiv. 11. And as to the climax, this would involve such an intermingling of climax with antithesis, as we can hardly suppose the Apostle to have intended. It would rather seem that there is an opposition; and if so, it would seem to be that pointed out by Prof. Scholefield, —that the 'Scythians are opposed to other barbarians, as being more barbarous, just as barbarians in general are opposed to Greeks.' Yet thus the comparison is obviously one not a little irregular; though, indeed, it is an anomaly not unprecedented, since I can myself instance one example in a writer of no mean celebrity, at least for style. I allude to Max. Tyrius, who at Diss. xvii. 4. has, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ τὸν Σκύθην οὐδὲ τὸν Ἕλληνα, οὐδὲ τὸν Πέρσην ἢ τὸν Ὑπερβόρειον: for certainly there was not

l Eph. 4. 32. & 6. 11. Gal. 5. 22. m Matt. 6. 14. Mark 11. 25. Eph. 4. 32. n Eph. 4. 3. & 5. 2. supra 2. 2. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 John 3. 23. & 4. 21. o Eph. 4. 4. Phil. 4. 7. p 1 Cor. 14. 26. Eph. 5. 19. q Rom. 1. 8. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Eph. 5. 20. 1 Thess. 5. 18. Heb. 13. 15.

ἐν πᾶσι Χριστός. [l] Ἐνδύσασθε οὖν, ὡς ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ 12 ἅγιοι καὶ ἠγαπημένοι, σπλάγχνα * οἰκτιρμοῦ, χρηστότητα, ταπεινοφροσύνην, πρᾳότητα, μακροθυμίαν· ([m] ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλή- 13 λων, καὶ χαριζόμενοι ἑαυτοῖς, ἐάν τις πρός τινα ἔχῃ μομ-φήν· καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἐχαρίσατο ὑμῖν, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς·) [n] ἐπὶ πᾶσι δὲ τούτοις τὴν ἀγάπην, ἥτις ἐστὶ σύνδεσμος τῆς 14 τελειότητος. [o] Καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ βραβευέτω ἐν ταῖς 15 καρδίαις ὑμῶν, εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι· καὶ εὐχάριστοι γίνεσθε. [p] Ὁ λόγος τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐνοικείτω ἐν ὑμῖν 16 πλουσίως ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, διδάσκοντες καὶ νουθετοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ᾠδαῖς πνευματικαῖς ἐν χάριτι ᾄδοντες ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ. [q] Καὶ πᾶν ὅ τι ἂν 17 that difference between the Persians and the Hyperboreans as between the Greeks and Scythians. The above view, moreover, seems required by the scope of the Apostle,—which is to show that, under the new Covenant, all human distinctions, whether of nation or of religion, of state (civilized or uncivilized) or of condition in life, would be of no avail, either to help or to exclude any one from the benefits of that dispensation. But distinction surely implies something like opposition, or at least comparison; and, after all, the ellipsis may be not of καὶ, but of ἢ, which is expressed in the passage of Maximus Tyrius above quoted. That the terms βάρβαρος and Σκύθης have reference to knowledge and civilization is plain from Rom. i. 14, Ἕλλησί τε καὶ βαρβ., σοφοῖς τε καὶ ἀνοήτοις. On the sense of ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἐν πᾶσι Χριστὸς, see 1 Cor. xv. 28 and Eph. i. 23, and Notes.

12. ἐνδύσασθε—οἰκτιρμοῦ.] The sense is, 'Having, then, these glorious hopes on an equal footing with the elect people of God, not only detest and avoid the vices just mentioned, but cultivate those virtues, which especially become those to whom God hath shown such mercy and loving kindness,—namely, compassion,' &c. This exhortation, Whitby shows, being addressed to the Colossians in general as a Church, the Apostle cannot be understood to speak of any absolute election of particular persons to eternal life, but must mean the election of them as a Church to the privileges and blessings of the Gospel, as Matt. xxiv. 22. 1 Pet. i. 2, compared with Rom. viii. 28—30, and Eph. i. 3—5. Indeed the absence of the Article and the close connexion of ἐκλ. with the words following, exclude any such application. On the metaphor in ἐνδ. and σπλ., see Rom. xiii. 12. Eph. vi. 11, and the Notes. In illustration of the former, Kypke cites from Themist. Or. 24, ἐπειδήπερ ἀρετὴν ἀντὶ ἱματίων ἠμφίεστο, and Athenæus, p. 565, βουλόμενοι ἐνδύεσθαι αὐτὴν αὐταρκείαν: and Wetstein compares a similar admonition of a Rabbinical writer, Berachoth, fol. 16. 2, 'Induas te misericordiâ tuâ, et co-operias te potentiâ tuâ, et circumvolvas te bonitate tuâ, et circumcingas te miseratione.' Instead of the common reading οἰκτιρμῶν, many good MSS. and all the early Editions, except the Erasmian, have οἰκτιρμοῦ, which has been adopted by almost every Editor from Bengel to Scholz, and rightly; οἰκτιρμῶν, it would seem, arose from those who wished to accommodate this to the usage of the Apostle elsewhere.

13. On this verse see Note on Eph. iv. 2 and 32, and compare Gal. v. 22 and Phil. ii. 1.

14. See Note on Eph. iv. 3. Σύνδ. τῆς τελ., i. e. 'the most perfect bond,' namely, of union, concord, and harmony; so called, because (as Newcome says) 'it unites Christians together, and makes them perfect, being the fulfilment and consummation of the commandments.' See Rom. xiii. 8—10. Eph. iv. 3, and 1 Tim. i. 5.

15. βραβευέτω ἐν ταῖς καρδ.] The sense may be, what some assign, 'Let that peaceable disposition, enjoined by God to all Christians, be, as it were, an umpire to compose all differences between you.' Since, however, from the illustrations of Elsner and Raphel, it appears that βραβεύειν sometimes signifies 'to rule,' so the sense would seem to be, 'let it be the director of your feelings.' Εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλ., i. e. 'unto which [peace] also ye were called,' i.e. in becoming Christians, and being initiated into his religion who preached peace on earth. Ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι is for εἰς ἓν σῶμα, scil. εἶναι, i. e. 'that you should be one body;' inasmuch as without peace and concord, unity is out of the question; see Eph. iv. 3. Εὐχάριστοι is by some ancient and many modern Expositors interpreted, gentle, courteous, amiable. But the sense assigned by the Greek Commentators and many modern ones, including Grotius, Casaubon, and Heinrichs, is more natural, 'be ye thankful,' i. e. feel and express thankfulness to God, viz. for having called you to such privileges and blessings. So supra ii. 7, περισσεύοντες ἐν αὐτῇ (scil. πίστει) ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ.

16. ὁ λόγος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c.] Meaning, as I have shown at large in Recens. Synop., 'Let the doctrine of Christ and the truth of the Gospel be deeply impressed on your hearts, accompanied with all spiritual wisdom.' So Tanchum, fol. 24. 3, cited by Schoettgen: 'Lex sedem figat in medio ipsorum;' compare Col. i. 9, and Eph. i. 8. Πλουσίως, 'abundantly, largely:' a somewhat rare use, but found in Dionys. Hal. de Demosthene, 38. Ἐν πάσῃ σοφίᾳ, for σὺν π. σ.

— διδάσκοντες.] This is, by anacoluthon, for διδάσκουσι. Render, 'by teaching.' Compare Eph. iv. 29; and on the whole passage see Note on Eph. v. 18.

— ἐν χάριτι ᾄδοντες] i. e. 'singing with the devotion which such spiritual songs are calculated ποιῆτε ἐν λόγῳ ἢ ἐν ἔργῳ, πάντα ἐν ὀνόματι Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ, εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ δι' αὐτοῦ.

18 [r] Αἱ γυναῖκες, ὑποτάσσεσθε τοῖς [ἰδίοις] ἀνδράσιν, ὡς r Gen. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 14. 34
19 ἀνῆκεν ἐν Κυρίῳ. [s] Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας, καὶ Eph. 5. 22. 1 Pet. 3. 1.
20 μὴ πικραίνεσθε πρὸς αὐτάς. [t] Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς s Eph. 5. 25. 1 Pet. 3. 7 t Eph. 6. 1 γονεῦσι κατὰ πάντα· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστιν εὐάρεστον * ἐν Κυ-21 ρίῳ. [u] Οἱ πατέρες, μὴ ἐρεθίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, ἵνα μὴ u Eph. 6. 4.
22 ἀθυμῶσιν. [x] Οἱ δοῦλοι, ὑπακούετε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς κατὰ x Eph. 6. 5. 1 Tim. 6. 1. σάρκα κυρίοις, μὴ ἐν * ὀφθαλμοδουλείᾳ ὡς ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, Tit. 2. 9. 1 Pet. 2. 18.
23 ἀλλ' ἐν ἁπλότητι καρδίας, φοβούμενοι τὸν Θεόν. Καὶ πᾶν ὅ τι ἐὰν ποιῆτε, ἐκ ψυχῆς ἐργάζεσθε, ὡς τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ 24 οὐκ ἀνθρώποις· εἰδότες ὅτι ἀπὸ Κυρίου ἀπολήψεσθε τὴν ἀνταπόδοσιν τῆς κληρονομίας· τῷ γὰρ Κυρίῳ Χριστῷ δου-25 λεύετε. [y] Ὁ δὲ ἀδικῶν κομιεῖται ὃ ἠδίκησε, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι y Acts 10. 34. Rom. 2. 11.
1 προσωποληψία. IV. [a] Οἱ κύριοι, τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσό- 1 Pet. 1. 17. a Eph. 6. 9. τητα τοῖς δούλοις παρέχεσθε, εἰδότες ὅτι καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔχετε b Luke 18. 1 Κύριον ἐν οὐρανοῖς. Rom. 12. 12. Eph. 6. 18, 20.
2 [b] Τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτερεῖτε, γρηγοροῦντες ἐν αὐτῇ 1 Thess. 5. 17.

to inspire,' as distinguished from the profane songs of the Heathens.

Here the Apostle seems to intend to represent the natural effect of this ἐνοικ. πλουσίως. For as out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, so a mind thus filled and fervently exercised will, like a full fountain, swell forth and overflow in praises and thanks to God.

17. πᾶν ὅ τι, &c.] Supply κατὰ, 'quod attinet ad.' Ἐν ὀνόματι Κ. Ἰ. Meaning, 'agreeably to his will and suitably to his Gospel;' comp. 1 Cor. x. 31. In how many ways, and in what particular respects, we may and ought to perform all we do in the name of the Lord Jesus, is well pointed out by Dr. Isaac Barrow, cited by D'Oyly and Mant.

— δι' αὐτοῦ.] This has been variously, but in general erroneously, explained by recent Commentators. The true import of the words seems best represented by the ancient Expositors, who interpret, 'by his mediation.'

18—25. From general the Apostle proceeds to particular precepts. Compare Eph. v. 22—33. vi. 1—9.

18. ὡς ἀνῆκεν.] Equivalent to the δίκαιον of Eph. vi. 1. The literal sense is, 'as is right and just,' because it is agreeable to the commandment of the Lord. Μὴ πικρ., ver. 19, (corresponding to μὴ παροργ. in Ephesians vi. 4,) signifies, not to indulge in a spirit of bitterness and exacerbation. In this sense the word occurs in Philo, but very rarely in the Classical writers. At ver. 20, instead of the common reading τῷ Κυρίῳ, many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, have ἐν Κυρίῳ, which is adopted by almost every Editor from Bengel to Vater; and rightly; since this is the more difficult reading. For ὀφθαλμοδουλείαις, at ver. 22, I have ventured, with Lachmann, to edit, from many of the most ancient MSS., and Chrysostom and Theophylact, as also the parallel passage of Ephesians, ὀφθαλμοδουλείᾳ, which was preferred by Bengel, and has been approved by Griesbach. It is probable that ς was subjoined from the word following. At ver. 24, εἰδότες—κλη., the argument is directed against a possible objection; viz., What shall we gain by such fidelity? The answer to which is, 'Perhaps from your master nothing; but from the Lord ye will receive,' &c. In ἀντ. τῆς κληρ. the Genitive is exegetical, and signifies, 'the reward which consists in the inheritance of heaven in return [for your obedience on earth];' see Eph. vi. 8. Ὁ ἀδικῶν, ver. 25, must be referred, not, with some, to the master, but to the servant; though, by the words καὶ οὐκ ἔστι προσωποληψία, it is hinted, that if the master do wrong he shall be punished. To prevent, however, misapprehension, this is fortified with a strong direct injunction to the masters, in the words following, which ought not to have been made the commencement of a new Chapter. Τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσότητα may be rendered, 'the just and right thing.' So Thucyd. ii. 44, οὐ γὰρ οἷόν τε ἴσόν τι ἢ δίκαιον βουλεύεσθαι, οἳ, κ.τ.λ.

IV. 1. This first verse closes the foregoing exhortations, and accordingly ought not to have been separated from the preceding chapter.

— τὴν ἰσότητα] 'what is equitable.' So Plutarch, vi. 367, οὐδὲ δικαιοσύνη οὔτε ἰσότης.

2. Here commences a brief conclusion to the whole Epistle, in which the Apostle recurs to various general exhortations, headed by the most weighty one, to prayer.

— τῇ προσευχῇ προσκαρτ.] Προσκαρτερεῖν signifies, 'to assiduously persevere in any thing,' and is used of prayer in Acts i. 14. vi. 4; compare Rom. xii. 12. xiii. 6. The phrase γρηγ. ἐν αὐτῇ, which denotes watchful diligence in or about any thing, is added, to strengthen the sense. So 1 Pet. iv. 7, νήψατε εἰς τὰς προσευχάς.

ἐν εὐχαριστίᾳ· [c] προσευχόμενοι ἅμα καὶ περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα ὁ 3 Θεὸς ἀνοίξῃ ἡμῖν θύραν τοῦ λόγου, λαλῆσαι τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, δι' ὃ καὶ δέδεμαι· ἵνα φανερώσω αὐτὸ, ὡς δεῖ 4 με λαλῆσαι. [d] Ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, τὸν 5 καιρὸν ἐξαγοραζόμενοι. [e] Ὁ λόγος ὑμῶν πάντοτε ἐν χάριτι, 6 ἅλατι ἠρτυμένος, εἰδέναι πῶς δεῖ ὑμᾶς ἑνὶ ἑκάστῳ ἀποκρί-νεσθαι.

[f] Τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ πάντα γνωρίσει ὑμῖν Τυχικὸς ὁ ἀγαπητὸς 7 ἀδελφὸς, καὶ πιστὸς διάκονος καὶ σύνδουλος ἐν Κυρίῳ· ὃν 8 ἔπεμψα πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ἵνα γνῷ τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, καὶ παρακαλέσῃ τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν· [g] σὺν Ὀνησίμῳ τῷ 9 πιστῷ καὶ ἀγαπητῷ ἀδελφῷ, ὅς ἐστιν ἐξ ὑμῶν· πάντα ὑμῖν γνωριοῦσι τὰ ὧδε. [h] Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἀρίσταρχος ὁ συν- 10 αιχμάλωτός μου, καὶ Μάρκος ὁ ἀνεψιὸς Βαρνάβα, περὶ οὗ ἐλάβετε ἐντολὰς, (ἐὰν ἔλθῃ πρὸς ὑμᾶς, δέξασθε αὐτόν·) καὶ 11 Ἰησοῦς ὁ λεγόμενος Ἰοῦστος, οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περιτομῆς, οὗτοι μόνοι συνεργοὶ εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, οἵτινες ἐγενήθησάν μοι παρηγορία. [i] Ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἐπαφρᾶς ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν, 12 δοῦλος Χριστοῦ, πάντοτε ἀγωνιζόμενος ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν ἐν ταῖς c Matt. 13. 11. 1 Cor. 4. 1. & 16. 9. 2 Cor. 2. 12. Eph. 6. 19. 2 Thess. 3. 1. supra 1. 26. & 2. 2. d Eph. 5. 15, 16. 1 Thess. 4. 12. e Eccles. 10. 12. Ecclus. 21. 16. Mark 9. 50. supra 3. 16. Eph. 4. 29.

f Acts 20. 4. Eph. 6. 21, 22. 2 Tim. 4. 12. g Philem. 10.
h Acts 15. 37. & 19. 29. & 27. 2. 2 Tim. 4. 11. Philem. 24. i Rom. 15. 30. supra 1. 7. Philem. 23.

The same sentiment, more fully expressed, occurs in Eph. vi. 18, where see Note.

3. προσευχ. ἅμα καὶ π. ἡ.] See Eph. vi. 19. The Apostle, it would seem, desires their prayers, partly to suggest the duty of praying for each other. On the expression θύραν see Note on Acts xiv. 27.

4. ὡς δεῖ με λαλῆσαι.] On this passage the best comment is the parallel one at Eph. vi. 19, 20, where see Notes. By ὡς δεῖ is, I apprehend, meant, 'boldly and authoritatively,' as one empowered to do so from being Apostle of the Gentiles. See Theophylact and Grotius.

5. ἐν σοφίᾳ περ.] 'conduct yourselves with prudence,' namely, so as to avoid giving unnecessary offence. Τοὺς ἔξω, i. e. 'those who are without the fold of Christ,' whether Heathens or Jews. On τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγ. see the Note on Eph. v. 15, 16.

6. ἐν χάριτι.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is for ἐπίχαρις or χαρίεις, courteous, agreeable, as opposed to ascetic austerity, and therefore likely to make them esteemed. This will tend to fix the sense of the disputed phrase ἅλατι ἠρτ., which must not, with many, be interpreted of Divine wisdom, but have the sense 'seasoned with the flavour of, made agreeable by being blended with, wisdom' (of which salt was the symbol), and thus made more palatable to the hearers. The Apostle means, I conceive, that kind of talent, which shows itself in terseness of thought and smartness of expression. Thus they would be enabled, as the Apostle adds, to give an answer to any one who asked them a reason of the hope that was in them; and would make it more effectual, by being appropriate, and adapted to circumstances.

7—18.] This portion corresponds to Ephes. vi. 21—24. On ἀγαπ. ἀδ. see Note on Phil. ii. 25, and Eph. vi. 21. On the words παρακ. τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, see supra ii. 2, and Notes.

8. ἵνα γνῷ, &c.] That he may obtain a knowledge of your affairs, and make report to me. This anxiety of the Apostle to have that knowledge appears from ii. 1. At τὰ supply πράγματα; as Thucydides, vii. 25, πρέσβεις ἄγουσα οἵπερ τὰ σφέτερα φράσωσι.

9. ὅς ἐστιν ἐξ ὑμῶν] 'who is of you;' i. e. 'who is your countryman;' see infra v. 12. We learn from Theodoret that this Onesimus was the runaway slave of Philemon, converted by Paul, and concerning whom he wrote his Epistle to Philemon. Τὰ ὧδε, 'the present state of his affairs.'

10. Now commences the last part, or epilogus, of the Epistle, consisting (as in the case of the other Pauline Epistles) of salutations and confirmations. (Hyperius.)

— ἐντολὰς] 'instructions, whether by letter, or verbal.'

11. οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περ.] i. e. 'who are Jewish Christians.' Οἵτινες must be resolved into καὶ οὗτοι, as was done by the Pesch. Syr. Translator. Παρηγορία is used, according to the popular idiom (found also in our own language), for παρήγοροι, or for οἵπερ μοι παρηγόρουν.

12. ἀγωνιζόμενος ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν] 'praying fervently for you.' Ἐν ταῖς προσευχ. seems to signify 'in his prayers.' Στῆναι has here the same force as at Eph. vi. 13, καὶ ἅπαντα κατεργασάμενοι στῆναι, and Phil. i. 27, and Galat. v. 1. On τέλειοι see 1 Cor. ii. 6, and Eph. iv. 13. Πεπλ. means 'thoroughly endued with all spiritual gifts and graces.' Ἐν παντὶ θελ. is for εἰς τὸ πᾶν θέλημα. So Eph. iii. 19, ἵνα πληρωθῆτε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ. There is, however, a blending of two modes of expression,— the sense being, 'complete in all the will of God.'

προσευχαῖς, ἵνα στῆτε τέλειοι καὶ πεπληρωμένοι ἐν παντὶ 13 θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ. μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτῷ, ὅτι ἔχει ζῆλον πολὺν ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν καὶ τῶν ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ καὶ τῶν ἐν Ἱεραπό-14 λει. [k] ἀσπάζεται ὑμᾶς Λουκᾶς ὁ ἰατρὸς, ὁ ἀγαπητὸς, καὶ k 2 Tim. 4. 10, 11. Philem. 24.
15 Δημᾶς. [l] ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ ἀδελφοὺς, καὶ Νυμ- l Rom. 16. 5. 1 Cor. 16. 19.
16 φᾶν καὶ τὴν κατ᾽ οἶκον αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησίαν. [m] Καὶ ὅταν ἀνα- m 1 Thess. 5. 27.
γνωσθῇ παρ᾽ ὑμῖν ἡ ἐπιστολὴ, ποιήσατε ἵνα καὶ ἐν τῇ Λαοδικέων ἐκκλησίᾳ ἀναγνωσθῇ, καὶ τὴν ἐκ Λαοδικείας ἵνα καὶ 17 ὑμεῖς ἀναγνῶτε. [n] καὶ εἴπατε Ἀρχίππῳ· "Βλέπε τὴν δια- n Philem. 2.
18 κονίαν ἣν παρέλαβες ἐν Κυρίῳ, ἵνα αὐτὴν πληροῖς." [o] Ὁ o 1 Cor. 16. 21. 2 Thess. 3. 17. Heb. 13. 3. ἀσπασμὸς τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου. Μνημονεύετέ μου τῶν δεσμῶν. ἡ χάρις μεθ᾽ ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Κολοσσαεῖς ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης διὰ Τυχικοῦ καὶ Ὀνησίμου.

14. Λ. ὁ ἰατρὸς, ὁ ἀγαπ.] So I point, with the Pesch. Syr. and a few good Editors. Render, 'Luke the physician, our beloved brother.' See Note on Eph. vi. 21.

16. ἡ ἐπιστ.] 'this Epistle.' See Notes on 2 Cor. x. 10, and Eph. i. 1, 2.

— τὴν ἐκ Λαοδ.] These words have been thought to refer to a lost Epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans. But as no other instance is on record of a lost Epistle of the Apostle's, we may hesitate to admit that to have been the case here. We have only to suppose, with almost all the best Commentators, that the Epistle in question was another copy of that to the Ephesians, that being in some measure a circular one.

17. Ἀρχίππῳ.] This person is supposed to have been discharging the office of ruling Presbyter, i. e. Bishop, at Colossæ. From the words of the address, βλέπε, &c., it has been generally supposed, that he had been inattentive to the duties of his station, and that what is here said is intended to convey a reproof. This, however, is so inconsistent with the commendatory manner in which he is mentioned by the Apostle in his Epistle to Philemon, that it is quite inadmissible. Nor is such a conclusion at all necessary. We might as well suppose that the admonition to Timothy, 2 Tim. i. 6, to 'stir up the gift of God in him,' implies reproof for negligence. Such language as this is only to be understood as exciting to renewed activity; for which, considering the then state of the Colossian Church (beset with false teachers), there would be especial need.

18. τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Π.] See Note on Rom. xvi. 21—23. Μνημ. μου τῶν δ., 'be mindful of my bonds [so as to imitate my courage and constancy in the faith].' Since such remembrance would confirm them in the faith, and render them constant in enduring persecutions for the same cause.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΘΕΣΣΑΛΟΝΙΚΕΙΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

---

a 2 Cor. 1. 19. Eph. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ Σιλουανὸς καὶ Τιμόθεος τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ 1 Θεσσαλονικέων ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ· χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

b Eph. 1. 16. 2 Thess. 1. 3. Phil. 1. 3. Rom. 1. 8, 9. c John 6. 29. 2 Thess. 1. 11. Gal. 5. 6. James 2. 17.

[b] Εὐχαριστοῦμεν τῷ Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ πάντων ὑμῶν, 2 μνείαν ὑμῶν ποιούμενοι ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν ἡμῶν ἀδιαλεί-πτως, [c] μνημονεύοντες ὑμῶν τοῦ ἔργου τῆς πίστεως, καὶ 3

CHRISTIANITY was first planted at Thessalonica (about A. D. 50) by St. Paul, who formed a Church, partly of Jews, but chiefly of Gentiles. The unbelieving Jews, however, having, as usual, excited a persecution against him, he was forced to leave the newly planted Church, under great trials and many disadvantages, and to flee to Berœa, and from thence to Athens, and finally to Corinth; from which last place this Epistle was written. The immediate occasion of its being written was the favourable report which Timothy, whom he had sent to visit them in his stead (1 Thess. iii. 6), had given of the stedfastness of the Thessalonians in the faith. But though St. Paul found in the state of things, as reported to him, much to commend, and scarcely any thing to censure, yet he thought proper, on account of the temptations to which the converts were exposed, from the evil communications of Jews and Heathens, to intermix cautions and warnings with his commendations and exhortations. In short, the leading design of the Apostle, in writing it, was to confirm the Thessalonians in the faith, to exhort them to courageous profession of it (notwithstanding the persecutions of the unbelieving Jews); and, above all, to excite them to such a practice of its moral duties, as was becoming their high and holy calling.

The genuineness of this Epistle has never been doubted, being attested by citations from or references to it in the early Fathers, from the time of Polycarp downwards. It is almost universally admitted to have been the first written of St. Paul's Epistles,—though on the precise date the learned, as usual, differ. Suffice it to say, it could not well be written earlier than 52, nor later than 54. In style it is more simple and perspicuous than any other of St. Paul's, and is characterized by deep earnestness and an affectionate spirit. He first reminds them of the formidable difficulties which he had to encounter in their conversion, and warns them against those heathen impurities, which they had so lately abandoned. Then, after inculcating brotherly love, he settles some points with regard to the resurrection (on which sundry erroneous notions were entertained); and enjoins them to a due preparation for the advent of Christ to judgment; after which he concludes with various practical counsels and instructions.

1. Σιλουανός.] Silvanus, or Silas, is first mentioned in Acts xv. 22. Τιμόθεος. See Note on Acts xvi. 1. At ἐν Θεῷ supply οὔσῃ. At Θεσσαλ. the Article τῇ would, strictly speaking, be necessary; but it might very well be omitted.

2. Here commences the exordium, with which compare similar ones at Rom. i. 8—10. Eph. i. 16. 2 Tim. i. 3. 2 Thess. i. 3. ii. 13, where see Notes.

— ἀδιαλείπτως] for πολλάκις (as at ii. 13. v. 17); namely, 'at every return of prayer;' see Note on Rom. i. 9.

3. Τοῦ ἔργου—ἐλπίδος. This is by Koppe and many of the more recent Commentators regarded as a mere periphrase, equivalent to πίστεως, καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ ἐλπίδος. But surely ἔργου and κόπου must have an intensive effect, and denote, in the former case, zeal and constancy, and in the latter, alacrity and diligence. To advert to particulars: 'As (observes Professor Schott in his Edition of this τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης, καὶ τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ 4 Πατρὸς ἡμῶν· [d] εἰδότες, ἀδελφοὶ ἠγαπημένοι ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, d Col. 3. 12. 2 Thess. 2.

5 τὴν ἐκλογὴν ὑμῶν, [e] ὅτι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐγενήθη 13. infra 2. 12.
εἰς ὑμᾶς ἐν λόγῳ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν δυνάμει καὶ ἐν Πνεύ- e 1 Cor. 2. 4. & 4. 20. 2 Cor. 6. 6. ματι ἁγίῳ, καὶ ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ· καθὼς οἴδατε οἷοι infra 2. 10.
6 ἐγενήθημεν ἐν ὑμῖν δι' ὑμᾶς. [f] Καὶ ὑμεῖς μιμηταὶ ἡμῶν f 1 Cor. 11. 1. Acts 5. 41.
ἐγενήθητε καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, δεξάμενοι τὸν λόγον ἐν θλίψει Heb. 10. 34. Acts 13. 52.

Epistle) in the words following, κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης and ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπ. are so used, that the former substantive indicates the thing as arising from the latter, so ἔργον τῆς πίστ. (opus quod ex fide proficiscitur) denotes sentiendi agendique ratio ex persuasione Christiana oriunda; nearly equivalent in sense to πίστις δι' ἀγάπης ἐνεργουμένη in Gal. v. 6.' By τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης is meant that diligence of exertion which springs from love, nearly equivalent to ἀγάπης κοπιώσης. Thus, again, τῆς ὑπομονῆς τῆς ἐλπ. denotes that constancy of endurance which springs from hope [in Christ for salvation]. Thus it is nearly equivalent to ἐλπίδος ὑπομενούσης. Τοῦ Κυρίου is a Genitive of object, for εἰς τὸν Κύριον, 'hope reposed in the Lord, as the only bestower of salvation.' Ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c. This form is by many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, referred to the three nouns πίστ., ἀγ., and ἐλπ., and supposed to denote (by a Hebraism derived from לפני יהוה) the purity and sincerity of those virtues. Others, however, connect the words with μνημ., and understand them of prayers to God. This latter view is supported by the Pesch. Syr., and is, not without reason, preferred by the best Expositors, from Benson to Pelt, in his edition of this Epistle. And so also Calvin, who well remarks, that this was added in order to give more weight to the affirmation.

4. εἰδότες, &c.] Εἰδότες here, as well as μνημ. at ver. 3, depends on the words of ver. 2, εὐχαριστοῦμεν—προσευχῶν ἡμῶν ἀδ. Ὑπὸ Θεοῦ must be construed, not with τὴν ἐκλογὴν, but with ἠγαπημένοι, as propriety of language almost requires, and the usage of the Apostle elsewhere (as 2 Thess. ii. 13, and Col. iii. 12) confirms. With the expression ἠγαπ. ὑπὸ Θεοῦ we may compare the Hebrew phrase ידיד יהוה·

By ἐκλογ. some understood the absolute election of the persons, as individuals, to eternal life. But from iii. 5, and v. 14, and 2 Thess. iii. 11, it appears that some were disobedient, and in danger of falling away. Hence the best Commentators, from Chrysostom down to Pelt and Schott, interpret it of their election to external privileges as a Church.

5. The scope of this verse seems to be, to intimate a full persuasion that this conversion of the Thessalonians to the Christian faith was marked by the efficiency of Divine power, as attested by the most indubitable signs, which are then subjoined.

— τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἡμῶν.] Meaning, 'our preaching of the Gospel,' or 'the Gospel as preached by us;' as in ii. 4. Rom. xvi. 25. Gal. ii. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 8. With ἐγενήθη εἰς ὑμᾶς (ad vos pervenit), Pelt compares Gal. iii. 14, ἵνα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη ἡ εὐλογία γένηται. The words ἐν δυνάμει καὶ ἐν Πν. ἁγ. (put for ἐν δυν. τοῦ Πν. ἁγ.) are by many eminent Expositors understood of the miracles worked, and the supernatural gifts imparted by St. Paul; see Rom. xv. 19. 1 Cor. ii. 4. The sense, however, must not be confined to these; but the words are to be understood also, nay, chiefly, of the internal power of the Gospel on the heart, effected by the Holy Spirit, and attested by the fruits of the Spirit; see Calvin, Beza, Hyperius, Pelt, and Scott. This, indeed, is plain from the expression ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πολλῇ, which, according to the first-mentioned sense, would have to be taken (unless a harsh transposition were supposed) of the Apostle, namely, his παῤῥησία. Answering to ἐν πληροφορίᾳ π. here is ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως (i. e. ἐν πίστει πεπληροφορουμένῃ) at Hebr. x. 22, and πεποίθησις πολλὴ at 2 Cor. viii. 22. Compare also 1 Cor. ii. 4.

— καθὼς οἴδατε οἷοι ἐγενήθημεν ἐν ὑ. δι' ὑ.] The scope of this clause has not been well pointed out by Commentators. The Apostle, I conceive, thus meant to advert to another evidence of the truth of the Gospel preached by him; namely, from the conduct of the preachers of it, pointing to himself as an example,—who, by his purity, disinterestedness (as shown in working with his hands, ii. 9), and other moral virtues, had so fully proved his sincerity, and the truth of that Gospel which he preached. Οἷος here, as almost always elsewhere, is used in a good sense. And the phrase οἷοι ἐγενήθημεν is well explained by Theophylact πῶς ἀνεστράφημεν. What is here only hinted at in οἷοι ἐγενήθημεν is fully expressed infra ii. 10, ὑμεῖς μάρτυρες ὡς ὁσίως καὶ δικαίως καὶ ἀμέμπτως ὑμῖν ἐγενήθημεν.

The general sense intended is, 'ye well know [and can testify] with what Divine power and πληροφορία we have taught you, and with what alacrity and patient endurance we have borne the sufferings we had to undergo for yours and the Gospel's sake.' Δι' ὑμᾶς, 'for your sakes, for your good, not for our own private interest.'

6. καὶ ὑμεῖς μιμ. ἡμῶν ἐγενήθ.] Here it is not necessary to suppose so long an ellipsis as is done by Benson and Macknight. It is sufficient to supply οὕτω, meaning, 'and so,' or, 'accordingly.' Thus the words will be equivalent to ὥστε γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς μιμητὰς, &c.; which the Apostle perhaps would have written, but that the next clause commences with ὥστε γενέσθαι. Such is, I find, the view adopted by Hyperius, who thus annotates: 'Respiciunt hæc verba nonnihil ad id quod jam dixit, Nostis quales fuerimus inter vos: quasi dicat, Sicut vidistis nos constantes, nec frangi ullis adversis, dum Evan-πολλῇ, μετὰ χαρᾶς Πνεύματος ἁγίου· ὥστε γενέσθαι ὑμᾶς 7 τύπους πᾶσι τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐν τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ καὶ τῇ Ἀχαΐᾳ. [g] ἀφ' ὑμῶν γὰρ ἐξήχηται ὁ λόγος τοῦ Κυρίου οὐ 8 μόνον ἐν τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ καὶ Ἀχαΐᾳ, ἀλλὰ [καὶ] ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν ἡ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἐξελήλυθεν· ὥστε μὴ χρείαν ἡμᾶς ἔχειν λαλεῖν τι. [h] αὐτοὶ γὰρ περὶ ἡμῶν 9 ἀπαγγέλλουσιν ὁποίαν εἴσοδον * ἔσχομεν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ πῶς ἐπεστρέψατε πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων, δουλεύειν Θεῷ ζῶντι καὶ ἀληθινῷ, [i] καὶ ἀναμένειν τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐκ 10

g Rom. 10. 18. & 1. 8. 2 Thess. 1. 4. h Infra 2. 1. 1 Cor. 12. 2.
i Phil. 3. 20. 2 Thess. 1. 10. Rev. 1. 7. Matt. 3. 7.

gelium ad vos perferremus; ita quoque fortes et infracti fuistis in eo accipiendo, plane similes nostri.' So also Calvin remarks: 'Ut illis plus alacritatis addat, mutuum consensum et quasi harmoniam prædicat inter suam prædicationem et eorum fidem.'

The imitation here enjoined is not, I conceive (what most Commentators explain it), an imitation of Christ and the Apostles in bearing afflictions, but, as Zanch, Grotius, Doddridge, Scott, and Pelt understand, in a general way, though, of course, including the other. Indeed, the words ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ form an intermediate clause, thrown in, to note a circumstance attendant on the principal subject of the sentence, their imitation of the Lord; namely, that it was 'amidst much tribulation;' for so I would render, with Abp. Newcome, Goesch., and Schott. See Acts xiv. 22, compared with Rom. v. 3. When the Apostle says that they were imitators of him and the Lord, he, I think, means imitators of him, and thereby of the Lord, whom he imitated. This is confirmed by a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xi. 1, μιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, καθὼς κἀγὼ Χριστοῦ. By μετὰ χαρᾶς Πνεύματος ἁγίου is meant a joy inspired by the Holy Spirit, which accompanied and rewarded their alacrity in receiving the word, and their firmness in adhering to it, which was an evidence of their election, and a pledge of their title to a happy immortality; compare Rom. xiv. 17, and Acts xv. 41. The Genitive here denotes author, or efficient cause.

7. ὥστε γεν.] 'insomuch that ye became exemplars,' &c. On the term τύπους, see 1 Cor. x. 6. 11. Phil. iii. 17, and Notes.

8. ἀφ' ὑμῶν.] The Apostle now dilates on the excellent effects of this good example of the Thessalonians, whose fame had spread far and wide. (Schott.) This is explained by most of the modern Commentators, 'by your instrumentality.' The literal sense (of place), however, adopted by the earlier Expositors, must not be excluded. In fact, both senses seem meant. 'From you the sound of the Gospel first issued, and by your means was spread abroad in all Macedonia.' With the construction, indeed, of the sentence, owing to the οὐ μόνον—ἀλλὰ καὶ, the Commentators are not a little perplexed. They are generally agreed in supposing a transposition of οὐ μόνον, which must be taken, they think, with ἐξήχηται; see Koppe, Pelt, and Schott. But it would rather seem that the true notion of the construction can alone be attained by considering the passage as blending two modes of expression, thus: 'For from you sounded the word of the Lord over all Macedonia and Achaia; and not only has your faith in God been well known there, but the report of it has been disseminated everywhere else;' namely, in most of the countries of the civilized world, with which Macedonia and Achaia had constant commercial communication. In ἐξήχ. there is an allusion to the κήρυγμα of the Gospel, and to that sonorous voice, as it were of a trumpet, (see Isaiah lviii. 1. Rev. i. 10.) with which κήρυκες (like our criers) were accustomed to speak. And so Hesychius explains ἐξηχεῖται by ἐκηρύχθη. How honourable it was for the Gospel to issue forth from any place first of all the places of a country, we may infer from what is said at 1 Cor. xiv. 36, ἢ ἀφ' ὑμῶν ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐξῆλθε; and this has been shown at large by Benson.

— λαλεῖν τι] 'to say any thing;' meaning, either in commendation, or congratulation. The sense is well expressed by Theodoret: Προὔλαβεν ἡμᾶς ἡ φήμη, καὶ παρ' ἄλλων ἀκούομεν ἃ λέγειν ἐθέλομεν, δήλη γὰρ ἅπασι γέγονε τῆς ἡμετέρας διδασκαλίας ἡ ἐν ὑμῖν εὐκαρπία.

9. αὐτοὶ γὰρ] i. e. (by the construction κατὰ τὸ σημαινόμενον, similar to that at Acts viii. 4) οἱ ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, scil. πᾶσι τόποις, those to whom the tidings of your conversion were brought. (Grotius.)

— ὁποίαν εἴσοδον ἔσχομεν.] Of this phrase the sense has been disputed; but it seems to be, 'What a successful entrance we had unto you;' i. e. what a favourable reception we experienced at your hands; for that is implied by ὁποῖος, qualis. Instead of the common reading ἔχομεν, almost all the MSS. and early Editions, except the 2nd and 3rd of R. Stephens, have ἔσχομεν, which has been restored by Bengel, Grotius, Matthæi, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz; and with reason; such being required by the sense: nay, the common reading was, I suspect, merely a typographical error of the 2nd Edition of R. Stephens.

— καὶ πῶς ἐπεστρέψατε, &c.] These words are explanatory of the preceding ὁποίαν εἴσοδον ἔσχομεν. In ἐπεστρ. πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν we have a formula occurring also at Acts xi. 21. xiv. 15. 2 Cor. iii. 16, and denoting, by a Hebraic and figurative phrase, conversion from idolatry and paganism, or Judaism, to Christianity. The contrary is spoken of in 1 Cor. xii. 2, namely, a going πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα. The words following show the purpose of this turning; [ὥστε, or εἰς τὸ] δουλεύειν, 'to worship and serve,' &c. On Θεῷ ζῶντι καὶ ἀληθ., see John xvii. 1—5. By a similar mode of expression it is said, Philo, p. 550. 30, ἱκετεύειν τὸν ἀληθινὸν Θεὸν ἵνα τοῦ ψευδωνύμου ὀργὰς ἐπίσχῃ.

τῶν οὐρανῶν, ὃν ἤγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, Ἰησοῦν, τὸν ῥυόμενον ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς τῆς ἐρχομένης.
1 II. [a] Αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἴδατε, ἀδελφοὶ, τὴν εἴσοδον ἡμῶν τὴν a Supra 1. 5, 9.
2 πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ὅτι οὐ κενὴ γέγονεν· [b] ἀλλὰ [καὶ] προπαθόντες b Acts 16. 22, &c. & 17. 2. Phil. 1. 30.
καὶ ὑβρισθέντες, καθὼς οἴδατε, ἐν Φιλίπποις, ἐπαῤῥησιασά-μεθα ἐν τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν λαλῆσαι πρὸς ὑμᾶς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον c 2 Cor. 2. 17. & 4. 2.
3 τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν πολλῷ ἀγῶνι. [c] Ἡ γὰρ παράκλησις ἡμῶν οὐκ d 1 Tim. 1. 11, 12. Tit. 1. 3.
4 ἐκ πλάνης, οὐδὲ ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας, οὔτε ἐν δόλῳ· [d] ἀλλὰ, Gal. 2. 7. & 1. 10.

10. καὶ ἀναμένειν, &c.] 'Here we have those points adverted to, which distinguish the Christian religion from Judaism; and this and the preceding verse contain a brief summary of the most important doctrines of Christianity, theoretical and practical.' (Pelt.) There is a remarkable brevity and pregnancy of meaning in the words ὃν ἤγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν—ἐρχομένης: the full sense intended to be suggested being (as Hyperius observes) that 'Christ first died, and then rose again, and ascended into heaven, and from thence as God is to be expected, as the Judge and Remunerator.'

In these words, waiting for His Son from heaven (meaning, waiting for that second advent of Christ, when He shall come in his glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead), we have a most expressive mode of speaking, to denote 'fully receiving him as their Redeemer;' implying obedience to his precepts, and faithful profession of his Gospel. It is also, as Calvin observes, meant to hint the extreme difficulty of this turning unto the Lord, and the deep anxiety by which alone it can, humanly speaking, be effected. Here the expression has especial propriety, being meant, as Pelt suggests, to lead to the principal purpose of the Epistle; which was to correct the errors that had arisen as to Christ's return from heaven. The scope of the words is well illustrated by the similar ones at Phil. iii. 20, ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα ἐν οὐρανοῖς ὑπάρχει, ἐξ οὗ καὶ σωτῆρα ἀπεκδεχόμεθα Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν.

— τὸν ῥυόμενον.] Render, 'who delivereth,' as the Pesch. Syriac, Calvin, and Abp. Newcome. The Present has been thought to be put for the Future to denote certainty. But it is not necessary to resort to that principle here; since, according to the usual force, the Present has great propriety and suitableness to the context, as denoting 'certainty of action,' or rather what is done at all times, as when we say, The sun shines. For this deliverance, which commenced at our Lord's death and sacrifice, may be said to be continually carrying forward (so 2 Cor. i. 10, ὃς ἐκ τηλικούτου θανάτου ἐῤῥύσατο ἡμᾶς, καὶ ῥύεται· εἰς ὃν ἠλπίκαμεν, ὅτι καὶ ἔτι ῥύσεται); 'seeing that he ever liveth to make intercession for us' (Hebr. vii. 25), by Himself our Advocate with the Father, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete; and this he will Himself complete at the last day, when Death, spiritual as well as temporal, shall be swallowed up in victory, a victory achieved by 'Him who loved us, and washed us from our sins by his own blood.'

II. Having at ch. i. 4, 5, briefly touched on the subject of his coming to the Thessalonians, the Apostle here enters into it more at large, both to indulge the high feeling of satisfaction, which he experiences at the success with which he had, under the Divine blessing, preached the Gospel to them, and to confirm the minds of the Thessalonians in that sound doctrine, which they had received from the Apostle and his colleagues, so that they might hold it fast, in spite of all the artifices of the false teachers; and also to excite them to imitate the fidelity, diligence, and truly Christian spirit of their teacher. (Schott.)

1. αὐτοὶ γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ may best be referred to ὁποίαν εἴσοδον ἔσχ. at i. 9; q. d. '[I need scarcely have said what I did, on our entrance unto you, and the result of it;] for ye yourselves know,' &c. Οὐ κενή. This has been variously interpreted; but the sense intended is plainly this: 'not without effect, fruit, or success,' both in its nature and results, as regarded themselves and the Apostle. See Chrysostom and Pelt.

2. Here, as Pelt remarks, e contrario idem probat. Ἀλλὰ, imò. Καὶ after ἀλλὰ, not found in very many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and all the early Editions, except the Erasmian, has been cancelled by almost every Editor from Bengel and Wetstein to Vater; and rightly. It might, indeed, be justified from internal evidence; but it is so weak in external authority, that this is unnecessary. It arose, I suspect, from the imò etiam of the Latin glossographers. The προ in προπαθόντες need not be regarded, as it is by most recent Commentators, as pleonastic; the sense being anteà, aforetime. The expression ὑβρισθέντες refers to Paul being scourged; a great insult to a Roman citizen. Ἐπαῤῥ. ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, &c. i. e. (as in Acts xiv. 3) 'we took courage, in dependence on the aid of our God, to speak,' &c. Ἐν π. ἀγῶνι may be rendered, either 'with earnestness and solicitude,' (as Col. ii. 1, and Thucyd. vii. 71, ὁ δὲ πεζὸς πολὺν τὸν ἀγῶνα καὶ ξύστασιν τῆς γνώμης εἶχε, i. e. with earnest and anxious intentness), or, 'amidst a great struggle,' i. e. danger. So Thucyd. ii. 45, ὁρῶ μέγαν τὸν ἀγῶνα: also Arrian, cited by Wolf, ὅτι ἐν ἀγῶνι ξυνέχεται τὰ κατὰ σφᾶς, καὶ βοηθεῖν δεῖ.

3, 4. Having thus put them in mind of the circumstances of his first entrance among them, Paul proceeds to show how unreasonable was this opposition to his person and doctrine.

3. Οὐκ is emphatic; what is here said being meant as a reply to those who accused him of doing what he did under the influence of error (πλάνης), or of acting through imposture (ἐν δόλῳ), or at least of being swayed by interested motives (ἐξ ἀκαθαρσίας): charges which Calvin defines and distinguishes under the following καθὼς δεδοκιμάσμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ πιστευθῆναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, οὕτω λαλοῦμεν· οὐχ ὡς ἀνθρώποις ἀρέσκοντες, ἀλλὰ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ δοκιμάζοντι τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν. [e] Οὔτε γάρ 5 ποτε ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας ἐγενήθημεν, καθὼς οἴδατε, οὔτε ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας· (Θεὸς μάρτυς!) [f] οὔτε ζητοῦντες ἐξ 6 ἀνθρώπων δόξαν, οὔτε ἀφ' ὑμῶν οὔτε ἀπ' ἄλλων· δυνάμενοι e Acts 20 33. 2 Cor. 1. 23. & 2. 17. & 4. 2. & 7. 2. & 11. 31. & 12. 17. Gal. 1. 10. f John 5. 41, 44. & 12. 43. 2 Thess. 3. 8.

heads: 1. imposture, as regarded the substance of the doctrine; 2. impurity, as regarded the affections of mind and motives; 3. guile, as regarded the mode of action. These charges, then, the Apostle simply and gravely denies, and then shows how ungrounded they were, since his conduct could not be accounted for on the supposition of fanaticism, or of imposture, or of interested motives in general. Παράκλησις, in this context, denotes, not exhortation only, but all other branches of pastoral instruction. 'Ακαθ. denotes, in general, the being swayed by corrupt motives, whether of wealth, fame, &c. So Arrian, Epict. iv. 11, cited by Koppe, ψυχῆς ἀκαθαρσία, δόγματα πονηρά. Δόλῳ means the knowingly beguiling men into error, by misstating or adulterating the truth, or at least undertaking and carrying on the work of evangelizing with fraudulent views, or to answer sinister ends. In short, he means to say that they are neither themselves deceived, nor do they wilfully deceive others; they are neither fanatics, nor impostors or cheats. Moreover the Apostle might here not only intend an answer to his accusers, but mean this as a retort upon them; for ἡμῶν may be emphatic: since the false teachers of the Jews, or Judaizers, and the Philosophers and Sophists of the heathens, were, as Chandler has shown, themselves notoriously guilty of that very conduct which they imputed to the Apostles, being the greatest impostors and cheats, γοῆτες καὶ τερατείας μεστοί, says Lucian; who adds, that the impudence of their hypocrisy was intolerable.

4. Here the Apostle declares what was really the origin of his instruction, and the disposition suitable to such an origin. (Schott.)

— καθὼς δεδοκιμάσμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ π. τὸ ε.] The best Commentators are of opinion that this is an irregular construction, to be resolved into καθὼς ἐδοκίμασεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς, ὥστε πιστεύειν ἡμῖν τὸ εὐαγγ. See Win. Gr. Gr. § 38, 1. Note 2. Perhaps, however, there is a blending of two constructions, ὡς δεδοκιμάσμεθα ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ and ὡς πεπιστεύμεθα. So 2 Macc. iv. 3, τῶν ὑπὸ τοῦ Σίμωνος δεδοκιμασμένων. Joseph. Bell. i. 26. 2, ὡς δεδοκιμασμένος ἐδέχθη. Render, 'were approved or judged fit to have the Gospel committed to us.' So 1 Cor. xvi. 3, οὓς ἐὰν δοκιμάσητε.

— ἀρέσκοντες] i. e. 'endeavouring to please;' corresponding to the similar expression of Ignat. ad Rom. C. 2, οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμῖν (ὑμᾶς?) ἀνθρωπαρεσκῆσαι, ἀλλὰ Θεῷ ἀρέσαι. This use of ἀρέσκω is supposed to be Hellenistic, but I have noted it in Soph. Antig. 74, ἐπεὶ πλείων χρόνος, "Ον δεῖ μ' ἀρέσκειν τοῖς κάτω (scil. θεοῖς), τῶν ἐνθάδε. The phrase ὁ δοκιμάζων τὰς καρδίας is equivalent to ὁ ἐρευνῶν τὰς καρδίας, at Rom. viii. 27, or ὁ καρδιογνώστης, Acts i. 24. See also Jerem. xvii. 10. It is, indeed, as Schott says, 'sollenne Dei prædicatum' in V. et N. T.; q. d. 'Probe dignoscit pietatem veram, causas loquendi et agendi vere honestas, ab illa pietate fucata, quæ hominum gratiam captat, iisque facile imponit.' The addition here of ἡμῶν shows that the reference is not to Paul, Timothy, and Silvanus, but to all men, of whose hearts God is the searcher and trier.

5, 6. The Apostle now proves this integrity and purity of motive, by adverting to two things which most usually sway men; vanity (or ambition) and avarice. Previously, however, to noticing these charges, he briefly preoccupies that of flattery (of which his adversaries were notoriously guilty), and he proves himself not to be, as they said, a men-pleaser; and that by simply appealing to themselves as his witnesses, who, had he been guilty of base adulation (the surest mark of a sordid mind and corrupt motives), must surely have known it.

5. To advert to a few points of phraseology, ἐν λόγῳ κολακείας is not, with some, to be regarded as a mere Hebraism, for ἐν κολακείᾳ; nor, with others, to be explained as standing for 'in accusatione adulationis,' which would weaken the sense, and perhaps be scarcely true in sentiment. We may best, with Koppe and Schott, take ἐν λόγῳ εἶναι for γίνεσθαι ἐν λόγῳ, 'to be conversant in words,' &c., and consider the Genitive κολακείας as put for the adjective κολακευτικῷ; the sense being, 'nunquam versati sumus in sermonis genere adulatorii,' 'were not conversant in words of flattery, used not flattering speeches.' So Isocrates has γενόμενοι ἐν ποιήσει.

On the import of the next words, οὔτε ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας a difference of opinion exists. Some regard the προφάσει as merely pleonastic, while others think it serves to qualify πλεονεξίας; and others, again, assign to it various senses, more or less objectionable. We may, I think, best (with the Peschito Syriac Translator, Beza, Grotius, Bp. Sanderson, Benson, Chandler, Flatt, and Schott,) take ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας (supply ἐγενήθημεν) to mean uti prætextu avaritiæ, and thus consider this as a popular way of expressing the carrying forward any plan of avarice under a fair pretence, as the false teachers did.

— Θεὸς μάρτυς.] So appealing to the only Judge who cannot err, even the Searcher of all hearts.

6. οὔτε ζητοῦντες ἐξ ἀνθρ. δόξαν.] The Apostle here adverts to another kind of avarice, the thirst of fame, styled by Milton,

'That last infirmity of noble minds.'

At ζητοῦντες supply ἦμεν, from ἐγενήθημεν of the preceding verse; both being for ἐζητήσαμεν, on which δυνάμενοι ('though we might') is suspended. It may seem strange that the Apostle should write ἐξ ἀνθρώπων and ἀπ' ἄλλων, not ἐξ ἀνθρ. and ἐξ ἄλλων, nor ἀπ' ἀνθρ. and ἀπ' ἄλλων; but the reason will appear by considering the distinction of signification in ἐξ and ἀπὸ, which is well pointed out by Schott, who observes that ἀπὸ always has reference to the mediate ori-

7 ἐν βάρει εἶναι, ὡς Χριστοῦ ἀπόστολοι· [g] ἀλλ᾽ ἐγενήθημεν g 1 Cor. 2. 3. & 9. 1, &c. ἤπιοι ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν. Ὡς ἂν τροφὸς θάλπῃ τὰ ἑαυτῆς τέκνα, 2 Cor 10. 1, 2, 10, 11. & 13. 4.
8 [h] οὕτως, ‡ ἱμειρόμενοι ὑμῶν, εὐδοκοῦμεν μεταδοῦναι ὑμῖν οὐ h 2 Cor. 12. 15.
μόνον τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς ἑαυτῶν 9 ψυχὰς, διότι ἀγαπητοὶ ἡμῖν γεγένησθε. [i] Μνημονεύετε γὰρ, i Acts 18. 3. & 20. 34.
ἀδελφοὶ, τὸν κόπον ἡμῶν καὶ τὸν μόχθον· νυκτὸς γὰρ καὶ 1 Cor. 4. 12. 2 Cor. 11. 9. & 12. 13.
ἡμέρας ἐργαζόμενοι, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαί τινα ὑμῶν, 2 Thess. 3. 8.

gin (or second cause) (for examples to the thing or person that gave occasion to any thing said or done), but ἐκ (as also παρὰ) to the immediate, or first cause. With respect to the expression ἐν βάρει εἶναι, Expositors are not agreed whether it signifies 'to be burdensome to you,' or 'to use despotic authority over you.' The latter interpretation is adopted by most ancient and many modern Expositors, as being far more agreeable to the words preceding and following; and several examples of this signification are adduced by the Commentators, to which I have added several others in Recens. Synop.; but it would rather seem that the sentiment in the clause οὔτε ζητοῦντες—ἄλλων is subordinate to that in οὔτε ἐγενήθημεν ἐν προφ. πλεονεξίας, and that the words δυνάμενοι ἐν βάρει εἶναι, &c. (which are parenthetical) refer to the principal sentiment. This view is confirmed by the language of the Apostle elsewhere. So at ver. 9, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαί τινα ὑμῶν: also 2 Thess. iii. 8, ἐπιβαρῆσαι. 2 Cor. xi. 9, ἐν παντὶ ἀβαρῆ ὑμῖν ἐμαυτὸν ἐτήρησα: whereas the other signification of βάρος is no where found in the New Test. The Apostle, however, may here have intended both senses; meaning that he might, in virtue of his authority and privileges as an Apostle, have ruled them authoritatively and imperiously, and been chargeable to them, by taking pay for his services.

7. ἤπιοι] i. e. 'as it were a tender parent;' implying the most tender and affectionate feelings. So the Homeric πατὴρ δ᾽ ὡς ἤπιος ἦεν. Ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν is a Hebraism for ἐν ὑμῖν, 'among you.' To avoid a confusion of metaphor, it is proper (as the best Expositors suggest) to take the next words with what follows, not with what precedes. The Apostle compares himself first to an indulgent father, and then to a tender nursing-mother. In the expression θάλπῃ there is an allusion to the manner in which birds warm their young, by placing them under their wings (Deut. xxii. 6. Matt. xxiii. 37), or nursing-mothers cherish them in their bosoms; implying every necessary sustentation. 'And great (observes Dr. Benson) was the mildness, condescension, and tenderness which the Apostle expressed to his converts, whom he looked upon and treated as his own dear children.' See 1 Cor. ii. 3. ix. 1. 2 Cor. x. 1, 2. xiii. 4. Philem. vv. 8, 9. 2 Tim. ii. 24. 2 Thess. iii. 9, compared with Numb. xi. 12. Is. xlix. 33. 2 Cor. xii. 15. 2 Tim. ii. 10.

8. οὕτως ἱμειρόμενοι ὑ.] 'thus having a strong affection for you.' Instead of ἱμειρ. many MSS. and Fathers and some early Editions have ὁμειρ., which has been edited by Matthæi, Griesbach, Koppe, Tittman, Vater, and Schott; but perhaps without sufficient reason. External evidence, indeed, is much in its favour, but internal, I apprehend, is against it. It is, indeed, a word destitute of any authority, being found only in a few MSS. (not the text) of Job iii. 21, οἳ ἱμείρονται τοῦ θανάτου: and, notwithstanding what Matthæi urges, it is, as Rinck says, contrary to analogy. Indeed Schott, who adopts ὁμ., has not proved that the word ever existed. He appeals, indeed, to Hesychius, Photius, and Phavor. But they, copying from the Scholiasts, manifestly had the present passage in view; and, therefore, to infer from them the existence of the word, would be reasoning in a circle. The same objection, also, applies to his argument, that 'ὁμ. is entitled to the preference, as being the rarer word;' for that canon surely cannot hold good of words so rare as no where to be found, especially if they would be formed contrary to analogy; indeed, ὁμ. can easily be accounted for as a mere error of the scribes. See Rinck. It would seem that the ο arose from the ς preceding. In the passage of Job it arose evidently from the οι preceding, as the testimony of the text (almost all the MSS. having ἱμειρ.) shows. Matthæi, indeed, says the word occurs in Symmachus's Version of Ps. lxii. 2. But the text there has ἱμειρ.; and if even ὁμειρ. were found in some MSS., ὁμ. might be easily accounted for from the ω preceding. The scribes, I suspect, fell into the error, because ἱμειρ. never came into the common dialect, and is rarely found in any but the best writers. Thus when an ο or ω preceded, the scribes, thinking of the common word ὁμηρεύεσθαι, easily manufactured ὁμείρεσθαι; the ει and η being perpetually confounded. Finally, as to what Schott urges, that ὁμ. is the stronger term, that may be doubted, for ἱμειρ. is surely a very significant term; not to say that ὁμειρ. would yield a sense little suitable, for it could only mean 'closely connected with;' whereas the sense intended by the Apostle is 'warmly attached to.' Those who adopt ὁμ., and suppose the word to come from ὁμοῦ and εἴρεσθαι, besides being ignorant that ου is never cut off at the junctura, in derivation, fall into the same error with those who derive ἱμείρεσθαι from ἱμᾶς and εἴρω, though it is plainly derived from ἵμερος, on which see Hemsterh. on Lennep, Etymol.

— εὐδοκοῦμεν] 'we were willing or ready.' Literally, 'we should have thought good:' a sense occurring at 2 Cor. v. 8, and occasionally found in the Sept. and the later Greek writers. The usual construction with μεταδοῦναι, the Genitive and Dative, is here altered to the Accusative and Dative, from the nature of the thing.

9. 'Hæc ad superiorum probationem pertinent, quod sibi non pepercerit, ut illis parceret.' (Calv.) Having thus expressed the tenderness of his affection towards them, and his willingness to have imparted to them not only the Gospel of God, but even his own soul and life, had it been necessary, for their service, he proceeds to mention a circumstance that was the strongest proof of the ἐκηρύξαμεν εἰς ὑμᾶς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. Ὑμεῖς μάρ- 10 τυρες καὶ ὁ Θεὸς, ὡς ὁσίως, καὶ δικαίως, καὶ ἀμέμπτως ὑμῖν τοῖς πιστεύουσιν ἐγενήθημεν· καθάπερ οἴδατε, ὡς ἕνα ἕκα- 11 στον ὑμῶν, ὡς πατὴρ τέκνα ἑαυτοῦ, παρακαλοῦντες ὑμᾶς καὶ k Eph. 4. 1. Phil. 1. 27. Col. 1. 10. παραμυθούμενοι, [k] καὶ * μαρτυρόμενοι, εἰς τὸ περιπατῆσαι 12 ὑμᾶς ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ καλοῦντος ὑμᾶς εἰς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ l Matt. 10. 40. Gal. 4. 14. βασιλείαν καὶ δόξαν. [l] Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ ἡμεῖς εὐχαριστοῦμεν 13 τῷ Θεῷ ἀδιαλείπτως, ὅτι παραλαβόντες λόγον ἀκοῆς παρ' ἡμῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐδέξασθε, οὐ λόγον ἀνθρώπων, ἀλλὰ (καθώς ἐστιν ἀληθῶς) λόγον Θεοῦ, ὃς καὶ ἐνεργεῖται ἐν ὑμῖν τοῖς strength and disinterestedness of his love towards them. (Chandler.)

— μνημονεύετε γὰρ—Θεοῦ.] Comp. 2 Thess. iii. 7—9. Μνημ., 'ye, no doubt, remember.' Κόπον καὶ μόχθον, by hendiadys, for 'my toilsome labour;' namely, his trade. Νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας the Commentators regard as merely equivalent to ἀδιαλείπτως, assiduè, early and late; but the expressions may be taken literally, and in their full acceptation. For in so speaking, the Apostle, we may suppose, alludes to the toilsome exercise of his trade, occasionally carried on through the hours of the night as well as day, in order to allow him an opportunity, at other times, to pursue his evangelical labours.

10. 'Iterum Dei et eorum testimonio ad suam integritatem asserendam utitur: ac Deum quidem conscientiæ, illos vero rei compertæ testes facit.' (Calvin.)

— ὁσίως, &c.] 'Οσίως regards duty towards God, δικ. that towards men; and ἀμέμπτως denotes by implication the repute of performing both.

11, 12. The construction is here somewhat irregular, and can only be adjusted by repeating ἐγενήθημεν from ver. 10, or (which is better) supplying ἦμεν, to be fetched from ἐγενήθημεν.

— παρακ., παραμ., and μαρτυρ.] I would not, with Koppe and Rosenm., regard these terms as synonymous. Παρακ. and παραμ. differ as our exhort and persuade. The same sense of παραμ. occurs in Hom. Il. θ. 417. 680. Xenoph. Venat. vi. 25. Μαρτυρ. is a stronger term than the former, signifying 'to solemnly urge, urgently press,' as in a kindred passage of Eph. iv. 17, and also Thucyd. vi. 80, and viii. 53. For μαρτυρούμενοι I have, with Matthæi and Schott, edited μαρτυρόμενοι, from about 30 MSS. of various recensions and the Edit. Princeps. It is well remarked by Schott, that μαρτυρεῖσθαι cannot admit of the sense here required; 'and although (continues he) Expositors assert that μαρτυρεῖσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτύρεσθαι, yet they do not prove it.' The truth is, that though μαρτύρεσθαι is sometimes used for μαρτυρεῖσθαι in the sense testari, sanctè affirmare, yet there is no proof that μαρτυρεῖσθαι was ever used for μαρτύρεσθαι. See Poppo on Thucyd. viii. 53. 2, and Note on Acts xxvi. 22. The common reading, doubtless, arose (as Rinck points out) from alliteration with the preceding verb παραμυθ. On the words εἰς τὸ περιπ., &c., which serve to note the intent and effect of the foregoing admonition, compare Col. i. 16. Βασιλ. καὶ δόξαν may be, as most Commentators suppose, for βασιλείαν ἔνδοξον; but I agree with Schott, that it is not necessary to resort to that principle here; since the word may retain its proper substantive force, so as to further explain and illustrate βασιλείαν; i. e. 'to call us to the duties, privileges, and final blessedness of the Christian life.

13. Having thus appealed to God and them for the unblameableness of his conduct, and his zeal and fidelity in his ministry, he commends them for the just regard they paid to it, and their sincerity and cheerfulness in submitting to the great design of it. (Chandler.)

— διὰ τοῦτο] 'wherefore [since we have been thus successful among you], we,' &c. In παραλαβόντες—Θεοῦ there is a transposition usual in St. Paul (and also in Thucydides) by which the Genitive is separated from the noun which governs it by intervening words. Λόγον ἀκοῆς is not (as most recent Commentators imagine) for λόγον or ἀκοήν. It is well regarded by Theophylact and Œcumen. as equivalent to κήρυγμα, ὡς διὰ τοῦ ἀκουσθῆναι πιστευόμενον. The expression was, we may suppose, suggested by that of Is. liii. 1, τίς ἐπίστευσε τῇ ἀκοῇ ἡμῶν; — ἐδέξασθε, οὐ λόγον, &c.] A brevity of expression, for ἐδέξασθε αὐτὸν ὡς οὐ λόγον, &c. Δέχεσθαι differs from παραλαμβάνειν, as implying more or less of approbation. Newcome well renders, 'ye embraced it.' So Thucyd. i. 95, ἐδέξαντο τοὺς λόγους, καὶ προσεῖχον τὴν γνώμην.

— ὃς καὶ ἐνεργεῖται, &c.] The ὃς is by some referred to Θεοῦ. But the best Expositors are in general agreed in referring it to the more remote antecedent λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, which, indeed, is required by the words following, as Hyperius ably evinces, who shows that there is here a proof à signis sive effectibus. 'Ενεργεῖται is by some taken actively, in the sense worketh, as a powerful principle producing its genuine effects; while others take it passively, to signify 'is made effectual,' or shows itself in its effects,—namely, (as is just afterwards shown,) by producing an imitation of the best examples of Christian piety and virtue. This latter mode is preferable, and indeed Schott maintains that ἐνεργεῖσθαι is never in the New Test. used as a Middle form, with an Active sense, but always (especially in St. Paul's writings) as a Passive. Nay, Bp. BULL, Examen, p. 9, goes yet further, and asserts that it is scarcely ever so used, even in the Classical writers, but always in a Passive sense; and after adducing, as examples of the New Test. use, Rom. vii. 5. 2 Cor. i. 6, he rescues 2 Cor. iv. 12 from the mis-ἐκκλησιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ τῶν οὐσῶν ἐν τῇ Ἰουδαίᾳ ἐν Χριστῷ & 17. 5, 13. Heb. 10. 34.

14 πιστεύουσιν. [m] Ὑμεῖς γὰρ μιμηταὶ ἐγενήθητε, ἀδελφοί, τῶν m Acts 13. 45.
Ἰησοῦ, ὅτι τὰ αὐτὰ ἐπάθετε καὶ ὑμεῖς ὑπὸ τῶν ἰδίων συμφυ-15 λετῶν, καθὼς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὑπὸ τῶν Ἰουδαίων· [n] τῶν καὶ τὸν n Matt. 23. 34, 37. Luke 13. 33.
Κύριον ἀποκτεινάντων Ἰησοῦν καὶ τοὺς [ἰδίους] προφήτας, Acts 7. 52.
καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐκδιωξάντων, καὶ Θεῷ μὴ ἀρεσκόντων, καὶ πᾶσιν o Luke 11. 52.
16 ἀνθρώποις ἐναντίων, [o] κωλυόντων ἡμᾶς τοῖς ἔθνεσι λαλῆσαι Acts 13. 50. & 14. 5, 19.
ἵνα σωθῶσιν· εἰς τὸ ἀναπληρῶσαι αὐτῶν τὰς ἁμαρτίας πάν- & 17. 5, 13. & 18. 12. & 19. 9. τοτε. ἔφθασε δὲ ἐπ' αὐτοὺς ἡ ὀργὴ εἰς τέλος. & 22. 21, 22. Matt. 23. 32.

interpretation by which an active sense is by many there attributed to ἐνεργεῖται. He also vindicates the same sense to Eph. iii. 20 and Col. i. ult., and finally in the present passage, 2 Thess. ii. 7, and James v. 16; and though Bp. Bull in these passages renders ἐνεργ. by perfici, while Schott adopts efficax reddi, yet both are agreed on the sense: the latter explaining it of passing from the mind and understanding into the life and actions, and thus bringing forth fruit (see 2 Pet. i. 8); while the former ably elicits the full sense with the weighty remark, 'Scilicet tum demum in homine Dei Verbum ἐνεργεῖσθαι, sive perfici, dicitur, cum finem obtinet, et effectum sibi destinatum, quæ est FIDEI OBEDIENTIA.'

14. In this verse the reference may be, as Hyperius and others suppose, to the last clause of the preceding one; and thus what is here said will be a proof of the foregoing, as to the efficacy of the word. But it would rather seem (according to the opinion of Calvin, Chandler, Koppe, and Pelt) to have reference to the whole of the verse preceding; being meant, we may suppose, to illustrate the efficacy of the faith of the Thessalonians, by their courageous endurance of persecution, and to suggest a strong reason for their constancy therein, by noticing their resemblance in this respect to the primitive Christians of Judæa, and even to the Lord himself.

— ὑμεῖς γὰρ μιμηταὶ, &c.] Render, 'For ye are become followers of,' &c.; namely, by bearing the same troubles and persecutions as the persons in question did. So supra i. 6, μιμηταὶ ἡμῶν ἐγενήθητε καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου, δεξάμενοι τὸν λόγον ἐν θλίψει πολλῇ. On the expression τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c., see i. 1, and Acts viii. 1—4. Συμφυλετῶν is for the purer Greek ὁμοεθνῶν, 'fellow-countrymen.' By αὐτοὶ are meant the persons who composed those Churches, the Christians of Judæa.

15. ἰδίους.] This has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but rashly. We can hardly suppose that a marginal gloss should have crept into nearly all the MSS. It is far more probable that it was cancelled in a few copies, from a groundless fear lest it might countenance the dogma of Marcion, that the Jewish Prophets were not the Prophets of the true God; and, as an excuse for the omission, they would be likely to plead a corruption of the text; and to cast that on Marcion himself would clench the argument. Or perhaps it was thrown out by some over-nice Critics of Grecism; this use being not very Classical. Or finally, it might, as Schott observes, have arisen by homœoteleuton with the preceding word. Certainly, the expression carries with it great emphasis, as in Tit. i. 12, ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης. Indeed, it is necessary to the argument, the very force of which, as is shown by Chrysostom, Hyperius, Chandler, and Schott, rests on ἰδίους; the design of the Apostle being to evince, that it is no wonder they persecuted the Christian converts every where, since they are a persecuting and murderous race. They put to death 'the Lord of life and glory' himself; nay, they even murdered their own prophets, whose Divine authority they acknowledged (however they might reject that of Jesus); and hence no wonder they should persecute these his followers. In the words καὶ ἡμᾶς ἐκδιωξάντων there is, as Schott remarks, a transition from past events to present; the sense being, 'they have persecuted and do persecute.' Ἐκδιώκ., we may observe, is a more significant expression than διώκ.; denoting 'to chase away from place to place by bitter persecution.' Compare Luke xi. 49.

— καὶ Θεῷ μὴ ἀρεσκόντων, καὶ, &c.] Μὴ ἀρεσκόντων should not be taken (as it is usually) in the sense, 'do not seek to please God.' The expression is best explained by many eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, per meiosin, to signify, 'are in disfavour with God;' are θεοστυγεῖς, as their historian Josephus himself admits them to have been. There is here a climax; the καὶ—καὶ having an intensive sense, both—and; it being meant, that they both displease God, and are in a state of hostility to all men. I have pointed accordingly. In πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις ἐναντίων there is an allusion to that unsocial, or rather antisocial, spirit towards other nations, which Tacitus expresses by adversus omnes alios hostile odium, and of which the later Greek and the Latin Classical writers furnish striking proofs, some of them here adduced by the Commentators; see Diod. Sic. xxxiv. p. 524; Josephus, c. Apion. ii. 14; Philostr. Vit. Ap. v. 33; Tacit. Hist. v. 5; and especially Juvenal, Sat. xiv. 103, 4.

16. κωλυόντων.] Render, as the context requires, and the best Expositors, from Theophylact downwards, interpret, 'hindering.' By λαλῆσαι is meant, in a general way, the giving instruction. Ἵνα σωθ., 'in order to their being saved, or put into the way of salvation [as well as the Jews].'

— εἰς τὸ ἀναπληρ.] This is rightly considered by the Greek Commentators, and the earlier modern Expositors, as put for ἵνα ἀναπληρῶσι· q. d. 'they act as if they meant to fill up,' &c. So our Lord, Matt. xxiii. 30—32, after showing that the Jews are true sons of their fathers, Ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, ἀπορφανισθέντες ἀφ᾽ ὑμῶν πρὸς 17 καιρὸν ὥρας, προσώπῳ οὐ καρδίᾳ, περισσοτέρως ἐσπουδάp Rom. 1. 13. & 15. 22. σαμεν τὸ πρόσωπον ὑμῶν ἰδεῖν ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ. [p] Διὸ 18 ἠθελήσαμεν ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος, καὶ ἅπαξ q 2 Cor. 1. 14. Phil. 2. 16. & 4. 1. καὶ δίς· καὶ ἐνέκοψεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Σατανᾶς. [q] Τίς γὰρ ἡμῶν 19 ἐλπὶς ἢ χαρὰ ἢ στέφανος καυχήσεως; ἢ οὐχὶ καὶ ὑμεῖς, ἔμ-προσθεν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τῇ αὐτοῦ παρa Verse 5. Acts 17. 15. ουσίᾳ; Ὑμεῖς γάρ ἐστε ἡ δόξα ἡμῶν καὶ ἡ χαρά. III. [a] Διὸ 1 μηκέτι στέγοντες, εὐδοκήσαμεν καταλειφθῆναι ἐν Ἀθήναις b Acts 16. 1. Rom. 16. 21. Phil. 2. 19. μόνοι, [b] καὶ ἐπέμψαμεν Τιμόθεον τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν καὶ διά- 2 κονον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ συνεργὸν ἡμῶν ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς τὸ στηρίξαι ὑμᾶς, καὶ παρακαλέσαι ὑμᾶς περὶ c Acts 14. 22. Eph. 3. 13. 2 Tim. 3. 12. τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, [c] τῷ μηδένα σαίνεσθαι ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι 3 who slew the Prophets, ironically bids them 'fill up the measure of the iniquities of their fathers;' compare Gen. xv. 16. Some of the more recent Commentators, indeed, would render, 'so that they thereby fill up.' But, not to say that that eventual force of εἰς τὸ is somewhat unusual, the sense yielded is too feeble for the occasion. Πάντοτε, 'at all times;' i. e. now as well as formerly. It is well remarked by Schott, that the word is put last in the sentence for the purpose of more strongly intimating their perpetual obstinacy, which admitted of no repentance.

— ἔφθασε δὲ—τέλος.] The full sense is, 'But the punishment [due to their offences, and predetermined by God] is [in a manner] come upon them, and must terminate in their utter destruction.' The signal fulfilment of these words, only a few years after, is fully attested by the great Jewish historian.

17—20. Here the Apostle reverts from the Jews to the Thessalonians, and, agreeably to what he had said at ver. 8, expresses his great desire to again visit them, and tells them the reason why he has sent Timothy to them. Ἀπορφ. is a very significant term, and a rare word (of which I have noted only one example, namely, in Æschyl. Choëph. 244), properly denoting the separation of children from their parents, but sometimes, as here, of parents from their children. The expression is, in the present case, peculiarly suitable, since, by a continuance of the metaphor at verses 7 and 11, the Apostle is considered as their spiritual father.

17. πρὸς καιρὸν ὥρας.] This is by many eminent Commentators taken for πρὸς καιρὸν, or πρὸς ὥραν. But it would rather seem that we have here a blending of two synonymous expressions, in order to give a sense stronger than either would be separately. In προσώπῳ, οὐ καρδίᾳ there is a delicate turn; and at περισσ. ἐσπουδ. and ἐν πολλῇ ἐπιθυμίᾳ there is a blending of two modes of expression, denoting great desire, and earnest endeavours to satisfy it. Τὸ πρόσωπον ὑμῶν ἰδ. is a Hebrew, or rather primitive, expression for 'to visit you.'

18. ἐγὼ μὲν Παῦλος] 'I, Paul, indeed, or, for my part.' An insertion intended to prevent any mistake in the use here of the plural for the singular.

— ἅπαξ καὶ δὶς] i. e. 'not once only, but again a second time.' On which sense see Note on Phil. iv. 16. It thus differs from that use found in Nehem. xiii. 20, and 1 Macc. iii. 30, by which the expression merely denotes once or twice out of a small uncertain number. Ἐνέκοψεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Σατ., 'Satan thwarted our purpose.' See Luke xxii. 3. 1 Cor. vii. 5, and Note on Gal. v. 7.

19. τίς γὰρ—παρουσίᾳ;] The γὰρ refers, I conceive, to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And no wonder we should be thus desirous of seeing you,] for what,' &c.? The sentence following would have been plainer, if expressed declaratively; but instead of this it is, with greater elegance, made interrogative; after which we have subjoined the same sentiment expressed declaratively, with γὰρ referring to the answer supposed to be given; q. d. '[Are not ye such, &c. I may with truth say that ye are,] for ye are,' &c. In ἐλπ., χαρὰ, and στέφ. καυχ. there seems to be a climax.

III. The Apostle now proceeds to recount what he had done, and especially why he had sent Timothy. We have here a reference to what was a little before said, ii. 17, seq., of his earnest desire to see them, and his attempt to do so being impeded. And the present narration is, as Calvin observes, meant to further assure them of the earnestness of this his desire. Accordingly, this portion ought not to have been dissevered from the preceding context by commencing a new chapter.

1. μηκέτι στέγοντες.] Here we may, with the best Commentators, supply from the subject-matter, τὸν πόθον ὑμῶν ('the desire of seeing you'); or, what comes to the same thing, we may render, 'not being able to restrain ourselves,' as at 1 Cor. ix. 12, in the Note on which passage the true nature of the term has been discussed. For a reconciliation of a seeming discrepancy between what is here said, from vv. 1—7, and Acts xvii. 14, sq. xviii. 5, see Paley's Hor. Paul., and Pelt, Proleg.

2. παρακαλέσαι.] The best Commentators are agreed, that as παρακ. is united with στηρίξαι περὶ τῆς πίστεως, the sense is, 'to exhort or admonish,' as at Acts xiv. 22, where στηρίζειν and παρακ. are likewise conjoined.

3. The Apostle having told them that the 4 ταύταις· αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἴδατε ὅτι εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα. Καὶ γὰρ ὅτε πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἦμεν, προελέγομεν ὑμῖν ὅτι μέλλομεν θλί-5 βεσθαι, καθὼς καὶ ἐγένετο καὶ οἴδατε. [d] Διὰ τοῦτο κἀγὼ d Phil. 2. 16. Gal. 2. 2. & 4. 11.

μηκέτι στέγων, ἔπεμψα εἰς τὸ γνῶναι τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν, μή πως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειράζων, καὶ εἰς κενὸν γένηται ὁ 6 κόπος ἡμῶν. Ἄρτι δὲ ἐλθόντος Τιμοθέου πρὸς ἡμᾶς ἀφ' ὑμῶν, καὶ εὐαγγελισαμένου ἡμῖν τὴν πίστιν καὶ τὴν ἀγά-πην ὑμῶν, καὶ ὅτι ἔχετε μνείαν ἡμῶν ἀγαθὴν πάντοτε, ἐπι-7 ποθοῦντες ἡμᾶς ἰδεῖν, καθάπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς ὑμᾶς· διὰ τοῦτο παρεκλήθημεν, ἀδελφοί, ἐφ' ὑμῖν, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει καὶ 8 ἀνάγκῃ ἡμῶν, διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν πίστεως· ὅτι νῦν ζῶμεν, ἐὰν design of his sending Timothy to them was to establish and comfort them in their Christian faith and profession, and to prevent their being either flattered or frightened out of their constancy, adduces two very substantial reasons for their continued patience and resolution. (Chand.)

— τῷ.] The dative here denotes cause, like the Hebr. ל placed before Infinitives; and thus the τῷ here will be equivalent to εἰς τὸ at ver. 5. As to the reading τοῦ, it is evidently a gloss, or correction. The expression σαίνεσθαι, of which the sense has been somewhat disputed (especially from the word occurring no where else in the New Test.), seems to be best explained by Chrysostom and the ancient Commentators by κινεῖσθαι, σαλεύεσθαι, ταράττεσθαι; a signification of the word often found in the Classical writers, especially the poets. So Diog. Laërt. viii. 1. 21, οἱ δὲ, σαινόμενοι τοῖς λεγομένοις, ἐδάκρυον. Eurip. Rhes. 55, σαίνει μ' ἔννυχος φρυκτωρία. Those who so understand the term here, tell us it comes to mean this from the primitive signification of the word being 'to wag the tail,' as a dog does. But that idea, besides that it is not sufficiently primary, would rather lead to the sense of adulari, which would here be quite out of place. In fact, the original signification of σαίνω is (as I have shown in Rec. Syn.) the same as that of the cognate form σείω, to move or stir, shake any thing from its place; and hence, in the figurative sense, to perturb, &c.; a view, I find, adopted by Pelt and Schott, of whom the former rightly observes that σαίνω comes from the old uncontracted form σεαίνω (with which I would compare λεαίνω and νεαίνω), and that, of course, from the primitive form σέω. With respect to the exact sense here, I should say, that while some explain it 'to be perturbed,' others, 'to be moved [from the faith],' it will be best to unite both senses, the latter arising out of the former.

— ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσι ταύταις] 'at these evils [suffered by me and you].' The reason for this is assigned in the next words, εἰς τοῦτο κείμεθα, which must not be confined to the Apostle and the Thessalonians, but taken generally, as referring to the lot or condition of all Christians, who, as Hyperius expresses it, 'omnes ad hunc usum sunt positi, ut graviter affligantur;' see 2 Tim. iii. 12. Acts xiv. 22. Luke xxiv. 26. 'Hence it is (he adds) a sublime apophthegm, pertaining to all God's children, and full of consolation.'

4. καθὼς καὶ—οἴδατε.] A somewhat harsh construction for καθὼς (put for ὃ) καὶ, ὡς οἴδατε, ἐγένετο, 'which also, as ye know, came to pass.'

5. Here we have a resumption of what was said at vv. 1, 2, the third and fourth verses being, in some measure, parenthetical.

— κἀγώ.] This is emphatical. Γνῶναι τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν. Meaning, to ascertain your constancy, and see whether you remained faithful to your Christian profession; for πίστις here, as at ver. 7, simply signifies fidelity.

'The Apostle (observes Benson) knew all things respecting Christ's doctrine, but was not inspired with a knowledge of all other things;' that is, not a perpetual knowledge, but only imparted as occasion served, like the power of working miracles.

— μή πως ἐπείρασεν ὑμᾶς ὁ πειρ.] Supply φοβούμενος. Render, 'fearing lest the Tempter have by some means tempted you, and our labour should be in vain.' Or, as Professor Scholefield (Middleton, on Gr. Art.) expresses it, 'I sent to know your faith, whether the Tempter have tempted you by any means, and lest (in that case) our labour be in vain.' 'Exactly similar (adds he) is Eurip. Phœn. 91, 2, μή τις πολιτῶν ἐν τρίβῳ φαντάζεται, Κἀμοὶ μὲν ἔλθῃ φαῦλος, ὡς δούλῳ, ψόγος, Σοὶ δ', ὡς ἀνάσσῃ. In both cases μὴ has different senses, according to the different moods with which it is connected.' The Infinitive, as Winer and Schott observe, is here used because the Apostle deemed the event (their temptation) not improbable. Whereas, in the next clause he uses the Subjunctive, as trusting that the other event was not probable.

From the Apostle's expression, 'lest his labour should prove in vain,' it is, as Dr. Benson observes, 'quite evident that they were not elected absolutely and unconditionally to everlasting life, but elected into the number of God's professed and peculiar people on earth, or to enjoy Christian privileges, which if they improved, they would be finally happy, but if they abused, they would finally be reprobates, and perish.'

6—8. The Apostle here professes the joy he experienced in receiving, while at Corinth, so good an account of them from Timothy. (Schott.) Pelt observes, that as at ver. 6 there is a protasis, so here we have its apodosis. The construction is, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ θλίψει καὶ ἀνάγκῃ ἡμῶν παρεκλήθημεν ἐφ' ὑμῖν, διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν πίστεως. With θλ. καὶ ἀνάγκῃ compare 2 Cor. vi. 4, ἐν θλίψεσιν, ἐν ἀνάγκαις. The ὅτι in ὑμεῖς στήκητε ἐν Κυρίῳ. Τίνα γὰρ εὐχαριστίαν δυνάμεθα 9 τῷ Θεῷ ἀνταποδοῦναι περὶ ὑμῶν, ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ χαρᾷ ᾗ χαί-e Rom. 1. 10, 11. & 15. 23. ρομεν δι' ὑμᾶς ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, [e] νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέ- 10 ρας ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ δεόμενοι εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν ὑμῶν τὸ πρόσωπον, καὶ καταρτίσαι τὰ ὑστερήματα τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν; Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰη- 11 f Infra 5. 15. 2 Pet. 1. 7. σοῦς Χριστὸς κατευθύναι τὴν ὁδὸν ἡμῶν πρὸς ὑμᾶς. [f] Ὑμᾶς 12 δὲ ὁ Κύριος πλεονάσαι καὶ περισσεύσαι τῇ ἀγάπῃ εἰς ἀλ-g 1 Cor. 1. 8. Phil. 1. 10. infra 5. 23. 2 Thess. 2. 17. Zach. 14. 5. λήλους καὶ εἰς πάντας, καθάπερ καὶ ἡμεῖς εἰς ὑμᾶς· [g] εἰς 13 τὸ στηρίξαι ὑμῶν τὰς καρδίας ἀμέμπτους ἐν ἁγιωσύνῃ, ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἁγίων αὐτοῦ.

a Phil. 1. 27. supra 2. 12. IV. [a] ΤΟ λοιπὸν οὖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ἐρωτῶμεν ὑμᾶς καὶ 1 παρακαλοῦμεν ἐν Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, καθὼς παρελάβετε παρ' ἡμῶν

ὅτι νῦν ζῶμεν, seems to refer to a clause omitted; q. d. '[We may truly say we were comforted in our distress;] for now, on hearing this good news of your stedfastness, we do indeed live, i. e., enjoy life; since our labour has not been in vain.' This sense of ζῆν, as of vivere in Latin, is frequent. The words following, ἐὰν—Κυρίῳ, do not correspond in construction; but, in fact, there is a blending of two clauses, νῦν ζῶμεν ὅτι ἑστήκατε, and ζήσομεν ἐὰν στήκητε. On στήκ., in the sense of being stedfast, see Gal. v. 1, and Phil. iv. 1.

9. This joy, experienced at the faith of the Thessalonians, leads the Apostle to bless Him who was the author of so good a work; after which act of thanksgiving, he offers up a prayer to Almighty God, that He would graciously favour his purpose of returning to Thessalonica.

— τίνα εὐχαρ.] For τ. ἀξίαν εὐχ., or πῶς δυνάμεθα εὐχαριστεῖν ἀξίως τῷ Θεῷ; There is an allusion to Psalm cxvi. 12. Ἐπὶ πάσῃ τῇ χαρᾷ, for ὑπὲρ π. χαρᾶς, 'on account of the great joy;' a use of πᾶς derived from the Hebrew. Ἔμπρ. τοῦ Θεοῦ should be joined with χαρᾷ: and, as Chrysostom observes, the words are meant to refer to God as the Author of that joy; and to hint that it is his gift, and not to be ascribed to their own exertions alone.

10. ὑπερεκπ. δεόμενοι, &c.] The feeling of devout thankfulness to God for them was naturally accompanied with a desire and prayer to be permitted to revisit them, expressed in prayers to that effect; for in εἰς τὸ ἰδεῖν the εἰς τὸ denotes end. In καταρτ. τὰ ὑστερήμ. τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν the senses of repairing (i. e. converting) and completing seem to be united; as Gal. vi. 1, and 2 Cor. xiii. 11.

11. κατευθ. τὴν ὁδόν.] This does not mean merely (as some recent Commentators imagine) 'May God grant us to come unto you.' It is, in fact, a sort of prayer; and it need not have been debated by Expositors whether there be an allusion to making a straight road, or to cutting out and levelling a road (on which see Matt. iii. 3, and Luke i. 79); for both may be understood; the directing of any one's steps implying a removal of all impediments. The language (that of humble dependence) is founded on those passages of the Old Test., where God is said to direct the ways, or steps, of men, as Isaiah xlv. 13. lxi. 8. Jerem. x. 23. Prov. iii. 6, and (which the Apostle appears to have had in mind) xvi. 9. And what is so often in the New Test. ascribed to God is here ascribed to Christ also; as also in the next verse there is another ascription of what pertains to Deity. On which see Whitby and Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test. vol. iii. p. 215. 221.

12, 13. Having thus expressed his anxious desire to be permitted to again see them, the Apostle concludes the first part of the Epistle, by subjoining pious wishes and ardent prayers for their spiritual advancement, especially in charity and love, 'the very bond of all perfectness' (Col. iii. 14. Comp. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. 1 Tim. i. 5. iv. 12), and hence here represented as tending (εἰς) to procure our acceptance with God at the great day of account; see Matt. xxv. 35, 36. On the full sense of the present prayer see Hyperius and Chandler.

12. πλεονάσαι καὶ περισσεύσαι.] The two terms are here used in an active sense (see Note on 2 Cor. ix. 8), as, indeed, words of this sense often are in all languages.

13. ἀμέμπτους ἐν ἁγιωσύνῃ.] See 2 Cor. xi. 2. Eph. v. 27, and Notes.

— τῶν ἁγίων αὐτοῦ.] By this expression some understand the holy angels; others, all true Christians. The latter sense must be chiefly intended; but the former may be included.

IV. Here commences the second part of the Epistle, which, as in the other Epistles, is parænetic. (Hyperius.) Though the Apostle had seen reason to bestow high commendation on the Thessalonian Church generally, he at the same time judged it proper, by adverting to his own course of life, both to confirm those who had hitherto done well, and to admonish certain who might be inclined to follow the evil examples so frequent in this city. After which he then (ch. iv.) proceeds to various exhortations, giving them those rules and directions relating to the purity τὸ πῶς δεῖ ὑμᾶς περιπατεῖν καὶ ἀρέσκειν Θεῷ, ἵνα περισ-2 σεύητε μᾶλλον. οἴδατε γὰρ τίνας παραγγελίας ἐδώκαμεν

3 ὑμῖν διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. [b] Τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι θέλημα τοῦ b Rom. 12. 2. Eph. 5. 17, 27.
Θεοῦ, ὁ ἁγιασμὸς ὑμῶν· ἀπέχεσθαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ τῆς πορνείας· c 1 Cor. 6. 15, 18.
4 [c] εἰδέναι ἕκαστον ὑμῶν τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος κτᾶσθαι ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Rom. 6. 19. d 1 Cor. 15. 34.
5 καὶ τιμῇ· [d] μὴ ἐν πάθει ἐπιθυμίας, καθάπερ καὶ τὰ ἔθνη τὰ Eph. 4. 17, 18.

and holiness of the Christian life, the observance of which was necessary to their walking worthy of the Lord to all well-pleasing, and to their answering the obligations of their Christian profession. (Schott and Chandler.)

1. τὸ λοιπὸν οὖν.] A formula of transition frequent in St. Paul's Epistles, especially towards the close. Ἐν Κυρίῳ, 'per Dominum.' The construction is, ἵνα, καθὼς παρελάβετε—Θεῷ, οὕτως (i. e. ἐν τούτῳ) περισσεύητε μᾶλλον.

— τὸ πῶς.] Literally, 'the instruction how.' Περιπατεῖν καὶ ἀρέσκειν may be taken for οὕτως περιπατεῖν ὥστε ἀρ.; or there may be an Hendiadys for Θεῷ ἀρεσκόντως περιπατεῖν. Ἵνα περισσ. μᾶλλον, 'that ye may make greater and greater progress.'

2. παραγγελίας.] The term imports the authoritative injunction of a ruler or his ambassador.

3. τοῦτο γὰρ, &c.] We may render γὰρ either by now (as it ought to be taken in 2 Tim. ii. 7, νόει ἃ λέγω· δῴη γὰρ ὁ Κύριος, &c.) or then, as the particle often signifies in the Sept., corresponding to the Heb. אַךְ; or it may mean nempe, exempli gratiâ, as introducing a principal instance of the παραγγελίαι. The τοῦτο is not pleonastic, but serves to strengthen the expression, and ὁ ἁγιασμὸς is put per appositionem exegeticam. This term is used, like ἁγιωσύνη at iii. 13, to denote universal purity as well in actions, as in words and thoughts. See Scott. The Apostle, however, especially adverts to what, though it be the lowest branch of it, is yet the most required of Christians. In ἀπέχ. there is an exegetical apposition. By πορνείας is here meant all kinds of lewdness, as the πάσης added in many MSS. and the Pesch. Syr. expresses.

4. What is said in this verse is evidently meant to be exegetical of what was said in the verse preceding.

— τὸ ἑαυτοῦ σκεῦος.] Meaning, as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are in general agreed, 'his body;' the body being thus considered as the ἀγγεῖον τῆς ψυχῆς (to use the expression of Philo cited by Loesner), i. e. the receptacle of the soul. So Cicero, Tusc. Quæst. lib. i. cap. 22, 'Corpus quidem quasi vas est, aut aliquod animi receptaculum;' and Lucret. lib. vi. 17, 'Vitium vas afficere ipsum, Omniaque illius vitio corrumpier intus.' And Hermas calls the body simply the vessel, without adding any thing to explain it. The expression, indeed, in this sense is not unfrequent in the Heathen Philosophers and the Christian Fathers of the earliest period, as Barnabas and Hermas; and it is, moreover, found in a passage of 1 Sam. xxi. 5 (which probably suggested the use of it here), 'Women have been kept from us these three days, since I came out, and the vessels of the young men are holy.' How suitable, too, this sense is to the context, will sufficiently appear. See Benson and Chandl. Some Commentators, indeed, both ancient and modern, have adopted another mode of interpretation, by which σκεῦος is taken to mean wife; a signification which they seek to establish from 1 Pet. iii. 7, and also several passages from Rabbinical writers, where the wife is called the vas mariti, i. e. his goods or furniture, as we say utensil. But as to the passage of 1 Pet., it is, as Schott admits, not to the purpose, and the same may be said of the passages from Rabbinical writers; for even the one most apposite will not prove that כלי could of itself mean wife, the word there simply meaning utensil or article, or goods, and only acquiring the other sense from the next words, by a sort of catachresis and double meaning, which would surely be quite out of place in the present passage, containing a serious and solemn admonition. Indeed on that interpretation it is impossible, without the greatest violence, to extract from the passage any sense suitable to the context; for to suppose, with Schott, the meaning to be, that every one should marry, and thereby live in purity and holiness (as 1 Cor. vii. 7), that surely cannot be elicited from the words, being forbidden by the expression εἰδέναι (which, as Bengel remarks, denotes, not knowledge, but ability, as in Phil. iv. 12. Matt. xxvii. 65. 2 Pet. ii. 9, and sometimes in the Classical writers), and also by the term τιμή, and, indeed, by the air of the context.

The former interpretation, then, is undoubtedly the true one; against which, indeed, no reasonable objection can be made: for as to the remark of Wetstein and Schott, that κτᾶσθαι will not admit of the sense possess, which would rather require κέκτησθαι, the objection is more specious than solid; since it is surely better to suppose that the Apostle was inattentive to this nice propriety of the Greek language, than that he should use σκεῦος in such a sense; not to say that the purity of the Grecism has been maintained by the learned Pelt, though perhaps unsuccessfully. This use of κτᾶσθαι for κέκτησθαι was perhaps popular and provincial, and introduced, I suspect, from the Latin use of possidere, for κατέχειν (see the Glossaria), which is sometimes employed in the very sense here, I conceive, intended by the Apostle, namely, to hold the mastery over. So Cicero, Verr. v. c. 68, says, 'totum hominem possideret,' made himself master of the whole man; and pro Rosc. Com. c. 6, 'qui mediusfidius plus fidei quam artis, plus veritatis quam disciplinæ possidet in se,' mastery over himself. Such, I repeat, is the very sense of κτᾶσθαι here intended, which is well expressed by Turretin, who remarks: 'Qui sese affectibus carnalibus dedunt, non possident corpus suum, non sunt ejus domini, sed sunt ejus servi.' In τιμῇ there is a reference to the abuse and consequent dishonouring of the body by impurity. With the whole pas-e Lev. 19. 11, 13. & 25. 14. Jer. 22. 13. 1 Cor. 6. 8. f Lev. 11. 44. & 19. 2 John 17. 9. 1 Cor. 1. 2. Heb. 12. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 14, 15. g Luke 10. 16. 1 Cor. 7. 40. h Lev 19. 18. Matt. 22. 39. John 6. 45. & 13. 34. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 8. 1 John 3. 11, 23 & 4. 21. i Acts 20. 34. Eph. 4. 28. 2 Thess. 3. 7, 12.

μὴ εἰδότα τὸν Θεόν. [e] τὸ μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν 6 ἐν τῷ πράγματι τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ· διότι ἔκδικος ὁ Κύριος περὶ πάντων τούτων, καθὼς καὶ προείπομεν ὑμῖν καὶ διεμαρ-τυράμεθα. [f] οὐ γὰρ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἐπὶ ἀκαθαρσίᾳ, 7 ἀλλ' ἐν ἁγιασμῷ. [g] Τοιγαροῦν ὁ ἀθετῶν, οὐκ ἄνθρωπον 8 ἀθετεῖ, ἀλλὰ τὸν Θεὸν, τὸν καὶ δόντα τὸ Πνεῦμα αὐτοῦ τὸ ἅγιον εἰς ‡ ἡμᾶς.
[h] Περὶ δὲ τῆς φιλαδελφίας, οὐ χρείαν ἔχετε γράφειν ὑμῖν· 9 αὐτοὶ γὰρ ὑμεῖς θεοδίδακτοί ἐστε εἰς τὸ ἀγαπᾷν ἀλλήλους· καὶ γὰρ ποιεῖτε αὐτὸ εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς τοὺς ἐν ὅλῃ 10 τῇ Μακεδονίᾳ. Παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, περισσεύειν μᾶλλον· [i] καὶ φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν, καὶ πράσσειν τὰ 11 sage compare Rom. i. 21—32, which is the best comment on the present.

6. τὸ μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν καὶ πλεονεκτεῖν ἐν τῷ πράγμ.] On the sense of these words no little difference of opinion exists. Most modern Expositors understand ὑπερβ. and πλεονεκ. of covetousness, or rather cheating and extortion; and by τῷ πράγμ., business generally, i. e. commercial transactions; or they take τῷ as put for τινι: a use, however, quite contra linguam; and τὸ πρᾶγμα in the sense business is negatived by the use of the Article (which, as Bp. Middleton observes, 'limits the sense to the matter in question, namely, the conduct of the incestuous person'). See vv. 3, 4, 5, 8. Moreover, as Benson observes, it is not the Apostle's manner to start from his subject to quite another matter, and then return to it again. Far preferable, then, is the interpretation adopted by almost all the Greek Fathers and Commentators, and some eminent Latin ones (as Jerome and Hilary), and, of modern Expositors, Estius, De Dieu, Hammond, Raphel, Heinrichs, Whitby, West, Bengel, Macknight, Wakefield, Newcome, Chandler, Benson, Middleton, Rosenm., Schott, Rose, and Scholefield, who take πρᾶγμα to mean 'the matter in question,' that of seduction of chastity, with allusion to the base arts by which such infamous designs are brought about. Of course ὑπερβ. and πλεον. must thus be understood of the same thing; not, however, I apprehend, with reference to the person whose chastity is violated, but to another, who is grievously injured in the affair; namely, the husband, or father. Ὑπερβαίνειν, scil. τὸ δίκαιον, signifies 'to overlook or violate the rule of right,' being for παραβαίνειν, as in 2 Kings xviii. 12. Jer. xxxiv. 18, and often in the Classical writers. Thus the sense will be, as Chandler explains, 'that no one should go beyond the boundaries of temperance and chastity as to his brother, or endeavour to gratify his own passions beyond the limits of justice that separate his neighbour's property from his own.' Πλεονεκτεῖν may be rendered, with most of the above Commentators, to defraud, injure; but the expression is rather meant to denote such a kind of injury as is inflicted, not by force, but by circumvention, whereby any one is overreached as well as injured, according to the use of the word, 2 Cor. vii. 2, οὐδένα ἐπλεονεκτήσαμεν, and xii. 17, 18. And so Thucyd. iv. 86, ἀπάτῃ εὐπρεπεῖ πλεονεκτῆσαί τινα.

— διότι ἔκδικος ὁ Κύριος περὶ π. τ.] Render, 'for the Lord is the avenger of all such [things],' (meaning the vices just mentioned,) namely, by punishing those who commit them. So Josephus, Ant. iv. 8, 24, has νόμος κολαστὴς γίνεται τῶν τοιούτων, and Hom. Batrach. v. 96, ἔχει Θεὸς ἔκδικον ὄμμα. Compare also Gal. v. 21.

7. οὐ γὰρ ἐκάλεσεν — ἁγιασμῷ.] Here is urged the second motive to enforce the above prohibition, in which we have, as Hyperius and Calvin remark, an argumentum à contrariis; q. d. 'God hath called us unto sanctification, therefore certainly not to uncleanness, because the two things are inconsistent with each other.' So 2 Tim. i. 9, τοῦ (scil. Θεοῦ) καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγίᾳ.

8. ὁ ἀθετῶν] scil. τὴν τοῦ ἁγιασμοῦ κλῆσιν, as the Pesch. Syr. Translator supplies; or, 'sets lightly by these injunctions.' On the force of the term ἀθετεῖν, see Note at Gal. ii. 21. Οὐκ— ἀλλὰ, 'non tam—quam.' By ἄνθρωπον the Apostle means himself; intimating that any such disregard of him would be, in fact, disregard of God. Indeed he seems here to have had in mind the words of Christ, Luke x. 16, ὁ ἀθετῶν ὑμᾶς ἐμὲ ἀθετεῖ, &c. For ἡμᾶς, many MSS., some Versions, and several Fathers and early Editions have ὑμᾶς, which is adopted by Wetstein, Koppe, Matthæi, Tittman, and Vater; but I rather agree with Griesbach and Pelt, that the Vulg. (which is found in the Ed. Princ.) should be retained, being far more suitable and natural: and as to the superiority of MS. evidence for ὑμᾶς, the words are so perpetually confounded, that such authority is here of little weight. By τὸ Πνεῦμα ἅγιον are not so much meant the extraordinary and supernatural, as the ordinary aids of the Spirit, given to every man to profit withal.

9. φιλαδ.] From the context it appears that we are chiefly to understand that sort of love to the brethren (i. e. Christians) which is evinced in what is usually denoted by charity. By θεοδίδ. is meant not merely, or chiefly, the teaching of God by the precepts of the Gospel, but that teaching of God by the Holy Spirit, whereby not so much the intellect is enlightened, as the heart is touched, and the affections swayed. Compare Is. liv. 13. John vi. 44.

11. φιλοτιμεῖσθαι ἡσυχάζειν] 'that ye earnestly study to be quiet.' So φιλοτιμ. is used ἴδια, καὶ ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶν ὑμῶν, καθὼς ὑμῖν 12 παρηγγείλαμεν· ἵνα περιπατῆτε εὐσχημόνως πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω, καὶ μηδενὸς χρείαν ἔχητε.

13 ΟΥ θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, περὶ τῶν κεκοιμημένων, ἵνα μὴ λυπῆσθε καθὼς καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ οἱ μὴ ἔχον-at Rom. xv. 20 and 2 Cor. v. 9. The term signifies properly 'to love honour,' and in the New Test. 'so to exert oneself in doing any thing as from a love or sense of honour.' So Ælian, Var. Hist. ix. 29 (cited by Wolf), ἐφιλοτιμήσατο Ἀλκιβιάδης δῶρα πολλὰ πέμπειν τῷ Σωκράτει. In the passage now before us there is an elegant allusion to the strivings of ambition with the quiet of private life, and that by a boldness of turn, and a sort of Oxymoron, not ill represented by the remark of Pelt, 'In eo jubentur esse ambitiosi, ambitiosi ne sint.' The general sense, however, is well expressed by Koppe as follows: 'Honorem et laudem in eo ponite, ut vitam agatis tranquillam.' By ἡσυχ. is denoted the opposite to that restless and insubordinate spirit which, there is reason to suppose, was then very prevalent in the world, and such as would be likely to arise from the extreme excitement inseparable from a new and deeply interesting religion. With this is closely connected the following particular, πράσσειν τὰ ἴδια. So Hesychius places together ἰδιοπραγεῖν, ἴδια πράττειν and ἡσυχάζειν; and Plato, p. 680, has: ἡσυχίαν ἔχων καὶ τὰ ἑαυτοῦ πράττων. Also the Schol. on Thucyd. i. 32 has, τὸ ἰδιοπραγμονεῖν καὶ ἡσυχάζειν. Instead of ἴδια in this phrase, elegance of Grecism would rather require ἑαυτῶν; but an example of ἴδια has been adduced from Galen. Be that as it may, the pronoun is very emphatical, and the full force of it is well shown by Dr. Barrow in two admirable Sermons on this text. On the expression ἐργάζεσθαι ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσὶ, see Eph. iv. 28 and Note. Here ἰδίαις is added by way of strengthening the sense, and because of τὰ ἴδια before.

12. ἵνα περιπατῆτε εὐσχημόνως πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω.] So Col. iv. 5, ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔξω. The expression, however, of the present passage, εὐσχημόνως, has a more special sense; meaning decently, reputably, or creditably, including the idea of regularity and order. So 1 Cor. xiv. 40, it is said, πάντα εὐσχημόνως καὶ κατὰ τάξιν γινέσθω· namely, lest the heathens should represent Christianity as a religion of sloth and disorder. Τοὺς ἔξω, scil. τῆς ἐκκλησίας; meaning, those out of the pale of the Church, as 1 Cor. v. 12, 13.

— μηδενὸς χρείαν ἔχητε.] At μηδενὸς some supply πράγματος; others, ἀνθρώπου. The latter is preferable, as yielding the more extensive sense, and indeed comprehending the other; q. d. 'that ye may be beholden to no man for any thing,' which is surely of human blessings one of the greatest. So it is said, Ps. cxxviii. 2 (a passage, perhaps, here had in mind by the Apostle), τοὺς πόνους τῶν καρπῶν σου φάγεσαι· μακάριος εἶ! If, however, the former be supplied, the words may be understood to mean, by an elegant litotes, 'that ye may obtain every thing ye have need of.' So Joseph. Ant. ii. 2, 2, διεπράττετο μηδενὸς ἀτυχῆσαι τοὺς δεομένους.

The Apostle goes still further at Eph. iv. 28, giving as a reason for honest industry, that a man 'may thus have wherewithal to give to him that needeth.' See also Acts xx. 34.

13—18. The Apostle now passes on to correct the errors of those who were altogether doubtful of the state of Christians already dead, or who should die before the solemn return of Christ to judgment (an event which they thought not very remote); namely, whether they would, equally with those whose earthly course should reach up to the coming of the Lord, be partakers of the resurrection of the dead; or, at least, who supposed they would be in a worse condition in the heavenly kingdom. Although we are not enabled to exactly trace the origin of this anxiety, yet, from what St. Paul says, we may collect that some such doubt existed among them at that time as to the matter in question; insomuch that they mourned bitterly over those brother Christians who had already died, as if they were to be deplored; and themselves being ignorant of the fatal day, were in great fear of death, and accordingly were more prying than was proper in searching to know the time when Christ should come. (Schott.) To repress these vain doubts and fears, and, as far as he could properly do it, satisfy their curiosity, the Apostle repeats the doctrine he had already taught them of the resurrection of the pious dead to a happy immortality, as founded on their Lord's own resurrection. He further informs them, that those found alive at the coming of Christ will have no advantage or privilege over those already dead, as regarded the happiness of a future state; that they would, indeed, not die at all, but be changed into incorruptible, yet that they would not anticipate the dead in being received up into heaven; nay, that the dead must first be raised, and then both they and the persons then alive would be taken up together, to meet the Lord in the air, and be received into heaven.

13. οὐ θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν.] A form of soliciting earnest attention, frequent in St. Paul's writings. Comp. 1 Cor. xi. 3.

— τῶν κεκοιμημένων.] Meaning the righteous dead. See Note at John xi. 11, 12. By οἱ λοιποὶ are meant the heathens, who, having no rational hope of a resurrection, used to make a show of excessive grief for the departed. This, as well as the feeling itself, the Apostle forbids, as inconsistent with the hope of the resurrection set forth in the Gospel. By the word ἐλπὶς is here to be understood a sure and well-founded expectation; for that the heathens had a hope, and even a sort of expectation, has been proved by the Commentators, though that was, Bp. Warburton thinks, rather in the exoteric than the esoteric doctrines of the philosophers, and withal a very obscure and imperfect one. On this, indeed (as observes Benson), even their ablest reasoners express themselves with so much uncertainty and variation, as only served to confound the common people, who were ready to fear that k 1 Cor. 15. 13, 18. τες ἐλπίδα. [k] Εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἀπέθανε καὶ 14 ἀνέστη, οὕτω καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς κοιμηθέντας διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ l 1 Cor. 15. 22, 51. ἄξει σὺν αὐτῷ. [l] Τοῦτο γὰρ ὑμῖν λέγομεν ἐν λόγῳ Κυρίου, 15 m Matt. 24 31. ὅτι ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περιλειπόμενοι εἰς τὴν παρουσίαν τοῦ 1 Cor. 15 51. 2 Thess. 1. 7. Κυρίου, οὐ μὴ φθάσωμεν τοὺς κοιμηθέντας· [m] ὅτι αὐτὸς ὁ 16 death might prove an utter extinction of the man.

Here, we may remark, the Apostle says, not (like the Stoical philosophers) that they ought not to grieve at all, (which were unnatural and impracticable,) but that they should not grieve as those who have no hope. See Ecclus. xxii. 11. It is a fine observation of Bengel, 'Efficacia religionis Christianæ vel maxime ex eo patet, quod ea desiderium mortuorum, affectuum subtilissimum, non tollit aut exacerbat, sed suaviter temperat.'

14. εἰ γὰρ πιστεύομεν, &c.] The εἰ, as Est. well points out, is not dubitantis, but 'præsupponentis, velut fundamentum firmissimum sequentium.' At οὕτω καὶ supply (with Theodoret, and, of modern Commentators, Abp. Newcome, Chandler, and Schott,) πιστεύσομεν, taken from πιστεύομεν just before; q. d. 'If we believe, as we must, in the death and resurrection of Christ, we have equal reason to believe,' &c. The argument is a popular one, as in 1 Cor. xv. 13, 18. On this mode of speaking, by which a thing certain and undoubted is put as if conditional (occurring also at Matt. vii. 11 and John xiii. 32), see Bornemann on Xen. Anab. i. 2. 25. We have also, Hyperius observes, (as at 2 Cor. iv. 14) an argumentum ab æquo, per similitudinem; q. d. 'What we believe to have taken place in Christ, the Head, it is reasonable we should believe will take place in us his members; but as we believe that Christ rose, therefore we must likewise believe that we shall rise again.'

Διὰ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ some construe with τοὺς κοιμηθέντας; others, with ἄξει. Of these two methods the former, in whichever way it be turned, rests on very precarious grounds. Far preferable is the latter; according to which the ἄξει will have, as Pelt remarks, a sensus prægnans, for 'will raise them up, and bring them along with Him (i. e. Jesus) into heaven;' so that they may remain with him and partake of his glory. See John xiv. 3. 1 Cor. xv. 18. 23.

15—18. Here the Apostle solemnly assures them, that all true Christians shall be partakers not only of the resurrection, but also of the same salvation prepared for them in the kingdom of heaven, whether they be dead, or still alive, at the coming of the Lord Jesus. (Schott.)

15. τοῦτο γὰρ—κοιμ.] Render: 'Now this I tell you, on the revelation (or authority) of the Lord, that those who are alive and shall survive at the coming of the Lord, will by no means anticipate those who are already dead;' namely, in entering into heavenly bliss. Every one, as the Apostle says at 1 Cor. xv. 23, will enter, 'in his own order.' The words may express (what some suppose them to do) the Apostle's belief that he should survive until the last day. But as we have no proof, from any other passage, that the Apostle did entertain such an opinion, it may be better, with many Expositors, ancient and modern, to take ἡμεῖς as said per κοίνωσιν,—meaning, we Christians: though, indeed, in thus understanding the words as put hypothetically, not a little harshness is involved; and, as Schott observes, 'it is difficult to imagine any good reason why the Apostle should have adopted a mode of speaking always ambiguous, and in this context obscure.' And the passages here adduced in proof that ἡμεῖς may mean 'we Christians' (as Mark x. 3. John vii. 19. 22. Acts vii. 38) are perhaps not quite of the same nature; or at least if we should admit that it may mean, there is no proof, from the context or elsewhere, that it does mean that. It may be best, then, to adopt a middle course; i. e. to suppose that, though the ἡμεῖς does not imply that the Apostle thought certainly he should live till the last day, yet it may serve to show that he thought it possible the last day was so near at hand, that some then living might see it; and that, having no certain revelation, he expressed himself indefinitely: a view, I find, supported by the opinion of Professor Schott. That the Apostle had reference to those of his own age, involves, he thinks, no difficulty; for our Saviour himself never spoke definitely as to the time when he should return, whether sooner or later, although some of his sayings seemed to import as much. Thus there was nothing to hinder the Apostle from supposing, with most Christians (who ardently desired the advent of Christ, and the great change it would bring), that the coming of the Lord might take place during the lifetime of some part of the persons then living. That St. Paul was strongly inclined to think so, seems evident from ver. 4. Nor is there thus any contrariety with what is said at 2 Cor. iv. 14. 1 Cor. vi. 14, if we do but consider that the Apostle was unwilling ever to pronounce any positive opinion respecting the time of Christ's coming; and the ἡμεῖς may very well include both all those who had died before the Apostle wrote this, and also those who should die before the coming of the Lord. By speaking obscurely he doubtless meant to express no certain expectation on the subject; for though he was himself inclined to think that some then alive should witness the coming of Christ, or, at least, that it was not far distant; yet he was well aware that it was not permitted to him 'to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath reserved to himself,' so we find that he sometimes refutes those who expected the Lord's return to be close at hand, and gladly anticipated it; and as the Apostle, at the time when he wrote this Epistle, was not yet advanced in life, he might very well entertain the opinion that he should perhaps live to see that day.

16. Here we have a description of the solemn advent of Christ, expressed by images and types derived from the triumphal entry of an earthly king taking possession of a kingdom with an armed force. (Koppe.) There is here supposed to be an allusion to Joshua at Jericho, and to the sounding of the trumpets there.

Κύριος ἐν κελεύσματι, ἐν φωνῇ ἀρχαγγέλου, καὶ ἐν σάλπιγγι Θεοῦ καταβήσεται ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ· καὶ οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χριστῷ 17 ἀναστήσονται πρῶτον· [n] ἔπειτα ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περι- n John 12. 26.
λειπόμενοι, ἅμα σὺν αὐτοῖς ἁρπαγησόμεθα ἐν νεφέλαις εἰς & 14. 3. & 17. 24. Acts 1. 9. ἀπάντησιν τοῦ Κυρίου εἰς ἀέρα· καὶ οὕτω πάντοτε σὺν Κυ- Rev. 11. 12.
18 ρίῳ ἐσόμεθα. Ὥστε παρακαλεῖτε ἀλλήλους ἐν τοῖς λόγοις a Matt. 24. 3. 36.
τούτοις. b Matt. 24. 42, 43.
1 V. [a] Περὶ δὲ τῶν χρόνων καὶ τῶν καιρῶν, ἀδελφοὶ, οὐ Mark 13. 34. Luke 21. 34.
2 χρείαν ἔχετε ὑμῖν γράφεσθαι· [b] αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἀκριβῶς οἴδατε, 2 Pet. 3. 10. Rev. 3. 3. & 16. 15.
ὅτι ἡ ἡμέρα Κυρίου, ὡς κλέπτης ἐν νυκτὶ, οὕτως ἔρχεται. c Luke 21. 34, 35.
3 [c] ὅταν γὰρ λέγωσιν· "Εἰρήνη καὶ ἀσφάλεια," τότε αἰφνίδιος Is. 13. 6—9. Jer. 13. 21. αὐτοῖς ἐφίσταται ὄλεθρος, ὥσπερ ἡ ὠδὶν τῇ ἐν γαστρὶ ἐχούσῃ· d Eph. 5. 8. e Luke 16. 8. Rom. 13. 12.
4 καὶ οὐ μὴ ἐκφύγωσιν. [d] Ὑμεῖς δὲ, ἀδελφοὶ, οὐκ ἐστὲ ἐν Eph. 5. 8. f Matt. 24. 42. & 25. 13.
5 σκότει, ἵνα ἡ ἡμέρα ὑμᾶς, ὡς κλέπτης, καταλάβῃ. [e] πάντες Luke 21. 34, 36.
γὰρ ὑμεῖς υἱοὶ φωτός ἐστε καὶ υἱοὶ ἡμέρας· οὐκ ἐσμὲν νυκτὸς, Rom. 13. 11, 12.
6 οὐδὲ σκότους. [f] Ἄρα οὖν μὴ καθεύδωμεν ὡς [καὶ] οἱ λοιποὶ, 1 Cor. 15. 34. Eph. 5. 14. 1 Pet. 5. 8.

— ἐν κελεύσματι—Θεοῦ.] Koppe and Rosenmuller take this as standing for ἐν κελεύσματι διὰ φωνῆς ἀρχαγγέλου καὶ σάλπ. Θ. The word κέλευσμα properly signifies the shout with which soldiers or sailors rushed to battle, or labourers exerted themselves in any common effort of strength; see my Note on Thucyd. ii. 92, ἀφ' ἑνὸς κελ. ἐμβοήσαντες. How far this may be referred to figure it were difficult to say, and presumptuous to pronounce; see Note on 1 Cor. xvi. 51. Certain it is, that by οἱ νεκροὶ ἐν Χρ. are meant those who have died in the faith and fear of Christ; for the best Commentators are agreed, that nothing is said, either here or at 1 Cor. xv., of the wicked; since the time when they should rise could be of no moment to their friends, inasmuch as they would rise only to perdition. The πρῶτον has reference to the whole clause, not merely to οἱ νεκροί. It is meant that the resurrection of the dead shall take place first, and then the glorification, by incorruptibility, of the living, who shall be caught up, together with them, into the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. This particular, the being caught up and introduced to the Lord in the air is, as Theophylact observes, a token of honour, as opposed to the state of the wicked, who shall await the Judge below.

17. ἐν νεφέλαις] for εἰς νεφ.; for so it is better to explain, than, with some, to render, 'on the clouds,' supposing an ellipsis of οἰχήσαντες. Εἰς ἀπάντ., for ἀπαντᾶν, as in Matt. xxv. 1. 6. Acts xxviii. 15. 1 Sam. ix. 14. Jerem. xli. 6, and sometimes in the later Classical writers. By this is denoted their being as it were introduced to the Lord, preparatory to their being for ever with him, implying participation in his kingdom and glory. See John xiv. 2, 3.

18. Having given a particular account of the thing in question, the Apostle draws the proper inference for which the whole was designed. (Chandler.)

— ὥστε] 'this being the case.' Λόγοις τούτοις, 'these assurances.'

V. 1. The Apostle here anticipates the further inquiry of curious persons; q. d. 'When shall these things be?' &c. (see Matt. xxiv. 3.) and (agreeably to the example of his Lord, see Luke xiii. 23, 24) endeavours to turn their minds to something of greater importance, even the living such a life, as that they shall always be prepared for the advent of the Lord, however sudden and unexpected it might be; which, come when it might, would surprise the wicked world. Καιρῶν is more significant than χρόνων, denoting the exact time. Γράφεσθαι, for γράφειν (scil. ἐμὲ), as supra iv. 9: though the passive sense may be retained by supposing an ellipsis of τὶ, thus: 'There is no need that any thing be written [to you].'

2. οἴδατε, &c.] Alluding to the saying of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 38. Some, indeed, as Hammond and Schoettgen, understand this figuratively of the destruction of Jerusalem; but the context here will surely not permit us to understand it in any other than the literal sense, of the day of judgment; though it may (as Chrysostom and Bp. Jebb suggest) admit of being transferred, in an under sense, to the period of each Christian's death, which is to him the same as the day of judgment.

3—5. For greater impressiveness, the Apostle now adverts to the effect which the resurrection will have on the unprepared and wicked; and passing from the day of the Lord to the general notion of day, he, at ver. 4, graphically represents the character of the careless and disobedient, and of the watchful and obedient respectively, under the usual figures of light and darkness; and then, at ver. 6, he, on this figure, founds the earnest exhortation, 'Let us, then, as children of the day, not act like children of the night and of darkness, by sleeping at our post; much less by engaging in other pursuits usually thought appropriate to the night, as drunkenness; but be watchful and sober.' Such is the full sense, which, however, is expressed in an inartificial, but most forcible, manner.

ἀλλὰ γρηγορῶμεν καὶ νήφωμεν· [g] οἱ γὰρ καθεύδοντες, 7 νυκτὸς καθεύδουσι· καὶ οἱ μεθυσκόμενοι, νυκτὸς μεθύουσιν· [h] ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἡμέρας ὄντες, νήφωμεν, ἐνδυσάμενοι θώρακα 8 πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ περικεφαλαίαν ἐλπίδα σωτηρίας.
[i] Ὅτι οὐκ ἔθετο ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς εἰς ὀργὴν, ἀλλ' εἰς περιποίησιν 9 σωτηρίας διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [k] τοῦ 10 ἀποθανόντος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ἵνα, εἴτε γρηγορῶμεν εἴτε καθεύδω-μεν, ἅμα σὺν αὐτῷ ζήσωμεν. Διὸ παρακαλεῖτε ἀλλήλους, 11 καὶ οἰκοδομεῖτε εἷς τὸν ἕνα, καθὼς καὶ ποιεῖτε.
[l] Ἐρωτῶμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, εἰδέναι τοὺς κοπιῶντας ἐν 12 ὑμῖν, καὶ προϊσταμένους ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίῳ, καὶ νουθετοῦντας

g Rom. 13. 13.
h Isa. 59. 17. Rom. 13. 12. Eph. 6. 14, &c. i Rom. 9. 22. 1 Pet. 2. 8.
k Rom. 14. 8, 9. 2 Cor. 5. 15.
l Rom. 15. 27. 1 Cor. 9. 11. & 16. 18. Gal. 6. 6. Phil. 2. 29. 1 Tim. 5. 17. Heb. 13. 7, 17.

7. νυκτὸς μεθύουσιν.] For the being drunken in the day-time was accounted the greatest disgrace; see 2 Pet. ii. 13, and Note. To this purpose Commentators have adduced several passages from ancient writers, to which might have been added others, from Athen. pp. 279. 433, and Hor. Sat. i. 4. 51, 'Ebrius et, magnum quod dedecus, ambulet ante Noctem cum facibus.'

8. The admonition to watchfulness suggested, it seems, to the Apostle a figurative comparison of the Christian with the soldier at his post on guard; and accordingly the various virtues and graces, with which he is to work out his salvation, are compared to the various arms of a soldier; as at Eph. vi. 13—17, where see the Note.

— θώρακα πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης.] Corresponding to the phrase θώρακα τῆς δικαιοσύνης at Eph. vi. 14. The phrase ἐλπὶς σωτηρίας is found also in Josephus, Ant. xvi. 8. 2.

9. ὅτι οὐκ ἔθετο ἡμᾶς, &c.] Meaning, 'The design of God in sending his Son into the world was not to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He did not reveal the Gospel unto mankind, that they might sin with the greater aggravation, and so be the more severely punished; but the motive was love, and the design was mercy. And he hath appointed none to wrath, but such as wilfully and obstinately refuse his gracious offers, and persist in vice and wickedness.' (Benson.)

— εἰς περιποίησιν] for εἰς τὸ περιποιεῖσθαι, and to be accommodated to ὀργήν. So also in 2 Thess. ii. 14. Heb. x. 39.

10. εἴτε γρηγ. εἴτε καθευδ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is put for εἴτε ζῶμεν εἴτε ἀποθάνωμεν; see Benson. It is meant, that whether we be alive or dead at that day, it matters not; the living with Christ, or enjoying eternal happiness with him (see supra iv. 17), shall be equally our portion.

11. διὸ, &c.] 'Such being the case.' Here we have subjoined the inference from the foregoing, and that by way of exhortation. Expositors are not agreed whether παρακ. should be interpreted comfort, or exhort. The term is susceptible of either sense; but the latter is more suitable to the context here, as the former is to the context in the parallel passage at iv. 18. And though it has been urged that there is here a repetition, per epanalepsin, of what was said there, yet that has by no means been proved. It is better, therefore, with the most eminent Commentators in general, to explain παρακαλεῖτε 'exhort each other to the duties of watchfulness, sobriety, perseverance in the faith, and a holy life.' Yet there is no reason why we should not, with Rosenmuller, Baumgarten, Koppe, and Schott, include the idea of comforting as accessory to exhorting. The effect of either is contained in the term following, οἰκοδομεῖτε.

— οἰκοδομεῖτε.] Meaning (by an architectural metaphor, such as that at 1 Cor. viii. 1), 'build up and help forward each other in your Christian course;' strive to perfect each other's graces, to promote in one another the practice of every Christian virtue. (Chandler.) Εἷς τὸν ἕνα. Literally, 'one by the other,' for ἀλλήλους: a very rare idiom in the Classical writers; though an example is adduced by Wetstein from Dionys. Hal.

— καθὼς καὶ ποιεῖτε.] This praise, mixed with the exhortation, is delicately thrown in, to make the latter more effectual. Of this an example occurs in Aristid. t. i. 232. 11, σχεδὸν δὲ οὐδὲν ἄλλο, ἢ ὃ ποιεῖτε, παρήνεσα. See also 2 Thess. iii. 1, ἵνα ὁ λόγος τοῦ Κ. τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζηται, καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

12—14. Having exhorted them to comfort and edify one another, the Apostle adds such other exhortations as he found, from Timothy, were necessary. Lest they should imagine they had no occasion for religious teachers, he enjoins them to show all due respect to their spiritual pastors and masters; and to those he hints their reciprocal duties to their people. (Grotius and Benson.) Εἰδέναι here includes the notions of respect and care, shown especially in making due provision for their comfortable sustenance. This force of the term is found also in Gen. xxxix. 6, and Prov. xxvii. 23, where the Hebrew is ידע.

From this passage some learned Commentators have inferred the existence then at Thessalonica of the three distinct orders of the ministry. Koppe, however, maintains that the terms νουθετ. and προϊστάμενοι are not meant of various kinds of Presbyters (some Bishops, and others Teachers, see Acts xx. 17, compared with 28. Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 2, seqq.), but of the same persons comprehended, in this verse, under the more general term κοπιῶντες. Κοπ. is, indeed, a very general term to denote, 'labouring in the promulgation of the Gospel;' as Rom. xvi. 6. 12. 1 Cor. xv. 10. xvi. 16. Gal. iv. 11. Phil. ii. 16. Col. i. 29. 1 Tim. iv. 10. v. 17. But, upon the whole, I see not how we can come to any

13 ὑμᾶς, καὶ ἡγεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ ἐν ἀγάπῃ διὰ 14 τὸ ἔργον αὐτῶν. Εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς. [m] Παρακαλοῦμεν δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί· νουθετεῖτε τοὺς ἀτάκτους, παραμυθεῖσθε τοὺς ὀλιγοψύχους, ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν, μακροθυμεῖτε 15 πρὸς πάντας. [n] Ὁρᾶτε μή τις κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ τινὶ ἀποδῷ· ἀλλὰ πάντοτε τὸ ἀγαθὸν διώκετε, [καὶ] εἰς ἀλλήλους καὶ εἰς 16,17 πάντας. [o] Πάντοτε χαίρετε. [p] ἀδιαλείπτως προσεύχεσθε.
18 [q] Ἐν παντὶ εὐχαριστεῖτε· τοῦτο γὰρ θέλημα Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ m Rom. 14. 1. Gal. 6. 1, 2. 2 Thess. 3. 6, 11, 12. n Lev. 19. 18. Prov. 17. 13. & 20. 22. & 24. 29. Matt. 5. 39. Rom. 12. 17. 1 Cor. 6. 7. Gal. 6. 10. 1 Pet. 3. 9.

o Rom. 12. 12. Phil. 4. 4 p Eccl. 18. 22. Luke 18. 1. Rom. 12. 12. Eph. 6. 18. Col. 4. 2. q Eph. 5. 20.

determinate opinion on the nature of the ecclesiastical government of the Thessalonian Church, for want of more exact information than we possess. Yet it seems probable that by κοπιῶντες are denoted those who occupied the ordinary offices of teaching; and by προϊστάμενοι the rulers of the church; and that νουθετοῦντες is a general term applicable to both. See Note on Rom. xii. 7, 8.

13. ἡγεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς ὑπερεκπ.] An expression corresponding to the Classical one περὶ πλείστου ἡγεῖσθαι or ποιεῖσθαι, 'to make very much of, to hold in the highest honour.' Render, 'account them as very highly deserving of love and honour.' In ἐν ἀγάπῃ we have superadded to the idea of honouring that of loving. Τὸ ἔργον α. Meaning, either the work of instruction, or government, or both. The exhortation following, εἰρηνεύετε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, has especial reference to the preservation of peace between the rulers and the people. See Eph. iv. 3.

14. ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί.] Meaning, as the best Expositors are agreed, those spiritual pastors and masters just before mentioned, and now apostrophized. To these the terms νουθ. and παραμ. are especially suitable; and ἀντέχ. may very well respect the Deacons. Ἀτάκτους is properly a military term, but is of general application, and denotes insubordinate. Ὀλιγοψύχους, faint-hearted (which is a word no where else found), is for μικροψύχ., a term of frequent occurrence in the Sept., where it signifies those who are labouring under such trouble that their heart sinks within them. The expression may be supposed to denote those who are despairing of working out their salvation. So Scott explains it, 'timorous, discouraged through temptation, and harassed by perplexities, fears, and misapprehensions.' Ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθ. This must, from the context, mean, 'support the weak [in faith];' a sense of ἀσθ. occurring in Rom. xiv. 1, τὸν ἀσθ. ἐν πίστει. It denotes those who are weak in their notions of religious liberty. Μακροθ., 'be long-suffering and indulgent.' Πάντας. Meaning, all persons of whatever disposition. There is reason to suppose the above admonitions intended, not for ministers only, but for all. The Apostle here, as at Rom. xiv., meant to give a general admonition, namely (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson, Serm. on Rom. xv. 5), 'that the strong should be more compassionate to the weak, and the weak more charitable to the strong; both weak and strong more patient and moderate, and more respective either of other in all brotherly mutual condescensions.'

15. ὁρᾶτε μή τις κακὸν, &c.] This admonition (manifestly intended for all, both rulers and people) is founded on that of Christ, Matt. v. 39. 44, where see Note. Διώκετε. Not follow, but earnestly endeavour to follow; as Rom. ix. 30. xii. 13. xiv. 19. 1 Cor. xiv. 1. Phil. iii. 12. Τὸ ἀγαθὸν, as being in opposition to κακὸν, must denote benevolence and beneficence.

— εἰς πάντας.] Namely, not towards some, but all men. So at 2 Tim. ii. 24, we are enjoined to 'be gentle [not unto some, but] unto all men;' and, Tit. iii. 2, to 'show all meekness to all men.'

16. πάντοτε χαίρετε.] It is strange that some eminent Commentators should have explained this as equivalent to a sort of valediction, 'May you always be prosperous and happy!' Closely connected as the words are with those which follow, they must surely contain an admonition, not, indeed, as Dr. Burton's version expresses, to cheerfulness, but, as Expositors in general are agreed, to joy in the Lord (which latter words, indeed, are found added in some MSS., and have place in the parallel passages at Phil. iii. 1. iv. 4); namely, that devout cheerfulness under all circumstances, prosperous or adverse, which results from a firm dependence on God's providence, a just appreciation of our Christian privileges, and the greatness of that hope to which we are raised by the Gospel promises; and thus are enabled (in the words of Rom. v. 2) to 'rejoice in hope of the glory of God.'

17. Prayer is next enjoined, as the best means of maintaining this joy in the Lord. See the excellent annotation of Calvin on vv. 16, 17.

— ἀδιαλείπτως.] Meaning, unintermittingly, i. e. never ceasing to pray both at all stated times for public or family prayer, and at all such seasons as are suitable, or required by circumstances, for private devotion; and at all times carefully maintaining a prayerful frame of mind. See Note on Luke ii. 37. xviii. 1. Rom. viii. 1; and compare Eph. vi. 18. Col. i. 9.

18. ἐν παντὶ εὐχαριστεῖτε.] Supply χρόνῳ, τόπῳ, or πράγματι. Comp. Eph. v. 20. This injunction is, as Calvin observes, subjoined to the foregoing 'quasi temperamentum, ut quæ desunt expetentes, non tamen desiramus gratias agere.' The connexion between these three rules of a Christian's life are well pointed out by Calvin, as also by Bp. Beveridge thus: 'As (says he) we are to rejoice in the Lord alway, so, in order thereto, we must pray unto him without ceasing, that being the means whereby to keep our minds always fixed upon him, and so in a right frame and disposition to rejoice always in him; but for that purpose, as we pray unto him for what we want, we must likewise give him thanks for what we have; and therefore it is added, In every thing

Ἰησοῦ εἰς ὑμᾶς. [r] Τὸ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβέννυτε· προφητείας 19,20
μὴ ἐξουθενεῖτε. [s] Πάντα δοκιμάζετε, τὸ καλὸν κατέχετε· 21 [t] ἀπὸ παντὸς εἴδους πονηροῦ ἀπέχεσθε. [u] Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Θεὸς 22,23 τῆς εἰρήνης ἁγιάσαι ὑμᾶς ὁλοτελεῖς· καὶ ὁλόκληρον ὑμῶν τὸ r Eph. 4. 30. 2 Tim. 1. 6. 1 Cor. 14. 1, 39.

s 1 Cor. 2. 11, 15. 1 John 4. 1. t Phil. 4. 8.
u Rom. 15. 33. supra 3. 13. 1 Cor. 1. 8. & 6. 20.

give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ concerning you.'

— τοῦτο γὰρ θέλημα, &c.] In this clause (serving to enforce the above exhortation) the τοῦτο may be referred to the conjoint injunction to unceasing prayer and continual thanksgiving. The sense is, 'For this is the will of God signified by Jesus Christ respecting you: this is what God is pleased to appoint by Jesus Christ to be performed by you.' See more in Chandler.

19. τὸ Πνεῦμα μὴ σβ.] The ancient Expositors in general, and the most eminent modern ones, regard τὸ Πν. as relating solely to the supernatural Spiritual gifts, which, that some of the Thessalonians possessed, is plain from the verse following. They are not, however, agreed whether by σβέννυτε is meant the quenching them in others (by discouraging and disallowing them) or in themselves; namely, by neglect or abuse, or by evil living. Both may be intended, but chiefly the latter. While, however, understanding principally the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit, surely we must include his ordinary sanctifying influences and graces, given to every one to profit withal; and thus the admonition will be a kindred one to that at Eph. iv. 30, μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. At 2 Tim. i. 6, ἀναζωπυρεῖν τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, both these senses are found, and perhaps the second is predominant.

20. προφ. μὴ ἐξουθ.] As the foregoing admonition was not to quench the Spirit in themselves, so this, I apprehend, is not to quench, i. e. repress it, by disallowing and discouraging the exhibition of it in others. Here προφητεία is, I conceive, used in the very same sense as in the Chapters on the Spiritual gifts, in 1 Cor. xii. and xiv. (see Note on xii. 10), which, indeed, supply the best comment on the present passage. See also Phil. i. 1—16. Ephes. iv. 1—11. Rom. xii. 3—6. Compare 1 John iv. 1. By his using the plural, it is plain that St. Paul is here speaking of χαρίσματα προφητείας.

21. πάντα δοκιμάζετε — κατέχετε.] In δοκιμάζετε we have a metaphor taken either from the assaying of metals, or rather from the trying of money, by ringing or the touchstone. To this there seems an allusion in the expression following, κατέχετε, which refers to the contrary of receiving, namely, the rejection of bad money when proffered. Here two remarkable diversities of reading exist. Several MSS. have πάντα δὲ δοκιμ.; others, πάντα δοκιμάζοντες: of which the former has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, and Scholz; but I see no reason to adopt either. Both appear to be mere marginal glosses, intended to indicate the connexion of these words with the preceding, and make the sense plainer, and accordingly deserve no attention, except as serving to show how the words were understood in the earliest ages.

From the context, and the parallel passage of 1 John iv. 1, it is plain that the Apostle meant this injunction only of the χαρίσματα προφητείας (indeed the πάντα seems to refer to χαρίσματα), intending, however, I apprehend, also the doctrines brought forward by the ὁ πνευματικός; for though only the προφητεία be expressed, yet all the spiritual gifts which ministered instruction are certainly to be understood. Compare with this the injunction to the searching of spirits, διακρίσεις τῶν πνευμάτων, 1 Cor. xii. 10. xiv. 29. Considering that the admonition in question regards the doctrines of such scriptural persons, as well as the reality of their gifts, it may very well admit of being applied, mutatis mutandis, to the endowments and doctrines of the teachers and preachers of the Gospel in every age. This δοκιμασία is shown by Whitby and Benson to be indispensable to those on whom it is obligatory to 'hold fast that which is good;' and that the ancient Fathers allowed this trial to their hearers, is certain from the citations adduced by Whitby. Wetstein compares a passage of Aristotle, where, speaking of Reason, he says, ᾧ δοκιμάζοντες τὸ καλὸν αἱροῦνται: to which he might have added another of Marc. Anton. iii. 6, ἁπλῶς καὶ ἐλευθερίως ἑλοῦ τὸ κρεῖττον, καὶ τούτου ἀντέχεσθε.

22. ἀπὸ παντὸς εἴδους πον. ἀπ.] Expositors are not agreed whether εἴδους should be rendered appearance, or kind, i. e. sort. The former interpretation has been adopted by most modern Commentators, including Bp. Middleton (on account of the want of the Article); the latter by the ancient ones generally, and some eminent earlier moderns (as Hammond, Le Clerc, Buxtorf, Wetstein, and Benson), and, after them, by almost all recent Commentators, including Koppe, Schleusner, Pelt, and Schott. And certainly the sense is one very agreeable to the usus loquendi. So Josephus, Ant. x. 3. 1, we have: πᾶν εἶδος πονηρίας ἐπιδειξάμενος ἐν τῷ τρόπῳ, καὶ μηδὲν ἀσεβὲς παραλιπών. The sentiment will thus be parallel to that at Phil. iv. 8, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ—εὔφημα, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε: and that the expression was so understood by St. Polycarp, appears from an imitation of the present passage in his Epistle to the Philippians, c. ix. 'Keep yourselves from all evil; for he that in these things cannot govern himself, how shall he be able to prescribe them to another?' The connexion, however, of these words with the preceding is rather in favour of the other interpretation. Render (agreeably to the Vulgate and Bengel), 'from every evil appearance,' which may, in a popular sense, mean 'from every thing which has the appearance of being evil;' of course including the latter sense.

23. To admonition the Apostle now subjoins prayer to God, as well knowing that his grace alone could produce in them the will and the power to do all those things to which he had exhorted them.

— ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης.] A highly significant expression, in which the word peace bears a sense far beyond its acceptation in ordinary language, as used of peaceable persons; meaning 'the auπνεῦμα, καὶ ἡ ψυχὴ, καὶ τὸ σῶμα ἀμέμπτως ἐν τῇ παρουσίᾳ 24 τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τηρηθείη. [x] Πιστὸς ὁ x 1 Cor. 1. 9. & 10. 13. καλῶν ὑμᾶς, ὃς καὶ ποιήσει. 2 Cor. 1. 18. Heb. 10. 23.

25,26 Ἀδελφοὶ, προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν. [y] Ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς y Rom. 16. 16.
27 ἀδελφοὺς πάντας ἐν φιλήματι ἁγίῳ. [z] Ὁρκίζω ὑμᾶς τὸν 1 Cor. 16. 20. 2 Cor. 13. 12.
Κύριον, ἀναγνωσθῆναι τὴν ἐπιστολὴν πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις 1 Pet. 5. 14. z Col. 4. 16.
28 ἀδελφοῖς. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν.

thor of and enjoiner to peace' (see 1 Cor. xiv. 33), and the author of all peace to believers, both from within and from without; God being considered as, in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and therefore becoming their peace. So speaking, the Apostle may be supposed to allude to that peace, the cultivation of which he had enjoined at ver. 13, and the violation of which he had contemplated in what he said of the Spiritual gifts.

— ἁγιάσαι.] On the full force of this term, see Notes on John xvii. 17 and 1 Cor. vi. 11. Ὁλοτελεῖς, for ὁλοτελῶς. Ὁλόκληρον. An expression nearly synonymous with ὅλον. By the several terms τὸ πνεῦμα, ἡ ψυχὴ, and τὸ σῶμα, the Apostle means to denote, by a periphrasis, the whole man, with all his faculties and powers both bodily and mental; indeed, this threefold division of man is, as Chandler observes, agreeable to the sentiments of the ancients, who considered him as a being compounded of the mind or spirit, the principle of rational life; of the ψυχὴ, the principle of the sensitive life; and of the body, the mere animal, brutal, or vegetative part. Now all these the Apostle prays may be preserved blameless to the coming of Christ; the spirit, by being kept pure from all ignorance, false principles, and bad affections, and adorned with all the sacred dispositions of piety and virtue; the soul, by being purified from all corrupt imaginations, passions, and evil habits; and the body, by being kept unpolluted with any criminal actions, by the subjection of all its appetites; in short, being habitually employed in all the good works of a Christian obedience. See more in Hyperius, Whitby, and Benson.

24. To prayer the Apostle now subjoins a most comfortable assurance; namely, that God will do what he has promised, and thus act agreeably to the character of a faithful Creator. Compare 2 Thess. iii. 3 and Heb. x. 23. With vv. 24—26 compare 1 Cor. i. 9. Rom. xv. 31. xvi. 16.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΘΕΣΣΑΛΟΝΙΚΕΙΣ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

---

a 1 Thess. 1. 1. I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ καὶ Σιλουανὸς καὶ Τιμόθεος τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ 1 Θεσσαλονικέων ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ Χρι-b 1 Cor. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 2. στῷ· [b] χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ 2 Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
c Eph. 1. 15. Phil. 1. 3. Col. 1. 3. 1 Thess. 1. 2. [c] Εὐχαριστεῖν ὀφείλομεν τῷ Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, 3 ἀδελφοὶ, καθὼς ἄξιόν ἐστιν, ὅτι ὑπεραυξάνει ἡ πίστις ὑμῶν, d 2 Cor. 7. 14. & 9. 2. 1 Thess. 2. 19. καὶ πλεονάζει ἡ ἀγάπη ἑνὸς ἑκάστου πάντων ὑμῶν εἰς ἀλλήλους· [d] ὥστε ἡμᾶς αὐτοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν καυχᾶσθαι ἐν ταῖς 4

THIS second Epistle was evidently written not long after the first (probably as soon after sending the first, as the Apostle had had time to learn the situation of the Church of Thessalonica), and, it would seem, principally for the purpose of correcting a mistake which had arisen from the misunderstanding of certain expressions therein contained, as if the day of judgment were to be in that age: an error which, if not corrected, might have proved very dangerous, and which had already occasioned much evil, by leading some persons to neglect the business of life. This the Apostle does by showing that the day of judgment will not so speedily arrive as they imagined, but that, before it, an awful apostasy would prevail. The Apostle, moreover, takes the opportunity, to reprove the disorderly conduct in some which had been occasioned by the opinion in question, and to earnestly exhort them to the discharge of their Christian duties.

The Epistle consists of three divisions (corresponding to the three Chapters), of which the 1st is consolatory, the 2d partly prophetic and partly didactic, the 3d hortatory and valedictory.

I. 1, 2. On these verses see 1 Thess. i. 1, sq.

3—12. After this introduction the Apostle, as Hyperius observes, 'begins by the language of praise to exhort them to persevere in the faith.' He commends them for the stedfastness of their faith, and for their patience under persecution, comforting them with the assurance, that when Christ cometh to judgment, they would be rewarded, and their persecutors punished.

3. εὐχαριστεῖν, &c.] Compare Rom. i 8. 1 Cor. iv. 5. Phil. i. 3, 4. 'A mode of commendation,' as Chandler well observes, 'the most engaging and effectual that could have been adopted, and the properest way imaginable to establish and strengthen them.'

The we here and throughout the Epistle is, as the best Expositors are agreed, to be understood of St. Paul only. Εὐχαριστεῖν ὀφείλομεν is taken by Chandler and Koppe as a familiar mode of expression for αἰτίαν ἔχω τοῦ εὐχ., 'we have reason to,' &c.; but this lowers the sense: there being here, as Hyperius remarks, an emphasis in ὀφείλομεν, intimating that the thing is a matter of right, and that by not doing it we should be guilty of ingratitude. See also Bengel.

— καθὼς ἄξιόν ἐστιν.] The expression is, as often, for καθῆκον or δίκαιον, 'par est,' 'it is fit or proper.' This is added, as Theophylact observes, in order to prevent any undue self-complacency from the performance of such an act of thanksgiving, since in this we are doing no more than our duty (there being here an ellipsis of μόνον). So answering to the injunction of our Lord, Luke xvii. 10, λέγετε ὅτι δοῦλοι ἀχρεῖοί ἐσμεν· ὅτι ὃ ὠφείλομεν ποιῆσαι (supply μόνον), πεποιήκαμεν. See also Hyperius.

— ἡ ἀγάπη ἑνὸς ἑκ., &c.] Including all those kind offices by which Christians might assist their fellow Christians, and thereby mutually sweeten the bitterness of that cup of sorrow, which their profession of a new religion, every where spoken against, would be sure to expose them to.

4. ὥστε—Θεοῦ.] Render, 'Insomuch that we ourselves are proud (or, may boast) of you among ἐκκλησίαις τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑπομονῆς ὑμῶν καὶ πίστεως, ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς διωγμοῖς ὑμῶν καὶ ταῖς θλίψεσιν αἷς ἀνέχεσθε· 5 [e] ἔνδειγμα τῆς δικαίας κρίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ· εἰς τὸ καταξιω- e Phil. 1. 28. 1 Thess. 2. 14.

θῆναι ὑμᾶς τῆς βασιλείας τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὑπὲρ ἧς καὶ πάσχετε.
6 [f] εἴπερ δίκαιον παρὰ Θεῷ ἀνταποδοῦναι τοῖς θλίβουσιν ὑμᾶς f Rev. 6. 10.
7 θλῖψιν· καὶ ὑμῖν τοῖς θλιβομένοις ἄνεσιν μεθ' ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ μετ' ἀγγέλων the churches of God, on account of,' &c. Ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. e. inter cæteras eccl. Καυχ. in this sense occurs in 2 Cor. xii. 5, and often. The ἐν is equivalent to the Hebr. ב, de; as in Gal. iv. 20, ἀποροῦμαι ἐν ὑμῖν, and i. 24, ἐδόξαζον ἐν ἐμοὶ τὸν Θεόν· and sometimes in the Classical writers. In ὑπομονῆς καὶ πίστεως there may be, as most of the later Commentators say, an Hendiadys for ὑπομονὴ τῆς πίστεως, as ὑπομονὴ τῆς ἐλπίδος: but it is better (with the ancient and earlier modern Expositors) to keep the terms distinct, the latter being considered as productive of the former, since patience (as Calvin observes) 'is the fruit and testimony of faith.'

5. Having thus expressed the great satisfaction he felt in them on these accounts, the Apostle proceeds to set before them an argument the most powerful to confirm and establish their fidelity for the future.

— ἔνδειγμα τῆς δικαίας, &c.] These words evidently refer to the preceding; but the connexion is not very clear. If, with some, we take ἔνδειγμα as a Nominative, it will be necessary to supply ὅ ἐστιν; if, with others, as an Accusative, we may, with the Pesch. Syr., supply εἰς, which, indeed, is found in some MSS. Of these two methods the former is preferable. But still the reference will be the same; though what that exactly is has been disputed. Some refer the words to ὑπομονῆς, &c.: others, to διωγμοῖς and θλίψεσιν; q. d. 'Which [suffering of persecution and affliction] is a proof of the righteous judgment God will exercise at the last day.' For, as observes Calvin, 'if we hold it as a first principle of faith, that God is the just Judge of the whole world, and that it is his office to reward every one according to his works, it necessarily follows that the present ἀταξία is an evidence of a judgment not yet apparent.' Thus the Apostle will be understood to say, 'God suffers you to be afflicted with troubles, in order that, by apportioning to you salvation in heaven, and adjudging them to punishment, he may set forth a demonstration of the justice of his judgment.' Yet the sense thus arising, however excellent, would, so introduced, involve no little harshness; and accordingly it seems best, with Schott, to unite both references thus; 'Which [your patient endurance of afflictions] is an evidence of the righteous judgment of God [to both you and your persecutors]; to you, by apportioning to you the rewards of an everlasting kingdom, to those the punishment of their sins.' Compare Rom. ii. 5—8, and especially Phil. i. 28. With respect to εἰς τὸ καταξ., it is by some referred to ἔνδειγμα, or δικαίας; by others, to ἀνέχεσθε. The former method, however, is preferable. Indeed, the scope of the clause is to point out the happy consequences of thus bearing afflictions for the Gospel's sake with patience, even the being counted worthy of being made partakers of eternal bliss, as Luke xx. 35, seqq.

6—8. The Apostle now dwells at large on this sure expectation of a just judgment, introducing also a brief description thereof, as well for the purpose of speaking comfort and consolation to the persecuted Thessalonians, as also from thence to take occasion to rectify an erroneous notion of theirs concerning the day of judgment, &c.

This assurance, that God would manifest his righteousness in the proceedings of a future judgment, the Apostle further illustrates, by adding εἴπερ δίκαιον, &c., where the εἴπερ is (as at Rom. viii. 9) confirmatory, not dubitative, and may be rendered, 'siquidem,' 'inasmuch as.' Παρὰ Θεῷ, 'judice Deo.' Ἀνταπ. is a word of middle signification; but it has here more point than a term would have which had only a bad sense. Ἄνεσις is also opposed to θλίψις at 2 Cor. viii. 13. The word properly signifies relaxation or release from labour or affliction (and thus is nearly equivalent to ἀνάπαυσις); but it is also figuratively used to denote the felicity promised to God's faithful servants, which image is finely employed in a passage of singular beauty and pathos at Hebr. iv. 1—11.

7. ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τοῦ Κυρίου, &c.] So pointing out the time when this righteous judgment of God would take place. (Chandler.) Here ἀποκ. (on which see Luke xvii. 30) is nearly synonymous with φανέρωσις at Col. iii. 4, but is more significant than παρουσία. Δυνάμεως. Meaning (as Luther, Calvin, Hyperius, Grotius, Benson, Chandler, and Schott explain), 'by whom he exercises his power.' Ἐν πυρὶ φλογὸς may be construed either with the preceding words (as it is done by most recent Commentators), or with the following, as it is by the ancients and the moderns in general. In the former case it will denote the glory with which the Lord will be clothed at the last day; in the latter it will be symbolical of the awful punishment to be inflicted on the wicked, even 'the lake of fire,' mentioned in Revel. xx. 10. The words may, however, be said to belong to both. It is well observed by Hyperius, 'Amplificat justitiam Dei, præsertim à pœnis impiorum, quas per circumstantias exaggerat, et velut hypotyposi quadam ponit divinam potentiam ob oculos.'

8. For πυρὶ φλογὸς many MSS., Versions, and Fathers have φλογὶ πυρὸς, which has been edited by Lachmann and Scholz; but rashly; for the latter is evidently a mere marginal gloss, or critical emendation, derived from Acts vii. 30 (where see Note); Heb. i. 7; Rev. xix. 12; and some passages of the Sept. The textual phrase is the more difficult one, and somewhat rare, though it is found at Exod. iii. 2. Ecclus. viii. 10. It is equivalent to πῦρ φλέγον.

g Ps. 79. 6. Rom. 2. 8. 2 Pet. 3. 7. h Isa. 2. 19. i Acts 1. 11. 1 Thess. 1. 10. Rev. 1. 7. k 1 Thess. 1. 3. δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, [g] ἐν ‡ πυρὶ φλογὸς, διδόντος ἐκδίκησιν τοῖς 8 μὴ εἰδόσι Θεὸν, καὶ τοῖς μὴ ὑπακούουσι τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [h] οἵτινες δίκην τίσουσιν, ὄλε- 9 θρον αἰώνιον, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, [i] ὅταν ἔλθῃ ἐνδοξασθῆναι ἐν τοῖς ἁγί- 10 οις αὐτοῦ, καὶ θαυμασθῆναι ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς * πιστεύσασιν (ὅτι ἐπιστεύθη τὸ μαρτύριον ἡμῶν ἐφ᾽ ὑμᾶς) ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ.

[k] Εἰς ὃ καὶ προσευχόμεθα πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἵνα ὑμᾶς ἀξιώσῃ 11
τῆς κλήσεως ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν ἀγα— διδόντος ἐκδίκ.] An Hellenistic expression for ἀποδοῦναι ἐκδίκ., occurring in Numb. xxxi. 3; or ποιεῖσθαι ἐκδ. By τοῖς μὴ εἰδόσι Θεὸν are meant those who know not God at all, as heathens, or know him not aright, as Jews; implying that the means of this knowledge had been vouchsafed, but wilfully neglected. Τοῖς μὴ ὑπακούουσι, &c. Meaning, those who, after having known God aright, as revealed in the Gospel of Christ, had not fulfilled what that Gospel enjoins.

9. ὄλεθρον αἰών.] This is an exegetical apposition, showing the nature of the punishment,—even 'everlasting perdition.' Ὄλεθρον is for ἀπώλειαν, implying misery the most extreme (see Matt. vii. 13); even utter and irremediable destruction. The words ἀπὸ προσ. τοῦ Κυρίου, &c., depend upon δίκην τίσουσιν; and their sense must be decided by the force ascribed to the ἀπὸ, which many eminent Commentators, as Whitby, Benson, Macknight, and Pelt, suppose to be causal, explaining, 'punientur a Domino et a majestate ipsius vim suam exserente;' in allusion to Levit. x. 2: or ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου being taken, by Hebraism, for ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου; as at Acts iii. 19. And so it is said, Jerem. iv. 26, Sept., πᾶσαι αἱ πόλεις ἐκπεπυρισμέναι πυρὶ ἀπὸ προσώπου Κυρίου, καὶ ἀπὸ προσώπου ὀργῆς θυμοῦ αὐτοῦ ἠφανίσθησαν. Others, however (as Beza, Schmid, Michaelis, Koppe, Krause, and Schott), suppose the expressions to signify, 'far removed from,' 'excluded from,' (as in Luke xiii. 28,) with allusion to the words of Isaiah ii. 19, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ φόβου Κυρίου, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ (with which compare Gen. iv. 14). This latter view seems preferable; since (as Schott observes) 'the words so understood yield a more weighty sentiment; whereas the former would make what is here said the same sense, in other words, as had been already said at vv. 7, 8.' Finally, πρόσωπον τοῦ Κυρίου is not so much put for τοῦ Κυρίου, as it is a more energetic and graphic expression.

10. In ἐνδοξ. ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις αὐτοῦ and θαυμ. ἐν πᾶσι τοῖς πιστ. there is a sort of parallelism, of which the two members illustrate each other; and the effect of both is to set forth, in a more striking point of view, the terrors of that vengeance which shall overtake the ungodly, by the contrast of, what will be contemporaneous therewith, the glory and blessedness of God's faithful and elect servants; see Hyperius and Chandler. Ἐνδοξάζεσθαί τινι is a phrase almost peculiar to the Sept., signifying, as used of God, 'to obtain glory' either in the punishment of the wicked (see Exod. xiv. 4. Ezek. xxviii. 22), or in the delivering and saving of the righteous, God's faithful people. Thus we may express the sense (with Chandler) as follows: 'He shall be glorified and admired upon account of them, and by their means; his advancing them to the heavenly glory, and thus accomplishing the eternal purposes of his Father in their complete salvation, and giving them the most convincing evidences of his affection and fidelity to them, and care of them, shall cause him to be glorified (i. e. to appear truly glorious), and secure him the just acknowledgments, honours, and praises from heaven and earth.'

Instead of the common reading, πιστεύουσιν, many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions have πιστεύσασιν, which has been adopted by Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, Koppe, Vater, Lachmann, and Scholz; and with reason; since it is far more suitable to the context; for, as Schott observes, 'the subject here treated of is the time when the Lord shall show his majesty, by bestowing eternal felicity on his true worshippers, with reference to their past faith and obedience.'

— ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ.] The words are transposed, as in Rom. ii. 12, κριθήσονται· to which, after a parenthesis of three verses, corresponds ἐν ἡμέρᾳ at ver. 16. So here the words ὅτι—ὑμᾶς are parenthetical; and the sense seems to be, 'because our testimony among you (literally, apud, i. e. coram, vos) hath been believed by you.' Now the foregoing sentiment, which has respect to all believers, is in this parenthesis indirectly and mentally applied to the Thessalonians in particular. Thus the full sense is, 'And in you particularly this will be the case, because you have believed and obeyed the Gospel.'

11. εἰς ὃ, &c.] 'Wherefore, i. e. since there is such a glorious day of retribution, we do not cease to pray for you,' &c.

— ἵνα ὑμᾶς ἀξιώσῃ, &c.] The sense of these words depends upon that assigned to the term ἀξιώσῃ, which some interpret, 'would make you worthy, make you to be worthy;' equivalent to ἱκανώσαντι at Col. i. 12: a signification of the word occasionally found in the Classical writers, but rare in the New Test.; and whether it has place here is far from certain. Hence it is better, with many eminent Commentators and our English Versions, to render, 'may account you worthy of,' 'vouchsafe to bestow upon you.' So καταξιωθῆναι is used supra v. 5. Luke xx. 35, and perhaps Hebr. iii. 3; as also in the Classical writers. Κλήσεως is put, by metonymy, for the object of calling, the state of blessedness in the 12 θωσύνης καὶ ἔργον πίστεως ἐν δυνάμει· [1] ὅπως ἐνδοξασθῇ τὸ [1] 1 Pet. 1. 7. & 4. 14.

ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ [Χριστοῦ] ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ὑμεῖς ἐν αὐτῷ, κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
1 II. ἘΡΩΤΩΜΕΝ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, ὑπὲρ τῆς παρου-

Gospel, to which they were called; as Phil. iii. 14. Eph. i. 18. Heb. iii. 1. Comp. Eph. iv. 1.

— καὶ πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν εὐδοκίαν, &c.] These words, somewhat obscure, have been variously interpreted; and, indeed, admit of a different sense, according to the reference supposed in εὐδοκίαν ἀγαθωσύνης. If, as would seem most natural, we refer the expression (with the majority of Interpreters, ancient and modern) to the preceding subject of God, the sense will be, 'That He would powerfully and fully accomplish by you all the designs of his goodness, and consummate your work of faith, i.e. make your faith complete in those things which are its proper fruits, a holy obedience;' comp. James i. 4. And so Œcumenius explains: ἵνα πληρώσῃ πᾶσαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἀγαθὴν βουλὴν εἰς ἡμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς, remarking, βουλὴ δὲ καὶ εὐδοκία Θεοῦ, τὸ πάντας ἀνθρώπους σωθῆναι. So also the words are interpreted by Calvin, Hyperius, Benson, Koppe, Flatt, and Pelt. But though the above exposition be very agreeable to the usus loquendi of the words, and makes a very good sense, 'yet since,' as Schott observes, 'in the latter member of the sentence, καὶ ἔργον πίστεως, something is presented, which evidently belongs to the disposition and life of the Thessalonians, and closely coheres with the same verb πληρώσῃ, it would be harsh not to refer the antecedent formula also to the same,'—as has been done by many eminent Expositors,—of ancient ones, Chrysostom and Theophylact, and of moderns, by Grotius, Krause, Rosenmuller, Chandler, Wahl, Bretschneider, Noesselt, and Schott; though they are not agreed as to whether by ἀγαθωσύνη be meant beneficence, or moral goodness (probitatem) generally. The latter, however, is the more probable sense. And so Theophylact (after Chrysost.) well paraphrases: ἵνα πᾶσα ἀρέσκεια πληρωθῇ ἐν ὑμῖν, καὶ ἀγαθὸν διαπράττησθε, καὶ οὕτως ἦτε ὡς βούλεται ὁ Θεός: so considering εὐδοκίαν as equivalent to ἐν ᾗ εὐδοκεῖ ὁ Θεός.

It may, however, be referred, not to God, but to man; as Rom. x. 1, ἡ εὐδοκία τῆς ἐμῆς καρδίας. And so it is interpreted by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, 'omni voluntate rerum bonarum.' The meaning will then be, 'that God would fulfil every purpose of goodness in them;' i. e. would enable them to accomplish every good purpose or intention they had formed in their hearts, that they might adorn their Christian profession by an universal holy obedience. Thus the term εὐδοκία here will answer to the expression θέλειν at Phil. ii. 13. And ἀγαθωσύνη here will correspond to the ἀγαθωσύνη at Rom. xv. 14, μεστοί ἐστε ἀγαθωσύνης, and Eph. v. 9, ὁ καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος ἐν πάσῃ ἀγαθωσύνῃ καὶ δικαιοσύνῃ καὶ ἀληθείᾳ: also to the καρποὶ δικαιοσύνης in a very similar passage of Phil. i. 11, πεπληρωμένοι καρπῶν δικαιοσύνης τῶν διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, εἰς δόξαν καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ, where the words εἰς δόξαν καὶ ἔπαινον Θεοῦ may be compared with those of the present passage, ὅπως ἐνδοξασθῇ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

Whichever of the above modes of interpretation be adopted, ἐν δυνάμει will be for δυνατῶς; as Col. i. 29. Or it will have the sense, 'per potentiam suam;' as Acts iv. 7.

12. ὅπως ἐνδοξασθῇ τὸ ὄνομα—αὐτῷ.] This adverts to the effect of the preceding. In τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου we have not (as is commonly supposed) a pleonasm for the person, but a stronger expression, meant (as Bengel suggests) to ascribe as much as possible the honour to God in the work of man's salvation. Indeed, that it is not a mere pleonasm has been proved by Winer, Gr. Gr., New Test., p. 495, 4th Edition, and Wahl. Clav. In the present context it cannot, as Schott observes, but denote the dignity and majesty of Jesus Christ; compare Phil. ii. 9, 10, and Heb. i. 4. That the word has such a sense in the Classical writers is indisputable. Finally, the two expressions, ἐν ὑμῖν and ἐν αὐτῷ, should be rendered, 'through you,' and 'through him.' The glorification in question is, by Benson and most recent Commentators, referred, in the case of ἐν ὑμῖν, to this world; in the case of ἐν αὐτῷ, to the world to come. But surely the parallelism of members requires that what is ascribed to the latter should also be ascribed to the former. Hence it is better to suppose the reference, in both cases, to this world and the world to come. Nor can the sense be expressed with greater simplicity and exactness than in the paraphrase of Scott: 'In order that the name of Christ may be glorified in you, both by your present bold profession of his truth, and your holy conduct, and zealous labours to spread the Gospel; and, at length, in the sight of the whole world to all eternity; and that you may also be glorified in him, by perfectly bearing his image, enjoying his love, being owned as his brethren, and sharing all his honour, according to the infinite riches of the mercy and grace of God the Father, and the Lord Jesus.' See Notes on John xvii. 22—26.

By Christ's glorification being placed first we are, as Calvin says, reminded of the principle end of our whole life, even the glory of God, 'that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ,' 1 Pet. iv. 11. See also John xvii. 10, and Gal. i. 24; and also the Notes of Hyperius and Bp. Beveridge.

Now this great work so far exceeds all that could have been imagined, or the greatest human merit have claimed, that it is well said in the words following to be κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c. See Calvin and Hyperius.

II. The mention of the coming of the Lord enables the Apostle to introduce that of the end of the world, and thus to correct the pernicious error, which had arisen from a misunderstanding of his former words, as if it were just at hand.

1. ἐρωτῶμεν.] Meaning, 'we earnestly intreat a Jer. 29. 8. Matt. 24. 4. Eph. 5. 6. Col. 2. 18. 1 John 4. 1. b Matt. 24. 23. Eph. 5. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 1. 1 John 2. 18. Rev. 13. 11.

σίας τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ ἡμῶν ἐπισυναγω-γῆς ἐπ' αὐτὸν, [a] εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχέως σαλευθῆναι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ 2 τοῦ νοὸς, μήτε θροεῖσθαι, μήτε διὰ πνεύματος, μήτε διὰ λόγου, μήτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς, ὡς δι' ἡμῶν, ὡς ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ ‡ Χριστοῦ. [b] Μήτις ὑμᾶς ἐξαπατήσῃ κατὰ μη- 3 you.' The ὑπὲρ must be taken, as often, for περὶ, quod attinet ad, concerning, 'in relation to.'

Ἡμῶν ἐπισ. ἐπ' αὐτὸν, 'our gathering together unto him.' Ἐπισυναγωγὴ only occurs once elsewhere in the New Test., namely, at Hebr. x. 25, where it is used of a Christian congregation; but it is often used in the Apocrypha to denote the congregation of the Israelites. The term corresponds to ἀπάντησις at 1 Thess. iv. 17—27, and is illustrated by Matt. xxiv. 31, συνάξουσι τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς αὐτοῦ. It is well observed by Salmas., cited by Pott, that 'the coming of Christ, and our gathering together unto Him, are here united, as relatum et correlatum.' I have, with Schott and Scholz, pointed accordingly.

2. εἰς τὸ μὴ ταχ. σαλευθ.] This depends upon ἐρωτ. in the preceding verse; εἰς τὸ being for τοῦ. Σαλ. signifies 'to [suffer yourselves] to be troubled;' as Acts xvii. 13; compare James i. 6. So Arrian, cited by Wetstein, μὴ ἀποσαλεύεσθαι διὰ τῶν σοφισμάτων, where the metaphor is taken from a ship torn from its anchorage, and carried out to sea; which, indeed, seems to be what St. Paul had in mind in this passage, ἀπὸ τοῦ νοὸς ('from your mind') being for ἀπὸ τῆς ἀγκύρας τοῦ νοός. In what that consists, the passage of Hebrews best shows; namely, faith in the revelation of God by his Apostle. Θροεῖσθαι is exegetical of σαλευθ. So Matt. xxiv. 6, ὁρᾶτε μὴ θροεῖσθε. The full sense will thus be, 'that ye be not hastily shaken from the hitherto settled persuasion of your minds, nor be thrown into unreasonable perturbation.' The expression ταχέως (best rendered by our word hastily) carries with it an adjunct notion of rashness and precipitancy, as at 1 Tim. v. 22, compared with Wisd. xiv. 28. Thus, as Hyperius observes, it is very significant; 'for (adds he) to very hastily abandon any opinion is the part of ridiculous levity and folly.' Hence St. Paul rebukes the Galatians for such levity, by saying (Gal. i. 6), θαυμάζω ὅτι οὕτω ταχέως μετατίθεσθε ἀπὸ, &c.

The Apostle then adverts to the various modes by which they might be perverted; namely, διὰ πνεύματος, διὰ λόγου, and δι' ἐπιστολῆς, where the expression πνεύματος need not be explained (as it is by some) of a person pretending to speak by the Spirit, but may be simply understood of a pretended revelation of the Spirit. Διὰ λόγου is by the best Expositors, from Grotius to Pelt and Schott, united (per hypozeugma) with δι' ἐπιστ.; and thus ὡς δι' ἡμῶν will be referred to both; the former referring to something asserted to have been said by St. Paul, the latter to a letter purporting to have been written by him: and so the sense will be, 'neither by report, nor by letter as coming from us.' But I rather incline to the opinion of Chrysostom, Hyperius, and Calvin, that it denotes what is called at Col. ii. 4, πιθανολογία; meaning, as Hyperius expresses it, 'ratio adferendi argumenta probabilia quidem, et simulantia aliquam veritatis speciem, cæterum a veritate aliena;' alluding to the false teachers, who, as Calvin says, 'rationibus vel conjecturis, vel aliis coloribus insistunt, ut sua commenta persuadeant.'

3. ὅτι, ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία, &c.] There is plainly an omission, at the end of the sentence, of some words, to complete the sense, which, from the extreme length of the inserted portion, were left unsupplied. Now, from the ὡς ὅτι ἐνέστηκεν ἡ ἡμέρα τοῦ Χριστοῦ in the preceding verse, it is plain that the Apostle meant, 'that day will not arrive unless there be first an apostasy.'

On the purport of this most difficult portion, vv. 3—12, which treats of the Apostasy, and the Man of sin, very great difference of opinion exists. Yet the various interpretations of Commentators, numerous as they are, may be distributed into two classes; 1. That of those who suppose the words to have respect to what was speedily to happen, and, in a comparatively short time, did happen, as the destruction of Jerusalem, or the great apostasy which preceded that event, or the revolt of the Jews from the Romans, or the prevalence of the heresy of the Gnostics; not to mention other less probable opinions. 2. That of others who regard the words as having respect to something which was to happen long after; and of the interpretations of this class, there are again two divisions; 1. that of those who suppose the apostasy and the Man of Sin to have already appeared, in Popery, or Mahometanism; 2. of those who think they are yet to come.

The most general opinion is, that the passage has reference to the grand heresy of Popery, and the corruptions of the Romish Church (the Man of Sin being supposed to denote the Pope for the time being, i. e. the series of persons who have filled the Papal Chair), and that the apostasy here mentioned is to be understood of the abominable corruptions of the Romish Church. But though this view has been supported by the ability of Mede, Benson, Bp. Newton, Macknight, and others, and is much countenanced by several striking coincidences, which exist between the characters of the apostasy, as compared with those of Romanism, yet it is liable to such serious objections that I cannot venture to adopt it. As to that interpretation which refers the passage to Mahometanism, it may be considered utterly unfounded; for surely Mahometanism cannot be called apostasy from a religion with which it had never had any connexion. As to the interpretations comprised under class 1, they are all liable to insuperable objections, and deserve little attention. Before I venture to suggest where the truth probably lies, it may be proper to premise a few remarks on the nature of the passage, and to consider how far we are warranted in expecting to be enabled clearly to discern its full sense, and explain its complete application. And first, it is evident from the use of the Article with ἀποδένα τρόπον· ὅτι, ἐὰν μὴ ἔλθῃ ἡ ἀποστασία πρῶτον, καὶ ἀποκαλυφθῇ ὁ ἄνθρωπος τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, 4 [c] ὁ ἀντικείμενος καὶ ὑπεραιρόμενος ἐπὶ πάντα λεγόμενον Θεὸν [c Dan. 11. 36.]

ἢ σέβασμα· ὥστε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ [ὡς Θεὸν]

στασία in every one of the MSS., and the words οὐ μνημονεύετε, &c., of vv. 5, 6, that the Apostle does not here communicate any new declaration, but that he only repeats one before made; and equally clear is it, that when he bids them 'remember what he had told them,' it is therein implied, that something was then said, which is now omitted. The Apostle's words, too, are plainly meant for the Thessalonians only; and we may presume that, with the aid of what had been before said, they were enabled to sufficiently comprehend their meaning; but it does not follow that those words should be intelligible to such as are ignorant of what the Apostle had before said. Accordingly, much of obscurity must necessarily hang over the passage, and therefore some harshness may be tolerated in tracing the sense; wherein it is of no small consequence to ascertain what general points, and those unconnected with any particular hypothesis, admit of being regarded as fully established, and consequently fit to be made a foundation whereon to build whatever further may be propounded.

That the day of the Lord here spoken of is not the destruction of Jerusalem (as some maintain), but the day of Judgment, seems to be quite certain. It is scarcely less so that the Man of Sin of St. Paul has reference to the very same character as the Antichrist of St. John (1 Epist. iii. 18, and elsewhere), and who seems intended, though not called by that name, in the Apocalypse, ch. xiii. That the ancient Commentators universally considered the prophecy as one of distant completion, and not to be understood till its fulfilment, is alike certain, and deserving of serious attention. The ancient and the most eminent modern Expositors are, with reason, agreed that the prophecy has the same reference as that in Daniel viii. It is probable, then, that both St. John and St. Paul had in view the above portion, which manifestly relates to the coming of the Son of Man, and the events that should precede and accompany his advent.

But that their descriptions were, as some imagine, solely founded thereon, may be doubted. It would seem that something was founded thereon, and that the same highly figurative, symbolical, and allegorical mode of expression was adopted; but that many other characteristics of the Apostasy and Anti-Christ, or the Man of Sin, were added by St. Paul (whose words in this whole portion, vv. 3—12, may be regarded as a further illustration of what was obscurely and very figuratively spoken of by Daniel) under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, or from actual, though limited, revelation. Upon the whole, there seems good reason to suppose, with many eminent Expositors for the last half century, that what is here spoken of has not yet taken place; though there is much to warrant us in thinking that the mystery, or secret principle, of iniquity and apostasy is now actually working, and that, when Almighty Providence shall please that the τὸ κατέχον shall no longer impede the full working of the principle,—the apostasy (no doubt consisting of a series of acts, though marked by the Article as one whole) will rapidly display itself; especially when the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ, shall be revealed, or appear, the great Agent of the Evil One in the whole transaction. But to proceed to the verbal interpretation of the most important words and phrases contained in this interesting portion, as paving the way for a better comprehension of the whole,—the word ἀποστασία properly signifies an abandonment of connexion with any person; implying, in the case of a political ruler, rebellion. But it may be used of a thing as well as a person, and in the Scriptures it almost always means abandonment of a religion, by passing over to another, or to no religion; but it is very rarely, I think, used of corruption of a religion by persons still continuing in the profession of it. Accordingly, the term must here denote, as it is explained by many ancient Commentators, and, of modern ones, Calvin, 'a very general defection from God by Atheism.' Ἀποκαλυφθῇ denotes, not simply (what some explain it) appearance, but has an allusion to those secret workings of apostasy and sin, which should at various times precede the final public and general one. Schott observes, 'that St. Paul speaks of the apostasy and impiety as then latent, but hereafter to openly appear, and have its extremest measure at the appearance of the Man of Sin.' In the expression ὁ ἄνθρ. τῆς ἁμαρτίας we may (with the ancient, and some eminent modern Expositors) trace a parallelism of Satan with Christ; q. d. 'As the Saviour, clothed in the human nature, appeared at the time decreed by God and Christ, so will the Power of Hell, introduced in the person of a man, appear, when the apostasy shall have become so ripe as to require his agency.' He is here called ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, as Judas is at John xvii. 12.

4. ὁ ἀντικείμενος—σέβασμα.] In these words the Apostle had doubtless in mind Dan. xi. 36. 'The ἀντ. and ὑπεραιρ. are (as Pelt observes) to be conjoined in one idea, denoting the exalting himself over, and opposing himself to God, and consequently putting down all worship of the Deity, in whatever form, claiming to himself that adoration which is due to the Deity alone, so as to be the only object of worship:' a mode of interpretation supported by the authority of Chrysostom and other ancient Expositors; and, of modern ones, by Grot. and Koppe. By ὑπεραιρ. (on which see 2 Cor. xii. 7) is denoted the very extreme of pride. The term σέβας was used both of God, and of men; i. e. sovereigns, inasmuch as they were considered God's vicegerents on earth. Accordingly σέβασμα signifies whatever object is worshipped or regarded as God. Thus in Wisd. xiv. 20, and Acts xvii. 23, it is used of the idols of the heathens.

— ὥστε αὐτὸν, &c.] Ὥστε should be separated from the foregoing by a colon, since (as Pelt observes) 'minus consilium quam sequelam innuere videtur.' Render, 'insomuch that.' Αὐτὸν—καθίσαι is best rendered, on the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and several eminent Exposi-καθίσαι, ἀποδεικνύντα ἑαυτὸν ὅτι ἐστὶ Θεός . . . . Οὐ μνημο- 5 νεύετε, ὅτι, ἔτι ὢν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ταῦτα ἔλεγον ὑμῖν; Καὶ νῦν 6 τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, εἰς τὸ ἀποκαλυφθῆναι αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ ἑαυτοῦ καιρῷ. [d] Τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον ἤδη ἐνεργεῖται τῆς ἀνομίας· 7 μόνον ὁ κατέχων ἄρτι ἕως ἐκ μέσου γένηται. [e] Καὶ τότε 8 ἀποκαλυφθήσεται ὁ ἄνομος·—ὃν ὁ Κύριος ἀναλώσει τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ, καὶ καταργήσει τῇ d Acts 20. 29.

e John 4. 9. Isa. 11. 4. Rev. 19. 15, 20, 21.

tors, 'seat himself in the temple of God as God;' i. e. in quality of God. The words following, ἀποδεικ. ἑαυτὸν ὅτι ἐ. Θ., are (as Chrysostom and Pelt explain) put for ἐπιδεικνύναι πειρώμενον; i. e. σπουδάζων Θεὸς νομίζεσθαι, as Philo said of Caligula. Considering the highly allegorical and symbolical nature of the whole of this passage, there can be little difficulty in supposing that by 'the Temple of God' is meant (as almost all the ancient and many eminent modern Expositors understand) the Christian Church, as in 1 Cor. iii. 16. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 21; though the generality of modern Expositors understand it of the Temple of Jerusalem, or rather de æde sacra generally, understanding thereby that the Man of Sin will, as it were, fix his seat above God's holy place of worship, and affect Divine worship or authority.

5. οὐ μνημονεύετε—ὑμῖν;] It now seems to have occurred to the Apostle, that what he has been saying might to some be new and unheard. Accordingly he reminds them that this is no other than what he had before told them, having communicated to them the substance at least of this information when he was with them (Pelt); q. d. 'And you have no need to stumble at this doctrine, or to wonder that you do not see the Man of Sin exerting his baleful force; for you are well aware that there is something which prevents him from making his appearance.'

6. καὶ νῦν τὸ κατέχον οἴδατε, &c.] Νῦν is well taken by Koppe, Flatt, and Pelt, as a particle of transition, 'Now then.' As to what is meant by τὸ κατέχον (well explained by Chrysostom τὸ κωλύον), it is impossible to pronounce with certainty, from the great obscurity which envelopes the subject; and, indeed, as the Apostle was speaking of what was well known to them, he had no reason to open it out very clearly, and therefore we cannot expect to thoroughly understand it. Upon the whole, the most probable opinion is that of Theodoret, who understands this hindrance of the decree of God's Providence, which hinders the appearance of the Man of Sin until the 'fulness of time.' Εἰς τὸ ἀποκαλ. is suspended on κατέχον, and is not put (as Koppe supposes) for ἀλλ' ὅμως ἀποκαλυφθήσεται· but there is a blending of two clauses into one, and the complete sense is, 'prevents him from being revealed, as he will at length be in his season,—namely, that agreeable to the counsels of Almighty Providence.' See John vii. 30.

7. τὸ γὰρ μυστήριον ἤδη ἐνεργ. τ. ἀ.] The Apostle saw a most pernicious principle of evil even in his time secretly insinuating itself among Christians; though, from the power which restrained it, not yet fully developed. (Pelt.) Τῆς ἀν. is rightly supposed by Pelt to differ little from the ἀποστασία at ver. 3; since ἀνομία may, by its etymology, very well signify ἀποστασία ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου τοῦ Θεοῦ. So in 1 Macc. ii. 44, those are called ἄνδρες ἄνομοι whose ἀποστασία was mentioned at ver. 15. Τὸ μυστ. τῆς ἀνομ. must, with the ancient Expositors, be taken for κεκρυμμένη ἀνομία; implying also a notion of evil, and of what consequently seeks concealment. See John iii. 19—21. So Schott well explains the phrase to mean, 'improbitas, quæ adhuc efficientiam suam occultat, sive occultare debet, eo quod speciem præ se ferat honestatis, et artibus clandestinis utatur.' I would here compare what Joseph. Bell. i. 24. 1, says of calling the life of Antipater μυστήριον κακίας, 'a mystery of wickedness,' and what Dionysius Halic. says of Theopompus, that 'he developed the mysteries, or secrets, of falsely seeming virtue, and of concealed vice.' Ἐνεργεῖται may be rendered, 'is being carried into action (ἔργον), is being developed.' So the Pesch. Syr., 'is beginning to be effective.' See Note at 1 Thess. ii. 13.

In the next words, μόνον—γένηται, there is an ellipsis common in the popular style; and the sense (as was seen by the Syriac and some other ancient Translators) is only to be expressed by expanding the expressions as follows: 'Only there is one who now obstructs, [and who will continue to do so] until he be removed.' This use of μόνον (which corresponds to that of the Latin modo) is found in Gal. ii. 10 and vi. 12. As to the meaning of ὁ κατέχων, that must be explained according to the hypothesis of the Interpreter. It seems well observed by Pelt, that ὁ κατέχων may be taken of a 'genus hominum quoddam,' a 'vis quædam spiritualis simul cum ipso malo initum habens;' and Calvin well remarks, 'Hoc mysterium iniquitatis revelationi opponitur; quia enim nondum tantas vires collegerat Satan, ut palam Antichristus Ecclesiam opprimeret, dicit eum furtim et clanculum moliri, quod aperte suo tempore fracturus erat.'

8. Here ὁ ἄνομος designates, as Pelt remarks, the author of the μυστ. τῆς ἀνομίας. The words following are added for the consolation of true Christians. The first clause, ἀναλώσει—αὐτοῦ, is formed upon Is. xi. 4 and Ps. xxxiii. 6, and ἀναλώσει is used for the ἀνελεῖ of the Sept., as being a stronger term, denoting total destruction. As to the var. lect. ἀνελεῖ, here found in some MSS., it doubtless came from the Sept., and the common reading may be supported from Thucyd. viii. 66, καὶ ἄλλους τινὰς ἀνεπιτηδείους κρύφα ἀνάλωσαν, made away with.

Τὸ πνεύμ. τοῦ στόματος is well explained by Vater, 'verbo, jussu suo efficacissimo;' which is confirmed by Chrysostom, τῷ ἐπιτάγματι μόνον ἀναλώσει, and Theodoret, φθέγξεται μόνον, καὶ πανωλεθρίᾳ παραδώσει (read ἀναλώσει). The next clause designates the ease and speed of this destruction (here represented by the equivalent term καταργ., 'to utterly destroy any 9 ἐπιφανείᾳ τῆς παρουσίας αὐτοῦ·—[f] οὗ ἐστιν ἡ παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Σατανᾶ ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις καὶ τέρασι 10 ψεύδους, [g] καὶ ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἀδικίας, ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις· ἀνθ' ὧν τὴν ἀγάπην τῆς ἀληθείας οὐκ ἐδέξαντο εἰς 11 τὸ σωθῆναι αὐτούς. [h] Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο * πέμψει αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς 12 ἐνέργειαν πλάνης, εἰς τὸ πιστεῦσαι αὐτοὺς τῷ ψεύδει· [i] ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἀλλ' εὐδοκή-13 σαντες ἐν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ. [k] Ἡμεῖς δὲ ὀφείλομεν εὐχαριστεῖν τῷ Θεῷ πάντοτε περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀδελφοὶ ἠγαπημένοι ὑπὸ Κυρίου, ὅτι εἵλετο ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἀπ' ἀρχῆς εἰς σωτηρίαν ἐν ἁγιασμῷ 14 Πνεύματος καὶ πίστει ἀληθείας· εἰς ὃ ἐκάλεσεν ὑμᾶς διὰ τοῦ f Deut. 13. 1. Matt 24. 24. John 8. 41. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Eph. 2. 2. Rev. 13. 13, &c. g 2 Cor. 2. 15. & 4. 3.

h 1 Kings 22. 22. Ezek. 14. 9. Rom. 1. 24, &c. 1 Tim. 4. 1.
i Rom. 1. 32.
k 1 Thess. 1. 4. supra 1. 3.

opposing force:' see 1 Cor. xv. 24. 2 Cor. iii. 7), namely, 'by and at his very presence.' Ἐπιφ. τῆς παρ. signifies 'his glorious presence.' Indeed the expression is often, both in the Scriptural and the Classical writers, used to denote Divine majesty.

9, 10. οὗ ἐστιν ἡ παρουσία, &c.] This must, of course, be understood of the ἄνομος; and it is well remarked by Calvin, that the Apostle confirms what he has said by an argumentum à contrariis. So also Hyperius observes, 'Per antithesin mentione facta adventus Christi, qui erit in caritate, adjecit, adventum Antichristi fore secundum operationem Satanæ,' whose arts and methods of effecting his purposes are then described, both for warning and other purposes. See Matt. xxiv. 25. John xvi. 4. xiii. 19. Οὗ ἐστιν ἡ παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργ. τ. Σ. is (as Pelt remarks) for ὃς πάρεσται σὺν τῷ Σ. ἐνεργουμένῳ ἐν αὐτῷ, 'at whose presence Satan will work with great power.' So at Eph. ii. 2, he is said to be ἐνεργῶν ἐν τοῖς υἱοῖς τῆς ἀπειθείας. Moreover the term is of great significancy, (and not to be passed over as it is by many recent Expositors,) denoting such forcible kind of operation and agency, as effectually secures the accomplishment of its purposes, which may well be applied to the devices of Satan. See Matt. xiii. 39. Luke xiii. 11. John xiv. 30. Eph. ii. 2. The words δυνάμει καὶ σημείοις καὶ τέρασι may be understood (as they are by almost all Commentators) in the same sense as those at Acts ii. 22, δυνάμεσι καὶ τέρασι καὶ σημείοις: but as πάσῃ is here added, it would rather seem that by ἐν πάσῃ δυνάμει is meant, 'all conceivable power;' and by σημ. καὶ τέρ. are specified the kinds of power. The expression ψεύδους is intended for all three. In the next words, καὶ ἐν πάσῃ ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἀδικίας, other modes are adverted to, by which Antichrist and his agents and abettors will endeavour to advance their cause; namely, 'by every other unrighteous deceit and fraud, as well as that of pretended miracles.' Ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις must, as Pelt says, be joined with ἐνεργεῖται, quod latet in παρουσία κατ' ἐνέργειαν. Now this implies a yielding to the arts of the Seducer, and therefore ἐν τοῖς ἀπολλ. may be rendered, 'among those who are sure to perish,' or 'among the wretched victims of their deceit.' The next words show why they are thus devoted to perdition, and may be rendered, 'inasmuch as they have not admitted the love or care of the truth, in order to their being saved.' The sense, indeed, is disputed; but the best way of settling it is to suppose, as I have done in Recens. Synop., that we have here a blending of two modes of expression, 'They did not love or care for the truth,' and 'They would not receive or admit it.' Comp. Zech. viii. 19, τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἀγαπήσατε.

11. διὰ τοῦτο] i. e. because they have had no love of or care for the truth; there being no effectual preservative from fatal error but the sincere love of truth and virtue. See the annotation of Dr. Benson, and two discourses on this text by Dr. South, vol. iv. p. 325, seqq., wherein he shows that ill-disposed affections are both naturally and penally the cause of darkness and error in the judgment. The best Commentators are agreed that we are here to suppose that idiom by which God is figuratively said to do a thing which he only permits to be done.

— τῷ ψεύδει.] Meaning (as Bishop Middleton rightly explains) falsehood generally; literally, 'that which is false:' a sense of the word not unfrequent in the New Test. See John viii. 44. Rom. i. 25. Eph. iv. 25; and so the Sept. at Ps. v. 6, ἀπολεῖς πάντας τοὺς λαλοῦντας τὸ ψεῦδος.

12. ἵνα κριθ.] Ἵνα here denotes, as often, not end, or purpose, but effect. See Luke xi. 50. Κριθ., for κατακρ. Εὐδοκ. ἐν τῇ ἀδ. Meaning, 'willingly indulging themselves in false, and therefore wicked doctrines.'

13. ἡμεῖς δὲ—ὑμῶν.] Here we have a repetition of what was said at i. 3. Render, 'However, we are bound to give perpetual thanks to God for you, that God hath, from the beginning, chosen you to salvation.' Ἀπ' ἀρχῆς signifies 'from eternity,' (as at 1 John i. 1, ὃ ἦν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς,) alluding to the eternal purposes of God in calling the Thessalonians to the Christian faith. Εἰς σωτηρίαν is for εἰς τὸ σωθῆναι, or ἵνα σωθῶσι. In ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πν. is denoted rather the means, or the mode of the salvation; i. e. 'by the sanctification of the Spirit,' or, as others explain, 'on condition of sanctification of spirit;' but the former is preferable. So at Eph. i. 4, to election is added the end and condition of it, εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἁγίους, &c.; and at 1 Pet. i. 1, 2, Christians are termed ἐκλεκτοὶ κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος. By πίστει ἀληθ. is meant 'faith in, belief of the truth,' i. e. the Gospel.

14. εἰς ὃ] 'unto which,' namely, election and its consequent, sanctification. Εὐαγγ. ἡμῶν, i. e. the Gospel preached by me; as 1 Thess. i. 5. Περιπ. δόξης, like περιπ. σωτηρίας at 1 Thess. v. 9.

εὐαγγελίου ἡμῶν, εἰς περιποίησιν δόξης τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ l 1 Cor. 16. 13. & 11. 2. infra 3. 6. Χριστοῦ. [l] Ἄρα οὖν, ἀδελφοὶ, στήκετε, καὶ κρατεῖτε τὰς παρα- 15 δόσεις, ἃς ἐδιδάχθητε, εἴτε διὰ λόγου εἴτε δι' ἐπιστολῆς ἡμῶν.
m 1 Pet. 1. 3. [m] Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς καὶ 16 Πατὴρ ἡμῶν, ὁ ἀγαπήσας ἡμᾶς καὶ δοὺς παράκλησιν αἰωνίαν n 1 Thess. 3. 13. καὶ ἐλπίδα ἀγαθὴν ἐν χάριτι, [n] παρακαλέσαι ὑμῶν τὰς καρ- 17 δίας, καὶ στηρίξαι [ὑμᾶς] ἐν παντὶ λόγῳ καὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ.
a Eph. 6. 19. Col. 4. 3. III. [a] ΤΟ λοιπὸν προσεύχεσθε, ἀδελφοὶ, περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα 1 ὁ λόγος τοῦ Κυρίου τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζηται, καθὼς καὶ πρὸς b Acts 28. 24. Rom. 10. 16. & 15. 31. ὑμᾶς, [b] καὶ ἵνα ῥυσθῶμεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀτόπων καὶ πονηρῶν 2

15. Having thus expressed his thankfulness to God, for the assurance he had of their being preserved from delusion and imposture, and chosen to salvation, he adds an exhortation to stedfastness and constancy in that faith and profession to which they had been called by the Gospel of Christ. (Chandler.)

— στήκετε.] See Gal. v. 1, and Note.

— κρατεῖτε τὰς παραδόσεις.] Κρατ. is for κατέχετε, as 1 Cor. xi. 2, τὰς παραδόσεις κατέχετε. By τὰς παραδ. are meant 'the doctrines and precepts delivered to the world by the Apostles,' either in writing, or by word of mouth, as a revelation from God; and so παρέδωκα is used at 1 Cor. xv. 3. See the able Notes of Calvin, Hyperius, and Benson. Such, too, is the sense (in opposition to the Romanist one) assigned by Theodoret, who explains: Ἔχετε κανόνα διδασκαλίας τοὺς παρ' ἡμῶν ὑμῖν προσενεχθέντας λόγους, οὓς καὶ παρόντες ὑμῖν ἐκηρύξαμεν, καὶ ἀπόντες ἐγράψαμεν. In εἴτε διὰ—ἡμῶν the pronoun belongs to both λόγου and ἐπιστολῆς, and the sense is, 'whether by our word or by epistle.' The particle εἴτε, as Gomar and Pelt remark, is (as in 1 Cor. xiii. 8 and xv. 11) not disjunctive, but conjunctive, as often the Latin sive.

16, 17. After the above exhortation, the Apostle, as usual, concludes the whole with an affectionate prayer for them; with which compare 1 Thess. iii. 11—13. v. 23, and Col. ii. 2.

— παράκλησιν αἰωνίαν καὶ ἐλπ. ἀγ.] Meaning, the consolation arising from the well-founded hope of everlasting life and salvation. So at 2 Cor. i. 3, God is called 'the God of all comfort.' Ἐλπὶς ἀγαθὴ here is equivalent to μακαρία ἐλπὶς at Tit. ii. 13. On the subject of these good hopes, which God has given to us as Christians, see Chandler. Ἐν χάριτι. This must be construed with δούς; meaning, 'through [his] grace [alone],' without any merit of ours. Παρακαλέσαι is by the best Expositors understood of that kind of comforting, which consists in quieting the mind, when troubled by anxious doubts and fears as to our salvation, or when tempted to let go our confidence in God under affliction or persecution. See supra v. 2.

— στηρίξαι ὑμᾶς, &c.] By λόγῳ I would understand, not, as some explain, conversation, or, as others, consolation; but, with the ancient and best modern Commentators, doctrine. The meaning will then be, 'May he support and confirm you in all sound doctrine and virtuous practice, so that you may be immoveable in every good word and work.'

III. Having accomplished the more immediate design of his Epistle, the Apostle proceeds, at the close of it, to inculcate such practical injunctions as were suitable to the circumstances in which the Thessalonians were placed.

1. προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν, ἵνα, &c.] Render, 'Pray respecting us,' &c. The Apostle asks not their prayers generally, or for any temporal good, but for what would be to him the greatest blessing,—that the Gospel may, through his means, make its way rapidly, and be successful; for that, as the best Expositors are of opinion, is the sense of τρέχῃ καὶ δοξάζηται. In the former of these terms there is the same metaphor (taken from a race-course) as in 1 Cor. ix. 26 and Ps. cxlvii. 15 (where the LXX. render, ἕως τάχους δραμεῖται ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ), which passage was probably in the mind of the Apostle. The same expression occurs in Eurip. Ion, 531, τρέχων ὁ μῦθος ἄν σοι Τἀμὰ σημήνειεν ἄν. In δοξάζ. there is reference, not so much to the Gospel being admired and embraced by many, as its being glorified in itself, by the suitable practice of those who embrace the faith. Compare supra i. 10, 12.

— καθὼς καὶ πρὸς ὑμᾶς.] Containing a delicate commendation of those whom he is addressing, and introduced, as Estius remarks, by way of exciting them to make further progress in that for which he commends them.

2. καὶ ἵνα ῥυσθῶμεν, &c.] These words are closely connected with the foregoing ἵνα τρέχῃ, &c.; for, as Theophylact observes, 'though the petition seem two-fold, it is, in effect, but one: since, on bad men being overcome, the word of truth will run swiftly.' The sense, then, 'and [in order thereto] that we (meaning himself, Silvanus, and Timothy) may be delivered from [the opposition and persecution of],' &c. In τῶν ἀτόπων καὶ πον. ἀνθ. the ἀτόπ. is by most recent Expositors regarded as synonymous with πονηρῶν: a view of the sense adopted by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, and supported by the use of the word at Luke xxiii. 41; but, from the words following, some more special sense seems intended, and the term appears to comprehend the notions of unreasonable and perverse; the former regarding the heathens, the latter the Jews or Judaizing Christian teachers, described in 2 Tim. iii. 8 as ἄνθρωποι κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, and, by an explication of the foregoing, ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν. So, too, the expression is interpreted by Theophylact, who remarks, περὶ τῶν ἀντιλεγόντων τῷ κηρύγματι λέγει,

3 ἀνθρώπων· οὐ γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις. [c] Πιστὸς δέ ἐστιν ὁ c John 17. 15. 1 Cor. 1. 9.
Κύριος, ὃς στηρίξει ὑμᾶς καὶ φυλάξει ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ. & 10. 13. 1 Thess. 5. 24.
4 [d] Πεποίθαμεν δὲ ἐν Κυρίῳ ἐφ' ὑμᾶς, ὅτι ἃ παραγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν, d 2 Cor. 7. 16.
5 καὶ ποιεῖτε καὶ ποιήσετε. [e] Ὁ δὲ Κύριος κατευθύναι ὑμῶν τὰς e 1 Chron. 29. 18.
καρδίας εἰς τὴν ἀγάπην τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ εἰς τὴν ὑπομονὴν τοῦ περὶ τῶν μαχομένων τοῖς δόγμασι (read περί τε τῶν μαχομένων τοῖς δόγμασι, as the sense requires). Thus the expression may be rendered irrational, and so it will be equivalent to the term ἀλόγιστοι employed by Joseph. Ant. xvi. 6. 8, to denote those prejudiced and irrational persons of the Gentiles who delighted in persecuting the Jews.

— οὐ γὰρ πάντων ἡ πίστις.] Not meaning, as some explain, 'There are few men of integrity, or persons whom we can trust:' a sense neither permitted by the use of the Article, nor suitable to the context. The true interpretation is, I apprehend, that of the ancient in general and many eminent modern Expositors (especially Crellius, Wolf, Le Clerc, Turretin, Wells, and Pelt), 'all have not the dispositions of mind to permit them to receive the truth,' i. e. the Gospel: the lovers of truth and virtue possess them. And so the words are explained by Chrysostom, Theophylact, Theodoret, and Œcumenius. It is, Theophylact observes, equivalent to οὐ γὰρ πάντες πιστεύουσιν ἀλλ' οἱ ἄξιοι, the worthy and well-disposed, (as Matt. x. 11, ἐξετάσατε τίς ἐν αὐτῇ ἄξιός ἐστι,) ἐπιτήδειοι, fit to receive the Gospel. And so Œcumenius annotates, οὐ πάντων ἐστὶ τὸ πιστεῦσαι, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἀξίων τοῦ πιστεῦσαι· q. d. οὐ πάντων ἐστὶ τὸ στρατεύεσθαι ἐν ταῖς βασιλείοις αὐλαῖς, ἀλλὰ τῶν ἀξίων τῶν ἐπιτηδείων πρὸς τοῦτο· and Chrysostom, οἷς δέδοται τὸ μὴ πιστεύειν, though that by no means destroys free-will; for, as Theodoret remarks, Θεοῦ ἴδιον τὸ καλεῖν, ἡμῶν δὲ τὸ πείθεσθαι· οὐ γὰρ ἀνάγκῃ βιάζεται, ἀλλὰ τὴν γνώμην ζητεῖ. See John vii. 37. Luke ix. 23. The question, as Wolf observes, is whether the Evangelical faith here spoken of be said to be οὐ πάντων because it is put in no man's power, but is to be accounted as a Divine gift, or because it is not found among all. 'The latter view,' continues he, 'is preferable; for to those unreasonable persons in whom there was not faith the Apostle sets in opposition the Thessalonian Christians as those who had faith: whence it follows that by faith is here meant the receiving of the Gospel.' The words are evidently meant not generally, but only of the persons just spoken of. 'Probat (says Hyperius) hæc ratio, non mirum esse, quod sunt persecutores; q. d. Sunt absurdi et perversi homines ubique multi;' and that from unbelief. Upon the whole, nothing is more certain than that the Calvinistic gloss, 'non a Deo electi sunt ut credant,' cannot stand. It is well said by the very learned and pious Turretin, 'Minime intelligit Apostolus fidem nonnisi quibusdam hominibus necessitate quadam infundi, cæteros vero homines ad non credendum prædestinatos esse; quæ idea Deo indignissima est, perfectiones ejus omnes auferret, denique omne ab incredulitate vituperium, uno verbo, judicium omne, omnem religionem amoveret.'

3. πιστὸς δέ ἐστιν ὁ Κύριος, &c.] A sentiment suggested by the πίστις of the preceding verse. The connexion is ably traced by Pelt as follows: '[Those bad men who oppose the truth do, indeed, lie in wait for us;] but God will, we trust, rescue us from their evil designs, who of his faithfulness and truth will never forsake us.' Comp. 1 Cor. x. 13. i. 8, 9, and 1 Thess. v. 24, and Notes.

— ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ.] This may mean either 'from evil,' or 'from the Evil one.' The latter interpretation is adopted by almost all the ancients and many moderns; and, among them, by Bp. Middleton, who urges the presence of the Article. That, however, will only show that the sense in question might, if the context would permit it, not that it must, be the true one. The other sense (which is adopted in our common version, and also by most of the later Commentators and Translators) is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr., and is surely quite agreeable to the context. It is, moreover, confirmed by a very similar passage at 2 Tim. iv. 18, καὶ ῥύσεταί με ὁ Κύριος ἀπὸ παντὸς ἔργου πονηροῦ, where the context strikingly resembles the present one. Of τὸ πονηρὸν in the sense evil we have an example at Rom. xii. 9, and of τοῦ πονηροῦ in the same sense one might be adduced from John xvii. 15, ἵνα τηρήσῃς αὐτοὺς ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ: in both which passages the context (which can alone decide in a case where the usus loquendi will admit of either of two interpretations) favours the neuter sense.

4. πεποίθ., &c.] Compare Gal. v. 10. It is, Pelt observes, the manner of the Apostle to couch exhortation under exhortation. Ὑμᾶς, namely, as opposed to πάντων at ver. 2.

— ἐν Κυρίῳ] i. e., says Chrysostom, 'in his benevolence, implying the necessity for the Divine assistance co-operating with our own earnest endeavours.' To trust, indeed, in the assistance of God, that they are doing what he enjoins, seems to involve something of incongruity. The most effectual method of removing which difficulty is to regard the sentence as containing two members blended into one. Thus the sense will be, 'Now we hope and trust that [upon the whole] ye are doing the things which we command you; and we trust in the Lord's assistance that ye will be enabled to continue to do them.' Certain it is that the Apostle everywhere urges the necessity of Divine grace, and yet, on the other hand, admits the existence of free-will, or human liberty of action. See Phil. ii. 12, sq. 2 Cor. iii. 5.

5. ὁ δὲ Κύριος κατευθύναι—Θεοῦ.] Notwithstanding the attempts that have been here made to establish a sense which differs widely from the one commonly assigned, the latter is doubtless alone the true one. See Rec. Synop. The words (which are quite in the Apostle's manner) may be rendered, 'And now [in order thereto] may the Lord [by his Holy Spirit] direct your hearts unto the love of God.' On κατευθ. see Note on 1 Thess. iii. 11. Any seeming incongruity is removed by supposing Κύρ. to mean 'the Lord [working by the Holy Spirit].' Τὴν ὑπομ. τ.

Χριστοῦ. [f] Παραγγέλλομεν δὲ ὑμῖν, ἀδελφοί, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ 6 Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, στέλλεσθαι ὑμᾶς ἀπὸ παντὸς ἀδελφοῦ ἀτάκτως περιπατοῦντος, καὶ μὴ κατὰ τὴν παράδοσιν ἣν ‡ παρέλαβε παρ' ἡμῶν. [g] Αὐτοὶ γὰρ οἴδατε πῶς δεῖ μιμεῖ- 7 σθαι ἡμᾶς· ὅτι οὐκ ἠτακτήσαμεν ἐν ὑμῖν, [h] οὐδὲ δωρεὰν 8 ἄρτον ἐφάγομεν παρά τινος· ἀλλ' ἐν κόπῳ καὶ μόχθῳ, νύκτα καὶ ἡμέραν ἐργαζόμενοι, πρὸς τὸ μὴ ἐπιβαρῆσαί τινα ὑμῶν.
[i] Οὐχ ὅτι οὐκ ἔχομεν ἐξουσίαν· ἀλλ' ἵνα ἑαυτοὺς τύπον δῶμεν 9 ὑμῖν εἰς τὸ μιμεῖσθαι ἡμᾶς. [k] Καὶ γὰρ ὅτε ἦμεν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, 10 τοῦτο παρηγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν· ὅτι, εἴ τις οὐ θέλει ἐργάζεσθαι, μηδὲ ἐσθιέτω. Ἀκούομεν γάρ τινας περιπατοῦντας ἐν ὑμῖν 11 ἀτάκτως, μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους, ἀλλὰ περιεργαζομένους.
[l] Τοῖς δὲ τοιούτοις παραγγέλλομεν καὶ παρακαλοῦμεν διὰ 12 τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἵνα μετὰ ἡσυχίας ἐργαζόμενοι τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον ἐσθίωσιν. [m] Ὑμεῖς δέ, ἀδελφοί, μὴ 13 ἐκκακήσητε καλοποιοῦντες. [n] Εἰ δέ τις οὐχ ὑπακούει τῷ 14 f 1 Thess. 4. 11. & 5. 14. infra v. 11, 14, 15. g 1 Cor. 4. 16. & 11. 1. 1 Thess. 1. 6. & 2. 10. & 4. 11.

h Acts 18. 3. & 20. 34. 1 Cor. 4. 12. 2 Cor. 11. 9. & 12. 13. 1 Thess. 2. 9. i Matt. 10. 10. 1 Cor. 4. 16. & 9. 3, 6. & 11. 1. 1 Thess 1. 6. & 2. 6. Phil. 3 17. 1 Tim. 5. 18. k Gen. 3. 19. 1 Thess. 4. 11.
l Eph. 4. 28. 1 Thess. 4. 11. Ecclus. 3. 23.
m Gal. 6. 9.
n Matt. 18. 17. 1 Cor. 5. 9, 11. supra v. 6.

Χρ. is by most recent Commentators explained, 'such patience as Christ displayed in his sufferings.' But there seems no reason to abandon the view taken by the ancient and most modern Expositors, 'the patient endurance of tribulations such as Christ suffered, and which Christians must be prepared to endure in his cause.'

6—16. We may observe the address with which the Apostle first employs soothing language to show his affection for them, and thus to make palatable the reproofs he was about to introduce; which were meant to correct a spirit that the Apostle had remarked among some of them,—namely, a disposition to be idle, and throw themselves on the bounty of their richer or more industrious brethren for maintenance. These he had before enjoined to 'quietly work, and eat their own meat.' Since, however, his injunctions had been little attended to, he repeats them with greater authority and earnestness, strictly commanding the other Christians to break off all familiar intercourse with such, in order thereby to bring them to shame and repentance. Στέλλ. ὑμᾶς, 'that ye withdraw yourselves from,' ἀφίστασθαι, χωρίζεσθαι ἀπό, as the ancient Commentators explain. See Note on 2 Cor. viii. 20. So Malachi ii. 5, ἀπὸ προσώπου ὀνόματός μου στέλλεσθαι αὐτόν. By ἀτάκτως must here be meant the leading an idle life, unaccompanied by that regular industry, which the Almighty enjoined on man at the fall. See 1 Thess. v. 14. By the παράδ. are meant those spoken of at ii. 15.

7. The Apostle here calls in his own example in aid of his precepts. Αὐτοὶ γάρ, &c. The sense seems to be that assigned by Bengel and Pelt, 'For you yourselves know what manner of life ye ought to pursue, in order to imitate us.'

8. ὅτι οὐκ ἠτακτ., &c.] There seems to be a clause omitted; q. d. '[Only, I say, imitate us;] for,' &c.

Ἄρτον φαγεῖν παρά τινος is a phrase meaning 'to be supported by any one.' Comp. 2 Sam. ix. 7, 10. Sept. and Heb.

9. ἐξουσίαν] scil. τοῦ δωρεὰν ἄρτον φαγεῖν παρὰ ὑμῶν. On which see 1 Cor. ix. 6.

10. εἴ τις οὐ θέλει—ἐσθιέτω.] A sort of adage, of which several examples have been adduced.

11. ἀκούομεν γάρ.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[I am induced to give this injunction,] for I have,' &c. At ἐργαζ. and περιεργ. there is a paronomasia, as in 1 Tim. v. 13, οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀργαί, ἀλλὰ καὶ περίεργοι, and Demosth. p. 150. 24, ἐξ ὧν ἐργάζῃ καὶ περιεργάζῃ. Περιεργάζεσθαι signifies, 1. to labour exceedingly; 2. to devote superfluous labour (the περι answering to our over, as in over-work); 3. to labour, or give one's attention to things which have no relation to one's own proper business; which is usually the case with busy meddling persons.

12. μετὰ ἡσυχ.] Namely, as opposed to that unsettled spirit, which indisposed them for labour, and disposed them to a disorderly life. The phrase τὸν ἑαυτῶν ἄρτον ἐσθίειν seems to be an adagial one, signifying 'to support oneself, and not to be beholden to another.' Many similar expressions are cited from the Classical writers, descriptive of the contrary. So the parasite is said ἀλλοτριοφαγεῖν.

13. μὴ ἐκκακήσητε καλοπ.] This is similar to the injunction at Gal. vi. 9, τὸ καλὸν ποιοῦντες μὴ ἐκκακῶμεν, 'let us not be weary of doing good;' i. e. by the exercise of charity; which passage, together with the connexion with the preceding (indicated by the δὲ), must determine the sense here to the subject of Christian charity, though most Expositors extend it to that of virtue in general; and as to καλοποιεῖν occurring in that sense at Levit. v. 4, there the context and opposition with κακοποιεῖν as much require that sense as the context here does the other. The δὲ shows that the admonition was chiefly intended for persons above the working classes, and was meant to repress that disinclination to relieve and assist even the industrious and deserving, which was apt to be engendered by the idleness or unworthiness of some of the objects of charity.

14. διὰ τῆς ἐπιστ.] Some Expositors connect this with σημειοῦσθε, placing a comma after λόγῳ ἡμῶν, διὰ τῆς ἐπιστολῆς, τοῦτον σημειοῦσθε· καὶ μὴ 15 συναναμίγνυσθε αὐτῷ, ἵνα ἐντραπῇ· καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν 16 ἡγεῖσθε, ἀλλὰ νουθετεῖτε ὡς ἀδελφόν. [o] Αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Κύριος o Rom. 15. 33. & 16. 20. τῆς εἰρήνης δῴη ὑμῖν τὴν εἰρήνην διὰ παντὸς ἐν παντὶ 1 Cor. 14. 33. 2 Cor. 13. 11. τρόπῳ. Ὁ Κύριος μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν! Phil. 4. 9. 1 Thess. 5. 23.

17 [p] Ὁ ἀσπασμὸς τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ Παύλου, ὅ ἐστι σημεῖον ἐν p 1 Cor. 16. 21.
18 πάσῃ ἐπιστολῇ· οὕτω γράφω. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Col. 4. 18.
Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Θεσσαλονικεῖς δευτέρα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ἀθηνῶν.

ἡμῶν, in the sense, 'inform me of the delinquent by letter.' That, however, is negatived by the use of the Article; for (as Bp. Middleton has shown) if such had been the meaning, there would have been none, and σημειοῦσθε cannot well admit of that sense. Τῆς ἐπιστολῆς may be rendered (with Bp. Middleton) 'our Epistle,' literally, the Epistle which we wrote you. The sense of σημ. required by this interpretation (namely, 'mark that man as one to be shunned,') is, indeed, not very frequent, but it is sufficiently supported by authority (being frequent in Polybius), and is confirmed both by the context here and the etymology of the word. On μὴ συναναμίγ. see 1 Cor. v. 9, 11. The expression is equivalent to συγχρᾶσθαι at John iv. 9. Thus it was a sort of excommunication, such as was in use among the Jews. See Schoettgen on Matt. xviii. 17. Ἵνα ἐντραπῇ, i. e. 'that the shame thereof may bring him to repentance.' Compare Tit. ii. 8, and 1 Cor. iv. 14, and Notes.

15. καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐχθρὸν ἡγ.] 'and yet regard him not as an enemy.' These words are meant to show the nature of this sort of punishment, and how far it should extend. It was to be considered only as a νουθεσία, having in view not so much the punishment, as the reformation of the offender. And the conduct adopted with regard to him was not to be so far removed from friendliness, as to approach to hostility. The term νουθ. is to be taken as at 1 Thess. v. 14. Compare Levit. xix. 17.

16. See Matt. xxviii. 20, and compare Rom. xv. 33.

17, 18. See Note on Rom. xvi. 21—23. 1 Cor. xvi. 24.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΜΟΘΕΟΝ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

---

a Acts 9. 15. Col. 1. 27. Gal. 1. 1.

I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κατ' ἐπι- 1 ταγὴν Θεοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,

We are now arrived at the Pastoral Epistles, which deserve especial attention, from their containing many important particulars respecting the discipline of the Church, as the foregoing Epistles do respecting the doctrines.

The time when this Epistle was written is a point of great uncertainty. Dr. Burton refers it to A. D. 52; while the opinion of the most eminent Critics is, that it was written A. D. 65. The arguments in favour of an early and of a late date respectively, are ably stated by Mr. Horne, Introd., iv. 386—388, who, after an elaborate discussion, decides (I think justly) in favour of a late date, and fixes the Epistle to A. D. 64.

The design of this Epistle is generally supposed to have been to instruct Timothy in the discharge of his ministerial office; but the more immediate occasion of its being written seems to have been, to caution him against the delusions of those false teachers (supposed to have been Essenes), who by their subtle distinctions had corrupted the simplicity of the Gospel, and by their interminable controversies on speculative points had turned men's attention off from weightier matters. Hence the far greater part of the Epistle is occupied on matters of doctrine (insomuch that, as Hyperius remarks, there is here found a sort of compendium or epitome of Christian doctrine), and the remainder treats on matters of discipline, ceremonies, and Church government. Yet the former is ever kept paramount, and accordingly Paul presses on Timothy to keep continually in view (in his preaching) the interests of practical religion, and gives him the most salutary counsels and earnest exhortations to the discharge of his office. Hence the Epistle naturally divides itself into two Parts,—I. that wherein Timothy is instructed as to his conduct in the settlement and administration of the Church at Ephesus, II. that wherein some seasonable admonitions are given, for the benefit of the people at large; some of whom, it seems, had been disturbed by the seductive arts of false teachers, and others had been too little mindful of the sacred obligation incumbent on them, to 'adorn the doctrine of God in all things,'—the poor, by insubordination, and the rich, by covetousness. Accordingly the Apostle gives counsels suitable to both those classes; warning the one of the pernicious consequences of angry controversies on matters of no moment; the other, of the danger of resisting the ordinance of God, 'who maketh rich and poor,' and whose will it is that both should alike 'glorify him,' the rich 'out of his abundance, and the poor out of his poverty.'

This Epistle is unquestionably one of great importance; for, although the erroneous notions of the Judaizing teachers (the immediate occasion of its being written) have disappeared, yet, as Dr. Macknight observes, 'the Epistles to Timothy are still of use, as they serve to show the impiety of the principles from which these errors proceeded; for the same principles are apt in every age to produce errors and vices, which, though different in name from those which prevailed in Ephesus in the Apostle's days, are precisely of the same kind, and equally pernicious.' They are indeed exceedingly important to the Church in every age, by giving its Ministers, of whatever community or denomination, the most perfect precepts as to the duties of their respective offices, pointing out the general qualifications necessary to such as are candidates for the ministry, and explaining the ends for which the offices were originally instituted, and ought still to be continued in the Church. In short, those parts of the Epistles which have reference only to the state of things in the primitive Church are, nevertheless, calculated to be profitable in all ages, and under all circumstances.

I. This first chapter forms a sort of preface to the whole Epistle; and in it the Apostle, after reminding Timothy of the sacred charge committed to him (i. e. to preserve the purity of the Gospel against the pernicious doctrines of the false teachers, whose notions led to empty speculations and frivolous controversies, and not to a holy life, and which, therefore, he in the next chapter warns them to shun and avoid), then

2 τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν, [b] Τιμοθέῳ γνησίῳ τέκνῳ ἐν πίστει· χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Χριστοῦ 3 Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν. [c] Καθὼς παρεκάλεσά σε προσμεῖναι ἐν Ἐφέσῳ, πορευόμενος εἰς Μακεδονίαν, ἵνα παραγ-4 γείλῃς τισὶ μὴ ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν, [d] μηδὲ προσέχειν μύθοις καὶ γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις, αἵτινες ζητήσεις παρέχουσι b Acts 16. 1. 1 Cor. 4. 17. 1 Thess. 3. 2. Gal. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 2. c Acts 20. 1, 3. Gal. 1. 6, 7. d Infra 4. 7. & 6. 4, 20. 2 Tim. 2. 16. Titus 1. 14. & 3. 9.

shows the true use of the Law of Moses, agreeably to the representation of it in the Gospel committed to him to preach; on the mention of which he expresses at large his ardent gratitude to God, not only in calling him (who had been a bitter persecutor and insulter) to the Christian faith, but in entrusting him with the high office which he held in the Church.

1. κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ.] Render, with Doddridge, Benson, Wakefield, and others, 'by the appointment or decree.' So also the expression is understood by Montanus, Erasmus, and Calvin, and indeed by most recent Commentators, who regard it as nearly equivalent to κατὰ τὸ θέλημα Θεοῦ, or διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ elsewhere. By σωτῆρος ἡμῶν is meant, the author of our salvation; as iv. 10. Tit. ii. 10, &c. God is with reason so called, since, as Benson observes, 'the original of our redemption through Jesus Christ was the love and goodness of the Father, who planned, as well as of the Son, who effected it.' So Calvin remarks: 'Patri convenit, quia is est qui nobis dedit Filium: merito igitur illi salutis gloria ascribitur. Unde enim salvi sumus? nempe, quia sic nos dilexit, &c., John iii. 16.' Τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν. Meaning, by metonymy, 'the cause of our hope' of salvation. See Hyperius.

2. γνησίῳ τέκνῳ.] Render, 'my genuine, or true son;' called son, as being converted by St. Paul (1 Cor. iv. 14, 15. Gal. iv. 19), and genuine son, as, from his zeal in propagating the faith, and his other dispositions, bearing that likeness to him, which true sons may be supposed to do to their parents.

3. καθὼς παρεκάλεσα—Μακεδ.] The construction here is tortuous and elliptical. Πορ. εἰς Μακεδ. must be construed between καθὼς and παρεκ., and the protasis at καθὼς is without its apodosis, οὕτως, which must be supplied. The simplest and most natural method is to understand οὕτω καὶ νῦν παρακαλῶ.

— μὴ ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖν.] Meaning, 'not to teach any other doctrines than such as the Apostles teach;' see more in Calvin and Hyperius. The doctrines here alluded to are supposed to have been the doctrines of the Judaizers.

4. μύθοις.] Meaning, the Rabbinical traditions and interpretations afterwards embodied in the Mischna, and called at Tit. i. 14, 'Jewish fables.' Hence we may perceive what is meant by the expression following, γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις, which is by some referred to the Æons of the Gnostics; though, as the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors have seen, it must chiefly relate to that fondness for genealogical investigation which has ever distinguished the Jews. Thus the term μύθοις may, per Hendiadyn, have reference partly to the stories connected with the genealogies. So Polyb. ix. 2, ἐξαριθμεῖσθαι τὰ περὶ τὰς γενεαλογίας καὶ μύθους.

Ἀπέραντος properly signifies interminable, as in Plutarch, i. p. 255, λόγον πρὸς ἀπεράντους δεισιδαιμονίας ἐκφέροντα: a term very applicable to genealogical disquisitions, because (as Calvin observes) 'vain curiosity knows no bounds, but is hurried from one labyrinth to another.' The subject is well illustrated by Hyperius. Hence there is also an implied sense of what is unprofitable. This, indeed, some, but I think injudiciously, make the principal one.

The next words, αἵτινες ζητήσεις, are meant to further develope the above implied idea; showing that they only afford matter for interminable and vain debate. Of the words which follow, μᾶλλον ἤ, &c., the sense depends upon the reading, which is disputed. For οἰκοδομίαν almost all the MSS., several Versions, and most early Editions and Fathers, have οἰκονομίαν, which was preferred by Grotius, Hammond, and Mill, and has been adopted by almost every Editor from Wetstein to Scholz: to whose authority I have, in this third Edition, after more mature consideration, thought proper to defer; for though οἰκοδομίαν yields a sense very suitable to the context, yet it is in vain to contend against such overpowering external authority as that which exists for οἰκονομίαν. It is, indeed, doubtful whether οἰκοδομίαν be contained in any one MS.; or even supposing it to be found in a few, it might easily be introduced into them from the Vulgate. Accordingly, we are not justified in rejecting οἰκονομίαν, if any tolerable sense can be extracted from it, which I am now of opinion may be done; and I offer, with some confidence, the following version of the passage: 'Which occasion questions rather than produce a [knowledge of] the dispensation of God in the Gospel; which is by faith in Christ, and not resting on any merit of descent from Abraham or the Patriarchs.' On this the Jews entirely depended, supposing they could be saved by virtue of the privileges or piety of their ancestors; see Matt. iii. 9, and Note. Whereas, in the dispensation of God (as opposed to the schemes of salvation by man) faith in Jesus Christ was the only means of salvation. Παρέχουσι must thus be taken twice, in a somewhat different sense, by an usage frequent in the best writers, especially Thucydides and St. Paul. Thus we have in Thucydides, iii. 14, fin., κοινὴν δὲ τὴν ἐκ τοῦ κατορθῶσαι ὠφέλειαν ἅπασι δίδοντας· ἔτι δὲ κοινωτέραν τὴν βλάβην, εἰ, &c., where δίδοντας has first to be taken with ὠφέλειαν, in the sense offering, and then at βλάβην, in the sense producing. If, however, the force thus assigned to παρέχουσι should seem too harsh, the expression may be rendered, 'hold out, present to view the Divine dispensation (or plan of saving man) in the Gospel.' And, indeed, this figurative sense of παρέχω is by no means unusual, and readily springs from the physical one, which is found both in the Classical e Rom. 13. 8, &c. Gal. 5. 14. — f Infra 6. 4, 20. — g Rom. 7. 12.

μᾶλλον ἢ * οἰκονομίαν Θεοῦ τὴν ἐν πίστει. [e] Τὸ δὲ τέλος 5 τῆς παραγγελίας ἐστὶν ἀγάπη ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας καὶ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς καὶ πίστεως ἀνυποκρίτου· [f] ὧν τινὲς 6 ἀστοχήσαντες, ἐξετράπησαν εἰς ματαιολογίαν, θέλοντες εἶναι 7 νομοδιδάσκαλοι, μὴ νοοῦντες μήτε ἃ λέγουσι, μήτε περὶ τίνων διαβεβαιοῦνται. [g] Οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι καλὸς ὁ νόμος, ἐὰν 8 writers and the New Test. (as Luke vi. 29) to signify, 'holding out any thing towards any one.' And so Theodoret must have interpreted the expression, as appears from the following excellent comment: Διδάσκει ὡς αἱ μὲν περιτταὶ ζητήσεις ἀνόητοί (εἰσι), ἡ δὲ πίστις φωτίζει τὸν νοῦν, καὶ ἐπιδείκνυσι τὰς θείας οἰκονομίας. It is true the above use of a word, called by the Grammarians Dilogia, has place only where the two terms, to which it is applied in common, stand in two opposite clauses. But that can scarcely be said to be otherwise here; since μᾶλλον ἤ, as the Commentators are agreed, stands for καὶ οὐ; as 2 Tim. iii. 4. Heb. xi. 25. 1 Pet. iii. 17, and often in the Classical writers, especially Thucydides; in which case the μᾶλλον and ἤ are really in two different clauses, as is confessedly the case in the anomalous idiom μᾶλλον ἢ οὐ, occurring in Thucydides, ii. 62, and iii. 36, where Duker, Bauer, and Poppo rightly point μᾶλλον, ἤ.

Finally, the very expression οἰκονομία τοῦ Θεοῦ is found at Col. i. 25, κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ; and at Eph. iii. 2, we have τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ.

5. The connexion is ably traced by Crellius as follows: 'Subjungit Apostolus scopum omnium mandatorum, ad quem exigendæ sint omnes doctrinæ, ex quo judicium fieri posset de unaquaque doctrina, ut quæ cum illa discrepet infecta et aliena censeatur;' q. d. 'Ut autem scias, o Timothee, veram a supposititia doctrinam dignoscere, scito Charitatem esse veluti scopum et cynosuram, quam omnia Dei mandata respiciant, ita ut quicquid cum ea conveniat, pro genuino sit agnoscendum, quicquid autem discrepet, repudiandum sit.'

— τῆς παραγγελίας.] This is commonly rendered precept, commandment; meaning, the revelation of God in the Gospel. But it is better interpreted by Crellius of the system or body of commandments (παραγγελμάτων) enjoined in Scripture. Many Expositors, however, from Benson downwards, understand it of the charge Timothy is enjoined to deliver, which is confirmed by v. 18, ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν. Such, too, was the view of the sense adopted by Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret. Τέλος here signifies, 'final purpose,' that to which all the parts of a whole tend, and in which all terminate; compare Rom. x. 4. Ecclus. xii. 13. So also the word is used in Arrian, Epict. i. 12. 5, τέλος ἐστὶ τὸ ἕπεσθαι θεοῖς.

— ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας, &c.] These words show the kind of charity enjoined. It is to be sincere (not founded on interested motives), and springing from motives of conscience, and undissembled conviction of Gospel truth. Of the expression ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας we have another example, 1 Pet. i. 22. Here, for ἐκ, ἀπὸ would be better Greek. So we have in Æschyl. Eum. 282, ἀφ' ἁγνοῦ στόματος. As examples of this sense of καθαρὸς I would compare Theogn. Sent. 89, ἤ με φίλει καθαρὸν θέμενος νόον, ἤ μ' ἀποειπὼν Ἔχθαιρ', and Pind. Olymp. iv. 27, πρὸς ἡσυχίαν φιλόπολιν καθαρᾷ γνώμᾳ τετραμμένον.

6. ὧν] 'from which [virtues].' In ἀστοχ. and ἐξετρ. there are two metaphors blended; one that of missing a mark (suggested by the τέλος just before), the other, of wandering from a road. So Josephus, Antiq. 1. xiii. 18, ἐξετρ. τῆς ὁδοῦ δικαίας; see also 2 Pet. ii. 15. Ματ. has reference to the interminable and unprofitable ζητήσεις mentioned at v. 4, and called κενοφωνίας at vi. 20; this vain and empty talk being, by implication, opposed to the performance of substantial duties.

7. θέλοντες] 'desiring to be [thought],' 'affecting to be;' as Col. ii. 18. Intimating, as Hyperius observes, 'that they have not erred through ignorance, but, scientes et volentes, they having rushed to the office of teachers of the Gospel, to which they were wholly incompetent, or, if competent, had purposely corrupted its doctrines.' Νομοδιδάσκαλοι. Meaning, 'doctors or teachers of the [Christian] law.' The term, indeed, properly signified a Doctor of the Jewish law; but it was here used, because the persons in question were Judaizing Christians, and therefore likely to cling to the old term, rather than adopt πρεσβύτερος, or other terms then in general use among Christians. Μὴ νοοῦντες ('though understanding not what they say') is a popular phrase, to which is subjoined the more recondite one μήτε περὶ τίνων διαβεβαιοῦνται, where διαβ. is used (as often in the later writers) of strongly affirming or strenuously maintaining any thing; meaning here the true nature of the Law, and the real intent of the Gospel. To this the Apostle in the next words adverts, in order to make his meaning the clearer, and also to show that he does not despise the law.

8. καλὸς] 'excellent,' both in nature and intent, especially the moral law; though even the ceremonial was such as regarded its true scope. Οἴδαμεν means, 'we well know and admit.' Νομίμως χρῆται, i. e. 'live by it agreeably to its design,' which was to restrain and check, by the fulfilment of its moral precepts, vicious and evil habits; and, by its ceremonial ones, to lead men to that better law which was revealed in Christ.

9. εἰδὼς τοῦτο, ὅτι—οὐ κεῖται.] By νόμος many eminent Expositors understand the minatory and severe enactments of the Mosaic law: q. d. 'Those do not concern or apply to such as have a Christian law of righteousness; are of force only against such as contemn and violate the law;' see Crellius, Rosenmuller, and Doddridge. I must, however, prefer the interpretation of Benson and Bp. Middleton, the latter of whom thus paraphrases: 'Recollecting that neither the Mosaic, nor any other law, is directed 9 τις αὐτῷ νομίμως χρῆται, [h] εἰδὼς τοῦτο, ὅτι δικαίῳ νόμος h Gal. 3. 19. & 5. 23.

οὐ κεῖται, ἀνόμοις δὲ καὶ ἀνυποτάκτοις, ἀσεβέσι καὶ ἁμαρτωλοῖς, ἀνοσίοις καὶ βεβήλοις· πατραλῴαις καὶ μητραλῴαις, 10 ἀνδροφόνοις, πόρνοις, ἀρσενοκοίταις, ἀνδραποδισταῖς, ψεύσταις, ἐπιόρκοις, καὶ εἴ τι ἕτερον τῇ ὑγιαινούσῃ διδασκαλίᾳ 11 ἀντίκειται, [i] κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς δόξης τοῦ μακαρίου i 1 Thess. 2. 4.
12 Θεοῦ, ὃ ἐπιστεύθην ἐγώ. καὶ χάριν ἔχω τῷ ἐνδυναμώσαντί infra 6. 15. k John 9. 39, 1. με Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, ὅτι πιστόν με ἡγήσατο Acts 3. 17. & 8. 3. & 9. 1.
13 θέμενος εἰς διακονίαν, [k] τὸν πρότερον ὄντα βλάσφημον καὶ & 22. 4. & 26. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 9. διώκτην καὶ ὑβριστήν. Ἀλλ' ἠλεήθην, ὅτι ἀγνοῶν ἐποίησα Gal. 1. 13. Phil. 3. 6.

against the just and good, but only against the lawless and disorderly.' So also, observes Bp. Middleton, at Gal. v. 23, St. Paul having enumerated the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, &c., subjoins, against such there is no law, οὐκ ἔστι νόμος· which appears to be exactly equivalent to the νόμος οὐ κεῖται in the present verse. 'I do not deny (continues he) that the Mosaic Law is comprehended in νόμος; I contend only, that νόμος in this place is not limited to that Law, but that it comprises every law, written and unwritten, human and Divine; nor could the argument of the Apostle be stated with greater force, than by his extending what was primarily meant of the Law of Moses to law universally: the Mosaic Law, says St. Paul, was intended to restrain the wicked; against the just neither it nor any other law was ever promulged. [Thus Aristotle, cited by Benson, says, "The law is not against the virtuous, because the virtuous are a law unto themselves." And so, I would add, it was a saying of Menander, δίκαιος ἐὰν ᾖς, τῷ τρόπῳ (thy [good] disposition) χρήσῃ νόμῳ, as a law.] As to the following crimes being violations of the Decalogue, that will not be conclusive against this interpretation, since, even supposing St. Paul to have alluded more immediately to the Decalogue, this allusion will not be inconsistent with the supposition that νόμος was meant of law indefinitely; and in speaking of the vices, which all laws are designed to restrain, a Jew would naturally specify those which his own Law had particularly prohibited.' (Bp. Middleton.)

In the subsequent enumeration of vices, the general terms ἀνόμ. and ἀνυποτάκ. (lawless and unruly) are, by way of exemplification, followed up by special ones. These, however, are introduced by the connecting link of some which are partly general, and partly special;—as ἀσεβ. and ἀνοσ., ἁμαρτ. and βεβ.; and which rather consist in principle than in practice. Ἁμαρτ. may be taken, with some, to mean idolaters; but it is rather synonymous with ἀσεβ., with which term it is often connected in Scripture. Ἀνοσ. and βεβ. are also nearly synonymous, and may be rendered 'impious and heathenish.' Next come the special terms, commencing with murder, both of the worst kind, and the less criminal sort. By πόρνοις are meant adulterers as well as fornicators. To murder and sins of uncleanness the Apostle, in ἀνδραποδισταῖς, subjoins robbery of the worst kind; for Expositors are agreed that the word means kidnapping free persons to be sold as slaves (see Schol. on Aristoph. Plut. 521); a crime universally regarded as of the deepest dye, and always punished with death. By ψεῦσται and ἐπίορκοι are denoted different modifications of the same crime (so Rom. i. 31, ἀσύνθετοι, ἄσπονδοι), the latter rising beyond the former, as perjury exceeds perfidy; for by ψεύστ. are, I apprehend, denoted not (as the expression is generally interpreted) liars, but deceivers, utterly faithless, as in Rom. iii. 4. 1 John ii. 4. 22. So Thucydides, in his inimitable description of the state of society in Greece at the time of the Peloponnesian war, l. iii. 83, assembles together these two vices (namely, ψεύστ. and ἐπιορκ.) thus: οὔτε λόγος ἐχυρὸς οὔτε ὅρκος φοβερός. Εἴ τι is for ὅ τι, meaning, 'whatever else.' By ὑγιαιν. διδ. is meant, by metonymy, 'sound or wholesome doctrine.' So ὑγιαίνοντες λόγοι at vi. 3. 2 Tim. i. 13, and Philo, p. 32 (cited by Loesner), τοὺς ὑγιαίνοντας λόγους. Also Plutarch, cited by Wetstein, has δόξας περὶ θεῶν ὑγιαινούσας καὶ ἀληθεῖς.

11. κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγ., &c.] These words are closely connected with the preceding, and are added to show that there is reference to the Christian law, as well as the moral part of the Mosaic law; which Benson thinks is the same as saying that the law of nature, or the moral law, is adopted into the Christian system. Μακάριος is an epithet applied to God at vi. 15, and so employed by Philo, who calls God μόνον μακάριον. So also we have frequently in Homer μακάριοι θεοὶ αἰὲν ἐόντες.

12. Quo suam apud omnes tueatur autoritatem, nec temerè quisquam credat adversariis, varia et sinistra de ipso spargentibus, plenius exponit, quomodo sibi concreditum sit Evangelium, ostendens a quo et quomodo vocatus fuerit, quomodo item factus idoneus, variisque donis ornatus a Deo, ut munus injunctum fideliter exequeretur. (Hyperius.)

— τῷ ἐνδυναμώσαντι.] Lit., 'who invigorated me;' meaning, who gave me the ability and qualifications [for discharging this trust];' of course implying all that Divine illumination and supernatural power (called δύναμις, Acts i. 8) by which he was enabled to fully comprehend and effectually preach the Gospel. All this he constantly ascribes to Christ only. See Acts ix. 17. Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. v. 5. Gal. i. 1. Ὅτι πιστ. με ἡγ. θέμ. εἰς διακ. is for ὅτι ἔθετό με, πιστὸν ἡγησάμενος, εἰς διακ.

13. In βλάσφ., διώκ., and ὑβρ. there is a climax; the spirit of ill-will, expressed in the ἐν ἀπιστίᾳ· ὑπερεπλεόνασε δὲ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν 14 [1] Matt. 9.13. Mark 2. 17. Luke 5. 32. & 19. 10. 1 John 3. 5. μετὰ πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [1] Πιστὸς 15 ὁ λόγος καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, ὅτι Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς ἦλθεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἁμαρτωλοὺς σῶσαι· ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ· ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἠλεήθην, ἵνα ἐν ἐμοὶ πρώτῳ ἐνδείξηται 16 Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τὴν πᾶσαν μακροθυμίαν, πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν m Rom 16. 27. τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν ἐπ' αὐτῷ εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον. [m] Τῷ 17 infra 6. 16. δὲ Βασιλεῖ τῶν αἰώνων, ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ σοφῷ Θεῷ, τιμὴ καὶ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν.

first, being, in the second and third terms, carried into greater and greater effect. On βλάσφ. see Acts xxvi. 11; on διώκ., Gal. i. 13, and on ὑβρ., Acts viii. 3. ix. 2. In ὅτι ἀγνοῶν—ἀπιστίᾳ there is an obscurity and seeming incongruity arising from brevity of expression; two clauses being blended into one. The full sense is, 'because I did what I did in simple ignorance [of the nature of my conduct], and in sincere [though unfounded] unbelief [of the truth of the Gospel].'

14. ὑπερεπλεόνασε—ἀγάπης.] This is, from brevity, obscure. The sense, when fully expressed, is as follows: '[And not only was I pardoned,] but the grace of our Lord so superabounded, [beyond my deserts,] that I was also brought to believe and love Jesus Christ [whom I had blasphemed and hated].' See Acts viii. 3. xxvi. 9. 1 Cor. xv. 9. So Theophylact, after Chrysostom, similarly supplies the ellipsis by ἀλλὰ οὐ μόνον τοῦτο, ἀλλὰ καί.

15. We have here, as Crellius observes, a conclusion from the foregoing, in which the Apostle deduces, from his own example, that which he had above asserted as generally true.

— πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, &c.] Meaning, 'assuredly true and worthy of entire acceptance is the assertion that,' &c. Ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος is a phrase frequent in the later Classical writers and Philo; where, however, it is used of persons, not of things. Σῶσαι. Meaning, not only 'to put into the way of salvation,' but also to furnish with such aids of Divine grace in working it out, as are consistent with the free-will of men as moral agents.

— ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ.] At this strong expression the Commentators stumble. To remove the difficulty, Benson explains it, 'the first who, from a blasphemous persecutor, have become a Christian,' which sense, however, would require the Article; while some, as Newcome and Valpy, render 'a chief,' i. e. one of the chief. But whether πρῶτος ever has that sense may be doubted; certainly not in Eph. vi. 2, where see Note. Nor will the absence of the Article countenance it; since, as Bp. Middleton, Gr. Art. i. 6. 3. shows, ordinals dispense with the Article. Besides, from the very position of the word, and the air of the clause, it is manifest that a superlative sense is here intended. Hence it is best to retain the common interpretation, regarding the words (with Chrysostom, Theophylact, Theodoret, and Grotius) as merely expressive of deep humility and self-abasement; like those at 1 Cor. xv. 9, ἐγώ εἰμι ἐλάχιστος τῶν ἀποστόλων.

16. The Apostle here gives a reason for the above conclusion, and shows why he had, from his own example, deduced the above general position concerning the salvation of sinners; evincing that that was true, in all which he proved to be true in himself. Meaning to express which, he first meets a tacit objection, which might arise from his last words,—wherein he had called himself chief among sinners; evincing, in opposition thereto, that it was no vain boast when he asserted that he had obtained mercy, but that there was a reason why he had been thus favoured. (Crellius.)

— ἀλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο ἠλεήθην, &c.] Meaning, it would seem, 'Howbeit for this reason was I,' &c. In other words, 'I was the first and chief of sinners, and therefore in me first [of all who had so sinned], or, in me principally did Christ show mercy.' The term ὑποτύπωσις properly denotes such an exact representation of the form of any thing as is obtained by a stamp or impression. Thus it came to mean an exemplar, and finally a striking example, as was the case in God's dealings with St. Paul, and all sincerely penitent sinners. So it is well explained by Hesychius, σημεῖον. Such, too, is the sense assigned to it in the Pesch. Syr. and Arabic Versions, and also by Grotius, Casaubon, Piscator, and Hyperius. In the words ἵνα ἐν ἐμοὶ πρώτῳ ἐνδείξηται Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς τὴν πᾶσαν μακροθυμίαν we have expressed (as Hyperius remarks) the first reason for this procedure, namely, the glory of God; in the next words, πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν ἐπ' αὐτῷ εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον, there is the second, namely, the edification of men.

17. Here the Apostle's gratitude for the mercy of God breaks out (as often) into an expression of devout praise and adoration. The term ὁ βασιλεὺς is often applied to God, as being the King of kings and Lord of lords. He is, moreover, termed ἀφθάρτῳ, as distinguished from earthly monarchs; ἀοράτῳ, as being φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ ἰδεῖν δύναται, infra vi. 16. On μόνῳ σοφῷ see Rom. xvi. 27. I have here pointed as I have, because it has been shown by Bp. Middleton that ἀφθ. and ἀορ. agree not with βασιλεῖ, but with Θεῷ, and that the true construction is, 'To the eternal King, the immortal, invisible, only wise God;' the Article before ἀφθάρτῳ being, as frequently elsewhere, omitted before a title in apposition. The word σοφῷ, not found in some ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz. Internal evidence, indeed, would seem against it, inasmuch as it may have been introduced from Rom. xvi. 27. Yet I cannot but suspect that it was removed by those half-learned Critics, who stumbled at the expression, perhaps from their taking the passage, as

18 [n] Ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαί σοι, τέκνον Τιμόθεε, n Infra 6. 12. 2 Tim. 4. 7.
κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας, ἵνα στρατεύῃ ἐν 19 αὐταῖς τὴν καλὴν στρατείαν, [o] ἔχων πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συν- o Infra 3. 9. & 4. 7. είδησιν· ἥν τινες ἀπωσάμενοι, περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐναυάγησαν· 20 [p] ὧν ἐστιν Ὑμέναιος καὶ Ἀλέξανδρος, οὓς παρέδωκα τῷ Σα- p 1 Cor. 5. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 17. & 4. 14.
τανᾷ, ἵνα παιδευθῶσι μὴ βλασφημεῖν.

does Lampe on John xvii. 3 (but wrongly, as will appear from the Note on that passage), as if pointed ἀφθάρτῳ, ἀοράτῳ, μόνῳ, σοφῷ Θεῷ. If, indeed, that were the true punctuation, the word would seem almost useless; but that argument will only be valid against the punctuation, not the validity of σοφῷ. Lampe, indeed, asks why the expression 'only wise' should be applied to the Deity any more than 'only invisible.' But it would not be difficult to offer a reason for that, were it necessary: but it is not; for μόνος is merely used by an idiom very suitable to Oriental diction, whereby it merely raises the positive of any quality to the superlative. 'Certainly μόνος (as observes Bp. Burgess, cited on John xvii. 3,) does not possess so exclusive a sense as the Unitarians suppose.' But what Unitarians think now, the Arians might think in the early ages,—and therefore I cannot but suspect that doctrinal reasons may have concurred in inducing some early Critics to throw out the word; emboldened, perhaps by what is said at vi. 15, 16, ὁ μακάριος καὶ μόνος δυνάστης, ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευόντων, καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυριευόντων, ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον. It may, indeed, be urged that the Trinitarians might introduce it from Rom. xvi. 27; but (putting good faith out of the question, and the fact that, of the orthodox adding any thing to the text, very few proofs can be adduced,) it was far more the interest of the Arians to remove, than of the Trinitarians to add any thing. Besides, the former are known, on various other occasions, to have tampered with the text.

18. The Apostle here resumes what he had said at ver. 3. In this verse we have a remarkable transposition; the construction being, ταύτην τὴν παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαί σοι, ἵνα, κατὰ τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας, στρατεύῃ, &c. Ἐπὶ in this sense, concerning, is not very frequent. Examples, however, occur in Mark ix. 12, γέγραπται ἐπὶ τὸν Υἱὸν τ. ἀ. Heb. vii. 13, ἐφ' ὃν λέγεται ταῦτα. 2 Cor. ii. 3. 2 Thess. iii. 4. Προαγούσας may be rendered antecedent, or 'preceding,' as Heb. vii. 18, namely, which preceded his appointment to the ministerial office.

Of the words τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας (to which certain later Commentators have assigned various new, but more or less objectionable senses) the only well-founded interpretation appears to be that of the ancient and most modern Expositors, who refer them to the revelations made by the Holy Spirit to Apostles, or persons possessing the χάρισμα, or Spiritual gift called the προφητεία; (of the existence of which we have indubitable evidence in the New Test.) which were virtually directions as to the persons proper to be designated as officers and teachers in the Church. See Acts xiii. 2. xx. 28. 1 Cor. xii. 4—8, sq. Thus we may suppose the revelation, in the present case, to have been, that Timothy would be a person who should prove eminently useful in the Church, and consequently be very proper to be invested with government in it. See Whitby.

— ἵνα στρατεύῃ.] Not 'that thou mightest,' but 'that thou mayest war.' A military metaphor (like one in Joseph. de Macc. § 9, ἱερὰν καὶ εὐγενῆ στρατείαν στρατεύσασθαι ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐσεβείας) employed in allusion to the courage and vigilance requisite to his office. Several similar modes of expression have been adduced from ancient writers, representing life as a warfare, and man as a soldier. So Seneca, Ep. 96, 'Vivere militare est,' and Max. Tyr. xix. 4, στρατηγὸν μὲν τὸν Θεὸν, στρατείαν δὲ τὴν ζωὴν, ὁπλίτην δὲ τὸν ἄνθρωπον. Apulej. Met. xi. 'Da nomen huic sanctæ militiæ, cujus olim sacramento etiam lætaberis, teque jam nunc obsequio religionis nostræ dedica.'

The Article before στρατείαν is not pleonastic, the sense being, as the Pesch. Syr. Translator saw, 'the good warfare,'—namely, of faith, as vi. 12, ἀγ. τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τῆς πίστεως. (See also 2 Tim. iv. 7.) For there is, as Theophylact remarks, a κακὴ στρατεία, the making our members instruments of unrighteousness. Ἐν αὐταῖς may mean, 'by and through them;' i. e. by the stimulus proceeding from those revelations, even the desire not to be found unworthy of them. So ἐν is used at 2 Cor. iv. 6.

19. πίστιν καὶ ἀγ. συνείδ.] Mentioned supra v. 5, and forming the principal virtues of the Christian soldier. 'These (observes Dr. Is. Barrow, Serm. vol. ii. p. 10) are terms inseparable from each other; for the first is nothing but the stipulation of a good conscience, fully persuaded that Christianity is true, and firmly resolved to comply with it; and as to the other, a man void of conscience will not embark in Christianity, or having laid conscience aside, he will soon make shipwreck of Faith by apostasy from it.' Πίστις has here respect to orthodoxy of doctrine (what is called, infra iv. 6, τοῖς λόγοις τῆς πίστεως καὶ τῆς καλῆς διδασκαλίας), and συνείδησις, to sincerity in teaching it. Ἀπωσάμενοι, 'having cast off.'

— περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἐναυάγησαν.] We have here a nautical metaphor, derived from merchant sailors, who lose their property by the vessel, in which they have embarked it, being run on a rock, περὶ ἕρμα, as it is said in Thucyd. vii. 25 (where see my Note). This metaphorical use of the word is rare, but it is found both in the Fathers and in the Classical writers, as in two or three passages cited by the Commentators; to which I am enabled to add a still more apposite one from Pindar, frag. incert. xxiii., Ἀρχὰ μεγάλας ἀρετᾶς, ὤνασσ' Ἀλή | θεια, Μὴ πταίσῃς ἐμὴν | σύνθεσιν (for συνθήκην, 'plighted faith') τραχεῖ ποτὲ ψεύδει, i. e. 'do not dash the bark of my faith on the rock of falsehood and deceit.'

20. οὓς παρέδωκα τ. Σ.] See Note on 1 Cor. v. 5.

II. ΠΑΡΑΚΑΛΩ οὖν πρῶτον πάντων ποιεῖσθαι δεήσεις, 1 προσευχὰς, ἐντεύξεις, εὐχαριστίας, ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, [a] ὑπὲρ βασιλέων καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄντων, ἵνα 2 ἤρεμον καὶ ἡσύχιον βίον διάγωμεν ἐν πάσῃ εὐσεβείᾳ καὶ σεμνότητι. [b] Τοῦτο γὰρ καλὸν καὶ ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ 3 σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, [c] ὃς πάντας ἀνθρώπους θέλει σωθῆναι 4 καὶ εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας ἐλθεῖν. [d] Εἷς γὰρ Θεὸς, εἷς καὶ 5 μεσίτης Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων, ἄνθρωπος Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς, a Jer. 29. 7. Rom. 13. 1. b Supra 1. 1.

c Ezek. 18. 23. Jer. 29. 7. Tit. 2. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9. John 3. 16, 17.
d John 17. 3. Rom. 3. 30. & 10. 12. Gal. 3. 19. Heb. 9 15.

— ἵνα παιδευθῶσι μὴ βλασφ.] We have here, I would observe, a kind of proverbial expression (not unknown in our own language), which may best be illustrated by a similar one in Soph. Antig. 1089, ἵνα γνῷ τρέφειν τὴν γλῶσσαν ἡσυχωτέραν. The term βλασφ. seems to have respect, not to blasphemy properly so called, but that speaking evil of the truth to which error indirectly leads.

II. The Apostle, now proceeding from generals to particulars, gives directions for the regulation of the Church; and first as to its external form, commencing with the most important of external observances,—public worship.

1. δεήσεις, προσευχὰς, ἐντ., εὐχ.] Ἔντευξις signifies properly a meeting with any one; then, access to him; and, by metonymy, supplication; though, in the Classical writers, it is almost always used of supplications to man: yet in Plut. Num. 14. we have it applied to those offered to God: ποιεῖσθαι τὰς πρὸς τὸ Θεῖον ἐντεύξεις.

By these several terms δεήσεις, προσευχὰς, &c. we may understand, 1. deprecations of evil; 2. supplications for good; 3. intercession for others; 4. grateful acknowledgments to the Divine goodness for preservation or prosperity. A view, I would observe, supported by the authority of St. Augustin (as quoted by Dr. Parr, Sermons, vol. ii. p. 644), who interprets δεήσεις deprecations that evil may be averted from rulers; προσευχὰς, petitions that good may be obtained for them; ἐντεύξεις, occasional intercessions, that needful graces may be conferred upon them; εὐχαριστίας, thanks when they have fulfilled the high functions of their station, by effecting the deliverance of their people from impending danger, or by redressing some grievous and inveterate wrongs, or by diffusing general happiness in the regular and orderly administration of government.

— πάντων ἀνθρώπων.] Meaning all, both those within and those without the pale of Christianity.

2. τῶν ἐν ὑπεροχῇ ὄ.] Answering to the οἱ ἐν τέλει of the Classical writers, 'those who hold any office in the state,' the ἐξουσίαι of Tit. iii. 1.

— ἵνα ἤρεμον—διάγωμεν.] Not meaning, as some understand, 'Let us do this, that we may live free from persecution.' What seems meant is, that the prayers are to be offered up chiefly, and in a religious view, with reference to the will of God, by whom the powers that be, are ordained, but partly, and in a political one, in return for that quietness, which can no otherwise be attained than by good government, and without which godliness could be ill cultivated. The latter of these reasons is referred to in the expression καλὸν (for δίκαιον) of the next verse; the former, in the ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ at ver. 3.

Of the two terms ἤρεμον and ἡσύχιον, the former signifies peaceful or tranquil, as opposed to agitation and trouble; the latter, peaceable, or offering no disturbance to others. So 1 Pet. iii. 4, τοῦ πραέος καὶ ἡσυχίου πνεύματος. Σεμνότητι is not well rendered gravity; for the term has respect, not to manners, but life, denoting that decorous regularity of morals,—required in a well-ordered society, as opposed to the licentious practices especially prevalent in times of war and civil commotion. See Thucyd. iii. 83. 84. So Calvin remarks on this last particular: 'Hoc etiam fit magistratuum beneficio, ne ad belluinas—fœditates se homines prostituant, aut indecore lasciviant; sed potius vigeat modestia et moderatio.' Thus the term is best rendered by the Vulgate honestate. In which sense Ælian, Var. Hist. ii. 13, uses σεμνότης βίου; and so Herodian, ii. 1. 10, has διὰ σεμνότητα αἰδούμενος, 'respected for his worth.'

3. τοῦτο γὰρ καλὸν, &c.] 'For this (namely, making intercession for all men, especially rulers) is good,' &c. The expression καλὸν seems to mean what is good as regards men (so Theophylact explains it τὸ φύσει καλόν); and thus it may be rendered, with Rosenmuller, pulchrum, honestum, quod decet. The word ἀπόδεκτον signifies properly what is worthy of being accepted or approved; but here it denotes what is approved, answering to εὐάρεστος in Heb. xiii. 21. So it is explained by Hesychius, ἐπαινετόν.

4. πάντας ἀνθρώπους.] Meaning, 'all nations and all individuals;' q. d. 'God desires the salvation of all, and therefore for all we ought to pray.'

The words καὶ—ἐλθεῖν suggest the means of salvation,—namely, by coming to a full knowledge and recognition of the truth [of the Gospel]. In ἐπίγνωσιν there is a sensus prægnans often found in ἐπιγινώσκω. The conjoint and implicit sense 'recognition' has place in the verb at Matt. xiv. 35. Mark vi. 54. Luke xxiv. 16. Acts iii. 10. xii. 14. The word properly signifies full and complete knowledge. So in Ceb. Tab. 12. we have εἰς τὴν ἀληθ. παιδείαν ἐλθεῖν.

5. εἷς γὰρ Θεὸς—Ἰησοῦς.] This seems to have reference, not (as Benson and Rosenmuller suppose) to the praying for all, but to what immediately precedes; q. d. ['God our Saviour will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth;] for he is the God alike of all, and the Man Christ Jesus is the Mediator between God and man, who gave himself a ransom for all.' Here it is implied, that it is alone by a recognition of the truth, as regards God and the Mediator between God and man, that we can be saved. As to the Unitarian gloss on μεσ. (by which it is taken as merely meaning 'one who makes known the mind of two parties to each other, and concludes an agreement or covenant between them'), that is disproved by the words of the next verse, ὁ δοὺς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων· from which it plainly appears that the principal notion of μεσ., as applied to Christ, is that of atonement. This is irrefragably proved by Whitby, Macknight, and Abp. Magee; the last of whom shows that this doctrine of atonement is interwoven with the whole texture of the New Test. On the whole subject of mediation and atonement, see some masterly remarks by Bp. Warburton, Div. Leg., book ix. ch. 2, who there shows at large that mediation, to be effectual, must be enforced by some satisfaction; and that, as the mode of this mediation might have been either by interceding for the remission of the forfeiture, or by satisfying for the debt, so we find by Scripture that both were employed, the intercession being by way of satisfaction for the debt. The price paid was the death of the Son of God. And as to the nature of that death, which had the efficacy of redemption, he shows that it must be (as it was) both voluntary and offered up as a sacrifice. And thus the expiatory sacrifice of Christ on the cross operated for our redemption.

6 [c] ὁ δοὺς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων· τὸ μαρτύριον και- e Matt. 20. 28.
7 ροῖς ἰδίοις· [f] εἰς ὃ ἐτέθην ἐγὼ κήρυξ καὶ ἀπόστολος, (ἀλή- 1 Cor. 1 6 Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14.

2 Thess. 1. 10. f Acts 9. 15. & 13. 2. & 22. 21. Rom. 1. 9. & 9 1. & 11. 13. & 15. 16. Eph. 3. 8. Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 8. 2 Tim. 1. 11

As to the other Unitarian perversion of the sense, which represents Christ as here called a mere man, it has been abundantly refuted by Bps. Pearson, Bull, and Warburton, and Dr. Macknight. Suffice it to say, that were he a mere man, how could he mediate between God and man? He would himself need a mediation. See Bp. Beveridge, cited in D'Oyly and Mant. It is plain that this passage cannot contravene the doctrine that Christ was both God and man. Indeed had he not been more than man, there would have been no occasion for ἄνθρωπος, which word is never found so applied to any other person, as Moses or John. And though in Numb. xii. 3 we have ὁ ἄνθρωπος Μωϋσῆς πραΰς (ἦν), yet there the Article is found, which it is not here in any MS.; nor, indeed, is it wanting, ἄνθρωπος Ἰησοῦς Χρ. standing as a title, like Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστός. In the above passage the Article is quite requisite, and ought to have been represented by rendering this man; for no reason can surely be imagined why האיש should not be so translated there, as it is in Esther ix. 4, האיש מרדכי 'this man Mordecai.' And here it may be remarked, that our common Version throws a needless stumbling-block in the way of the ignorant, by rendering the οὗτος,—αὐτὸς, and ὅ δε in Heb. iii. 3. vii. 4, 24. viii. 3, and x. 12, by 'this man.' It ought surely to be 'this person.' But to proceed,—in the present passage the Article is unnecessary, since, as Bp. Middleton has shown, 'Jesus Christ could not be called the man κατ' ἐξοχὴν, since he did not possess the human nature in a pre-eminent degree.' The learned Prelate rightly regards ἄνθρ. as used for a title, in the same way as Κύριος Ἰ. Χρ. Thus we may safely assert (with Mr. Valpy), 'that Christ is here named Man by the title derived from his inferior or human nature, and that is attributed to one of his natures, which properly belongs to the compound nature of Christ; for he is mediator, not inasmuch as he is man, but inasmuch as he is θεάνθρωπος. This does not exclude the Son's participation of the Godhead, but distinguishes his mediatorial office, to which on many accounts the Divine nature was also necessary.' 'Furthermore Jesus Christ (says Whitby) has here the title adapted to his humanity given him, in order to intimate to us that having taken upon him the nature common to us all, to fit him for this office, he must design it for the good of all who were partakers of that nature.' Comp. Heb. ii. 16—18, which is an excellent comment on the present passage.

6. ὁ δοὺς ἑαυτὸν ἀντίλ. ὑ. π.] See Matt. xx. 28, and Note, and Bps. Sanderson and Beveridge in D'Oyly & Mant. The ἀντίλ. of this passage is a stronger term than the λύτρ. of Matthew, and is well explained by Hesych. ἀντίδοτον, implying the substitution, in suffering punishment, of one person for another. See 1 Cor. xv. 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. Tit. ii. 14. 1 Pet. i. 18. The next words, τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίοις, from their abruptness, involve considerable difficulty, and hence great diversity of opinion exists on their sense. As to the various readings, they seem only to attest the perplexity of the ancient Critics, and are of no value, except to show what some ancients supposed to be the sense. To advert to the interpretation of the moderns, Abp. Newcome renders, 'a doctrine to be testified of in its proper time.' This, however, is paying no attention to the Article, which, indeed, chiefly occasions the difficulty of the sentence; and though Dr. Benson's version expresses the force of the Article, it cannot, I think, be admitted, since μαρτύριον, in the sense of a personal witness, is unprecedented. I should prefer, with Bp. Middleton, to put the clause into a parenthesis, and render, 'the proof of it in due time.' Yet this runs counter to the laws of parenthesis, and the sense arising is scarcely suitable; not to say that the signification proof is unauthorized. In fact, the learned Prelate so distrusted his own interpretation, as to be ready to suspect (as Scultetus long ago had done) that the clause is not genuine. I would propose to render, 'which (i. e. the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all) is the testimony (or doctrine) [to be borne witness to, i. e. to be set forth and taught] in its due season,' namely, that fitted for its purpose. Thus καιροῖς ἰδίοις will have the same sense as at vi. 15, and Tit. i. 3, and is nearly equivalent to τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ χρόνου at Gal. iv. 4, the time appointed in the counsels of God, the time of the Gospel. The Apostle, then, means to hint to Timothy (and, through him, to all ministers), that the fact of Christ's having given himself a ransom for all is to be the great subject of their preaching; and, accordingly, the present sentiment is quite parallel to that at 1 Cor. ii. 2, where Paul professes that he 'determined to know nothing (i. e. to keep solely to the one truth) of Jesus Christ and him crucified.' The above interpretation is, I believe, not liable to any well-founded objection.

θειαν λέγω ἐν Χριστῷ, οὐ ψεύδομαι!) διδάσκαλος ἐθνῶν g Ps. 134. 2. Isa. 1. 15. Mal. 1. 11. John 4. 21. ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀληθείᾳ. [g] Βούλομαι οὖν προσεύχεσθαι τοὺς 8 ἄνδρας ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, ἐπαίροντας ὁσίους χεῖρας χωρὶς h Titus 2. 3. 1 Pet. 3. 3. ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ. [h] Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας ἐν 9 καταστολῇ κοσμίῳ μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ σωφροσύνης κοσμεῖν ἑαυτὰς, μὴ ἐν πλέγμασιν, ἢ χρυσῷ, ἢ μαργαρίταις, ἢ ἱμα-τισμῷ πολυτελεῖ· ἀλλ', ὃ πρέπει γυναιξὶν ἐπαγγελλομέναις 10

The supplying 'which is' may be defended from the laws of apposition; for that the idiom falls under that head was seen by Estius and Crellius. The above version is too, I find, supported by that of Le Clerc, 'Ce qui devoit être annoncé dans son temps;' and also that of Luther, approved by Wolf, who shows that the μαρτύριον must be referred, not to Christ, or to his passion, but to the thing to be testified of, declared and taught concerning Christ, namely, that 'he gave himself a ransom for all.' Finally, the above interpretation is strongly confirmed by the next words, εἰς ὃ (scil. μαρτ., i. e. κήρυγμα) ἐτέθην κήρυξ.

7. ἀλήθειαν—οὐ ψεύδομαι!] A solemn form of asseveration, occurring also at Rom. ix. 1. See also John i. 19, 20, and Note. Ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀληθ., i. e. 'in the faith [of Christ] and the truth [of the Gospel].'

8. The οὖν is resumptive, and refers to the direction at ver. 1. Τοὺς ἄνδρας may be rendered 'the men,' as having opposed to it just after τὰς γυναῖκας; also intimating that the men, not the women, were to lead the prayers. Ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ seems to mean, 'in every or any place [appropriated to public prayer],' perhaps with allusion to the superstitious attachment to certain places, (as Jerusalem,) supposed to be more than ordinarily holy, which the Judaizers fostered.

— ἐπαίροντας ὁσίους χεῖρας.] Referring to the action commonly adopted then, as now, in fervent prayer; see Ps. cxxxiv. 2 and cxli. 2. The use in this expression of an epithet before χεῖρας is very rare. One example is adduced by Wetstein from a passage of Galen; and I have noted another in Philo, p. 648, where we have καθαρὰς (answering to ὁσίους here), which term signifies unpolluted by vice; in allusion to the carefully washed, though morally unclean, hands of the Jews and Judaizers. The expressions ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ may be understood either of animosity, altercation, and debate about matters of doubtful disputation, as the times and places of prayer, or other disputed points; or, according to the interpretation of the ancient Commentators in general and most modern ones, doubting, ἀμφιβολίας, hesitation, as opposed to implicit faith (compare James i. 6), to which it is as contrary as the ὀργὴ just before mentioned is to Christian charity; see Calvin and Hyperius. This latter view is supported by a similar passage of Phil. ii. 14, χωρὶς γογγυσμῶν καὶ διαλογισμῶν; though the former may be considered more agreeable to the context.

9. ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας, &c.] Here almost all modern Expositors take the sense to be, 'And in like manner I wish the women to adorn themselves,' &c. But thus there is no correspondence, such as is intimated by the particle ὡσαύτως. Now, as it is likely that the Apostle would address something to the women, as well as the men, on the subject of prayer, I agree with the ancient and a few eminent modern Expositors (as Grotius), that we must repeat not only βούλομαι, from the preceding, but also προσεύχεσθαι. Some, indeed, repeat the whole sentence; but that is harsh and unnecessary; for ὡσαύτως may be taken to mean ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ—διαλογισμοῦ. There seems to be here, as often, a blending of two sentences into one; and thus καὶ is to be repeated with κοσμεῖν. So at ὡσαύτως in Luke xiii. 3, and 1 Cor. xi. 25, ἔλαβεν must be repeated from the preceding; and in 1 Tim. iii. 8, 11. Tit. ii. 3, δεῖ εἶναι is to be repeated from the preceding. In the present passage, however, the Apostle blends the two sentences, as meaning to say, 'I wish them to attend such prayers in modest apparel:' thus adverting to two points in which the two sexes, respectively, would be too apt to err; the former from a spirit of contention, the latter from vanity and fondness for exterior adornment.

In μετὰ αἰδοῦς, &c., the Apostle further developes his meaning; q. d. 'And let this adornment be rather with modesty than with art,' where the expressions αἰδ. καὶ σωφρ. correspond to what Pericles, in Thucydides, ii. 45, calls 'the virtue of their sex, and its greatest glory.'

— μὴ ἐν πλέγμασιν, &c.] The μὴ, in this kind of inverse construction, stands for οὐκ—ἀλλὰ, non tam—quam; as in a kindred passage of 1 Pet. iii. 3, where see Note, as also my Note on Thucydides, i. 6. As answering to the πλέγματα here may be compared the ἐμπλοκὴ τριχῶν in the passage of St. Peter, and the κρώβυλον in that of Thucydides; both expressions meaning a topping of braided hair. By the term χρυσῷ we must understand the golden head-bands, bracelets, armlets, anklets, ear-rings; and by μαργαρίταις, ornaments for various parts of the body, made of precious stones. So aureum in Latin is used for ornaments of gold; as Virgil, Æn. iv. 138, 'Crines nodantur in aurum.' Revel. xvii. 4, καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἦν κεχρυσωμένη χρυσίῳ καὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ, καὶ μαργαρίταις. In illustration of the sentiment, Wetstein cites Xenophon, Mem. ii. τὸ σῶμα τῇ καθαρότητι κεκοσμημένην, τὰ δὲ ὄμματα αἰδοῖ, τὸ δὲ σχῆμα σωφροσύνῃ· and I have noted something similar in Philostr. Heroic. c. 13, ἐκομᾷ τε ἀνεπαχθῶς· οὐ γὰρ ἤσκει τὴν κόμην, οὐδὲ ὑπέκειτο αὐτῇ, ἀλλὰ μόνην τὴν ἀρετὴν ἐποιεῖτο κόσμημα.

10. ἐπαγγ.] This use of the word, by which it denotes 'the following a course' of life, or adopting a set of opinions, is found also in the best Classical writers; as Xenophon, Mem. i. 2. 7. iii. 1. 1. Wisd. ii. 13. Θεοσ. denotes the worship of God, and, as is implied, in its purest form. Thus it had been used of Judaism, but was now transferred to Christianity.

— δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν] scil. κοσμεῖν ἑαυτάς.

11 θεοσέβειαν, δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν. [i] Γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ μανθανέτω i Gen. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 14. 34.
12 ἐν πάσῃ ὑποταγῇ· γυναικὶ δὲ διδάσκειν οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω, οὐδὲ Eph. 5. 22.
13 αὐθεντεῖν ἀνδρὸς, ἀλλ' εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ. [k] Ἀδὰμ γὰρ πρῶτος k Gen. 1. 27. & 2. 18, 22.
14 ἐπλάσθη, εἶτα Εὔα. [l] καὶ Ἀδὰμ οὐκ ἠπατήθη· ἡ δὲ γυνὴ 1 Cor. 11. 8, 9.
15 ἀπατηθεῖσα ἐν παραβάσει γέγονε. Σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς l Gen 3. 6. 2 Cor. 11. 3. τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν μείνωσιν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ καὶ ἁγιασμῷ, μετὰ σωφροσύνης.

Similarly it is said, 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4, ὧν ἔστω ὁ κόσμος—ἀλλ' ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος, ἐν τῷ ἀφθάρτῳ τοῦ πραέος καὶ ἡσυχίου πνεύματος.

11. γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ μανθ.] Ἡσυχία, in this sense, to denote modest silence, is rare in the Classical writers, but found in the Sept. and Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 5, καὶ καθισάντων μεθ' ἡσυχίας.

The best Expositors are agreed that this injunction relates, like the foregoing, to public worship; and that what is added in the next verse is intended to further develope the meaning here. Women are enjoined, at divine worship, to keep that silence which is suitable to subjection. They are not only not to pray in public, but not to instruct; they are to learn, and not to teach, nor in any way assume authority over the other sex, but to be quiet; see Chrysostom and Theophylact. Thus the injunction here is exactly the same as that at 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

12. οὐδὲ αὐθεντεῖν ἀνδρὸς] 'nor to bear authority over.' Αὐθεντεῖν signifies properly, 1. to slay with one's own hand; 2. to take the law into one's own hand, αὐτοδικεῖν. Hence it comes to mean, as here, ἐξουσιάζειν.

— ἀλλ' εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχίᾳ.] Supply κελεύω, from the preceding words οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω. By ἡσυχ. here cannot, as Rosenmuller understands, be meant the not discharging a public office; for the women, we know, occupied the Diaconal office. It must certainly denote that quiet silence and peaceable acquiescence (the ἡσύχιον πνεῦμα inculcated, 1 Pet. iii. 4), which is the very opposite to a spirit of turbulence or disorder.

13, 14. Here are adduced two principal reasons for the foregoing injunction, serving to show why the female sex is in subjection to the male. As to the first, it is generally supposed to be founded on the Jewish notion, by which (as we find from the Rabbins) priority of creation was always thought to carry with it precedence; see Wetstein and Loesner. There is, however, no necessity to resort to that principle. We may regard the words as briefly hinting an argument, which is more plainly expressed in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9, Οὐ γάρ ἐστιν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικὸς, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ ἐξ ἀνδρός· καὶ γὰρ οὐκ ἐκτίσθη ἀνὴρ διὰ τὴν γυναῖκα, ἀλλὰ γυνὴ διὰ τὸν ἄνδρα, which passage is the best comment on the present; showing that her being created as an helpmeet to man implies an inferiority to, and dependence on, man. Answering to ἐπλάσθη here is ἐκτίσθη there; a term used with reference to Gen. ii. 7, ἔπλασεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸν ἄνθρ. χοῦν ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς.

14. καὶ Ἀδὰμ οὐκ ἠπατ.] Here the ancient and most modern Expositors repeat, from the preceding, πρῶτος. This, however, is not a little harsh. The Apostle merely means to say, that the fault of being deceived rested on the woman; q. d. 'It was not Adam that was deceived [by the serpent], but the woman; who, being so deceived, was especially in fault.' Hence it follows, that she, from that original imbecillity and persuasibility, was very properly subjected to the man, and thus must not usurp authority over him. The phrase ἐν παραβ. εἶναι corresponds to the Latin in culpâ esse.

15. σωθήσεται δὲ—σωφροσύνης.] This passage, as it has much perplexed, so has it been variously explained by, Expositors of different times. The difficulty centres in the expression τεκνογονίας; and this some Commentators have attempted to remove by assigning to the term some peculiar sense, as education, or offspring; the διὰ being taken for σύν. But thus the latter part of the sentence will not correspond (as it is evidently intended to do) to the former: and, indeed, both those significations are destitute of any authority, and yield a forced and frigid sense. Again, to take the expression, with others, as meant of the bearing the promised Redeemer, would suppose such an ænigmatical mode of speaking on a plain subject, as it is very improbable the Apostle should adopt. Lastly, the difficulty has been attempted to be removed by assigning another sense to σωθ., which many eminent Commentators think may here denote only temporal deliverance. So Abp. Newcome renders, 'Notwithstanding, she shall be preserved in child-bearing, if they continue,' &c. This, however, lies open to the fatal objection, that the deliverance has not been observed to be confined to Christian and pious women; and that the context requires σωθ. to be taken of eternal salvation. The sense may, I think, be most correctly laid down as follows: 'Nevertheless, the sex, which was the means of bringing such ruin on the human race, will not be excluded from salvation, or admitted to it on worse terms; but it will be extended to them through child-bearing and the various onerous duties which follow it. They will, I say, be saved, as a sex, and all the individuals of it, if they embrace and continue in the Christian faith, and practise those duties of loving obedience, holiness, and modesty which it enjoins.' And here it is well observed by Calvin: 'Non potuit aptior afferri consolatio, nec efficacior, quam si rationem et medium, ut ita loquar, salutis consequendæ in ipsa pœna ostenderet.' As to the objection, that those who die virgins, or after marriage bear no children, would thus be excluded from salvation, it is quite groundless; since what is here said only respects the sex, not the individuals thereof. So it is justly observed by Theophylact and Œcumenius, that 'this is not said as though they would be saved by any other than their own individual virtue, but only that child-bearing may be an occasion of salvation to a Acts 20. 28. Phil. 1. 1. b Titus 1. 6. infra 5. 9.

III. [a] ΠΙΣΤΟΣ ὁ λόγος· εἴ τις ἐπισκοπῆς ὀρέγεται, 1 καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθυμεῖ. [b] Δεῖ οὖν τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἀνεπίληπ- 2 τον εἶναι, μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα, * νηφάλιον, σώφρονα, κόσμιον, them. In this view Bp. Hall explains: 'God shall make those her painful conceptions, and the care and anxiety she undergoes in the nurture of her children, good means to bring her to salvation.'

If the above explanation be thought too harsh, we may regard διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας as an insertion thrown in by way of qualifying the gracious assurance just given; in like manner as at Mark x. 30, the gracious promise of ample remuneration, in this world and in the next, to those who forsake all for Christ's sake, is qualified by the insertion μετὰ διωγμῶν, i. e. 'through, under, or amidst persecutions.' And so it is said, Acts xiv. 22, ὅτι διὰ πολλῶν θλίψεων δεῖ ἡμᾶς εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. Thus διὰ will denote the circumstances through which any thing takes place; as 2 Cor. v. 7, διὰ πίστεως, 'in a state of faith;' also 1 John v. 6. Rom. ii. 27, and iv. 11. 2 Cor. ii. 4, ἔγραψα ὑμῖν διὰ πολλῶν δακρύων· Phil. i. 20. This latter view is, I find, that which was adopted by Wolf and Bengel, who remark, 'denotatur hic conditio sive status in quo mulier salutem sic assecuta;' though they notice not, what seems an important feature, that we have here a qualifying circumstance; just as (to use the words of Bp. Sanderson) all promises, both temporal and spiritual, are to be understood cum exceptione crucis. So also, 1 Cor. vii. 28, to a similar kind assurance is subjoined, θλίψιν δὲ τῇ σαρκὶ ἕξουσι.

Thus, too, it seems intimated that, 'by their child-bearing, implying the faithful performance of all the many onerous duties of a wife and mother, the evil done by the sex (for which, too, it is punished by the pains and perils of child-bearing induced by the curse, Gen. iii. 16) is regarded as balanced by a correspondent benefit; and thus it will be admitted to salvation with the other sex, on the same conditions, of faith,' &c. And here it is well observed by Calvin, that 'lest he should be supposed to include the whole virtue of woman in the conjugal duties, the Apostle immediately subjoins those greater ones in which pious women ought to excel the profane and worldly:' so meaning to intimate (as Bp. Hall expresses it), 'that nevertheless the main condition and help to future glory is their continuance in faith,' &c.

Finally, as the term γυνὴ is evidently meant to be taken generically for the sex, the transition, in ἐὰν μείνωσιν, &c., from the singular to the plural has nothing at which to stumble; and seems to have been resorted to for the sake of more pointed application, and to show that the word γυνὴ was meant not of any particular individual, but of the whole sex.

— πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ καὶ ἁγιασμῷ, &c.] These three particulars embrace the grand outlines of a Christian's duty; for to the first the second is indispensable; and the third not less so to the two others; for 'without holiness no man shall see the Lord.' By σωφροσύνης is meant that discreet sober-mindedness with respect to dress, silence in the Church, and general subjection just before enjoined; in which sense the expression is, I find, understood by Calvin, Benson, and Abp. Newcome. Thus it will correspond to the similar term σωφρονισμοῦ at 2 Tim. i. 7, and ἐγκράτεια at 2 Pet. i. 5. And here we cannot but notice on the address with which the Apostle thus brings round again what he had before enforced.

III. The Apostle now proceeds to the cognate subject, of the qualifications of those who are to preside in the above assemblies for prayer, or are to discharge other and œconomical functions connected therewith.

1. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] Many Commentators, ancient and modern, thinking that the subsequent affirmation would scarcely require so solemn an introduction, refer these words to the preceding assurance in σωθήσεται, &c. But though the formula is used of what goes before, at iv. 9, yet it has just been used of what follows; and certainly the character of the formula is far more suitable thereto. Besides, it is not solemnity, but seriousness that characterizes it; q. d. 'It has been said, and is a true saying, and worthy of entire confidence, that,' &c. I have fully shown, in the Notes on Acts xi. 30. xx. 17. Phil. i. 1, that originally the terms ἐπισκ. and πρεσβ. denoted the same offices of the Church; and I pointed out also how the office of Bishop (in the sense in which we now use the word) was introduced. It is not clear whether St. Paul here means to denote ministers of the second or of the first rank of the ministerial offic e; but probably the former is intended.

— καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθ.] By thus calling it an honourable work, the Apostle doubtless meant to suggest that its weighty duties are to be considered, rather than the honour, much less the emolument, that accrues from it. Indeed, ἔργον is a term always used of a laborious and important office. So it is said, in a similar passage of Isocrat. Dem. (cited by Wetstein), τοὺς δόξης ὀρεγομένους—ὅσοι μὲν οὖν πρὸς τοὺς ἑαυτῶν φίλους τοὺς προτρεπτικοὺς λόγους συγγράφουσι, καλὸν ἔργον ἐπιχειροῦσι.

2. ἀνεπίληπτον.] This is properly an agonistical term, signifying, 'one who gives his adversary no hold upon him;' but it is often (as here) applied metaphorically to one who gives others no cause to justly accuse him. So Thucydides, v. 17, τοῖς ἐχθροῖς ἀνεπ. εἶναι. 'Such (says a celebrated writer) is the perfect purity of our religion, such the innocence and virtue it exacts, that he must be a very good man indeed who lives up to it.' And when we consider the still greater requirements in a teacher of religion,—who is to be an example to others,—and reflect on the injury done to religion through the side of false professors, how much reason will there appear that such an one should be, as the Apostle says, blameless!'

— μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρα.] The import of these words has been disputed. That the Apostle forbids polygamy cannot be doubted; but the only question is, whether he means to forbid more than one wife at a time, or more than one wife in all; q. d. 'the candidate shall not have married a second wife.' Authority seems most in favour of the former interpretation; but, as in a kindred passage of ver. 9, where it is required of a widow, 3 φιλόξενον, διδακτικόν· [c] μὴ πάροινον, μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ c 2 Tim. 2. 24.

4 αἰσχροκερδῆ· ἀλλ' ἐπιεικῆ, ἄμαχον, ἀφιλάργυρον· [d] τοῦ ἰδίου d Tit. 1. 6.
οἴκου καλῶς προϊστάμενον, τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ, μετὰ 5 πάσης σεμνότητος· (εἰ δέ τις τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου προστῆναι οὐκ 6 οἶδε, πῶς ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ ἐπιμελήσεται;) [e] μὴ νεόφυτον, ἵνα e Is. 14. 12.

in order to be put on the list for support by the Church, to have been ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνὴ, where the expression can only mean, to have one husband; and as it seems (as Chrysostom observes) to have been the chief intent of the Apostle κωλύειν τὴν ἀμετρίαν, it may be supposed that he forbids second marriage in a Bishop, lest, in an age when divorce was so prevalent, Ministers might be induced to seek divorce, and thus subject themselves to scandal, as if actuated by improper motives.

— νηφάλιον] 'vigilant or circumspect.' In which sense the word occurs in the later writers; as, for instance, Phavorinus. The force of the word is well expressed by the Pesch. Syr. 'mente sit vigilanti.' Instead of νηφάλιον (the reading of many of the best MSS. and all the early Editions), νηφάλεον was introduced by Beza; but without any sufficient reason; and the former has been rightly restored by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, and Vater.

Here, then, we have a quality suggested by the very term ἐπίσκοπος, which imports vigilant superintendence.

— σώφρονα] 'sober-minded;' i. e. one who holds his passions and desires under thorough regulation. So Æschin. cont. Timarch. 25. 37, ἐκ παιδὸς εἰς γῆρας σώφρων. By κόσμιον is meant 'orderly, decorous,' σεμνοπρεπῆ, as Theophylact explains. Indeed, these three terms form a class of cognate virtues.

Well might the Apostle require thus much from Christian ministers; for no less than this was expected of the heathen priests. So in Æschyl. Theb. 606, Amphiaraus is described as being a model for priests, thus: Οὗτος δ' ὁ μάντις σώφρων, δίκαιος, ἀγαθὸς, εὐσεβὴς ἀνὴρ, μέγας προφήτης.

— φιλόξενον] hospitable; see Rom. xii. 13, and compare Hebr. xiii. 2. Διδακτ., 'fit to teach;' namely, as possessing the knowledge and faculty necessary. See Tit. i. 7.

3. μὴ πάροινον.] Some Expositors, ancient and modern, take this to be equivalent to ὑβριστὴν or αὐθάδη; which is, indeed, much countenanced by three vices in this clause standing opposed to the three virtues in the next. But considering that we have at ver. 8 the expression μὴ οἴνῳ προσέχοντες used of the Deacons, here at least the physical sense must be included; and, according to every principle of correct exegesis, it must stand first. In the word πάροινος the παρα means beyond, denoting excess. So the expression in Hab. ii. 5, 'he transgresseth by wine.'

— πλήκτην.] The term has been commonly rendered striker; but, considering that the expression is opposed to ἄμαχον in the next clause, it is better explained, with the most eminent Commentators, ancient and modern, quarrelsome, litigious: or it may denote, as Theodoret and other ancients interpret, 'vehement, impetuous, and bitter in censuring,' the ἐμπλήκτως ὀξὺς of Thucydides, iii. 82. Of this metaphorical sense, rare in the Classical writers, I find an example in Dicæarchus, p. 15, θρασεῖς δὲ καὶ ὑβρισταὶ, καὶ ὑπερήφανοι πλῆκταί τε· and Pollux, vi. 129, reckons among the disturbers of the state τοὺς πλήκτας.

Μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ is not found in many MSS., Versions, and Fathers; and has been rejected by several Critics, and cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, but retained and defended by Matthæi and Knapp. The words, however, may be only an interpolation from Tit. i.; for as to the remark of Wetstein, that to three vices are opposed in the following clause three virtues, that argument cuts two ways; for it may be urged that the words were introduced to complete the sense, and cause the very correspondence in question. And certainly the style of St. Paul, like that of Thucydides, is characterized by variety, and does not affect the trim exactness of Isocrates. With respect to the word itself, it is used by the best writers to denote 'one who will gain money by methods, which though not dishonest, yet are base;' see the admirable sketch of αἰσχροκέρδεια given by Theophrastus, Char. Eth. This admonition, we may observe, would be especially suitable in a great commercial place like Ephesus, where money was all in all.

— ἀφιλάργυρον.] From the vice of avarice it may surely be expected that a minister of the Gospel should abstain; for such can hardly subsist without the breach of more commandments than one. Indeed, it would be excessive candour to imagine that a man who so visibly sets his whole heart not only on the world, but on one of the most worthless things in it (for so is money with regard to its uses), should be, at the same time, laying up his treasure in heaven. 'Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.'

4. καλῶς προϊστ.] 'well or creditably regulating.' So Diog. Laërt. i. 70, τῆς αὐτοῦ οἰκίας καλῶς προστατεῖν· and Dionys. Hal. i. p. 178, ἐμέμφετο δὲ τοὺς κακῶς προϊσταμένους τῶν ἰδίων. The words μετὰ πάσης σεμν. are to be construed with τοῦ ἰδίου οἴκου καλῶς προϊστάμενον, denoting the demeanour to be adopted. The circumstance τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ adverts to the case wherein the καλῶς προϊστάμενον is most requisite.

5. εἰ δέ τις—ἐπιμελήσεται;] This seems founded on a sort of proverb, that 'he who cannot manage his private affairs, is not fit to be entrusted with those of the public.'

6. μὴ νεόφυτον.] 'Not a new convert,' by a metaphor like that in 1 Cor. iii. 6, ἐγὼ ἐφύτευσα. There is also implied a notion of the rawness, and imperfect acquaintance with the doctrines of Christianity, likely to be found in such; which seems referred to in the τυφωθεὶς just after; since imperfect knowledge generates conceit. The words εἰς κρίμα ἐμπέσῃ τοῦ Διαβόλου are by most Expositors, ancient and modern, understood of falling into the same condemnation and punishment that the Devil fell f 1 Cor. 5. 12. μὴ τυφωθεὶς εἰς κρίμα ἐμπέσῃ τοῦ Διαβόλου. [f] Δεῖ δὲ αὐτὸν 7 καὶ μαρτυρίαν καλὴν ἔχειν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν· ἵνα μὴ εἰς g Acts 6. 3. Lev. 10. 9. Ezek. 44. 21. ὀνειδισμὸν ἐμπέσῃ καὶ παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου. [g] Διακόνους 8 ὡσαύτως σεμνούς, μὴ διλόγους, μὴ οἴνῳ πολλῷ προσέχονh Supra 1. 19. τας, μὴ αἰσχροκερδεῖς, [h] ἔχοντας τὸ μυστήριον τῆς πίστεως 9 ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει. καὶ οὗτοι δὲ δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, 10 εἶτα διακονείτωσαν, ἀνέγκλητοι ὄντες. Γυναῖκας ὡσαύτως 11 σεμνάς, μὴ διαβόλους, νηφαλίους, πιστὰς ἐν πᾶσι. διάκο- 12 νοι ἔστωσαν μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρες, τέκνων καλῶς προϊστά-i Matt. 25. 21. μενοι καὶ τῶν ἰδίων οἴκων. [i] οἱ γὰρ καλῶς διακονήσαντες, 13 βαθμὸν ἑαυτοῖς καλὸν περιποιοῦνται, καὶ πολλὴν παῤῥησίαν k 2 Tim. 2. 20. Eph. 2. 21. ἐν πίστει τῇ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [k] Ταῦτά σοι γράφω, ἐλπί- 14 ζων ἐλθεῖν πρός σε τάχιον· ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω, ἵνα εἰδῇς πῶς 15 δεῖ ἐν οἴκῳ Θεοῦ ἀναστρέφεσθαι, ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία Θεοῦ into through pride; which is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. And so Calvin observes: 'Est elegans antithesis, quæ indignitatem auget: Si is qui præficitur Ecclesiæ Dei, sua elatione in eandem cum Diabolo condemnationem ruat.' Several eminent Expositors, however, from Luther and Erasmus downwards, take τοῦ Διαβ. to mean the calumniator or slanderous enemy of the Gospel, the noun being, they say, used generically of those who seek an occasion to calumniate the Christians; but, as Calvin observes, 'rarum est ut judicium maledicentiam significat.' Moreover, the expression Διάβολος would thus have to be taken of just condemnation.

7. μαρτυρίαν.] This may best be rendered reputation, or character.

— παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου.] Some modern Expositors interpret this, 'the snares of the calumniator.' But there is little doubt that by τοῦ Διαβ. is meant, as the most eminent Interpreters (including the Pesch. Syr.) have understood it, the Devil. So it is said, by a similar mode of expression, 2 Tim. ii. 26, καὶ ἀνανήψωσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος. The term παγ. may denote, in a generic sense, the various snares which, as we learn from Scripture, the Tempter is ever laying to entrap our virtue.

8—10. The qualifications now marked out for Deacons are comparatively few, such being omitted as have reference to government, or teaching.

8. μὴ διλόγους] 'not double-tongued,' or double-dealers, deceitfully saying one thing to one party, and another thing to another; one thing to the minister, and another to the people. Such an upright, straight-forward disposition was very necessary in persons who, like the Deacons, went, as it were, between the Presbyter and the people; especially as difference of opinion respecting Jewish rites and ceremonies, and various other matters, existed in most congregations.

— μὴ οἴνῳ πολλῷ προσέχοντας] 'not given to much wine.' The Apostle, as Theophylact observes, says not μὴ μεθύσους (for that were altogether unworthy), but, 'not great drinkers;' for much wine, even though it produce not inebriation, greatly weakens the tone of the mind. So it is well said by Philostratus, Vit. Ap. i. 8, ἐναντιοῦσθαι τῇ τοῦ νοῦ συστάσει, διαθολοῦντα τὸν ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ αἰθέρα: answering to the well-known expression of the Latin Poet, 'Affigit humo divinæ particulam auræ.'

9. ἔχοντας τὸ μυστήριον—συνειδήσει.] In the interpretation of these words Expositors not a little differ. But the sense seems simply to be, 'holding the doctrines of the faith sincerely and conscientiously.' So i. 19, ἔχων πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνείδησιν. On τὸ μυστ. τῆς πίστεως in this sense, see Eph. i. 9. vi. 19. Col. iv. 3, and compare 1 Cor. ii. 7.

10. καὶ οὗτοι] 'those too,' viz., as well as the Presbyters; for, it seems, examination as to character and qualifications was to precede election.

— ἀνέγκλητοι.] Answering to μαρτυρίαν καλὴν ἔχ. at ver. 7.

11. γυναῖκας.] Most modern Commentators interpret, 'their (i. e. the Deacons') wives;' while the ancient and most eminent modern ones take it to mean the order called Deaconesses, to whom certainly the qualifications here mentioned are more suitable than to the former; and on such a point the voice of antiquity ought not lightly to be rejected: indeed, the former interpretation would require the Article. In some cases, however, the same persons might be both deacons' wives and deaconesses.

— πιστὰς ἐν πᾶσι.] With reference to their dispensing the public contributions among their own sex, to whom, by the customs of the Greeks, men had not access.

12. See supra vv. 2. 4.

13. Generaliori sententia, et loco communi præcepta sua consignat Apostolus. (Heinrichs.)

— βαθμὸν καλὸν περιπ.] Literally, 'obtain an honourable post or step,' i. e. a higher degree, viz., of Presbyter, or Bishop. Πολλὴν παῤῥ. Supply περιπ. The sense seems to be, 'they obtain the privilege of speaking with freedom (i. e. beyond that of private Christians) on matters concerning the faith.'

15. ἐὰν δὲ βραδύνω, ἵνα εἰδῇς.] The best mode of removing the difficulty here complained of seems to be, to repeat ταῦτα γράφω from the preceding verse; q. d. '[And I write these things unto thee, not as if I should never come again], but that if I should be delayed, thou,' &c.

16 ζῶντος, στύλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας. [1] Καὶ ὁμολο- 1 John 1. 14. Matt. 3. 16.
γουμένως μέγα ἐστὶ τὸ τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον·—Θεὸς ἐφα- 1 Pet. 3. 18. Mark 16. 5. νερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι, ὤφθη ἀγγέλοις, Eph. 3. 5, 6. Col. 1. 23. Luke 24. 51.
ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, ἐπιστεύθη ἐν κόσμῳ, ἀνελήφθη ἐν δόξῃ.

— στύλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθ.] These words have been variously interpreted. In order to ascertain their sense, it is necessary to determine their scope, and whether they should be taken with the preceding, or the following words. Some ancient and several modern Expositors (as Chillingworth, Gataker, Maius, Zorn,) and many recent Interpreters, refer them to what follows. This method, however, lies open to insuperable objections, as stated by Poole, Benson, and Scott. And thus, too, I apprehend, the sentiment is overloaded with words, has in its air something frigid and jejune, and, what is more, involves an anticlimax, no where found in Scripture, and very rarely in any writer of credit. The natural connexion of the words is, doubtless, with what precedes; yet certainly not, as some imagine, with εἰδῇς, as if the reference were to Timothy: for that would be an utter violation of the construxion, and involve somewhat of incongruity; for, though Timothy might be a pillar of the truth, yet not a foundation thereof. In short, the words cannot well be united with any part of the preceding context, except with ἥτις ἐστὶν—ζῶντος, which is their natural connexion, and which would probably have been more generally received than it has among Protestant Expositors, had they not wished to rescue the passage from Romish perversion. But surely such forced expositions, devised merely to evade the arguments or claims of opponents, are unworthy of a cause which needs not the aid of disingenuous arts to uphold it. Here there can be no doubt but that the true reference is to ἥτις ἐστὶν ἐκκλησία, as was maintained by almost all the ancient Expositors, and many eminent modern Protestant Commentators, as Grotius, Bp. Hall, Calvin, Hammond, Gothofred, Weber, Schmid, Deyling, Wolf, Whitby, Macknight, and Bp. Van Mildert, who understand it of the Church Universal, administered under an external visible form of government,—and which, by maintaining the revelation of God and his religion, upholds it as a foundation does a building, or as pillars support an edifice. So Grotius: 'Veritatem hîc comparat operi supero; Ecclesiam, maxime universalem, sed et eas partes quæ universali adhærent, columnæ et basi.' That such is the meaning, is plain from the context; the design of the Apostle being evidently this,—to give weight to his preceding instructions, as to the regulation of the Church at Ephesus, by suggesting the important purpose for which the Church Universal was instituted. So Bp. Hall well paraphrases, 'that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to carry thyself in this great family of God, the church of the living God; which is, in respect of men, the pillar and ground of truth; so that it sustains and bears up, by a faithful profession and maintenance thereof, the true religion of God.'

The above interpretation is, I believe, liable to no well-founded objection; and, indeed, any other mode of explanation is, both philologically and otherwise, quite untenable. It may, indeed, be asked, that if such be the meaning, why was it not expressed more exactly and intelligibly? I answer, that the Apostle could not express ἥτις ἐστὶ before στύλος, &c., because that would have involved a tautology of the very worst kind possible, and of which there is no example to be found in any good ancient writer; and it was not necessary so to do, since the apposition supplies this subject to the context, and that context furnishes us with ἥτις ἐστὶν,—just what is wanted. And that, perhaps, was one reason why St. Paul wrote ἥτις ἐστὶν just before, and not ὅστις ἐστὶν, as the grammatical concord with οἶκος requires, though it is not unfrequently deserted, as Gal. iii. 16, καὶ τῷ σπέρματί σου· ὅς (for ὅ) ἐστι Χριστός. The idiom is frequent in the Classical authors, especially Thucydides, though there is generally some reason for the hypallage. Here, besides the one above suggested, the writer could not well use ὅς, lest it should be referred to Θεοῦ as the nearest antecedent, and lead to a confusion of ideas.

Finally, with reference to the dispute in doctrine here involved, I would say, that as the Church of that age (to which the words were especially meant to apply) might well be said to be στύλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, because founded by the Apostles, who were the pillars of the Christian faith; so, if the words be applied, in the present instance, to the Church, they are not to be referred to the Church of Rome, or to the Church of England or of Scotland, or any particular Church, but to Christ's Holy Catholic Church (for which we pray in our Liturgy), consisting of all the true Churches of Christ throughout the world; i. e. all such Churches as hold the essential doctrines of the Gospel. So that the passage by no means implies the infallibility of any particular Church: on which subject see the able and instructive Essay of Dr. Macknight. That the words are well adapted to express the above sense, is manifest; for στύλος being qualified and explained by ἑδραίωμα, must be put for στύλωμα (on which word see Steph. Thes.); and in ἑδραίωμα there is, I think, an allusion to the mode in which vast edifices, like the Temple at Jerusalem, or that of Diana at Ephesus (supposed by some Commentators to be here alluded to in οἶκος), were built; namely, as in several of our cathedrals (such as Canterbury and old St. Paul's), by first laying a foundation with rows of pillars penetrating deep under ground,—and then, upon those, building the superstructure. Accordingly here, as the CHURCH UNIVERSAL is the ἑδραίωμα, so each particular Church may be a pillar of that foundation which upholds the superstructure of Gospel Truth.

16. καὶ ὁμολογουμένως μέγα, &c.] This is closely connected with what precedes; the sense being, 'And confessedly (i. e. unquestionably) great is the mystery of godliness' (meaning, the Gospel-scheme, as in Joseph. c. Ap. i. 12) contained in the long-concealed, but now revealed truths of the Gospel, which that Church is to recommend and support, and of which the sum is, that 'God was manifested in the flesh.' There may, indeed, a Matt. 24. 23. 2 Thess. 2. 3. 2 Tim. 3. 1. 2 Pet. 3. 3. Jude 18. 1 John 2. 18.

IV. ᵃ Τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα ῥητῶς λέγει, ὅτι ἐν ὑστέροις καιροῖς 1 ἀποστήσονταί τινες τῆς πίστεως, προσέχοντες πνεύμασι πλα-seem an abruptness, and a sort of hiatus in the sense between μυστ. and Θεός; but that is not uncommon in the writings of St. Paul, and especially in passages, like the present, of great pathos. See Rom. xi. 33—36. In these cases I have, after eminent Editors, placed a mark denoting the aposiopesis. The term μυστήριον is often used of the doctrines of the Gospel in general; but was here, I conceive, adopted chiefly with reference to that great mystery of 'God manifested in the flesh,' on which all the others depend, and which Timothy was especially to urge.

It is true that the sense, as above laid down, depends upon the reading, which, in the case of Θεός, is disputed. Griesbach has for Θεὸς edited ὃς; but without any sufficient reason; for the external evidence in favour of it is next to nothing; only three MSS. having ὃ, and one ὁ, and those all of the Western recension, and probably altered from the Vulgate. As to Versions, though most of them favour ὃς, yet they cannot be balanced against nearly the whole of the MSS. The Latin Fathers, indeed, support ὃ, as might be expected from its being the reading followed in the Vulgate; but as to the Greek Fathers, they are by no means, as Griesbach affirms, in favour of ὃς; for it has been irrefragably proved by Matthæi, Rinck, and especially Scholz, that their testimony is, upon the whole, decidedly in favour of Θεός. The false reasonings of Griesbach and Belsham have been fully exposed by Dr. Burton (Testim. p. 141) and the British Critic and Quart. Theol. Rev. ii. 297; the former adducing evidence of the way in which the passage was understood by the Ante-Nicene Fathers, in citations from Barnabas, Clem. Alex., Hippolytus, and Dionys. Alex.; to which others are added by Rinck from Ignat. Ep. to the Ephesians, § 19, Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπίνως φανερουμένου. Bengel, Matthæi, and Rinck are decidedly of opinion that the reading ΟΣ arose from ΘΣ, and not ΘΣ from ΟΣ: and no wonder; since (as Matthæi has shown) in the uncial MSS. the line in Θ is not unfrequently omitted by the scribes; as, for instance, in the next word ἐφανερώθη. Now in a question of testimony, like this, it might be sufficient to prove that external evidence is decidedly in favour of Θεός; but we may as confidently refer to the internal, since it is not less so. It has been shown by Bp. Bull, Abp. Magee, Dr. Nolan, Dr. Burton, the British Critic, and Rinck, that the reading ὃς is liable to almost every objection in interpretation, and violates all the rules of construction. It cannot legitimately have any antecedent but Θεοῦ ζῶντος. That, however, is rejected by the Socinians as equally inculcating the doctrine of the Deity of Christ, which they are resolved, at all events, to exclude. As to the sense thus produced, it has been shown by Rinck and the British Critic to be quite unsuitable. Here I must not omit to notice that Dr. Pye Smith, in his 'Scripture Testimony,' adopts the reading ὃς, which (with Berriman and others) he connects with Θεοῦ ζῶντος, including the intermediate words in a parenthesis; but, with deference to that learned and excellent writer, I must here differ from him in opinion, especially as I am strongly confirmed in my persuasion of the genuineness of Θεὸς by the very elaborate discussion of the evidence, both external and internal, given in an able Tract by Dr. Henderson, entitled, 'The Great Mystery of Godliness Incontrovertible, London, 1830,' who decides the question in favour of Θεός.

Here, then (to use the words of Bp. Pearson on the Creed), 'St. Paul, unfolding the mystery of godliness, has delivered six propositions together, and the subject of all and each of them is God; and this God, who is the subject of all these propositions, must be understood of Christ, because of him each one is true, and all are so of none but him. He was the Word, which was God, and was made flesh; and, consequently, "God manifested in the flesh." Upon him the Spirit descended at his baptism, and after his ascension was poured upon his Apostles, ratifying his commission, and confirming the doctrine which they received from him; wherefore he was "God justified in the Spirit." His nativity the angels celebrated; in the discharge of his office they ministered unto him; at his resurrection and ascension they were present, always ready to confess and adore him. He was therefore "God seen of angels."' The rest of the propositions do not need proof or illustration. However, Bp. Hurd's note, cited by D'Oyly and Mant, may be advantageously consulted.

IV. 1. τὸ δὲ Πνεῦμα, &c.] The connexion of this with the preceding matter is so close, that a new Chapter ought by no means to have been commenced here; though to trace the exact order of the ideas is by no means easy. It may be best to render δὲ, with Mede, veruntamen; q. d. 'However [important as these truths are, and though the Church, by preserving the mystery of godliness, be the grand support of the truth,] the Holy Spirit,' &c.

By τὸ Πνεῦμα some eminent Expositors understand that portion of the Spirit, which was vouchsafed to the Prophets of the Old Testament; as, for instance, Dan. xi. 36—39. But it is better referred to the Apostle himself (compare 1 Cor. ii. 10), for the expression seems to imply a direct revelation; as in Acts viii. 29. x. 19. xi. 12, and Revel. ii. 7, ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις. By the expression ὑστέροις καιροῖς are meant, as in Acts ii. 17. Hebr. i. 1. 1 Pet. i. 20, the times of the last or Christian dispensation. Compare, also, similar expressions in the kindred passages of 2 Tim. iii. 1. James v. 3. 2 Pet. iii. 3. Jude 18.

— ἀποστήσονταί τινες τῆς πίστ.] 'will fall away from the faith.' Referring to the same subject as that treated on at 2 Thess. ii. 3—12, where see Notes. Ἀποστ. here and ἀποστασία there both denote, in a general way, apostasy from religion; but sometimes, as here, only a falling away or defection from the true faith of it, by either rejecting any of its doctrines, or arbitrarily introducing others, or corrupting any by an admixture of the dogmas of Heathenism or Judaism.

— πνεύμασι πλάνοις.] Meaning (by the use of the substantive for adjective) 'persons who profess to speak by the Spirit, but are in reality

2 νοις καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων, [b] ἐν ὑποκρίσει ψευδολόγων, b Matt. 7. 15. Rom. 16. 18.
3 κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν ἰδίαν συνείδησιν, [c] κωλυόντων γαμεῖν, 2 Pet. 2. 3. c Gen. 9. 3. ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, ἃ ὁ Θεὸς ἔκτισεν εἰς μετάληψιν μετὰ Rom. 14. 6. 1 Cor. 10. 30.
4 εὐχαριστίας τοῖς πιστοῖς καὶ ἐπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἀλήθειαν. [d] Ὅτι d Gen. 1. 31. Rom. 14. 14, 20.
πᾶν κτίσμα Θεοῦ καλὸν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπόβλητον, μετὰ εὐχα- Tit. 1. 15.
5 ριστίας λαμβανόμενον· ἁγιάζεται γὰρ διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ 6 ἐντεύξεως. [e] Ταῦτα ὑποτιθέμενος τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς, καλὸς ἔσῃ 2 Tim. 3. 14, 15.
διάκονος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς λόγοις τῆς impostors.' So Josephus, Bell. Jud. ii. 13. 4, πλάνοι ἄνθρωποι καὶ ἀπατεῶνες. The expression πλάνοις serves to determine the sense of πνεύμασι, which otherwise would only be, 'those claiming to possess a divine inspiration;' as 2 Thess. ii. 2. 1 John iv. 1. iii. 6. Of διδασκ. δαιμ. it is not agreed whether the sense be, 'doctrines suggested by demons,' or 'concerning demons.' The former interpretation is preferable, especially as it may include the sense of devilish; i. e. impious. So in James iii. 15, we have σοφία δαιμονιώδης.

2. ἐν ὑποκρ. ψευδ.] The construction here is somewhat perplexed; but as to the antiptosis supposed by some, it is utterly inadmissible; as is also the factitious mode of construction proposed by Heinrichs, who would supply ὄντες, or repeat προσέχοντες. The words depend, I conceive, upon ἀποστήσονται; and here ἐν must (with many eminent Expositors) be taken for διὰ, Hebr. ב, by or through. Of the two expressions, ὑποκρίσει and ψευδολόγων, the former denotes 'a pretended show of extraordinary sanctity;' and the latter adverts to the falsehood by which the claims are supported. The two ideas are united in Josephus, Bell. i. 32. 3, τερατείαν καὶ ὑπόκρισιν λέγεις τὴν εὐσέβειαν;

— κεκαυτηριασμένων τὴν ἰδίαν συν.] In this figurative expression Commentators are not agreed whether the metaphor be one taken from the branding of criminals, or from the cauterizing employed by surgeons on mortified flesh, which is, as such, insensible to all feeling. So Diod. Sic. xx. 54, ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὥσπερ καυτῆρά τινα προσῆγε. The latter view (ably maintained by Reitz, on Lucian, i. 645) is preferable, as yielding a stronger sense, and one more suitable to the context of the Epistle, and better according with the parallel passages of Scripture; nor is it unsupported by ancient authority. So Theodoret says that 'this serves to indicate τὴν ἐσχάτην αὐτῶν ἀναλγησίαν.' And no wonder; for, as Schleusner observes (Lex. New Test.), 'the expression signifies metaphorically dedoluisse, et ad obstinatiorem torporem et sensum conscientiæ victum, et plane extinctum transfertur.' So answering to ἀπηλγηκότες at Eph. iv. 19.

3. ἀπέχ. βρωμ.] Here the best Expositors are agreed, that κελευόντων is to be supplied, taken from κωλ. before; comparing 1 Cor. xiv. 34; these two passages being peculiar cases, differing from those many, where, in the latter part of a sentence, a word (generally a verb) is to be supplied from one that occurs in the former part of it; or if not the same, some word of cognate sense. Whereas, in these two passages, the word to be supplied is one of the very opposite in signification to what had occurred in the former member of the sentence: which may perhaps be paralleled with the Classical idiom, by which, in the first clause of a sentence comes a verbum imperandi with a negative; and in the second the verb is to be repeated without the negative. Now here κωλύω includes within itself both; yet, in the second clause, a verbum imperandi, as κελευόντων, is to be repeated, as in the former case.

— ἃ ὁ Θεὸς ἔκτισεν, &c.] This is meant to intimate that they thereby insult the Creator, who hath bestowed on man the powers and faculties of innocent enjoyment. Μετὰ εὐχ.; see Note on Eph. v. 4. Τοῖς πιστοῖς, for ὑπὸ τῶν πιστῶν. Ἐπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἀλήθ. Meaning, 'those who have fully known the truth concerning meats:' a knowledge, as Macknight says, necessary to render the eating lawful, and give men satisfaction in the use.

4. ὅτι πᾶν κτίσμα Θεοῦ καλόν.] These words serve to explain the preceding ἐπεγνωκόσι τὴν ἀλήθ.; containing, as Hyperius observes, an argumentum à causâ finali; q. d. 'who well know, I say, that every thing created and supplied by God is good and fit to be eaten.' Compare Gen. i. 31.

— καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπόβλητον] 'and that no created thing is to be rejected;' i. e. ἀποβολῆς ἄξιον: compare Rom. xiv. 6. 1 Cor. x. 31. The present passage is well illustrated in Bp. Sanderson's fifth Sermon ad Populum on this text.

5. ἁγιάζεται—ἐντεύξ.] These words are meant not so much to give a reason for the preceding, as to limit the foregoing position, and show that every κτίσμα Θεοῦ may become καλὸν, (for that is what is meant by ἁγιάζεται,) namely, 'if it be partaken and enjoyed, διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ ἐντεύξεως, in conjunction with, preceded by the use of prayer,' &c. See Note on Acts ii. 42, and Bp. Newton, cited in D'Oyly and Mant.

6. ταῦτα.] Meaning all the instructions that have been before given, especially those at iii. 15, 16. Ὑποτίθεσθαι signifies, 'to lay any thing before another,' as instruction or admonition.

— ἐντρεφόμενος τοῖς λόγοις, &c.] Meaning, 'one nourished up in the doctrines of faith.' This figurative use of ἐντρέφομαι, as of the Latin innutriri, is frequent in the Classical writers. By τῆς πίστεως I would not understand, with Bp. Hall, Macknight, and Abp. Newcome, 'the faith, i. e. the true religion of God.' It would rather seem that by the expression is here meant (as Calvin, Beza, and Estius explain) 'the sum of Christian doctrine;' as at v. 8, and Acts vi. 7. The next words may either be, as Calvin says, exegetical, or they may be meant to apply what was said generally, of a καλὸς διάκονος, to Timothy in particular; the διδασκαλίας referring f Supra 1. 4. infra 6. 20. 2 Tim. 2. 16, 23. Tit. 1. 14. & 3. 9.

g Col. 2. 23. infra 6. 6.
h Supra 1. 15.
i 2 Cor. 6. 5. & 11. 23. 2 Thess. 3. 8.

πίστεως, καὶ τῆς καλῆς διδασκαλίας ᾗ παρηκολούθηκας.
[f] Τοὺς δὲ βεβήλους καὶ γραώδεις μύθους παραιτοῦ· γύμναζε 7 δὲ σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν. [g] Ἡ γὰρ σωματικὴ γυμνασία πρὸς 8 ὀλίγον ἐστὶν ὠφέλιμος· ἡ δὲ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμός ἐστιν, ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα ζωῆς τῆς νῦν καὶ τῆς μελλούσης.
[h] Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος. [i] Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ 9,10 to the Apostle's own instruction. Παρηκολούθηκας. Literally, 'hast followed up and well learnt.'

7. βεβήλους—παραιτοῦ.] The mention of διδασκ. reminded the Apostle of a kind of learning, to which Jewish youths were particularly attached,—namely, that of the Rabbinical traditions and speculations, such as we find in the Talmud; the μῦθοι καὶ γενεαλ. ἀπέραντ. of i. 4. To these the epithets here used are quite applicable; and βεβήλ. may refer to something in them akin to the Pagan superstitions. Γραώδεις, 'silly, absurd,' like the Latin anilis. So Strabo, cited by Wetstein, calls poetry γραώδη μυθολογίαν· and Jamblichus de Vit. Pyth. has γραώδεσιν ὑποθήκαις. The term μύθους is meant to intimate the falsity of the traditions in question. Παραιτοῦ, 'have nothing to do with;' synonymous with περιΐστασο in Tit. iii. 9.

With the sentiment I would compare what Philo-Judæus says, p. 132, C. τῷ δὲ Θεοῦ θεραπευτῇ πρεπωδὲς ἀληθείας περιέχεσθαι, τὴν ἀβεβαίαν μυθοποιΐαν χαίρειν εἰπόντι.

— γύμναζε δὲ σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβ.] These words seem meant to anticipate and overrule a plea, which might be advanced for the kind of learning just condemned; namely, that it exercises the understanding. The Apostle directs Timothy rather to occupy himself in acquiring a perfect knowledge of the religion which he had to teach; see ver. 13. Εὐσέβεια is here used as at iii. 16; though it may also be meant to include exercise in the practical part of religion, by studying to lead a holy life.

8, 9. From the agonistical metaphor in γύμν. σεαυτὸν the Apostle takes occasion to show the high importance of this spiritual γυμνασία, by contrasting its benefits with those resulting from the temporal γυμνασία, to which young men so devoted themselves, either by way of preparation for the games, or for honourable display in general; the advantages of the former being only temporary and temporal, those of the latter permanent, and extending to a future life. Thus the argument will correspond to that urged in a kindred passage of 1 Cor. ix. 25, ἐκεῖνοι μὲν οὖν, ἵνα φθαρτὸν στέφανον λάβωσιν, ἡμεῖς δὲ, ἄφθαρτον. Such seems to be the most natural and consistent view of the sense, though many Expositors understand the γυμν. of what we call bodily exercise; a sense surely too limited. And it was certainly not the intent of the Apostle, as Rosenmuller supposes, to here inculcate the advantages of mental over bodily exercise. In σωματικὴ (which is for τοῦ σώματος, as μάχας νομικὰς for μάχας περὶ τοῦ νόμου, Tit. iii. 9) there is an allusion to the exercising or training of the body. The term γυμνασία must, however, not only be referred to the laborious exercises of the athlete, but to all the other parts of what we call training, as applied to the πένταθλον, and expressed by the term ἐγκρατεύεσθαι in 1 Cor. ix. 25.

The expression πρὸς ὀλίγον may be understood both of degree and duration. And so, as respects the former, it is well said by Diogenes Laërt. i. 56, of the ἀθληταὶ καὶ ἀσκούμενοι that, 'while going through the exercise or training, they are πολυδάπανοι (i. e. sacrifice much, are at a great private expense) καὶ νικῶντες ἐπιζήμιοι, and when conquering, occasion loss to the public;' namely, because they must be paid dearly for that which they have earned dearly.

— πρὸς πάντα.] Meaning, 'in every way,' and under all circumstances. Ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα, &c. A promise as respects the former, amply verified in that 'peace which passeth all understanding,' and that 'hope full of immortality,' which, added to the blessings in this world ever attendant on a life of virtue and temperance, make godliness, even as respects the present existence, to be indeed a great gain.

The Commentators aptly compare Seneca, Ep. 79, 'Nulli non virtus et vivo et mortuo gratiam retulit, si modo illam bona secutus est fide;' and a Rabbinical writer, Aboth. 4. 6, 'Magna est lex, quæ dat vitam facientibus ipsam in seculo præsenti, et in seculo futuro.' See more in Benson, Newcome, and Scott, and comp. Mark x. 29, 30.

9. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, &c.] On this formula see Note supra i. 15. By the λόγος here spoken of is, as the best Expositors are agreed, to be understood the above position, ἡ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ὠφέλιμος: an assertion well termed πιστὸς καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, worthy to be relied on, and worthy of entire and universal acceptance; for, as Benson observes, 'without these three great principles, a God, a Providence, and a future state of retribution, religion could not subsist.' And the Apostle, in the next verse, plainly intimates, that these principles were his support under affliction, as well as animated him to zeal and diligence in active service.

10. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ, &c.] Γὰρ has reference to ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχ. at ver. 8, and by εἰς τοῦτο is to be understood τὸ ἔχειν ἐπαγγ., &c. In this verse we have, as Hyperius observes, a ratio confirmationis à signo (or, as Crellius says, ab exemplo); q. d. 'That what we affirm is true, you may be assured by this certain evidence, that for this cause we labour and undergo great perils. Therefore do we bear up under such accumulated hardships and difficulties, because we have a fixed hope in the living God (who is the Saviour of all men, however forlorn and perilous be their condition in this world, if so be that they do not by their faithlessness exclude themselves from salvation); and we are certain that it is the praise of our doctrine, that we cannot, by any circumstances, however adverse, be deterred from that truth which consists in faith and charity.' See also the Notes of Calvin and Crellius. The argu-καὶ κοπιῶμεν καὶ ὀνειδιζόμεθα, ὅτι ἠλπίκαμεν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζῶντι, 11 ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, μάλιστα πιστῶν. Παράγ-12 γελλε ταῦτα καὶ δίδασκε. [k] Μηδείς σου τῆς νεότητος κατα- k Titus 2. 7, 15.

φρονείτω· ἀλλὰ τύπος γίνου τῶν πιστῶν ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀνα- 1 Pet. 5. 3.
13 στροφῇ· ἐν ἀγάπῃ, [ἐν πνεύματι,] ἐν πίστει, ἐν ἁγνείᾳ. Ἕως ἔρχομαι πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγνώσει, τῇ παρακλήσει, τῇ διδα-14 σκαλίᾳ. [l] Μὴ ἀμέλει τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρίσματος, ὃ ἐδόθη σοι, l Acts 6. 6. & 8. 17.
διὰ προφητείας, μετὰ ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου. & 13. 3. & 19. 6.
15 Ταῦτα μελέτα, ἐν τούτοις ἴσθι· ἵνα σου ἡ προκοπὴ φανερὰ supra 1. 18. infra 5. 22. 2 Tim. 1. 6.

ment is excellently stated by Theodoret as follows: Τί δήποτε γὰρ τὸν πολὺν τοῦτον ἀνεδεξάμεθα πόνον, καὶ τὰ παρὰ πάντων ὀνείδη δεχόμεθα, εἰ μή τίς ἐστι τῶν πόνων ἀντίδοσις; ἀλλὰ γάρ ἐστιν ἀντίδοσις. ἀΐδιος γὰρ Θεὸς ἀγωνοθετεῖ τοῖς ἀθλοῦσι, καὶ πάντων ἐστὶν ἀνθρώπων σωτὴρ, &c.

— ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων.] Many eminent Commentators (with a view to supporting the doctrine of Universal Redemption) explain, 'would have all men to be saved.' And so on this text Dr. Barrow has an excellent Sermon, entitled, 'The doctrine of Universal Redemption asserted and explained.' The above sense, however, is one by no means to be extracted from the words; and though it may seem countenanced by what follows, and the same expression supra ii. 3, 4, yet see Note there. The full sense seems to be, 'who is the temporal Preserver of all men, as well as the Saviour of mankind in general, whether Jews or Gentiles;' i. e. holds out salvation to men of every nation who seek it in faith. See Whitby and Scott.

12. μηδεὶς—καταφρ.] From the connexion of this with the next clause, by means of ἀλλὰ, it is clear that the meaning is, 'Let no one have reason to despise thy youth,' i. e. despise thee on account of thy youth. In order to which, he is enjoined to be exemplary in his conduct. So Theodoret well paraphrases: θέλεις μὴ καταφρονεῖσθαι κελεύων, ἔμψυχος νόμος γενοῦ. δεῖξον ἐν σαυτῷ τὸ τῶν νόμων κατόρθωμα· ἔχε τὸν βίον μαρτυροῦντα τῷ λόγῳ.

— ἐν λόγῳ, ἐν ἀναστροφῇ.] Meaning, 'in words and actions, conversation and conduct.' Ἀγάπῃ. Namely, 'love both to God and man;' what is called ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος in a similar passage at 2 Cor. vi. 6. Πίστις must here have reference to the outward profession rather than the internal sentiment.

Here ἐν πνεύματι may seem not in place, in a detail of outward qualities, which shall be an example to others. Hence the ancient Critics (as we find from the omission of the words in a few MSS. and Versions) cancelled the words. In this they have been followed by Griesbach and others, but without any sufficient cause; since for the insertion of them no reason can be imagined, while for the omission a very strong one may be assigned,—namely, that πνεύμ. was commonly understood of the Holy Spirit; a sense which they rightly judged could have no place here. But the words must be retained, and are best explained (with Theophylact and some eminent modern Expositors) 'in a spiritual disposition, character,' &c. Of course in this and most other cases where this signification has place (see Bp. Middl. Diss. on the word πνεῦμα, § 6. at Matt. i. 18), the effects of the influence of the Holy Spirit are meant.

13. πρόσεχε τῇ ἀναγνώσει.] Not merely meaning (as it is commonly understood) only the reading of the Old Testament, but including all such other reading or study, as would enable Timothy to better understand the Scriptures, and consequently fit him for the more effective exercise of his ministry among enlightened heathens: reading being here mentioned first, as a necessary preparation for the other two, παράκλησις and διδασκαλία. On the utility, if not necessity, of profane literature to Christian ministers, we have the testimony of all the most eminent Fathers and distinguished Theologians of every age. See Prof. Rutherforth's Concio ad Clerum, entitled, De artibus et doctrinis quibus Theologiæ studiosos erudiri oportet. To this purpose it is well said by Chrysostom, τῶν πάντων κακῶν αἴτιον μὴ ἀναγινώσκειν βιβλία, ψυχῆς φάρμακα. See also Whitby, Benson, and Macknight, who well remark that 'if they, who had the supernatural gifts of the Spirit, were to read and study, in order to teach others, well may the pastors of the Church, in the present days, when supernatural gifts have ceased, be expected to read and study.'

14. Here (as Hyperius observes) is urged an argument to discharge his duty à ratione officii; or, as Crellius says, 'in quo à præstantiâ officii ipsum commonefacit.'

— μὴ ἀμέλει τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρίσμ.] Notwithstanding that this must chiefly allude to the Spiritual gifts which Timothy had received, it may include the ordinary graces of the Spirit, by which his endowments in learning would be sanctified. These were given διὰ προφ., 'according to prophecy;' of which the passage at i. 18 is the best comment. The words μετὰ ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν τ. πρεσβ. are not at variance with what is said in a kindred passage at 2 Tim. i. 6, διὰ τῆς ἐπιθ. τ. χειρῶν μου, since the μετὰ here only denotes concurrence in the thing. How far that extended, we are not informed, nor is it necessary for us to know.

15. ταῦτα μελέτα.] Meaning, 'Exercise thyself in these things, make them thy perpetual care and study;' both this and the next phrase being, in the best writers, used of diligent attention. So Diog. Laërt. x. 123, ταῦτα πράττε καὶ μελέτα, and Arrian, Diss. Epict. iv. 1, ταῦτα μελέτα. Thus also Thucyd. i. 142 (speaking of the long training and practice by which the Athenians had attained their naval pre-eminence) μελετῶντες αὐτὸ εὐθὺς ἀπὸ τῶν Μηδικῶν. And Josephus, m Acts 20. 28. Ezek. 33. 9. ᾖ ἐν πᾶσιν. [m] Ἔπεχε σεαυτῷ, καὶ τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ· ἐπίμενε 16 αὐτοῖς. τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν, καὶ σεαυτὸν σώσεις καὶ τοὺς ἀκούοντάς σου.

a Lev 19.32. V. [a] ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕΡΩι μὴ ἐπιπλήξῃς, ἀλλὰ παρακάλει ὡς 1 πατέρα· νεωτέρους, ὡς ἀδελφούς· πρεσβυτέρας, ὡς μητέρας· 2 νεωτέρας, ὡς ἀδελφὰς, ἐν πάσῃ ἁγνείᾳ. Χήρας τίμα τὰς 3 b Matt. 15.4. Mark 7. 10, &c. Eph. 6. 1, 2. ὄντως χήρας. [b] Εἰ δέ τις χήρα τέκνα ἢ ἔκγονα ἔχει, μαν- 4 θανέτωσαν πρῶτον τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον εὐσεβεῖν, καὶ ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι τοῖς προγόνοις· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι καλὸν [καὶ ἀπο-c Luke 2. 36, 37. & 18. 1. δεκτὸν] ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. [c] Ἡ δὲ ὄντως χήρα, καὶ μεμο- 5 νωμένη, ἤλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ προσμένει ταῖς δεήσεσι καὶ ταῖς προσευχαῖς νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας· ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα, ζῶσα 6

Ant. xvi. 2. 4, after saying that the Jews devoted the seventh day to the learning of their sacred rites and religious customs, adds, as a just reason for this case, μελέτην, ὥσπερ ἄλλου τινὸς, καὶ τούτων αξιοῦντες εἶναι, i. e. 'being of opinion that, as of any other [good] thing, so of these whereby we may avoid sin, there ought to be a careful study.'

It is probable that the Apostle, in this use of the expression, had still in mind the agonistical metaphor before employed; μελετάω being a word used of all preparatory exercises, whether of mind or body. Possibly, too, he may have had in view the words of Psalm i. 2.

— ἐν τούτοις ἴσθι.] Meaning (by the same idiom as in the Horatian totus in illis) 'Continue in the careful observance of all such exercises.'

V. 1. πρεσβυτέρῳ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this, as being opposed to νεωτέρους and νεωτέρας just after, signifies, not a presbyter, but an elderly person. By ἐπιπλήξῃς is meant sharp rebuke and objurgation. Ὡς πατέρα, 'as you would a father.'

Such was, indeed, in theory at least, the custom of antiquity; and Diog. Laërt., in his life of Plato, iii. 95, ascribes a similar sentiment to that philosopher. Παρακάλει, 'intreat them [to act more circumspectly].'

3. τίμα.] The best Expositors are agreed that the sense is, 'support, or honourably provide for,' as at v. 17. Matt. xv. 4—6. See Notes on Mark vii. 9—13, and comp. Acts xxviii. 10.

— τὰς ὄντως χ.] i. e. 'those who are really widows,' in the proper sense of the word (adverted to at v. 5), namely, 'destitute.' From what the Fathers and Greek Commentators tell us, it appears that these persons were maintained from the funds of the Church; and from what follows, it is clear that they filled an office; the name χῆραι being as much one of office as διάκονος, though the exact nature of its duties has not been determined. That the persons who held it instructed the younger females in the principles of the Christian faith, is pretty certain; but whether they were, as some say, the same as the Deaconesses, is yet a disputed point. It would seem that they were not necessarily the same; but that having once been such, during the life of their husbands, they were not removed from that office. Otherwise, it would seem, their duties were different from those of the deaconesses; and if we were to call them by such a name as would designate their chief duties, we might call them Female Catechists. That these differed from the deaconesses, is certain from the positive testimony of Epiphanius. Yet they might occasionally assist them in their duty of visiting the sick. Be that as it may, the existence of such an order as the χῆραι requires no very strong testimony from Ecclesiastical history; since, from the extremely retired life of the women in Greece and other parts of the East, and their almost total separation from the other sex, they would much need the assistance of such persons, who might either convert them to the Christian faith, or farther instruct them in its doctrines and duties.

4. ἔκγονα.] The term denotes any descendants further removed than children, as grand-children, or great grand-children. Μανθ., 'let them (meaning those children) learn from me [a lesson proper for them to know].' So Thucyd. i. 34, μαθέτωσαν ὡς, &c. Εὐσεβ. τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον, 'to show piety (i. e. pious and dutiful care and support) to their own family,' meaning their parents or progenitors. So Thucyd. i. 17, ἐς τὸ τὸν ἴδιον οἶκον αὔξειν. This use of εὐσεβεῖν was almost as common in Greek, as that of pius and pietas in the Latin. By the expression ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι it is hinted that this is no more than repaying a debt due to them for their former care and attention to their children.

The words καὶ ἀποδεκτὸν, not found in very many MSS., most of the ancient Versions, and some Fathers, have been cancelled by Griesbach, Vater, Lachmann, and Scholz; being supposed to have crept into the text from ii. 13.

5. καὶ μεμονωμένη.] Render, 'even destitute.' So it is said in Eurip. Alc. 1110, χηρεύεις μόνος. The expression is used with allusion to the etymology of the word χήρα, which is from the adjective χῆρος, and that from χέω, cognate with χάω, to 'gape, stand apart from, be destitute of help.'

— ἤλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν, &c.] Intimating the qualifications required in such persons,—namely, a genuine and constantly operative faith and habitual devotion, both at stated times, and at all needful seasons.

6. 'Postquam suâ notâ veras viduas insignivit, nunc alias opponit, quæ rejiciendæ sint.' (Calvin.)

— ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα.] Meaning, 'But she 7 τέθνηκε. Καὶ ταῦτα παράγγελλε, ἵνα ἀνεπίληπτοι ὦσιν.

8 [d] Εἰ δέ τις τῶν ἰδίων, καὶ μάλιστα τῶν οἰκείων, οὐ προνοεῖ, d Is. 58. 7. 2 Tim. 3. 5.
9 τὴν πίστιν ἤρνηται, καὶ ἔστιν ἀπίστου χείρων. Χήρα κατα- Tit. 1. 16.
λεγέσθω μὴ ἔλαττον ἐτῶν ἑξήκοντα, γεγονυῖα ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς 10 γυνὴ, [e] ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς μαρτυρουμένη· εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν, e Gen. 18. 4. & 19. 2. εἰ ἐξενοδόχησεν, εἰ ἁγίων πόδας ἔνιψεν, εἰ θλιβομένοις Luke 7. 38, 44.
11 ἐπήρκεσεν, εἰ παντὶ ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ ἐπηκολούθησε. Νεωτέρας 1 Pet. 4. 9.

who liveth a life of luxury, self-indulgence, and dissipation.' So in James v. 5, we have united ἐτρυφήσατε καὶ ἐσπαταλήσατε. The word (which is rare) comes from σπατάλη, though I can by no means agree with Schleusner, that the metaphor is è cutis pruritu. It is rather è cute bene curatâ; a common figure to denote luxury. So Hor. Epist. i. 4, 15, 'Me pinguem et nitidum, bene curatâ cute, vises.'

— τέθνηκε] 'is [spiritually] dead,' namely, in sin. So Theophylact explains, κἂν δοκῇ ζῆν ταύτην τὴν ζῶσαν τὴν αἰσθητὴν, τέθνηκε κατὰ πνεῦμα. And so also Theodoret. Comp. Eph. ii. 1. Similar sentiments are found in the Apocrypha, the Rabbinical writers, (as Jalkut Rubeni, fol. 177. 3, 'Impii, etiam dum vivunt, vocantur mortui,') and even the heathen philosophers. Thus Seneca, Epist. 93, says that the wicked man 'ante mortem periit.'

Such a person, then, the Apostle means to say, is not to be chosen, since, though μεμονωμένη in one sense, as being bereft of a husband, yet she is, in another, not desolate, using the ample means of livelihood, which she possesses, not for purposes of Christian benevolence and charity, but for selfish purposes, in a sensual and luxurious life, free from care or controul; for which probably she prefers remaining single to marrying again: and therefore, upon the whole, she is wholly unfit for the office.

8. εἰ δέ τις—χείρων.] This depends upon ἀνεπίλ. in the preceding verse, and the full sense is, 'so that they do not incur censure [from the heathens]; for, indeed, whoever,' &c. By τῶν οἰκείων some Commentators understand no more than ἰδίων. The two words are, indeed, in their general use, synonymous; but οἰκ. denotes properly a nearer connexion than ἰδίων: the former that of consanguinity, the latter that of affinity. This use of οἰκεῖος is founded on that of οἶκος supra v. 4. Τὴν πίστιν ἤρν., 'he denieth [by his works] that Christian faith [which he professeth with his lips];' for that teaches him, τίμα τὸν πατέρα σου καὶ μητέρα σου, including the making a sufficient provision for their wants. It is well observed by the author of the Essay on Mammon, that the precept here enjoins, not accumulating, but giving.

— ἀπίστου χείρων.] Meaning, 'is less observant of the moral relative duties than an unbeliever;' for the heathens considered themselves bound, and were by their laws required, to maintain their parents.

9. καταλεγέσθω.] Literally, 'be put on the list;' namely, of widows to be maintained at the expense of the Church. Καταλέγεσθαι simply signifies 'to be enrolled in any order of persons,' civil or military. Besides the general roll which comprehended all the Christians of any Church, there were, it seems, particular ones confined to the clergy, and those poorer Christians who were maintained at the public expense, including virgins and widows; and of such lists the Ecclesiastical Canons often make mention. With this entering upon a list was, (as we learn from Jerome) in order to in some measure compensate the Church for its bounty, conjoined an obligation to undertake certain public functions, especially business of a lighter kind, suited to one in the decline of life. 'These widows (adds he) assisted the deaconesses properly so called, and were called πρεσβυτίδες.' Epiphanius expressly distinguishes τὰς γραιοτέρας πρεσβυτίδας from the common deaconesses, and at the same time adds that they were χῆραι. It would seem that, before their 60th year, they might receive occasional and temporary relief, but were not put on the list for regular maintenance.

— ἑνὸς ἀνδρὸς γυνή.] It is strange that some eminent Expositors should have taken this to denote, or at least include, the sense of preserving conjugal fidelity. The expression plainly signifies the having had but one husband, being univira. So Luke ii. 36, ζήσασα μετὰ ἀνδρὸς, scil. ἑνός.

10. ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς μαρτ.] This use of ἐν is Hellenistic. In Classical Greek it would find no place. So Joseph. Ant. xv. 10. 5. we have ἦν τις—τοῦ βίου καλοκαγαθίᾳ μαρτυρούμενος ἐπὶ τοῖς πᾶσιν.

— εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησε.] It is not necessary here to suppose any unusual sense of εἰ; it will be sufficient only to repeat χήρα καταλεγέσθω. By ἐτεκν. is meant 'educated,' and, as is implied in the context, virtuously. See Eph. vi. 4. Of course, it must be meant of such children as she has had, if any; for we are not to suppose, as Heinr. does, that the bearing of children is here insisted on. Nay, we find, from Ecclesiastical History, that aged virgins were at a later period received into the number of the χῆραι. Ἐξεν. denotes hospitably entertaining Christian brethren, though strangers; chiefly, we may suppose, travelling preachers, since ἁγίων just after occurs. On ἁ. πόδας ἔνιψεν see note on John xiii. 14. This observance was usually administered by, or under the superintendence of, the mistress of the house; and being, in the East, particularly grateful, is meant to designate generally kind attention to the comfort of guests.

—θλιβομένοις ἐπήρκεσε] i.e. 'hath ministered help to, relieved, those in need.' The term (which is from ἐπὶ and ἀρκέω) signifies properly, 'to ward off evil by interposing a shield, ἐπί τινι, over a person;' and figuratively, and by implication, to relieve the distressed. So Diod. Sic. vol. x. 120, τοῖς δεδεμένοις τῶν οἰκετῶν ἐπαρκοῦσα.

— ἐπηκολούθησε.] Literally, 'has followed δὲ χήρας παραιτοῦ· ὅταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, γαμεῖν θέλουσιν· ἔχουσαι κρίμα, ὅτι τὴν πρώτην πίστιν 12 f Tit. 2. 3. ἠθέτησαν. [f] Ἅμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάνουσι περιερχόμεναι 13 τὰς οἰκίας· οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀργαὶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ φλύαροι καὶ περί-g 1 Cor. 7. 9. εργοι, λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δέοντα. [g] Βούλομαι οὖν νεωτέρας 14 γαμεῖν, τεκνογονεῖν, οἰκοδεσποτεῖν, μηδεμίαν ἀφορμὴν διδόναι τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ λοιδορίας χάριν. ἤδη γάρ τινες ἐξετράπησαν 15 h Supra v. 3. ὀπίσω τοῦ Σατανᾶ. [h] Εἴ τις πιστὸς ἢ πιστὴ ἔχει χήρας, 16 i Rom. 12. 8. & 15. 27. 1 Cor. 9. 11. ἐπαρκείτω αὐταῖς, καὶ μὴ βαρείσθω ἡ ἐκκλησία· ἵνα ταῖς & 12. 28. Gal. 6. 6. ὄντως χήραις ἐπαρκέσῃ.

Phil. 2. 29. 1 Thess. 5. 12. Heb. 13. 17. [i] Οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιού- 17 it up,' i. e. has lost no opportunity of practising benevolence and charity.

11. ὅταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χρ.] Meaning, 'when they become wanton against Christ;' i. e. rebel against the restraints of Christianity [by which they are destined to celibacy], they desire to marry.' So (in imitation of the present passage) it is said by Barnabas, Epist.: ὅταν γὰρ σπαταλῶσιν, ἐπιλανθάνονται τοῦ Κυρίου ἑαυτῶν. The term καταστρ. comes from καταστρηνὴς, stiff, and figuratively, stubborn, rebellious. Compare 1 Sam. ii. 29, and Deut. xxxii. 15.

12. ἔχουσαι κρίμα—ἠθέτησαν.] Expositors are not agreed whether πίστ. is to be interpreted of the Christian faith, and ἠθέτ. of abandoning it; or whether it is to be understood of the solemn engagement (perhaps by vow) to celibacy, and devoting themselves to the office of χήρα, which marriage would render impossible; and ἠθέτ. of making light of and forsaking it. As to the former interpretation, I am not aware of any example of ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν, or ἀθ. being ever used of casting off a religion; which, too, would not necessarily follow their marrying even with heathens, as appears from 1 Cor. vii. 14. Besides, thus the suitableness of the expression πρώτην might be questioned; since Paganism was their first religion. Whereas, according to the sense it carries in the second interpretation, it is very apt. And the phrase ἀθετεῖν τὴν πίστιν, in the sense fallere fidem, 'forsake a promise or engagement,' is frequent in the later Classical writers and the Sept. Indeed, the words preceding evidently allude to an engagement to celibacy; and therefore to that the πίστιν may most naturally be referred. Πρώτην is for προτέραν, as Rev. ii. 4, and often in the New Test. Κρίμα will thus mean condemnation, severe censure, notam infamiæ, as Hyperius expresses it.

13. ἅμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάν. &c.] This corresponds to γαμεῖν θέλουσιν at v. 11; v. 12 being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. 'They desire to marry, and, moreover, learn to idly gad about among families.' By which seems to be meant, that they made their duty of going about to instruct the women and children, or other parts of their office, (as seeking out objects of charity, see Note supra v. 10), rather a means of pastime, than subservient to the purposes of their vocation. Thus they formed habits of idleness; and not only that, but, as is added, of trifling, prying, and intermeddling; a spirit which is admirably depicted in the masterly sketches of Theophrastus, περὶ λαλιᾶς, and περὶ περιεργίας. Between the terms ἀργαὶ and περίεργ. we may observe a paronomasia, as in 2 Thess. iii. 11. Φλύαρος comes from φλύος, a bubble; since to blow up such well designates the occupation of a trifler. Λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δ. is an euphemism for 'talking scandal.' So Eurip. Phœn. 205, Φιλόψογον γὰρ χρῆμα θηλειῶν ἔφυ· Σμικρὰς δ' ἀφορμὰς ἢν λάβωσι τῶν λόγων, Πλείους ἐπεισφέρουσιν. ἡδονὴ δέ τις Γυναιξὶ, μηδὲν ὑγιὲς ἀλλήλαις λέγειν.

14. νεωτέρας] i. e. the younger widows, not women, as in our common Version; for of those alone the context treats. Indeed, χήρας is added in several MSS., and expressed by the Greek Commentators. Βούλομαι is to be understood, not of injunction, but only of wish that they would marry rather than make engagements and break them; q. d. 'I wish them to marry again, if they are so inclined and have opportunity, rather than aim at what they cannot attain, namely, the dedicating of themselves, by celibacy, to the promotion of the Gospel.' So also the words are explained by Calvin, Hyperius, and Grotius.

— τεκνογονεῖν, οἰκοδεσπ.] Supply ὥστε; ὥστε τεκν. &c. being for ἵνα τεκνογονῶσι καὶ οἰκοδ., 'that they may be occupied in the various duties of wives and mothers;' these three terms, γαμεῖν, τεκνογονεῖν, and οἰκοδεσποτεῖν, comprehending, as Bengel remarks, the three grades of female domestic society.

— μηδεμίαν ἀφορμὴν, &c.] 'and [thereby] give no handle,' &c. Τῷ ἀντικειμένῳ is used in a generic sense for τοῖς ἀντικειμένοις; compare 1 Cor. xvi. 9. Phil. i. 20. Λοιδορίας χάριν, for λοιδ. ἕνεκα, and that for εἰς λοιδορίαν.

15. ἐξετρ. ὀπίσω τ. Σ.] This may mean, 'have turned aside to follow the suggestions of Satan;' i. e. by marrying, to the violation of their sacred engagements, and, if to an unbeliever, probably to the abandonment of the faith.

16. ἔχει χήρας] 'have near relations who are poor widows;' i. e. as mothers, grandmothers, daughters, or sisters.

17. From the relief of the poor the Apostle proceeds to the support of ministers; though with an obscurity of expression (arising probably from delicacy), which prevents us from acquiring any very exact information. That a stipend was appropriated to the support of the minister is certain; but on the amount, and the mode of collection, we are left much in the dark. Some σθωσαν, μάλιστα οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλίᾳ.

18 [k] Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφή· Βοῦν ἀλοῶντα οὐ φιμώσεις· k Dent. 21. 14. & 25. 4.
19 καὶ ἄξιος ὁ ἐργάτης τοῦ μισθοῦ αὐτοῦ. [l] Κατὰ πρεσβυ- Lev. 19. 13. Matt. 10. 10. τέρου κατηγορίαν μὴ παραδέχου, ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἢ Luke 10. 7. 1 Cor. 9. 9. l Deut. 19. 15.
20 τριῶν μαρτύρων. Τοὺς ἁμαρτάνοντας ἐνώπιον πάντων l Tit. 1. 13. Deut. 13. 11.
21 ἔλεγχε, ἵνα καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ φόβον ἔχωσι. Διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκ-τῶν ἀγγέλων, ἵνα ταῦτα φυλάξῃς χωρὶς προκρίματος, μηδὲν 22 ποιῶν κατὰ πρόσκλισιν. [m] Χεῖρας ταχέως μηδενὶ ἐπιτίθει, m Acts 6. 6. & 13. 3. μηδὲ κοινώνει ἁμαρτίαις ἀλλοτρίαις· σεαυτὸν ἁγνὸν τήρει. 1 Tim. 3. 10. 2 John 11.
23 [n] Μηκέτι ὑδροπότει, ἀλλ' οἴνῳ ὀλίγῳ χρῶ, διὰ τὸν στόμαχόν n Ps. 104. 15.

glimmering of light, however, may be obtained from a passage of Euseb. H. E. v. 28 (cited by Wetstein), where there is mention of a certain Bishop being engaged ὥστε λαμβάνειν μηνιαῖα δηνάρια ρν' at 150 Denaria a month. Προεστ. πρεσβ. must not be taken, with some, of the Pastoral duties properly so called; but of the directive functions of some one ruling Presbyter, who regulated and had the government of the Church of a city or district; in fact, the Bishop of a somewhat later period. Of ἀξιούσθ. the meaning is not merely, 'let them receive,' but, 'let them receive as their just due.' So Hebr. iii. 3, πλείονος γὰρ δόξης οὗτος παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἠξίωται. By τιμῆς may be understood both competent reward and suitable respect; and the term διπλῆς may (as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) be taken as standing for πολλῆς, i. e. liberal stipend; examples of which mode of expression have been adduced both from the Classical and Scriptural writers, though not all of them to the purpose; see 2 Kings ii. 9, and Rev. xviii. 6. This view of the sense is preferable to the one commonly adopted, because the Apostle, it may be observed, when speaking on the present subject, never descends to particulars. To avoid, however, any unnecessary curtailment of the sense, we may, with Bp. Sanderson (in his third Sermon ad Aulam, p. 393), understand this double honour, of one honour due to the place, and another due to merit in the discharge of its duties. 'For where (says he) place and merit concur, there is a double honour due.' If this view be admitted, there may be (as Wetstein supposes) an allusion to those soldiers, who, for eminent services, had double pay assigned to them.

— οἱ κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδ.] i. e. discharging the regular pastoral duties. See Benson.

18. καὶ ἄξιος—αὐτοῦ.] These words are no where to be found in the Old Test.; and as we are not compelled here to repeat λέγει ἡ γραφή, we may suppose that the words in question are introduced as a proverbial maxim, such as our Lord often adopted. So Calvin regards it as a 'præceptum politicum, quod in generali æquitatem commendat.'

19. κατὰ πρεσβ.] Not, 'an elderly person,' as many interpret, but, 'a presbyter.' Ἐπὶ, 'under the testimony of:' a rule founded on the Law of Moses, Deut. xix. 15, and adverted to at Matt. xviii. 16. John viii. 17.

20. τοὺς ἁμαρτ.] It is not agreed whether the presbyters, or the people at large, are here to be understood. The context favours the former view; but the air of the sentence, and the change of number, rather require the latter.

21. διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, &c.] A most solemn form of injunction, introduced, as Calvin observes, not only from the matter being very serious, but of great difficulty. Heinrichs compares a similar one in Josephus, Bell. ii. 16. 4, μαρτύρομαι ὑμῶν τὰ ἅγια, καὶ τοὺς ἱεροὺς ἀγγέλους τοῦ Θεοῦ. By ἐκλεκ. ἀγγέλων are meant those angels who kept their first estate, and are, therefore, the chosen and approved ones; see Note on Matt. xx. 16. They are here conjoined with the Lord Jesus, because they will be present at the day of judgment as assessores judicii attendant on Christ. The word Κυρίου, not found in some ancient MSS. and several Versions and Fathers, has been cancelled by Griesb. and Scholz; but on insufficient grounds.

— ἵνα ταῦτα φυλάξῃς, &c.] This may partly extend to all the foregoing injunctions; but it chiefly respects the last; ταῦτα meaning, 'all these matters of discipline.' Χωρὶς προκρίματος, i. e. 'keeping yourself apart from prejudice or prepossession;' lit., fore-judging, answering to the Latin præjudicium. Κατὰ πρόσκλισιν, 'through partiality,' or undue favour. So Clemens, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, has κατὰ προσκλίσεις. The word properly signifies a leaning towards or upon. So Diod. Sic. iii. 27, πρόσκλισις τοῦ ζώου πρὸς τὸ δένδρον.

22, 23. χεῖρας—ἐπιτίθει.] 'Lay hands hastily or inconsiderately on no man.' Μηδὲ κοιν. ἁμ. ἀλλ.; i. e. 'Do not [by thus ordaining unfit persons] make thyself answerable for their delinquencies.' The next words, μηκέτι ὑδροπ., are by many referred to what follows; but by others to what precedes; which is certainly more suitable to the gravity of the Apostle and that of the foregoing subject: nay, it ought on another account to be adopted; namely, because ver. 24, according to the opinion of the best Expositors, is closely connected with v. 22, v. 23 being a parenthetical admonition. The abruptness here is thus accounted for by Mr. Scott: 'It occurred to the Apostle's mind, when reflecting on Timothy's manifold cares and labours, that his frequent indispositions might be increased by too great abstemiousness, to the prevention of his usefulness, and the shortening of his days. He therefore broke in upon his subject, to counsel him not to drink water any longer, at least as his only liquor, but to use a little wine, to strengthen his

σου καὶ τὰς πυκνάς σου ἀσθενείας. Τινῶν ἀνθρώπων αἱ 24
ἁμαρτίαι πρόδηλοί εἰσι, προάγουσαι εἰς κρίσιν· τισὶ δὲ καὶ ἐπακολουθοῦσιν. Ὡσαύτως καὶ τὰ καλὰ ἔργα πρόδηλά ἐστι· 25 καὶ τὰ ἄλλως ἔχοντα κρυβῆναι οὐ δύναται.
a Eph. 6. 5. Col. 3. 22. Tit. 2. 5, 8, 9. 1 Pet. 2. 18. VI. [a] ΟΣΟΙ εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν δοῦλοι, τοὺς ἰδίους δεσπό- 1 τας πάσης τιμῆς ἀξίους ἡγείσθωσαν, ἵνα μὴ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ διδασκαλία βλασφημῆται. Οἱ δὲ πιστοὺς ἔχον- 2 τες δεσπότας, μὴ καταφρονείτωσαν, ὅτι ἀδελφοί εἰσιν· ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλευέτωσαν, ὅτι πιστοί εἰσι καὶ ἀγαπητοὶ οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι. Ταῦτα δίδασκε καὶ παρακάλει.
b Gal. 1. 6, 7. supra 1. 3, 4. [b] Εἴ τις ἑτεροδιδασκαλεῖ, καὶ μὴ προσέρχεται ὑγιαίνουσι 3 λόγοις τοῖς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ τῇ κατ' c 1 Cor. 8. 2. supra 1. 4. 2 Tim. 2. 23. Tit. 3. 9. εὐσέβειαν διδασκαλίᾳ, [c] τετύφωται, μηδὲν ἐπιστάμενος, ἀλλὰ 4 νοσῶν περὶ ζητήσεις καὶ λογομαχίας, ἐξ ὧν γίνεται φθόνος, stomach, and preserve his health.' See also Macknight.

24, 25. This must (as was before observed) be connected with what precedes, there being here, as Hyperius observes, an Epanaphora or regressio. The general meaning may be thus expressed: 'Keep thyself pure from all participation in other men's sins [by ordaining unfit persons to the ministry;] [To avoid which, however, will require much circumspection and consideration]; for though some men's sins are discernible without any close examination, anticipating, as it were, the judgment passed on them after examination; yet, in other persons, their faults only follow, being known only after much examination. In like manner it is with respect to men's virtues. Some immediately appear; while others are only known after long acquaintance with the persons.' Similarly it is said in Soph. Œd. Tyr., Χρόνος δίκαιον ἄνδρα δείκνυσιν μόνος· Κακὸν δὲ κἂν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ γνοίης μιᾷ.

25. καὶ τὰ ἄλλως ἔχοντα, &c.] Meaning, 'and those works which are otherwise [than manifest] (i. e. οὐ πρόδηλα) cannot [whether they be good or bad] be long hid.' See more in Calvin, Hyperius, Whitby, and Newcome.

VI. 1. The admonitions in this and the following verse are (as appears from ver. 3) intended to correct certain contrary positions of the false teachers (commonly supposed to have been Judaizers), who, it seems, wanted to introduce into the Christian Church the doctrine,—that, as no Jew was to remain a slave for life, so ought no Christian; thus releasing men from all civil duties, under the pretence of religious rights, to the great scandal of the Gospel. Indeed, into errors of this kind ignorant or unreflecting persons might easily fall (partly by misinterpreting the metaphorical language of the Apostle), even without being perverted by any Judaizing teachers. It was obvious that the spirit of the Gospel is adverse to slavery. Indeed, in proportion as its injunctions are obeyed, it tends to root out a practice, in which folly and injustice are alike conspicuous. Hence it was natural for persons so ignorant as slaves to regard the Gospel as freeing men from all obligations that are intrinsically and fundamentally inconsistent with justice and equity. Thus the admonition was highly seasonable.

— ὅσοι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν δ.] We may notice the strength of this expression, in which there is a blending of two (compare Gal. v. 1, ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθε), and that in order to put the case in its strongest point of view (supposing even the harshest bondage), and thereby make the injunction to obedience the more forcible. See parallel exhortations in Eph. vi. 5—8, and 1 Pet. ii. 18, where see Notes.

2. μὴ καταφ.] scil. αὐτῶν. Meaning, that they must not neglect to obey their orders, on the ground of being their equals in a spiritual point of view.

— ἀλλὰ μᾶλλον δουλ.] Render, 'but let them serve them the rather,' i. e. the more zealously and faithfully. So μᾶλλον ἀγαπᾶν in John iii. 19, and xii. 43, and often elsewhere. The term ἀγαπητοὶ (at which supply ἀδελφοὶ) serves to strengthen the preceding term πιστοί. The next words, οἱ τῆς εὐεργ. ἀντιλ. must not, with some, be referred to the slaves, but to the masters. Render, 'because they who enjoy the benefit [of their service] are believers, and beloved [brethren].'

3. ἑτεροδιδ.] See Note supra i. 3. Προσέρχεται, 'accede to, acquiesce in.' So Philo, 289, A. μηδὲν προσέρχεσθαι γνώμῃ τῶν εἰρημένων. Ὑγιαίνουσι λόγοις, 'sound words.' A medical metaphor, often occurring in this and the second Epistle to Timothy, and found also in that to Titus. By εὐσέβειαν is meant 'the true religion,' the Gospel, as supra iii. 16, and elsewhere.

4. τετύφωται, μηδὲν ἐπιστ.] Meaning, 'he is puffed up with pride, though knowing nothing.' So Polyb. ii. 81, ἀγνοεῖ καὶ τετύφ. Τετύφ. is equivalent to φυσιούμενος in a similar passage of Col. ii. 18. Νοσῶν is used agreeably to the preceding metaphor in ὑγ., and means, 'having a morbid fondness for,' as in Plato, Phædr. p. 282, ἀπαντήσας τῷ νοσοῦντι περὶ λόγων ἀκοήν.

It is truly remarked by Hyperius, 'Mente sani non sunt, dum sese sic involvunt quæstionibus et disputationum pugnis, ut nunquam possint se extricare. Ac verè languent, ubi in certa ac solida doctrina fidei nequeunt consistere, neque habent, quo se sustentent, quamdiu ut dubii et

5 ἔρις, βλασφημίαι, ὑπόνοιαι πονηραὶ, [d] ‡ παραδιατριβαὶ διεφθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων τὸν νοῦν, καὶ ἀπεστερημένων τῆς ἀληθείας, νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τὴν εὐσέβειαν. Ἀφίστασο 6 ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων. [e] Ἔστι δὲ πορισμὸς μέγας ἡ εὐσέβεια
7 μετὰ αὐταρκείας. [f] οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσηνέγκαμεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον·
8 δῆλον ὅτι οὐδὲ ἐξενεγκεῖν τί δυνάμεθα· [g] ἔχοντες δὲ δια-9 τροφὰς καὶ σκεπάσματα, τούτοις ἀρκεσθησόμεθα. [h] Οἱ δὲ βουλόμενοι πλουτεῖν, ἐμπίπτουσιν εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα, d Rom. 16. 17. 2 Tim. 3. 5, 8. 2 Pet. 2. 3. 2 John 10.

e Prov. 15. 16. supra 4. 8. Heb. 13. 5. f Job 1. 21. & 27. 19. Ps. 49. 18. Prov. 27. 24. Eccl. 5. 14, 15. g Eccl. 29. 28. Matt. 6. 25. 1 Pet. 5. 7.
h Prov. 11. 28. & 20. 21. & 28. 20. Matt. 13. 22. James 5. 1.

animo deficientes in scabie quæstionum volutantur.'

By these ζητήσεις understand those wranglings mentioned supra i. 4, and by the λογομ. the verbal altercations thence arising.

— ἐξ ὧν γίνεται, &c.] The Apostle now proceeds to show the pernicious result of this ambitious desire of knowledge, by pointing to its dire effects, in a congeries of evils thence arising. (Calvin and Hyperius.) By ὑπόνοιαι πονηραὶ we may best understand those injurious suspicions mutually entertained between the parties who are affected with this wrangling disease, as Bp. Wilkins well calls it.

5. παραδιατριβαί.] The reading here is uncertain. Griesbach and Scholz edit, from four uncial and about 20 other MSS., διαπαρατρ. But the compound διαπαρατρ. is almost unexampled, and good reasons are given by Tittman, de Synon., p. 233, why that reading cannot be admitted. The παρα in this word denotes, as Heinrichs observes, inanity, and the δια vehemence. Thus the expression aptly designates the folly as well as violence of the contest excited by the angry competition above alluded to. The next words, διεφθαρμένων ἀνθρώπων, &c., seem meant, by adverting to the character and disposition of the persons themselves, to intimate the wholesome truth, that (as Hyperius says) 'ex conditione doctorum solet eorum doctrina æstimari;' q. d. 'It is not likely that any wholesome doctrine can come from those whose minds and consciences are corrupt, and consequently destitute of truth.'

— νομιζόντων πορισμὸν εἶναι τ. εὐσέβειαν.] Here we have an illustration of the corruptness just adverted to. Render, 'supposing that godliness is gain,' i. e. regarding the Gospel, or any other religion, only as it may be subservient to gain. The Article here (as Calvin and Newcome observe) serves to indicate that εὐσέβειαν is the subject, not the predicate. Sentences similarly constructed occur in the best Greek writers; ex. gr. Dionys. Hal. iii. 5, οἱ δὲ χρηματισμὸν ἡγούμενοι τὸν πόλεμον. Joseph. Bell. i. 32. 3, τερατείαν δέ μου (I conjecture που, utique) καὶ ὑπόκρισιν λέγεις τὴν εὐσέβειαν. Xenoph. Mem. i. 6. 10, ἔοικας τὴν εὐδαιμονίαν εἶναι τρυφὴν καὶ πολυτέλειαν. Philo, 877. A. (of the Essenes) τὴν ὀλιγόδειαν καὶ εὐκολίαν, ὅπερ ἐστὶ, κρίνοντες περιουσίαν. Zosim. ii. 38. 2, τὴν γὰρ ἀσωτίαν ἡγεῖτο φιλοτιμίαν. Joseph. Bell. ii. 21. 1, ἀρετὴν ἡγούμενος τὴν ἀπάτην.

With the sentiment Wetstein aptly compares from Seneca, Ep. 108, 'qui philosophiam, velut aliquod artificium venale, didicerunt.'

— ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.] So it is said, Ecclus. vii. 2, ἀπόστηθι ἀπὸ ἀδίκου· and examples of this expression are adduced from the Classical writers.

6. ἔστι δὲ πορισμὸς, &c.] Here such a skilful turn (per inversionem, or κατ' ἀντίστροφον, as the Grammarians say,) is given to the foregoing position, as to make it express a weighty truth; namely, that 'piety is not, as the false teachers deem it, a losing concern, but that it is piety itself that is the gain;' meaning, that religion, if accompanied with that contented spirit which it alone teaches (a disposition well said by Bp. Sanderson to consist 'in the mutual and relative sufficiency of the things unto the mind, and the mind unto the things,') produces the truest gain, even comfort here and everlasting life hereafter. A similar sentiment is adduced by Wetstein from Philo: τί ἂν εἴη κέρδος λυσιτελέστερον ὁσιότητος;

7. The Apostle now, as Theodoret observes, confirms the above position from the very nature of things.

— οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσηνέγκαμεν, &c.] The γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. 'Why should we be so anxious to secure what can stand us in so little stead, and will fail us so soon? since there is nothing we can long enjoy; for we brought,' &c. Loesner here compares from Philo, p. 852, μηδὲν εἰς κόσμον, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ σαυτὸν εἰσήνεγκας· γυμνὸς μὲν γὰρ ἦλθες, γυμνὸς πάλιν ἀπίῃς. Similar sentiments, too, are found in Soph. Antig. 1037—9. Eurip. Ion, 648. Hor. Carm. ii. 14. 21.

8. The Apostle here shows in what this αὐτάρκεια (ver. 6) consists.

— διατροφάς.] The word is put in the plural, in order to answer to σκεπάσματα, which term has the same sense as our clothes; and so it is used in Joseph. Bell. ii. 8. 5, ζωσάμενοι σκεπάσμασι λινοῖς. In διατροφὰς the δια is very significant, importing a perpetual supply of necessary food, the 'provisæ fruges in annum' of Horace. Several similar sentiments may be seen in Wetstein.

9, 10. In these verses we have arguments against avarice from the extreme perils in which it involves men; and those are set forth by enumeration. (Hyperius.)

In vain is it that some recent Commentators have attempted to refine away this impressive admonition, by referring it to mere Jewish notions. Avarice and idolatry are, indeed, compared, both in the Old and New Testament; not that they are of equal guilt, but in order to show the great guilt of the former: and that covetousness is in the Gospel regarded as highly criminal, the strong language of the Apostle puts beyond a doubt.

9. οἱ βουλόμενοι πλουτεῖν.] Meaning, 'those who study to be rich,' and devote their thoughts to the increase of their wealth, making this their καὶ ἐπιθυμίας πολλὰς ἀνοήτους καὶ βλαβεράς, αἵτινες i Prov. 15. 16. βυθίζουσι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους εἰς ὄλεθρον καὶ ἀπώλειαν. [i] Ῥίζα 10 γὰρ πάντων τῶν κακῶν ἐστιν ἡ φιλαργυρία· ἧς τινὲς ὀρεγόμενοι ἀπεπλανήθησαν ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως, καὶ ἑαυτοὺς περιk 2 Tim. 2. 22. έπειραν ὀδύναις πολλαῖς. [k] Σὺ δὲ, ὦ ἄνθρωπε τοῦ Θεοῦ, 11 ταῦτα φεῦγε· δίωκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, εὐσέβειαν, πίστιν, chief object and aim. Εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα. Meaning (by Hendiadys) 'into ensnaring temptations;' namely, both in spending what they have, and in gaining more. The words following point out the pernicious effects thence resulting.

— ἀνοήτους καὶ βλαβεράς.] Thus meaning to say, 'not only that they are hurtful, but such as are unworthy of a being endowed with the faculty of reason (νοῦς), who, being thus raised above the animals, ought to rise above them in such animal propensities.' So Longinus, de Subl. § 44, says that when men are devoted to avarice and sensuality, and the cognate passions and affections, they can no longer look upwards; and that mental greatness must pine away and be neglected, when men τὰ θνητὰ ἑαυτῶν μέρη καὶ ἀνόητα ἐκθαυμάζοιεν, παρέντες αὔξειν τὰ ἀθάνατα. Here, for ἀνοήτους, several MSS. have ἀνονήτους, which has been approved by some Critics. But the common reading is decidedly preferable, and is confirmed by the use of this very term with ἐπιθυμ. in Pausan. Arcad. p. 202, εἰς ἐπιθυμίας δὲ ἀνοήτους πολλοὶ ἐξοκέλλουσι.

In the words following, βυθίζουσιν εἰς ὄλεθρον καὶ ἀπώλειαν there is an almost poetical boldness of metaphor; and here, I would observe, Longinus, ubi supra, may possibly have had in view the present passage (as he elsewhere quotes Moses) when he writes: ἡ γὰρ φιλοχρηματία, πρὸς ἣν ἅπαντες ἀπλήστως ἤδη νοσοῦμεν, καὶ ἡ φιληδονία δουλαγωγοῦσι, μᾶλλον δὲ, ὡς ἂν εἴποι τις, καταβυθίζουσι αὐτάνδρους ἤδη τοὺς βίους.

10. ῥίζα γὰρ πάντων τῶν κακῶν ἐστιν ἡ φιλαργυρία.] Some, in order to avoid what they think too sweeping an assertion, and one scarcely justified by facts, would render, 'a root of all evils;' and others, 'the root of all these (i. e. the above-mentioned evils) is,' &c. Of which two expositions the former would violate the usus loquendi, according to which the Article, though not expressed, is necessarily implied in the πάντων; for a root of all evils is surely a contradiction in terms. As to the latter, it is quite against the idiom of the Greek language, which would require, to express such a sense, πάντων τούτων τῶν κακῶν. Indeed the sense itself would be one not sufficiently strong for the context; it being evident that the Apostle meant to say, as Hyperius explains, 'In summâ quoniam difficile esset enumerare omnia mala et pericula quæ ab avaritiâ proveniunt, ipsa est omnium malorum radix et origo.' Nor need we scruple on the ground that some few vices that are also productive of great evils (as lust) seem unconnected with avarice, though they are not so in effect,—and one might take as literally true what is said by Ammianus Marcell. l. xxxi. 4, 'Cupiditates (sunt) materia omnium vitiorum;' which will include φιληδονία as well as φιλοχρηματία. Indeed, it is well observed by the author of the Essay on Mammon, that selfishness is the essential element of every sin. 'Were we (says he) to analyse the very last sin of which we ourselves are conscious, we should discover that selfishness, in one or other of its thousand forms, was the parent. Thus if love was the pervading principle of the unfallen creation, it is equally certain that selfishness is the reigning law of the world ravaged and disorganized by sin.' Be that as it may,—here, as Calvin remarks, it was certainly not the Apostle's intention to include under avarice whatever species of vices can be named: he simply means to say (by a popular hyperbole, πάντων standing for πολλῶν, very many,) that 'infinite are the evils resulting from this one;' or, as Bp. Sanderson paraphrases, 'this is the root of very many and even almost of all evils;' this is κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the root of all, as most productive thereof. So corresponding to the saying of Bion, μητρόπολις τῆς κακίας φιλαργυρία.

— ἧς τινὲς ὀρεγόμενοι.] Meaning, 'through the lust of which.'

— ἑαυτοὺς περιέπειραν ὀδ. π.] It is strange that some (as Beza, Elsner, Doddridge, and Macknight) should take the sense to be, 'have pierced themselves all over from head to foot.' The περι in περιέπ. is for ἐπὶ or ἐν; and the term signifies properly to stick any thing upon a sharp stake, &c., or to stick the stake into it (of which sense many examples are adduced by Wetstein); and, metaphorically, to inflict acute agony. Indeed, the very phrase π. ὀδύν. occurs in Homer and Orpheus, cited by Wetstein; to which I would add Æsop, Fab. 304, ἑαυτοὺς περιπείροντες ἀτοπίστοις, 'unexpected evils.' Ὀδύνη is a very strong term, derived, I apprehend, from ὀδοὺς, and thus denoting literally a gnawing pain; an expression most applicable to the present case; for, as Bp. Sanderson well observes (in his fifth Sermon ad Aulam, p. 428), 'whilst men (divided between hope and fear), through the desire of having, hang in suspense between the hope of getting and the fear of missing, they cannot but hence suffer many sorrows, and create to themselves much unrest.'

11. ἄνθρωπε τοῦ Θεοῦ.] A title formerly given to the prophets of the Old Test., and therefore very suitable to the inspired teachers of the New, and, indeed, to Ministers of succeeding ages, as denoting 'one devoted to God, and employed in making his will known unto man.' See 2 Cor. v. 20 and 2 Tim. iii. 17.

— δίωκε δὲ, &c.] Having thus warned Timothy to shun the various vices and evil dispositions before enumerated, Paul now enjoins him to cultivate those virtues most opposed thereto,—virtues which here, as in a similar enumeration at 1 Pet. i. 5—7, form a beautiful chain, not a link of which can be dispensed with; and here too, as at Rom. ix. 30, 31; 1 Cor. xii. 1; and Hebr. xii. 14, he employs the forcible term διώκω, which properly signifies to pursue after, and figuratively, to 12 ἀγάπην, ὑπομονὴν, πρᾳότητα. [l] Ἀγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τῆς πίστεως, ἐπιλαβοῦ τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς, εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλήθης, καὶ ὡμολόγησας τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν ἐνώπιον 13 πολλῶν μαρτύρων. [m] Παραγγέλλω σοὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τὰ πάντα, καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ μαρτυ-14 ρήσαντος ἐπὶ Ποντίου Πιλάτου τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν, τηρῆ-σαί σε τὴν ἐντολὴν ἄσπιλον, ἀνεπίληπτον, μέχρι τῆς ἐπι-15 φανείας τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [n] ἣν καιροῖς ἰδίοις δείξει ὁ μακάριος καὶ μόνος δυνάστης, ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν 16 βασιλευόντων καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυριευόντων, [o] ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθανασίαν, φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ ἰδεῖν δύναται· ᾧ τιμὴ καὶ κράτος αἰώνιον. ἀμήν.

l 1 Cor. 9. 25, 26. Phil. 3. 12, 14. supra 1. 18. infra ver. 19. 2 Tim. 4. 7. m Deut. 32. 39. 1 Sam. 2. 6. Matt. 27. 11. John 18. 37. supra 5. 21. n Supra 1. 11, 17. & 5. 11. Rev. 17. 14. & 19. 16.
o Exod. 33. 20. Deut. 4 12. John 1. 18. 1 John 4. 12, 20.

earnestly endeavour to attain to. So in Eurip. Ion, 440, we have the very phrase δίωκε ἀρετάς.

In the present enumeration the Apostle, we may observe, keeps much to generalities; while at Galat. v. 22, where he specifies or exemplifies the fruits of the Spirit, he is more particular. It is, however, worthy of remark, that, as he commences this list with the master virtue, and preeminent characteristic of the Christian religion, δικαιοσύνη, or the doing unto others as we would they should do unto us, so he ends both lists with the qualities of meekness and forbearance; meaning, it would seem, to intimate, that by these alone can the other virtues be made effectual to the great purpose of 'the man of God,' even 'the salvation of souls.' By these, indeed, the 'wisdom which cometh from above' is evinced to be pure, in that it is peaceable (see James iii. 17): and well does patience hold the prominent place here assigned to it, 'patience being (as Bp. Sanderson admirably terms it) the great peace-maker.'

12. ἀγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα τ. π.] Spoken doubtless with reference to the whole of his exertions, whether in the defence, or in the illustration of the faith, both by words and actions. Καλὸν, 'good, or honourable.' This, indeed, it might well be termed, as compared with the ignoble objects which called forth the exertions of the ἀγωνισταί; see 1 Cor. ix. 25. The same agonistic allusion (also observable at 1 Cor. ix. 24—27) is kept up in the expression following, ἐπιλαβοῦ, wherein we have an allusion to the eagerness with which the ἀγωνισταὶ strove to attain the prize; for endeavour here is to be united with the sense of the verb; see Note on John vii. 52, ἴδε.

— εἰς ἣν καὶ ἐκλ.] 'to which thou wert or hast been called;' namely, at his baptism, and afterwards at his ordination, which latter is especially adverted to in the next words, with allusion to the public profession of faith, which always accompanied the rite. Now this might well be called καλὴ, as being a full profession of faith and hope, and a solemn engagement to give himself wholly to the work of the ministry.

13. What the Apostle had before enjoined in figure, he now expresses in the natural way; making, however, what he says yet more impressive from the solemnity of the manner, taking God and Christ as witnesses to his injunctions. The words τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος seem meant to animate the courage of Timothy in defence of the Gospel, as well as his zeal and exertions in fulfilling his vows, from the remembrance of that Being who gave him life and yet preserved it, and would raise him up at the last day (see Rom. iv. 17. Eph. ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 18), and give him an inheritance incorruptible, and that fadeth not away. In μαρτυρήσαντος — ὁμολ. there is a blending of two phrases; for though μαρτυρίαν μαρτυρεῖν be used, and also ὁμολογίαν ὁμολογεῖν, yet never μαρτυρίαν ὁμολογεῖν. The Article ought to be expressed, both here and in the preceding verse, as denoting notoriety.

14. By ἐντολὴ is here meant the injunction before given, to 'fight the good fight of faith.' Ἄσπιλον, ἀνεπ. is for ὥστε ἄσπ. καὶ ἀνεπ. εἶναι. The ἐπιφαν. τοῦ Κυρίου is best explained of that advent of our Lord, which may be said to take place at each one's death. This is placed beyond doubt by a kindred passage of 1 Cor. i. 8, where see Note.

15. Here are accumulated the grandest predicates of the majesty and power of God, which pave the way for the sublime doxology that closes the passage. (Heinrichs.) Καιρ. ἰδ., 'at his own good time,' be that sooner or later. On the term μακάρ. see Note supra i. 11. Δυνάστης has here the same sense as at 2 Macc. iii. 24. xii. 15. xv. 23.

— ὁ Βασιλεὺς, &c.] Similar expressions are here adduced from ancient writers, the most apposite of which is the following: Philo, ii. 187. 5, Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλέων, καὶ Θεὸς θεῶν. To which I would add Diodor., vol. i. 166, where, in the column set up by Sesostris to commemorate his conquest of Thrace, he calls himself βασιλεὺς βασιλέων καὶ δεσπότης δεσποτῶν. It seems to have been an epithet first applied, by the piety of the earlier ages, to the Supreme Governor of the universe, but afterwards usurped by the pride of earthly monarchs, or ascribed to them by base adulation; so that, in the times of the later Greek historians, it was regularly claimed by, or attributed to, the Roman Emperors and the Persian monarchs.

16. ὁ μόνος ἔχων ἀθαν., &c.] i. e. immortality self-derived; implying, that He alone can confer it; as it is said, John v. 26, that he 'hath life in himself.' The epithet μόνος (on which see Rom. xvi. 27, supra i. 17, and Note) is one applied to all the attributes of the Deity, so as to denote that He is so transcendently the possessor of p Job 31. 24. Ps. 62. 10. Mark 4. 18. & 10. 24. Luke 8. 14. & 12. 15. q Luke 12. 21. James 2. 5.

r Matt. 6. 20. Luke 12. 18, 33. & 16. 9. supra v. 12. s Supra 1. 4. & 4. 7. 2 Tim. 1. 14. & 2. 14, 16. Tit. 1. 14. & 3. 9. Rev. 3. 3. t 2 Tim. 2. 18.

[p] Τοῖς πλουσίοις ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι παράγγελλε μὴ ὑψη- 17 λοφρονεῖν, μηδὲ ἠλπικέναι ἐπὶ πλούτου ἀδηλότητι, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ Θεῷ τῷ ζῶντι, τῷ παρέχοντι ἡμῖν πάντα, πλουσίως εἰς ἀπόλαυσιν· [q] ἀγαθοεργεῖν, πλουτεῖν ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς, 18 εὐμεταδότους εἶναι, κοινωνικοὺς, [r] ἀποθησαυρίζοντας ἑαυτοῖς 19 θεμέλιον καλὸν εἰς τὸ μέλλον, ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς. [s] Ὦ Τιμόθεε, τὴν * παραθήκην φύλαξον, ἐκτρεπόμενος 20 τὰς βεβήλους κενοφωνίας καὶ ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως· [t] ἥν τινὲς ἐπαγγελλόμενοι, περὶ τὴν πίστιν ἠστό- 21 χησαν. Ἡ χάρις μετὰ σοῦ. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Τιμόθεον πρώτη ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Λαοδικείας, ἥτις ἐστὶ μητρόπολις Φρυγίας τῆς Πακατιανῆς.

them, that He alone may be said to possess, as He alone can confer them.

— φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον.] It has been disputed whether φῶς should be taken in a natural or a metaphorical sense. Adopting the former, we may understand the expression of that dazzling glory, which is supposed to surround the throne of God, where he especially dwells; see Rev. xxi. 24, and compare Ps. civ. 2. Isaiah lx. 1. 19, 20: an opinion also held by the heathens, as appears from Hom. Od. ξ. 42, and Plutarch, Pericl. 39, τὸν μὲν τόπον ἐν ᾧ τοὺς θεοὺς κατοικεῖν λέγουσιν—φωτὶ καθαρῷ τὸν ἅπαντα χρόνον ὁμαλῶς περιλαμπόμενον: see more in Grotius, Hyperius, Crellius, and Benson. Thus there may be, as Hyperius and Benson say, an allusion to the custom of Eastern courts, where people were not admitted to see the monarch face to face. Perhaps, however, the expression may be best understood metaphorically, as denoting the invisible nature of Him of whom it is said, John xi. 7, 'Canst thou by seeking find out God?' so meaning (as Scott expresses it), that He is surrounded with glories so resplendent, that no man can possibly approach to Him, except in and by His incarnate Son. After all, however, who shall dare to undertake to pronounce on the exact sense? On a subject so vast, and to which we are as little able to approach as to this 'light inaccessible,' it is well to observe the wholesome admonition of Chrysostom: ὁρᾷς δὲ ὅταν μέγα τι φθέγξασθαι βουληθείη ἡ γλῶττα, πῶς ἐξασθενεῖς!

— ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς, &c.] So it is said, John i. 18, Θεὸν οὐδεὶς ἑώρακε πώποτε. The Apostle now subjoins a most weighty admonition, suggested, we may suppose, at once by a benevolent regard for the poorer classes, and an anxiety which he could not but feel with respect to another class of persons, of whose salvation his own manner of speaking, and still more that of his Lord, argued the great difficulty,—even 'the rich in this world.'

17. τοῖς πλουσίοις ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι.] An expression involving a tacit opposition to the spiritually rich (Matt. vi. 20. xix. 21).

— μὴ ὑψηλοφρονεῖν] 'not to carry themselves haughtily;' see Note on Rom. xi. 20. So Eurip., Suppl. 863, says of Capaneus, ᾧ βίος μὲν ἦν πολὺς, Ἥκιστα δ' ὄλβῳ 'γαῦρος ἦν (was not at all purse-proud), φρόνημα δὲ Οὐδέν τι μεῖζον εἶχεν, ἢ πένης ἀνήρ.

— πλούτου ἀδηλότητι] for πλούτῳ ἀδήλῳ: compare 2 Macc. vii. 34. Similarly it is said by Phocyl. frag. xiii. 24, ὁ βίος τρόχος, ἄστατος ὄλβος. See also Eurip., Elect. 940—44.

— τῷ παρέχοντι ἡμῖν, &c.] The argument hinted at in these words (where, as Schliting observes, God is described ab effectu; q. d. 'cujus munera sunt divitiæ') is, that, as God is so bountiful as to satisfy all our wants, and to some (as the rich) supplies these blessings πλουσίως, so He expects that the rich should imitate His beneficence, by liberally imparting thereof to their fellow-creatures.

18. πλουτεῖν ἐν ἔργ. καλοῖς.] In the use of these several terms πλουσίοις, πλουσίως, and πλουτεῖν, we may observe a beautiful paronomasia. I would here compare a fine passage of Plato, de Rep. p. 696, B., ἐν μόνῃ γὰρ ἄρξουσιν οἱ τῷ ὄντι πλούσιοι, οὐ χρυσίου· δεῖ τὸν εὐδαίμονα πλουτεῖν ζωῆς ἀγαθῆς.

— εὐμεταδότους εἶναι.] Literally, to be good at distributing, ready to impart.

19. ἀποθησ. ἑαυτοῖς θεμ., &c.] There is here a certain harshness of expression, arising from a blending of two metaphors, and a catachresis, by which ἀποθ. is put for καταβαλλ. or κατατίθεσθαι, as in Thucydides, iv. 87, ἀΐδιον δόξαν καταθ. Θεμ. means a firmly assured ground for hoping. So Tobit, iv. 9 (cited by Schleusner), θέμα γὰρ ἀγαθὸν θησαυρίζεις σεαυτῷ εἰς ἡμέραν ἀνάγκης.

— ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῆς αἰωνίου ζ.] These words suggest the tendency of this ἀγαθουργία; for such cannot in itself procure salvation, though it may tend to make any one meet to receive the mercies of God through Christ.

For αἰωνίου very many MSS. and several Versions and Fathers have ὄντως, which has been received by Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; but on insufficient grounds.

20. The Apostle cannot conclude without again urging the injunctions contained in i. 18, and iv. 7. Κενοφ. here is equivalent to ματαιολογία at i. 6. In ἀντιθ. τῆς ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως, we have either an allusion to the ἐναντιώσεις of speculative science (see Philostr. Vit. Soph. i. 25. 9), or a reference to the doctrines of those Gentile Christians who paved the way to Gnosticism. If such be the case, the expression ἀντιθέσεις will have reference to something characteristic of the notions promulgated by them. See Bengel.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΜΟΘΕΟΝ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

---

1 I. ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος 2 Θεοῦ, κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν ζωῆς τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, Τιμοθέῳ ἀγαπητῷ τέκνῳ· χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.
3 [a] Χάριν ἔχω τῷ Θεῷ, ᾧ λατρεύω ἀπὸ προγόνων ἐν a Acts 22. 3. & 23. 1. & 24. 14. Rom. 1. 8, 9. Eph. 1. 16. 1 Thess. 1. 2. & 3. 10.

THAT this Epistle was written by St. Paul while under confinement, and at Rome, is plain from i. 8. 12. 16, 17, and ii. 9. But whether that was his first imprisonment (mentioned in Acts xxviii.), or a second one, much later, is a point on which no little difference of opinion has existed. The question is discussed by Mr. Horne with his usual diligence and accuracy (from the statements of Benson, Lardner, Macknight, and Paley), and he decides in favour of the latter supposition; rightly, I think; for the arguments on that side certainly preponderate: though, indeed, had they been of equal weight, the uniform testimony of early Ecclesiastical tradition must have decided in its favour. If this view be correct, we can be at no loss to fix the date of the Epistle; for as Paul was liberated from his first imprisonment in A.D. 63, and after visiting several of the Gentile Churches returned to Rome early in 65, where, after a second imprisonment of more than a year, he suffered martyrdom in June 66; and as at iv. 21, he desires Timothy to 'come to him before winter,' it is certain that this Epistle must have been written some time in the summer of 65; yet it could not be so late as Dr. Paley, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Horne suppose; since it is admitted that Timothy was at Ephesus, or somewhere in Asia Minor, when St. Paul wrote to him. Now, considering the tardiness of communication by sea in that age (as we find from Acts xxvii.) it will be evident that St. Paul could not well expect Timothy to receive the Epistle before the latter part of September,—when, according to the then state of nautical science, it would have been impossible for Timothy, even had he set out immediately, to have reached Rome before winter, which was thought to commence about Oct. 11: nay, he could scarcely have set out before navigation was considered dangerous; see Acts xxvii. 9, and Note. Hence it appears that the Epistle was not written at the close of summer; and yet not in the earliest part of it, otherwise St. Paul would not have said σπούδασον πρὸ χειμῶνος ἐλθεῖν.

The immediate purpose of this Epistle was, to apprise Timothy of the circumstances of his second imprisonment (for of the fact itself he had probably been already informed by the brethren travelling from Rome to Ephesus in the latter part of the spring), and to request him to make haste and come to him before winter; but being uncertain whether Timothy would receive the letter in time so to do, and thinking that if he should not, he might not find him alive when he did come, he gives him various counsels, exhortations, and encouragements, with the earnest affection of a dying parent,—in order that his personal loss might be, in some measure, supplied by this impressive Epistle, which may be read with the greatest edification by all faithful Christians unto the end of the world.

I. 1. κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν.] Here κατὰ, as the best Expositors are agreed, denotes end or purpose; q. d. 'that I might publish the promise of salvation through Christ.' See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2, and 1 Thess. i. 1.

3. χάριν ἔχω τῷ Θεῷ.] See 1 Thess. i. 2, and 2 Thess. i. 3. Ἀπὸ προγόνων, 'after the custom of my forefathers.' So he says, Acts xxiv. 14, ὁμολογῶ δὲ τοῦτό σοι, ὅτι κατὰ τὴν ὁδὸν, ἣν λέγουσιν αἵρεσιν, οὕτω λατρεύω τῷ πατρῴῳ Θεῷ, &c., where see Note. What the Apostle here says was meant to refute the unjust charges of the Jews, who accused him of abandoning the God of his Fathers.

καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει, ὡς ἀδιάλειπτον ἔχω τὴν περὶ σοῦ μνείαν ἐν ταῖς δεήσεσί μου νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας, ἐπιποθῶν σε ἰδεῖν 4 b Acts 16. 1. (μεμνημένος σου τῶν δακρύων), ἵνα χαρᾶς πληρωθῶ· [b] ὑπό- 5 μνησιν λαμβάνων τῆς ἐν σοὶ ἀνυποκρίτου πίστεως, ἥτις c Acts 6. 6. & 8. 17. ἐνῴκησε πρῶτον ἐν τῇ μάμμῃ σου Λωΐδι, καὶ τῇ μητρί σου & 13. 2. & 19. 6. Εὐνίκῃ· πέπεισμαι δὲ ὅτι καὶ ἐν σοί. [c] Δι᾽ ἣν αἰτίαν ἀνα- 6 1 Tim. 4. 14. & 5. 22. d Rom. 8. 15. μιμνήσκω σὲ ἀναζωπυρεῖν τὸ χάρισμα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅ ἐστιν e Acts 21. 33. Rom. 1. 16. ἐν σοὶ διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου. [d] Οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν 7
Eph. 3. 1. & 4. 1. Col. 4. 18. ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς πνεῦμα δειλίας, ἀλλὰ δυνάμεως, καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ Phil. 1. 7. & 4. 14. σωφρονισμοῦ. [e] Μὴ οὖν ἐπαισχυνθῇς τὸ μαρτύριον τοῦ 8 1 Tim. 2. 6. infra 2. 3. Philem. 1, 9, Κυρίου ἡμῶν, μηδὲ ἐμὲ τὸν δέσμιον αὐτοῦ· ἀλλὰ συγκακο-
13. f Rom. 8. 29. πάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ, [f] τοῦ σώσαντος 9 & 9. 11. Eph. 1. 4. ἡμᾶς καὶ καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγίᾳ, οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν, & 2. 8. & 3. 11. Tit. 3. 4—6. ἀλλὰ κατ᾽ ἰδίαν πρόθεσιν, καὶ χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ἡμῖν ἐν

— ἐν καθαρᾷ συνειδήσει.] Answering to συνειδήσει ἀγαθῇ πεπολίτευμαι at Acts xxiii. 1; ἀπρόσκοπον συνείδησιν ἔχειν, Acts xxiv. 16; καλὴν συνείδησιν ἔχειν, Heb. xiii. 18; and συνείδησιν ἔχειν ἀγαθὴν, 1 Pet. iii. 16, 21. Compare also 1 Tim. iii. 9.

— ὡς ἀδιάλειπτον, &c.] Here ὡς is for ὅτι. By ἀδιάλ. ἔχω τὴν περὶ σοῦ μνείαν he means to say, that 'he gives thanks to God that he has reason to bear Timothy continually in remembrance.'

4. Here compare 1 Thess. iii. 10.

5. ὑπόμνησιν λαμβάνων] for ὑπομιμνησκόμενος.

— ἥτις ἐνῴκησε.] Intimating that it was not by external profession only, or some transient feeling, but as an internal principle dwelling in the heart. (Estius and Benson.) There may, however, be a reference to the Gospel doctrine, by which true Christians are considered as temples of the Holy Ghost. See Eph. ii. 22, and Note. At ὅτι supply ἐνοικεῖ from ἐνῴκησε.

6. δι᾽ ἣν αἰτ.] i. e. 'that it may continue to dwell in thee.' Ἀναζωπυρεῖν properly signifies 'to stir up, blow up,' as it were keep alive a dull fire; and hence, metaphorically, 'to rouse sluggishness, and call into action any dormant faculty, whether of body or mind.' See Notes on 1 Thess. v. 19, and 1 Tim. iv. 14. The χάρισμα here must, as appears from what follows, chiefly denote the supernatural gifts of the Spirit imparted by St. Paul on setting him apart for the ministry, but it may include the endowments and dispositions formed by the ordinary graces of the Spirit.

7. 'Confirmatio est proximæ sententiæ.' (Calvin.) 'Ratio est a facili.' (Hyperius.)

— οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν—σωφρονισμοῦ.] Thus delicately hinting at a quality which, it seems, required to be roused,—his courage; though, considering what precedes, the words seem also intended (notwithstanding what many recent Commentators maintain) to advert to the influences of the Holy Spirit, as the Giver of fortitude, tempered with discretion, as well as love, and which constrains the minister to attempt the salvation of souls, even amidst multiform dangers. See 2 Cor. v. 14. Σωφρονισμοῦ is to be taken, not in an active, but a passive sense, to denote sober-mindedness and discretion. See 1 Tim. ii. 15. So it is well explained by Abp. Newcome of prudence, as evinced in the displaying or not displaying of miraculous powers, in avoiding or softening persecutions, in teaching and admonishing.

8. We have here a conclusion drawn by inference from the foregoing premises; q. d. 'Since then you have such a spirit, &c., be not ashamed,' &c. So intimating that this timidity had in some measure been evinced by his not coming to Rome, lest he should be involved in the persecution of his master; and he then sets before Timothy the momentous nature of that for which he is called upon to encounter persecution; namely, the salvation to be attained by the gracious calling of God, 'who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel.' Here, in short, we have, as Hyperius remarks, a kind of sum of evangelical doctrine brought in, per occasionem.

— μαρτύριον.] Meaning, the preaching and profession of the Gospel. See Note on Philem. 1. Ἀλλὰ, 'but rather;' this being, as Hyperius observes, put per incrementum. Κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ. This (as Bp. Middleton has shown) connects not with τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ (for in that case the Article would have been repeated, τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ τῷ κατὰ δύναμιν), but is to be joined with the verb thus: 'but do thou jointly suffer the evil to be endured for the Gospel's sake, in dependence on the support which God affords.'

9. τοῦ σώσαντος] i. e. 'who hath put us into the way of salvation;' the term being here used as at Matt. i. 21, where see Note. So, too, we have τοὺς σωζομένους at Acts ii. 47.

— καὶ καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγίᾳ.] See Gal. i. 6. The epithet ἁγίᾳ respects the purpose of the calling, namely, to make us holy here, and eternally happy hereafter. Compare 1 Pet. i. 15, and see 1 Thess. iv. 8, and Note.

The next words show that this salvation is not of works, but of grace: a doctrine which the Apostle often inculcates (see Eph. ii. 8, and Tit. iii. 5); and it is here very aptly introduced, since there was the more reason for Timothy not to decline persecution or toil in the cause of Him by whom he had been saved wholly by grace.

10 Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, [g] φανερωθεῖσαν δὲ νῦν g Isa. 25. 8. Rom. 16. 25.
διὰ τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. καταργήσαντος μὲν τὸν θάνατον, φωτίσαντος δὲ ζωὴν καὶ Eph. 1. 9. & 3. 9.
11 ἀφθαρσίαν διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· [h] εἰς ὃ ἐτέθην ἐγὼ κήρυξ Col. 1. 26. Tit. 1. 2. Heb. 2. 14.
12 καὶ ἀπόστολος καὶ διδάσκαλος ἐθνῶν· [i] δι᾽ ἣν αἰτίαν καὶ 1 Pet. 1. 20. h Acts 9. 15.
ταῦτα πάσχω. ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνομαι· οἶδα γὰρ ᾧ πε- & 13. 2. & 22. 21. Eph. 3. 8. πίστευκα· καὶ πέπεισμαι, ὅτι δυνατός ἐστι τὴν παραθήκην Gal. 1. 15. & 2. 8.
13 μου φυλάξαι εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμέραν. [k] Ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχε 1 Tim. 2. 7. i Eph. 3. 1. k Infra 3. 14. ὑγιαινόντων λόγων, ὧν παρ᾽ ἐμοῦ ἤκουσας, ἐν πίστει καὶ l 1 Tim. 6. 20.
14 ἀγάπῃ τῇ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ· [l] τὴν καλὴν παραθήκην φύ- m Acts 19. 10.
15 λαξον διὰ Πνεύματος ἁγίου τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος ἐν ἡμῖν. [m] Οἶ- infra 4. 10, 16.

— πρόθεσιν] for προαίρεσιν. See Note on Rom. ix. 11. viii. 28, seqq. and Eph. iii. 11. The sense of this whole passage is well illustrated by Bp. Bull, Prim. and Ap. Trad. C. vi. p. 43.

10. There is here shown, by an apt antithesis, the benefit of Christ, or the effects of grace. (Hyperius.)

— τῆς ἐπιφανείας.] This Theodoret well explains by ἐνανθρωπήσεως; the expression being one especially used by the ancient writers, of the appearance of the gods on earth. So Joseph. Ant. xviii. 3. 4, we have τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν ἐκδιηγεῖται τοῦ Ἀνούβιδος. Ἐπιφάνεια here denotes Christ's first appearance in the flesh, though elsewhere the term always means his second appearance to judge the world.

— καταργ. τὸν θάνατον.] Meaning, as the best Commentators explain, 'has deprived it of its final power, by procuring for all men a resurrection from the dead.' The same term, on the same subject, occurs in 1 Cor. xv. 25—27, and Heb. ii. 14. So, too, in an inscription found in Nubia, cited by Bornem. de Glossis, p. 48, it is said of God, ὁ τὸν θάνατον καταργήσας καὶ ᾅδην καταπατήσας.

— φωτίσαντος.] Render, 'who hath brought to light,' and, by implication, 'made certain, what was before obscure and dubious,' just as bringing light to any object ascertains its reality. So Arrian, Epict. i. 4, τῷ δὲ τὴν ἀλήθειαν εὑρόντι καὶ φωτίσαντι. Whitby, in an able and instructive Note, shows that 'the hope the heathens had conceived, by tradition and the light of nature, of certain future good things to be received after the termination of the present life, was but faint, not credited by their philosophers, and disbelieved by the bulk of the people.' 'The immortality of the soul (continues he) they utterly discredited and even ridiculed, as both impossible in itself, and unworthy of God to effect; and the Israelites, though they had always an obscure notion of the resurrection and immortality of the soul, yet it was rather by inference from, than any thing plainly revealed, in the Old Test.' See Abp. Tillotson's Sermons, iii. 111, and especially Bp. Warburton's Div. Leg. 1. i. There had been many guesses on the subject, but since (as Paley says) he alone discovers who proves, thus the term φωτ. is perfectly applicable.

11. εἰς ὃ] for the Classical ἐφ᾽ ὅπερ.

12. τὴν παραθήκην μου φυλάξαι ε. ἐ. τ. ἡ.] By τὴν παραθήκην many eminent Expositors understand here (as at ver. 14, and 1 Tim. vi. 20) the doctrine of the Gospel committed to him; but by most it is taken, I think more properly, of the immortal soul; an interpretation better suited to the usus loquendi (for the phrase ἡ παραθήκη μου more usually signifies 'what I have deposited with another,' than 'what another has deposited with me.' See ver. 14. 1 Tim. vi. 20), and more accordant with the manner of speaking adopted by Jewish writers, as appears from the passages of Philo, Josephus, and the Rabbinical writers cited by the Commentators. Thus persons while dying used to commit their souls into the hands of God, professing to refer their salvation entirely to him. So 1 Pet. iv. 19, it is said, ὡς πιστῷ κτιστῇ παρατιθέσθωσαν. By Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 46, it is taken to mean the great charge of the Christian religion, its preservation and prosperity in the world.

It is agreed that by ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμ. is to be understood (as at iv. 8, and elsewhere; see Note on Matt. xxiv. 36) the day of judgment; this being referred to as something of great notoriety, and doubtless forming the frequent subject of conversation to those who felt interested in Scripture prophecy. It is also so called κατ᾽ ἐξοχήν; being (as Bengel expresses it) 'illa dies novissimus et pantocriticus.'

13. Now follow some exhortations, first general, and then special. On ὑποτ. see Note on 1 Tim. i. 16, and on ὑγ. see Note on 1 Tim. vi. 3. By ὑποτύπωσιν ἔχε ὑγιαινόντων λόγων is meant literally, 'the sketch, delineation, outline of sound doctrines,' which must have been such a summary of the Christian faith, as is now called a Creed, and in which the Apostle instructed his converts. See Rom. vi. 17. 1 Tim. vi. 3, 4. Tit. i. 9. Ἔχε must be connected with ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπῃ. Timothy was to hold fast this summary, not in faith only, but with love and charity towards those who might differ from him in some respects, so that they were non-essentials.

14. παραθήκην.] Such, for the common reading παρακαταθήκην, is found in very many MSS. and early Editions, and many Fathers; and it has been justly restored by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; παρακαταθήκη being the Attic form, παραθήκη the common one. See Wasse and Popp. on Thucyd. ii. 72. By this παραθ. is here meant the deposit of sound doctrine committed to him by Paul. It was to be retained by the aid of the same Holy Spirit, under whose influence it was communicated.

δας τοῦτο, ὅτι ἀπεστράφησάν με πάντες οἱ ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, n Acts 28. 20. Eph. 6. 20. infra 4. 19. ὧν ἐστι Φύγελλος καὶ Ἑρμογένης. [n] Δῴη ἔλεος ὁ Κύριος 16 τῷ Ὀνησιφόρου οἴκῳ· ὅτι πολλάκις με ἀνέψυξε, καὶ τὴν ἅλυσίν μου οὐκ ἐπῃσχύνθη, ἀλλὰ, γενόμενος ἐν Ῥώμῃ, σπου- 17 δαιότερον ἐζήτησέ με, καὶ εὗρε· (δῴη αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος εὑρεῖν 18 ἔλεος παρὰ Κυρίου ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ·) καὶ ὅσα ἐν Ἐφέσῳ διηκόνησε, βέλτιον σὺ γινώσκεις.

II. ΣΥ οὖν, τέκνον μου, ἐνδυναμοῦ ἐν τῇ χάριτι τῇ 1 a 1 Tim. 3. 2, &c. Tit. 1. 5, &c. ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [a] καὶ ἃ ἤκουσας παρ' ἐμοῦ διὰ πολλῶν 2 μαρτύρων, ταῦτα παράθου πιστοῖς ἀνθρώποις, οἵτινες ἱκανοὶ b Supra 1. 8. infra 4. 5. ἔσονται καὶ ἑτέρους διδάξαι. [b] Σὺ οὖν κακοπάθησον ὡς 3 c 1 Cor. 9. 25. καλὸς στρατιώτης Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [c] Οὐδεὶς στρατευόμενος 4 ἐμπλέκεται ταῖς τοῦ βίου πραγματείαις, ἵνα τῷ στρατολο-γήσαντι ἀρέσῃ. Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ ἀθλῇ τις, οὐ στεφανοῦται, ἐὰν 5 d 1 Cor. 9. 10. μὴ νομίμως ἀθλήσῃ. [d] Τὸν κοπιῶντα γεωργὸν δεῖ πρῶτον 6

15. Now are held out some examples, partly for warning, and partly for instruction. Ἀπεστρ. does not so much mean abandonment of the religion, as a forsaking of its outward profession, and a withdrawing of their countenance from Paul.

16. The family of Onesiphorus acted the reverse, and therefore the Apostle prays that they may find mercy and acceptance with God. On ἀνέψυξε see Col. iv. 11. The word seems to signify properly to 'bring a person to life again (ανα) who is fainting with heat, by giving him air.'

18. βέλτιον] i. e. 'better than I can write or tell thee.'

II. 1. 'Sicuti antea jusserat depositum servare per Spiritum, ita nunc præcipit, ut in gratiâ roboretur.' (Calvin.) Rightly; for the expression ἐνδυναμοῦ can mean no less than 'exert thyself vigorously;' 'strengthen thyself [by every exertion in thy power], in [humble dependence on] the grace of God, bestowed by and through Jesus Christ.' Thus the passage is quite parallel to Eph. vi. 10, ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρίῳ, and 1 Cor. xvi. 13, κραταιοῦσθε, where see Notes, and also Grotius, Benson, and Doddridge on the present passage. In all these cases the expression is to be taken, if not literally, in the reciprocal sense (inculcated by Grotius and Benson), yet in the popular sense of the word, rouse your powers. Nor are we to wonder that such an exhortation should have been thought necessary by the Apostle, since, as Calvin remarks, 'Adeo ignava est caro, ut medio in cursu flaccescant etiam qui præditi sunt egregiis donis, nisi identidem excitentur.'

2. διὰ πολλῶν μαρτ.] There has been some doubt as to the persons here referred to. It seems best, with Estius, Beza, Wolf, Rosenmuller, and Heinrichs, to understand both the presbyters and others of the congregation present at Timothy's ordination (mentioned at 1 Tim. iv. 14. vi. 12, and 2 Tim. i. 6), which was probably accompanied with a public charge, the substance whereof St. Paul desires may be delivered to others also. In παράθου there is the same metaphor as in παραθήκην, supra i. 14, and elsewhere. The next words, πιστοῖς—διδάξαι, advert to the two principal qualifications for the ministry,—fidelity, and fitness for preaching or instructing.

3. A military allusion, as at 1 Tim. i. 18. vi. 12. Here, however, are, I apprehend, designated, not so much courage in defending, as labour and hardship in propagating the Gospel. So supra i. 8, συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ. And be it observed, that κακοπαθέω is often used by the Greek Historians with reference to the manual labours of the soldiery. Much to the present purpose is a passage of Valer. Max. viii. 5, 'Carneades laboriosus sapientiæ miles.'

4. On this military comparison St. Paul founds an argument derived from the life of a soldier, and here applied à fortiori. By τοῦ βίου πραγμ. is meant the business of life in general, the plural being used with allusion to the various kinds thereof,—as agriculture, trade, manufactures, &c. Now, by the Roman law, soldiers were excluded from all such. See Grotius. There may, however, be a reference to marriage, as especially entangling any one with the cares of life, and from which the Roman soldiers were strictly prohibited.

— τῷ στρατολογήσαντι.] Meaning the sovereign or state that has taken him into pay.

5. On the military St. Paul now engrafts an agonistical allusion, as in 1 Cor. ix. 25. Ἀθλῇ, 'contend in the games,' viz. by wrestling. Οὐ στεφανοῦται, 'he does not gain the prize.' Νομίμως refers, not so much to the rules according to which the wrestlers contended, as to the previous rules of exercise enforced by the trainers. So Arrian, Epict. iii. 10, δός μοι ἀπόδειξιν, εἰ νομίμως ἤθλησας, εἰ ἔφαγες ὅσα δεῖ, εἰ ἐγυμνάσθης, εἰ τοῦ ἀλείπτου ἤκουσας. The phrase νομίμως ἀθλ. occurs also in Galen and other writers. The two things which seem here especially adverted to are, 1. the previous severe exercise, and 2. the stripping off all their clothes, throwing aside every encumbrance, so as to give their opponent no advantage over them.

6. The agonistic metaphor now passes into an agricultural one (such as we find at 1 Cor. ix. 10. James v. 7). The sense, however, will depend upon what πρῶτον is to be referred to. It is

7 τῶν καρπῶν μεταλαμβάνειν. Νόει ἃ λέγω· δῴη γάρ σοι ὁ 8 Κύριος σύνεσιν ἐν πᾶσι. [e] Μνημόνευε Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐγη-γερμένον ἐκ νεκρῶν, ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυὶδ, κατὰ τὸ εὐαγ-9 γέλιόν μου· [f] ἐν ᾧ κακοπαθῶ μέχρι δεσμῶν, ὡς κακοῦργος· 10 ἀλλ' ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ δέδεται. [g] Διὰ τοῦτο πάντα ὑπο-μένω διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς, ἵνα καὶ αὐτοὶ σωτηρίας τύχωσι 11 τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, μετὰ δόξης αἰωνίου. [h] Πιστὸς ὁ 12 λόγος· εἰ γὰρ συναπεθάνομεν, καὶ συζήσομεν· [i] εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν· εἰ ἀρνούμεθα, κἀκεῖνος ἀρνήσε-13 ται ἡμᾶς· [k] εἰ ἀπιστοῦμεν, ἐκεῖνος πιστὸς μένει, ἀρνήσασθαι ἑαυτὸν οὐ δύναται.

e 2 Sam. 7. 12. Ps. 132. 11. Isa. 11. 1. Matt. 1. 1, &c. Acts 2. 30. & 13. 23. Rom. 1. 3. f Eph. 3. 1, 13. & 4. 1. Col. 1. 24. & 4. 3, 18. Phil. 1. 7. supra 1. 18.
g Col. 1. 24.
h Rom. 6. 3, &c. & 8. 17. 2 Cor. 4. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 13.
i Matt. 10. 33. Mark 8. 38. Luke 12. 9. Rom. 8. 17. 2 Cor. 4. 10. Phil. 3. 10. 1 Pet. 4. 13.
k Rom. 3. 3. & 9. 6.

most naturally connected with μεταλ., and such is the construction adopted by the generality of Expositors, ancient and modern. The sense, however, thus arising either involves what is inconsistent with facts, or (even when helped out by the harsh ellipsis of ἵνα κοπιᾷ, 'in order that he may be enabled to labour,') contains a truth here inapposite; and the spiritual application thence deduced is forced and frigid. It is not, however, necessary, with some, to resort to conjecture. We have only to suppose, what is common in the writings of St. Paul, a somewhat harsh transposition, and (with many of the best Expositors) to join πρῶτον with κοπιῶντα, as is required by the course of argument; the true construction being this: Δεῖ τὸν γεωργὸν πρῶτον κοπ. τ. καρπ. μετ., where κοπ. is the participle imperfect, and the literal sense is, 'It is necessary that the husbandman should first labour, and then enjoy the fruits [of his labour].'

7. νόει ἃ λέγω.] 'Mind, lay to heart, what I say.' This refers to all the foregoing admonitions from i. 8 forwards; and λέγω may be rendered, 'I am saying.' Some difficulty attaches to γὰρ following, as introducing a prayer or wish. This, indeed, is removed in some MSS., which have δώσει; but, I suspect, from emendation. See Note infra iv. 14. The particle need not, however, be treated as redundant. We may suppose (as often) a reference, though remote, such as Benson and Wahl point out, 'For it is my prayer that the Lord,' &c.; i. e., for ὄφελον, or εὔχομαι, ἵνα δῴη.

8. μνημ. 'I. Χρ., &c.] Here there is a continuation of the admonition in νόει ἃ λέγω; the intent being to admonish him, in all his sufferings and dangers, to remember Jesus Christ, of the seed of David (i. e. the promised Saviour), who had been raised from the dead; the recollection of whose sufferings, with the glorious termination of them, in his exaltation as a Prince and a Saviour, would be the strongest incentive to constancy, both for himself and others. Κατὰ τ. εὐαγγ. μου, i. e. 'according to the Gospel as taught you by me.' See Rom. ii. 16.

9. κακοπ.] q. d. 'I labour;' suggesting his example in aid of his precepts. Ὡς, for ὡς εἰ. Of ἀλλ' ὁ λόγος—δέδεται the sense is: 'but it is my comfort, and yours, that the word of God is not bound along with me, but is making free course and is glorified;' and that not only by others, but also, in some measure, by the Apostle himself; for he seems not to have been restricted from preaching it at his own hired house.

10. διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτούς.] Meaning, as the best Commentators are agreed, those who were called to receive the Gospel, especially the Gentiles, of whom St. Paul was especially the Apostle.

11. 'Redit Apostolus ad similitudinem, quam instituerat de Christo a morte resurgente. Ibi antecedens tantum posuit; hîc jam attexit consequens.' (Hyperius.)

— πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] This formula some refer to what precedes, as at Tit. iii. 8; but it almost always relates to what follows: and that it is so to be taken here, appears from γὰρ in the next clause, which means scilicet, so that there is no occasion for ὅτι. This use of the formula is intended to direct the attention to some weighty and indubitable truth (see 1 Tim. i. 15. iii. 1. iv. 9),—and especially when, as in the present case, flesh and blood would be likely to stumble at a somewhat unpalatable doctrine, involving the sacrifice of what is most precious in this world, in order to the happiness of the next. See Calvin and Hyperius. Many Expositors are of opinion that what is here said was a saying in frequent use among Christians. But of this we have no proof, and the fact itself may be doubted; for, 1. the saying is not at all in the manner of a common adage, especially as it is too long (the saying extending as far as οὐ δύναται); and, 2. it is too refined in the thought, and pointed and antithetical in the expression: both characteristics of the Apostle. The punctuation, however, has been hitherto incorrect; for the saying consists of two parts: the first (meant for encouragement and consolation, and containing in συζήσομεν—συμβασιλεύσομεν a beautiful climax) terminating at συμβασιλ.; the second, meant for warning, as to the awful consequences of failure in enduring the fiery trial (see 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 12); namely, that of being disowned by Christ. See Matt. vii. 23, and comp. x. 23. The remaining words of the sentence form, properly speaking, but one clause, and that intended for an illustration of what has been said, and to point the warning. The sense is: 'Though we should be unfaithful to our engagements, He will, and must, abide faithful both to his promises and to his threatenings. He cannot deny himself (as we may) by falsifying his own solemn declarations, i. e. he cannot renounce his own character, act inconsistently with himself. Therefore, as Christ is true, so must apostates and backsliders be rejected by him at that day, with the awful denunciation, "I never knew you: depart from me,"' &c. On the force of the ex-

1 Tim. 6. 4.

¹ Ταῦτα ὑπομίμνησκε· διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου 14
μὴ λογομαχεῖν, εἰς οὐδὲν χρήσιμον, ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ τῶν ἀκουόντων. Σπούδασον σεαυτὸν δόκιμον παραστῆσαι τῷ 15 Θεῷ, ἐργάτην ἀνεπαίσχυντον, ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον τῆς pression συμβασ. see Rom. v. 17 (and Note) and Revel. iii. 21. This passage was perhaps had in mind by Epictetus, Enchir. c. xxi., where he thus addresses the patiently suffering virtuous man: Οὐ μόνον συμπότης τῶν θεῶν ἔσῃ, ἀλλὰ καὶ συνάρχων.

14. ταῦτα ὑπομ.] So I would point, with Theophylact; such being more suitable to the gravity and dignity of solemn injunction.

— διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπ. τ. Κ.] See 1 Tim. v. 21. On λογομαχεῖν see 1 Tim. vi. 4. At ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ there is not, as some suppose, an ellipsis of εἰ μὴ or ἀλλά. Much energy is imparted by the Asyndeton. The general sense is, that 'controversies which turn on some nice distinctions in words, rather than involve differences in things, are to be avoided, not merely as useless, but as tending to subvert the faith of the hearers; since they may thus doubt of the truth of that Gospel about which the contending parties cannot agree.' See Calvin and Hyperius.

15. After having shown what the preachers of God's word ought not to do, the Apostle proceeds to point out what they ought to do. Here it is proper to notice the connexion, which has been ably traced by Calvin in the following judicious remark: 'Since the most fruitful source of controversies about doctrines is the eager desire of ingenious men to recommend themselves to the world, the Apostle proposes what is the best remedy against this, by directing the minister to look unto God;' q. d. 'Whereas others court popular applause, do thou study to approve thyself and thy ministry unto God.'

— ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας.] The general sense here is obvious; but the nature of the metaphor here employed has been not a little disputed. Many recognize in ὀρθοτ. an allusion to the Jewish Priests, in sacrifice, cutting up or dividing the victim into its proper parts; or to the Scribes dividing the Law into sections; others, to a carver distributing the meat to the guests; or, to a steward dealing out the articles committed to his management: all which notions, however, are quite unsupported by any thing like sufficient proof. For first, as to the opinion of those (comprising almost all the early modern Commentators) who, supposing here a sacrificial allusion, take ὀρθοτομεῖν here for ὀρθῶς τέμνειν, as in Athen. 303, E.; it is to be observed that there we have denoted, not the cutting up of a victim, but of a large fish, previous to roasting it; which was probably done by splitting it as it were in two. The opinion most generally adopted by the recent Commentators is that of Gregory Nazianzen, ably supported by Elsner, Wetstein, and Schleusner, according to which there is supposed to be a metaphor taken from those who proceed by a direct road, leaving crooked and winding paths; and they compare the Greek phrase τέμνειν ὁδὸν (or κέλευθον) εὐθεῖαν, and the Latin viam secare. This view, however, is liable to two objections; 1. That it drops the idea of ἐργάτης, and unwarrantably introduces that of ὁδόν; 2. that it does not sufficiently unfold that part of the compound term ὀρθοτομοῦντα which imports the act of cutting, or dividing, and which might lead us rather to think that the Apostle had in view the act of ploughing when the furrows are made straight; an opinion supported by the authority of Chrysostom and Theodoret, who annotate thus: 'We praise even those husbandmen, who cut their furrows straight; so also the teacher is to be commended, who follows the canon, or rule of the Divine Oracle.' According to this view, 'the spiritual workman who needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth,' is he who wanders not to the right or to the left, but goes forward directly in the path of truth, who, at every step, takes for his rule the revealed word of God. After all, however, even this view lies open to the same objection as the others; namely, of introducing an idea, which there is no reason to think was in the mind of the writer: nay, it may be doubted whether the Apostle is here speaking of Scripture at all, and consequently whether he is giving any direction for its interpretation. By 'the word of truth,' seems rather to be meant the Gospel; and the Apostle appears to have had no special allusion to any of the qualifications or offices of the spiritual workman, but solely has in view the general idea of 'doing his work of the Gospel so as not to be ashamed;' i. e. with all wisdom, diligence, and faithfulness. So the Vulgate well renders, 'rectè tractantem;' and the Pesch. Syr. Translator, 'preaching rightly;' whence it appears that he also took τὸν λόγον τῆς ἀληθείας to mean, not the Scriptures, but the Gospel; an interpretation confirmed by the context, at ver. 14, ἐπὶ καταστροφῇ τῶν ἀκουόντων. And in this sense the expression occurs at 2 Cor. vi. 7. Eph. i. 13. James i. 18. Col. i. 5. Thus, too, in Eusebius and other writers, ὀρθοτομία is used for ὀρθοδιδασκαλία. So Const. Ap. vii. 30, ὀρθοτομεῖν ἐν τοῖς Κυρίου δόγμασιν.

To return to the chief subject of dispute, the nature of the metaphor, it may, I think, be doubted whether any particular one was here intended. The allusion, if any, would seem to be, not to the labours of the ploughman, but rather of the stone-cutter, who, to do his work well, must cut straight. Now ὀρθοτόμος (from which ὀρθοτομέω is derived, and not from ὀρθὸς and τομέω) means a straight cutter, and thus might κατ' ἐξοχὴν be used of a stone-cutter. As to the objection urged by those who contend for the agricultural metaphor, that ἐργάτης is a term almost confined to agricultural labour, is by no means such as to invalidate the above view; for the word is sometimes used of artisans, of which there is at least one example in the New Test.; namely, in Acts xix. 25, where it is used of the mechanics who made the silver models of the Temple of Diana. Most probably, however, as I just before observed, no particular metaphor was here had in view; and the expression in question may best be regarded (with Fuller) as a Hebraism formed on a certain expression applied to teachers of the Law, and which, in Hellenistic Greek, is denoted by οἱ τέμνοντες τὸν νόμον.

16 ἀληθείας. [m] Τὰς δὲ βεβήλους κενοφωνίας περιΐστασο· ἐπὶ [m] 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7.
17 πλεῖον γὰρ προκόψουσιν ἀσεβείας· [n] καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτῶν ὡς & 6. 20. Tit. 1. 14. γάγγραινα νομὴν ἕξει· ὧν ἐστιν Ὑμέναιος καὶ Φίλητος, & 3. 9. [n] 1 Tim. 1. 20.
18 [o] οἵτινες περὶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἠστόχησαν, λέγοντες τὴν ἀνά- [o] 1 Tim. 6. 21.
στασιν ἤδη γεγονέναι, καὶ ἀνατρέπουσι τὴν τινῶν πίστιν.
19 [p] Ὁ μέντοι στερεὸς θεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἕστηκεν, ἔχων τὴν [p] John 10. 14.
σφραγῖδα ταύτην· "Ἔγνω Κύριος τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ·" καί· "ἀποστήτω ἀπὸ ἀδικίας πᾶς ὁ ὀνομάζων τὸ ὄνομα Χριστοῦ." 20 [q] Ἐν μεγάλῃ δὲ οἰκίᾳ οὐκ ἔστι μόνον σκεύη χρυσᾶ καὶ [q] Rom 9 21.
ἀργυρᾶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ ξύλινα καὶ ὀστράκινα· καὶ ἃ μὲν εἰς

16—18. On these verses see Notes at 1 Tim. i. 4. 20. vi. 20. iv. 7, and also Bp. Warburton's Divine Leg., vol. iii. p. 198.

17. νομὴν ἕξει.] Meaning, 'has [a tendency] to eat [or spread further].' So at Acts iv. 17, we have ἵνα μὴ ἐπὶ πλεῖον διανεμηθῇ. On the nature of the opinions here adverted to, see Rec. Syn. and the Introduction to 1 Cor. xv.

19. ὁ μέντοι στερεὸς, &c.] In order to determine the exact import of this passage, (which is one of no little difficulty and dispute,) it is proper to pay especial attention to the connexion (for a connexion there certainly is, notwithstanding that it has been denied by some, and thought doubtful by others); and this would seem to be with the preceding verse; q. d. 'Nevertheless [whatever may be the evil effects produced by these seducers] the Foundation of God standeth firm and immoveable:' it being, as Hyperius observes, a proof that all are not subverted; q. d. 'Although false teachers do subvert the faith of some, yet the solid foundation of God stands firm and unshaken, and therefore the edifice is safe.'

But to consider the exact import of the expression ὁ ϑεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ. By this the recent Commentators in general understand the Christian religion, which has God for its author. Yet thus it will be necessary to take ϑεμέλιος to mean edifice; for which signification of the word, however, no good authority exists. It is best, then, to suppose the word here employed in the usual acceptation: though even those who retain it vary in their interpretation of the expression; some understanding by it the doctrine of the resurrection, whereon principally God has meant the truth of the Gospel to be built; others, Christ himself; and others, again, the promise of eternal salvation through Christ. Of which expositions the second and third, though they are not a little specious, and have much to recommend them in other parts of Scripture, yet they have little support from (nay, the second may be said to run counter to) the context, which is strongly in favour of the first, i. e. the doctrine of the resurrection. This, too, has the further advantage, that it admits of the third being engrafted upon it; for certainly 'the fundamental doctrine of the Gospel,' the resurrection (see 1 Cor. xv. Introd.), contained in itself the promise of eternal salvation to all true believers, and indeed might be taken, per synecdochen, to denote the religion itself. Such, too, appears to have been the view adopted by Theodoret, who explains, παρασαλεῦσαι οὐ δύνανται τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας κρηπῖδα· ὁ Θεὸς γὰρ τοῦτον τέθεικε τὸν ϑεμέλιον.

Moreover, according to this view alone are we enabled to assign any tolerable sense to the words fol'owing, ἔχων τὴν σφραγῖδα ταύτην: for to suppose it to mean token or confirmation (as those are obliged to interpret it who understand ϑεμέλ. of an edifice), would make the next words incapable of any tolerable sense. The best Critics, for nearly a century, have been of opinion, that σφραγ. may retain its almost constant signification in the New Test., and denote the impression or stamp made by a seal, whether cyphers, figures, or letters; and Biblical antiquaries have proved not only that the ancient seals had often whole sentences, moral apophthegms, &c., but also that the foundation-stones of great edifices had often engraven on them, or stamped upon them by a large seal, inscriptions having reference to the purpose of the building, or containing certain moral apophthegms. Now here the foundation of this mystical building, meaning the Gospel, is supposed to have two inscriptions upon it, proper to be impressed on the minds of all professing Christians, both for encouragement and for warning, according as the case may be; for encouragement, since he knoweth his chosen, approveth and taketh care of his obedient people, and will preserve them, while others are left to perish; for warning and admonition to unstable converts, and indeed a direction to all professing Christians, to make their calling and election sure, and evidence the reality of their faith and love by being 'careful to maintain good works' (Tit. iii. 8), which are the surest proofs of their sincerity, and the fairest fruits of their efficacy.

20. ἐν μεγάλῃ δὲ—ἀτιμίαν.] This passage partakes much of the obscurity of the preceding; but the difficulty here, as at Rom. v. 12, chiefly arises from the application of the similitude not being expressed. It is not agreed whether μεγ. οἰκίᾳ means the world, or the visible Church; but there is little doubt that the latter is the true view. By σκεύη some think are meant Ministers; others, Christians in general; but if οἰκίᾳ mean the visible Church, σκεύη must mean all professing Christians in it, whether ministers or not. The best Expositors are agreed that the Apostle meant thus to intimate, for the encouragement of faint-hearted believers, that the heresies and backslidings of many professed Christians did not affect God's covenant and promises to true believers; for, as in a great house, &c., so in the visible Church, not only true Christians were found, but persons of a different character, yet whose hypocrisy and iniquity were overruled to fulfil his righteous purposes. See Calv. and Hyper.

r Infra 3 17. τιμὴν, ἃ δὲ εἰς ἀτιμίαν. [r] Ἐὰν οὖν τις ἐκκαθάρῃ ἑαυτὸν ἀπὸ 21 τούτων, ἔσται σκεῦος εἰς τιμὴν, ἡγιασμένον, καὶ εὔχρηστον s 1 Cor. 1. 2. 1 Tim. 6. 11. τῷ δεσπότῃ, εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένον. [s] Τὰς δὲ 22 νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας φεῦγε· δίωκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, πίστιν, ἀγάπην, εἰρήνην μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων τὸν Κύριον ἐκ t 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. & 6. 4. Tit. 3. 9. καθαρᾶς καρδίας. [t] Τὰς δὲ μωρὰς καὶ ἀπαιδεύτους ζητήσεις 23 u 1 Tim. 3. 2. παραιτοῦ, εἰδὼς ὅτι γεννῶσι μάχας. [u] δοῦλον δὲ Κυρίου 24 οὐ δεῖ μάχεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἤπιον εἶναι πρὸς πάντας, διδακτικὸν, x Acts 8. 22. Gal. 6. 1. ἀνεξίκακον, [x] ἐν πρᾳότητι παιδεύοντα τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους· 25 μή ποτε δῷ αὐτοῖς ὁ Θεὸς μετάνοιαν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας, καὶ ἀνανήψωσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος, ἐζωγρημένοι 26 ὑπ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα.

Thus the connexion may be laid down as follows: 'Such being the case, let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity if he desires to attain to the resurrection of the just. This he must do; for though there are bad as well as good characters in the Church, as in a large house there are various sorts of vessels, yet it is only by cleansing himself from all iniquity that he can be fit for his Lord and Master's service here, and his rewards hereafter.'

21. Here the Apostle, pursuing the same metaphor, admonishes them to keep themselves pure from the aforesaid evil principles and practices; of course implying a careful separation of themselves from the persons themselves. So Tit. iii. 10, it is said, αἱρετικὸν παραιτοῦ, and 1 Tim. vi. 5, ἀφίστασο ἀπὸ τῶν τοιούτων.

— ἐκκαθάρῃ] 'keep thyself pure.' Τούτων, 'these [evil] things;' meaning heresies and iniquities. Ἡγιασμένον, meaning, 'segregatum è profanis usibus,' with allusion to the vessels of the Temple. The words εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένον are exegetical of the εὔχρηστον preceding. Ἡτοιμ. signifies, 'accommodated to.'

22. νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθ.] This is not, I think, to be interpreted of lusts properly so called (though many examples of that signification are adduced by the Commentators), such a sense being foreign to the context and the character of the person addressed; and the abstinence elsewhere ascribed to Timothy excludes the idea of sensuality. It would seem that νεωτ. here stands for μειρακιώδεις (an expression which Philo joins with ἐπιθυμίαι), and that the Apostle thus means (as Salmasius, Wolf, Calvin, and Heinrichs are of opinion) to denote that heady, vehement, impetuous, rash, and arrogant disposition of mind to which young men are prone. So in Josephus, Ant. xv. 11. 7, and xvi. 11. 8, we have ὑπὸ αὐθαδείας νεωτερικῆς, and Plutarch, Flamin. c. 20, νεανίζοντι (i. e. νεωτερικῷ) τῷ πάθει. Now when we consider that it was rashness, vanity, and rage for controversy and novelty, that had hurried Hymeneus and Philetus into those baneful errors against which the Apostle here cautions Timothy, the suitableness of the present admonition will be very apparent; the scope of the passage being, as Hyperius observes, 'præscribere quibus rationibus et se et suos in sana doctrina contineret.'

— δικαιοσύνην, πίστιν, &c.] 'justice (answering to the Latin æquitas, see Acts xxiv. 25), fidelity,' &c. Or δικαιοσύνη may here denote (as Calvin and Grotius explain it) rectè vivendi rationem, so standing for τὸ δίκαιον, as in Matt. iii. 15, πληρῶσαι πᾶσαν δικαιοσύνην· Eph. v. 9; Heb. i. 9, and especially 1 Tim. vi. 11, δίωκε δικαιοσύνην, εὐσέβειαν, πίστιν, ἀγάπην· an altogether kindred passage. These two, πίστις and ἀγάπη (fidelity and love), are, as Calvin remarks, subjoined as forming the principal constituent parts of rectitude. So it is said, Matt. xxiii. 23, ἀφήκατε τὰ βαρύτερα τοῦ νόμου, τὴν κρίσιν (answering to δικαιοσύνην here), τὸν ἔλεον, καὶ τὴν πίστιν (where see Note).

The peace just after spoken of is, as Calvin remarks, very pertinent to the present state; for they must needs be contentious and fond of strife, who delight in those questions so calculated to engender strife.

— εἰρήνην μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων, &c.] Intimating that this love is to be evinced in cultivating peace even with those who conscientiously differ from him in opinion, so that it be on matters not affecting fundamentals.

23. ἀπαιδεύτους] 'insulsas,' which tend to no solid information, being founded in mere folly; being, in fact, the κενοφωνίαι and ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως of 1 Tim. vi. 20.

24. μάχεσθαι] 'be disputatious and quarrelsome;' see Tit. iii. 2. Ἀνεξίκακος properly signifies 'patient of injuries;' as in Hierocl., cited by Wetstein (see also Wisd. ii. 18). Here, however, it must denote tolerant of those petulant expressions, which too often arise from difference of opinion: a disposition above all others calculated to promote the peace above inculcated; patience being (as a great Divine well says) the great peace-maker.

25. τοὺς ἀντιδιατιθεμένους.] The expression has, I apprehend, a sensus prægnans, signifying, 'those who are of a contrary opinion, and maintain it in opposition to him.'

— μή ποτε] 'trying whether;' see Luke iii. 15. The particle, as Calvin observes, intimates the difficulty of the thing; nay, its improbability and hopelessness.

— εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀλ.] Meaning, 'that so they may acknowledge the truth which they had before rejected.' The Apostle then hints at the sinfulness of their even conscientious opposition to the truth, by making it need repentance. Compare Acts xi. 18.

26. καὶ ἀνανήψ., &c.] This strong expression

1 III. [a] ΤΟΥΤΟ δὲ γίνωσκε, ὅτι ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις a Jude 18.
2 ἐνστήσονται καιροὶ χαλεποί. ἔσονται γὰρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι φίλαυτοι, φιλάργυροι, ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφανοι, βλάσφημοι, 3 γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι, 4 διάβολοι, ἀκρατεῖς, ἀνήμεροι, ἀφιλάγαθοι, προδόται, προ-is, I think, meant to more clearly express the sinfulness and danger of those opinions, by a reference to their origin and tendency. We have only to suppose a somewhat abrupt transition from the metaphor derived from the deep sleep of inebriety to that of slavery; as also, in the first clause, to the harsh blending of the metaphors of sobering from inebriety (see Note on 1 Cor. xv. 34), and that of disengaging oneself from a snare (as birds from the snares of the fowler), by which is here to be understood temptation. So at 1 Tim. vi. 9, we have ἐμπίπτουσιν εἰς πειρασμὸν καὶ παγίδα. Of a similar mixture of metaphor I have, in Rec. Syn., adduced several examples from Libanius, Josephus, Cebes, and the Orac. Sibyll.

The general sense intended is (as Scott expresses it), 'that so they might recover their liberty, though they had been taken captive by Satan, as prisoners are after a battle, who may be disposed of at the victor's will, being consigned to death, to chains, or to slavery, as he pleases.' For such men would remain entirely in the power of Satan, unless God should mercifully please to 'give them repentance,' and so effect their deliverance.

III. Having apprised Timothy that, for wise reasons, false teachers were suffered to arise, the Apostle now proceeds to warn him that, through the influence of their false doctrines, grievous and perilous times would arrive; which are then graphically described. The Apostle may have apprised Timothy in order to put him on his guard; for such is implied in the phrase τοῦτο γίνωσκε, introducing this predictive description, which is, with reason, supposed to have the same reference as that of the Apostasy and Man of Sin in the 2d Epistle to the Thessalonians. Moreover, by turning his view to grievous and perilous times, the Apostle meant, doubtless, not only to quicken his vigilance, but sharpen his diligence; for as Calvin observes, 'hac denuntiatione diligentiam ejus magis acuere voluit. Ubi enim res ex voto nostro habent, magis securi reddimur, necessitas autem acrius pungit.'

1. ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις.] An expression equivalent to ὕστεροι καιροὶ at 1 Tim. iv. 1, where see Note.

2—5. The Apostle now illustrates the epithet χαλεποὶ, in a description full of energy, containing, as in Rom. i., a long drawn συναθροισμὸς, with which the Commentators compare some from the Classical writers, all serving to show the degeneracy of Christians at the καιροὶ χαλεποὶ spoken of. The fulfilment of the prophecy has been referred to various periods, with more or less of probability, but perhaps never so as to attain any thing approaching to certainty.

2. φίλαυτοι, φιλάργυροι, &c.] The various vices here specified seem (as elsewhere in St. Paul's writings) to be enumerated with a certain regard to plan, so as to form groups, of which φίλαυτοι and φιλάργυροι form the first, and should be rendered 'selfish, fond of lucre.' The former term properly implies no more than the feeling implanted by the Almighty in man for his preservation. So Josephus, Ant. iii. 8. 1, διά τε τὸ φύσει πάντας εἶναι φιλαύτους. In the same good sense of the word, Aristotle, Rhet. ii. 15, says that old men are φίλαυτοι μᾶλλον ἢ δεῖ. In the later writers, however, the term is generally used in a bad sense, like our selfish.

How much meaning is contained in this one word, will appear from the Note on 1 Tim. vi. 10. In short, the selfish man is he who does every thing with a reference to self-gratification only; who loves none but himself, and cares for none but himself; whose affections (to use the words of a great moral painter) 'solely centre in one person, whose interest and indulgence alone he considers on every occasion; regarding the good or ill of all others as merely indifferent, any further than they contribute to the pleasure or advantage of that person.'

— ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφανοι, βλάσφημοι.] These form the second group; namely, boasters, arrogant, railers. Of these three terms we have the first two associated at Rom. i. 30; and corresponding to βλάσφημοι here we have there ὑβριστάς.

— γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς, ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι.] These form the third group, consisting of vices which naturally follow one upon the other; for, as Theophylact observes, he who is disobedient to parents will be ungrateful to others: and he that is such is ἀνόσιος, because τὴν ὁσίαν καὶ τὸ ὀφειλόμενον ἀθετεῖ. He will also be ἄστοργος; since for whom will he feel affection, if he has none for his benefactor? He will also be ἄσπονδος; for whom will he keep covenant with if not with his parent or benefactor? It would seem that the three last are introduced (as in Rom. i. 30) by way of climax to the preceding. Ἀνόσ. denotes 'violators of the most solemn civil obligations,' which are called ὅσια as opposed to ἱερὰ (or Divine obligations) by the best writers. So Thucydides, ii. 52, ἐς ὀλιγωρίαν ἐτράποντο καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων. Finally, by the expression ἄστοργοι, 'devoid of natural affection,' it is meant, not that they never had the στοργή, but that they have divested themselves of it. See Benson.

3. διάβολοι, ἀκρατεῖς, ἀνήμεροι, ἀφιλάγαθοι.] These form the fourth group. By διάβ. are meant calumniators; namely, on the principle of bringing all others down to their own low level. Ἀκρατεῖς is generally regarded as equivalent to ἀκόλαστοι, to denote incontinent; but that is a sense wholly unsupported by proof. The expression would rather seem to mean intemperantes, for ἀκρατεῖς ἑαυτῶν, scil. ἐπιθυμιῶν, affectuum, 'having no mastery over their passions and affections,' literally, unreined. And although examples of this absolute use in a general sense are rare, yet Aristotle furnishes more than one in his Ethics, vii. 1. 4. And so Hippocrates, b Matt. 7. 15. & 18. 17. Rom. 16. 17. 2 Thess. 3. 6. supra 2. 16, & 3. 10. 2 John 10. c Matt. 23. 14, Tit. 1. 11.

πετεῖς, τετυφωμένοι, φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι, [b] ἔχοντες 5 μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἠρνημένοι. καὶ τούτους ἀποτρέπου. [c] ἐκ τούτων γάρ εἰσιν οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς 6 τὰς οἰκίας καὶ αἰχμαλωτεύοντες [τὰ] γυναικάρια σεσωρευ-

Epidem. l. iv. and Thucydides, iii. 84, ἀκρατὴς ὀργῆς, 'ungovernable in impetuosity.' This trait consorts well with the προπετεῖς just after, meaning, 'headlong, rash;' implying the absence of all restraint in laws human or divine. So in Herodian, i. 8. 11, we have προπετῆ καὶ ϑρασύν. Of this, indeed, the next word ἀνήμεροι, fierce, savage, may be considered as illustrative; in like manner as ἀφιλάγαθοι may be meant to further develope the idea of διάβολοι before. Ἀφιλάγαθοι (a term exceedingly rare) many eminent Commentators take to mean, 'haters of all that is good.' Yet as we have φιλάγαθος used at i. 8 in the sense 'a lover of good men,' here it is surely better to render, 'haters of good men;' and thus the term will well consort with διαβ. preceding. Nearly connected with this is, I conceive, the following προδόται, indicating, it would seem, a treacherous way of showing their hatred to the good, and bringing them into trouble with their persecutors, whether Jews or Heathens.

4. The two next, προπετεῖς and τετυφ., form another group. Of these two terms the former (on which see Note at Acts xix. 36) answers to the ἐμπλήκτως ὀξεῖς of Thucydides iii. 83, denoting a headlong, rash, reckless spirit.

Lastly, we have, in conclusion, a general trait, φιλήδονοι μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεοι: with which Wetstein compares from Demophilus, φιλήδονον καὶ φιλόθεον τὸν αὐτὸν ἀδύνατόν ἐστι· and from Philo, 333. 49, φιλήδονον καὶ φιλοπαθῆ μᾶλλον ἢ φιλόθεον. By the pleasure here spoken of may be meant sensual gratifications in general. Probably, however, the Apostle meant thus chiefly to denote a dissipated spirit, and an inordinate fondness for pleasure, whatever that might be; though, in some cases, it might not be of a very censurable kind. With this view the words following are very consistent, as denoting a mere profession of the Gospel, and an attention only to its external forms, with little or no influence on the heart and life; what Philo (cited by Loesner) calls ἐπιμορφίζειν τὴν εὐσέβειαν. It would seem that, by introducing the epithet φιλήδονοι last, after all the foregoing vices, the Apostle thus meant to intimate that it is the root of them all. So Philo-Judæus, vol. ii. pp. 268. 25, says of the φιλήδονος, or lover of pleasure, that he will not be that only, but will have all other vices; and he subjoins a catalogue of no less than 146 epithets characterizing the vices which accompany φιληδονία. And no wonder; since in this vice is involved the grand master-principle of cupidity. See Note on 1 Tim. vi. 10.

On the persons who may be supposed to be characterized in the present portion, and the period of the fulfilment of this prophecy, no little diversity of opinion exists. I agree with Benson in regarding this as having the same reference as the great Apostasy mentioned at 2 Thess., and introductory to the reign of the Man of Sin, or Anti-Christ; on which see 2 Thess. ii. 3—9. Here, however, as in the former case, the Apostle seems to have considered the mystery of iniquity as then working, though only in its beginning, and his corrupt opposers paving the way for it. See ver. 13, and iv. 3, 4.

6. οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας, &c.] Here is thrown in, as a reason why the persons in question are to be avoided, a peculiar trait by which they are distinguished, that of insinuating themselves into the confidence of families for the sake of interested purposes. In this expression ἐνδύνοντες εἰς there appears to be a metaphor derived, not, as Commentators say, from serpents, but rather from worms; the persons in question contriving, as we say, to worm themselves into the confidence of others, in order to make them their dupes. So it is well said by Anaxilas in Athenæus, p. 254 (of a similar class of persons, namely, flatterers and parasites), οἱ κόλακές εἰσι τῶν ἐχόντων οὐσίας σκώληκες· εἰς οὖν ἄκακον ἀνθρώπου τρόπον εἰσδὺς, ἕκαστος ἐσθίει, καθίμενος· ἕως ἂν, ὥσπερ πυρὸν, ἀποδείξῃ κενόν.

ἔπειθ' ὁ μὲν λέμμ' ἐστὶν, ὁ δ' ἑτεροδακνεῖ.

For so the passage ought to be pointed, in order to make sense. Moreover, for καθίμενος I would read καθήμενος; and for ἑτεροδακνεῖ, read ἕτερον δάκνει. Observe, too, the elegant paronomasia between κόλακες and σκώληκες. By λέμμα is meant the husk, as compared to πυρὸς, the grain. This passage, I would observe, throws no little light on the expression κατεσθίει used of such persons at 2 Cor. xi. 20. It seems that both the Pharisees and the false teachers, like impostors in religion of every age and sect, fastened on the liberality of their devotees.

— αἰχμαλωτεύοντες] 'domineering over.' In illustration of this several passages have been adduced from Irenæus, and Josephus, and other writers. The Pharisees, it seems, had always employed these means. So Josephus, Antiq. xvii. 3, 4, says of them, οἷς χαίρειν τὸ ϑεῖον προσποιουμένων, ὑπῆκτο ἡ γυναικωνῖτις, where I would read, οἷς (χαίρειν τῷ ϑείῳ προσποιουμένων, scil. αὐτῶν) ὑπῆκτο ἡ γυναικωνῖτις. By τῷ ϑείῳ is denoted religion, as the expression signifies in Thucydides, v. 70.

The same thing, indeed, has happened in every age, and the same arts been practised by religionists the most widely separated in opinion and doctrine. In short, Jerome asserts that all heresies begin with women.

For αἰχμαλωτεύοντες many MSS., some Fathers, and the Edit. Princ. have αἰχμαλωτίζοντες, which has been received by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. I have thought proper, with Matthæi and Vater, to retain the common reading. The τὰ before γυν. has been cancelled, on the strongest grounds, by all the best editors.

— σεσωρευμένα ἁμ.] This is well explained by the Lex. Cyrill. βεβαρημένα ἁμ. Meaning, it would seem, partly the weight of former sins burdening the conscience (see Matt. xi. 28), from the guilt of which, as well as of present offences, they sought to be delivered on easier terms than the Gospel authorizes. See Calvin and Hyperius.

7 μένα ἁμαρτίαις, ἀγόμενα ἐπιθυμίαις ποικίλαις, πάντοτε μανθάνοντα, καὶ μηδέποτε εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας ἐλθεῖν δυνά-8 μενα. [d] Ὃν τρόπον δὲ Ἰαννῆς καὶ Ἰαμβρῆς ἀντέστησαν d Exod. 7. 11.
Μωϋσεῖ, οὕτω καὶ οὗτοι ἀνθίστανται τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, ἄνθρωποι 1 Tim. 6. 5. Tit. 1. 16.
9 κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν. Ἀλλ' οὐ προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ πλεῖον· ἡ γὰρ ἄνοια αὐτῶν ἔκδηλος 10 ἔσται πᾶσιν, ὡς καὶ ἡ ἐκείνων ἐγένετο. [e] Σὺ δὲ παρηκο- e 1 Tim. 4. 6.
λούθηκάς μου τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, τῇ ἀγωγῇ, τῇ προθέσει, τῇ 11 πίστει, τῇ μακροθυμίᾳ, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ, [f] τοῖς διω- f Ps. 34. 19. Acts 13. 50. & 14. 2, 19, 22.
γμοῖς, τοῖς παθήμασιν, οἷά μοι ἐγένετο ἐν Ἀντιοχείᾳ, ἐν 2 Cor. 1. 10.
Ἰκονίῳ, ἐν Λύστροις· οἵους διωγμοὺς ὑπήνεγκα· καὶ ἐκ πάν-

By the words following, ἐπιθυμίαις ποικίλαις, many understand carnal lusts and gross vices of every kind, in which it is supposed they were indulged by their teachers. That, however, proceeds upon a very improbable view; and from what follows it would rather seem that the ἐπιθυμίαι here spoken of are those of the heart; see Psalm lxxxi. 12. And so indeed the expression is used supra ii. 22, where we have τὰς νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας. Again, at iv. 3, speaking of similar persons, he says, τῆς ὑγιαινούσης διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται· ἀλλὰ, κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας τὰς ἰδίας, ἑαυτοῖς ἐπισωρεύσουσι διδασκάλους. The word is here well rendered by the Vulgate desideriis; and by Beza and Montanus cupiditatibus; and by Newcome, desires. Thus the expression may be said to designate the various fancies by which their light minds were carried away at the will of the artful hypocrites who guided them at pleasure: a view, I would observe, confirmed by what follows, πάντοτε μανθάνοντα, καὶ μηδέποτε εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν, &c.; for it is such light and fanciful minds that are observed to be ever learning (namely, some new fancy), and never coming to any solid or certain knowledge. Such, too, is, I find, the view adopted by Calvin, who says, 'Concupiscentias generaliter accipio pro stultis et levibus desideriis, quibus circumferuntur mulieres, quæ Deum ex animo non quærunt, et tamen religiosæ et sanctæ volunt haberi.'

8. Ἰαννῆς καὶ Ἰαμ.] Names of two Egyptian Magicians, who, as we learn (not from Moses, but from the Rabbins, confirmed by Pliny and other Classical writers) were magicians at the court of Pharaoh, and who opposed their sleight of hand tricks to the miracles of Moses. On κατεφθαρμένοι τὸν νοῦν, see 1 Tim. vi. 5, and on ἀδόκιμοι, the Notes on Rom. i. 28, and 1 Cor. ix. 27.

9. οὐ προκόψουσιν—ἔσται.] Render, not, 'shall,' but 'will,' the words being prophetic. The Apostle assures Timothy, for his comfort, that the evils in question will not proceed much further, by the folly and wickedness of the persons becoming publicly notorious.

— ἄνοια.] The expression here involves the conjoint notions of extreme folly, presumption, and impiety; in which last sense it often occurs in the Sept.

10. σὺ δέ.] The δὲ is adversative (q. d. Do thou, on the contrary), and serves to contrast the abandonment of the true faith by the false teachers, with the adherence to it by Timothy; a commendation, from which the Apostle takes occasion to subjoin, at ver. 14, an admonition to constancy. Thus, instead of παρηκ. τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, he says παρηκ. μου τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ, thus emphatically denoting its truth. On this he engrafts a sketch of the principal features of his own conduct, as a model to Timothy; and closes with adverting to the persecutions he had endured, in order that Timothy might be prepared to encounter the same with like courage; suggesting, moreover, for his comfort, a trust in that mighty power which had delivered him out of all his trials. On the expression παρηκ. see Note on Luke i. 3. 1 Tim. iv. 6. The term here signifies follow up; as at 2 Macc. ix. 27. Ἀγωγῇ is for ἀναστροφῇ, 'mode of life:' a sense of the word rarely found except in the New Test. and Sept. (where it occurs, 2 Macc. iv. 16. vi. 18. xi. 24). I have, however, noted it in Josephus, Bell. i. 23. 5, σκεπτέσθω ἕκαστος τὴν ἡλικίαν μου καὶ τὴν ἀγωγὴν τοῦ βίου.

— τῇ προθέσει.] This is by some eminent Commentators interpreted firmness, or resolution of purpose; as Acts xi. 23, τῇ προθέσει τῆς καρδίας προσμένειν τῷ Κυρίῳ. Yet these notions of firmness and resolution are communicated by καρδίας and προσμ., whereas here there is no adjunct, and therefore the usual sense, purpose, scope, aim, and design, is preferable. After the general terms ἀγωγῇ and προθέσει come, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12, the special ones πίστ., μακροθ., ἀγ., and ὑπομ. Πίστει is explained by many Commentators faithfulness, as in 1 Tim. iv. 12. There, however, ἀγάπῃ comes first, and is afterwards followed by πίστει; while here πίστει comes first, as in 1 Tim. i. 14. 2 Tim. ii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 11. 1 Thess. v. 8, where they are considered as being united (as in Eph. vi. 23) by being compared to a breast-plate: and at Gal. v. 6, it is shown how they should be united; viz., when 'faith worketh by love.' It may be thought strange that the terms should be here separated; but if we were to impute it, with most recent Commentators, to mere irregularity of style, we should overlook the intent of the Apostle, who here, I apprehend, purposely separated πίστει and ἀγάπῃ, in order to introduce with each the virtue springing from it. That πίστις is closely connected with μακροθ. is plain from Heb. vi. 12, which passage is the best comment on the present; and that ἀγάπη is equally connected with ὑπομονὴ appears from 1 Tim. vi. 11, πίστιν, ἀγάπην, g Matt. 16. 24. των με ἐῤῥύσατο ὁ Κύριος. [g] Καὶ πάντες δὲ οἱ θέλοντες 12 Luke 24. 26. John 17. 14. εὐσεβῶς ζῆν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, διωχθήσονται. Πονηροὶ δὲ 13 Acts 14. 22. 1 Thess. 3. 3. ἄνθρωποι καὶ γόητες προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ τὸ χεῖρον, πλανῶντες h Supra 2. 2. καὶ πλανώμενοι. [h] Σὺ δὲ μένε ἐν οἷς ἔμαθες καὶ ἐπιστώ- 14 θης, εἰδὼς παρὰ τίνος ἔμαθες, καὶ ὅτι ἀπὸ βρέφους τὰ ἱερὰ 15 γράμματα οἶδας, τὰ δυνάμενά σε σοφίσαι εἰς σωτηρίαν, διὰ i Rom. 15. 4. 2 Pet. 1. 19, 20. πίστεως τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. [i] Πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευ- 16

ὑπομονήν. Tit. ii. 2, τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ. Whereas, of πίστις followed by ὑπομονὴ we have no instance, except Hebr. vi. 12; nor of ἀγάπη followed by μακροθυμία. Besides, St. Paul seems to have subjoined ὑπομ. to intimate that the love was, as it regarded men, of that fervent kind which constrained him to bear any thing and every thing to accomplish the salvation of souls. The best comment on this whole passage is Rom. v. 1—9. In τοῖς διωγμοῖς there is an exegetical apposition. Render, 'namely, by.' At οἵους δ. must be supplied, from the context, παρηκολούθηκας, which, by an accommodation of sense, may mean 'thou well knowest.'

12. εὐσεβῶς ζῆν ἐν Χρ. Ἰ.] A formula denoting to live with the piety and holiness suitable to the Christian faith.

— διωχθήσονται.] A remark more or less applicable in every age. See Acts xiv. 22, and Note.

13. πονηροὶ—χεῖρον.] Here there is an indirect admonition to Timothy to go forward in the right path, from strength to strength, and righteousness to righteousness; as the impostors or false teachers in question will go on from bad to worse. The next words, πλαν. καὶ πλανώμενοι, some eminent Commentators take to mean, that as they deceive some, so are they themselves the dupes of others. But though that might sometimes be the case, the words are, I conceive, meant to suggest how it happened that they went from bad to worse; namely, by the influence of self-deception, as well as that of deceiving others; for men are observed to repeat falsities till they almost believe them themtelves.

14. ἐπιστώθης.] Meaning, 'thou hast learnt with absolute certainty and full persuasion.' So Hesychius, ἐπληροφορήθης. Theophylact, μετὰ πληροφορίας ἔμαθες, and Theodoret, ὧν τὴν ἀλήθειαν τῇ πείρᾳ μεμάθηκας.

15. The words following, εἰδὼς παρὰ τίνος, &c., show the grounds of this certainty and assurance; namely, 1. that he had been taught sound doctrine by one divinely commissioned like the Apostle; 2. (by what Hyperius calls an 'amplificatio a circumstantia temporis addita') that the truths in question were founded on what had been learnt by him even from his childhood (for his mother was a Jewess, and mothers are more likely to carefully communicate religious instruction than fathers); and that learning the learning of the Sacred Scriptures; 3. (by an argument, as Hyperius says, 'ab usu vel effectu Sacr. litt.') that those Scriptures are capable of supplying him with all knowledge and certainty necessary to salvation.

— διὰ πίστεως τῆς ἐν Χ. Ἰ.] These words are corrective and explanatory of the foregoing assertion, indicating the only means whereby the salvation in question can be attained; q. d. 'provided we superadd faith in Christ Jesus, who is "the end of the Law for justification to them that believe."' (Rom. x. 4.) Thus we are drawn from the letter of the Law to its spirit in the Gospel. See John v. 39, 40. 46. The scope of this clause is well pointed out by Hooker, Eccl. Pol. i. 14. 'The Apostle (says he) here grants that the Holy Scriptures (meaning those of the Old Testament; for those of the New were not in being in Timothy's childhood) were able to make him wise unto salvation, but he adds, "through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Wherefore, without the doctrine of the New Testament teaching that Christ hath wrought the redemption of the world, which redemption the Old did foreshow he should work, it is not the former alone which can perform so much as the Apostle doth avouch, who presupposeth this, when he magnifieth that so highly.' Of the intent of the Old as compared with that of the New Testament, it is well said by the same admirable writer, 'The general end of both is one; the difference between them consisting in this—that the Old did make wise by teaching salvation through Christ that should come; the New, by teaching that Christ the Saviour is come, and that Jesus whom the Jews did crucify, and whom God did raise again from the dead, is he.'

16. The Apostle here carries forward the encomium above briefly expressed, setting forth the high value and great excellence of Scripture, first on the score of its paramount authority, and next with a reference to the manifold utility thence resulting. (Calvin.)

— πᾶσα γραφὴ θεόπνευστος, &c.] Here there is evidently an ellipsis of ἐστὶ, though Commentators are not agreed whether it should be introduced between γραφὴ and θεόπνευστος, or between θεόπν. and καὶ ὠφέλ., thus joining θεόπν. in immediate concord with πᾶσα γραφή. The latter method is adopted by Theodoret, of the ancient, and by the most eminent modern Commentators, from Cameron to Heinrichs and Iaspis; q. d. 'all inspired Scripture is also profitable,' &c. This, however, is not permitted by the καὶ, which is found in every existing MS.; and though it does not appear in the Syriac and Vulgate Versions, yet, as Bp. Middleton observes, 'it is far easier to perceive why καὶ does not appear there, than how, supposing it not to have been in the earliest MSS., it should have found its way into all those that remain.' The γραφή, Bp. Middleton proves, is meant of the ἱερὰ γράμματα just before mentioned; the sense being, 'the whole of such Scripture is divinely inspired.' That such is the true construction, has been most fully and ably evinced by Dr. Henderson, in his Lectures on Divine Inspiration, p. 305—310. 'That the Scriptures of the Old Testament (says στος, καὶ ὠφέλιμος πρὸς διδασκαλίαν, πρὸς ἔλεγχον, πρὸς 17 ἐπανόρθωσιν, πρὸς παιδείαν τὴν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ· ἵνα ἄρτιος ᾖ ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐξηρτι-1 σμένος. IV. [a] Διαμαρτύρομαι [οὖν ἐγὼ] ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ μέλλοντος κρίνειν ζῶν-τας καὶ νεκροὺς κατὰ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν βασι-2 λείαν αὐτοῦ· [b] κήρυξον τὸν λόγον, ἐπίστηθι εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως· a Rom. 1. 9. & 9. 1. 2 Cor. 1. 23. & 11. 31. Gal. 1. 20. Phil. 1. 8. 1 Thess. 2. 5. 1 Tim. 5. 21. & 6. 13.

b Acts 20. 7.

he) are intended, is unquestionably the construction best supported by the preceding context. Even on the supposition that no reference had previously been made to any specific writing or collection of writings, it was most natural for Timothy, who had received an early Jewish education, of which the study of the Scriptures formed a prominent part, to understand the Apostle to mean these Scriptures; γραφὴ, the term here used in the singular number, being in common use in application to them. He had been taught to regard them as the productions of men who were actuated by the Spirit of God, and who consequently wrote what was agreeable to his will. The very terminology, therefore, independently of any thing else, would, at once, lead his thoughts to these Scriptures as the collection to which reference was made; but the circumstance that, in the verse immediately preceding, the Apostle had expressly mentioned the ἱερὰ γράμματα, "sacred Scriptures," as those which Timothy had known from his earliest age, would seem to place the matter beyond dispute. It is in the closest connexion with the statement there made respecting these Scriptures that the subject of the present text is introduced, and it is evidently introduced by way of supplement to what had been there taught. The train of the argument is this: "Not only are the Divine Scriptures, with which you are familiar, capable of furnishing you with the knowledge requisite for your own personal salvation, by pointing out Christ as their end or scope, but they are a rich treasury of inspired wisdom, from which you may bring forth matter adapted to all the various departments of the office with which you have been invested."' The learned writer further shows, p. 309, that the translation, 'every divinely inspired writing is also profitable,' &c., besides being destitute of the slightest authority from MSS., is quite indefensible. 'To say nothing (continues he) of the awkwardness and total want of point introduced into the passage, by giving to the copulative conjunction the signification of also, such a mode of construction is at variance with a common rule of Greek syntax, which requires that, when two adjectives are closely joined, as θεόπνευστος and ὠφέλιμος here are, if there be an ellipsis of the substantive verb ἐστὶ, this verb must be supplied after the former of the two, and regarded as repeated after the latter. Now there exists precisely such an ellipsis in the case before us; and as there is nothing in the context which would lead us to take any exception to the rule, we are bound to yield to its force, just as we would in any similar instance.' As to the support that has been thought to be given to this reading by the Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate Versions, Dr. Henderson shows that 'it is very doubtful whether the two first really convey the idea, which is thus endeavoured to be attached to them; for with respect to the former, it is well known to Oriental scholars that the word translated "every" is more properly a substantive signifying totality than an adjective; while the Latin omnis is also often used for tota: so that all the versions in question may as properly be rendered, "The whole of Scripture, which is divinely inspired, is profitable," &c. as "every Scripture," &c. The evidence in favour of the translation in our common English Bible, derived from the Fathers and almost all the versions, among others the modern Greek, which reads ὅλη, "the whole," is most decided.'

It may further be observed, that the elliptical ἐστὶ should not be rendered, 'is given;' for thus, as Dr. Henderson shows, 'a degree of emphasis is attached to the word which it does not possess,' and which, I would add, no elliptical term can have. It is best, then, to retain the version is, meaning comes, as the Æthiopic Translator freely renders.

— διδασκαλίαν, ἔλεγχον, &c.] Of these several terms, διδασκαλίαν, ἔλεγχον, ἐπανόρθωσιν, and παιδ., it would seem that the two first regard doctrine, the two last practice; διδασκ. denoting instruction in the truth, ἔλεγχ. confutation of error. Ἐπανόρθωσις, which properly signifies the setting straight what is crooked, here denotes, figuratively, the working reformation of life. So we have ἐπανόρθωσις τοῦ βίου in Philo, Arrian, and Polybius. Finally, παιδείαν, it would seem, differs from ἐπανόρθωσιν, inasmuch as the former denotes the 'ceasing to do evil,' the latter, the 'learning to do well.'

17. ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος.] Meaning, the Christian teacher or minister. See Note on 1 Tim. vi. 11. On the expression ἄρτιος (equivalent to κατηρτισμένος, 'complelely fitted'), see Luke vi. 40, and Note; and on ἐξηρτ. see Note at Acts xxi. 5. Πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθόν. Meaning, 'for every good purpose [his ministry is designed to answer].' Compare supra ii. 21, and Eph. ii. 10.

IV. To the foregoing statement of the means necessary for making the Christian teacher complete for every good work, the Apostle engrafts an earnest exhortation, pointed by the inferential οὖν, to the perpetual and zealous use of them.

1. διαμαρτύρομαι.] See Note on a similar passage of 1 Tim. v. 21. The words τοῦ μέλλοντος—αὐτοῦ are added by way of reminding Timothy of the strict and solemn account, which he must have then to give of his stewardship; and by τὴν βασιλείαν is intimated the glorious reward of fidelity. The latter clause simply means, 'when he shall come in his kingdom,' i. e. that of his glory commencing with the day of judgment; the present being only his mediatorial one.

2. ἐπίστηθι] i. e. 'assiduously apply [to your

c 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. d Acts 21. 8. Eph. 4. 11. supra 1. 8. & 2. 3. e Phil. 1. 23. & 2. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 14. f 1 Cor. 9. 24, 25. Phil. 3. 14. 1 Tim. 6. 12. Heb. 12. 1.

ἔλεγξον, ἐπιτίμησον, παρακάλεσον ἐν πάσῃ μακροθυμίᾳ καὶ διδαχῇ. Ἔσται γὰρ καιρὸς, ὅτε τῆς ὑγιαινούσης διδασκα- 3 λίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται· ἀλλὰ, κατὰ [τὰς] ἐπιθυμίας τὰς ἰδίας, ἑαυτοῖς ἐπισωρεύσουσι διδασκάλους, κνηθόμενοι τὴν ἀκοήν· [c] καὶ ἀπὸ μὲν τῆς ἀληθείας τὴν ἀκοὴν ἀποστρέψουσιν, ἐπὶ δὲ 4 τοὺς μύθους ἐκτραπήσονται. [d] Σὺ δὲ νῆφε ἐν πᾶσι, κακο- 5 πάθησον, ἔργον ποίησον εὐαγγελιστοῦ, τὴν διακονίαν σου πληροφόρησον. [e] Ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπένδομαι, καὶ ὁ καιρὸς 6 τῆς ἐμῆς ἀναλύσεως ἐφέστηκε· [f] τὸν ἀγῶνα τὸν καλὸν ἠγώ- 7 work];' for, as Calvin observes, 'his verbis non assiduitatem modo commendat, sed etiam contentionem; quæ omnia difficultatum obstacula superet:' an exhortation, if not necessary to Timothy, yet proper to be made for the sake of others, of that and future ages.

The expressions following, εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως, are to be understood with reference, not so much to the people as to the pastor; to the latter, as meaning, 'at all times and places not only convenient, but inconvenient to himself;' as Calvin explains, 'ne suis tantum horis et pro sua commoditate docendi muneri incumbat, sed,' &c.; or, as Dr. Barrow, 'not only taking opportunities presented for it, but catching at them, and creating them to ourselves, when there is no such apparent need of it.' As respects the people, they will denote, as Calvin forcibly expresses it, 'assiduitas importuna, dum sollicitantur torpentes, dum aliò properantibus manus injicitur, dum vanæ mundi occupationes corriguntur.' So it is said by Seneca, Epist. 121, 'Virtutes exhortabor, et vitia converberabo; licet aliquis nimium immoderatumque in hac parte me judicet, non desistam.'

— ἔλεγξον, ἐπιτίμησον] 'confute (namely, those who are in error as to doctrine), reprove,' namely, the unruly or the immoral in life. Παρακάλεσον, &c. 'exhort [all] to continuance in sound doctrine and holy life.' So Plutarch, de Educ. speaks of instructors as διδάσκοντας, ἀπειλοῦντας, δεομένους, συμβουλεύοντας. All this is directed to be done ἐν πάσῃ μακροθ., 'with the greatest patience.' At διδαχῇ following repeat πάσῃ; the sense being, 'and with every [suitable] instruction,' i. e. sound doctrine, as appears from what follows just after, τῆς ὑγιαινούσης διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται.

3. ἔσται γὰρ καιρός.] So showing, by a reference to the waywardness of men, how zealous and active ought the ministers of the Gospel to be; q. d. 'And need is there of these exertions; for the time will come,' &c. (Calvin.)

— τῆς ὑγιαινούσης διδ.] See 2 Tim. i. 13. Οὐκ ἀνέξ., 'will not bear to listen to.' To sound doctrine, which necessarily requires a holy life, the corruption of human nature, in every age, makes men averse; inducing them rather to follow such teaching as makes the gratification of their passions consistent with hopes of salvation. Κατὰ τὰς ἰδ. ἐπιθυμίας is by the earlier Commentators construed with ἐπισωρεύσουσι, but by the more recent ones with διδασκ., which seems preferable, since it is more agreeable to the usus loquendi, yields a better sense, and is more suitable to the style of St. Paul, which abounds in transposition. The words may be rendered, 'according to their own fancies or caprices.' See supra iii. 6, and Note. The τὰς before ἐπιθυμίας has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz, but on insufficient grounds.

— ἐπισωρεύσουσι διδασκάλους.] An expression of contempt; q. d. 'there will be no want of persons istius farinæ.' The next words suggest why they will heap up teachers; namely, as κνηθόμενοι τὴν ἀκοὴν, literally, 'having an itching in the ears;' i. e. wishing to be gratified with something which may please their fancies. So Julian, p. 333, has δυνάμενοι τὰς ἀκοὰς ὑμῶν κνηστιώσας παραμυθήσασθαι.

4. μύθους.] So said with reference to the false nature of the doctrines; such being ever employed ad captandum.

5. νῆφε.] See 1 Thess. v. 6, and Note; and on κακοπάθησον see supra ii. 3, and Note.

6. ἐγὼ γὰρ ἤδη σπένδ., &c.] Ἐγὼ is emphatical, and corresponds to σὺ in the former verse. Γὰρ refers to a clause understood; q. d. ['Do thou fully discharge thy ministerial duties, nor expect any further exhortation from me;] for, as for me, I, already,' &c.

— σπένδομαι.] The general sense is evidently ἐπιθανάτιός εἰμι. Expositors, however, are not agreed whether the expression signifies, 'I am ready to be poured upon in sacrifice, as the victim had the libation poured upon its head;' or, 'I am ready to be poured,' i. e. my blood to be poured out as a libation. The former view is more agreeable to the usus linguæ, and is confirmed by Phil. ii. 17, ἀλλ' εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῇ θυσίᾳ, where see Note. So also at Josephus, Bell. i. 19. 4, we have καὶ τοιαῦτα τῷ Θεῷ θύματα περὶ τοῦ πολέμου κατέσπεισεν.

— ἐμῆς ἀναλύσεως.] Supply ἐκ τοῦ βίου, which is expressed in a passage of Philo, de Flacco, p. 991.

7. The above is followed up by another metaphor, derived è re agonisticâ, on which see Note at 1 Tim. vi. 12. On the following words, δρόμον τετέλεκα, see Note on Acts xx. 24. With this latter may be compared that in a maxim of Pythagoras: Μὴ ἐπιστρέφεσθαι ἐπὶ τοὺς ὅρους ἐλθόντας.

— τὴν πίστιν τετήρηκα.] Many eminent Commentators render, 'I have preserved my fidelity.' But the common interpretation, 'I have kept the precepts of the Christian faith,' besides being more apt, is much more agreeable to the usus linguæ. For, not to mention that πίστις has very rarely the sense fidelity, the phrase itself, 'I have kept my fidelity,' is, I believe, quite destitute of authority; whereas, of 8 νισμαι, τὸν δρόμον τετέλεκα, τὴν πίστιν τετήρηκα· [g] λοιπὸν g 1 Cor. 9. 25.

ἀπόκειταί μοι ὁ τῆς δικαιοσύνης στέφανος, ὃν ἀποδώσει μοι 1 Pet. 5. 4. James 1. 12 ὁ Κύριος ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ, ὁ δίκαιος κριτής· οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐμοὶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ἠγαπηκόσι τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ.

9, 10 Σπούδασον ἐλθεῖν πρός με ταχέως. [h] Δημᾶς γάρ με h Col. 4. 14.
ἐγκατέλιπεν, ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς Θεσσαλονίκην· Κρήσκης εἰς Γαλατίαν, Τίτος εἰς Δαλματίαν·
11 [i] Λουκᾶς ἐστι μόνος μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ. Μάρκον ἀναλαβὼν ἄγε μετὰ i Acts 15. 37. Col 4. 10. Philem. 24.
12 σεαυτοῦ· ἔστι γάρ μοι εὔχρηστος εἰς διακονίαν. [k] Τυχικὸν k Acts 20. 4. Eph. 6. 21.
13 δὲ ἀπέστειλα εἰς Ἔφεσον. Τὸν * φελόνην, ὃν ἀπέλιπον ἐν Col. 4 7. Titus 3. 12.
Τρωάδι παρὰ Κάρπῳ, ἐρχόμενος φέρε, καὶ τὰ βιβλία, 14 μάλιστα τὰς μεμβράνας. [l] Ἀλέξανδρος ὁ χαλκεὺς πολλά l 1 Tim. 1. 20.
μοι κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο· ‡ ἀποδῴη αὐτῷ ὁ Κύριος κατὰ τὰ ἔργα 15 αὐτοῦ· ὃν καὶ σὺ φυλάσσου, λίαν γὰρ ἀνθέστηκε τοῖς ἡμε-16 τέροις λόγοις. Ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ μου ἀπολογίᾳ οὐδείς μοι συμπαρεγένετο, ἀλλὰ πάντες με ἐγκατέλιπον· (μὴ αὐτοῖς 17 λογισθείη!) [m] ὁ δὲ Κύριός μοι παρέστη, καὶ ἐνεδυνάμωσέ με, m Ps. 22. 21. Acts 23. 11. & 27. 23.

τηρεῖν, followed by words similar in sense to τὴν πίστιν, denoting the doctrines and precepts of the Christian religion, many examples might be adduced.

8. ἀπόκειταί μοι.] Meaning, 'is laid up as in a treasury as ready;' see Notes on Col. i. 5—8. 1 Thess. ii. 19. Gal. i. 15. Crowns and all sorts of prizes held forth to conquerors were said ἀποκεῖσθαι, because they were set apart as their due, and ready for them. So Demophilus, Similit. p. 615, we have τοῖς μὲν σταδιοδρομοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῷ τέρματι τὸ βραβεῖον τῆς νίκης—ἀπόκειται· and Pind. Olymp. x. 9, ἀφθονότατος δ' αἶνος Ὀλυμπιανίκαις Οὗτος ἄγκειται.

— ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ.] See Note supra i. 12.

— τοῖς ἠγαπηκόσι τὴν ἐπιφ. αὐτοῦ.] Meaning, 'those who have reason to look forward with hope and satisfaction to his coming;' namely, by having fought the good fight, and kept the faith. Compare 1 Cor. i. 7, and Note.

10. Δημᾶς γάρ, &c.] q. d. 'for I stand in need of some assistance, Demas having,' &c. This man had, it seems, through cowardice, deserted Paul, and, through worldly-mindedness, preferred some opportunity of temporal advantage to assisting the Apostle and furthering the Gospel.

11. Μάρκον.] See Col. iv. 10.

13. φελόνην.] Some MSS. and Editions have φαινολὴν, which is by many supposed to be the original spelling of the word, though, in later times, disused. The word was, they think, at first φαινολὴς (whence the Latin pænula), then, per metathesin, φαιλόνης, and afterwards φελόνης. However, the true spelling seems rather to have been φελλόνης, or φελόνης, (from φέλλος, the bark of a tree, and also the outside of any thing,) afterwards, by a change familiar to the later Grecism, φαιλόνης. In each, however, of the three forms in question the sense was the same, the word being, in fact, the same. So φαιλόνης, or φελόνης, is explained by Suidas, ἐφεστρὶς, which word denoted the military sagum, much the same as the ordinary pænula, and answering the purpose of a cloak or wrapper.

14. Ἀλέξανδρος, &c.] See 1 Tim. i. 20 and Acts xix. 33. Πολλά μοι κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο. An elegant expression, similar to one in Diod. Sic. vol. x. p. 171 (Bipont), μεγάλην ὕβριν τῇ πρεσβείᾳ ἐνεδείξατο.

— ἀποδῴη, &c.] I agree with the ancient, and several eminent modern Commentators, that this is to be considered as, not properly speaking, an imprecation, but rather the expression of a wish that the person in question may suffer condign punishment; i. e. that the righteous God and Judge will treat him as he deserves. The reading, indeed, of many MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, ἀποδώσει (which has been edited by Griesbach and Scholz), would remove all difficulty and objection; but for that very reason it cannot safely be adopted; since it may justly be suspected to be a mere alteration, introduced for the purpose of obviating the objection in question.

15. τοῖς ἡμετέροις λόγοις.] Meaning, 'the doctrine of the Gospel.'

16. πρ. ἀπολογίᾳ.] One hearing, it seems, had been granted him at Rome; and he was in expectation of a second, during which interval, it is said, this Epistle was written; and, as we learn from Ecclesiastical History, this second turned out very different from the first, since the Imperial butcher, in a rage (as Chrysostom tells us) at his conversion of the royal cup-bearer, had him beheaded.

— πάντες.] The word is here, as often, to be taken populariter, for 'nearly all.'

— μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθείη.] See Rom. iv. 8, and Note. These words are in strong contrast with those of the preceding verse; but it would seem that the Apostle had in view the different motives of the persons.

17. παρέστη] i. e. by secret help and support. So Homer says, Minerva παρέστη Ἀχιλλεῖ.

ἵνα δι' ἐμοῦ τὸ κήρυγμα πληροφορηθῇ, καὶ ἀκούσῃ πάντα τὰ n Ps. 121. 7. ἔθνη· καὶ ἐῤῥύσθην ἐκ στόματος λέοντος. [n] Καὶ ῥύσεταί με 18 ὁ Κύριος ἀπὸ παντὸς ἔργου πονηροῦ, καὶ σώσει εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐπουράνιον· ᾧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν.

o Acts 18. 2. Rom. 16. 3. supra 1. 16. p Acts 19. 22. & 20. 4. & 21. 29.

[o] Ἄσπασαι Πρίσκαν καὶ Ἀκύλαν, καὶ τὸν Ὀνησιφόρου 19 οἶκον. [p] Ἔραστος ἔμεινεν ἐν Κορίνθῳ· Τρόφιμον δὲ ἀπέλι- 20 πον ἐν Μιλήτῳ ἀσθενοῦντα. Σπούδασον πρὸ χειμῶνος 21 ἐλθεῖν.

Ἀσπάζεταί σε Εὔβουλος, καὶ Πούδης, καὶ Λίνος, καὶ Κλαυδία, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ πάντες. ὁ Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς 22 μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματός σου. ἡ χάρις μεθ' ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Τιμόθεον δευτέρα τῆς Ἐφεσίων ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον χειροτονηθέντα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, ὅτε ἐκ δευτέρου παρέστη Παῦλος τῷ Καίσαρι Νέρωνι.

By κήρυγ. is meant the Gospel, as 1 Cor. xv. 14. Πληροφ., 'might obtain full credence;' see Rom. iv. 21. Πάντα τὰ ἔθνη is to be taken, as Heinrichs and Rosenmuller say, populariter, for very many of different nations; i. e. who had business at the Court. The words, however, are not, with those and other Commentators, to be referred to his defence only or chiefly. They have reference to the preaching of the Gospel by him during his long confinement, by which in a manner all the nations might be said to hear it; since Rome was the resort of persons from every quarter of the civilized world, individuals from each of which would hear the Gospel, and carry tidings of it at least, if not diffuse its doctrines, in their respective countries.

— ἐῤῥύσθην ἐκ στόματος λ.] The best Expositors are agreed in understanding this expression to allude to the Emperor Nero. Certain it is, from Esth. xiv. 13 and Ezek. xix. 3, that the Jews used to call tyrannical princes by the appellative lions. And so in Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 6. 10, the freedman says to Agrippa, τέθνηκεν ὁ Λεών· meaning the Emperor Tiberius. It is possible, however, that the Apostle may here allude to a well-known fable of Æsop; for his deliverance at Court (which might well be called the lion's den) would justify the expression in almost its literal sense. Thus, in the Pseudo-Eurip. Rhes. 56, we have ὦ δαῖμον, ὅστις μ' εὐτυχοῦντ' ἐνόσφισας Θοίνης λέοντα.

18. A præterito ad futurum spes concludit. (Bengel.)

— καὶ ῥύσεται, &c.] 'and the Lord will, I trust, deliver me from every evil work;' i. e. all dangers, temptations, and adversities, from 'all that the devil or man worketh against me.' In σώσει there is a significatio prægnans, 'will bring safely into.'

19. καὶ τὸν Ὀνησιφόρου οἶκον.] Because the Apostle does not salute Onesiphorus himself, the Papists argue that, at the time this Epistle was written, he was dead; and from the Apostle's praying for him (supra i. 18), they infer the lawfulness of praying for the dead. But Onesiphorus was, at this period, with the Apostle in Rome, 2 Tim. i. 16, 17; or, if he was gone from Rome, he might yet not be in Ephesus (so Macknight); or, as Benson suggests, Onesiphorus might possibly be the bearer of this letter. Indeed, that he was not dead the authority of the ancients uniformly tends to establish. According to tradition, the Apostle Peter was now in Rome, and suffered martyrdom at the same time with Paul; but, as Macknight observes, since Paul says, ver. 11, 'only Luke is with me,' and Peter's salutation was not sent to Timothy, his being at Rome at this time may justly be doubted. If he suffered martyrdom along with Paul, as the ancients affirm, he must have come to Rome after Paul wrote his second Epistle to Timothy.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΤΙΤΟΝ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 I. [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, δοῦλος Θεοῦ, ἀπόστολος δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χρι- a 1 Tim. 3. 16. & 6. 3. στοῦ, (κατὰ πίστιν ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ καὶ ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας

Titus was a Greek, either of Syria, or of some province of Asia bordering upon it. He was one of St. Paul's earliest converts, and so much in his confidence as to be allowed to accompany him and Barnabas to the first Council at Jerusalem, and afterwards to attend him in his circuit, to visit and confirm the Churches. He was probably afterwards employed in confidential public business for the Church; insomuch that, some years after, we find him sent by St. Paul to Corinth to examine the state of the Church in that city, and to transmit a report of it to him. In consequence of that he was sent back to Corinth to hasten the collection for the poor brethren in Judæa. After that time we have no further mention in the New Test. of what became of Titus, except that in this Epistle he is spoken of as being with Paul in Crete, and in 2 Tim. iv. 10 as being in Dalmatia, having, it is supposed, been sent there to settle the affairs of the Church. It would seem that Titus, though perhaps occasionally sent to settle the affairs of other Churches, had Crete as his especial province, from the time when he was left there by Paul (Tit. i. 5). As to the time when Christianity was first planted in that island, we are left much in the dark. The most probable opinion is, that notwithstanding that the Gospel might have been announced, and become known in Crete, from the time of the first effusion of the Holy Spirit at Jerusalem (Acts ii. 11), where some Cretans were present; yet that it was not thoroughly planted there till many years after; most probably by St. Paul, and some say during the year and a half he spent at Corinth, between the latter part of A. D. 51, and the early part of 53; for it appears from 2 Cor. xii. 14. xiii. 1, that he did make an excursion somewhere during that time, and after it returned back to Corinth. This, however, is, to say the least, very doubtful; it being little probable that St. Paul would spare time enough for so great a work as evangelizing the 'hundred-citied isle,' quasi ἐν παρέργῳ. It would rather seem, as others suppose, that St. Paul evangelized Crete during the period between his first and second imprisonment at Rome. And the date of the Epistle (which has been exceedingly controverted, and entirely depends upon the date assigned to St. Paul's evangelizing Crete) may be either the latter end of A. D. 64, or the early part of 65. And there is much to support this in the strong verbal coincidences between this Epistle and that of 2 Timothy, confessedly written not long before St. Paul's death,—coincidences, indeed, nearly as great as those between the Epistles to the Ephesians and the Colossians, and which cannot satisfactorily be accounted for, except on the same principle,—namely, by supposing that they were written about the same time, and when the same ideas and expressions were in the writer's mind. 'Both Epistles (to use the words of Paley) were addressed to persons left by the writer to preside in their respective Churches during his absence. Both Epistles are principally occupied in describing the qualifications to be sought for in those whom they should appoint to offices in the Church; and the ingredients of this description are in both Epistles nearly the same. Timothy and Titus are likewise cautioned against the same prevailing corruptions, and in particular against the same misdirection of their cares and studies. St. Paul accosts his two friends with the same salutation, and passes on to the business of the letter by the same transition (vv. 4, 5, and 1 Tim. i. 2, 3).' Moreover, as in Acts xxviii., where St. Paul is recorded to have touched at Lasæa and Fair Havens, not a hint is given as to the island being evangelized, it would seem that at that period (the autumn of 61) St. Paul had not evangelized Crete. This circumstance strongly confirms the idea suggested by the strong verbal coincidences above mentioned, that the Epistle was written about the same time as the 2d Epistle to Timothy. If so, it would seem that Paul evangelized it at the period between his first and second imprisonment at Rome; and wrote this Epistle a little before 2 Timothy, in the early part of the summer of A. D. 65.

For an explanation of words and phrases in this Epistle, common to those of the parallel ones, 1 Tim. and 2 Tim., the reader is referred to the Notes in those Epistles, where they have been already fully treated on.

τῆς κατ' εὐσέβειαν, [b] ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ζωῆς αἰωνίου, ἣν ἐπηγ- 2 γείλατο ὁ ἀψευδὴς Θεὸς πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων, [c] ἐφανέρωσε 3 δὲ καιροῖς ἰδίοις τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ, ἐν κηρύγματι, ὃ ἐπιστεύ-θην ἐγὼ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ,) [d] Τίτῳ 4 γνησίῳ τέκνῳ κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν· χάρις, [ἔλεος,] εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν.

[e] Τούτου χάριν κατέλιπόν σε ἐν Κρήτῃ, ἵνα τὰ λεί- 5 ποντα ἐπιδιορθώσῃ, καὶ καταστήσῃς κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέ-ρους, ὡς ἐγώ σοὶ διεταξάμην· [f] εἴ τις ἐστὶν ἀνέγκλητος, 6 μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἀνὴρ, τέκνα ἔχων πιστὰ, μὴ ἐν κατηγορίᾳ b Num. 23. 19. Rom. 1. 2. & 16. 25. Eph. 1. 9. & 3. 9. Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1. 9, 10. & 2. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 20. c Acts 20. 24. 2 Cor. 2. 12. & 7. 14. & 8. 6, 16. Gal. 1. 1. & 2. 3. 1 Thess. 2. 4. d Eph. 1. 2. Col. 1. 2. 1 Tim. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2. e Acts 14. 23. 2 Tim. 2. 2. f 1 Tim. 3. 2.

I. 1. κατὰ πίστιν.] The best Expositors are agreed that this must mean (as at 2 Tim. i. 1, κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν ζωῆς τῆς, &c.) 'for the purpose of promoting the faith;' for Paul, we know, was made an Apostle for the purpose of bringing about the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ. In like manner, of καὶ ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας τῆς κατ' εὐσέβειαν the sense must be, 'and for the promotion of the acknowledgment of the true doctrine,' that of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which is intended to lead us to holiness; see 1 Thess. iv. 3 and 1 Tim. vi. 3. By ἐκλ. Θεοῦ are meant believers in Christ, who, in the place of the Jews, were now chosen to be the elect people of God, and are at 1 Pet. ii. 9 called 'a chosen generation,' and that for a reason intimated supra i. 1. The same expression also occurs 2 Tim. ii. 10.

2. ἐπ' ἐλπίδι ζωῆς αἰ.] for εἰς ἐλπίδα, 'hope of obtaining salvation.'

— ὁ ἀψευδὴς Θεός.] An appellation of God, like ὁ ἀληθινὸς, used by the Heathen, as well as by the Scriptural, writers. So in Eurip. Orest. 364, we have ἀψευδὴς Θεός.

— ἣν ἐπηγγείλατο, &c.] Alluding to the promise made by God to Adam and Eve and their posterity at the fall (that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head), and afterwards renewed in the covenant with Abraham. On the expression πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων see Notes at 2 Tim. i. 9—11.

3. ἐφανέρωσε.] On this expression see 2 Tim. i. 10; and on καιροῖς ἰδίοις, Acts i. 7 and 1 Tim. ii. 6. Τὸν λόγον. This answers to λόγον ἐπαγγελίας at Rom. ix. 9.

— κατ' ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ Σωτῆρος, &c.] See 1 Tim. i. 1. In both places the sense seems to be, 'according to the ordinance or direction of God.'

4. γνησίῳ τέκνῳ, &c.] Compare 1 Tim. i. 2 and 2 Tim. i. 2. Κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν, 'according to the faith common to both of us and all Christians.' On the words following, χάρις—ἡμῶν, see Note at 1 Tim. i. 2. Ἔλεος, not found in a considerable number of ancient MSS., has been cancelled by Scholz; but, I think, wrongly. See Matthæi.

5. κατέλιπόν σε, &c.] For κατέλ. about 15 MSS. have ἀπέλ., which is considered by Griesbach as nearly equivalent to the textual reading. But it is susceptible of no sense suitable here; and doubtless arose from a mistake of the scribes, κατ and απ in composition being perpetually confounded. Καταλ. is frequently used in the sense here required, not only by St. Luke, but by St. Paul, as in a kindred passage of 1 Thess. iii. 1, καταλειφθῆναι ἐν Ἀθήναις. Moreover, though the writers of the New Test. sometimes use καταλ. where a Classical writer would have employed ἀπολ., yet never the contrary.

— ἵνα τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθ.] Meaning, 'that thou mightest further put in order (literally, set right) the things which remained [to be ordered].' So Philo, in Flacc., vol. ii. p. 535, has περὶ τῆς τῶν λειπόντων ἐπιδιορθώσεως. The ἐπι in ἐπιδ. is intensive, and has the same force as in ἐπιδιατάσσομαι, Gal. iii. 15; and διορθόω is for διακοσμέω. So Thucydides, ii. 15, τά τε ἄλλα διεκόσμησε.

From the expression following, καταστήσῃς πρεσβυτέρους, it is evident that Titus was invested with Episcopal authority, in the highest sense of the word ἐπίσκοπος, which was sometimes, as at ver. 7, and Acts xx. 17. 28, used in the lower sense of πρεσβύτερος, since pastors are overseers over their flocks. Accordingly, the Presbyterians are obliged to understand this appointing, of Paul's interposing his influence with the congregations to procure the election of these persons as presbyters; than which a harsher or more factitious gloss was surely never promulged even by the Socinians.

— κατὰ πόλιν.] Not 'in every city,' but 'in each city or town' (literally 'city by city'), of all those which had Christian congregations. Of such there might be several in this 'hundred-citied isle;' though the name πόλις was often given to towns; and there is reason to think that not a few of the Cretan cities were no better. Σοὶ διεταξ., 'as I [then] directed thee.' Paul, it seems, had not time then to give the directions and injunctions which he now sends.

6. The Apostle now proceeds to particularize what he had just said generally. (Crellius.)

— εἴ τις ἐστὶν, &c.] Render, 'whoever is,' 'such as are,' &c.; compare 1 Tim. iii. 2—7. Ἀνέγκλητος here is equivalent to ἀνεπίληπτος there.

— τέκνα πιστά.] Πιστὰ is rendered by Doddridge, Newcome, Macknight, and Wakefield, 'believing.' But there seems no sufficient reason to abandon the common version faithful, which is supported by 1 Tim. iii. 4, τέκνα ἔχοντα ἐν ὑποταγῇ. That they are believers appears to be taken for granted; since at Eph. vi. 4, fathers are enjoined to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

7 ἀσωτίας, ἢ ἀνυπότακτα. [g] Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἀνέγ- g Lev. 10. 9. Matt. 24. 45. κλητον εἶναι, ὡς Θεοῦ οἰκονόμον· μὴ αὐθάδη, μὴ ὀργίλον, 1 Cor. 4. 1. Eph. 5. 18.
8 μὴ πάροινον, μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ· [h] ἀλλὰ φιλό- 1 Tim. 3. 3, 15. 1 Pet. 5. 2.
9 ξενον, φιλάγαθον, σώφρονα, δίκαιον, ὅσιον, ἐγκρατῆ· [i] ἀντ- h 1 Tim. 3. 2. i 1 Tim. 1. εχόμενον τοῦ κατὰ τὴν διδαχὴν πιστοῦ λόγου, ἵνα δυνατὸς 10. & 6. 3. 2 Tim. 1. 13.
ᾖ καὶ παρακαλεῖν ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ τῇ ὑγιαινούσῃ, καὶ & 4. 3. infra 2. 1.
10 τοὺς ἀντιλέγοντας ἐλέγχειν. [k] Εἰσὶ γὰρ πολλοὶ [καὶ] k Acts 15. 1. 1 Tim. 1. 6. ἀνυπότακτοι, ματαιολόγοι καὶ φρεναπάται, μάλιστα οἱ ἐκ 11 περιτομῆς· [l] οὓς δεῖ ἐπιστομίζειν· οἵτινες ὅλους οἴκους l Matt. 23. 23.
ἀνατρέπουσι, διδάσκοντες ἃ μὴ δεῖ, αἰσχροῦ κέρδους χάριν. 1 Tim. 6. 5. 2 Tim. 3. 6.
12 Εἶπέ τις ἐξ αὐτῶν, ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης· "Κρῆτες ἀεὶ — ἀσωτίας.] Meaning excess in sensual pleasures. See Eph. v. 18.

7—9. Compare 1 Tim. iii. 2, 3, and Notes.

7. ὡς Θεοῦ οἰκονόμον] 'as the steward of God's family' (which every congregation is). For surely, if fidelity be required in earthly affairs, how much more is requisite in spiritual ones. See 1 Cor. iv. 2. Heinrichs here compares Soph. Ant. 671, ἐν τοῖς γὰρ οἰκείοισι ὅστις ἔστ' ἀνὴρ χρηστος, | φανεῖται κὰν πόλει δίκαιος ὤν.

— αὐθάδη] 'self-willed.' Of which character a most spirited sketch is given by Theophrastus, Char. ch. xv. On the terms following, ὀργίλον, πάροινον, πλήκτην, and αἰσχροκερδῆ, see 1 Tim. iii. 3.

8. φιλάγαθον.] The expression may signify either 'a lover of good men' (as the word is used in Aristotle, Rhet. chap. ii. 4, Cod. Vat.), or, 'a lover of goodness.' The term also occurs in Ecclus. vii. 22.

— δίκαιον, ὅσιον.] Here there appears to be a climax (as in Porphyr. de Abstin. ii. 60, καὶ δικ. καὶ ὁσ.); the former term denoting the being right, integer, as to human laws and duties; the latter, as to God and his laws, pure from sin, godly, pious. So in Polyb. xxiii. 10. 8, we have τὰ πρὸς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους δίκαια καὶ τὰ πρὸς θεοὺς ὅσια.

9. ἀντεχόμενον] 'closely adhering to;' literally, holding fast by any thing, in opposition to [αντι] one who would wrest it away. This also implies diligent attendance to, as in 1 Thess. v. 14, ἀντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν. By πιστὸς λόγος are denoted the sure and certain truths of the Gospel. Παρακαλεῖν ἐν τῇ διδ. τῇ ὑγ. is by most of the later Commentators explained of exhorting them to embrace and abide by sound doctrine. That, however, involves a very harsh ellipsis. The ἐν is well rendered by our common Version and most Expositors, 'by;' which is confirmed by a kindred passage of 2 Tim. iv. 2, ἔλεγξον, ἐπιτίμησον, παρακάλεσον ἐν πάσῃ μακροθυμίᾳ καὶ διδαχῇ. On the expression ὑγιαινούσῃ see Note at 1 Tim. i. 10.

10. Having laid down a common rule, to be every where observed, the Apostle now enforces it by a reference to the peculiar necessity there exists for its observance. (Calvin.)

— εἰσὶ γὰρ πολλοὶ καί, &c.] Καὶ after πολλοὶ is in several MSS. not found, and in others it is put before ματαιολόγ. It is, therefore, with reason, suspected by the Editors to be interpolated; probably by some early Critics who thought a copula was required. Ἀνυπότ. here seems to denote disobedience both in matters of doctrine and discipline; Judaizers being probably for the most part intended. Ματαιολ. is meant of those who are at 1 Tim. i. 6 said to have turned aside εἰς ματαιολογίαν. The φρεναπάται (literally, mind-deceivers) are those who at Rom. xvi. 18 are called ἐξαπατῶντες τὰς καρδίας τῶν ἀκάκων. Φρεναπ. is a word found only in St. Paul, and was probably a provincialism.

11. οὓς δεῖ ἐπιστομ.] Namely, by putting them to silence after full confutation, and then formally silencing them by Episcopal authority. So Demosthenes, p. 85. 4, has ἐπιστομ. τοὺς αὐτῷ ἀντιλέγοντας.

— ὅλους οἴκους ἀνατρ.] i. e. 'subvert the faith of whole families.' So 2 Tim. ii. 18, τὴν πίστιν ἀνατρέπουσι. This, indeed, is hinted at in the words διδ. ἃ μὴ δεῖ, where there is a litotes, as in Is. lxvi. 4. John xxi. 18. I would here compare Plato, p. 960, ὅλας οἰκίας, χρημάτων χάριν, ἐπιχειροῦσι κατ' ἄκρας ἐξαιρεῖν, and Josephus, Bell. i. 25. 2, διὰ τῶν τοιούτων οἴκους—καὶ βασιλείας ὅλας ἀνατρέπεσθαι. These are the kind of persons described in 2 Tim. iii. 6, as οἱ ἐνδύνοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας, καὶ αἰχμαλ., &c., and who are at ver. 2 described as φιλάργυροι.

12. εἶπέ τις—προφ.] Here ἴδιος αὐτῶν is put per epanorthosin, as being a stronger expression. Προφ. is by Newcome and others rendered poet. And, indeed, the term, like vates in Latin, was then applied (as implying a sort of inspiration) to all poets of more than ordinary celebrity; though it had been formerly confined to Homer, Hesiod, and Pindar. Epimenides, however (who is admitted to be the person here meant) was not a poet, but a prophet, and a writer περὶ χρησμῶν, and, as Theophylact says, θειασμοῖς καὶ ἀποτροπιασμοῖς προσέχων, καὶ μαντικὴν δοκῶν κατορθοῦν, 'was reputed to be an able μάντις.' Hence he is called by Apulejus, fatidicus, and by Cicero, vaticinans. And Plutarch, Sol. 12, says he was θεοφιλὴς καὶ σόφος περὶ τὰ θεῖα, insomuch that he was reckoned among the seven wise men of Greece, and was called in by Solon to aid him in the formation of his laws. Thus the word meant, in a general way, 'an interpreter of the will of the gods.' Here, then, it would seem St. Paul had reference to his prophetic rather than his poetic celebrity.

— Κρῆτες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται.] These words were ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί.” Ἡ μαρτυρία αὕτη 13 ἐστὶν ἀληθής. δι’ ἣν αἰτίαν ἔλεγχε αὐτοὺς ’ποτόμως, ἵνα ὑγιαίνωσιν ἐν τῇ πίστει, [m] μὴ προσέχοντες Ἰουδαϊκοῖς μύθοις, 14 καὶ ἐντολαῖς ἀνθρώπων ἀποστρεφομένων τὴν ἀλήθειαν.

[n] Πάντα μὲν καθαρὰ τοῖς καθαροῖς· τοῖς δὲ μεμιασμένοις καὶ 15 ἀπίστοις οὐδὲν καθαρὸν, ἀλλὰ μεμίανται αὐτῶν καὶ ὁ νοῦς καὶ ἡ συνείδησις. [o] Θεὸν ὁμολογοῦσιν εἰδέναι, τοῖς δὲ ἔργοις 16 ἀρνοῦνται, βδελυκτοὶ ὄντες καὶ ἀπειθεῖς, καὶ πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἀδόκιμοι.
II. Σὺ δὲ λάλει ἃ πρέπει τῇ ὑγιαινούσῃ διδασκαλίᾳ· 1 πρεσβύτας νηφαλέους εἶναι, σεμνοὺς, σώφρονας, ὑγιαίνοντας 2 m Isa. 29. 13. Matt. 15. 9. Col. 2. 22. 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. & 6. 20. n Matt. 15. 11. Luke 11. 39, 41. Acts 10. 15. Rom. 14. 14, 20. 1 Cor. 6. 12. & 10. 23, 25. 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4.

o 2 Tim. 3. 5. Jude 4.

borrowed by Callimachus (Hymn on Jove, v. 8), who fully evinces the justice of the expression ἀεὶ, from their having fabricated a tomb which they pretended was Jupiter's, 'so proclaiming (as Bp. Warburton observes) a truth concealed from the vulgar, that the gods were only mortals raised to Divine honours for the benefits they had conferred on men.'

This bad character always adhered to them; as the Greek proverb testifies: Τρία κάππα κάκιστα· Καππαδοκία, καὶ Κρήτη, καὶ Κιλικία, which, it may be observed, supplies a good illustration of the epithet κακὰ just after employed. Of the two expressions κακὰ θηρία and γαστέρες ἀργαὶ, the former denotes their brutishness, the latter, their sloth and gluttony. So Hesiod, Theog. 26, has, ποιμένες—γαστέρες οἶον; and Suidas says of the Sybarites, γαστέρες ἦσαν καὶ τρυφηταί.

13. ἔλεγχε αὐτοὺς ἀποτόμως.] A metaphor derived from surgeons, who cut away the unsound flesh even to the quick, lest the mortification should extend. The same expression occurs at 2 Cor. xiii. 10, where see Note.

14. μὴ προσέχοντες Ἰουδαϊκοῖς μ.] See Note on 1 Tim. i. 4.

— ἀποστρεφομένων τὴν ἀλήθειαν.] By this metaphor, as Macknight observes, it is represented that truth offers itself to the Judaizers, while they turn away from it in contempt.

15. πάντα μὲν καθαρὰ, &c.] A similar sentiment is found at 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5, and Rom. xiv. 14, and also Ecclus. xxxix. 32. So also it is said by Galen (as cited by Wetstein), τοῖς ἀκαθάρτοις ψυχαῖς, εἰ τροφίμους προσφέρεις λόγους, οὐ μόνον οὐδὲν ὠφελήσεις ἂν, ἀλλὰ καὶ βλάψεις οὐ σμικρά· and Seneca, Ep. 98, 'Malus animus omnia in malum vertit, etiam quæ specie optimi venerunt,' et de Benefic. 5. 12. 'Quemadmodum stomachus morbo vitiatus, et colligens bilem, quoscunque acceperit cibos mutat—ita animus cæcus, quicquid illi commiseris, id onus suum et perniciem facit.'

Here, then, the Apostle takes occasion, from what has been said of Jewish fables and traditions, to inculcate a kindred truth,—that the Jewish distinctions of meats and drinks, as clean or unclean, were of no effect as to moral purity, which consists not in abstaining from certain meats, but in preserving an unpolluted heart; q. d. 'to the pure [in heart] all such meats as, by the Jewish traditions, were held as unclean, are pure;' i. e. may be eaten without defilement; but to the polluted [in heart], and unfaithful to Christ, nothing is pure.

16. Θεὸν ὁμολογοῦσιν εἰδέναι, &c.] This seems intended to evince the justice of the foregoing charge (ver. 15) of unbelief, and, as Hyperius and Crellius observe, anticipate an objection exculpatory of the false teachers, that they have much knowledge of God and religion, are pious and laborious in their preaching, and pure in their lives. The antecedent, however, the Apostle denies, and the consequent falls to the ground; q. d. 'They profess, indeed, to know, love, and serve God, but in their actions they neither know nor obey him, their deeds not corresponding to their professions;' as it is said, 2 Tim. iii. 5, ἔχοντες μόρφωσιν εὐσεβείας, τὴν δὲ δύναμιν αὐτῆς ἠρνημένοι. The term ἔργοις is used with reference to the idea of λόγοις implied in ὁμολογοῦσι. So in a passage of Aristotle, cited by Budæus, Comm. L. Gr. in voc. συνᾴδω, we have καὶ συναδόντων μὲν τοῖς ἔργοις, ἀποδεκτέον· διαφωνούντων δὲ λόγους ὑποληπτέον, where, instead of the manifestly corrupt words λόγους ὑποληπτέον, I venture, with some confidence, to propose to read λόγοις, ἀποληκτέον for ἀποστατέον, we must abandon their society. See Is. ii. 22, 'Cease ye from man;' abandon all trust in him. The above conjecture is confirmed by a passage of the same writer, Ethics, x. 1, συνῳδοὶ γὰρ οἱ λόγοι τοῖς ἔργοις ὄντες πιστεύονται.

— βδελυκτοί.] On this expression see Note at Matt. xxiv. 15; and on ἀδόκιμοι, Note at 2 Tim. iii. 8.

II. 1. As the best means of keeping out fables Titus is recommended to labour for edification. (Calvin.) Compare 1 Tim. iii. 11. v. 14.

— σὺ δὲ λάλει, &c.] q. d. Horum ergo pessima exempla fugiens, ea age, in eis labora, quæ ecclesiæ Christianæ singulis hominibus, ætatibus, prosunt, vv. 1—10; vivimus enim temporibus jam evangelii lumine illustratis, quibus digne vivendum nobis est, ver. 11—fin. (Heinrichs.)

2. πρεσβύτας νηφ. εἶναι.] Repeat λάλει, in the sense εἰπὲ, bid. By πρεσβ. some eminent Expositors understand, not aged men, but Presbyters; alleging that the directions here given are similar to those at 1 Tim. i. 3, and πρεσβύτιδας at ver. 3 is applicable to those women who bore offices in the Church, as appears from the epithets

3 τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ· [a] πρεσβύτιδας ὡσαύτως a 1 Tim. 2. 9. & 5. 13.
ἐν καταστήματι ἱεροπρεπεῖς, μὴ διαβόλους, μὴ οἴνῳ πολλῷ 1 Pet. 3. 3.
4 δεδουλωμένας, καλοδιδασκάλους, ἵνα σωφρονίζωσι τὰς νέας 5 φιλάνδρους εἶναι, φιλοτέκνους, [b] σώφρονας, ἁγνὰς, οἰκου- b Gen. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 14. 34. ροὺς, ἀγαθὰς, ὑποτασσομένας τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν, ἵνα μὴ ὁ Eph. 5. 22. Col. 3. 18. 1 Tim. 6. 1.
6 λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ βλασφημῆται. Τοὺς νεωτέρους ὡσαύτως 1 Pet. 3. 1.
7 παρακάλει σωφρονεῖν· [c] περὶ πάντα σεαυτὸν παρεχόμενος c 1 Tim. 4. 12.
τύπον καλῶν ἔργων· ἐν τῇ διδασκαλίᾳ ἀδιαφθορίαν, σεμνό- 1 Pet. 5. 3.
8 τητα, ἀφθαρσίαν, [d] λόγον ὑγιῆ, ἀκατάγνωστον· ἵνα ὁ ἐξ d 1 Tim. 5. 14.
ἐναντίας ἐντραπῇ, μηδὲν ἔχων περὶ * ἡμῶν λέγειν φαῦλον. 1 Pet. 2. 12, 15. & 3. 16.
9 [e] Δούλους ἰδίοις δεσπόταις ὑποτάσσεσθαι, ἐν πᾶσιν εὐαρέστους e Eph. 6. 5. Col. 3. 22.
10 εἶναι, μὴ ἀντιλέγοντας· μὴ νοσφιζομένους, ἀλλὰ πίστιν 1 Tim. 6. 1, 2. 1 Pet. 2. 18.

ἱεροπρεπεῖς and καλοδιδασκάλους. This view, however, is supported neither by the authority of the ancient Expositors, nor by the opinion of the best modern ones; and the qualifications do not sufficiently correspond. Indeed, the word is never so used in the New Test. More may be said for πρεσβύτιδες as denoting female elders, or deaconesses; where there is ancient authority to allege. Perhaps we may, in the former case, reconcile the two interpretations, by supposing that the Apostle, though using the general term πρεσβύτης, yet had also in mind those who filled ecclesiastical offices.

— ὑγιαίνοντας τῇ πίστει, τῇ ἀγάπῃ, τῇ ὑπομονῇ.] According to the Versions in general these datives ἀγάπῃ and ὑπομονῇ are taken as dependent on ὑγιαίνοντας; but that leads to a sense which could not be intended. Repeat εἶναι before ἐν ἀγάπῃ, thus: 'That the aged men be sober, grave, temperate, sound in the faith, be in love, in patience.' So the Æthiopic Version has, 'ne hæsitent in fide, et diligant, et patientes sint.' On these various particulars compare 1 Tim. vi. 11, and 2 Tim. iii. 10.

3. καταστήματι] 'deportment,' corresponding to the French 'maintien,' whence our mien. So Porphyry, cited by Wetstein, τὸ δὲ σεμνὸν καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καταστήματος ἑωρᾶτο· and Simpl., τὸ κατ. σεμνόν. In ἱεροπρ. the reference should seem to be (not, as many eminent Expositors suppose) to dress, but to deportment; denoting that this should be suitable to their holy calling. Δεδουλ., 'addicted to;' nearly synonymous with προσέχοντας at 1 Tim. iii. 8, though a somewhat stronger term, and illustrated by John viii. 34 and Rom. vi. 14.

4, 5. ἵνα σωφρονίζ., &c.] These words point at the chief purpose of the instructions.—namely, that they should teach them to be σώφρονες. acting as monitresses and regulators of their morals. These instructions (as appears from what follows) were to turn on the domestic duties suitable to young married women, and each in the order of importance. The first is, as it were, their cardinal virtue; for it was well said by Socrates (ap. Stob. p. 488), εὐσέβεια γυναικεία, ὁ πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα ἔρως. In like manner modesty is by Pericles, in his Funeral Oration, (Thucyd. ii. 45) called the virtue of the female sex. In οἰκουροὺς we have a very significant term, denoting not only 'stayers at home,' but, ex adjuncto, care-takers of the house. So Theophylact explains by οἰκονομικάς· which, I would observe, is the sense of the obscure term στεγανόμους in Lycophr. Cass. 1095, who just after uses the term οἰκουρίαν to denote housewifery. Ἀγαθὰς may mean either,—with reference to the words following,—good-tempered, or, as it should rather seem, with reference to the preceding, good-wives, in the sense in which the word was used by our ancestors, like the οἰκοδεσποῖναι of Artemid. ii. 33, or the bona-fœmina of Ennius; namely, good managers. Thus it will be exegetical of the preceding. On ἵνα μὴ ὁ λόγος, &c., see 1 Tim. vi. 1.

7, 8. τύπον.] See 1 Tim. iv. 12, and Note. At ἐν τῇ διδ. ἀδιαφθορίαν repeat παρεχ. in the sense ἐνδεικνύμενος. Ἀδιαφθ. is closely connected with καπηλεύειν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ at 2 Cor. ii. 17; i. e. corrupting it for the sake of lucre, or other base motives. Now this regards the person, as λόγον ὑγιῆ (by a metaphor often occurring in the Epistles to Timothy and Titus) does the thing. Ὑγιὴς, to denote pure and uncorrupted, is not unfrequent in the later Classical writers; but these always, I believe, used it with οὐχ, as the earlier writers said οὐδὲν ὑγιές. Ἀκατάγν. is properly a forensic term, but is here synonymous with ἀνεπίληπτος at 1 Tim. vi. 14. At ἐξ ἐναντίας supply γνώμης; this expression being equivalent to ὁ ἀντικείμενος at 1 Tim. v. 14, and including both Jews and Judaizers. The same phrase occurs in Thucyd. vii. 45, τὸ ἐξ ἐναντίας. Ἵνα ἐντραπῇ, 'that he may be ashamed;' as 2 Thess. iii. 14. Compare a similar passage at 1 Cor. xiv. 24.

9, 10. Compare similar admonitions at 1 Tim. vi. 1, sq. Eph. vi. 5—8. Col. iii. 22.

9. ἀντιλέγοντας.] The term is supposed to be equivalent to ἀνταποκρίνεσθαι at Rom. ix. 20 (which may serve to illustrate an obscure expression, Æschyl. Theb. 244, παλινστομεῖς αὖ; for ἀνταποκρίνῃ; For so I would point, regarding the preceding line as spoken aside). The expression is, however, by the recent Commentators in general taken to signify not refractory, or mutinous, rebellious. And so ἀντιλογία is used at Jude v. 11, καὶ τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ ἀπώλοντο, and 2 Sam. xxii. 44, and ἀντίλεξις in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 1, 3. It is highly probable that the term was suggested by that of Is. lxv. 2, λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα καὶ ἀντιλέγοντα.

πᾶσαν ἐνδεικνυμένους ἀγαθήν· ἵνα τὴν διδασκαλίαν τοῦ Σωτῆ-ρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ κοσμῶσιν ἐν πᾶσιν. [f] Ἐπεφάνη γὰρ ἡ 11 χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, [g] παι- 12 δεύουσα ἡμᾶς, ἵνα ἀρνησάμενοι τὴν ἀσέβειαν καὶ τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθυμίας, σωφρόνως καὶ δικαίως καὶ εὐσεβῶς ζήσω-μεν ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι· [h] προσδεχόμενοι τὴν μακαρίαν ἐλπίδα 13 καὶ ἐπιφάνειαν τῆς δόξης τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος f 1 Tim. 2. 4. infra 3. 4.

g Eph. 1. 4. Col. 1. 22. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 John 2. 16.
h 1 Cor. 1. 7. Phil. 3. 20.

10. νοσφιζομένους.] See Note on Acts v. 1, 2. Τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ. On this expression see Note at 1 Tim. i. 2.

11, 12. Here commences the latter portion of the Epistle, in which, as Crellius observes, we have expressed the main reason why men should live thus righteously and godly, and withal we have described and enumerated the general heads of the piety required of us. The great end and aim of Christianity here adverted to is, by the mercy of God, founded on the merits of Christ, to bring men on, through faith and holiness, to salvation; q. d. (as Bp. Sanderson expresses it) 'The grace of God (meaning the gracious dispensation of God revealed in the Gospel, Galat. v. 4) as it brings with it an offer of salvation to all men, so it teaches all men who have any real purpose to lay hold on so gracious an offer, to deny all ungodliness,' &c.

Of the two constructions adopted of these words, ἐπεφάνη ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ σωτήριος πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις, that by which σωτήριος is construed with πᾶσιν seems to deserve the preference; the word σωτήριος not unfrequently taking after it a dative, of which several examples are adduced by Wetstein. And that ἐπεφάνη may very well be taken absolutely, is sufficiently shown by the words a little further on, iii. 4, ὅτε δὲ ἡ χρηστότης—ἐπεφάνη. On the other hand, σωτήριος taken absolutely would be here not a little harsh. As, however, the construction of ἐπεφ. with πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις is supported by a passage of Luke i. 79 (ἐπιφᾶναι τοῖς ἐν σκότει), so it may perhaps be allowed to us at σωτήριος to supply πάντων, from πᾶσιν, or take πᾶσιν twice. And so the words must have been taken by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who renders, 'Apparuit enim gratia Dei, servatrix omnium, omnibus hominibus.' By 'all men' is evidently to be understood all orders of men without distinction,—Jews and Gentiles, rich and poor, masters and slaves.

The term ἐπεφάνη (meaning, 'hath been revealed and promulgated') is used with allusion to Christ as styled, Mal. iv. 2, 'the Sun of righteousness;' and John viii. 12, 'the light of the world;' also Luke i. 78, ἀνατολὴ ἐξ ὕψους.

12. παιδεύουσα] for εἰς τὸ παιδεύειν. Ἵνα, for ὅτι. Ἀρνησάμενοι, 'rejecting or renouncing.' So Thucyd. vi. 56, we have ἀπαρν. τὴν πεῖρασιν.

— ἀσέβειαν.] This consisted not only in neglect of the proper object of worship by idolatry, but also by those vices which invariably attended in its train: 1st, denying the existence of a God, or, what is practical atheism, denying his properties and attributes, his providence and his governance of the world, and a state of future retribution; 2dly, acknowledging the existence and attributes of God, yet neglecting to worship him (at least aright, as in idolatry), or setting him at nought by perjury, blasphemy, profane swearing, judging hardly, and speaking disrespectfully of his providence; finally, being disobedient to his will, whether manifested in the book of nature, or that of revelation. (See Benson and Macknight.)

On the expression τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθ. the best comment is 1 John ii. 16. Σωφρ. denotes virtue as regards ourselves; δικ., as regards our fellow-creatures; and εὐσεβῶς, as respects God. Similar divisions are found in passages of the Classical writers cited by the Commentators.

13. προσδεχόμενοι—Χριστοῦ.] Of these words the most natural sense, and that required by the proprietas linguæ, is, beyond all doubt, the one assigned by almost all the ancients from Clem. Alex. downwards, and by the early modern Expositors, as Erasmus, Grotius, and Beza, and also by some eminent Expositors and Theologians of later times, as Bps. Pearson and Bull, Wolf, Matthæi, and Bp. Middleton, namely, 'Looking for (or rather, looking forward to. Comp. Job ii. 9, and see Grotius) the blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.' The cause of the ambiguity in our common version is ably pointed out, and the above version established on the surest grounds, by Bp. Middleton and Prof. Scholefield. But, besides the argument founded on the propriety of language, that of Beza, who urges that ἐπιφ. is no where used of God, but Christ, is unanswerable. So in a late able Critique on Dr. Channing's works, in the British Critic, the Reviewer justly maintains that 'Christ must be the God here spoken of, because it is his glorious appearing which all Christians here are said to expect; but of God the Father we are expressly told that him no man hath seen, nor can see.' Other convincing arguments for the construction here laid down may be seen in Dr. Routh's Reliquiæ Sacræ, vol. ii. p. 26. The reader is also particularly referred to Clem. Alex. Cohort. ad Gentes, sub init., where vv. 11—14 are cited by that Father, and the view of σωτ. here maintained is adopted. The whole of the context there is deserving of great attention, as containing such plain and repeated attestations to the Divinity of Jesus Christ as can rarely be found. The passage itself may be seen in Bp. Bull's Def. Fid. Nic., p. 87.

Here Doddridge and Macknight, though they profess to leave the matter dubious, yet so translate as both to leave no ambiguity, and decide it in a manner we should little expect. They and our other Translators have, I suspect, been influenced, more than they were aware, by an argument, specious indeed, and employed by the maintainers of the new version, that 'Jesus Christ is no where styled the great God;' but μεγάλου belonging to both Θεοῦ and Σωτῆρος, alters the λυτρώσηται ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ πάσης ἀνομίας, καὶ καθαρίσῃ ἑαυτῷ Eph. 2. 10. & 5. 2 Gal. 1. 4.

14 ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [i] ὃς ἔδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ἵνα i Exod. 19 5.
15 λαὸν περιούσιον, ζηλωτὴν καλῶν ἔργων. [k] Ταῦτα λάλει καὶ & 2. 20. Heb. 9. 14.
παρακάλει, καὶ ἔλεγχε μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς· μηδείς σου k 1 Cor. 16. 11. 1 Tim. 4. 12.
περιφρονείτω.
1 III. [a] ῾ΥΠΟΜΙΜΝΗΣΚΕ αὐτοὺς ἀρχαῖς καὶ ἐξουσίαις a Rom. 13. 1, &c. 1 Pet. 2. 13.
ὑποτάσσεσθαι, πειθαρχεῖν, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἑτοίμους 2 εἶναι, [b] μηδένα βλασφημεῖν, ἀμάχους εἶναι, ἐπιεικεῖς, πᾶσαν b Phil. 4 5. 2 Tim. 2. 24, 25.
3 ἐνδεικνυμένους πρᾳότητα πρὸς πάντας ἀνθρώπους. [c] Ἦμεν c 1 Cor. 6. 11. Eph. 2. 1, &c. & 5. 8. γὰρ ποτὲ καὶ ἡμεῖς ἀνόητοι, ἀπειθεῖς, πλανώμενοι, δουλεύ- Col. 3. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 3.

case, and removes that objection. The sense is plainly, 'the glorious appearance of that GREAT BEING who is our GOD AND SAVIOUR.'

14. ἔδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν] i. e. 'gave himself up to death,' gave not gold, or silver, or holocaust, but himself, body and blood (compare Eph. v. 2); and that, by implication, freely and spontaneously. See more in Bp. Beveridge, as cited by D'Oyly and Mant.

— λυτρώσηται] 'might redeem us.' The word is here a verbum prægnans, denoting not merely, as the Unitarians contend, a 'withdrawing men from sin,' by a pure doctrine and a holy example, but a paying the λύτρον, which delivers them from the penalty of sin, and from its dominion. See Rom. vi. 14. The second of these senses is alluded to in the next words, καὶ καθαρίσῃ, &c., in which may be recognised a blending of two clauses into one, namely,—'that he might [by atonement] purify us unto his service, and [thus] make us a people peculiarly his own, by being zealous, not of vain rites and ceremonies, but of good works.' Περιούσιος, in this Hellenistic use, signifies what is ἐξαιρετὸν, or chosen out from other things, eximium, by an allusion to the title formerly given to the Jews by God, i. e. λαὸς περιούσιος. (Exod. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6.) This use is formed on that of the Heb. סגלה. See Eph. ii. 10, and compare 1 Pet. ii. 9, λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν.

15. ἔλεγχε.] This ought not to be rendered, as it is by Rosenmuller and others, 'enjoin;' a signification wholly unauthorized. The sense commonly assigned is sufficiently apt, and indeed no perplexity would have existed, had the comma of the early Editions after παρακάλει been retained. The general meaning may be thus expressed: 'The above doctrines and duties do thou teach, and exhort to the practice thereof; and [any who gainsay or neglect them] rebuke with all authority,' i. e. in the exercise of all the authority vested in thee as God's minister for that very purpose. So 2 Tim. iv. 2, κήρυξον—ἔλεγξον—παρακάλεσον.

The expression μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς I would not (with most Commentators) refer to ἔλεγχε only, rendering severely. It is better to understand it of all the several terms preceding, and render, 'with all authoritativeness.' So imperium in Latin is used for auctoritas, such as that of masters over their servants, parents over their children, husbands over their wives, and sometimes physicians over their patients. See Pliny, Paneg. c. 22. And thus Hippocrates, περὶ εὐσχημοσύνης, bids the physician, on visiting his patient, to remember to use καταστολὴν (stayedness), ἀνακυρίωσιν (authoritativeness), βραχυλογίαν. Probably the meaning, in the present passage, may be thus expressed by the word ἀνακυρίωσις.

— μηδείς σου περιφρ.] i. e. 'give no one just cause to despise thee.' He does not say, as to Timothy, despise thy youth, for Titus was a much older man; but 'despise thee,' namely, for the want of due authority and firmness. It is well remarked by Theophylact, that authority and rebuke must be well timed, otherwise they will be despised.

III. 1. ὑπομίμνησκε αὐτοὺς—ὑποτάσσ.] On this precept see Rom. xiii. 1, compared with Col. i. 10. So important an injunction was this of obedience to magistrates ever regarded, that one of the seven precepts of Noah was to avoid resistance to magistrates.

— πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἑτοίμους εἶναι.] Expositors are not agreed whether πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἑτοίμους ε. should be referred to the preceding words (thus limiting the obedience to all things lawful), or to the following ones, as suggesting how political obedience may best be rendered,—namely, by discharging the other duties. The latter mode is preferable, and it is confirmed by 2 Tim. ii. 21, εἰς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένοι. Thus the sense is, 'readily disposed to the performance of that (namely, political obedience) and every other good work,' i. e. moral duty connected therewith, such as abstinence from all reviling language and quarrelsome conduct, and the cultivation of the opposite disposition of meekness and forbearance towards all men, even those who, like their heathen adversaries, little deserved it at their hands.

3. ἦμεν γὰρ ποτὲ, &c.] The γὰρ is meant to assign a reason for such lenity and mildness towards abusive heathen opponents; namely, pity for their miserable condition, and recollection that they themselves were once such as those persons now are. An argument similar to that of Seneca, cited by Grotius: 'Faciet nos moderatiores respectus nostri, si consideremus nos.'

By the expression ἡμεῖς the best Expositors are agreed that the Apostle speaks per κοίνωσιν; i. e. identifies himself with them, as he often does elsewhere, in order to soften disagreeable topics, and avoid offence; for, notwithstanding what some say, there is here scarcely any particular suitable to Paul when a Jew, whereas all of them d Supra 2. 11.

e John 3. 3, 5. Acts 15. 11. Rom. 3. 20, 28. & 4. 2, 6. & 9. 11. & 11. 6. Eph. 1. 4. & 2. 4, 9. & 5. 26. Gal. 2. 16. 2 Tim. 1. 9. f Ezek. 36. 25. Joel 2. 28. Acts 2. 33. Rom. 5. 5.
g Rom. 8. 23, 24.

οντες ἐπιθυμίαις καὶ ἡδοναῖς ποικίλαις, ἐν κακίᾳ καὶ φθόνῳ διάγοντες, στυγητοὶ, μισοῦντες ἀλλήλους. [d] Ὅτε δὲ ἡ χρη- 4 στότης καὶ ἡ φιλανθρωπία ἐπεφάνη τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, [e] οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων τῶν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ ὧν ἐποιήσαμεν ἡμεῖς, 5 ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγ-γενεσίας, καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος ἁγίου, [f] οὗ ἐξέχεεν 6 ἐφ' ἡμᾶς πλουσίως, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν· [g] ἵνα δικαιωθέντες τῇ ἐκείνου χάριτι, κληρονόμοι γενώμεθα, 7

are very similar to those by which the Apostle describes the heathens at Rom. i. and elsewhere. Ἀνόητοι has reference to the peculiar ignorance of atheism, which says, 'there is no God' (Ps. xiv. 1.) or of polytheism, which bows to idols. Nearly synonymous with this is the term following, πλανώμενοι, which is accordingly at Heb. v. 2, joined with ἀγνοῶν, and may there, as here, be rendered self-deceived, implying voluntary error. So 1 John i. 8 we have ἑαυτοὺς πλανῶμεν, καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν. Ἀπειθεῖς, as being placed between ἀνόητ. and πλαν., must denote a contumacious refusal of belief and obedience, corresponding to οὐκ ἐδοκίμασαν τὸν Θεὸν ἔχειν ἐν ἐπιγνώσει at Rom. i, 28. On the words δουλεύοντες ἐπιθυμ. καὶ ἡδ. ποικίλαις the best comment is Rom. i. 28—31, and Eph. ii. 3; and as those words allude to the abominable vices of the heathens, so, I conceive, do the next to certain evil dispositions,—such as malice, envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness. So Rom. i. 29, πεπληρωμένους—κακίᾳ· μεστοὺς φθόνου, φόνου, ἔριδος. Στυγητοὶ, 'hateful (or deserving of hatred) to God and good men.' So Philo (cited by Wetstein) has στυγητὸν καὶ θεομισητὸν πρᾶγμα. and at Rom. i. 30 we have θεοστυγεῖς. Finally, of μισοῦντες ἀλλήλοις the sense may be best expressed in the words of Tacitus, invisos mutuis odiis. In this last particular we have one of the surest indications of 'the carnal mind, which is enmity against God.' Accordingly this hatred is with reason placed by St. Paul, Gal. v. 20, among 'the works of the flesh.' How far the ancients carried this pernicious principle, will sufficiently appear by a reference to the frequent custom of antiquity, of having plates of lead nailed up in the sepulchral vaults, inscribed with bitter imprecations of their enemies.

4—6. Compare the parallel passages at Gal. iv. 3—6, and Eph. ii. 1—10, the latter of which especially is a good comment on the present. Τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ is not well rendered by Bp. Middleton, 'of our Saviour God;' who, in supposing that here and at i. 3. ii. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 2, the Saviour God means Christ, is certainly mistaken. Not only the parallel passages of Gal. and Eph. show it to be God the Father who is here meant, but such is clear from ver. 6. So also Luke i. 47 we have τῷ Θεῷ τῷ Σωτῆρί μου.

5. ὧν ἐποιήσ.] Render, with Macknight and Wakefield, 'which we had done,' or did; i. e. before faith and the laver of regeneration. 'This (as Whitby observes) does not in the least exclude the works of righteousness which should hereafter be done, by virtue of the new nature given to Christians, and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, from being conditions of their future happiness; and when the Apostle says κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς, his meaning is, that by his free mercy he brought us from a state of wrath and condemnation into the way of salvation; in which, if we walk and continue, we shall assuredly obtain salvation.'

— ἔσωσε.] Meaning, as the best Expositors are agreed, 'hath put us into a state of salvation.' See Note on Matt. i. 21. Acts ii. 47, and 1 Tim. ii. 4. The expression must, however, chiefly import deliverance from the consequences of former sins, negligences, and ignorances, by having past offences atoned for, and the means of future holiness and righteousness communicated.

— διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας.] Render, 'by the laver of regeneration;' i. e. (as Bp. Hall explains) 'by means of those holy ordinances which he hath appointed; and namely, as one of them, by the holy sacrament of baptism, which is the laver of our spiritual regeneration; yet not by any virtue of the outward sign, but by the inward renovation which is wrought in us by the Holy Ghost.' That by παλιγγ. is meant baptismal regeneration, the ancient Commentators almost universally (see Chrys. i. 328) and the most eminent ones of modern times are agreed. And that this is the doctrine of our Church, is evident from its 27th Article. The term, indeed, might, without the adjunct λουτρὸν, mean moral regeneration; and though that sense be very rare in the ancient writers, yet I have myself noted an example in Euseb. Eccl. Hist. iii. 23, fin. διδοὺς μέγα παράδειγμα μετανοίας ἀληθινῆς, καὶ μέγα γνώρισμα παλιγγενεσίας. The expression ἀνακαιν. Πν. ἁγ. must, of course, be primarily understood of the renovation proceeding from the regenerating grace of baptism; though it must by no means be confined to that, but understood of that moral renovation begun in baptism, but requiring the aid of the Holy Spirit throughout the whole of life. The reader is here referred to an excellent elucidation of this controverted topic by Dr. Glocester Ridley (cited by Mant and D'Oyly), which leaves, in fact, very little about which moderate men, careful to understand each other, would differ.

6. ἐξέχεεν—πλουσίως.] See Acts ii. 17, and Note.

7. ἵνα δικαιωθέντες, &c.] See the parallel passages of Gal. iv. 3—6, and Eph. ii. 1—10; also Rom. iii. 24—26. v. 1—9. viii. 17. Gal. iii. 29.

— τῇ ἐκείνου χάριτι.] By his grace is, of course, to be understood the grace of God; as is plain from ἐκείνου, not αὐτοῦ, being used; the one pointing to the remote, the other, to the nearer antecedent.

8 κατ᾽ ἐλπίδα, ζωῆς αἰωνίου. Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος· καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαί σε διαβεβαιοῦσθαι· ἵνα φροντίζωσι καλῶν ἔργων προΐστασθαι οἱ πεπιστευκότες τῷ Θεῷ. ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ 9 καὶ ὠφέλιμα τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. [h] Μωρὰς δὲ ζητήσεις καὶ γενεα- h 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. λογίας, καὶ ἔρεις καὶ μάχας νομικὰς, περιΐστασο· εἰσὶ γὰρ & 6. 20. 2 Tim. 2. 23. supra 1. 14.
10 ἀνωφελεῖς καὶ μάταιοι. [i] Αἱρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον, μετὰ μίαν καὶ i Matt. 18. 17.
11 δευτέραν νουθεσίαν, παραιτοῦ· εἰδὼς ὅτι ἐξέστραπται ὁ τοιοῦ- Rom 16. 17. 2 Thess. 3. 6.
τος, καὶ ἁμαρτάνει ὢν αὐτοκατάκριτος. 2 Tim. 3. 5. 2 John 10.

8. πιστὸς ὁ λόγος.] Literally, 'Faithful or true is the saying.' Expositors are not quite agreed whether this refers to what precedes, or to what follows. In the latter case the sense will be, 'uphold the doctrine, that believers should maintain good works.' To this sense, however, the plural τούτων is adverse; and it is not permitted by the ἵνα. Hence it is better, with almost all eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, to refer the words to what precedes, understanding by τούτων the 'doctrines above mentioned;' namely (as they are summed up by Dr. A. Clarke), 1. the ruined state of man, both in soul and body; 2. the infinite goodness of God, which devised his salvation; 3. the manifestation of this goodness by the incarnation of Jesus Christ; 4. the justification which they who believed received through His blood; 5. the mission of the Holy Spirit, and the purification of the heart by His influence; 6. the hope of the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of both it and the soul through all eternity; 7. the necessity of obedience to the will of God, and of walking worthy of the vocation wherewith they had been called.

— καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαι, &c.] Meaning, 'and I would have you constantly insist on these truths; so that those who have believed in God, may maintain good works.' The cause of the obscurity, and consequent diversity of interpretation, arose from the Apostle not having here shown how it should be, that the doctrine of salvation by grace should produce holiness of life. But he has done it in another kindred passage, which the Commentators have omitted to adduce, —namely, Eph. ii. 9, 10, where, after having at large treated on the subject of salvation by grace (as here), adding that it is not of works lest any man should boast, he subjoins: αὐτοῦ γάρ ἐσμεν ποίημα, κτισθέντες ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐπὶ ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς, οἷς προητοίμασεν ὁ Θεὸς ἵνα ἐν αὐτοῖς περιπατήσωμεν· where the γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[Yet works must be done,] for,' &c. Hence it would seem that καλῶν ἔργων here must have the same sense as ἔργοις ἀγαθοῖς there; and consequently it must not be limited, with many eminent Commentators, to works of benevolence, still less to the business of our vocation, but be extended to good works of every kind. Προΐστασθαι signifies, 1. 'to set oneself about any thing; 2. to assiduously practise it;' a sense not unfrequent in the Classical writers. Accordingly the two terms φροντ. and προΐστασθαι taken together convey an intensity of sense in the latter.

— ταῦτά ἐστι τὰ καλὰ, &c.] Some fourteen MSS. have not the τὰ, which Bp. Middleton is disposed to cancel, for scarcely any better reason than because he does not see the force of it. And what the Bishop was only inclined to do, Mr. Valpy, swayed by his authority, takes courage and does; and, with less than his usual discretion, cancels the word, alone of all the Editors. But, not to advert to Bp. Middleton's reasons for supposing it not genuine, it is surely difficult to imagine how, if so, it should have been introduced into nearly nine-tenths of the MSS.; for Rinck's collations present no variation: whereas, for its omission we can well account; namely, from the ancient Critics being as unable to discover its force as was Bp. Middleton. Yet, if I mistake not, it is susceptible of a very good sense,—namely, 'These are the things (i. e. duties), which are good and profitable unto men.' Similarly to what is said by Plutarch, de Educ. § 17, ταῦτα μὲν οὖν καλὰ καὶ συμφέροντα. The above sense is, I apprehend, much stronger than that yielded by the common version, and such as is very agreeable to the Asyndeton; which in St. Paul is commonly introductory to a sentiment of more than usual energy. Indeed, it is here required by the contrast in the next verse; for, in the pursuit of curious speculations, unconnected with the main articles of our faith, and the common rules of human duty, practice is usually neglected.

9. μωρὰς ζητήσεις.] In this expression Vitringa (de Synag. p. 671, fin.) says there is a manifest allusion to those disputations, vain and foolish, which were held in the Synagogues by the disputers (συζητηταὶ) of this world, on matters pertaining to the Synagogue and the economy of the Old Testament. He then enters at large into the nature of these συζητήσεις. On this verse see Notes at 1 Tim. i. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17.

— γενεαλογίας.] Some learned men suppose this to have reference to that Oriental system of philosophy, the advocates of which taught that the eternal and perfect Deity lived in a state of undisturbed repose and happiness; that two beings, male and female, immediately sprung from him; that from them descended successive generations (Æons); and that these three species of beings constituted a celestial family (πλήρωμα). See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical Hist., vol. i. p. 71.

10. The mention of frivolous questions and curious subtilties naturally introduces that of the heresies and schisms, which they seldom fail to generate; (comp. Rom. xvi. 17, where see Note.) On the sense of αἱρετικὸν ἄνθρωπον, and of the term σχίσμα, much has been written. Suffice it here to say, that αἱρετικὸς seems to mean 'one who takes up any doctrine in opposition to, or inconsistent with, the fundamental truths of the Gospel;' especially if anxious to promulgate his own notions, and from a vain-glorious desire of being the head of a sect. Of course, schism is the pro-k Acts 20. 4. Eph. 6. 21. Col. 4. 6. 2 Tim. 4. 12.

l Acts 18. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 12.

[k] Ὅταν πέμψω Ἀρτεμᾶν πρός σε, ἢ Τυχικόν, σπούδασον 12 ἐλθεῖν πρός με εἰς Νικόπολιν· ἐκεῖ γὰρ κέκρικα παραχει-μάσαι. [l] Ζηνᾶν τὸν νομικὸν καὶ Ἀπολλὼ σπουδαίως πρό- 13 πεμψον, ἵνα μηδὲν αὐτοῖς λείπῃ. Μανθανέτωσαν δὲ καὶ οἱ 14 ἡμέτεροι καλῶν ἔργων προΐστασθαι εἰς τὰς ἀναγκαίας χρείας· ἵνα μὴ ὦσιν ἄκαρποι. Ἀσπάζονταί σε οἱ μετ᾿ ἐμοῦ πάντες· 15 ἄσπασαι τοὺς φιλοῦντας ἡμᾶς ἐν πίστει. ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Τίτον τῆς Κρητῶν ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον χειροτονηθέντα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Νικοπόλεως τῆς Μακεδονίας.

mulgation and supporting of such heresies. See Bingham's Ecclesiastical Antiquities, l. xvi. 6. 21; Vitringa, de Synag. p. 755, seqq.

11. εἰδὼς ὅτι—αὐτοκατ.] These words, not a little obscure and controverted, are, I conceive, meant to suggest a reason why all intercourse with such a person is to be avoided. And the difficulty mainly hinges upon αὐτοκατάκριτος, which some eminent Commentators think may mean, 'one who furnishes matter of self-condemnation against himself:' a sense, however, not a little harsh, and far from suitable to what preceded. The ancient interpretations, from their simplicity, deserve more attention. Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Œcumenius explain it ἀναπολόγητος, i.e. 'condemned by himself and his own conscience:' implying that he teaches erroneous doctrines, knowing them to be such; for, as Whitby observes, no man who acts according to his judgment, how erroneous soever that may be, is thereby self-condemned. It is well remarked by Theodoret, that the import of the whole verse is ἀνόνητος γάρ ἐστιν ὁ πόνος. Perhaps, however, the truth will best be attained by uniting both interpretations, thus: 'Such an one avoid; for he is utterly perverted, and therefore no good can be expected to be done: he sins self-condemned, and is so inexcusable that you may justly break off intercourse; and, by his being already self-condemned, you need not keep up intercourse with the intent of convincing him of his error; for of that his conscience will admonish him.' So Wakefield well explains: 'He sins against his own knowledge and conviction; therefore he cannot be reclaimed by any information of a teacher.'

14. The scope of this verse seems to be, to engraft upon the Christian duty enjoined in the last, a general admonition, further illustrative of ver. 8, as to works of benevolence in general; and the words may be rendered, 'And withal, let our people (meaning the Christians in Crete) learn to exercise themselves carefully in goodly actions (i. e. works of benevolence), for the supply of necessary wants, that they may not be unfruitful.' On the expression προΐστασθαι see Note supra v. 8. By καλὰ ἔργα must here be especially, if not solely, meant works of benevolence and charity; as appears from the context, and the very expression καλῶν ἔργων, occurring in a similar connexion at 1 Tim. vi. 18 and v. 10. Hebr. x. 24, and elsewhere. The next words seem intended to show what was meant by καλῶν ἔργων here, and in some degree to qualify what had been said; the sense being, for the supply of necessary wants. And that the ἐφόδια provided for travellers were sometimes so called, is plain from Acts xxviii. 10, καὶ ἀναγομένοις ἐπέθεντο τὰ πρὸς τὴν χρείαν. So that Theophylact (following Chrysostom) well explains by ἐφοδιάσαι, κήδεσθαι τῶν δεομένων, καὶ ἐν χρήμασι καὶ ἐν ῥήμασι· where, for ἐν ῥήμασι, read, as the sense requires, ἐνδύμασι. The words following suggest the reason why they should do this; namely, 'that they may not fail in rendering such fruit as Gospel principles require.'

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΦΙΛΗΜΟΝΑ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

1 [a] ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, δέσμιος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ a Eph. 3. 1. & 4. 1.
2 ἀδελφὸς, Φιλήμονι τῷ ἀγαπητῷ καὶ συνεργῷ ἡμῶν, [b] καὶ 2 Tim. 1. 8. b Rom. 16. 5.
Ἀπφίᾳ τῇ ἀγαπητῇ, καὶ Ἀρχίππῳ τῷ συστρατιώτῃ ἡμῶν, 1 Cor. 16. 19. Col. 4. 15, 17. Phil. 2. 25.
3 καὶ τῇ κατ᾽ οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησίᾳ· χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.
4 [c] Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου, πάντοτε μνείαν σου ποιούμε- c 1 Thess. 1. 2.
5 νος ἐπὶ τῶν προσευχῶν μου, [d] ἀκούων σου τὴν ἀγάπην καὶ 2 Thess. 1. 3. d Eph. 1. 15. Col. 1. 4. τὴν πίστιν, ἣν ἔχεις πρὸς τὸν Κύριον Ἰησοῦν καὶ εἰς πάν-6 τας τοὺς ἁγίους· [e] ὅπως ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεώς σου ἐνερ- e Rom. 12. 13.
γὴς γένηται ἐν ἐπιγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν, 2 Cor. 9. 13. James 2. 14, 17.
7 εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. [f] ‡ Χάριν γὰρ ἔχομεν πολλὴν καὶ f 2 Cor. 7. 4.

THIS Epistle is simply a brief letter written to reconcile a Colossian named Philemon to his slave Onesimus, who had absconded, and having come to Rome had been converted to the Christian faith, and baptized by St. Paul, with whom he stayed some time, attending upon him with the greatest fidelity. In order, however, to repair the injury he had done his master, he was anxious to return to him; and St. Paul wrote this letter to entreat Philemon to pardon his offence, and receive him again into his service; since he might now place entire confidence in him, as he was become a sincere Christian, and would conscientiously discharge his duties. Nay, in order to prevent all objection on the score of injury suffered, the warm-hearted Apostle offers to reimburse any loss he had sustained.

On the time and circumstances of the writing of the letter see Paley's Hor. Paul.; who proves it to have been written at the same period with the Epistle to the Colossians, and committed to the same person, who conveyed that, and no doubt this at the same time, to Colosse. The writer was yet in confinement, but is supposed to have been nearly at the end of his first imprisonment. It is impossible to read the letter without being much struck with the generosity of spirit which breathes throughout the whole, and the address and delicacy employed by the Apostle in accomplishing his benevolent purpose.

I. 1. δέσμιος Χ. Ἰ.] 'a prisoner for the sake of, or in the cause of, Jesus Christ;' see 2 Tim. i. 8, and Note. Συνεργῷ. Literally, 'helper [in the cause of the Gospel];' whether as Deacon, or preacher to the congregation assembling at his house, is uncertain.

2. Ἀπφίᾳ.] Said by the ancients to have been the wife of Philemon. Archippus, they tell us, was his son, and a Deacon in the Church.

6. ὅπως ἡ κοιν., &c.] The best Commentators are agreed that here προσευχόμενος is to be supplied from προσευχῶν at ver. 4, 'praying that.' Ἡ κοιν. τῆς πίστεώς σου. Render, 'thy communication or participation in the faith;' compare Tit. i. 4, and Jude 3. Ἐνεργὴς, 'effectual;' compare Gal. v. 6. Ἐν ἐπιγνώσει, for εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν. The sense of the clause is not quite certain, but it is probably (as Mr. Holden expresses), 'by leading you all to the knowledge that every good which you possess, or practise, is for, and redounds to, the honour and glory of Christ.' For the common reading ὑμῖν, many MSS., early Edd., and Fathers have ἡμῖν, which has been adopted by almost every Editor from Bengel to Scholz.

7. χάριν.] Some MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions have χαρὰν, which has been edited by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz; but, I think, without sufficient reason; since the external evidence for χαρὰν is very weak; the MSS. which support it being only 15, and all of the Western recension, and abounding in corrections. As to Versions, they are in a case of this kind no eviπαράκλησιν ἐπὶ τῇ ἀγάπῃ σου, ὅτι τὰ σπλάγχνα τῶν g 1 Thess. 2. 6. ἁγίων ἀναπέπαυται διὰ σοῦ, ἀδελφέ. [g] Διὸ, πολλὴν ἐν 8 Χριστῷ παῤῥησίαν ἔχων ἐπιτάσσειν σοι τὸ ἀνῆκον, διὰ 9 τὴν ἀγάπην μᾶλλον παρακαλῶ· τοιοῦτος ὢν ὡς Παῦλος h 1 Cor. 4. 15. Gal. 4. 19. Col. 4. 9. πρεσβύτης, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ δέσμιος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [h] Παρα- 10 καλῶ σε περὶ τοῦ ἐμοῦ τέκνου, ὃν ἐγέννησα ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, Ὀνήσιμον, (τὸν ποτέ σοι ἄχρηστον, νυνὶ δὲ σοὶ καὶ 11 ἐμοὶ εὔχρηστον,) ὃν ἀνέπεμψα· σὺ δὲ αὐτὸν, τουτέστι τὰ 12 ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα, προσλαβοῦ. Ὃν ἐγὼ ἐβουλόμην πρὸς 13 ἐμαυτὸν κατέχειν, ἵνα ὑπὲρ σοῦ διακονῇ μοι ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς i 2 Cor. 9. 7. τοῦ εὐαγγελίου· [i] χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης οὐδὲν ἠθέλησα 14 ποιῆσαι, ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ ἀνάγκην τὸ ἀγαθόν σου ᾖ, ἀλλὰ κατὰ ἑκούσιον. Τάχα γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο ἐχωρίσθη πρὸς ὥραν, 15

dence, and the authority of Fathers very slight. With respect to the internal evidence, it is decidedly in favour of χάριν, as being the more difficult reading. That it may have the sense gratification or pleasure is proved both from the examples adduced from the Classical writers (ex. gr. Eurip. Hel. 661, ἐμὰ δὲ δάκρυα—πλέον ἔχει χάριτος ἢ λύπης) and from 2 Cor. i. 15, where one MS. has χαρὰν, which is acknowledged to be a gloss. Why then may it not have that sense here? Indeed as the Greek Commentators explain χάριν by χαρὰν the thing is certain.

8, 9. διὸ] 'This being the case,' i. e. since you have shown so benevolent and liberal a spirit to Christians. Ἔχων παῤῥ. ἐν Χρ., i. e. 'such full authority as I might, by the authority of Christ and as his Apostle, use.' Of this sense of παῤῥησία (which seems required by the context) an example occurs in Joseph. Ant. xv. 6. 7, ἐπανῄει πόλιν εἰς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν πλείονι τιμῇ καὶ παῤῥησίᾳ. Of τὸ ἀνῆκον the meaning is, 'what is proper for you to do as a Christian.' Διὰ τὴν ἀγάπην. Meaning, it would seem, 'because of the love [which subsists between us].'

— πρεσβύτης.] Render, 'an old man.' There are (observes Heinrichs) three claims on which he grounds his request: 1. as being an Apostle to whom Philemon was indebted; 2. as being an old man (and to such we should be loth to refuse a request); 3. as being a prisoner in the cause of the Gospel, i. e. 'for the Gospel's sake.' On the use here of τοιοῦτος, Wetstein aptly compares Andocid. contr. Alcib., ὃ δὲ πάντων δεινότατόν ἐστι, τοιοῦτος ὢν, ὡς εὔνους τῷ δήμῳ τοὺς λόγους ποιεῖται.

10. ἐγέννησα] i. e. 'have converted to the Christian faith;' by a metaphor common both in the New Test. and the Rabbinical writers.

11. τὸν ποτέ σοι—εὔχρηστον.] On the admirable address shown in thus introducing the request to be made, see Benson. Ἄχρηστον is supposed to be used, per litoten, in the sense injurious; since from vv. 18, 19, it appears that he had robbed his master. See, however, the Note there, and also that on the expression ἀχρεῖος δοῦλος, Matt. xxv. 30.

12. τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα] i. e. 'whom I love as if it were myself, or my own son.' So the best Commentators explain, comparing Esth. vii. 3, and adducing several examples from the later Classical writers of σπλάγχνα in the sense son; to which may be added another from Soph. Antig. 1053. Nor is the idiom without parallel in our own language, in which the expression my heart is used of a person as an address of warm affection.

— προσλαβοῦ.] Meaning, 'take him to thy confidence and protection;' as Acts xxviii. 2.

13. ὃν ἐγὼ ἐβουλ. πρὸς ἐμ. κατέχ.] This is added to show the Apostle's decided opinion that he is now εὔχρηστος. Ὑπὲρ σοῦ is for ἀντὶ σοῦ, 'in thy stead,' meaning, 'as thou wouldst have done hadst thou been present.' Διακ. refers, not so much to the waiting on, as of a servant, but to the kind offices which a spiritual father had a right to expect from those whom he had begotten in the faith.

14. χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης] Literally, 'without thy consent [on the point].' The Classical writers in this sense use ἄνευ, in preference to χωρίς. So Herodian v. 1, ἐμοὶ δὲ σκοπὸς, μηδέν τι πράττειν ἄνευ τῆς ὑμετέρας γνώμης. Xenoph. Mem. iv. sub fin., ἄνευ τῆς τοῦ προτέρου δεσπότου γνώμης. Ἵνα μὴ ὡς κατὰ, &c., 'that the benefit [if you choose to give him up to me,] (or, as Benson explains, of pardoning and receiving him into favour,) may not be, as it were, compulsory, but voluntary.' This use of τὸ ἀγαθὸν is very rare, but examples have been adduced.

15. The Commentators remark on the euphemism in ἐχωρίσθη, which they render, 'was parted or separated from you;' and they suppose this meant to suggest the probability that the separation happened κατὰ θείαν οἰκονομίαν, by Divine Providence. 'There was,' observes Benson, 'no human intention on the part of Onesimus, or Paul, or Philemon, to accomplish an event which had led to much good; therefore Providence might probably be supposed to have brought it about for the good of Onesimus, and eventually of Philemon. Comp. Gen. xlv. 5. 1. 20. This could not indeed justify Onesimus's running away (Rom. iii. 8), but hence is magnified the gracious mercy of God, who had brought good out of evil.' Ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃς. Here there is, I conceive, a blending of two clauses into one, i. e. 'that thou mightest receive him back from me reformed, and thus to remain with thee for ever,'

16 ἵνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχῃς· οὐκέτι ὡς δοῦλον, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ δοῦλον, ἀδελφὸν ἀγαπητὸν, μάλιστα ἐμοὶ, πόσῳ δὲ μᾶλλον 17 σοὶ, καὶ ἐν σαρκὶ καὶ ἐν Κυρίῳ; Εἰ οὖν ἐμὲ ἔχεις κοινωνὸν, 18 προσλαβοῦ αὐτὸν ὡς ἐμέ. Εἰ δέ τι ἠδίκησέ σε ἢ ὀφείλει, 19 τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει. ἐγὼ Παῦλος ἔγραψα τῇ ἐμῇ χειρὶ, ἐγὼ ἀποτίσω· ἵνα μὴ λέγω σοι ὅτι καὶ σεαυτόν μοι προσ-20 οφείλεις. Ναὶ, ἀδελφὲ, ἐγώ σου ὀναίμην ἐν Κυρίῳ· ἀνά-21 παυσόν μου τὰ σπλάγχνα ἐν Κυρίῳ. [k] πεποιθὼς τῇ ὑπακοῇ 22 σου ἔγραψά σοι, εἰδὼς ὅτι καὶ ὑπὲρ ὃ λέγω ποιήσεις. [l] Ἅμα δὲ καὶ ἑτοίμαζέ μοι ξενίαν· ἐλπίζω γὰρ ὅτι διὰ τῶν προσ-23 ευχῶν ὑμῶν χαρισθήσομαι ὑμῖν. [m] Ἀσπάζονταί σε Ἐπαφρᾶς, 24 ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, Μάρκος, [n] Ἀρί-25 σταρχος, Δημᾶς, Λουκᾶς, οἱ συνεργοί μου. Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν.
ἀμήν.

Πρὸς Φιλήμονα ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης διὰ Ὀνησίμου οἰκέτου.

k 2 Cor. 7. 16.
l 2 Cor. 1. 11. Phil. 1. 25. & 2. 24. Heb. 13. 2. m Col. 1. 7. & 4. 12.
n Acts 12. 12, 25. & 15. 37. & 19. 29. & 20. 4. & 27. 2. Col. 4. 10, 14. 2 Tim. 4. 10, 11. 1 Pet. 5. 13.

or perpetually. This is not only meant indirectly to engage that he shall not run away again, but to suggest another and affecting consideration; 'for if,' as Dr. Burton observes, 'Onesimus had continued a heathen, Philemon might have had him as his servant for life, but after that they would have been separated; now they would be companions for ever, in this world and the next.'

18. εἰ δέ τι ἠδίκησέ σε ἢ ὀφείλει.] From these words many infer that Onesimus had been guilty of robbery, as well as desertion. But the recent Commentators seem right in thinking that the terms will scarcely authorise us to suppose this. Ἠδίκ. may apply to the having wronged his master, by depriving him of his services during his absence, or perhaps by idleness before. What is meant by ὀφείλει it is not easy to determine. It would certainly seem little applicable, with reference to any money Onesimus had robbed his master of. Benson and Heinrichs suppose that he had in some way contracted debts, which his master had been obliged to pay. Τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει. Literally, 'reckon that in the account between us as an item for me to pay.'

I would here compare that beautiful Epistolium of Agesilaus, preserved by Plutarch: Νικίαν, εἰ μὲν οὐκ ἀδικεῖ, ἄφες· εἰ δὲ ἀδικεῖ, ἡμῖν ἄφες· πάντως (at all events) δὲ ἄφες.

19. ἐγὼ Παῦλος ἔγρ. τ. ἐ. χ.] q. d. 'For greater certainty, take my engagement: I, Paul, [do hereby] write with my own hand, I will repay it.' So οἰκειόχειρος ἀσφάλεια in Pachym. vi. 26.

20. ναὶ—Κυρίῳ.] 'Do (נא), brother, grant that I may enjoy this from thee, as from a Christian' (i. e. as from thy conversion). Of the next clause, the sense seems to be, 'gratify my heart in this matter connected with the religion of Christ.' See Note supra v. 7.

For Κυρίῳ not a few ancient MSS., most of the early Versions, and many Fathers have Χριστῷ, which has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, and Scholz, but most uncritically; such being evidently a mere alteration of the Alexandrian critics, to remove tautology, and suggested by a similar expression at Phil. i. 8, ὡς ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγχνοις Ἰ. Χ. Moreover, Κυρίῳ is in exact accordance with the invariable usage of St. Paul, who often employs the phrase ἐν Κυρίῳ to signify 'in the work of the Lord and the Gospel' (as Rom. xvi. 8, 13. 1 Cor. iv. 17. ix. 2. Eph. vi. 21. 1 Thess. v. 12), never ἐν Χριστῷ.

ΠΑΥΛΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

Η ΠΡΟΣ

ΕΒΡΑΙΟΥΣ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

---

a Num. 12. 6, 8.

I. [a] ΠΟΛΥΜΕΡΩΣ καὶ πολυτρόπως πάλαι ὁ Θεὸς 1 λαλήσας τοῖς πατράσιν ἐν τοῖς προφήταις, ἐπ' * ἐσχάτου

We are now arrived at a Book, on the nature and character of which, and especially on the writer, there has been more discussion than on all of the other Books of the New Test., putting aside the Apocalypse. Here five points (all of them disputed) have especially to be attended to. 1. What may be considered the nature of this Book? Is it to be called an Epistle, or what? 2. To whom was it addressed? 3. In what language was it written? 4. By whom was it written? And, 5thly, What was the occasion of its being written, and what is the scope of its contents? Now, from the forms of salutation usually found in the Epistles being here wanting, some have doubted whether it can be regarded as an Epistle, sent to some one Christian community, or whether a Discourse on some important topics, intended for the instruction of Christian readers in general. But the objections to its claim to be regarded as an Epistle have been quite over-ruled; and by the able reasoning of some eminent Critics (especially Michaelis, Hug, and Prof. Stuart) it has been established that the composition in question, though it be without some of the usual characteristics of an Epistle, yet it is essentially an Epistle; i. e. is an address combined with dissertatory and argumentative matter, in order to give the appeal to the Jewish brethren greater effect;—though, for reasons adverted to by Stuart, not avowedly such. That it was meant especially for some Christian community in particular, is plain. Thus, for instance, we have the pronoun ye, and that in conjunction with some particular circumstances connected with the persons so addressed; and especially a visit is mentioned, as promised to them, and various salutations are sent.

As to the question to whom this Epistle (for such it must certainly be called) was addressed, it is inscribed to the Hebrews; though the learned are not agreed whether by those are to be understood Hebrews in general, Christian and non-Christian, or whether the former only; and if so, whether Hebrew Christians in Palestine, or in Asia Minor, or in Greece, or in Spain. These and other suppositions have been discussed at considerable length, and with great ability, by Prof. Stuart, from whose indefatigable researches it seems pretty certain that the opinion of the ancient Greek Church, adopted by Beza, Calvin, Hyper., Bp. Pearson, and nearly all the most eminent Critics up to the present day, is the one entitled most to reception,—namely, that the Epistle was principally intended for the Hebrew Christians in Palestine, who bore the appellation Hebrews by way of distinction from the Foreign Jews, who were called Hellenists. But whether it was meant for the Church or Churches of Palestine in general, or some Church in particular (as that of Jerusalem, or that of Cæsarea), must, I apprehend, after all that has been said, be left undecided; and probably it might, in some measure, (like the Epistle of St. James,) be meant for the Jewish Christians in foreign countries as well as those in Palestine, and was therefore written in Greek, though even on that point a difference of opinion exists. The Fathers of the Greek Church generally, some of the Latin (as Jerome and Augustine), and a few eminent modern Critics (as Michaelis and Bardt), maintain that it was originally written in Hebrew, and afterwards translated into Greek by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement of Rome; while the modern Critics and Commentators in general maintain that it was written in Greek. For the former opinion the chief reason alleged is, that, since the Epistle was addressed to Hebrew Christians, it was proper that it should be written in Hebrew. But surely there were, as we have seen, reasons why it would be as proper to be written in Greek. Those, on the other hand, who contend for the Greek original, establish their opinion on various points of internal evidence arising from the composition itself: 1. since the work has all the freedom and spirit of an original, and Hebraisms are in it not so frequent as in the Septuagint Version. 2. That Hebrew names are interpreted. 3. That the passages cited from the Old Test. are not quoted from the Hebrew, but from the Septuagint. These arguments, however, are not all of them equally cogent; for as to the first, can any work have more of the air of an original than Josephus's History of the Jewish War? And yet we know, from Josephus himself, that it was 2 τῶν ἡμερῶν τούτων ἐλάλησεν ἡμῖν ἐν Υἱῷ· [b] ὃν ἔθηκε κλη- b Ps. 2. 8. Matt. 21. 38.

3 ρονόμον πάντων, (δι᾽ οὗ καὶ τοὺς αἰῶνας ἐποίησεν·) [c] ὃς,—ὢν John 1. 3. Eph. 1. 10. & 3. 9.

Gal. 4. 4. Col. 1. 16. c Ps. 110. 1. Wisd. 7. 26. John 1. 4. & 14. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Col. 1. 15, 17. Phil. 2. 6. infra 8. 1. & 9. 12, &c. & 12. 2. Rev. 4. 11. Heb. 7. 27.

translated from a Hebrew original. It is further urged by Prof. Stuart against the existence of a Hebrew (i. e. Syro-Chaldee) original, that 'it would have been understood by comparatively few of Palestine, or, at least, only Jews, and consequently would be misrepresented to the unbelieving multitude, and especially the Gentiles; whereas, by writing in Greek, the author would both instruct his countrymen, and explain the nature of the Christian covenant to the Gentiles.' Of these arguments, however, the former takes too much for granted, and supposes a state of things of which it would be difficult to furnish any proof. At all events, those arguments only tend to show the expediency of a Greek, but do not disprove the expediency of a Hebrew original; and as the weight of historical testimony (in the Greek and early Latin Fathers) is most decidedly in favour of a Hebrew original, it would seem to be the best mode of reconciling conflicting testimony, of removing various difficulties (such as may be urged, whichsoever hypothesis, of a Greek or of a Hebrew original, be adopted), and accounting for various phenomena, to suppose that here (as in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel and Josephus's History of the Jewish War), there were, in a certain sense, two originals, both coming from the author himself, and therefore equally entitled to the name of an original. Nor will it be of much importance to ascertain which was first; but if we inquire which, in all probability, actually preceded, there are, I apprehend, as many reasons why we should here assign the priority to the Greek, as, in the case of St. Matthew's Gospel, we ought to the Hebrew—reasons founded on internal evidence, as supplied from the nature and state of the composition itself. Besides which, the Greek would be more likely to be first called for, and at all times would be of more extensive circulation and utility. As to supposing, with several ancient Critics, that the Greek was a translation formed from the Hebrew by St. Luke, or Barnabas, or Clement, such probably originated merely in report or surmise, or was perhaps suggested by the desire to account for the dissimilarity supposed to exist between the style and manner of this Epistle and those of the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul. It is probable that the Hebrew was formed either contemporaneously with, or a very short time after, the Greek, and was, we may suppose, drawn up for the especial use of those Palestine Jews who, being of the less educated class, or living in the country, did not understand Greek; though intended, I imagine, also for those Jews out of Palestine, who were called the Eastern Dispersion; i. e. those who sojourned in the parts beyond the Euphrates, as Mesopotamia, Babylonia, Media, Parthia, Elamitis, &c. Now these were not likely to understand Greek, but would probably have a tolerable knowledge of the Syro-Chaldee, into which the Old Testament was now, it is probable, already translated, as appears from the Targums (i. e. Chaldee Versions) of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel. And that St. Paul spoke, and consequently wrote the Syro-Chaldee, we know from Acts xxi. 40 (where he is said to have addressed his countrymen 'in the Hebrew tongue'). Now the existence of these Chaldee or Syro-Chaldee Versions, formed at or before this period, proves the existence of a very extensive class of persons, probably both in and out of Judæa,—i. e. of the Eastern Dispersion,—who did not understand Greek, and therefore could not read the Septuagint Version; which, indeed, was at first intended alone for the Foreign Jews of the Western Dispersion; though, from the circumstance of the Greek language becoming prevalent in Judæa, it at length proved useful to the educated class there. Thus by addressing his countrymen in both Greek and Hebrew, the writer certainly took the best method of making this address to his nation intelligible to all, whether in or out of Palestine. Thus we know that, in after times, in the fifteenth century, there was a Hebrew Version of this Epistle made for the use of those Jews, dispersed up and down, who were unacquainted with the Greek, and not very conversant with the Latin, or other languages of the Versions.

With respect to the date and canonical authority of the Epistle, the former is established by Prof. Stuart, from evidence of the most weighty kind, both external and internal; and the latter, by actual testimony the most decisive. That it was written while the Temple at Jerusalem and the Jewish state were yet in being, is plain from the work itself; and yet that it was written in the latter part of the Apostolic age, is evident from various intimations (see v. 12. x. 32. xiii. 7. 17); and the external evidence for its canonical authority is almost of equal strength, from its being found in the Pesch. Syr. Version, and from a chain of quotations and attestations from the early Fathers, Clement, Barnabas, and others down to the close of the second century; where, as Prof. Stuart observes, 'the question of the Canonical credit of the Epistle intermingles itself with the question whether St. Paul was the writer of the Epistle. And this naturally leads us to the most important, though, at the same time, the most difficult question connected with the Epistle—namely, Who was the writer? Now some have ascribed it to St. Luke, or Barnabas; others, to Clement of Rome, or Silvanus, or Apollos. However, the Christian Church in general has ever ascribed it to St. Paul. Indeed, as to Barnabas, Clement, Silvanus, Apollos, and Luke, there is no external authority whatever to prove any one of them to be the writer; and internal testimony is very slender, nay, as regards Luke and Clemens, quite adverse. Internal testimony is not wanting in favour of Apollos, but it only amounts to this—that if the matter depended wholly upon internal evidence, we might indeed say that there is nothing in the Epistle but what seems agreeable to the character and talents ascribed in the New Test. to Apollos. Yet this kind of evidence cannot be admitted where external evidence is entirely wanting (as is the case here), and where internal evidence of a still stronger kind may be alleged in proof of some other writer, and where external authority of the strongest kind is combined with that internal. And this leads us to advert to the evidence for the opinion which has

ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης καὶ χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, φέρων τε τὰ πάντα τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ,—δι' ἑαυτοῦ

generally prevailed in the Christian Church, that this Epistle was written by St. Paul. On so very extensive a question, to enter into details would be unsuitable to a work of this nature. I must therefore content myself with briefly adverting to the leading features of the evidence, external and internal, referring the reader for further particulars to the very elaborate and invaluable Introduction to his Translation and Notes on this Epistle by Prof. Stuart, or to the admirable summary of what has been written on this subject, by Mr. Horne, in his Introduction. Now the evidence FOR the Pauline origin is of two kinds,—external and internal. As to the external evidence, or historical testimony,—in the first place it seems adverted to as the production of St. Paul by St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, iii. 15, 16; for there is great reason to suppose that this Epistle was the one which St. Peter had chiefly in view. 2. The Epistle is found in the most ancient of the Versions, Eastern and Western; as, for instance, the Pesch. Syr., formed in the early part of the second century, and the early Latin Version called Italic, made a little after that period. 3. The testimony of Ecclesiastical antiquity is decidedly in favour of the Pauline origin; the Greek Fathers almost universally ascribing it to St. Paul, as also many of the most eminent of the Latin. How it came not to be received more generally, or earlier by the latter, is satisfactorily accounted for by Hug, Introd. vol. ii. p. 516—525. To sum up the matter in the words of Prof. Stuart (p. 119), 'the early testimony is, of course, immeasurably the most important; and there seems to be sufficient evidence that this was as general and uniform, for the first century after the Apostolic age, as in respect to many other Books of the New Test., and more so than in respect to several. So that it is apparent that the weight of evidence from tradition is altogether preponderant in favour of the opinion that Paul was the author of this Epistle.'

Let us now advert to internal evidence for the Pauline origin. I. Paul cherished a great affection for his kinsmen according to the flesh (Rom. ix. 1—4); and is it probable that he should never write to them, and endeavour to remove their prejudices and their unbelief? II. If a writer's method of treating his subject, together with his manner of reasoning, be a sure mark by which he may be recognized, then St. Paul must be allowed to be the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews; for, in the first place, the general arrangement or method pursued in this, corresponds with that found in the confessedly Pauline Epistles; and in the second, we here find that superabundance of meaning expressed in very few words, which distinguishes St. Paul from the other sacred writers; and 3dly, many things in this Epistle show its writer to have been not only mighty in the Scriptures, but perfectly conversant with the customs, practices, opinions, traditions, expositions, and applications of Scripture then received in the Jewish Church. III. Not only does the general scope of this Epistle tend to the same point on which St. Paul so much dilates in his Epistles (namely, that we are justified and saved alone through Jesus Christ, and that the Mosaic institutions cannot accomplish that); but there are various doctrinal propositions in this Epistle which are found in the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul; 1. As to the degree of religious knowledge imparted by the Gospel; 2. as to the views displayed in the Gospel concerning God the Father, and the communication of the gifts of the Holy Spirit; 3. concerning the person and mediatorial office of Christ. IV. There is such a similarity between the modes of quotation, and style of phraseology of this Epistle, and those which occur in the Epistles confessedly by St. Paul, as evince this to be his production: 1. modes of quotation and interpretation of some passages of the Hebrew Scriptures, which are peculiarly Pauline, because only to be found in the writings of St. Paul; 2. instances of coincidence in the style and phraseology: of these Schmidt, De Groot, and Stuart adduce a considerable number; add to this, that agonistic figures, which are frequent in St. Paul, are found in the Epistle to the Hebrews (xii. 1—3, 4, 12); 3. coincidences between the exhortations in this Epistle and those confessedly Pauline; 4. similarity of the conclusion of this Epistle to the conclusions of St. Paul's Epistles. V. There are several circumstances towards the close of this Epistle which prove that it was written by St. Paul; see xiii. 23, 24. x. 34. Now is it possible that these coincidences can be the effect of mere accident? Is it not, rather, far more probable that Paul was the writer of this Epistle?

The foregoing sketch presents the outlines of the argument on the internal evidence, adduced for the Pauline origin of the present Epistle. For the details themselves I must refer the reader to Professor Stuart, and content myself with offering a few remarks on the nature and weight of the above evidence. First, the evidence as regards the circumstances, is, in a few respects, inconclusive, and in all is not so strong as that deduced from similarity of doctrines, &c.; and yet even similarity of doctrines and method would not, of itself, be sufficient to prove this to be the production of St. Paul; for such are not inconsistent with its being from the pen of Apollos. The evidence arising from similarity of diction would seem likely to be decisive; but here it must be acknowledged that a considerable part of the passages adduced by the defenders of the Pauline origin are not sufficiently definite to absolutely prove coincidence; while a few passages that are so (as will be seen by the subsequent Annotations) have been inadvertently passed over. One thing, however, is certain, from the learned researches of De Groot, and especially Stuart, namely, that the points of similarity and coincidence are far more numerous than those of dissimilarity; though these last have been hunted out by the indefatigable diligence of a whole phalanx of German Critics for the last 50 years (especially Seyffarth), of which the summary may be seen in the Prolegomena of Kuinoel, and also, with strictures, in the Introduction of Professor Stuart. It must, however, after all, be confessed that the internal evidence for the καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν, ἐκάθισεν ἐν 4 δεξιᾷ τῆς μεγαλωσύνης ἐν ὑψηλοῖς· [d] τοσούτῳ κρείττων d Eph. 1. 21. Phil. 2. 9, 10.

Pauline origin is less strong than the external. It is, indeed, of the nature of all internal evidence in favour of the authenticity of any composition (I mean, that a work came from the pen of any certain writer) to be less satisfactory than that which is against it; for while, in the latter case, internal evidence may be so strong as to prove the point almost to demonstration, in the former case, it can rarely rise much beyond a high probability that the work was from the writer in question. And as no internal evidence can prove a book to be genuine, when external evidence is decidedly against it; so no internal evidence short of that strongest kind, proceeding from what involves anachronism, can prove a work to be spurious, or not written by any author, when external testimony decidedly attests that it was. Yet, sometimes, internal evidence that a composition is by a certain writer, may, if his style, manner, and cast of thought be very peculiar, prove so strong, that a person possessed of a true taste and correct judgment may feel such a persuasion that the composition is by that writer, as to rise to what he thinks certainty. Here, however, we have to encounter the perplexing fact, that while the cast of thought and modes of reasoning are decidedly Pauline, yet the colourings of style, and especially the composition of the sentences, are not so; though that difference may be partly attributable to the difference of subject in this Epistle, which was intended as a treatise rather than an hortatory letter; and being didactic, would consequently be written with far greater deliberation than most of the Epistles confessedly Pauline appear to have been, and would have more of the finish of style and composition than those. At all events, the coincidence in the former particular is of by far the most importance; and I must say that the feeling of my own mind as to the composition now in question, after repeated and most attentive examinations of its contents, is that none but St. Paul could have written it, and consequently that none but St. Paul did write it. That he did, is highly probable; for in it we have all the peculiar and prominent features of St. Paul's style and manner,—the same method of treating his subject, the same fulness of thought, the same devotional spirit, the same warmth of feeling, and the same energy of expression, which characterize his other Epistles. Can all this be the case, and yet the Epistle be not by St. Paul?

But if so satisfactory be the proof as to its Pauline origin, how, it may be asked, comes it to pass that learned Continental Critics for the last half century have almost unanimously rejected it? To this I reply, that the wonder is much lessened by considering the strong bias of the persons in question against old established opinions. Of course they take their stand on the internal evidence, founding thereupon various objections, though for the most part exceedingly frivolous. These have been examined at considerable length by Professor Stuart, and satisfactorily refuted; for the details I must refer the reader to his elaborate Exposé, contenting myself with adducing one or two remarks. All the Critics, who contend against the Pauline origin, rest their proof chiefly on the allegation, that the Greek of this Epistle is so much superior to that of the Epistles admitted to be by St. Paul, that the composition in question cannot have been his. Now nothing can be more fallacious than such a kind of reasoning. And, moreover, the fact may be confidently denied. After a study of the Greek language as diligent, and an acquaintance with its writers, of every age, probably as extensive as any person, at least of my own country, now living, I must maintain my decided opinion that the Greek is, except as regards the structure of the sentences, NOT so decidedly superior to the Greek of St. Paul, as to make it even improbable that the Epistle was written by him. To prove this would here be out of place, and indeed were agere actum, since the Section of Professor Stuart on the Hebraisms and non-conformations to Classical usage, in this Epistle, may suffice to decide that point. At all events, it is certain that, though arguments drawn from the style and diction of the Epistle to the Hebrews, as compared with those of the Epistles admitted to be written by St. Paul, would not of themselves be enough to prove the Pauline origin; so, on the other hand, the same kind of arguments, if even far stronger than they are, never can decide the Epistle to be not written by St. Paul. And this latter needs the aid of external and historical evidence even more than the former. Yet the historical evidence against is very slight compared with that for the Pauline origin; and the historical testimony that does exist against it is, as Stuart shows, of a nature which is grounded more on taste and feeling than on solid testimony. In short, external and historical testimony ought here to decide what internal evidence might leave dubious; nor ought we to hesitate, except on the surest grounds (and we see there are none), to suppose that the opinion handed down by ancient tradition (preserved in the Church to the time of Origen) is well founded; namely, that the Epistle was written by St. Paul. Indeed, it is worthy of remark, that those who bring themselves to be of opinion that the Epistle was not written by St. Paul, are quite unsuccessful in showing who was the author; for objections of the most serious kind lie against any name that has been or can be brought forward, as has been shown at large by Professor Stuart. That it was written by Barnabas, or by St. Luke, there is not a shadow of evidence; for Clemens Romanus or Silvanus, the evidence is very slight; and for Apollos, the external or historical evidence is next to nothing; and the internal only such as to induce us to grant that he might be the writer, if historical testimony would allow it; but it does not. And one cannot imagine that, if Apollos had been the writer, all attestation to the fact would have been thus wholly lost. It is plain, therefore, that this, as well as the preceding hypothesis, is utterly untenable. Of this, indeed, Seyffarth and Kuinoel are quite aware; yet, sooner than admit the Pauline origin, they have devised another hypothesis even less admissible than the above,—namely, that the Epistle was written by an anonymous Alexandrian Jew. But what can be imagined more improbable than that the work of an anonymous writer, and an obscure person, should, in the space of 30 years after it was writ-γενόμενος τῶν ἀγγέλων, ὅσῳ διαφορώτερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν ὄνομα. [e] Τίνι γὰρ εἶπέ ποτε τῶν ἀγγέλων· 5

e 2 Sam. 7. 14. 1 Chron. 22. 10. & 28. 6. Psal. 2. 7. Acts 13. 33. infra 5. 5.

ten (the time of Clement of Rome, who appeals to it as a book of Divine authority), or soon after, when the Pesch. Syr. Version was formed, have come to be regarded as an inspired work, and received into the Canon of Scripture, though no works had been admitted to a place there, but such as were confessedly written by Apostles? This argument, indeed, holds good, more or less, of Clemens, Sylvanus, and Apollos, but much more of an anonymous writer. Besides, as the writer evidently was well known to those whom he especially addressed, how could it happen that he should not be more generally known? On the other hand, the almost general persuasion in the earliest age that the Epistle was written by St. Paul can hardly be accounted for, except on the supposition that it was. Indeed (to use the words of Professor Stuart), 'if Paul did not write it, who did? And what is to be gained by endeavouring to show the possibility that some other person wrote it, when so many circumstances unite in favour of the general voice of the primitive ages, that this Apostle was the author? That the Church, during the first century of the apostolic age, ascribed it to some one of the Apostles, is clear, from the fact that it was inserted among the canonical books of the Churches in the East and the West; that it was comprised in the Peschito, in the old Latin Version, and was certainly admitted by the Alexandrian and Palestine Churches? Now what Apostle did write it, if Paul did not? Surely neither John, nor Peter, nor James, nor Jude. The difference of style is too striking between their Epistles and this, to admit of such a supposition. But what other Apostle, except Paul, was distinguished in the ancient Church as a writer? None; and the conclusion, therefore, seems to be altogether a probable one, that he was the writer. Why should all the circumstances which speak for him be construed as relating to some unknown writer? Are the sentiments unworthy of him? Are they opposed to what he has inculcated? Do they differ from what he has taught? By no means. Why not then admit the probability that he was the author? Nay, why not admit that the probability is as great as the nature of the case (the Epistle being anonymous) could be expected to afford? Why should there be any more objection to Paul, as the author of this Epistle, than to any other man?' I must, therefore, conclude by entirely acquiescing (with Professor Stuart) in the opinion of Origen (which certainly attests the persuasion to have been of the highest antiquity), that 'it is not without reason that the ancients have handed down to us, that this Epistle is St. Paul's.'

It is truly observed by Dr. Pye Smith, in the last edition of his Scripture Test., vol. i. 310, that Dr. Owen, Mr. Pierce, Dr. Lardner, and Professor Stuart have satisfactorily settled the question in the affirmative, and have advanced arguments which make it amount almost to a certainty, that St. Paul was the author. 'Even (he adds) the Patriarch of the Antisupernaturalists, Dr. Paulus, who has shot so many daring bolts of infidelity and impiety in his numerous writings, has now declared himself convinced that St. Paul was the author of this Epistle.'

To advert briefly to the scope and contents of the Epistle (which cannot better be expressed than in the words of Mr. Horne): 'Its great object is to show the Deity of Jesus Christ, and the excellency of his Gospel, when compared with the institutions of Moses; to prevent the Hebrews or Jewish converts from relapsing into those rites and ceremonies which were now abolished; and to point out their total insufficiency, as means of reconciliation and atonement. The reasonings are interspersed with numerous solemn and affectionate warnings and exhortations, addressed to different descriptions of persons. At length St. Paul shows the nature, efficacy, and triumph of faith, by which all the saints in former ages had been accepted by God, and enabled to obey, suffer, and perform exploits in defence of their holy religion; from which he takes occasion to exhort them to stedfastness and perseverance in the true faith.'

I. The general design of the writer being so to commend Christianity to those whom he addressed, as to confirm them in their adherence thereto, or induce them to embrace it, if they had not yet done so, he commences his discourse by raising in their minds the highest conceptions of Jesus Christ, as the Author of that new revelation which God had made to man (ver. 1). He then points out the dignity of His office and person, as Lord of the world, which was created by Him (ver. 2); representing him as being the true image of God, the representative to men of His glory, and accordingly endowed with sovereign power (ver. 3); that, as Mediator of the new Dispensation, he is exalted far above the angels, who were the mediators of the old covenant; that in his name SON, he has an appellation far more exalted than theirs (vv. 4, 5); nay, that he is the object of worship to the angels, while they are only God's messengers (vv. 6, 7). That in his quality of King and Messiah he has an eternal dominion; and is elevated by his love of righteousness to an honour above all other kings (vv. 8, 9), being, indeed, addressed in Scripture as Creator of the Universe, immutable, imperishable (vv. 10—12); an exaltation never ascribed to angels (ver. 13), who are only considered as agents employed for the good of those who are to attain to the salvation which Christ enforces (ver. 14).

1. πολυμέρως καὶ πολυτρόπως.] Expositors are not agreed whether these words should be kept distinct in sense, or be connected, as synonymous, and designating, by intensity, the great variety of the ancient revelations; q. d. as Kypke explains, 'per varias personas, variis legibus et doctrinis, sub variis umbris ac typis, figuris variis ac revelandis modis.' This latter view would seem confirmed by certain passages adduced from Maxim. Tyr., and Philo, where we have πολυμέρως καὶ πολυτρόπως and πολυμεροῦς καὶ πολυτρόπου. Yet thus the difficulty is merely shifted, not done away; for there the terms surely admit of being kept distinct in sense, and they are best kept distinct here. But πολυμέρως cannot mean, as many explain, 'at various times.' Its most probable sense is, 'in sundry or diverse parts;' the diverse disclosures in question being, as Dr. Henderson (Lect. on Insp.) observes, 'effected not only in various parts or portions, according to the various exigencies of the Church, —a considerable period of time frequently intervening between them;—but being furnished by means or in ways greatly differing from each other.' In πολυτρόπως we have, as Dr. Henderson says, expressed the idea of multiplicity as well as diversity; the term being meant to denote the various modes of Divine revelation, by dreams, visions, symbols, Urim and Thummim, and prophetic ecstasy.

Υἱός μου εἶ σύ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε; καὶ πάλιν· Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, καὶ αὐτὸς

— πάλαι] 'in ancient times.' For 400 years had elapsed since the time of the latest of the writers of the Book which composed the Revelation of God, according to the Old Dispensation. Λαλεῖν properly denotes immediate oral communication, but sometimes, as here, communication made in any other way,—by visions, supernatural impulses, or such like; and not to the persons themselves, but through the medium of others. Ἐν stands here for διά; an Hellenistic idiom. Προφ. here, as often, denotes those who communicate the Divine will. Instead of the common reading ἐσχάτων, very many MSS., early Editions, and Fathers have ἐσχάτου, which has been adopted by every Editor of Note from Mill to Vater and Scholz; and with reason; especially as it is confirmed by the occurrence of the very expression in the Sept. at Numb. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xxxviii. 16. Jerem. xxiii. 20; though ἐσχάτων elsewhere occurs. Moreover, ἐσχάτου is to be preferred, as being the more difficult reading. With respect to the sense of the expression ἐπ' ἐσχάτου, it generally imports, 'at some future time' more or less remote, according to the context and scope of the passage. When the times of the Messiah are spoken of, the expressions ἔσχαται ἡμέραι, ἔσχατος καιρὸς, or χρόνος, and τὸ ἔσχατον τῶν ἡμερῶν, mean the last times; since then an end would be put to the Mosaic Dispensation by the coming of the Messiah. Thus the expression ἔσχ. ἡμ. was occasionally applied by the Apostles to denote the time shortly previous to the advent of Christ to judgment at the end of the world. Sometimes, however, it was employed to denote the period of the Gospel, the last dispensation of God, even that of Jesus Christ in the Gospel. And such seems to be its import here.

— ἐν Υἱῷ.] This use of Υἱῷ without the Article does not, as Professor Stuart imagines, tend to invalidate Bp. Middleton's theory of the Greek Article. In a Note on Matt. i. 1, and iv. 3, he shows that, by a licence arising out of the nature of Θεὸς, we may write either ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, or Υἱὸς Θεοῦ; but he has, I believe, no where noticed the peculiar usage before us of Υἱὸς for Υἱὸς Θεοῦ, which is indeed exceedingly rare, yet again occurs at vii. 28, and v. 8. Had he done so, however, he would have found no difficulty in reconciling it with his theory; since he would have seen that Υἱὸς may, in this use, be considered (like Χριστὸς put for ὁ Χριστὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ) as an appellation converted into a sort of proper name, and consequently entitled to the same licence, which we find to be the case in Χριστός; very rarely, indeed, in the Gospels and Acts, but frequently in the Epistles. Moreover, it is probable that at Υἱῷ in this verse, and κληρονόμον in the next, the writer had in view the words of our Lord in the parable, Matt. xxi. 37, ὕστερον δὲ ἀπέστειλε πρὸς αὐτοὺς τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ.

2. ἔθηκε] for κατέστησε, as in Acts xiii. 47. 1 Thess. v. 9. 1 Tim. i. 12, which use is also found in the Hebrew שום. Yet the idiom is not merely Hellenistic, being sometimes found in the Classical writers; ex. gr. Herodian, iv. 7. 10, θέμενος αὐτὸν υἱὸν, καὶ κοινωνὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς.

— κληρονόμον.] The best Expositors are agreed that the word is here used in the sense Lord, or Possessor, as at Gal. iv. 1, the Son is said to be κύριος πάντων. And Christ is so called at Acts x. 36. See also ii. 36. This Prof. Stuart supposes to be a Hebraism, formed from ירש; but the idiom seems rather formed from the use of the Latin hæres for dominus, the heir being called herus minor. Still to render it 'Lord' is objectionable; since the expression in question was used for κύριος, to hint at something further. See Theophylact. Of κληρονόμος πάντων the full sense is, 'Lord of all things in the world by inheritance,' in virtue of his Sonship just mentioned. So κληρονόμος κόσμου is used at Rom. iv. 13. Compare v. 3. Bp. Bull, Jud. Cath. Eccl. ch. v. § 8, p. 42, well remarks, 'Non ibi dicitur Christus Dei Filius, nedum unigenitus, quòd hæres omnium constitutus fuit; sed contrà is hæres factus dicitur, qui prius Filius fuit, idque Filius, per quem Deus Pater sæcula condiderat, quique adeo ante sæcula fuit.'

— δι' οὗ.] Here Kuinoel justly rejects the Version of Grotius and others, 'on account of whom;' since δι' οὗ and δι' ὃν are no where confounded, but kept distinct, in this Epistle. Indeed the sense thus arising would be inapposite, and the thing asserted be contradictory to what is said repeatedly in the New Test., as John i. 3. 1 Cor. viii. 6. Eph. iii. 9. Col. i. 16, 17; from which it appears that the words must be understood of a physical or efficient creation by Christ, as all the ancient Fathers are agreed. So Justin Martyr has ᾧ τοὺς οὐρανοὺς ἔκτισε. By τοὺς αἰῶνας is meant (as at xi. 3, and perhaps 1 Tim. i. 17) 'the whole system of creation, the material universe' (as, indeed, the Pesch. Syr. Translator renders), comprehending all created things in the heavens and on earth, corporeal and incorporeal, and thus answering to the πάντα of John i. 3. This sense of αἰὼν (found also at Wisd. iv. 2. xiii. 9. xiv. 6) is confined to the plural, being formed by the Alexandrian Jews on the Hebr. עולמים. So Bp. Bull, Jud. Cath. Eccl. ch. v. p. 42, remarks that the expression רב העולמים is frequent in the Jewish Liturgy, with allusion to the three Æons, or worlds, 1. the עולם השפל, or lower world, the region of the elements; 2. the עולם התיכון, the middle world, or region of the air; 3. the עולם העליון, the upper world; namely, the f Ps. 97. 7. Rom. 8. 29. Col. 1. 18. ἔσται μοι εἰς υἱόν; f Ὅταν δὲ πάλιν εἰσαγάγῃ τὸν 6 Πρωτότοκον εἰς τὴν οἰκουμένην, λέγει· Καὶ προσκυνη-abode of God and the angels, which St. Paul at 2 Cor. xii. 2 calls 'the third heaven.'

3. ἀπαύγασμα — ὑποστάσ.] Render, 'the effulgence of his glory, and the exact image of his substance or essence.' Δόξα corresponds to the Hebr. כבוד, and, like it, is used especially of the Divine Majesty of the Deity. And thus the sense here intended is, as Dr. Pye Smith explains, that 'the Redeemer is the true and proper representative of the Infinite Perfection of the Deity;' intimating that he is that to the Divine Father, which the solar light incident on our world is to the same light as the source of its emanation.' The term ἀπαύγασμα (which signifies literally off-shining) denotes properly the light reflected from a lucid body (and thus the sense might be, as Hammond explains, 'who being the means of reflecting to us the sight of Him who is otherwise invisible.' See John i. 18); but it is here used figuratively, in the sense of εἰκών. So Philo, vol. i. p. 337, has τὸ δὲ ἁγίασμα (the Sanctuary) οἷον ἁγίων ἀπαύγασμα, μίμημα ἀρχετύπου, meaning that the one was a perfect likeness of the other. See Note on Matt. xvii. 2.

— Χαρακτὴρ, from χαράσσω, sculpo, properly signifies the die, or stamping-stool, used in coining, by which the figure to be expressed is stamped; also the impression made by a seal; being thus synonymous with σφραγίς: and as such cannot but be an exact representation of the die or seal, so the word came to denote an exact and perfect resemblance, or counterpart; of which some examples are adduced from Aristotle, Plato, and Philo. Thus it is a stronger term than εἰκών; with which, however, it is in use synonymous. So at 2 Cor. iv. 4, and Col. i. 15, Christ is called εἰκὼν τοῦ ἀοράτου Θεοῦ. Ὑπόστασις signifies, not person (a sense of the word unknown until after the Arian controversy, in the fourth century), but substance, or essence; i. e. being, equivalent to ὕπαρξις: a sense supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. and Vulgate Versions. And thus χαρ. τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ may be rendered (as it is done by Ernesti), 'the perfect expression of the Divine Nature and Essence;' or, as Dr. Pye Smith explains, 'the exact impression of his manner of existence.' It is meant, then, that 'the glory of the Father was reflected on the Son, and the ὑπόστασις of the Father was impressed on the Son; so that the Son represented it, as an impression represents the seal, forming a perfect representation of God's person and attributes;' i. e. of the perfections subsisting, or existing in God. The idea was probably suggested by a similar one at Wisd. vii. 26, where Wisdom is said to be an efflux from God's glory, an ἀπαύγασμα φωτὸς ἀϊδίου, ἔσοπτρον τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐνεργείας, καὶ εἰκὼν τῆς ἀγαθότητος αὐτοῦ.

— φέρων τὰ πάντα, &c.] Φέρων is rendered by Newcome, 'ruling,' by Stuart, 'controlling;' but I prefer our common version upholding, or supporting, which is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, Theophylact, and almost all the early modern Expositors. So Bp. Hall explains, 'giving support, maintenance, power, and preservation to all things that he hath made.' Similarly it is said, Ps. lxxv. 3, 'I bear up the pillars of it (i. e. the earth).' Thus the expression is equivalent to ἀναφέρων, which term involves an adjunct notion of regulating as well as supporting, just as the Hebrew נשא signifies both to preserve and to govern. Indeed such seems to have been the reading (or at least an interlineary var. lect.) of the original from which the Vatican MS. B. was copied; for as to the reading φανερῶν, it is evidently a mere error of the copyist. Of course ἀναφέρων was no more than a gloss, though highly deserving of attention, as indicating the sense assigned to φέρων in the earliest ages.

Thus the doctrine here taught is quite in accordance with that at Col. i. 17, τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκε, where we have ascribed to Christ the sustentation of the universe, natural and moral, in their being, action, order, and determination to their proper end.

— τῷ ῥήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ.] This is, by Hebraism, for τῷ ῥήματι δυνατῷ, 'by his powerful fiat;' the words דבר and ῥῆμα being often used in the Old Test. of the fiat of Omnipotence, conveying, as Dr. Pye Smith remarks, the idea that he does not sustain the world with effort, but by his simple volition. See Gen. i. 3, and Ps. xxxiii. 6, 9. By 'all things' are evidently meant the subjects of the possession or dominion just before spoken of; namely, the natural universe.

— καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμ.] Equivalent to ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας, infra ii. 17, and ποιεῖν λύτρωσιν at Luke i. 68. Render, 'having made expiation for our sins.' Δι' ἑαυτοῦ is equivalent to διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ, as in ix. 12. 26. ii. 14, implying, 'not by the blood of victims.' It is a brief expression, for the more fully developed διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος at ix. 12. See also ii. 14.

— ἐκάθισε.] Supply ἑαυτὸν, 'seated himself.' Τῆς μεγαλωσύνης, scil. τοῦ Θεοῦ. Meaning (by the use of abstract for concrete) the Almighty. So in the Book of Enoch we have ἐνώπιον τῆς δόξης τῆς μεγαλώσυνης. Ἐν ὑψηλοῖς is equivalent to ἐν ἐπουρανίοις in a similar passage of Eph. i. 20.

4. 'Postquam Christum Mosi et reliquis omnibus prætulit, nunc angelis etiam comparando gloriam ejus magis amplificat.' (Calvin.)

— τ. κρείττων γενόμενος τῶν ἀγγ.] Render, 'being so much superior in rank to the angels.' From the examples cited by the Commentators, it appears that κρείττων was used, in an august sense, of the gods and demigods of the heathens. Διαφορώτερον, for ὑψηλ. The term is often used in the later Greek writers in the sense of κρεῖττον. This particular use of παρὰ after comparatives (answering to the Heb. מ, the Latin præ, and the English than) is found both in the Sept. and the Classical writers. The word derives this force of comparison from its original sense of 'by the side of,' juxta-position implying comparison. Ὄνομα. Many modern Commentators assign to the word the sense dignity; but the ancients, and the generality of moderns, 'name,' or title, of Son, which is preferable; for (as Kuinoel and Stuart observe) 'the argument in the sequel shows that the title Son is the ground on which the superiority over the angels

7 σάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ. Καὶ πρὸς [g Ps. 104. 4.] μὲν τοὺς ἀγγέλους λέγει· Ὁ ποιῶν τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐis proved.' Now none but Christ is ever called the Son of God.

5. In confirmation of the above, an argument is adduced from the Old Test., formed on two passages of it (Ps. ii. 7, and 2 Sam. vii. 14), which have been in every age referred, by even the best Jewish Interpreters, to the MESSIAH, at least in their mystical and sublimer import; for in such a sense as is inherent in these passages (namely, one that denotes supreme dominion and authority), neither angels nor men were called sons of God. The force of the argument lies in υἱός μου and γεγέννηκα; but, as Mr. Holden remarks, 'in whatever way this may be referred to Christ's human nature, it can be no ground for such pre-eminence; and consequently this filiation must be applicable to him in his Divine nature, or the Apostle reasons fallaciously.' The expression σήμερον γεγέννηκα is usually understood of the eternal generation of the Son of God; q. d. 'Whereas the angels are created, he is begotten,' i. e. holds the dignity he possesses by an eternal generation. But it does not appear how σήμερον can ever denote 'from eternity.' By Chrysostom and Theophylact it is referred definitely to time, and the best Expositors have always so understood it, though they are not agreed whether by that time is denoted the period of our Lord's incarnation, or of his exaltation (as regards his human nature) to his mediatorial throne after his resurrection. The latter view, however, is decidedly preferable; on which see Stuart, especially in his Excurs. v.

— ἐγὼ ἔσομαι—εἰς υἱόν.] This was said primarily of Solomon, though there are certain particulars which cannot apply to him. Εἰς πατέρα is a literal version of the Heb. לו לאב, though purity of Greek idiom would require πατὴρ αὐτοῦ.

6. 'Nunc alia ratione Christum supra angelos attollit, quia jubeantur angeli ipsum adorare. Sequitur enim, ipsorum esse caput ac principem.' (Calvin.)

— ὅταν δὲ πάλιν εἰσαγάγῃ, &c.] The difficulty in this verse mainly rests on the expressions πάλιν and εἰσαγάγῃ. Here, if necessary, we may, with Rosenmuller, suppose a transposition of the words, for πάλιν δὲ ὅταν, as often in the Scriptural and Classical writers. Stuart, indeed, contends that there is no transposition, and he takes δὲ πάλιν to mean, 'Again, also, when he,' &c.; but the words δὲ and πάλιν do not, properly speaking, belong to each other; the δὲ belonging to ὅταν εἰσαγ., and the πάλιν (if it have the same sense as in the former verse) to λέγων taken from λέγει, or εἰπὼν taken from εἶπε just before. Thus the literal sense is, 'And when, speaking in another place, he introduces,' &c. The expression εἰσαγ. has been variously interpreted, but there is no sufficient reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned; namely, of 'ushering, as it were, into the world' (namely, by the predictions and prophecies of Scripture) the advent of the First-begotten; of which sense of the word several examples have been adduced. It would seem that the term εἰσάγειν was used by the writer, from his having in mind not so much the idea of GOD, to which the preceding context points, as the holy Prophet speaking under Divine inspiration. That the Psalmist is intended at vv. 7, 8, is, I think, clear; and this is better than supposing (with many eminent Commentators) that the Scripture is meant.

— τὸν Πρωτότοκον.] Render, 'the First-begotten,' or 'First-born.' For this, as appears from Ps. lxxxix. 27, compared with Rom. viii. 29, was a title of the Messiah; and when the force of the metaphor is duly weighed (on which see Schoettgen and Kuinoel), it will be found to mean the Lord of men and angels; or, as the Apostle at Col. i. 15 more fully expresses it, πρωτότοκον πάσης κτίσεως, where see Note. The words following are taken from Ps. xcvi. 7, according to the LXX., who have rendered אלהים by ἄγγελοι, though modern Interpreters take it to mean the false gods of the heathen. The word is, however, as Kuinoel remarks, used in the former sense at Gen. xxxv. 7. Ps. lxxxii. 1, which would be very suitable to the context and the intent of the Psalmist here; for it is admitted by Kimchi that 'this Psalm, as well as all from xciii. to ci., relates to the mystery of the Messiah.' Θεοῦ, however, was supplied by the Sept. Translators, to make the sense clearer, though the use of the Article with ἄγγελος would have answered the purpose as well. The argument of inferiority deduced from any one's worshipping another, is irrefragable. Of course it is implied how supremely great must that Person be whom the very angels are to reverently bow before. Comp. Phil. ii. 10.

In this sublime passage, then, we have something truly august and exalted. 'We observe (says Dr. P. Smith, Script. Test., vol. iii. p. 255) the Almighty Father speaking by the voices and writings of his holy prophets, and by the course of his providence as it unfolds his eternal decrees; making known to principalities and powers in the heavenly places his counsels of righteousness and mercy; "introducing" to the admiration and praises of all holy intelligences Him who is the great Effector of those counsels, the Surety of the everlasting covenant, the Only-begotten, the Brightness of his glory, and the Express Image of his Essence, when about to clothe himself in the likeness of sinful and suffering flesh; and thus by act and authority saying to those loyal and delighted beings, "Worship HIM, all ye gods!"'

7. To further prove this inferiority of the angels to Christ, certain passages are now adduced from the Psalms, in which they are called ministers, but Christ KING supreme and perpetual (Kuinoel); and that for the purpose of contrasting the angels, as servants, with Christ as a King.

— πρὸς μέν, &c.] 'as regards,' 'in reference to.' The words following are from Ps. civ. 4 (Sept.), though for πυρὸς φλόγα we have there πῦρ φλέγον· which, however, will not prove that the Apostle, as Kuinoel supposes, quoted from memory; but only that he gave another version to אש להט, and that so similar to the version of Symmachus, that it is not improbable some copies of the Sept. (or other Greek Versions) might then have the rendering assigned by the writer. Indeed, such is found in many of the τοῦ πνεύματα, καὶ τοὺς λειτουργοὺς αὐτοῦ πυρὸς h Ps. 45. 6. φλόγα· [h] πρὸς δὲ τὸν Υἱόν· Ὁ θρόνος σου, ὁ Θεὸς, 8 εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ αἰῶνος· ῥάβδος εὐθύτητος, ἡ i Is. 61. 1. Acts 10. 38. ῥάβδος τῆς βασιλείας σου. [i] ἠγάπησας δικαιο- 9 σύνην, καὶ ἐμίσησας ἀνομίαν· διὰ τοῦτο ἔχρισέ σε ὁ Θεὸς, ὁ Θεός σου, ἔλαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως παρὰ k Ps. 102. 25. τοὺς μετόχους σου. [k] Καί· Σὺ κατ' ἀρχὰς, Κύριε, 10 best MSS. of the Sept. It has been doubted whether the subject here be contained in πνεύματα and πυρὸς φλόγα, or in τοὺς ἀγγ. and τοὺς λειτουργούς. Many eminent Expositors adopt the latter view, rendering, 'who maketh the winds his messengers, and flames of fire his ministers.' This interpretation, however, Bp. Middleton thinks, would require the Article at πνεύμ. and πυρὸς φλόγα; and though it be very agreeable to the context of the Psalm, yet that of the Epistle requires the first-mentioned construction, which is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac Version. And Professor Stuart thinks the Hebrew words admit of no other construction. It has also been disputed whether πνεύματα should be rendered 'spirits,' or 'winds.' Now Bp. Middleton's criticism would necessarily exclude the latter sense, and consequently oblige us to adopt the former. Considering, however, the licence, throughout St. Paul's writings, with respect to the omission of the Article where it can conveniently be omitted, such a principle may be regarded as precarious; and the question must be determined solely by the comparative fitness of the two senses. That of 'spirits' is contrary to the use in the Psalm, and is at variance with the other member of the Parallelism; 'since (as Carpzov observes) there can be no comparison between an intelligent ens and what is not intelligent.' Indeed, the best Commentators have been long agreed in rejecting that interpretation. The sense 'winds' or 'the winds' is doubtless the true one. And though here again the words are susceptible of more than one sense, yet (as Kuinoel and Stuart have shown) the only one suitable to the context is as follows: 'Who employs his angels as winds, and his ministering servants as lightnings;' q. d. 'Angels not less than the winds and lightnings obey his fiat. As he employs the winds and lightnings as instruments of his will, so does he the angels as his agents.' In like manner, Xenophon, de Mem. iv. 3. 14, speaks of the winds and lightning as ὑπηρέται τῶν θεῶν.

8. πρὸς δὲ τὸν Υἱόν.] Render, not 'unto' the Son, but 'respecting,' a version adopted by the best Commentators, and supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Δὲ here is equivalent to ἀλλὰ, contra. Ὁ Θεός. Nominative for Vocative, as elsewhere in the New Testament, and generally throughout the Sept. This clearly ascribes Divinity to the Son, agreeably to the Prophet Isaiah, ix. 6, 'His Name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God,' &c. By throne, as Ernesti and Bp. Horsley have shown, must be meant, as is evident from what follows, 'the kingdom of God-man.'

By the best Jewish Commentators the Psalm from which this passage is quoted is admitted to relate, at least in a secondary sense, to the Messiah. And Bp. Horsley (in loco) has shown that the passage is here with the greatest propriety applied to Christ, and made an argument of his Divinity, not by any forced accommodation of the words, but according to the true intent of the Psalmist, and the literal and only consistent exposition of his words. See also Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test., vol. i. p. 310—324.

9. ἠγάπησας—ἀνομ.] This is illustrative of the expression εὐθύτητος before. The best Commentators are agreed that the Aorist here denotes, as often, what is customary; and thus it is well expressed by the Present tense. The general sense (strengthened by the use of the negative form following the affirmative) is this; 'perfectly equitable and just is thy government.' At ἔχρισε—ἔλαιον ἀγαλλιάσεως there is commonly supposed to be an allusion to the inauguration of Kings and Prophets by anointing; in allusion to the anointing of Christ by the Holy Spirit for his regal and priestly office in the Church. To this, however, both the context and the usus loquendi are adverse; see Kuinoel and Stuart. Indeed, anointing with perfumed oil was often used to do honour to a guest; see Luke vii. 46. John xii. 3. However, χρίειν sometimes simply denotes ornare, instruere (as in Acts x. 38), which seems to be the sense here. Thus ἀγαλλ. will have reference to the notion of exaltation and celebrity, included in that of honouring; and so Chrysostom must have taken it, since he explains ἀγαλλ. by ἀγλαϊσμοῦ, καλλωπισμοῦ δόξης. By τοὺς μετόχους (answering to the Hebr. חברים) are meant associates in dignity, συνθρόνους; comp. Rev. xix. 16. The Accusative is here (by an idiom found also occasionally in the Classical writers) put for the Dative, which is the usual syntax. It is not certain whether the first ὁ Θεὸς is a Nominative or Vocative. Many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, including Ernesti, Rosenmuller, Kuinoel, and Stuart, suppose the latter; while the ancient Translators, and almost all modern ones, adopt the former view, which yields a better sense, and with a more natural construction.

10—12. The καὶ (meaning, 'and further') serves to connect this position with the testimonies at verse 8; and consequently the matter must have the same reference to Christ. The passage here introduced is from Ps. cii. 25—27, which, while it would seem to be, at least primarily, a description of the eternity and immutability of God, is here quoted in such a manner as seems a direct and unreserved application to Christ. Certainly, as Stuart observes, there is nothing in the Psalm that forbids its application to the Messiah; but many passages which are most applicable to him: and such a reference is supported by the fact that several Psalms do contain such predictions. 'Though (he adds) even if it were sup-

τὴν γῆν ἐθεμελίωσας, καὶ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου 11 εἰσὶν οἱ οὐρανοί. [l] Αὐτοὶ ἀπολοῦνται, σὺ δὲ δια- l Is. 51. 6. 2 Pet. 3. 7, μένεις· καὶ πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται, 10.
12 καὶ ὡσεὶ περιβόλαιον ἑλίξεις αὐτοὺς καὶ ἀλλα- m Ps. 110. 1. Matt. 22. 24. γήσονται· σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἶ, καὶ τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ Mark 12. 36. Luke 20. 42. Acts 2. 34.
13 ἐκλείψουσι. [m] Πρὸς τίνα δὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων εἴρηκέ ποτε· 1 Cor. 15. 25. Eph. 1. 20.
Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, ἕως ἂν θῶ τοὺς ἐχθρούς infra 10. 1, 2. & 12. 2.
14 σου ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν σου; [n] Οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶ n Ps. 103. 21. & 34. 7. & 91. 11.

posed to be applicable merely to Jehovah, there would be no difficulty with the quotation here, since the application of the same words to the Son of God, which were originally spoken of Jehovah, would be the same as saying, What was affirmed by the Psalmist of Jehovah may be as truly affirmed of the Son. Thus the weight of the argument as to the Divine nature of Christ would be the same, and either would show the opinion of the writer to be, that the Son is eternal and the Creator of the universe, and truly Divine, since, as he says at iii. 4, ὁ δὲ τὰ πάντα κατασκευάσας, Θεός.'

This, however, is taking too low a view of the subject. Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test. l. iv. § 16.) has given good reasons for supposing that the passage in the Psalm was directed, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, not to Jehovah, but to Messiah, the hope of Israel. From a close examination of the nature and character of the Psalm, the learned writer shows the inference to be unavoidable, that the afflicted Psalmist's prayer was to 'that same DIVINE PERSON who had allowed himself to be seen in a glorious human form, by Abraham, by Jacob, by Moses and his associates, and by Ezekiel; the Angel of the Covenant; the Hope, the Redeemer, the Saviour of Israel.'

Hence it follows that the Apostle, in making use of the Psalmist's prayer as a testimony to the supremacy and Deity of that Messiah, expressed no more than the true and original meaning of the passage.

— κατ' ἀρχὰς τὴν γῆν ἐθεμ.] Κατ' ἀρχὰς is best rendered 'of old;' since the Sept. only translated לפנים κατ' ἀρχὰς, with reference to the ἐν ἀρχῇ of Gen. i. 1. 'Εθεμελ. refers to the first act of creation, with allusion to the idea entertained of the earth by the Hebrews, namely, as a plain surface erected on foundations. The use of τῶν χειρῶν imports, not instrumentality (as Stuart supposes), but power, as Menochius, Estius, and Kuinoel understand. By the αὐτοὶ we may, with Kuinoel and Stuart, understand the heavens and the earth; both having been mentioned. Thus in ἡ γῆ and οἱ οὐρανοὶ we have a periphrasis of the world. See Gen. i. 1. xiv. 19. In αὐτοὶ the gender is accommodated to οὐρ., as the last-mentioned and the worthier gender. For διαμένεις a few MSS. have διαμενεῖς, which is adopted by some Critics, as Griesbach, Knapp, and Stuart; but the former is plainly the true reading, and is confirmed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who well renders, 'Thou art permanent;' and certainly there is nothing to hinder the Heb. תעמד from being expressed in the present tense, as it is by Dr. French, in his Translation of this Psalm. Thus, too, there is more force and sublimity in the sentiment; the Present being more applicable to a Being whose duration is unconnected with time, who was, is, and is to be; who 'is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' It is, moreover, required by what follows, σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἶ, corresponding to σὺ διαμένεις. The words καὶ πάντες—ἀλλαγ. are exegetical of ἀπολοῦνται, as καὶ τὰ ἔτη—ἐκλείψ. are of διαμένεις. So Theophylact explains ἀπολ. by μετασχηματισθήσονται. With πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται compare Is. li. 6. Περιβ. denotes a wrapper, or outer garment, like the hyke or bornouse of the Arabs; for such is the idea in the Heb. רקע, denoting the sky. In that expression and ἑλίξεις there is an allusion to the heavens as an expanse, the rolling up implying removal, for the purpose of substituting others,—the 'new heaven and new earth' of Rev. xxi. 1. Compare xx. 11.

— σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἶ.] Of these words the sense is but imperfectly indicated by Commentators, who have failed to perceive that the sentiment here is the same with that more fully expressed at xiii. 8; both containing the idea of absolute unchangeableness, and both ascribing to the Messiah the Divine attribute of immutability. So Philo (cited by Carpzov) says of the sun, ὁ αὐτός ἐστιν ἀεί. The words following, τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ ἐκλείψουσι, are expressive of immortality; q. d. 'thy years (meaning, thy existence) will never fail, or come to an end. Now nothing (as Dr. Pye Smith observes) can be more agreeable to the design of the passage of the Psalmist, as above stated, than thus to place in contrast with the dependence, the weakness, the nothingness of the most exalted creatures, the characters of eternity and immutable faithfulness in the Saviour of men and Lord of angels.'

13. Here we have adduced another proof of the pre-eminence of Christ above the angels.

— πρὸς τίνα, &c.] So τίνι at ver. 5. It is meant, 'Where does God address even the angels in terms implying that they are σύνθρονοι with him;' for such is implied by the phrase κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν: on which see Notes on Matt. xxii. 44, and Acts ii. 34. The words ἕως ἂν θῶ—ποδῶν σου contain an image of complete subjection, and are highly intensive of the sense of the foregoing phrase. See Stuart. These words are applied by our Redeemer himself to the Messiah.

14. This forms the conclusion of the comparison made between the Son of God and the angels, for the purpose of evincing the great superiority of the former. 'And now (says Calvin) for the better illustration of the comparison, there is here subjoined a reference to the condition of the angels, what they really are.'

λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενα, διὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας κληρονομεῖν σωτηρίαν; II. Διὰ τοῦτο δεῖ 1 περισσοτέρως ἡμᾶς προσέχειν τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσι, μή ποτε παραρρυῶμεν. [a] Εἰ γὰρ ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαληθεὶς λόγος ἐγένετο 2 βέβαιος, καὶ πᾶσα παράβασις καὶ παρακοὴ ἔλαβεν ἔνδικον μισθαποδοσίαν· [b] πῶς ἡμεῖς ἐκφευξόμεθα, τηλικαύτης ἀμε- 3 a Deut. 27. 26. Acts 7. 38, 53. Gal. 3. 19. b Matt. 4. 17. Mark 1. 14. infra 12. 25.

— οὐχὶ πάντες εἰσὶ λειτ. πν., &c.] The interrogation with οὐχὶ implies a strong affirmation, intimating that the thing is an universally admitted truth. The full and literal sense is: 'Are not all of them [of whatever rank] [no more than] ministering spirits, sent forth for service (or assistance), on the part of (i. e. in behalf of) those who are to inherit (i. e. obtain) salvation?' They are said to be λειτουργ. πνεύματα (an expression formed on Ps. ciii. 21. Sept. εὐλογεῖτε τὸν Κύριον, λειτουργοὶ αὐτοῦ, ποιοῦντες τὰ θελήματα αὐτοῦ) as being merely διάκονοι Θεοῦ, not σύνθρονοι, like Christ. The next words are exegetical of λειτουργ., and show the nature of that service. Finally, the term ἀποστέλλω is used by way of showing that they have no self-derived dignity, but are only ἀπόστολοι, with delegated authority, which is the constant doctrine of the Old Test., and the Jewish writings in general. So Philo: ἀγγέλοις, ὑπηρέταις καὶ διακόνοις, ὁ δημιουργὸς εἴωθε χρῆσθαι πρὸς τὴν τῶν θνητῶν ἐπίστασιν. The use of πνεύμ. here seems formed on Num. xxvii. 16, Θεὸς τῶν πνευμάτων καὶ πάσης σαρκός.

— διὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας κληρ. σωτ.] A periphrasis for faithful and true Christians.

II. This and the preceding Chapter the learned Ernesti justly calls the Scandalum Socinianorum, and he lays down a summary of the doctrines which may thence be proved, namely, the Divinity and the humanity of Christ; the conjunction of both natures in one person, the communication of the Divine idiomata; the twofold state of Christ, and his triple office.

1. 'Jam declarat, quorsum hactenus spectaverit, Christum cum angelis comparando, nempe, ut ejus doctrinæ summam auctoritatem comparet.' (Calvin.)

— διὰ τοῦτο] 'wherefore,' i. e. such being the infinite superiority of Christ, the Head of the new Dispensation, over the angels, the mediators of the old. In these words, δεῖ περ. ἡμᾶς, &c., the Apostle, as often, speaks per κοίνωσιν. Περισσοτέρως some construe with προσέχειν; others with δεῖ. It seems meant to refer to both. At ἀκουσθ. supply ῥήμασι, scil. λόγοις, 'doctrines of the Gospel.' With respect to παραῤῥυῶμεν, the Commentators are not agreed whether it denotes to glide, or slide from them, turn aside from them, fall from them, so as to perish; or, to let them glide or slip from the mind; in which latter sense the word occurs in Lucian, Disp. contra Hes. 5, εἴτι ἐν τῷ τῆς ποιήσεως δρόμῳ παραῤῥυὲν λάθῃ. Stuart takes the sense to be, 'lest we should pass by, neglect the things heard;' supporting his version from Prov. iii. 21 (the only example of the word in the Sept.) υἱὲ, μὴ παραῤῥύῃς ('neglect not'), τήρησον δὲ ἐμὴν βουλήν· and Clem. Alex., ἵνα μὴ παραῤῥυῶσι τῆς ἀληθείας, 'neglect or transgress the truth.' Yet, ably as this interpretation is supported, the proofs of the sense in question are insufficient. The passage of Proverbs is not to the point, since, from the wide discrepancy from the Hebrew, and the irregularity of the sense, there is, as the best Critics are agreed, reason to suspect corruption, and that παραῤῥυῇ is the true reading; and the Hebrew verb there, לוז, signifies to decline, recede from. As to the passage of Clemens, it was doubtless formed on the one before us; yet there παραῤῥ. admits equally well of the other sense. The first-mentioned interpretation, therefore, seems to deserve the preference, especially as it is supported by almost all the ancient and most modern Expositors, and has been adopted, after a learned discussion of the sense, by Kuinoel; who thinks the image is derived from a torrent that has been raised by heavy rains, which rapidly falls when the rain has ceased. So Job vi. 15.

2. εἰ γὰρ ὁ δι' ἀγγέλων λαλ. λόγ.] Now we have shown, by an argument ex minori ad majus, why the Gospel demands especial obedience. And here, notwithstanding what some eminent Expositors maintain, ὁ δι' ἀγγ. λόγος must denote 'the promulgation of the Mosaic Law,' as appears from Gal. iii. 19, ὁ νόμος διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων, and Acts vii. 53, ἐλάβετε τὸν νόμον εἰς διαταγὰς ἀγγ., where see Notes. So also in a similar argumentation at x. 28, we have τὸν νόμον Μωϋσέως. Any seeming discrepancy between what is said in those passages and the present, as compared with Exod. xx. 1, and elsewhere, where God himself is said to proclaim the law, will at once vanish, by application of the well-known principle, 'Qui facit per alium, facit per se;' and God might be said to promulgate, and the angels to proclaim the law.

— βέβαιος] 'firm;' namely, by being carried into full execution. So Calvin well explains, 'Obtinuit pondus suum, quum Deus fidem illi asseruit.' Thus it is meant (as Prof. Dobree well expresses) to say, 'If the denunciations of Moses were actually fulfilled, much more will Christ's, which are now confirmed to us (i. e. further explained and partly accomplished) by the Apostles, through the witness of the Spirit.' See Rom. iv. 16. 2 Pet. i. 19. The terms παράβασις and παρακοὴ are nearly synonymous; the only difference being that the latter implies contumacy as well as disobedience. Μισθαποδοσία is best rendered 'retribution;' since that rather implies punishment, though at x. 35 and xi. 26 it signifies reward. To the illustration of the Commentators I add Eurip. Or. 833, πατρῴων παθέων ἀμοιβάν· (where the Scholiast explains ἐκδίκησιν·) and Æschyl. Theb. 1023, τοὐπιτίμιον λαβεῖν, mercedem, τιμωρίαν. So also Hor. Carm. iii. 24. 24, 'Et peccare nefas, aut pretium emori.' It occurs in no other writer, and is justly supposed by Fischer to have been taken from the common dialect, for the Classical μισθοδοσία.

3. τηλικαύτης σωτηρίας.] Σωτ. is taken by λήσαντες σωτηρίας; ἥτις ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα λαλεῖσθαι, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου, ὑπὸ τῶν ἀκουσάντων εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη· 4 [c] συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος τοῦ Θεοῦ σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασι, καὶ ποικίλαις δυνάμεσι, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ θέλησιν.

5 [d] Οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις ὑπέταξε τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, 6 περὶ ἧς λαλοῦμεν· [e] διεμαρτύρατο δέ που τὶς λέγων· Τί c Mark 10. 20. Acts 2. 22. & 14. 3. & 19. 11. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 7, 11. d Supra 1. 2, 4, 8. infra 6. 5. 2 Pet. 3. 13.

e Ps. 8. 6. & 144. 3.

the best Commentators for λόγου σωτ., which occurs in Acts xiii. 26, meaning the Gospel, or Christian religion. Σωτ., however, may, by metonymy, denote the means, or the doctrine of salvation, there being here a tacit comparison between the temporal salvation of the Law and the eternal salvation of the Gospel, as is evident from the expression τηλικαύτης, which denotes the greatness of the thing, and the correspondent guilt of neglecting it. By the term ἀμελήσαντες is intended to be conveyed the idea of total disregard and contempt by apostasy. See x. 26.

— ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα.] Corresponding to the Latin initium capere. Εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη. This is rightly regarded by Ernesti and Kuinoel as a formula prægnans, to be explained by ἦλθεν εἰς ἡμᾶς καὶ ἐβεβαιώθη, 'was delivered unto us with confirmation;' so importing, as Calvin says, 'non fuisse rumorem sparsum sine capite, vel a dubiæ fidei testibus, sed qui graves habeat auctores.'

4. συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος—θέλησιν.] This is explanatory of ἐβεβ., and the sense is: 'God [himself] bearing this joint testimony [to the truth of what was preached] by signs and wonders, and various miraculous powers and distributions of the Holy Spirit, [imparted] according to his own will and pleasure.' So Sextus, Emp. adv. Log. ii. 324, has συνεπιμαρτυροῦσαν τῷ λόγῳ.

— σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασι, &c.] See Note on Acts ii. 22. By δυνάμεσι must certainly be meant miraculous powers; otherwise ποικ. would not have been used. The words following, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμοῖς, are exegetical, and also show the manner of the thing; for μερ. does not denote, as Stuart thinks, 'the additional gifts of the Spirit other than miraculous powers,' but 'particular distributions;' and the best comment on the expression may be found in the words of the Apostle, on the same subject, at 1 Cor. xii. 4, διαιρέσεις δὲ χαρισμάτων εἰσὶ, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ Πνεῦμα, &c., and xii. 11.

'In these (says Rosenmuller) it was that the teachers of the Gospel were superior to those of the Law; for signs and wonders had been worked by Moses also.'

5. οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις—λαλοῦμεν.] Having warned them against the consequences of apostasy from the Gospel, the Apostle resumes the subject of Christ's superiority to the angels, proceeding to show that the new dispensation was not indeed ordered, like the old, by angels, but that the Son of Man, the Messiah, was, in his human nature, placed at the head of it. Now as the Jews granted that the dispensation of the Messiah would be of a higher order than that of Moses, a proof that Jesus was the sole mediator or head of the New dispensation, and that angels were not employed as mediators in it, would satisfy them that Jesus was superior to the angels; since the place which he holds in the new economy is higher than that which they had under the old, because the new economy itself is of a higher nature than the old. At the same time, an objection which a Jew, weak in Christian faith, and strong in his attachment to the Mosaic institutions, would very naturally feel, is met, and tacitly answered by the Apostle, in what follows. The unbelieving Jews, doubtless, urged upon those, who professed an attachment to Christianity, the seeming absurdity of renouncing their subjection to a dispensation of which angels were the mediators, and of acknowledging a subjection to one of which the professed head and mediator appeared in our nature. The Apostle concedes the fact that Jesus had a nature truly and properly human, (vv. 6—18.) but, instead of granting that this proves the new dispensation to be inferior to that of Moses, he proceeds to adduce evidence from the Old Test. to show that man, or the human nature in the person of the Messiah, was to be made Lord of the universe. Consequently, in this nature, Jesus the Messiah is superior to the angels. Of course the possession by Jesus of a nature truly and properly human, does not at all prove either his inferiority, or the inferiority of the dispensation of which he is the Head (vv. 6—9). Nay, more; it was becoming that God should exalt Jesus, in consequence of his obedience unto death; a death necessary for the salvation of both Jew and Gentile (vv. 9, 10). To suffer this death he must needs take on him a nature like ours; and, as his object was the salvation of men (and not of angelic beings), so he participated in the nature of men, in order that by experience he might know their sufferings, temptations, and trials, and thus be prepared to succour them, vv. 11—18. (Stuart.) Rather, that he might more effectually and completely expiate sin.

Τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν must, from the context, denote the new dispensation (as opposed to the old); i. e. the Gospel dispensation, commencing at Christ's first advent, and, when completed at his final advent, to be merged into the economy to subsist under the reign of Christ; see Witsius, cited by Kuinoel. The term μέλλ. is used, because as long as the Temple and the Jewish state were in being, the old dispensation might yet be said to continue. Hence the propriety of the phrase advent of Christ, as applied to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish state.

6. διεμαρτ. δέ π. τίς.] There is here a sort of lacuna, which may be thus supplied: 'but [God put it in subjection to Christ,] for,' &c., which suppressed clause is implied in the proof itself. (Kuinoel.) Thus the sense is well expressed in paraphrase by Abp. Newcome as follows: 'But ἐστιν ἄνθρωπος, ὅτι μιμνήσκῃ αὐτοῦ· ἢ υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου, ὅτι ἐπισκέπτῃ αὐτοῦ; Ἠλάττωσας αὐτὸν 7 βραχύ τι παρ' ἀγγέλους· δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφάνωσας αὐτόν· [καὶ κατέστησας αὐτὸν ἐπὶ τὰ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου·] [f] πάντα ὑπέταξας ὑποκάτω τῶν 8 f Ps. 8. 7. Matt. 28. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 25, 27. Eph. 1. 22.

God hath committed the dispensation under which we live to his Son, who became man; to which assumption of human nature, and its consequences, I apply the words of the Psalmist.' The τις must, of course, from the subject and the context, denote an inspired writer; a mode of expression by no means implying an ignorance of the writer in question, nor even of the part of his work intended; but only supposing so familiar a knowledge of both in the reader, as merely to need the words being cited; and as it was confined to writers of the greatest eminence, it implies any thing but irreverence. Indeed, this mode of citation is common in the Rabbinical writers, and not unexampled in the Classical authors.

— τί ἐστιν ἄνθρωπος, &c.] It has been not a little debated whether by ἄνθρωπος, and υἱὸς ἀνθρώπου, is here meant Man (i. e. human nature), and the Son of Man, i. e. Christ. That the passage is applicable to the Messiah is certain, from our Lord's applying another part of the Psalm to himself (Matt. xxi. 16). This, however, will not prove, as some imagine, that the whole Psalm is meant of the Messiah alone. That notion has been refuted at large by Bp. Middleton, who shows that 'this Psalm is an instance of the existence in the Old Test. of various passages having both a primary and a secondary sense; i. e. capable of a two-fold application, being directly applicable to circumstances then past, or present, or soon to be accomplished; and indirectly to others, which Divine Providence was about to develope under a future Dispensation.' 'Indeed (continues he) on no other hypothesis can we avoid one of two great difficulties; for else we must assert that the multitude of applications made by Christ and his Apostles are fanciful and unauthorized, and wholly inadequate to prove the points for which they are cited; or, on the other hand, we must believe that the obvious and natural sense of such passages was never intended, and that it is a mere illusion. Of the 8th Psalm the primary import is so certain, that it could not be mistaken. כל הארץ may surely be taken of Palestine.' The learned Prelate shows that the objections advanced against this view only tend to establish a secondary, not to disprove a primary sense. 'It may readily (he continues) be admitted that the words, though primarily spoken of Adam and his descendants, cannot in their full and complete sense have their sole reference to them, because they expressly represent a person, who, after a while, was advanced to the highest dignities, a perfect Lord and governor over all created beings, a complete conqueror over all the enemies of God's kingdom.'

But to consider the phraseology in detail: μιμνήσκῃ ('shouldst bear in mind') is explained by the antithetical term ἐπισκέπτῃ, which signifies to show regard to, i. e. regard with favour and protection. It is truly observed by Bp. Middleton, that 'the real difficulty of the Psalm, as applied in the Epistle, lies in מעט, which signifies both in a small degree, and also for a short time, the former sense adapted to man, the latter to our Saviour.' 'In this case (he continues) three suppositions appear possible; either that the Psalmist has used the word to signify in a small degree, which is the more common meaning, and that the Apostle, availing himself of its ambiguity, has employed βραχύ τι in the other sense; or else that the Psalmist had by inspiration a knowledge of man's future resurrection and exaltation to the condition of angels, in which case he might properly say for a little time; or lastly, that the Apostle was content to use the phrase, as the Psalmist had used it, to signify in a small degree, since this was sufficiently expressive of the condition of human nature, though the other sense would have been more immediately applicable to the condescension of Christ; and of these the last appears to be the least embarrassed with difficulties. If the Psalmist has declared man to be little inferior to the angels, the application of this phrase to Christ will signify that he took the human nature; the only difference will be, that what in the one case is made matter of pride and exultation is a subject of humiliation in the other.' This interpretation of βραχύ τι is confirmed by the authority of Dindorf and Stuart, who show that the sense is required in the Psalm, and is more suitable in the Epistle. 'For what (observes Stuart) is the design of the writer? To prove that Christ, in his human nature, is exalted above the angels. How does he undertake to prove this? First, by showing that this nature itself is made but little inferior to that of the angels; and next, that it has been exalted to the empire of the world.' The Apostle (as Kuinoel and Stuart prove) was fully justified in using the term ἀγγέλους, this being found in the Sept., and indeed supposed by many of the best Interpreters, Hebrew and Christian, to convey the true sense of the Hebr. אלהים, on which see Stuart. Δόξῃ and τιμῇ are terms synonymous, but here combined to raise the sense. Στεφ. denotes ornare. On the nature and origin of the metaphor see my Note on Thucydides, iv. 121. The present passage, I would observe, seems to have been had in mind by Philostr. V. Ap. i. 11, οἱ θεοὶ—στεφανώσαντες, οὐ χρυσοῖς στεφάνοις, ἀλλ' ἀγαθοῖς πᾶσιν· and vi. 21, οὐδὲ γὰρ ἐπὶ δικαιοσύνῃ τινὰ στεφανωθέντα οἶδα. See also Cebet. Tab. p. 41, and Artemid. Oneir. ii. 30.

The next words, καὶ κατέστησας—σου, not found in very many MSS. and some Editions and MSS. of the Pesch. Syr., the Sclav., and several Fathers, and all the Greek Commentators, were regarded as spurious by Mill, Bengel, and Wetstein, and have been cancelled by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz; justly; for it is easy to account for their insertion (namely, from the Sept.), but not for their omission.

8. πάντα ὑπέταξας ὑπ. τ. ποδ. α.] i. e. thou ποδῶν αὐτοῦ. Ἐν γὰρ τῷ ὑποτάξαι αὐτῷ τὰ πάντα, οὐδὲν ἀφῆκεν αὐτῷ ἀνυπότακτον. Νῦν δὲ οὔπω ὁρῶμεν αὐτῷ 9 τὰ πάντα ὑποτεταγμένα. [g] Τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι παρ' ἀγγέλους g Acts 2. 33. Phil. 2. 7, 8. ἠλαττωμένον βλέπομεν, Ἰησοῦν, διὰ τὸ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου δόξῃ καὶ τιμῇ ἐστεφανωμένον· ὅπως χάριτι Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ παν-10 τὸς γεύσηται θανάτου. [h] Ἔπρεπε γὰρ αὐτῷ, δι' ὃν τὰ πάντα h Luke 24. 26, 46. Acts 3. 15. & 5. 31.

καὶ δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα, Rom. 11. 36. Phil. 2. 9.
τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτηρίας αὐτῶν διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι. infra 5. 9. & 12. 2.

hast given him complete and universal dominion; a metaphor derived from Oriental customs, and copiously illustrated by Dind. and Stuart; compare 1 Cor. xv. 27. Πάντα, as Bp. Middleton observes, 'is a term whose extent seems ascertained by the subjoined enumeration of the several classes of brute creatures, vv. 7, 8 of Psalm viii. But as πάντα may include all things, without exception, and angels as well as men, what proves the secondary sense by no means disproves the primary.'

— ἐν γὰρ τῷ, &c.] The γὰρ is illustrative; the writer now proceeding to comment on and argue from the above scripture. The expressions ἐν τῷ ὑποτάξαι αὐτῷ—ἀνυπότακτον strongly mark the universality of the subjection. Ὑποτ. and ἀφῆκεν may, with many recent Commentators, be referred to the writer, by the figure mentioned in the Note on εἰσαγάγῃ supra i. 6; but it is more agreeable to the context to suppose it (with the ancient and most modern Expositors) to relate to God.

— νῦν δὲ—ὑποτεταγμένα] q. d. 'But now, as we do not see all things; for instance, all mankind, death, the evil angels, &c.' (Newcome.) Meaning, 'that this prophecy of the Psalmist is not, as yet, wholly fulfilled; but that so much of it has been accomplished, that we may regard it as a pledge that a fulfilment of the rest will certainly follow.'

9. τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—ἐστεφ.] In this passage the subject, as Bp. Middleton remarks, is τὸν δὲ βραχύ τι—Ἰησοῦν, and the predicate all which follows. Moreover, in the subjoined clause, ὅπως χάριτι Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ παντὸς γεύσηται θανάτου, we have assigned the reason why Christ suffered death, as mentioned in διὰ τὸ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου. The difficulty here complained of is partly caused by an inversion of construction (resorted to, it would seem, in order to make the grand subject of the assertion, Jesus, the more prominent), and partly by the last clause being worded with obscure brevity. Accordingly the sense (when the construction is cleared, and the phraseology well understood) is as follows: 'But Him, who was made a little lower than the angels (namely, by assuming the human nature)—even Jesus—we see (even by the eye of faith in the revelation made to us), on account of his having suffered death, crowned with glory and honour; [which suffering he bore,] in order that, by the grace of God, he might taste of death for every man;' i. e. that, by the goodness and mercy of God, this his suffering of death might be effectual unto the salvation of all men. This mode of taking the passage is, I believe, liable to no well-founded objection; for the sentiment contained in the last clause is not, as some affirm, the same as before, but is a further illustration of what was before said; namely, that Jesus suffered the death in question, that he might give his life a ransom for all, as it is said in 1 Tim. ii. 6. Matt. xx. 28. Mark x. 45, and elsewhere. This may, then, be regarded as an addition, meant to inculcate the great and cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, THE ATONEMENT.

10. The Apostle now argues that the redemption of mankind from death would not be perfect, unless the author of that redemption should himself submit to death; whence the Redeemer and the redeemed were of the same origin, and consequently Christ is represented in the Old Testament as calling men his brethren. (Kuin.)

— ἔπρεπε γὰρ αὐτῷ, &c.] 'Πρέπει in Novo Testamento poni solet de eo quod necesse est, quod honestas, vel officii ratio postulat, atque adeo idem valet quod ἀναγκαῖον viii. 3, ὀφείλει infra vers. 17, et πρέπον ἐστὶ, Matt. iii. 15.' (Kuinoel.) By αὐτῷ is, no doubt, to be understood God, not, as some say, Christ. In the words δι' ὃν—τὰ (where supply ἐγένετο) we have a formula designating the supreme Lord, Creator, and Preserver of all things, as Rom. xi. 36, ἐξ αὐτοῦ, καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ, καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα.

— πολλοὺς υἱοὺς εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα.] The construction, as respects ἀγαγόντα, has been disputed. Many construe it with the words following, thus referring it to Christ; but thus the sentiment seems overloaded. It is better, with Ernesti, Dindorf, and Kuinoel, to suppose ἀγαγόντα as put for ἀγαγόντι, by an anacoluthon frequent in St. Paul (as 2 Cor. xii. 17), and often in the Classical writers, especially Thucydides. Render, 'after he had decreed to bring many sons (meaning, all true Christians, or those who are 'begotten again to a lively hope,' 1 Pet. i. 3) [back] to life and salvation [from death and misery]:' a sense of δόξα occurring in Rom. v. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 8.

— ἀρχηγὸν] for αἴτιον. So at v. 9 we have αἴτιος σωτηρίας αἰωνίου, and Acts iii. 15, ὁ ἀρχηγὸς τῆς ζωῆς. And Philo has the expression παλιγγενεσίας ἀρχηγόν.

— διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι.] In παθημάτων there is reference not only to the death of Christ, but to those many sharp sufferings which preceded it. On the exact force and nature of the metaphor in τελειῶσαι some difference of opinion exists, which may be best settled by considering its mode of signification, and how that signification arises. Now τελειοῦν properly signifies 'to perfect, i. e. render perfect.' But there is also inherent in the term a notion of reward and felicity, derived, probably, from the agonistical metaphor above, with reference to reaching i Acts 17. 26. infra 10. 10, 14 [i] Ὅ τε γὰρ ἁγιάζων καὶ οἱ ἁγιαζόμενοι ἐξ ἑνὸς πάντες· 11 δι' ἣν αἰτίαν οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται ἀδελφοὺς αὐτοὺς καλεῖν, k Ps. 22. 23, 26. [k] λέγων· Ἀπαγγελῶ τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς 12 μου, ἐν μέσῳ ἐκκλησίας ὑμνήσω σε. καὶ πάλιν· l Isa. 8. 18 John 10. 29. & 17. 6, 9, 11, 12. Ἐγὼ ἔσομαι πεποιθὼς ἐπ' αὐτῷ· [l] καὶ πάλιν· Ἰδοὺ 13 ἐγὼ, καὶ τὰ παιδία ἅ μοι ἔδωκεν ὁ Θεός. [m] Ἐπεὶ 14 m Isa. 25. 8. Hos. 13. 14. John 1. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. Phil. 2. 7 2 Tim. 1. 10. οὖν τὰ παιδία κεκοινώνηκε σαρκὸς καὶ αἵματος, καὶ αὐτὸς παραπλησίως μετέσχε τῶν αὐτῶν, ἵνα διὰ τοῦ θανάτου καταργήσῃ τὸν τὸ κράτος ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, τουτέστι τὸν n Luke 1. 74. Rom. 8. 15. Διάβολον, [n] καὶ ἀπαλλάξῃ τούτους, ὅσοι φόβῳ θανάτου 15 the goal and receiving the prize. Hence he who proclaims the victor and bestows the prize is said τελειοῦν τινα, and those who receive it are said τελειοῦσθαι (so infra xii. 23 we have δικαίων τετελειωμένων); an idea very applicable to Christ, who 'for the glory that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame' (xii. 2). And so it is said, Luke xxiv. 26, Οὐχὶ ταῦτα ἔδει παθεῖν τὸν Χριστὸν, καὶ εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ;

11. ὅ τε γὰρ ἁγιάζων, &c.] To prevent any perversion of the sense, it is better to render ὁ ἁγιάζων and οἱ ἁγιαζόμενοι, not 'the sanctifier and the sanctified,' but, 'the expiator and the expiated;' q. d. The expiator, Christ, and the expiated, his brethren, have one common nature; accordingly, He does not disdain to call them brethren. 'It has been fully shown by Ernesti, Kuinoel, and Stuart, that, amongst its other senses, ἁγιάζειν denotes to purify from sin, to free any one from its punishment, to expiate. Hence at Hebr. ix. 13, sq. it is interchanged with καθαρίζειν; and that it must have that sense here is plain from the context. The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[I say many sons;] for the expiator and the expiated are all sons of one Father, God.' At ἑνὸς some supply γένους, or σπέρματος, or αἵματος; others, more properly, πατρός· which, however, must not, with many, be understood of Adam, or Abraham, but (as the context requires) of God. Both are sons of God, but in different ways; one, as of the same substance with the Father; the others, as creatures: see Theophylact. By the expression οὐκ ἐπαισχ. is implied (as the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed) the infinite superiority of Christ to the human nature. 'For if Christ (as Abresch and Stuart remark) were merely a man, where would be his condescension in calling men his brethren? whereas, if he possessed a higher nature, and ἐκένωσεν ἑαυτὸν, μορφὴν δούλου λαβὼν, (Philipp. ii. 7, 8,) then, indeed, it was great condescension to call men his brethren.'

12. The truth of the above position is now confirmed from the Scriptures of the Old Test.

— λέγων, &c.] Render, 'inasmuch as he (i. e. Christ) saith, or may be supposed to say, while on earth, I will,' &c. For ἀπαγγελῶ the Sept. has the synonyme διηγήσομαι. That this Psalm relates to the Messiah, the best Commentators, Jewish as well as Christian, are agreed. Indeed, as Stuart remarks, 'the history of His death seems a kind of practical commentary thereon; and there is nothing which forbids the application of it to the Messiah, but quite enough to show that it is inapplicable to David.' The term ἐκκλησία signifies properly, in the Jewish sense, 'the assembly of the nation congregated at Jerusalem;' but in the Christian sense, as here, the assembly of the faithful, which forms the Church Universal.

13. The citations in this verse are by some supposed to be from Ps. xviii. 3, or from 2 Sam. xxii. 3. The Psalm, however, contains no allusion to the Messiah. Indeed the best Commentators are now agreed that both citations are from Is. viii. 17, 18. 'There could (Dind. observes) have been no doubt as to the thing, but for the second καὶ πάλιν, which some thought could not be meant of the same passage. At x. 30, however, there is an exactly similar case.' 'The argument (says Stuart) is this: Men exercise trust or confidence in God. This is predicated of them as dependent, and possessing a feeble nature. The same thing is predicated of the Messiah, and consequently he possesses a nature like theirs, and therefore they are his brethren.' So also Abp. Newcome paraphrases, 'Again, Christ may be supposed to express his filial confidence in God by using the words which occur at 2 Sam. xxii. 3, or Is. viii. 17. Accordingly, while he lived among us, his trust in God is manifest. (See Matt. xxvii. 43.) Again, Christ may be supposed to acknowledge his Father's goodness in the words of Is. viii. 18. Accordingly, while on earth he called his disciples his children, John xiii. 33. xxi. 5, and those that God had given him, John xvii. 9, 24.'

14, 15. The writer elegantly takes up the word children from the preceding verse, and goes on to show the fitness of Christ's sufferings. (Newc.) By κεκοινώνηκε σαρκὸς καὶ αἵματος is meant, 'partook of a human nature,' as 1 Cor. xv. 50, and often. By the term παιδία are denoted the spiritual children of Christ. Παραπλησίως signifies, not 'in a similar manner,' but, by an idiom frequent in the best writers, 'in the same manner;' (so Demosthenes, Olynth. iii. we have παραπλησίως καὶ ὁμοίως, and Thucyd. i. 14, ὅμοια καὶ παραπλήσια ξυμβουλευτέα μοι ὄντα,) which, of course, implies really and truly, not in appearance only, as the Docetæ explained the word. So Chrysostom explains, οὐ φαντασία, ἀλλὰ εἰκών.

14. ἵνα διὰ τοῦ—τὸν Διάβ.] Meaning, 'that he might by his [own] death put down, and deprive of his power, him who hath the power of death, namely the Devil.' Καταργ. is here

16 διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ζῆν ἔνοχοι ἦσαν δουλείας. Οὐ γὰρ δήπου ἀγγέλων ἐπιλαμβάνεται, ἀλλὰ σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ ἐπιλαμ-17 βάνεται. [o] Ὅθεν ὤφειλε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ὁμοιω- o Phil. 2. 7. infra 4. 15. & 5. 2.
θῆναι, ἵνα ἐλεήμων γένηται καὶ πιστὸς ἀρχιερεὺς τὰ πρὸς 18 τὸν Θεὸν, εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ. [p] Ἐν p Infra 4. 15, 16.

used as at the kindred passage of 2 Tim. i. 10, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ καταργήσαντος τὸν θάνατον. Here, however, the Apostle, instead of τὸν θάν., employs the expression τὸ κράτος, &c. suitably, Kuinoel thinks, to the preceding imagery. In what sense the Devil is here said τὸ κράτος ἔχειν τοῦ θανάτου, has been not a little disputed. Many eminent Expositors illustrate this from the dæmonology of the Jews, by which a certain evil angel was supposed to preside over death, whom, from a misinterpretation of Prov. xvi. 14, they called the Angel of death, and named Sammaël. But there seems to be rather (according to the ancient and most modern Commentators) a reference to the history of the Fall in Gen. iii. 15; wherefore our Lord, John viii. 44, calls the Devil 'a murderer from the beginning.' Thus, as being the author of sin and of death also (the latter being introduced by the former), he may be said figuratively to have the power of death, and that not only temporal, but eternal; for as 'the wages of sin is death,' the Devil, by leading men into sin, brings them under the sentence of death. Comp. 1 John iii. 8. But by his own death, our Lord, offering himself up for the expiation of our sins, destroyed the cause of eternal death, even sin.

15. καὶ ἀπαλλάξῃ, &c.] These words are explanatory of the foregoing, meaning (as Abp. Newcome paraphrases) 'and, by bringing life and immortality to light, might deliver those whose continual fear of death placed them, as it were, in a state of slavery to an inexorable tyrant.' Ἀπαλλ. is properly a forensic term, signifying to liberate from slavery. By τούτους must be understood the παιδία of ver. 14. Ἔνοχος is here put for ἐνεχόμενος, subject, literally, held bound. The physical sense is very rare, but it occurs in the Anthol. Gr. i. 179, ἐπ' ἀγκύρας ἔνοχον βάρος. The phrase ἔνοχος εἶναι δουλείας corresponds to ζυγῷ δουλείας ἐνέχεσθαι at Gal. v. 1. Διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ζῆν is for διὰ πάσης τῆς ζωῆς. This use of the Infinitive in the place of a noun is frequent in the Classical as well as Hellenistic writers; but the former very rarely so far consider it a noun, as to apply an adjective with it. By the term θανάτου Macknight and Stuart understand punishment in another world; and undoubtedly to take it, with the generality of Expositors, only of the dissolution of the body, is far too limited a view. I would, with Beza and Calvin, interpret it of death both temporal and spiritual, both the first and the second death, as it is called in Rev. ii. 11, not only the separation of the body from the soul in this life, but the eternal separation of body and soul, united, from the presence and favour of God in another world, most significantly expressed in 2 Thess. i. 9, by ὄλεθρος αἰώνιος ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς δόξης τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ. Indeed it is not simply the ceasing to be, 'the shuffling off this mortal coil,' that alarms men; for, as Bacon observes, 'there is no passion so weak, that does not overcome the fear of death —love, revenge, grief, fear, and even satiety.' But it is, as our great Dramatic Poet expresses it, 'the dread of something after death.' This it is which 'makes cowards of us all.' In short, the great 'sting of death is sin' (see 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57), from which we can alone be delivered by faith in Jesus Christ.

16. οὐ γὰρ—ἐπιλαμβ.] On the sense of these words some difference of opinion exists. The difficulty hinges on the term ἐπιλαμβ., which is by the Greek Commentators and the earlier modern Expositors interpreted 'assumes the nature of.' But this sense is neither agreeable to the usus loquendi, nor suitable to the context. The best Interpreters have been long agreed in explaining, 'helps,' 'assists,' viz. by redeeming: a sense quite in accordance with the ratio significationis of the word; which, as it signifies properly to take by the hand, naturally comes to mean raise up, help, assist. Thus, then, the term will correspond to βοηθῆσαι at ver. 18. Render, 'He doth not [thus] assist angels, he is not their Redeemer.' So Calvin explains, 'nusquam angelis tantum præstitit.' Here, then, (as Stuart observes) is meant to be adduced another reason why Christ took on him a nature that was human; namely, because he came to succour men, not angels, and consequently was made like unto man, in order that he might the better be enabled to feel and help him.

By the expression σπέρματος Ἀβραὰμ may be understood either the natural (meaning the Jews) or the spiritual seed of Abraham, the Gentiles; it being true of either, though, as the writer is addressing Jews, the former is more to the purpose; yet the latter may be included.

17, 18. These verses contain an inference from the foregoing. Ὅθεν, 'whence,' i. e. because he was to be their helper and redeemer. Κατὰ πάντα ὁμ. signifies 'to be in every respect, in the same condition,' (i. e. as far as extended to the human nature, its innocent infirmities and amiable sympathies,) with the Jewish High Priest, and as having offered up himself a sacrifice for sin. The epithets here applied to him, ἐλεήμων and πιστὸς, are used with reference to his character of Priest, in relation to God and to man respectively. As regarded God, he would be faithful in discharging the duty of his office of atonement; and to his fellow-men he would be compassionate, as one who could sympathize with the human frailties he had himself experienced.

— εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τ. λ.] These words suggest the purpose of that priesthood, namely, to expiate the sins of the people. Ἱλάσκεσθαι answers in the Sept. to the Heb. כפר, to cover, remove from sight, and, as used of sins, to forgive, and takes either a Dative or Genitive with περί. In Ecclesiasticus xxviii. 5, however, we have τίς ἐξιλάσεται (will expiate?) τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτοῦ; and so in Dan. ix. 24.

ᾧ γὰρ πέπονθεν αὐτὸς πειρασθεὶς, δύναται τοῖς πειραζομένοις βοηθῆσαι.

a Rom. 15. 8. Phil. 3. 14. infra 4. 14. & 6. 20. & 8. 1. & 9. 11. b Num. 12. 7. infra ver. 5.

III. ᵃ ὍΘΕΝ, ἀδελφοὶ ἅγιοι, κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου 1 μέτοχοι, κατανοήσατε τὸν ἀπόστολον καὶ ἀρχιερέα τῆς ὁμολογίας ἡμῶν, [Χριστὸν] Ἰησοῦν· ᵇ πιστὸν ὄντα τῷ 2 ποιήσαντι αὐτὸν, ὡς καὶ Μωϋσῆς ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ οἴκῳ αὐτοῦ.

1 Sam. iii. 14. The full construction is, ἱλάσκεσθαί τινα κατά τι.

18. πέπονθεν α. πειρ.] 'hath suffered by being tried with various afflictions.' Δύναται τοῖς πειρ. βοηθ. There is here implied, with the power, the disposition to succour: an assertion founded on the common sentiment of every age, that experience of suffering peculiarly fits men to sympathize in it, and disposes them to succour the afflicted. So it is said by Philemon ap. Max. Tyr. lxiii. p. 93. 6, ἐκ τοῦ παθεῖν γίνωσκε καὶ τὸ συμπαθεῖν· καὶ σοὶ γὰρ ἄλλος συμπαθήσεται παθών. And so Meleager in Anthol. Gr. i. p. 14, οἶδα παθὼν ἐλεεῖν· and Soph. Œd. Col. 1131, τοῖς γὰρ ἐμπείροις βροτῶν Μόνοις οἷόν τε συνταλαιπωρεῖν τάδε. Hence, as observes Dr. Blair (in a Sermon on Heb. iv. 15,) 'the distressed fly for consolation to those who have known the touch of woe; the prosperous, as ignorant of their feelings, and therefore likely to be regardless of their plaints, they decline.'

III. Next to the consideration, that the 'law was διαταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων,' 'the grounds of its pre-eminence with the Jews were, the exalted character of Moses, and the dignity and offices of the High Priest, who was the instrument of reconciling the people to God, when under sin. In respect to both these points, the Apostle undertakes to show that the Gospel has a preference, since Jesus is superior to Moses, as ἀπόστολος, and Curator ædis sacræ, and to the High Priest his superiority is alike visible.' (Stuart.) Here is instituted a comparison of Christ with Moses, in order partly, by a parity of reasoning (such as would be especially interesting to Jewish readers), to show the similarity of both, and partly from the disparity in condition between Moses as θεράπων ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ, and Christ ὡς υἱὸς ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον, to evince the superiority of the latter to the former. The exhortation contained in ver. 1 is on the same subject with the preceding Chapter, and by the two terms ἀπόστολος and ἀρχιερεὺς is meant to be comprised the sum of the 2d Chapter; τὸν ἀπόστολον including what at ii. 3 he had said respecting the preaching of the Gospel introduced by Christ, and τὸν ἀρχιερ. what he had said (ver. 9) of the death of Jesus for the salvation of men. At ver. 1 the writer only gives the cursory admonition to attentively consider Christ as our High Priest, intending to treat more at large on the Priesthood of Christ further on, at iv. 14. xii. 13, and proceeds to evince the superiority of Christ to Moses; in pursuance of which he first uses the term ἀπόστολος. (Kuinoel.)

1. ἀδελφ. ἅγ.] The best Expositors are in general agreed that the sense is simply 'Christian brethren;' i. e. by profession at least (see Stuart), and that κλήσ. ἐπουρ. μέτοχοι denotes the invitation or offer of the Gospel, and its benefits to all who will accept it, and fulfil its requisitions. On the import, however, of ἐπουρ. they are not agreed; some supposing it to regard the nature of the blessing proffered in the Gospel, as being of a celestial kind (so Phil. iii. 14, τῆς ἄνω κλήσεως), and far exceeding those of the Law in spirituality and value; while others think it respects the origin of the offer, as being from heaven, and promulgated by one from heaven, and who is in heaven, i. e. Christ; which latter view is confirmed by vi. 4, and xii. 25. ii. 3, and John iii. 13. Κατανοήσατε, 'attentively consider.' An expression used to solicit attention to what is of high moment.

— τὸν ἀπόστ. καὶ ἀρχ.] Of these terms the former designates Christ as legatus Dei, et interpres voluntatis ejus (as in John iii. 34. x. 36. xiii. 16. xx. 21. Heb. i. 1), and is adopted because of the comparison with Moses, who was such. So, at least, the term is generally understood. Some Expositors, however, as Stuart, think that there is an allusion to the שליח or minister of the synagogue, who managed all its affairs; and as Moses was curator ædis sacræ, so they understand Christ as here represented. But though that opinion is countenanced by the subsequent words, the other interpretation is more simple and natural, and on that account more likely to be the true one. In ἀρχ. there is involved a comparison with Aaron, the first and most eminent ἀρχιερεύς. The sentiment is generally supposed to be this; that as Aaron was the ἀρχιερεὺς of the old and imperfect covenant, so is Christ of the new and better one, who is therefore of higher dignity, making that real atonement for men, of which the sacrifice offered by the High Priest was only the type. But the idea of covenant in ὁμολογ. may be rather implied than expressed; for though the Classical writers use the word in the sense covenant, and Philo, i. 654, calls the High Priest μέγας ἀρχιερεὺς τῆς ὁμολογίας, it is no where in the New Testament used in any other sense than profession, which the most eminent Expositors have here adopted, taking the meaning to be, 'our profession of him as our Lord;' q. d. τὸν ἀπόστολον καὶ ἀρχ. τὸν ὁμολογούμενον ὑφ' ἡμῶν: but the expression may simply denote faith, and so it is explained by Chrysostom and Stuart.

2. πιστὸν] i. e. as faithfully discharging all the duties of his office of Legate, or High Priest, revealing to mankind the will of God. At τῷ ποιήσαντι supply ἀπόστ. καὶ ἀρχ. This use of ποιεῖν, in the sense constitute, is supposed to be founded on the Hebr. עשה; but a similar usage is found in all languages.

— ὡς καὶ Μ. ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ οἴκῳ α.] This is founded on Num. xii. 7, where the words are used of Moses. From the context it is plain that οἴκῳ must, as applied both to Moses and to Christ, mean family (including the more definite 3 [c] Πλείονος γὰρ δόξης οὗτος παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἠξίωται, καθʼ ὅσον c Zach. 6. 12 Matt. 16. 18.

4 πλείονα τιμὴν ἔχει τοῦ οἴκου ὁ κατασκευάσας αὐτόν· ([d] πᾶς 2 Cor 5. 17. Eph. 2. 10.
γὰρ οἶκος κατασκευάζεται ὑπό τινός· ὁ δὲ τὰ πάντα κατα-5 σκευάσας, Θεός.) [e] Καὶ Μωϋσῆς μὲν πιστὸς ἐν ὅλῳ τῷ οἴκῳ e Deut. 18. 15, 18. supra v. 2. αὐτοῦ ὡς θεράπων, εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαληθησομένων· f Supra 1. 2. Matt. 24. 13.
6 [f] Χριστὸς δὲ, ὡς υἱὸς ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ· οὗ οἶκός ἐσμεν 2 Cor. 6. 16. Eph. 2. 21, 22.
ἡμεῖς, ἐάνπερ τὴν παῤῥησίαν καὶ τὸ καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος infra 10. 35. Col. 1. 23.

idea of Church), and, as respects the Jews, nation; for the Jewish nation is considered as God's family, and is so called in Amos iii. 1. As applied to Christ, it must denote the great Family of Christians comprehended in the visible Church. See Eph. iii. 15. By αὐτοῦ, as appears from Numb. xii. 7, is meant God.

3. πλείονος γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ connects with κατανοήσατε, &c., introducing another point of view, in which Christ is greatly superior to Moses. On the exact nature, however, of the parallel, some difference of opinion exists. Most Expositors suppose the points of comparison to be between the honour due to the builder of a house and that due to the building itself; others, between the founder and master of a family, as compared with the family itself: of which two views the former is very agreeable to the figure carried on in the context, but not to the sense of that context. 'The purpose of the writer is (as observes Stuart) to show that Christ, at the same time that he is head of the new spiritual house, was also the founder of it; while Moses, who was at the head of the ancient spiritual house, was himself only one of the household [though at the head of it]. As (continues he) a steward of a house, while he is curator of all in the house, is still but a servant, so Moses was but a servant, while Christ, who was a curator, was also Son, and therefore "heir and lord of all." The point of comparison between Moses and Christ, in which the latter appears to have a decided preference, is not the being at the head of God's house or family (for such an office Moses sustained); but it consists in this,—viz. that while Moses was curator, he was also θεράπων; but while Christ was Curator, he was at the same time υἱὸς and κατασκευάστης οἴκου.'

4. πᾶς γὰρ οἶκος—Θεός.] In the interpretation of this passage Commentators differ very widely, and that from a certain difficulty, not so much in the words themselves, as in tracing their connexion and bearing upon the context. Most Expositors, from Whitby to Stuart, suppose the words to be an argument to show the superiority of Christ over Moses, by evincing that Jesus is God: a view supported by the following able discussion of the course of argument by Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test., vol. iii. p. 313: 'This passage represents the constitution of revealed religion, in the different modes of its administration and progress, under the figure of a well-arranged domestic establishment. Of this establishment God, the Supreme Father, is the primary Author and Sovereign Head (ὁ ποιήσας): it is, therefore, throughout, called his household. In describing the arrangements of the household, the Apostle pursues a train of resemblances and differences between Moses, the leading person under one administration, and Christ, the Chief of the other. Moses was appointed to his station by competent authority; so was Christ. Moses was faithful to his charge; so is Christ. Moses was (θεράπων) an attendant or ministering officer, and therefore, eminent and dignified as was his station, he was only a servant; but Christ is the Son of the Sovereign Lord and Supreme Father of this holy family. Moses was a part of the household; but Christ was (ὁ κατασκευάσας) the immediate Constructor of the establishment. Moses was honoured suitably to his capacity; Christ had higher honour, in proportion to the superiority of the Lord above the domestic; and, since he is the Constructor of "all the things," (all the parts and arrangements of this economy,) he is God.'

5, 6. Θεράπων here is opposed to υἱὸς a little after; though the term is properly opposed to κύριος, as denoting 'one who despatches any business as assistant to, or under the direction of, the principal;' i. e. the κύριος, and is synonymous with οἰκονόμος. As, however, υἱὸς has been shown to be tantamount to κύριος, there is no anomaly. The next words εἰς μαρτύριον τῶν λαληθ. state the object of Moses' service; namely, to deliver to the people what was to be promulgated and taught from God in the religion intended to be introductory to a more perfect dispensation. Such, at least, is the sense, if μαρτ. be taken (with most recent Expositors) to denote instruction; but if it be understood as bearing the more usual interpretation of testimony, the meaning will be, 'the commission of Moses was merely to bear witness to the higher revelation which was afterwards to be made by Christ.' Εἰς μαρτ. is for εἰς τὸ μαρτυρεῖν, 'in order to teach, or give directions;' see Kuinoel. Υἱὸς may be, as Theophylact says, for υἱὸς καὶ κληρονόμος, equivalent to κύριος. From the structure of the words it is plain that πιστὸς ἦν must here be repeated. The opposition, too, is not only between θεράπων and υἱὸς, or κύριος, but between ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ and ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον, to show the difference between Moses and Christ. The former was part of the family; the latter over the family, in quality of Lord.

6. Per interpretationem subjicit quænam sit illa domus Dei, quam prius Moses, deinde Christus administrarint, atque domum illam constare piis credentibus. (Hyperius.)

— τὴν παῤῥησίαν καὶ τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπίδος.] Render, 'our confidence and joy of hope;' namely, the hope of salvation by the Gospel. In παῤῥησίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος we have a very rare phrase, of which, however, I have noted one example, namely, in Josephus, Ant. xvi. 3. 3, ἐπειδὴ παῤῥησίας τινος, τῆς οὐ πρότερον οὔσης, ἐλπίδος ἀντεποιήσατο. At xvi. 4. 3, we have the similar expression τῆς ἀληθείας ἡ παῤῥησία. The term παῤῥησίαν here has reference to the ὁμολογία, or profession of faith, supra v. 1, and g 2 Sam. 23. 2.

Ps. 95. 7. infra ver. 15. & 4. 7.
h Exod. 17. 2.
Num. 20. 13.

μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν κατάσχωμεν. [g] Διὸ, καθὼς λέγει 7 τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον· Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, [h] μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς 8 ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ, κατὰ τὴν ἡμέραν τοῦ πειρασμοῦ ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ· οὗ ἐπείρασάν με οἱ πατέρες 9 ὑμῶν, ἐδοκίμασάν με καὶ εἶδον τὰ ἔργα μου τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη· διὸ προσώχθισα τῇ γενεᾷ ἐκείνῃ, καὶ 10 εἶπον· Ἀεὶ πλανῶνται τῇ καρδίᾳ· αὐτοὶ δὲ οὐκ infra iv. 14. So also x. 19 we have ἔχοντες παῤῥησίαν εἰς τὴν εἴσοδον τῶν ἁγίων, and at x. 35, μὴ ἀποβάλλητε τὴν παῤῥησίαν ὑμῶν. The same sentiment occurs at ver. 14. The expression τὸ καύχ. τῆς ἐλπίδος ('the hope in which we boast') is added to qualify the idea contained in παῤῥησ., as not only a sure confidence, but a joyfully hopeful one. Βεβαίαν is made to agree with παῤῥ., as being the more important term, designating the principal thing.

7. The foregoing clause οὗ οἶκος—τέλους is skilfully employed as a vinculum, to connect, with the παῤῥησία there mentioned, an exhortation (extending to iv. 11) to constancy in the profession of a religion which furnishes such a joyful hope; and, as a foundation for it, and to give additional weight to the admonition, we have adduced the words of Ps. xcv. 7—11. Many eminent Expositors, indeed, refer διὸ to βλέπετε at ver. 12, regarding the intermediate portion as parenthetical. That, however, is not a little harsh; and it is better, with Heinrichs, Dindorf, and Kuinoel, to refer it to μὴ σκληρύνητε at ver. 8, in the sense, 'Wherefore (as the Holy Spirit speaks by the Prophet, whose words I make my own), To-day,' &c. 'Here (says Hyperius) we have the conclusion to the whole of the first part of the Epistle, in which, inasmuch as it has been so far satisfactorily proved, that Christ is in nature and essence God, and therefore (in opposition to what certain persons affirmed) superior to the angels; then is justly inferred his superiority to Moses, and an exhortation is given to receive Christ and his doctrine while there is yet time and opportunity; otherwise they would in no wise escape the wrath of God.'

Interwoven with the exhortation is a parallel between the state of the family of Moses (i. e. the Jews in the wilderness), and that of the family of Christ; i. e. Christians under the Gospel, who are proceeding through the wilderness of this world to the heavenly Canaan, 'the rest which remaineth for the people of God' in heaven. The promise of the earthly rest, given by Moses to the Israelites, is paralleled with the glad tidings preached by Christ in the Gospel. The grace and mercy shown to the Israelites is paralleled with that vouchsafed to us Christians; and the important lesson inculcated, that as that grace was meant to produce in them faith and obedience, so was that to us designed to keep us faithfully devoted to God and the Gospel. Also, that as the message of mercy did not profit them, because not embraced in faith; nay, even increased their condemnation, and brought them under God's wrath unto temporal destruction; so we Christians, by the same evil heart of unbelief, may incur God's wrath unto perdition. And here, considering that the application is two-fold, so several of the expressions (as φωνῆς) must be understood in a two-fold sense.

— ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε.] Render, 'if ye would hear;' as Rev. xi. 5, εἴ τις αὐτοὺς θέλῃ ἀδικῆσαι. Answering to this is the similar mode of expression, Matt. xi. 14, εἰ θέλετε δέξασθαι: compare also John x. 16. Φωνῆς here is equivalent to κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου, supra ver. 1. The word σήμερον is very emphatical; meaning, 'at this very time,' namely, of the admonition, ἄχρις οὗ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται (see also iv. 7), since that alone is the 'day of salvation.' See 2 Cor. vi. 2, compared with John ix. 4.

8. μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδ.] q. d. 'Be not obstinate and disobedient [as your fore-fathers were];' see Psalm lxxviii. 8. The words ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ are well rendered by Kuinoel: 'ut [olim] factum loco, qui a rebellione dicitur, tempore tentationis in deserto factæ;' and he shows that, even in the Psalm, Meribah and Massah are not used as proper names, though that use be hinted at; and that the place where the provocation and temptation occurred was in fact called by Moses Massah and Meribah, as appears from Exod. xvii. 7. Moreover, the use of the words as appellatives was more adapted to the purpose of the Epistle, namely, admonition. The Article is here used κατ' ἐξοχήν; for though the Jews provoked and tried the patience of God throughout the whole of their journey through the wilderness (five particular provocations being mentioned, Exod. xvi. 2. xvii. 2—9. xxxii. 10. Num. xi. 32. xiv. 29. Deut. i. 34, seqq.), yet the occasion in question was the last and most signal instance, when God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest.

9. οὗ] is for ὅπου. In ἐδοκίμασαν (i. e. put him to proof, to see what he would do) there may be a climax. Καὶ εἶδον may be rendered (as it is by Dr. French, in his translation of this Psalm) 'although they had seen;' which is required by the Hebrew גם; and this sense of καὶ, like that of the Hebrew ו, is not unfrequent. By ἔργα are denoted the wonderful works wrought for their preservation and protection in Egypt, and their sustenance in the desert.

10. προσώχθισα] 'indignatus sum.' There is the same metaphor as that in προσκρούω and προσκόπτω, except that the one here is derived è re nautica; the word signifying, as used of a ship, to impinge on the shore. In this figurative sense the term also occurs at Ecclus. l. 27, ἐν δυσὶν ἔθνεσι προσώχθισεν ἡ ψυχή μου, and Levit. xxvi. 43. And so the simple verb is used in Hom. Il. A. 570. Moreover, the expression involves a conjoint notion of hatred and loathing.

11 ἔγνωσαν τὰς ὁδούς μου· [i] ὡς ὤμοσα ἐν τῇ ὀργῇ [i] Num. 14. 21.
μου· Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου. Deut. 1. 34.
12 Βλέπετε, ἀδελφοὶ, μήποτε ἔσται ἔν τινι ὑμῶν καρδία πονηρὰ 13 ἀπιστίας, ἐν τῷ ἀποστῆναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζῶντος· [k] ἀλλὰ παρα- [k] Infra 10. 24.
καλεῖτε ἑαυτοὺς καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν, ἄχρις οὗ τὸ σήμερον Rom. 7. 11.
καλεῖται, ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις ἐξ ὑμῶν ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἁμαρ-14 τίας· [l] μέτοχοι γὰρ γεγόναμεν τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐάν περ τὴν [l] Supra v. 6. infra 4. 14.
ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστάσεως μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν κατάσχωμεν. Rom. 8. 17.
15 [m] Ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι· "Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ [m] Supra ver. 7. ἀκούσητε,"—μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς

— ἀεὶ πλανῶνται τῇ καρδίᾳ.] So Isocrates, Epist. ad Jason. liber., has ὑμᾶς ταῖς διανοίαις πλανᾶσθαι. Ἀεὶ here has nothing corresponding to it in the Hebrew, but was added by the Sept. to strengthen the sense; and it is justified by the τεσσ. ἔτη, to which it adverts. Καρδίᾳ must be understood of the affections, as appears from the words following, which are illustrative; and ἔγνωσαν implies not simple ignorance, but the not caring to know, or even disapproval, as far as they might know.

11. εἰ εἰσελεύσονται, &c.] On the force here of εἰ see Note at Mark viii. 12.

— τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου.] Meaning, 'the rest which I had provided for them;' namely, the heavenly Canaan. The term is combined with κληρονομία in Deut. xii. 9.

12. Here we have the exhortation contained in the foregoing passages of Scripture further enforced by various considerations. And first is deduced the important lesson, that they should not harden their hearts to the words of the Gospel. (Hyperius.)

— βλέπετε, ἀδελφοὶ, &c.] The general sense is: 'Beware, brethren, of an evil unbelieving heart, such as the Israelites possessed, lest, like them, you apostatize from the living God; lest you apostatize from the religion of Christ which he has required you to receive and maintain, and thus perish like ancient Israel, who revolted from God.' (Stuart.)

13. ἀλλὰ παρακαλεῖτε ἑαυτοὺς, &c.] Under the term παρακ. is, as Hyperius and Carpzov show, comprehended teaching, admonition, entreaty, consolation, reprehension, &c., each to be used as the case might suit. Ἑαυτοὺς is here, as often, for ἀλλήλους.

Here, then, we have intimated the important truth, that our faith is especially confirmed by mutual exhortation; implying, that as a means to prevent apostasy, they should thus mutually strengthen each other.

— ἄχρις οὗ τὸ σήμερον καλ.] A forcible mode of expression, importing 'as long as it can be said, "To-day do so;"' or (to use the words of Dr. Burton), 'so long as you are allowed to consider the time still unexpired, in which God invites you to hear his voice.'

— ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ, &c.] q. d. Use these means, that none may, by neglect of them, be hardened and grow callous to all remonstrance. Σκληρύνεσθαι properly signifies 'to be so hard as not to yield to the pressure of the finger in touching,' and is here used figuratively of the obstinacy of unbelief. So Theophyl., ὥσπερ τὰ πεπωρωμένα σώματα καὶ σκληρὰ οὐκ εἴκει ταῖς τῶν ἰατρῶν χερσίν· οὕτω καὶ αἱ σκληρυνθεῖσαι ψυχαὶ οὐκ εἴκουσι τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ. In ἀπάτῃ τῆς ἁμαρτίας the expression ἁμ. may be understood of that corruption of our nature, (τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς) which blinds the understanding, and, by giving undue weight to carnal reasonings, plunges men into unbelief, and thus into immorality.

For τις ἐξ ὑμῶν several ancient MSS. and the Ed. Princ. have ἐξ ὑμῶν τις, which has been edited by Griesbach and Scholz. I have thought proper, with Matthæi and Vater, to retain the common reading.

14. μέτοχοι γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ refers, I conceive, to the injunction at ver. 6, which seems implied as the subject of the exhortation at ver. 13; q. d. [κατέχετε τὴν παῤῥησίαν καὶ τὸ καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν,] μέτοχοι γὰρ γεγόναμεν. By μέτ. τοῦ Χρ. is denoted that spiritual union with Christ, which implies participation in the benefits of his Gospel; see John xiv. 11. xvii. 23, and 1 John i. 3. Here Griesbach and Scholz edit, from several of the most ancient MSS. and some Fathers, μέτοχοι τοῦ Χριστοῦ γεγόναμεν: but without any good reason for the change.

— ἐάν περ τὴν, &c.] Ἐάν περ has reference to the above implied sense in μέτοχοι, &c., suspending it on a conditional particle. Here μόνον is to be supplied. Thus the general sense of the clause is (as Stuart expresses it), 'Continue to the end of life to exercise such confidence in Christ as you had at first, and you shall obtain the reward which he has promised.' Ὑποστ. here is synonymous with παῤῥησίαν at ver. 6. Ἀρχὴν τῆς ὑποστ. is for τὴν ἐξ ἀρχῆς ὑπόστασιν, or τὴν ὑπόστασιν τὴν πρώτην (as infra v. 12. John ii. 11), 'your first constancy in the profession of the Gospel.' Answering to this are the similar expressions, at Rev. ii. 4, τὴν ἀγάπην τὴν πρώτην, and ver. 5, τὰ πρῶτα ἔργα, and 1 Tim. v. 12, τὴν πρώτην πίστιν.

15. ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι· Σήμερον, &c.] It would seem that these words do not connect with ver. 13, but refer to what follows; being partly a confirmation of what was said at vv. 12, 13, and partly an introduction to what remained to be said; see Kuinoel and Stuart. Thus ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι is put for κατὰ τὸ λεγόμενον (see Theophylact); or rather we may render it, with Kuinoel, 'Whilst (I say) it is said To-day, i. e. while the warning is yet sounded in your ears, To-day, &c.' So ἐν τῷ λέγειν at viii. 13. I agree with Rosenmuller, Heinrichs, Kuinoel, and Stuart, that the quotaἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ. [n] Τίνες γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρε- 16 πίκραναν; ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες οἱ ἐξελθόντες ἐξ Αἰγύπτου διὰ Μωϋσέως; [o] Τίσι δὲ προσώχθισε τεσσαράκοντα ἔτη; οὐχὶ 17 τοῖς ἁμαρτήσασιν, ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τῇ ἐρήμῳ; [p] Τίσι δὲ 18 ὤμοσε μὴ εἰσελεύσεσθαι εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τοῖς ἀπειθήσασι; Καὶ βλέπομεν, ὅτι οὐκ ἠδυνήθησαν εἰσελθεῖν δι' 19 ἀπιστίαν. IV. Φοβηθῶμεν οὖν, μή ποτε, καταλειπομένης 1 n Num. 14. 4, 11, 24, 30. Deut. 1. 36. o Num. 14. 22, 37. & 26. 65. Ps. 106. 26. 1 Cor. 10. 5, &c. Jude 5. p Num. 14. 30. Deut. 1. 34.

tion in this verse extends only to the words σήμερον—ἀκούσητε, the rest of the verse being an exhortation of the writer. The full sense is, 'To-day, if we are disposed to hear his [warning] voice, [attend!] harden not your hearts to the warning.'

16. The clauses of this verse are by most Commentators taken declaratively, in the sense expressed in our common version. Dindorf, Kuinoel, and Stuart, however, have shown that this is by no means agreeable to the design of the Apostle; which (as Stuart observes) 'is, to lead the minds of the readers to consider the specific sin,—viz., unbelief, which occasioned the ruin of the ancient Israelites, and would involve their posterity in the like condemnation.' The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that the clauses are interrogative, and may be rendered, 'Who now were those who, when they had heard, did provoke [God]? Nay, were they not all who came out of Egypt, under Moses' guidance?' Or, 'Might I not rather ask, or, nay, might I not ask, did not all who came out of Egypt do this?' i. e. all but Joshua and Caleb. Yet Moses, Numb. xiv., speaks of all the congregation as doing it. Of οὐ with an interrogation, in the sense annon, we have another example at 1 Cor. xii. 15.

17—19. The general sense of these three verses, when taken apart from the δεινότης of their expression, may be laid down, after Kuinoel, as follows: 'But what was the fate of those Israelites, whom God had brought out of Egypt, and blessed with so many and great benefits, and who had nevertheless revolted from God? their carcases were strewed in the wilderness, and they attained not unto the rest, i. e. the felicity intended for them by God;' thus meaning to hint what will be the fate of those whom he is addressing, if, after receiving from God benefits far beyond that of the promised land, they imitate the unbelief and disobedience of their forefathers, and apostatize from Christ. Here the terms ἁμαρτ., ἀπείθεια, and ἀπιστία are used as synonymous; the sin of the Israelites being distrust in God, and consequent defection from him; for well has it been said, 'Blind unbelief is sure to err;' it being, as Ernesti observes, 'the origin of all sins, as faith of all virtues.' In ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τ. ἐρ. there is a graphic representation of destruction by a violent death. Had, indeed, κατεστρώθη been substituted for ἔπεσε, it would, indeed, have been yet more so; but πίπτω, like the Heb. נפל, of itself suggests the idea of a sudden and violent death. See Ez. vi. 11. Judg. iv. 22. 1 Sam. xxxi. 8. Κῶλα (which signifies the members, as apart from the trunk,) is said by the Commentators to be put, by synecdoche, for the bodies themselves; but the usual sense may be retained, as being truer to nature (see Ps. cxl. 7), for we find, from the accounts of Oriental travellers, that in places where carcases are found prostrate, the κῶλα (the leg and arm bones) are soon nearly all that are left by the vultures, and that those continue for a long time uncorrupted.

18. Ὤμοσε may denote solemn asseveration rather than swearing, properly so called. Stuart remarks that 'the manner in which the unbelieving Jews were declared, in Numb. xiv. 23. 28. 30, and Deut. i. 34, excluded from the goodly land, and the reasons stated for that exclusion, together with the reasoning of the Apostle, would lead us to suppose exclusion implied from the heavenly Canaan also, or from the rest of God.'

19. Ἠδυνήθ. is not well rendered by some recent Expositors, would not. Indeed, as Grotius, Carpzov, and Ernesti point out, both ἠδυν. and βλέπομεν are taken populariter, the sense being simply, 'we see [by the story and the event];' (in other words, 'we are authorized to infer from the story and the event,) that the reason why they could not enter, was their unbelief; which, together with the sins springing from thence, made them unfit objects of the protection and favour of God;' and thus their introduction to the promised land was so far impossible; as it is said at Mark vi. 5, οὐκ ἠδύνατο ἐκεῖ οὐδεμίαν δύναμιν ποιῆσαι διὰ τὴν ἀπιστίαν αὐτῶν· meaning that 'Christ could not, consistently with the rule on which he acted, of requiring faith in the subjects of the miracles.' So, in the present case, that want of faith which made these Israelites distrust the providence of God rendered them unfit objects of his favour, and made it, in that sense, impossible for God to confer it on them. See more in Calvin and Hyperius.

IV. The writer now treats the history allegorically (as in Gal iii. 16. iv. 24), applying it to the case of Christians. (Dind.) He begins with declaring that a promise of entering into God's rest is still made to Christians,—as it was to the people of Israel, vv. 1, 2,—and into which believers are still admitted, ver. 3. Now that the rest spoken of by the Holy Ghost, in Ps. xcv., is not a mere temporal rest in the land of Canaan, but also a future and heavenly rest, is evident, because God's rest is such a rest as God enjoyed when he had finished the work of creation, and consequently a spiritual, heavenly rest, vv. 3, 4; because the terms of the oath, 'they shall not enter into my rest,' imply that the promise included another rest besides that of Canaan, a rest resembling God's rest, ver. 5; because, since it remains that some must enter into the rest spoken of in the oath, and they to whom the promise was first given did not enter in by reason of unbelief, it follows that a rest must be intended into which all true believers may enter, and consequently a future and heavenly one, ver.

ἐπαγγελίας εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, δοκῇ τις ἐξ 2 ὑμῶν ὑστερηκέναι. Καὶ γάρ ἐσμεν εὐηγγελισμένοι, καθάπερ κἀκεῖνοι· ἀλλ' οὐκ ὠφέλησεν ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς ἐκείνους, 3 μὴ ‡ συγκεκραμένος τῇ πίστει τοῖς ἀκούσασιν. [a] Εἰσερχό- [a] Ps. 95. 11.
μεθα γὰρ εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν οἱ πιστεύσαντες, καθὼς εἴρηκεν·
"Ὡς ὤμοσα ἐν τῇ ὀργῇ μου· Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου·" καίτοι τῶν ἔργων ἀπὸ καταβολῆς

6; and because God, in the oath, warns the Israelites against losing this rest, a long time after they had been in possession of the promised land, and consequently he must have intended another rest than that of Canaan, vv. 7, 8. There remains, therefore, a spiritual and heavenly rest for the people of God, into which those who enter shall cease from their labours, as God did from his work of creation, vv. 9, 10. Hence follows the duty of labouring to enter into it, vv. 11—13. (Holden.)

1. φοβηθῶμεν.] The term denotes, not so much fear, as the consequent on it, anxiety, solicitude, and circumspection; q. d. 'Let us, then, solicitously beware lest,' &c. So at Phil. ii. 12 it is said, μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου τὴν ἑ. σωτηρίαν κατεργάζεσθε, where see Note. Then is shown the nature of this promise, and the character of the rest bestowed.

— καταλειπ. ἐπαγγ.] It is not agreed among Expositors whether the sense is 'spretâ promissione,' or 'relictâ promissione.' Either signification is found both in the Scriptural and Classical writers; but the latter sense, 'a promise being still left,' is far more agreeable to the context, implying that the promised rest had not yet been enjoyed, but was left for others to enter upon. The term ὑστερεῖν signifies, 1. to come too late for a thing, and thereby to miss of it; 2. to fail of obtaining any thing. Finally, of the expression δοκῇ (commonly considered as pleonastic), it is well shown by the best Commentators, ancient and modern, that it is here introduced by way of softening the harshness of the preceding one, ὑστερηκέναι, as δοκῶ at 1 Cor. vii. 40.

2. καὶ γάρ ἐσμεν εὐηγγελ.] Meaning, it would seem, 'for to us [Christians], too, has the blessed message, or proffered blessing [of a rest] been made, as well as to them.' On this allusion to the Gospel as a message, see Note on Acts xiii. 32. In ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκ. we have a Hebraism for ὁ ἀκουσθεὶς λόγος, 'the word heard by them.' See Rom. ix. 6. 1 Thess. ii. 13.

— μὴ συγκεκραμένος—ἀκούσ.] Many eminent Expositors suppose συγκεκ. to be used by a figure taken from the concoction and digestion of food, and its conversion to aliment. But it is more natural, with others, to suppose only a figure derived from the mixture of differing liquids, in order to express complete union. So in Menander (cited by Wetstein) we have τὴν ἐκ λόγου δύναμιν ἤθει χρηστῷ συγκεκραμένην ἔχειν. The sense will thus be, 'faith not accompanying it;' meaning, that they received no benefit from it, because it was not accompanied with faith.

Instead of συγκεκραμένος, several MSS. have συγκεκραμένους, which is approved by Mill, Wetstein, Griesbach, Heinrichs, and Vater, and has been edited by Matthæi. But I agree with Kuinoel, that the common reading ought to be retained, as yielding a sufficiently good meaning; whereas συγκεκραμένους is capable of no tolerable sense.

3. Of this verse the import is rendered not a little obscure by extreme brevity, and also a certain cast of reasoning peculiarly Jewish. Hence various modes of interpretation have been propounded, all of them more or less objectionable. The ancient and common interpretation, in its simplicity and suitableness to the context, has the greatest appearance of truth. It is well observed by Kuinoel, that we have here unfolded, though briefly, what was meant by the foregoing expression in the Psalm, τὴν κατάπαυσιν τοῦ Θεοῦ; namely, a quiet and felicity similar to that which God enjoys; to which Christians are to attain, after having gone through the various troubles and afflictions of the present life. Thus in Rev. xiv. 13 the dead in Christ are said to 'rest from their labours.' See also Wisd. iv. 7. At ver. 4 this rest and felicity to be enjoyed by Christians in heaven is compared to the rest of God after the work of creation was ended,—the Sabbath; and so it is termed at v. 9, σαββατισμός. Accordingly it was, we find, a saying of the Jewish Doctors, that the Sabbath was an image of the future rest of the departed after the resurrection. See Wetstein and Schoettgen.

— εἰσερχόμεθα γάρ, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, left to be supplied from the foregoing context; q. d. 'Glad tidings, I say, have been proclaimed [to us]; for we [Christians], too, do enter (i. e. are to enter) into the rest spoken of in Scripture as follows.' Οἱ πιστεύσαντες. Namely, as opposed to τοῖς ἀπειθήσασι supra iii. 18, and a little before, ver. 2. Καίτοι. Render, nempe, nimirum, 'namely,' or 'and indeed such a rest as God enjoyed [when he rested] from his works after the creation of the world;' the true ellipsis at καίτοι being κατέπαυσεν ἀπό, as it is said, ver. 4, κατέπαυσεν—ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ, and v. 10, κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων, &c. The Article τῶν refers to τοῦ Θεοῦ omitted. Γενηθέντων must signify, 'having gone through,' or completed, and ἀπὸ καταβολῆς, 'after the work of creation.'

The chief difficulty, however, is how to supply what is wanting to the sense at the second clause of the verse, καθὼς εἴρηκεν, &c. It seems best to understand περὶ τῶν ἀπιστησάντων, to correspond to οἱ πιστεύσαντες, which, indeed, suggests this ellipsis; and such omissions of words serving to show the reference, or indicate the application, are frequent after the formulas καθὼς γέγραπται, and such like, of which καθὼς εἴρηκεν here is one, being equivalent to καθὼς εἶπε at John i. 23, and elsewhere, and καθὼς εἴρηται just after. Now in such a case b Gen. 2. 2. Exod. 20. 11. & 31. 17.

κόσμου γενηθέντων. [b] Εἴρηκε γάρ που περὶ τῆς ἑβδόμης 4 οὕτω· Καὶ κατέπαυσεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῇ ἑβδόμῃ ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐν τούτῳ 5 πάλιν· Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου.
Ἐπεὶ οὖν ἀπολείπεται τινὰς εἰσελθεῖν εἰς αὐτήν, καὶ οἱ 6 πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες οὐκ εἰσῆλθον δι' ἀπείθειαν· — c Ps. 95. 7. supra 3. 7, 15.

[c] πάλιν τινὰ ὁρίζει ἡμέραν, Σήμερον, ἐν Δαυὶδ λέγων, 7 μετὰ τοσοῦτον χρόνον· (καθὼς εἴρηται·) Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν. Εἰ γὰρ αὐτοὺς Ἰησοῦς κατέπαυσεν, οὐκ 8 d Rev. 14. 13. 2 Esd. 2. 11.

ἂν περὶ ἄλλης ἐλάλει μετὰ ταῦτα ἡμέρας· [d] ἄρα ἀπολείπεται 9

the formula merely imports that some truth adverted to may be collected from the words thus introduced. Thus it is here meant that the truth just mentioned may be collected from the words of God concerning the faithless Hebrews, that they should not enter his rest; implying that the faithful would. So Calvin well remarks, 'Argumentum est a contrariis. Sola incredulitas arcet; ergo fidei patet ingressus.'

4, 5. It is now shown, by a reference to Scripture, what sort of rest is to be understood by the expression 'my rest,' even a heavenly and spiritual one; and here it is to be observed, the force of the argument is in the terms αὐτοῦ and μου; for περὶ τῆς ἑβδ. must not be regarded as the subject spoken of; as, indeed, is plain from the words themselves of the quotation. The purpose of περὶ τῆς ἑβδ. is simply to make the reference in που more definite, and therefore λέγων may be supplied. Thus there will be that kind of reference, so usual among the ancients, by which, as books were not yet distributed into Chapters, a division was made according to the prominent subjects any where treated of. See my Note on Thucyd. i. 9, ἐν τοῦ σκήπτρου τῇ παραδόσει.

6. ἐπεὶ οὖν—ἀπείθειαν.] The only mode of interpreting this sentence, so as to make it agreeable to the context, is to suppose that here, as occasionally elsewhere in Scripture, the conclusion of the argument is left to be supplied, which may be done thus: 'It follows, then, that οἱ ὕστερον εὐαγγελισθέντες εἰσελεύσονται διὰ πίστιν.' And this is the less harsh in the present case, since a conclusion comprising it is introduced at ver. 9, meant both for the argument at vv. 7, 8, and for that in ver. 6.

The above view is, I find, supported by the opinion of Prof. Stuart, who gives the following able illustration of the sense of this verse, in conjunction with what goes before: 'We have here a resumption of the subject in ver. 3, after the explanations of rest which vv. 4, 5 contain. There the writer says, "Believers enter into the rest of God." How is this proved? "Because he has sworn that unbelievers shall not enter into it;" which necessarily implies that believers shall enter into it. Then, after delaying a moment in order to show what the nature of the rest in question is, viz. that it is God's rest, i. e. such rest as God enjoyed after the work of creation was completed (vv. 3—5), the author resumes the consideration of the proposition advanced in the first part of ver. 3, and avers that, as some must enter into God's rest (for God could not be supposed to have provided one in vain), and as unbelievers cannot enter in, so it is necessarily implied that believers, and they only, will enjoy the rest in question.'

7, 8. The argument here (not very clearly expressed) may be traced, after Whitby, and other eminent Expositors, as follows: 'And since the Psalmist, so long after the Israelites entering into Canaan, speaks of a set time of entering into his rest, and that time is still future, and typical of something under the Gospel; for Joshua did not give the rest, emphatically called the rest of God, otherwise the Holy Ghost would not so long after that, in David's time, have spoken of another day of entering into his rest; it follows, therefore, that there must be yet another rest remaining to the people of God.'

7. πάλιν τινὰ ὁρίζει ἡμέραν, &c.] 'And again he defines and appoints a certain time, a to-day,' i. e. he defines and mentions another time by the same name to-day, at which they were to enter into this rest, saying, 'by David, after such a time as we have before mentioned, namely, forty years;' 'for if Joshua had brought them to that rest (i. e. true and stable one), God would not have spoken, by David, of another time hereafter; from which we are to beware lest we be excluded.'

9. ἄρα ἀπολείπεται σαββατισμὸς, &c.] q. d. 'So, then, by the tenour of the Christian covenant (vv. 2, 3) there does remain,' &c. Here, for ἀνάπαυσις before, we have substituted the somewhat rare term σαββατισμὸς, partly to exclude any idea that the rest of God spoken of might be the Sabbatical rest, and partly, by thus comparing it with the Sabbath, to intimate that that was a symbol of the true and eternal sabbath with God in heaven, of which their Doctors spoke (see Schoettgen, Hor. Heb.), the rest and felicity of the world to come, the age of consolation. Of which sabbatism it is well said by Bengel, 'In tempore sabbata multa, sed tum erit sabbatismus, perpetuus, perfectus, plenus, æternus.' On this exalted theme a sacred Poet has beautifully expatiated in the following fine lines:—

'There is a place, beyond that flaming hill,
From whence the stars their thin appearance shed;
A place beyond all place; where never ill
Nor impure thought was ever harboured;
But saintly heroes are for ever said
To keep an everlasting sabbath's rest.'

10 σαββατισμὸς τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ. ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὐτὸς κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων 11 αὐτοῦ, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ τῶν ἰδίων ὁ Θεός. Σπουδάσωμεν οὖν εἰσελθεῖν εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν κατάπαυσιν· ἵνα μὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ 12 τις ὑποδείγματι πέσῃ τῆς ἀπειθείας. [e] Ζῶν γὰρ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐνεργὴς, καὶ τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πᾶσαν μάχαιραν δίστομον, καὶ διϊκνούμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ ψυχῆς τε καὶ πνεύ-ματος, ἁρμῶν τε καὶ μυελῶν· καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ 13 ἐννοιῶν καρδίας. [f] καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχηλισμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ, πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος.

e Isa. 49. 2. Jer. 23. 29. Prov. 5. 4. 1 Cor. 14. 24. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5. Eph. 6. 17.
f 2 Chron. 16. 9. Job 26. 6. Ps. 33. 13, 14, 15. & 34. 16. & 90. 8. & 139. 11, 12. Eccl 15. 19.

10. ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν—ὁ Θεός.] This is meant to show that that rest of God, into which true believers are to enter, may, in a certain sense, be called ὁ σαββατισμός.

11. It having now been shown that there is a promise of spiritual rest to faithful Christians, we have next subjoined, by way of conclusion thereto, an exhortation (similar to those supra iii. 12—14. iv. 1) to strive after this rest; after which is then reiterated the caution against unbelief in the Saviour, with an intimation of the awful consequences that must attend it.

— ἵνα μὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ, &c.] 'lest any one [of us] perish, in the same manner, by unbelief and contumacy.'

12, 13. Having shown that unbelievers shall not enter into the rest of God, the Apostle now represents the awful nature of the denunciations of God in Scripture against unbelief and apostasy, and forcibly evinces the impossibility that any unbelief lurking in the heart can escape his all-seeing eye.

12. ζῶν γὰρ ὁ λόγος, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to a clause suppressed; q. d. [' There would be great guilt and danger in such unbelief;] for,' &c. In the interpretation of these words, from their highly figurative character somewhat obscure, the preceding context is our best guide. From this it would seem that the expression ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ is to be taken, not (as many understand it) of the word of God in general, but (as the best Expositors are agreed) only of the minatory declarations to be found therein. So in 3 Esdr. i. 47 we have οὐκ ἐνετράπησαν ἀπὸ τῶν ῥηθέντων λόγων ὑπὸ Ἱερεμίου τοῦ προφήτου. Ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργὴς signifies, per hendiadyn, 'of mighty energy and of unfailing fulfilment on the disobedient:' a force of ζῶν found both in the Scriptural and the Classical writers. So at 1 Pet. i. 3 we have ἐλπὶς ζῶσα, and 1 Esdr. iv. 38. Ecclus. xlii. 23. This awful efficacy of God's judgments on the soul is represented by a most forcible comparison with the dreadful effects produced on the body by the μάχαιρα δίστομος, or δίστομον ξίφος, answering to our battle-axe, with which, in war, the heroes of antiquity used to mow down whole ranks of the enemy. By a similar image it is said, Wisd. xviii. 15, 16 (a passage which well illustrates the present), 'Thine almighty word (ὁ παντοδύναμός σου λόγος) leaped down from heaven out of thy royal throne, as a fierce man of war (ἀπότομος πολεμιστὴς) into the midst of a land of destruction, and brought thine unfeigned commandment as a sharp sword,' &c. Compare also Rev. i. 16. ii. 12. xix. 15. Understanding, however, by ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ' the word of God' in its usual acceptation, the meaning will be (as Abp. Newcome expresses it), 'that this separates, as it were, the soul and body of man, influencing his passions by the most affecting motives, and convincing his reason by the most powerful arguments; so that it pervades the inmost recesses of the human mind, as a sword divides the joints and the marrow;' importing, as Calvin says, ' Nihil esse tam durum aut solidum in homine, nihil tam reconditum, quo non perveniat hæc Verbi efficacia.' Agreeably to this view of the expression ψυχῆς τε καὶ πνεύματος, it is observed by Valcknaer, that when the two words ψυχὴ and πνεῦμα are joined in the New Test., by the former are denoted the carnal appetites; by the latter, the appetite for things spiritual and celestial.

In the words following, καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων, &c. we have another and no less momentous consideration, (engrafted on the former, and suggested by the figure in διϊκνούμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ ψυχῆς τε καὶ πνεύματος, &c.) importing, as Calvin explains, 'the effect of God's word in bringing the mind of man out of the labyrinth, as it were, in which it was before involved, and leading it to the full light of knowledge.' Compare 1 Cor. xiv. 24.

13. The foregoing sentiment is now confirmed by transferring what was before said of the word of God to God himself, its author. So it is well remarked by Calvin, ' Ut confirmet illud, verbo Dei quicquid in homine absconditum est dijudicari, argumentum a naturâ Dei sumit. Nulla, inquit, creatura est, quæ lateat oculos Dei.'

— πάντα γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχηλισμένα, &c.] Of this expression τετραχ. the general import is obvious, but the nature of the metaphor has been somewhat disputed. The most probable opinion is, that we have here an allusion to the bending back of the head, so as to lay bare the neck, as in slaughtering animals. So Diog. Laërt. vi. 61, we have ἰδὲ τὸν κριὸν ἀρειμάνιον, ὡς ὑπὸ τοῦ τυχόντος κορασίου τραχηλίζεται.

Of the words following, πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, the sense may be that assigned by many eminent Interpreters, ancient and modern (including Chrysostom and the Pesch. Syr. Translator), 'Him, to whom we have to render an account;' in which case there will be an ellipsis of ἔστι for ἀποδο-g "Εχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα μέγαν, διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρα- 14 νοὺς, Ἰησοῦν τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, κρατῶμεν τῆς ὁμολογίας.

h Οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ἀρχιερέα μὴ δυνάμενον συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς 15 ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν, πεπειραμένον δὲ κατὰ πάντα καθ' ὁμοιό-τητα, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας. i Προσερχώμεθα οὖν μετὰ παῤῥη- 16 σίας τῷ θρόνῳ τῆς χάριτος, ἵνα λάβωμεν ἔλεον, καὶ χάριν g Supra 3. 1. infra 6. 20. & 7. 26. & 8. 1. & 9. 11, 24. & 10. 23. h Isa. 53. 3. Luke 22. 28. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Phil. 2. 7. supra 2. 17. 1 Pet. 2. 22. 1 John 3. 5 i Rom. 3. 25. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. infra 10. 19, &c.

τέος ἔστι: though, according to the more usual interpretation of λόγος, (negotium, concern,) the sense will come to the same thing, namely, 'with whom is our concern,' 'with whom we are concerned as our Lawgiver and our Judge.'

Finally, much of the doubt which has here existed as to the reference in αὐτοῦ and the sense of λόγος, appears to have arisen from inattention to the construction of this verse, which may be laid down as follows: καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις ἀφανὴς ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος· πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχηλισμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς αὐτοῦ. The sentence consists of two sentences blended into one, and ὁ λόγος might be meant to be taken in both the above senses, one for each clause, thus: 'Moreover there exists no creature that is not manifest in the sight of Him with whom we have to do; but all things are naked and exposed to his eyes, unto whom we have to render an account.'

14. ἔχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα, &c.] The οὖν is resumptive, referring to a subject commenced supra iii. 1 (but interrupted by the digression on the unbelieving Jews in the desert), namely, that of Christ as our High Priest, and the superiority of his priesthood to the Levitical one: a subject on which the Apostle treats up to ch. x. 18, enlarging on it thus much, from its great importance, bearing as it does so directly on the most momentous part of Christ's office, his atonement for sin by the sacrifice of himself.

— ἀρχιερέα μέγαν.] The term μέγαν has much significancy, adverting to the various points of superiority in Christ over Moses, or the High Priests above mentioned. Διεληλ. τοὺς οὐρανοὺς, 'who hath passed through the heavens,' viz. so as to reach the seat of the Majesty on high; for the Jews reckoned three heavens,—the aerial, the sidereal, and the highest heaven, or the residence of God and the angels, called by the Son of Sirach, xvi. 18, ὁ οὐρανὸς τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. See 2 Cor. xii. 2, and Note. Agreeably to this idea, there were three divisions of the Temple,—the Court, the Sanctum, and the Sanctum Sanctorum; to the furthest of which, and through the Veil that hid it from view, the High Priest passed once every year. Thus the passing in the one case is compared to the passing in the other; and by passing to the farthest heaven is implied completion of the work of expiation, and access to God fully obtained. Τῆς ὁμολογίας is to be taken as at iii. 1, where see Note.

15. This is meant to encourage them to follow his admonition, by reference to another point of superiority in the new dispensation, which is, that 'in Jesus their High Priest they have one not too exalted to concern himself with their miseries, but one who can sympathize with their infirmities;' as was before evinced, ii. 18. 'To a nature (says Dr. Blair, in an able Sermon on this text,) altogether raised above us we must have looked up with terror; but he who remembers the struggles of his own soul, will not surely judge ours like a hard master. Acquainted with the inmost recesses of the heart, he perceives the sincerity of our intentions; he sees the combat we maintain; he hears the voice of those secret aspirations, which we are unable to express in words, or form into prayer.'

— συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις, &c.] So συμπ. is used in the Sept. and Philo. In the expression ἀσθενείαις we have a notion of misery resulting from human frailty. Πεπειρ. adverts both to trials by affliction and temptations to sin; importing, however, no more than the being susceptible to temptation, from the possession of a human nature; though, indeed, our Saviour Christ was, in some respect, tempted, and assuredly tried beyond what men are; his whole life being little else than one unvaried conflict or trial of virtue.

— καθ' ὁμοιότητα] scil. ἡμῶν, for ὁμοίως ἡμῶν, 'like unto us.' Merely meaning, that he was solicited to sin (as in the case of the Temptation in the wilderness), not that he yielded to it, as is implied in the next words.

— χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας.] The sense here assigned by some ancient and many eminent modern Expositors, 'without giving way under those afflictions,' is little forcible or suitable. It is plain from the foregoing expressions, ἀσθενείαις and πεπειραμένον, that the only true interpretation is the commonly received one, 'without yielding to, or falling into sin;' which is, I find, also adopted by Kuinoel, who confirms it from v. 2. vii. 26. 2 Cor. v. 21. 1 Pet. ii. 22. 1 John iii. 5.

16. προσερχώμεθα οὖν, &c.] We have here an inference and exhortation founded on the foregoing doctrine; q. d. 'Having, then, a High Priest who can sympathize, &c., let us approach with confidence to the throne of a gracious God, as well we may, assured that whatever we ask in prayer, nothing doubting, we shall receive;' see Matt. xxi. 22. Deyling and Kuin. have shown the exact propriety of the term προσερχ. by adverting to the circumstances of the worship of the Jewish people in the Temple, who were not admitted to approach even the altar of the holocausts, unless when they offered a sacrifice. In the expression τῷ θρόνῳ τῆς χάρ. the allusion is certainly not, what some suppose, to the Jewish notion of God's having two thrones,—of mercy and of judgment; but rather (as the best Commentators suppose) to the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat (Rom. iii. 25), where God was represented as sitting enthroned, hearing the supplications of the people, accepting their oblations, and dispensing ἔλεον καὶ χάριν. The terms λάβωμεν and εὕρωμεν are synonymous, though the latter is the stronger. Ἔλεος and χάρις, too, are generally synonymous; the gracious dispensations of God being called his mercies, to intimate our unworthiness of them. Here, however, the terms have a distinct

1 εὕρωμεν, εἰς εὔκαιρον βοήθειαν. V. [a] Πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς ἐξ a Supr. 2. 17. infra 8. 3. ἀνθρώπων λαμβανόμενος, ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων καθίσταται τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, ἵνα προσφέρῃ δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν·
2 [b] μετριοπαθεῖν δυνάμενος τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις· ἐπεὶ b Supr. 2. 18 & 4. 15. infra 7. 28.
3 καὶ αὐτὸς περίκειται ἀσθένειαν. [c] Καὶ διὰ ταύτην ὀφείλει, c Lev. 9. 7. & 16. 3, &c. καθὼς περὶ τοῦ λαοῦ, οὕτω καὶ περὶ ἑαυτοῦ, προσφέρειν infra 7. 26.
4 ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν. [d] Καὶ οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις λαμβάνει τὴν τιμὴν, d Exod. 28. 1. 1 Chron. 23. 13.
ἀλλὰ [ὁ] καλούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καθάπερ καὶ [ὁ] 2 Chron. 26. 16, &c.

sense with reference to the two ideas involved in πεπειραμένον at ver. 15, viz., mercy and compassion to beings encompassed with sin, and surrounded with trials and tribulations (see ver. 15), and grace vouchsafed at all times, to comfort, support, and sanctify them.

— εἰς εὔκαιρ. βοήθ.] for εἰς βοήθ. ἐν καιρῷ, 'for seasonable help,' 'to be helped opportunely.' It is a fine observation of Bengel: 'Fideles apparatum gratiæ non sentiunt simul in longa tempora; sed quum incidit tempus, præsentem eam inveniunt; et hæc opportunitas maxime incidit in tempora Nov. Test. Rom. iii. 26. v. 6, et sub eo in tempora crucis.'

V. In order more fully to set forth the nature and efficacy of the Priesthood of Christ, the Apostle carries forward his comparison between the Jewish High Priest and Christ; and in order thereto he begins by describing the requisites for the former; and then proceeds to evince that Jesus Christ is the true High Priest, and infinitely superior to the Jewish ones, by having all the requisites for the office, and that in the highest degree. First, the high priest is described as one ἐξ ἀνθρώπων, taken or selected from among men, and consequently of mere human condition; involving a tacit comparison with Christ, the Divine High Priest.

1. πᾶς ἀρχιερεὺς, &c.] The singular is here used generically, to denote the whole class of persons so called.

— ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων καθίσταται τὰ π. τ. Θ.] i. e. 'is appointed [such] for the benefit of men in respect to their observances towards God.' So in Josephus, Bell. ii. 1. 2, the Jews, as a reason for deposing their present high priest, allege προσήκειν αὐτοῖς εὐσεβέστερον αἱρεῖσθαι καὶ καθαρώτερον.

— ἵνα προσφέρῃ δῶρα, &c.] These words indicate the purpose for which the office was especially appointed. In προσφ. we have a sacrificial term, found also at Matt. v. 23, and John xvi. 2. The expressions δῶρα and ϑυσίαι are properly distinct; the former being the original term, and such as chiefly respected the most ancient and primitive kind of oblation, that of the fruits of the earth, and, indeed, the unbloody offerings in general (ἀναθήματα), which were afterwards called thank-offerings (a distinction observable in Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 1. 5, where it is said that the Essenes, εἰς τὸ ἱερὸν ἀναθήματα στέλλοντες, ϑυσίας οὐκ ἐπιτελοῦσι); the latter, the bloody offerings, the various sin and trespass-offerings made by slain beasts. Sometimes, however (as infra viii. 4, and often in the Sept.), δῶρον includes the idea both of the unbloody and the bloody sacrifices. Here the terms are conjoined to denote universality.

2. μετριοπαθεῖν δυνάμενος.] This expression, from its corresponding to the one before used, συμπαθῆσαι δυνάμενος, (see iv. 15) must, of course, denote something nearly allied to it, though not (as some have supposed) the same. The term μετριοπαθεῖν properly signifies 'to carry oneself with moderation,' holding the passions under due restraint, so as not to give way to anger or any other excess, (as was enjoined by the Peripatetic philosophers, in opposition to the Stoics, who maintained that a man should be superior to the influence of the passions, and held that the wise man was not ἀπαθὴς, but μετριοπαθής; see Diog. Laërt. v. 31). Hence it came to denote, as here, 'the being gentle, forbearing, and indulgent to the failings of others.' By the expression δύναται is meant not so much the power as the disposition to show indulgence.

In τοῖς ἀγνοοῦσι καὶ πλανωμένοις we are not justified in supposing (as some eminent Commentators have done) a mere Hendiadys for τοῖς ἐξ ἀγν. πλαν.; since, as Dindorf, Kuinoel, and Stuart remark, the indulgence of the High Priest on earth was not limited merely to this class of offenders, much less is the clemency of our great High Priest in the heavens so limited; see also Levit. vi. 1—7. The words are, by the Hellenistic use, nearly synonymous; see Psalm xxv. 7, compared with 2 Chron. xxviii. 13, where ἀγν. is put, per ὑποκορισμὸν, for ἁμαρτάνειν. And so ἀγνοεῖ and ἀγνόημα in Ecclus. v. 18, and ἀγνόημα in Hebr. ix. 7.

— περίκειται ἀσθένειαν.] We have here a metaphor taken from clothing, and employed, as often, to denote the being intimately conversant with, and implying the idea of habit, by which a thing cleaves to us, even as the fabled garment of Nessus to Hercules, of which it is said in Soph. Trach. 770, καὶ προσπτύσσετο Πλευραῖσιν ἀρτίκολλος, ὥστε τέκτονος Χιτὼν ἅπαν κατ' ἄρθρον.

3. διὰ ταύτην] 'on account of this [frailty and the sinning consequent upon it].'

— καὶ περὶ ἑαυτοῦ.] This he was bound to do, if conscious of any particular sin. The sacrifice was a young bullock; which, for greater security, was always offered up by the High Priest for himself on the day of Expiation. See Levit. xvi. 11. 24.

Now Christ, being wholly free from sin (see supra iv. 15), had no need of any such personal propitiatory sacrifice.

4. οὐχ ἑαυτῷ τις λαμβάνει τὴν τιμήν.] Τιμὴ, like the Latin honor, is a term often used of office, whether political or religious. The expression e Ps. 2. 7. John 8. 54. Acts 13. 33. supra 1. 5. f Ps. 110. 4. infra 7. 17. g Ps. 22. 1. Matt. 26. 37, 38, &c. & 27. 46, 50. Mark 15. 34. John 12. 27. & 17. 1. h Supra 1. 5, 8. & 3. 6. Phil. 2. 6, 8.

ʼΑαρών. [e] Οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἑαυτὸν ἐδόξασε γενη- 5 θῆναι ἀρχιερέα, ἀλλʼ ὁ λαλήσας πρὸς αὐτόν· Υἱός μου εἶ σύ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε· [f] καθὼς καὶ ἐν ἑτέρῳ 6 λέγει· Σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ. [g] Ὃς ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ,— 7 δεήσεις τε καὶ ἱκετηρίας πρὸς τὸν δυνάμενον σώζειν αὐτὸν ἐκ θανάτου, μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχυρᾶς καὶ δακρύων, προσενέγκας, καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας,— [h] καίπερ ὢν Υἱός, 8 λαμβάνειν ἑαυτῷ signifies 'to arrogate to oneself that to which one has no claim.' The use here of the Present tense serves to denote what is customary; the sense being (by an idiom also found infra vii. 13, and elsewhere), 'no one can lawfully, or ought to take it to himself.'

— ἀλλὰ ὁ καλούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Meaning, that this office must be of Divine appointment. The ὁ before καλούμενος found in the common text has been cancelled (on the authority of many MSS. and early Editions) by Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and rightly; since it might easily originate with the scribes, or be an insertion of some injudicious Critics; though, as Bp. Middleton observes, far from assisting, it disturbs the sense; καλούμενος here being opposed to ἑαυτῷ just before; q. d. 'not of his own accord, but being called thereto by God.' On the same authority the ὁ before ʼΑαρὼν has been cancelled.

5. It is now shown that, whereas no one could take upon himself the Levitical high-priesthood, unless called by God, as Aaron was, Christ not only was appointed to his priestly office by God, but had an everlasting priesthood conferred upon him, of which Melchizedec's was but a type. Again, Christ's priestly office was thus far superior to that under the Law, that he was appointed to it by an immediate investment from above, in virtue of his relation to God as Son, which made him High Priest in a far higher sense. This appointment is, ver. 6, shown by reference to Psalm ii. 7 and cx. 4, the two passages being regarded as prophetical, and the prediction therein fulfilled in Christ.

— οὐχ ἑαυτὸν ἐδόξασε.] Corresponding to οὐχ ἑαυτῷ λαμβάνει before.

— ἀλλʼ ὁ λαλήσας πρὸς αὐτόν.] Supply, not per ellipsin, but from the context, ἐδόξασεν αὐτόν; q. d. 'God who spoke these words appointed Christ to be our High Priest;' the appellation Υἱὸς implying that dignity.

6. κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελ.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is for κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα, 'after the manner of,' as at vii. 15. 'The particulars (says Stuart) of the comparison, in respect to the priesthood of Christ and Melchizedec, are not immediately brought into view, but suspended until the writer has introduced other considerations relative to Christ as a priest, vv. 7—9, and given vent to his feelings of concern for those whom he was addressing, by suggesting various considerations, adapted to reprove, v. 11—14; to warn, vi. 1—9; as well as to excite and animate them, vi. 10—20.'

7—9. Of these verses the exact reference, scope, and bearing have been not a little disputed. They would seem to be (as Newcome and Stuart regard them) explanatory of ver. 2, being intended to be subservient to the comparison of Christ, as a priest, with the Jewish priests. Hence is evinced the fitness of Christ to be a compassionate High Priest, inasmuch as from his assumption of human nature, and exposure to its infirmities, he can pity the infirmities of others.

7. ὃς ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς, &c.] There is here, together with a certain obscurity in the phraseology, a perplexity in the construction, which some attempt to remove by placing in a parenthesis the words δεήσεις τε—εὐλαβείας; others, the whole of ver. 8; and others, again, the words καίπερ ὢν Υἱός: each of which methods lies open to objection, and not one of them completely removes the difficulty. The obscurity here seems to be chiefly occasioned by the insertion of the words καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλ.; and if these are considered as parenthetical, the sense will be effectually cleared. By ἡμέρ. τῆς σαρκὸς αὐ. is meant, 'during the time when he lived as a man among men;' in which there is an evident allusion to the period before he had put off his Divine nature, of course implying that he had such. Σαρκὸς also carries with it a notion of the frailty and misery of the flesh; 'the whole (as Stuart observes) designating the condition of the LOGOS on earth (see John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16), and the period of the Saviour's humiliation;' on which see Calvin.

Of the expression προσφέρειν δεήσεις (in which we have a sacrificial allusion) several examples occur in the later writers. Δεήσεις and ἱκετ. are terms nearly synonymous (though the latter is rather the stronger one, and therefore introduced last), but united for greater intensity of sense. With ἰσχυρὸς in this unusual sense vehement, ardent, I would compare a very similar expression in Eurip. Med. 999, στεῤῥὰς ἐνεγκοῦσʼ ἐν τόκοις ἀλγηδόνας. The expressions μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχ. καὶ δακρύων (corresponding to similar ones in Josephus, Bell. i. 32. 3, μετὰ ὀλολυγμοῦ καὶ δακρύων) are to be construed after δεήσεις καὶ ἱκετηρίας; the whole referring to our Lord's earnest prayers during his agony in the garden of Gethsemane.

— καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας.] It is a disputed question whether the expression τῆς εὐλαβ. should be rendered fear, or piety. Either sense is permitted by the usus loquendi, and especially the former, which is a signification of the word most frequent in the later Greek writers and the Sept., and is here preferable on the score of greater strength and suitableness. Thus the term εἰσακουσθεὶς will have a sort of double sense, by what is called a sensus prægnans (an idiom common both in the Scriptural and Classical writers); in illustration of which Comment-

9 ἔμαθεν, ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, τὴν ὑπακοήν· [i] καὶ τελειωθεὶς ἐγένετο [i Supra 2. 10.]
τοῖς ὑπακούουσιν αὐτῷ πᾶσιν αἴτιος σωτηρίας αἰωνίου, 10 προσαγορευθεὶς ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀρχιερεὺς κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ.
11 Περὶ οὗ πολὺς ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, καὶ δυσερμήνευτος λέγειν, 12 ἐπεὶ νωθροὶ γεγόνατε ταῖς ἀκοαῖς. [k] Καὶ γάρ, ὀφείλοντες [k 1 Cor. 3. 1, 2, 3. 1 Pet. 2. 2.]
εἶναι διδάσκαλοι διὰ τὸν χρόνον, πάλιν χρείαν ἔχετε τοῦ ators refer to a similar use of the Hebr. ענה in Psalm xxii. 22, and Job xxxv. 12, where the Sept. similarly has καὶ οὐ μὴ εἰσακούσῃ καὶ ἀπὸ ὕβρεως πονηρῶν, 'and yet thou wilt not hear, and so deliver him from the insolence of the wicked;' see also Psalm lv. 16. 2 Chron. xviii. 31. Psalm cxviii. 18. The full sense will then be, 'was heard in respect to that which he feared;' i. e., was so heard as to be delivered from this fear, namely, that horrible fear, of which we have so affecting a description at Matt. xxvi. 37, and from which he was delivered by an angel strengthening him, Luke xxii. 43. So Bengel well remarks: 'Exauditus est, non ut ne biberet calicem, sed ut jam sine horrore ullo biberet; unde etiam per angelum est corroboratus.'

8. καίπερ ὢν Υἱός.] Render, not 'though he were a son;' but 'though he was the Son,' namely, of God; by a use of Υἱὸς without the article, also found supra i. 1 (where see Note). So the words are taken by the ancient Translators and Commentators almost universally; and this view of the sense is, moreover, confirmed by the close connexion which may be observed to exist between καίπερ ὢν Υἱὸς and ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ, meaning, 'when he was made man.'

— ἔμαθεν, ἀφ' ὧν ἔπαθε, &c.] In ἔμαθε—ἔπαθε there is supposed to be a paronomasia, probably founded on the proverb μαθήματα τὰ παθήματα, which may be traced to Herodotus, i. 107. The expression ἔμαθε τὴν ὑπακοὴν is best regarded (without any reference to metaphysical refinements) as a popular mode of speaking, to denote that 'he was made to learn, experimentally, how difficult it is to obey God's will amidst complicated trials.' 'This, indeed (as Calvin observes) was done, nostri respectu, for our instruction, that he might thus give an illustrious proof and specimen of his subjection to death; though, indeed, it may be said that Christ by his death learnt to the full what it is to obey God, when he had then so especially to deny himself and renounce his own will, by yielding himself, of his own free will, obedient to that death which he dreaded. It is meant, then, that 'by the experience of sufferings Christ learnt to what an extent it is necessary for us to yield submission and obedience to the will of God. And therefore we also, after his example, must, by various afflictions, and at length by death itself, be instructed and formed to a like obedience.'

9. τελειωθείς.] This has reference to ἔπαθε at ver. 8; and hence the word must here have the same sense as at ii. 10, τὸν ἀρχηγὸν—διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι, namely, 'to bring or exalt to glory in heaven.' So it is well observed by Calvin, that 'here we have the final or remote end (as it is called) why Christ must needs thus suffer; namely, that thus he was inaugurated to his priestly office; as though the Apostle would say, that his suffering of death, even the death of the cross, was a sort of solemn consecration in Christ, whereby he signifies the reference which all his sufferings have to our salvation.'

— τοῖς ὑπακούουσιν α.] Meaning, an obedience to his Gospel as full and unreserved as that rendered by Christ to God the Father. Αἴτιος, effector. Equivalent to ἀρχηγὸς at ii. 10. The same expression is used by Philo, t. ii. p. 440.

10. προσαγορευθείς.] The sense seems to be, 'being proclaimed and constituted.' Appointment to office was in ancient, as in modern, times, made by saluting the person by the title attached to the office.

11. We have now, to the end of the next chapter, a digression (though introductory and preparatory to the main purpose, the priesthood of Christ), which, as Calvin suggests, seems intended to rouse the mind of the reader to increased attention. Accordingly, this portion consists of reproof and exhortation, intermixed, however, with consolation. 'The Apostle (as Stuart observes) is led to remark on the difficulty of the subject, more especially with reference to the spiritual ignorance of those whom he is addressing; accordingly, he suggests certain considerations adapted as well to reprove them for their deficiency in the knowledge necessary to enable them to fully understand what he is about to say, and to excite them to attention and an earnest endeavour to fully acquire it.' So Hyperius observes, 'Probatio est segniter a progressuum tenuitate.' And he adds: 'Habet paulo plus acrimoniæ hæc probatio, si quadam sarcasmi specie, aut certe cum stomacho ac gestu acriter reprehendentis et subirascentis pronunciata accipiatur. Sic autem pronunciatam colligere licet ex ipsa rerum et verborum dispositione.'

— περὶ οὗ] 'respecting which [personage and his priesthood].' Or, 'which [matter],' namely, the comparison of the priesthood of Melchizedec and Christ. Δυσερμ. λέγειν is for δυσ. ἐν τῷ λέγειν, 'difficult to be made intelligible, in speaking on that subject.' Πολὺς ὁ λόγος. So in Dionys. Hal. i. 23, we have, περὶ ὧν πολὺς ἂν εἴη ὁ λόγος. Νωθροὶ γεγόν. ταῖς ἀκ., 'you are dull in apprehension.'

12. καὶ γάρ, &c.] The καὶ is by some rendered etenim, or præcipue; but such a sense is precarious; and it is better to suppose a clause omitted, to which the γὰρ refers, and to assign to καὶ its usual sense also or even; q. d. '[And such ye are,] for though ye ought, according to the time, to be teachers,' &c.

— διὰ τὸν χρόνον] 'in respect to, or considering the time [ye have learnt the Gospel].' Meaning, that they had learnt long enough to be teachers; i. e. long enough to understand, not merely the elements, but the more recondite docδιδάσκειν ὑμᾶς, τίνα τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ· καὶ γεγόνατε χρείαν ἔχοντες γάλακτος, καὶ οὐ 1 1 Cor. 3. 2. & 14. 20. Eph. 4. 14. στερεᾶς τροφῆς. [1] Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ μετέχων γάλακτος, ἄπειρος 13 λόγου δικαιοσύνης· νήπιος γάρ ἐστι. τελείων δέ ἐστιν ἡ 14 στερεὰ τροφὴ, τῶν διὰ τὴν ἕξιν τὰ αἰσθητήρια γεγυμνασμένα ἐχόντων πρὸς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε καὶ κακοῦ. VI. Διὸ 1 trines of the Gospel. At διδάσκειν supply ἡμᾶς. Τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς, for τὰ πρῶτα στοιχεῖα; meaning faith, repentance, and such like. So called, as being those which the learner στείχει goes upon in seeking to attain further knowledge. Similarly Plutarch, de Educ. 16, has στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρετῆς.

Τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ some, as Kuinoel and Stuart, explain (as also did formerly Grotius, Estius, and others), the doctrines or communications of God in the Gospel, the system of Divine truths, which we understand by Christianity: a view of the sense confirmed by vi. 1.

— καὶ γεγόνατε χρείαν ἔχοντες, &c.] 'and have become such as need,' &c.; q. d. 'like children, who cannot digest any but the lightest food.' The comparison of knowledge, or doctrine, to food is frequent in the Jewish writers. The elementary and the more recondite doctrines are here compared to milk and solid food, respectively, just as at 1 Cor. iii. 2 γάλα is opposed to βρῶμα. By στερεὰ τροφὴ is meant solid food (called by Galen ἰσχυρὸν βρῶμα, and by Arrian, Epict. ii. 16. 39, τροφὴ στερεωτέρα), such as that of flesh, and grain in its most condensed state; as opposed to milk, porridge, and such like, elegantly termed by Sophocles νέα τροφή.

13, 14. Here we have the above similitude further unfolded, and a description given of the persons to whom only the milk of instruction is suitable. (Hyperius.)

13. πᾶς γὰρ ὁ μετέχων, &c.] There is here a certain obscurity, occasioned by a confounding of the natural with the metaphorical (or allegorical) sense. If kept distinct, the thought would be expressed as follows: 'Thus [as] every one who can live only on milk is, in some sort, a babe; [so] every one who can profit only by the first elements of the Gospel, is also a babe in knowledge, being ἄπειρος λόγου δικαιοσύνης.'

The expression λόγου δικαιοσύνης has been variously interpreted. Many of the best Expositors, from Calvin and Abresch to Kuinoel, take it to mean doctrinam perfectiorem, the τελειότης spoken of infra vi. 1; regarding it as in antithesis with τὰ στοιχεῖα. It would seem better to simply understand by it 'the Christian religion;' or rather, the doctrine of salvation through Christ, the doctrine of justification by faith and grace, which probably they as well as the Galatian Christians had forgotten, or not duly attended to. Now to those thus deficient are opposed the τέλειοι, or those who can bear the solid food of a more recondite inquiry into the origin and nature of the Gospel; comparing the word of righteousness, the righteousness of Faith (see Rom. iv. 13), with the righteousness of the Law (see Rom. x. 5, 6), and tracing the connexion between the Patriarchal and the Mosaic, and that between the Mosaic and the Christian dispensations.

14. τελείων δέ ἐστιν ἡ στερεὰ τροφὴ, &c.] These several terms, τελείων, στερεὰ τροφὴ, and ἕξιν, are equally adapted to the natural and to the figurative sense. So Hyperius remarks, that the ratio similitudinis would have required a noun expressive of age, as men (adults or old men); but the Apostle thought it enough to say perfectos, as in Eph. iv. 13, ἄνδρα τέλειον. Thus by τελείους he means those that have made some progress, so as to understand the deeper mysteries of the word; such as those of whom he makes mention at 1 Cor. ii. 6: 'Howbeit we speak wisdom,' ἐν τοῖς τελείοις. The next words serve to show the nature of this τελειότης, and in what it consists.

— διὰ τὴν ἕξιν, &c.] Meaning, 'by habit arising from long use and exercise.' The word ἕξις signifies properly a habit of body, and, metaphorically, a habit of mind; which supposes use and exercise. At τὰ αἰσθητήρια supply ὄργανα, meaning τὰς αἰσθήσεις, as in a fragment of Ælian, p. 1051. It here, however, denotes the internal senses. Finally, by the terms καλοῦ and κακοῦ are denoted not simply moral good and moral evil, but the good of truth, and the evil of error, &c. in religion.

VI. 1. διὸ] i. e. 'since ye ought now to be thus τέλειοι, and must be, in some degree, able to comprehend τὰ τέλεια (the more recondite doctrines of the faith), let us proceed,' &c. Such seems to be the true force of the διό; yet on the whole of these six verses much difference of opinion exists. Towards ascertaining the true sense, it is important to previously attend to the scope of the whole portion, and the intent of the writer. And here Expositors adopt two widely different views. Some consider the whole passage as hortatory, i. e. earnestly exhorting them not to rest satisfied with the elementary principles of religion, but to aim at being fully conversant in the Christian faith. But to this view of the sense the words καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, &c., and ἀδύνατον γὰρ, a little after, are quite adverse; not to mention that it is for the teacher to lay the foundation of Christian faith in Christ's doctrines, not the taught. The true sense intended is, I conceive, that assigned by Grotius, Vatablus, Piscator, Gomar, Whitby, Wolf, and others, down to the time of Kuinoel (including Mr. Scott), who understand the Apostle by these words to apprize them what he is about to do; namely, after passing over the more elementary parts of the Christian doctrines, to proceed to the higher and more recondite ones, the more spiritual mysteries of redemption by Christ: q. d. 'Passing over [for the present] the elementary doctrines of repentance, faith, baptism, &c., let us proceed to the consideration of the higher doctrines (as involved in the comparison between the priesthood of Melchisedec and Christ). And this', adds he, 'by God's permission, we will now do,' i. e. intend now to do. Now this the writer does, but not until after a digression, contained in vv. 4—12, inclusive; ἀφέντες τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ λόγον, ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερώμεθα· μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι μετα-2 νοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, καὶ πίστεως ἐπὶ Θεὸν, βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν, ἀναστάσεώς τε νεκρῶν καὶ commencing the discussion in question at ver. 13. The above interpretation is, I believe, liable to no serious objections, if it be but borne in mind that the words μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον—κρίματος αἰωνίου are, in some measure, parenthetical; and thus καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν connects well with ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερώμεθα. It may, indeed, be urged that, according to this view of the sense, it is difficult to trace the connexion in ἀδύνατον, &c.: but, in fact, the case is otherwise; for the words need not, nay, ought not to be referred to what immediately precedes, but to the parenthetical portion, μὴ πάλιν—κρίματος αἰωνίου, as is shown in the Note on ver. 4. Finally, the above view of the sense is supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Version; and Hyperius, after a full discussion of the question, admits that such may be the import. Possibly, however, the Apostle might intend the other sense to be included, as a secondary one, and accordingly to this he chiefly adverts in ἀδύνατον γὰρ, &c., ver. 4.

— τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ λόγον.] This is explained by the expression a little before, supra v. 12, τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θ.; and answering to τοῦ Χριστοῦ here is τὰ λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ there. The whole stands for ἀφέντες τὸ λέγειν περὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ λόγου τοῦ Χριστοῦ, and that for τῶν λογίων τοῦ Θεοῦ.

— ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερώμεθα.] τελειότ. is equiv. to τὰ τέλεια, those recondite doctrines which correspond to the solid food of Christian knowledge just mentioned, fit for the τέλειοι, supra v. 14. So 1 Cor. ii. 6, 7, σοφίαν δὲ λαλοῦμεν ἐν τοῖς τελείοις, σοφίαν Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ. In φερώμεθα there is a nautical metaphor.

— μὴ πάλιν—αἰωνίου.] The sense here assigned to καταβαλλόμενοι will depend upon the view adopted respecting the force of the preceding words. It would seem that the Apostle meant to advert to the communication of the chief of the elementary doctrines of the Christian religion (as in Rom. xv. 20. 1 Cor. iii. 10), omitting such as were implied in the very profession of the religion; and therefore we are not to expect to find all that are specified in similar enumerations at 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. 1 Thess. i. 9, 10. Tit. ii. 11—14, though some of them may be ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις, or primary ones.

In fact the doctrines are such as were inculcated on catechumens, or candidates for baptism; viz. 'to repent, to have faith in the declarations of God through Christ, and to believe in a resurrection and future judgment.' Moreover, by μετανοίας, πίστ., βαπτ., &c. are meant, not the things themselves, as acts, but as subjects of consideration, or doctrines. Thus the sense is, 'the doctrines of repentance,' &c. This is plain from διδαχῆς being expressed at one of the clauses, doubtless to suggest it as to be understood with the rest; for it must not be regarded, with some, as a separate particular, but be joined with βαπτ. It is worthy of notice, that though these fundamental points of doctrine are six, yet they are so placed as to constitute, as it were, three pairs, in which the doctrines of each pair are closely connected. Thus the particulars are naturally connected, and the best comment on them is Acts xx. 21, διαμαρτυρόμενος Ἰουδαίοις τε καὶ Ἕλλησι τὴν εἰς τὸν Θεὸν μετάνοιαν, καὶ πίστιν τὴν εἰς τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν. See also Acts ii. 38, and xxvi. 20.

— μετανοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων.] Μετάνοια has here a sort of sensus prægnans, occasionally found in the verb μετανοέω, by which it denotes both repentance and reformation, the ceasing to do evil, and the learning to do well. The term νεκρῶν some interpret sinful; others, that which causes death, or condemnation. Both senses may be intended,—the one as implied in the other; since the works in question, being done by those 'dead in trespasses and sins,' must lead to spiritual death. Thus at ix. 14 the blood of Christ is said to purify the conscience [namely, of those who are converted to Christianity] ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων. Moreover the expression may be used with reference to the works as fruitless, inefficacious to save, as being mere works of external righteousness, and not proceeding from a living faith. See more in Hyperius.

2. βαπτισμῶν.] The plural here involves some difficulty, there being but one Christian baptism; and to take the word in a distributive sense would be harsh. Most Commentators regard it as plural for singular, and denoting Christian baptism; alleging a similar use in αἵματα, καρδίαι, πόρνειαι, &c. Yet they have not proved, by a single example (what were, indeed, highly improbable), that this idiom ever extended to the term βαπτισμός. The word is used in three other passages of the New Test., yet no where in the sense baptism (which is expressed invariably by βάπτισμα), but always in the sense washing. Hence I should prefer (with Limborch, Dind., Rosenmuller, Schleusner, and others) to understand it of the various ceremonial washings of the Jews (so ix. 10, διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς), especially the baptism of proselytes. However, I am rather inclined (with Vater, Kuinoel, and Dr. Burton,) to take βαπτισμῶν as a general term, referring both to the Jewish and Christian baptisms, and implying, in the adjunct διδαχῆς, such a comparison of one with the other, and such a knowledge of the difference between them, as would lead to the adoption of the latter.

— ἐπιθέσεως χειρῶν.] Here we have a separate head of doctrine, though closely connected with the last; and reference is here had to the laying on of hands, by which, in that age, baptism was accompanied, namely, as a symbol of the spiritual gifts imparted to the new converts: a circumstance alluded to at ver. 4. Now it was necessary that these neophytes should be taught the purpose of this imposition of hands, and the nature of the benefits which it imparted.

— ἀναστάσεως νεκρῶν.] Meaning, it would seem, not (as many have supposed) the resurrection of the just, but a resurrection generally, both of the just and the unjust, spoken of in Acts xxiv. 15. By καὶ κρίμ. αἰων. is meant, 'and of a a Acts 18. 21. 1 Cor. 4. 19. James 4. 15. b Matt. 12. 31, 45. infra 10. 26, 27. 2 Pet. 2. 20. 1 John 4. 10. & 5. 16.

κρίματος αἰωνίου. [a] Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, ἐάν περ ἐπιτρέπῃ 3 ὁ Θεός. [b] Ἀδύνατον γὰρ τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας, γευσα- 4 judgment, the consequences of which, whether for bliss or woe, will be eternal.'

3. καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, &c.] See Note supra ver. 1.

4—6. Much difference of opinion exists as to the sense contained in these verses; in determining which, it is of consequence to settle the connexion, as contained in ἀδύνατον γάρ. Some refer γὰρ to the preceding verse, while others suppose it belongs to ver. 1, but of course vary in their representations of the meaning, according to their different views of the import of that verse, and according as they take the expression ἀδύνατον in a qualified or in an unqualified sense. If we adopt the view generally taken of the sense of ver. 1, we may regard it as an argument to show the necessity of going on in the true profession and faithful practice of Christianity, founded on the desperate condition of apostates, and paraphrase, with Mr. Holden, as follows: 'Let us strive to go on to perfection, and resolve upon it, vv. 1—3, for it is impossible to renew again by repentance those who have been once enlightened, &c., and yet have fallen away, since they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh,' &c. Yet thus the argument can scarcely be considered cogent, and the case is made far more prominent than seems to have been intended. Hence I should prefer, with some ancient and several modern Commentators, as Whitby and Newcome, to suppose the γὰρ to have reference to the words μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι: q. d. '[Let us, I say, not have to lay again the foundation of our religion, or by giving way to sluggishness, gradually slide into apostasy;] for it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance who,' &c. That the crime of apostasy is here meant, is plain from what follows, and especially from the parallel passage at x. 26, 27 (which is the best comment on the present), from a comparison of which we are far better enabled to explain the chief terms here (on which the sense mainly rests), ἀδύνατον, φωτισθ., παραπεσόντας, and ἀνακαινίζειν. No writer has, I think, thrown so much light on this most controverted passage as Bp. Jeremy Taylor, in § 4 of his able treatise 'On the effect of repentance,' vol. ix. p. 199—202. (Ed. Heber.) He there shows that by παραπεσόντας is meant, in conjunction with what follows, a falling away from the state of excellent things in which they had received all the present endearments of the Gospel,—a full conviction and pardon of sins, the earnest of the Spirit, the comfort of the promises, an antepast of heaven itself. 'Now (continues he) to fall away from all this cannot be by infirmity, ignorance, or surprise; which is meant by ἑκουσίως ἁμαρτάνειν, to sin wilfully, after they have received the knowledge of the truth. It must denote absolute apostasy, either unto heathenism, or Judaism, or any other state of despising and hating Christ, as thus crucifying him afresh.' And the strong terms here used would, as Mr. Greswell (on Parables, vol. iv. p. 240) observes, 'lead to the inference that the faith of the Hebrew church had more than begun to waver,—that some of its members had already lapsed, and others were in imminent danger of lapsing, from the open profession of a religion so full of tribulation, so destitute, as it might appear, of present ease and comfort, if not of future hope.'

By the somewhat peculiar expression ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετ. Bp. Taylor supposes it to be intimated, that such persons cannot be restored to their former condition, or to any other gracious covenant, since they have despised this. 'Other persons (continues he) who "hold fast their profession," and "forget not that they were cleansed in baptism," they, in case they do fall into sin, may proceed, in the same method, in their first renovation to repentance; that is, in their being solemnly admitted to the method and state of repentance for all sins known and unknown. But when this renovation is renounced; when they despise the whole economy; when they reject this grace, and throw away the covenant, there is "nothing left" for such but a "fearful looking-for of judgment;" for these persons are incapable of the mercies of the Gospel,—they are out of the way; for there being but one way of salvation, viz. by Jesus Christ, whom they renounce,—neither Moses, nor nature, nor any other name can restore them; and their case is so bad, and they are so impious and malicious, that no man hath power to persuade such men to accept of pardon by those means which they so disown. For there is no means of salvation but this one; and this one they hate, and will not have: they will not return to the old, and there is none left by which they can be ἀνακαινιζόμενοι, renewed; and therefore their condition is desperate.'

Finally, with respect to the expression ἀδύνατον, there need not have been such debate as to whether it should mean absolutely impossible, or very difficult. The truth here (as not unfrequently) may be said to lie in medio. The learned Prelate above cited shows that the word is to be understood, not in the natural sense, but in the moral, as in 'the case of a criminal condemned by the law, of whom we say it is impossible he should escape, i. e. by the law, it being clearly against him.' In like manner (I would add) the apostate may be said to stand in the same place with respect to religion, that a deserter does with respect to an army; the one is condemned by the articles of war, and has as little chance of regaining the name and character of a brave man, as the other of ever again attaining to the state of a sincere believer. Thus we may, with Bp. Taylor, illustrate the expression from the parallel words οὐκ ἔτι ἀπολείπεται θυσία, alluding to Moses' law, in which, for those that despised it, i. e. for apostates (as Maimonides expounds), 'there was no sacrifice appointed.' 'So that (continues he) though ἀδύνατον signifies, in sensu forensi, a state of sin, which is sentenced by the Law to be capital and damning, yet here it denotes the highest degree of that deadliness and impossibility, as there are degrees of malignity and desperation in mortal diseases; for of all evils, this state here described is the worst.' And no wonder; inasmuch as the sin of apostasy being a sin against light and knowledge, and especially against that which is the very condition and in-μένους τε τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γενη-5 θέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου, καὶ καλὸν γευσαμένους Θεοῦ ῥῆμα 6 δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, καὶ παραπεσόντας, πάλιν strument of salvation, FAITH,—that is destroyed without which no man can be saved. 'Finally (says Bp. Taylor), besides all other senses of this word, it is certain, by the whole frame of the place, and the very analogy of the Gospel, that the impossibility here mentioned is not an impossibility of the thing, but only relative to the person. It is impossible to restore him whose state of evil is contrary to pardon and restitution, as being a renouncing the Gospel, that is, the whole covenant of pardon and repentance. Compare 1 John iii. 9. Yet if this man will repent with a repentance proportioned to that evil which he hath committed, that he ought not to despair of pardon in the court of heaven, we have the affirmation of Justin Martyr. So that this impossibility concerns not those that return and do confess him, but those that wilfully and maliciously reject this only way of salvation as false and deceitful, and never return to the confession of it again.' Thus it appears that ἀδύνατον here (as elsewhere, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers) denotes the highest degree of what we call moral impossibility, something so exceedingly difficult, as to be utterly hopeless; though not beyond the reach of His grace 'with whom all things are possible.' (Matt. xix. 26.)

—τοὺς ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας, &c.] In these words, τοὺς ἅπαξ—αἰῶνος, we have, it would seem, the benefits of salvation distributed into two classes: 1. those which respect Divine knowledge; 2. those which regard its practical results, in conferring happiness, both here and hereafter. To the former class will pertain the privileges denoted by ἅπαξ φωτισθέντας and μετόχους γενηθέντας Πνεύματος ἁγίου; to the latter, the subsequent particulars. By the term φωτισθέντας is generally supposed to be denoted (by a metaphor frequent in the Sept.) the being enlightened by the truths of the Gospel. (See Eph. i. 18. 1 Pet. ii. 9. 2 Cor. iv. 4.) Thus the expression may be compared with that infra x. 26, λαμβάνειν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, except that it is a much stronger term. Some, however, consisting of the ancient Commentators and many eminent modern Expositors, (as Beza, Camerarius, Grotius, Hammond, Zeger, Estius, Whitby, Bengel, Ernesti, Michaelis, and Valcknaer,) suppose φωτισθέντας to stand for βαπτισθέντας: as it is said, infra x. 32, ἀναμιμνήσκεσθε τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας, ἐν αἷς φωτισθέντες, &c.

Between these two widely differing views a middle course will, as often, be found the best. And here the decision of Hyperius may safely be followed, who observes, 'Etsi rectè accipere possimus exposita hîc esse beneficia spiritualia omnia, quæ credentes ab initio suscepti evangelii ad id usque tempus, quo Apostolus epistolam hanc scribebat, acceperant; tamen non dubium est, de iis præcipuè, quæ in baptismate à tempore primæ institutionis acceperant, beneficiis sermonem fieri, adeò ut omnia ferè, quæ hîc dicuntur, baptismo, tanquam proprii ipsius effectus, tribui rectè queant.' That there is a strong allusion to baptism in the expressions φωτισθέντας and ἀνακαινίζειν, may be inferred from the points adverted to at ver. 2 being those in which candidates for baptism were especially instructed; and as we know that the Apostles never allowed any repetition of the sacrament of baptism, to that non-reiteration there may be an allusion in the expression ἀδύνατον.

The words following, γευσαμένους τῆς δωρεᾶς τῆς ἐπουρανίου, have been variously interpreted, and admit of more than one sense. If by φωτισθέντας just before be merely meant 'instructed in the principles of Christianity,' then δωρεᾶς ἐπουρανίου here may be explained (as it most commonly is) as equivalent to κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου at iii. 1. Yet this is not a little harsh, and thus γευσαμένους would be far too strong a term. Hence it is better, with others, to understand this of the special gift of the Holy Spirit, which is infra, viii. 20, called τὴν δωρεὰν τοῦ Θεοῦ. And thus γευσαμένους will be a term sufficiently applicable. From its being here used with the Genitive, but just after with the Accusative, we may suppose, in these two cases, a slight difference of sense intended, which is probably this,—that here γεύσασθαι signifies to have experience of a thing, by having received and possessed it (the Holy Ghost being often said to be received); whereas in the clause following it signifies 'to know a thing, by experience of its value and benefit.'

The following particular has reference, not so much to the increase of religious knowledge in the ordinary way, namely, by the sanctifying graces of the Spirit, as through the extraordinary influences of the Spirit; occasionally, too, by the communication of those supernatural gifts whereby in that age miracles were worked.

To turn to the second class above adverted to, the expressions indicating the inestimable privileges and happy experiences of the Gospel, these are suspended on the term γευσαμένους, which here, by a figure found in the Heb. אכל, the Latin gustare, and the correspondent terms in most languages, signifies to know by experience. So Ps. xxxiii. 8, Sept., we have γεύσασθε καὶ ἴδετε ὅτι χρηστὸς ὁ Κύριος, and 1 Pet. ii. 3, εἴπερ ἐγεύσασθε ὅτι χρηστὸς ὁ Κύριος. And Carpzov aptly compares Philo, p. 470, ζητήσαντες καὶ τί τὸ τρέφον ἐστὶ τὴν ψυχὴν, εὗρον μαθόντες ῥῆμα Θεοῦ καὶ λόγον θεῖον——αἱ δὲ ἰδοῦσαι, καὶ γευσάμεναι, σφόδρα ἥσθεῖσαι, ἔμαθον μὲν ὃ ἔπαθον. By the expression καλὸν Θεοῦ ῥῆμα many Commentators understand the Gospel, or the Christian religion, with its blessings, as derived from God; but it seems best to explain it (with Theodoret, of the ancient and some eminent modern Expositors) 'the promise of God, as held out in the Old Testament, and fulfilled in the New,' viz. of blessings here and salvation hereafter: a sense of ῥῆμα found also in Luke i. 38. ii. 29, and sometimes in the Sept., and corresponding to that of the Heb. דבר טוב.

In determining the sense of the expression following, δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the question is, whether by αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων be here meant (according to some) the Gospel dispensation, or (according to others) the world to come. If the ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, ἀνασταυροῦντας ἑαυτοῖς τὸν Υἱὸν Ps. 65. 10. τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ παραδειγματίζοντας. [c] Γῆ γὰρ ἡ πιοῦσα τὸν 7 ἐπ' αὐτῆς πολλάκις ἐρχόμενον ὑετὸν, καὶ τίκτουσα βοτάνην εὔθετον ἐκείνοις δι' οὓς καὶ γεωργεῖται, μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἐκφέρουσα δὲ ἀκάνθας καὶ τριβόλους, 8 ἀδόκιμος καὶ κατάρας ἐγγύς· ἧς τὸ τέλος εἰς καῦσιν.

former, δυνάμεις will mean the miraculous powers vouchsafed to some, as an evidence to all, of the truth of the Gospel. If the latter, it will mean the powerful assurances of a future life revealed in the Gospel; and this latter view seems preferable.

6. καὶ παραπεσόντας.] Meaning, 'those who have fallen away:' a mild expression to signify apostatizing. Thus the LXX. render the same Hebr. word מעל by παραπίπτειν and ἀποστασία. Here it is equivalent to ἀποστῆναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζῶντος at iii. 12. 'Ανακαινίζειν signifies, 1. to rebuild decayed edifices; 2. to renew them by repairs; 3. in a metaphorical sense, to restore. Here ἀνακ. εἰς μετ. is for ἀνακ. ὥστε μετανοεῖν, implying καὶ ἀναστρέφειν εἰς τὸν Κύριον, which is expressed at Acts xxvi. 20. This sense of ἀνακαινίζειν is not unexampled in other writers. By the next words, ἀνασταυροῦντας τὸν Υἱὸν, &c., we have graphically figured the peculiar enormity of the offence; namely, that by turning apostates they represent Christ as an impostor, and consequently his crucifixion as just; and thereby put him to shame. Some, indeed, would not assign to the ἀνα the sense afresh, but regard the expression as the same with the simple σταυρ. But all that they show is, that the word is capable of that sense, not that it must be so taken here. Professor Stuart, indeed, urges that to interpret it crucify afresh is contrary to the usus loquendi; but that argument is only applicable to the Classical, not to the Hellenistic Greek. And as σταυρόω, both in the Sept. and repeatedly in the New Test., not only in the Gospels but in the Epistles of St. Paul, signifies to crucify, contrary to Classical usage, which requires ἀναστ.; so why should not ἀναστ. mean to re-crucify? That it does mean this here is plain from the context; otherwise the point carried on between πάλιν, ἀνακαιν., and ἀνασταυρ. will be destroyed, and the sense not a little weakened. 'Εαυτοῖς some interpret 'apud se;' others, 'quantum in se;' others, again, 'in suam perniciem.' The sense last mentioned is manifestly inadmissible. The other two may be combined; the latter as engrafted on the former. It is well observed by Grotius, 'Egregiâ figurâ dicuntur id facere, quod factum approbant.' It is meant, then, that they, as it were, do it again in their own case, and as far as they are concerned. On the expression παραδ. see Note at Matt. i. 19.

7, 8. To enforce the admonition contained in ἀδύνατον, ver. 4, the Apostle now contrasts, in forcible imagery, the respective conditions of those who, enjoying the advantages and privileges of the Gospel, use them aright, and of those who abuse them. The former are compared to fertile, and the latter to barren, ground, the difference between which is denoted by the different effects which the rain from heaven has upon them; in the one causing exuberance of corn or grass, in the other raising up nought but thorns or briers; see Matt. xiii. 3—8, and xviii. 23. Blessing attends the one; cursing and burning the other: thus are figuratively represented, as in the parable of the sower, the different effects of the Christian doctrine on different persons. Those (it is meant) who improve their spiritual advantages will be blessed, and those who are either wholly unfruitful in Christian graces, or abandon the Gospel, will be rejected, as thorny ground is rejected by the husbandman, and whose end will be, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire!' See Matt. xxv. 41—46.

7. γῆ γὰρ ἡ πιοῦσα] 'which imbibeth.' So Herodotus, iii. 17, ἡ γὰρ πίνουσα τὸ ὕδωρ. Virgil, Ecl. iii. 111, 'sat prata biberunt.'

— τίκτουσα βοτάνην, &c.] Βοτάνη, in Classical usage, denotes any vegetable produce, except corn; but in the Hellenistic, corn is also included. It is well observed by Grotius, that there is a peculiar felicity in the application of the term τίκτουσα to the good ground, and of ἐκφέρουσα (ver. 8) to the bad; the former being represented as bringing forth a healthful issue; the latter, as casting forth, so to speak, an abortion. By a similar mixture of metaphor, I would observe, it is said, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 25, φθίνουσα μὲν κάλυξιν, ἐγκάρποις χθονὸς, Φθίνουσα δ' ἀγέλαις βουνόμοις, τόκοισί τε γυναικῶν.

— εὔθετον ἐκείνοις δι' οὓς, &c.] 'is suitable to, useful for those on account of whom,' &c. Εὔθετος properly signifies fitted or fit; and hence, suitable to.

— μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας] for εὐλογεῖται; i. e., enjoys God's blessing in fertility.

8. ἐκφέρουσα δὲ, &c.] Here is implied the circumstance of the land having been first watered and cultivated; the meaning being, 'But the land (supplying γῆ at ἐκφέρουσα) which [after receiving rain and cultivation] bringeth forth thorns,' &c. On the term τριβόλους see Note at Matt. vii. 16. 'Αδόκιμος, sc. ἐστι, i. e. 'is held despicable by its owner,' as unfit for cultivation. To this is added a yet stronger expression, κατάρας ἐγγύς; meaning (by a mode of expression similar to that infra viii. 13, ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ), 'is near being utterly rejected' (literally, 'thrown up with a curse'), is near to being cursed by God to utter barrenness; the opposite to the preceding μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ. So the Hebrews called a sterile field ἐπικατάρατος; i. e. devoted by God to a curse (see Psalm cxvi. 34, Sept.); and land so hopelessly unproductive was popularly called cursed land.

— ἧς τὸ τέλος εἰς καῦσιν.] Supply ἐστι. The phrase εἰς καῦσιν εἶναι is a Hebraism, formed on היה לבער, and the verbal is for the Infinitive passive used as a noun; see Isaiah xliv. 15. By the burning here spoken of is certainly not to be understood, with some Expositors, the being 9 Πεπείσμεθα δὲ περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀγαπητοὶ, τὰ κρείττονα καὶ ἐχό-10 μενα σωτηρίας, εἰ καὶ οὕτω λαλοῦμεν. [d] οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος ὁ d Prov. 14. 31.

Θεὸς, ἐπιλαθέσθαι τοῦ ἔργου ὑμῶν καὶ [τοῦ κόπου] τῆς Matt. 10. 42. & 25. 40. ἀγάπης, ἧς ἐνεδείξασθε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, διακονήσαντες Mark 9. 41. John 13. 20. Rom. 3. 4.
11 τοῖς ἁγίοις καὶ διακονοῦντες. Ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δὲ, ἕκαστον ὑμῶν 1 Thess. 1. 3. 2 Thess. 1. 6, 7.
τὴν αὐτὴν ἐνδείκνυσθαι σπουδὴν, πρὸς τὴν πληροφορίαν τῆς 12 ἐλπίδος ἄχρι τέλους· ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ γένησθε, μιμηταὶ δὲ τῶν διὰ πίστεως καὶ μακροθυμίας κληρονομούντων τὰς ἐπαγ-burnt up with drought (because, as has been before seen, it is implied that the rain has fallen on the ungrateful soil); but we have here alluded to a process common in the East,—and found more or less every where,—by which foul land is ameliorated by the thorns and thistles being pared off at the roots, aud heaped and burned; which both cleans and manures the soil. So Virgil, Georg. i. 85, 'Sæpe etiam steriles incendere profuit agros.'

9. πεπείσμεθα δὲ, &c.] Meaning, thus to soften any seeming harshness in what he is saying, by language indicating that he is not without good hope of them; and, indeed, has dealt thus plainly with them solely from affection. The expression πεπείσμεθα is however not to be understood of full persuasion, nor even confident expectation (for the Apostle's previous complaint of their sluggishness forbids that), but merely denotes, as we popularly say, a good hope. So at Gal. v. 10, it is said, ἐγὼ πέποιθα εἰς ὑμᾶς, ὅτι οὐδὲν ἄλλο φρονήσετε, and yet at iii. 1 he had called them foolish. In τὰ ἐχόμενα σωτ. the term σωτηρία is to be understood, not (as some eminent Expositors take it) of temporal preservation, but of salvation. Render, 'which are connected with, and pertain to, salvation;' a sense of ἔχεσθαι found in the best writers. So in Plato, vol. ii. p. 182 (cited by Valcknaer), we have τὰ τούτων ἐχόμενα μαθήματα, 'the arts and sciences connected with these;' and in Lucian, Hermot., § 69, ταῦτ' ἐλπίδος οὐ μικρᾶς ἐχόμενα.

By the salvation here spoken of is probably meant that present salvation, which consists in being saved from their sins; i. e. as Mr. Wesley explains, 'the having that faith, love, and holiness, which lead to final salvation.' Here, then, as Stuart says, the expression ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας corresponds to the foregoing κατάρας ἐγγύς; intimating that, as apostates are κατάρας ἐγγὺς, so those who persevere in the faith are ἐχόμενοι σωτηρίας, their salvation is secure.

10. οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος, &c.] Γὰρ refers, it would seem, to the reasons which the Apostle had for this good hope of their salvation; reasons founded partly on themselves, and partly on that God who 'is not unrighteous to forget their work and labour of love;' for they had, it seems, shown such attention to one important branch of Christian duty, as justified him in the hope that they would in time add other virtues and graces, and thereby obtain the Divine aid and blessing on their endeavours to work out their salvation. See Phil. ii. 13. Jude 24, and 2 Thess. ii. 13.

The best Expositors are agreed that ἄδικος has here the sense unmerciful, as δίκαιος has often that of merciful. At ἐπιλαθέσθαι supply ὥστε, as in Gal. iii. 1. This is meant to express, per meiosin, that 'he will remember to reward them.' See Hebr. xiii. 3.

The words τοῦ κόπου, not found in several ancient MSS., Versions, and some Fathers, have been rejected by Mill and Bengel, and cancelled by Griesbach, Knapp, Schott, and Tittman. Yet external evidence is most decidedly in favour of them; for the MSS. that have them not are very few in number; and as to the ancient Versions, they are no good evidence in a matter which concerns the omission of words that seem superfluous. Internal evidence, too, is quite in favour of the words, since no good reason can be imagined for their insertion; for as to their being interpolated (according to the above Critics) from 1 Thess. i. 3, that is most improbable. On the other hand, for the omission of the words the best of all reasons may be imagined; namely, the systematic aversion of those early Critics,—who so often tampered with the text,—to pleonasms, or what they accounted such; which would induce them here, as in many other places, to correct what they considered a defect in style. And hence we may account for ἔργου being omitted, and κόπου being retained, in some MSS. and Fathers. Here, however, the two terms, instead of being merely pleonastic, are highly energetic; and of such falsely called pleonasms it has been shown by Longinus that they serve in no inconsiderable degree to impart strength and vigour to the sentiment.

With the Hendiadys in τοῦ κόπου τῆς ἀγάπης may be compared a similar one in Sophocles, Aj. 536, ἐπῄνεσ' ἔργον, καὶ πρόνοιαν ἣν ἔθου, and Euripides, Phœn. 189.

11. ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δὲ, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'he would have them still to evince the same zeal and activity which they had already shown by performing offices of charity and benevolence,' in the arduous concern of making their calling and election sure; comp. 2 Pet. i. 10. Πληροφορίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος, for ἐλπίδα πεπληροφορημένην, meaning, 'a sure hope' (as at x. 22 we have ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, 'unwavering faith'), whereby they would be most effectually secured against apostasy.

12. The next words, ἵνα μὴ νωθροὶ, &c., further develop the sense in ἐνδείκνυσθαι σπουδὴν before, and have reference to ἐλπ. preceding; q. d. 'that ye be not sluggish nor faint in your hope:' to rouse which, the Apostle recommends to their imitation the example of those who had evinced those qualities (faith and constancy) which are best calculated to stimulate hope, and rouse exertion,—namely, Abraham and the Patriarchs, together with all those of his spiritual seed who were inheritors of the promises.

e Gen. 12. 3. & 17. 4. & 22. 17. Ps. 105. 9. Luke 1. 73. f Exod. 22. 11. g Ps. 33. 11. Rom. 11. 29.

γελίας. [e] Τῷ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ ἐπαγγειλάμενος ὁ Θεὸς, ἐπεὶ 13 κατ᾽ οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ὀμόσαι, ὤμοσε καθ᾽ ἑαυτοῦ, λέγων· 14 Ἦ μὴν εὐλογῶν εὐλογήσω σε, καὶ πληθύνων πληθυνῶ σε· καὶ οὕτω, μακροθυμήσας, ἐπέτυχε τῆς ἐπαγ- 15 γελίας. [f] Ἄνθρωποι μὲν γὰρ κατὰ τοῦ μείζονος ὀμνύουσι, 16 καὶ πάσης αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογίας πέρας εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὁ ὅρκος.
[g] Ἐν ᾧ περισσότερον βουλόμενος ὁ Θεὸς ἐπιδεῖξαι τοῖς κλη- 17 ρονόμοις τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ, — κληρονομούντων.] This is a Participle Aorist, to be explained, 'who have come into the enjoyment of the promised blessing of salvation,' understanding κληρον. as referring partly to the Patriarchs, their pious progenitors, who lived by faith in the promises of salvation through the future Saviour; and partly to those Hebrew Christians, who, imitating the faith and patience of their ancestors, had fought the good fight of faith and endured unto the end, and, being at length delivered from their trials, had entered into the joy of their Lord, promised to all his faithful servants. The plural in ἐπαγγ. is used, because the promises in question were extended to the Patriarchs generally, and were given at various times and seasons (see Gen. xii. 3; xxii. 16 & 18; xxvi. 3; xxviii. 13); all, however, centering in the promise of salvation through a Redeemer.

13, 14. Here the Apostle takes occasion, from the foregoing, to excite them to perseverance, by enlarging on the certainty of the promises of God, as even confirmed by oath; recalling to their minds the many examples of faith presented by their ancestors, especially Abraham, whom he magnifies, though he shows even him to have been inferior to Melchizedec; thus paving the way to represent the dignity of Christ as supreme.

13. τῷ γὰρ Ἀβραὰμ, &c.] The γὰρ, as Mr. Wesley well points out, has reference to a clause omitted; q. d, '[Ye have abundant encouragement to this diligence and faith;] for, or, seeing that, no stronger promise could be made, than that great promise which God made to Abraham, and in him to us.' Εἶχε, meaning, 'had it in his power;' a use of the word frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers.

— ὤμοσε καθ' ἑαυτοῦ.] 'Sanctissimè promisit,' i.e. pledged his eternal Godhead to fulfil his engagement. So God is said, Jer. xxii. 5, and elsewhere in the Old Test., to swear by himself, as having none superior to swear by.

14. ἦ μὴν.] A formula of swearing, and also of solemn engagement, often occurring in the Classical writers. Πληθύνων πληθυνῶ σε. An emphatic mode of expression (derived from the Hebrew), signifying, 'I will bestow on thee blessings great and manifold.'

Only part of the promise is here quoted, because it was one so well known, that more was unnecessary; but the Apostle's argument is concerned principally with those words, 'And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.'

15. The Apostle here again (as at v. 12. iii. 6. and elsewhere) inculcates constancy in faith; and in order to enjoin it the more strongly, remarks, that it was only through this constancy that Abraham obtained the 'promised blessing;' namely, of a son who should produce a progeny that should become numerous. The preternatural birth of a son under such remarkable circumstances was a sufficient pledge that what had been promised respecting him would be fulfilled. Other blessings, too, were connected with the birth of Isaac and the faith of Abraham, which Abraham did not, indeed, obtain by actual possession; but by anticipation, confident hope, and unwavering faith in the promises of God. Compare John viii. 56. (Stuart.)

16. From the promise made by God to Abraham the writer takes occasion to speak on the immutability of the Divine counsels and purposes in general. See ver. 18. (Kuinoel.) We have here, as Calvin observes, an argumentum a minori ad majus; q. d. 'Si homini, qui natura mendax est, juranti habetur fides, quia intercedit confirmatio per Dei nomen; quanto plus fidei meretur Deus ipse, qui æterna est veritas, quum per se ipsum jurat!'

— τοῦ μείζονος] i. e. 'by some person greater than themselves [who can avenge falsehood],' meaning God, who is called, John x. 29, μείζων πάντων.

— καὶ πάσης αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογίας, &c.] The force of the Article at ὁ ὅρκος ought by no means to be overlooked, as it is in the common version and some others: and to the sense assigned in others, 'the oath for confirmation,' it is justly objected by Abresch and Bp. Middleton, that that would require ὁ εἰς βεβαίωσιν ὅρκος. Render, 'The oath (meaning that implied in ὀμνύουσι preceding) is to them the termination of all controversy unto confirmation,' i. e. it causes uncertainty to end in assurance.

17. ἐν ᾧ περισσ. βουλόμενος, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'although faith was due to the assertion of the God of truth, even without the interposition of an oath, yet in condescension to human weakness, he subjoined an oath to the promise.'

— τὸ ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ] 'the immutability of his will or purpose.' The use here of the singular, rather than the plural, is not without its force; for, as Bp. Sanderson observes (Serm. viii. ad Pop. § 17. p. 657, on Prov. xix. 21), 'while it is no commendation, but rather a disparagement of men's devices, that they are so many, it is to the honour of God, that his counsel is but one and unchangeable, and accordingly the great foundation of our Christian hope is immoveable.'

— ἐμεσίτευσεν ὅρκῳ.] Of this obscure expression various novel interpretations have been propounded by the recent Expositors. It may suffice to notice that of Bretschneider (preferred by Kuinoel), who assigns to ἐμεσίτ. ὅρκῳ the sense sponsorem esse; a sponsor being one who 18 ἐμεσίτευσεν ὅρκῳ· [h] ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμεταθέτων, ἐν h Tit. 1. 2. 1 Tim. 6. 12.

οἷς ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεὸν, ἰσχυρὰν παράκλησιν ἔχωμεν infra 12. 1.
19 οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπίδος. [i] Ἣν ὡς i Lev. 16. 15 infra 9. 7. ἄγκυραν ἔχομεν τῆς ψυχῆς ἀσφαλῆ τε καὶ βεβαίαν, καὶ k Supra 4. 14.
20 εἰσερχομένην εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, [k] ὅπου infra 8. 1. & 9. 11.

acts the part of a mediator between two parties. Thus he renders, 'promissionis veritatem spospondit juramento;' adducing from Josephus an example of μεσίτης in the sense sponsor. Yet even this interpretation lies open to no little objection; for as God cannot be a mediator between himself and the heirs of the promise, so neither can he be a sponsor, in the above sense. There is, indeed, no reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned, 'interposed by an oath,' i. e. (by hypallage) interposed an oath, as the Vulg. freely renders; meaning, as Stuart explains, 'that he was made [so to speak] mediator by an oath,—interposed an oath between himself and the other party, the heirs of the promises, i. e. made an oath the means of removing all doubt on their part, whether he would faithfully perform what he had promised.' Thus it corresponds to the reading (evidently, however, a mere gloss) of Theophylact, ἐβεβαίωσε. I would here compare a passage of Soph. Elect. 47, in which, by the very same hypallage, it is said, ἄγγελλε δ' ὅρκῳ προστιθεὶς ὅτι, &c. where the Scholiasts very properly explain it as standing for προστιθεὶς ὅρκον τῇ ἀγγελίᾳ.

18. ἵνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων ἀμεταθέτων, &c.] In further urging the argument founded on the oath of God above mentioned, the Apostle (for the comfort, we may suppose, of the persecuted Hebrew Christians), in now enlarging on that oath, makes, in reference to it, a sort of distinction, which has to many seemed far-fetched, at least according to the sense almost universally assigned to this expression, 'the two immutable things,' namely, the word, or promise, of God, of itself immutable (see Rom. x. 29), and the oath of God, added in condescension to human infirmity. Yet, admitting the expression to be somewhat strained, and the distinction far-fetched, that is surely no more than what may often be said of Jewish composition, as found in the Rabbinical writers. Nor are examples of such wanting in the best writers of antiquity; but, in fact, the harshness here is not so great as might at first sight appear. We may, with Hyperius, regard the words as the conclusion of a syllogism, wherein (as he says) the writer infers more than was strictly necessary, or than simply followed from the two premises; for he infers that on two accounts, namely, on account of the promise itself, which even alone ought to be sufficient, and yet more because of its confirmation by oath, believers ought to continue stedfast in the faith, &c. The things in question are called immutable, as necessarily obtaining their fulfilment; and the reason for this immutability is suggested in the next words, ἐν οἷς ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεὸν,—a reason founded on the nature of God himself, who is, as such, necessarily veracious (see 2 Cor. ii. 18), who can neither be deceived, nor be induced to deceive.

— ἰσχυρὰν παράκλησιν.] The term παράκλησις has been variously explained, but no sense is so suitable as the one commonly assigned,—consolation, which is supported by the authority of the best ancient Versions and the Greek Commentators. This consolation is called ἰσχυρὰν, from its being a firm ground for assured hope, as founded on the oath and covenant of God.

— οἱ καταφυγόντες κρατῆσαι τῆς προκειμένης ἐλπ.] There is here a sensus prægnans, which may be thus evolved: 'we who run, to take refuge in and grasp at the hope set before us in the Gospel,' as sinking mariners lay hold of a rope thrown out for their deliverance. There is, indeed, a mixture of two metaphors,—a nautical (such as is found at 1 Tim. vi. 12, 19, ἐπιλαβέσθαι τῆς αἰωνίου ζωῆς), and an agonistic one; the latter as alluded to in προκειμένης, which has reference to the βραβεῖον. This refuge is supposed to be sought by flying from sin, sorrow, and death, in order to obtain the hope of eternal life by Christ. Ἐλπὶς here, as often, denotes the thing hoped for, though in the next verse it means the hope itself.

19. ἥν.] Supply ἐλπίδα, not (with many) παράκλησιν, which is against the scope of the passage; whereas ἐλπὶς is closely connected with the continuation of the above nautical metaphor. Ὡς ἄγκυραν. Under this emblem it was common to designate hope. Nay, an anchor is found as a symbol thereof. Ἔχομεν, for κατέχομεν, as in an anonymous writer, cited by Chrysostom: κατέχειν τὴν ἄγκυραν τοῦ πνεύματος. There was, too, an ancient proverb, ἐν πείσῃ (a sure cable) καρδίαν τηρεῖν.

The object of the anchorage here spoken of is, to secure us from making shipwreck of our faith and trust in God. And here it is well observed by Calvin, 'Elegans similitudo, dum fidem verbo Dei innixam ancoræ comparat. Nam certe quamdiu peregrinamur in hoc mundo, non stamus in firma terra; sed quasi in medio mari, et quidem valde turbulento fluctuamur.' Thus then the general sense intended is, 'Hold fast the objects of your Christian hope. These will keep you steady in adherence to your holy religion, and preserve you, as an anchor does a tempest-tossed bark, from making shipwreck of the faith.'

— εἰσερχομένην.] The best Expositors are agreed that this is to be referred, not to ἄγκυραν, but to ἐλπίδος. Render, 'which hope gives us an entrance into the inner sanctuary, where God dwells.' The καταπέτασμα was the thick veil, or curtain, which separated the Sanctum from the Sanctum Sanctorum, as the one called κάλυμμα separated the Sanctum from the Court of the Gentiles. The term is here employed to designate the inner sanctuary, in the heavenly Temple, and thus means heaven itself.

20. ὅπου πρόδρομος, &c.] Of these words the sense mainly depends on the force of the expression πρόδρομος εἰσῆλθε. This the recent Commentators suppose to stand for προῆλθε, appealing to Æschyl. Theb. (196. Blomf.) ἐπὶ δαιμόνων πρόδρομος ἦλθον ἀρχαῖα βρέτη. That passage, however, is unsuitable to the present purpose, since there πρόδ. is for προτροπάδην, as in Soph. Antig. 108, φυγάδα πρόδρομον. Indeed πρόδρομος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν εἰσῆλθεν Ἰησοῦς, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδὲκ ἀρχιερεὺς γενόμενος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.

a Gen. 14. 18, &c

VII. [a] ΟΥΤΟΣ γὰρ ὁ Μελχισεδὲκ βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ, 1 ἱερεὺς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου, — ὁ συναντήσας Ἀβραὰμ ὑποστρέφοντι ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς τῶν βασιλέων καὶ εὐλογήσας

it may be doubted whether the word ever simply means one who goes before any thing; for though in the 400th fragment of the Tragedies of Æschylus we have δέσποιν' Ἑκάτη τῶν βασιλείων πρόδρομος μελάθρων, yet there, I am persuaded, the true reading is πρόδομος, to be taken adjectively, for πρὸ μελάθρων ἱδρυμένος, meaning the statue. So Pausan. iv. p. 337, ἔστιν ἐκτὸς τείχους ὁ Θεὸς (the statue of the god) ἱδρυμένος. In short, wherever it means 'one who runs or goes forward,' it is there almost always implied that his going forward is to prepare the way for others who stay behind. So Eurip. Iph. Aul. 424, ἐγὼ δὲ πρόδρομος σῆς παρασκευῆς χάριν ἥκω. Hence I see little force in the observation here generally made, that Christ is merely said to be our precursor, to intimate that it is our duty to follow him. That is, I apprehend, but a part of the truth. What is here said is, I conceive, meant not so much by way of exhortation, as of encouragement; implying not only that the possibility of entering the heavenly kingdom is ascertained, but that preparation is made for those that follow. So Christ says of himself, John xiv. 2, πορεύομαι ἑτοιμάσαι τόπον ὑμῖν. Thus then the words may be rendered, 'whither Jesus is entered as a Forerunner for us; and not as a forerunner only, but, having opened heaven, he remains there as our High Priest, to introduce thither all the faithful into the presence of God.' In the expression ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν we have, as Stuart observes, a reference to Christ's priesthood; from which the Apostle takes occasion to show that, as it was lawful for the Mosaic High Priest alone to enter, through the veil, into the inner sanctuary, so Jesus, as High Priest of the new dispensation, alone entered the eternal sanctuary above, making expiation of perpetual efficacy for sinners, Heb. ix. 11, 12, 22—26.

VII. The Apostle now resumes a subject which he had before glanced at, v. 6—10, and pursues it to v. 25, where he takes up the topic broken off at v. 10, and completes what he intended to say concerning it, vii. 26—28; explaining the passage, which he had referred to, from Ps. cx. 4; and, after removing the doubt, which might seem to hinder him from treating of the sublime doctrines of the allegories and types of Christ, he labours to convince the Hebrews of the authority, prerogatives, and exalted priesthood of Melchizedec. His argument is founded on the oath of God, by which Jesus was constituted a High Priest for ever, according to the order or similitude of Melchizedec. Whatever, therefore, as a priest, this personage was, such must Jesus our High Priest be. Now the superiority of the priesthood of Mechizedec is shown in v. 1—10; and though the Apostle has not expressly stated the conclusion, but left it to be supplied by the reader, it is clearly this: that, as Melchizedec is superior to the Aaronical priests, and Christ is a priest after the order of Melchizedec, so Christ must be far superior to them. (Dind., Iaspis, Stuart, and Holden.)

1. The γὰρ is resumptive and explanatory, and may be rendered enim, or nam. Some Commentators after ἱερεὺς supply ἦν. This, however, not a little interrupts the course of argument, from an examination of which Kuinoel shows that 'the periodus oratoria carried on from ver. 1 ends at the words of ver. 3, μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές; and that these words belong to Melchizedec, and are to be considered as the predicate; while all the rest that precedes is subjoined to the subject, describing it more at large:' a view, I would add, confirmed by the use of the Article at Μελχ., which Bp. Middleton shows would not otherwise have been employed. As to the doubt which has been entertained, whether Μελχ. is to be regarded as an appellative (i. e. title of honour) or a proper name, the latter is the common opinion, and is, upon the whole, the best founded. At all events a real person is here designated, and not (as some suppose) an imaginary one; yet of those who admit the reality, all are not agreed as to the nature of his person. Many ancients and some moderns have supposed him to have been a superhuman person, while others suppose him to be the same as Enoch, or Shem, or Job. There seems, however, most probability in the opinion of Josephus, and several eminent moderns, that he was a descendant, not far removed, of one of the sons of Noah; that he was a powerful chieftain, or head of a tribe, among the Canaanites, and, after the custom of the patriarchal ages, was, as head of his tribe, both king and priest.

— Σαλήμ.] Whether this was, or was not, the same as Jerusalem, is a disputed question. Kuin., with reason, decides in favour of the former opinion.

— τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου.] The τοῦ before ὑψίστου is not found in the Ed. Pr. and the Textus receptus, though it has place in the Editions of Erasmus, R. Stephens, Bengel, and Mill, and has been adopted by Wetstein; and rightly; such being required by the proprietas linguæ, according to which ought to be written either τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου, or Θεοῦ ὑψίστου, as in Joseph. Ant. xvi. 6. 2, ἐπὶ Ὑρκανοῦ ἀρχιερέως Θεοῦ ὑψίστου· but τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ὑψίστου is confirmed by the Septuagint in the passage of Genesis alluded to.

— ὁ συναντήσας Ἀ.] Kuinoel has here ably removed a seeming discrepancy between this account and what is said in Gen. xiv. 17; from whence it may, as he shows, be collected that Melchizedec did meet Abraham; though the circumstance is only expressly mentioned of the King of Sodom.

— τῆς κοπῆς.] Notwithstanding that all our Translators render this slaughter, yet its true sense, I conceive, is simply defeat. Of such a sense the Hebr. הכות at Gen. xiv. 17 is quite susceptible; and that such is the meaning here is plain from ver. 15 of that passage; for the action at ver. 17 must be the same with that at ver. 15, and that must simply be defeating, as is plain 2 αὐτὸν, ᾧ καὶ δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων ἐμέρισεν Ἀβραάμ· πρῶ-τον μὲν ἑρμηνευόμενος βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης, ἔπειτα δὲ καὶ 3 βασιλεὺς Σαλήμ (ὅ ἐστι βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης)· ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ἀγενεαλόγητος, μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔχων, ἀφωμοιωμένος δὲ τῷ Υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ,—μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ 4 διηνεκές. [b] Θεωρεῖτε δὲ, πηλίκος οὗτος, ᾧ καὶ δεκάτην 5 Ἀβραὰμ ἔδωκεν ἐκ τῶν ἀκροθινίων ὁ πατριάρχης! [c] Καὶ οἱ b Gen. 14. 20.

c Num. 18. 21, 26. Deut. 18. 1. Jos. 14. 4. 2 Chron. 31. 5.

from what follows. So Joshua x. 20 we have κόπτοντες αὐτοὺς κοπὴν μεγάλην σφόδρα.

— εὐλογήσας αὐτόν.] This many recent Commentators take to mean no more than 'having congratulated him;' but it has been fully proved by Ernesti, Winzer, and Kuinoel, that the word must here have that more eminent sense which the ancient Expositors assign to it, as denoting a sacerdotal benediction. So that the expression does not simply denote bona apprecari, but bona, ut certò eventura, apprecari; see Levit. ix. 22. Numb. vi. 23. This is plain from ver. 7, τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος εὐλογεῖται. It is implied, therefore, that what was uttered was ex autoritate monituque Divino; in short, such a blessing as that which Jacob desired, and obtained of the angel, Gen. xxxii. 29.

2. ἀπὸ πάντων] scil. τῶν ἀκροθινίων, as is expressed at ver. 4. In vain is it that some recent Commentators attempt to prove this to have been only a courteous interchange of presents between two chieftains. The Apostle's language will admit of no such sense; but plainly implies what is expressed by Philo, p. 437, that this tenth was given νικηφόρῳ Θεῷ χαριστήρια τῆς νίκης. That the proportion in question was not, as the above Commentators aver, accidental, is clear from what is said by Spelman and Selden on Tithes, who have traced back the custom of dedicating tithes to religious uses to the remotest antiquity.

— πρῶτον μὲν ἑρμηνευόμενος—εἰρήνης.] The best mode of taking these words is to consider them as elliptical, and (with Carpzov) to be supplied as follows: Πρῶτον μὲν ἑρμηνευόμενός ἐστιν ὁ Μελχισεδὲκ κατὰ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης· ἔπειτα δ' ἔστι καὶ βασιλεὺς Σαλὴμ, ὅ ἐστι ἑρμηνευόμενον βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης.

— βασιλεὺς δικαιοσύνης.] This is by some Expositors, and recently Stuart, regarded as merely equivalent to βασιλεὺς δίκαιος; while others (as Ernesti and Kuinoel) have, I think, gone far to prove that the expression here designates 'such a king as discharges his functions, whether regal or sacerdotal, so as to make his subjects righteous and holy;' with allusion to that full justification which we obtain through the intercession of the great High Priest, JESUS. So βασιλεὺς εἰρήνης is shown by Winzer to be an appellation adapted to the great antitype, the 'Prince of peace,' the Reconciler of man to his offended Maker, and who put away the enmity between Jews and Gentiles. Compare Eph. i. 10. Col. i. 18—23.

3. ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ.] Of these controverted expressions one thing may safely be affirmed, that they can by no means be supposed to import that Melchizedec, as a man, was not born and did not die; but, as the best Expositors are in general agreed, their meaning is merely, that, as a man, his birth and death, or father and mother, are not recorded in Scripture. Similar modes of expression are found in the Classical writers. So in Euripides, Ion, 110, we have ἀμήτωρ ἀπάτωρ τε γεγώς. Ἀγενεαλόγητος, we may, with some, regard as explanatory of the two preceding words, denoting 'one whose origin and pedigree are unknown;' but it is better, with many eminent Expositors, to suppose it to have reference to Melchizedec as a priest; understanding him to be so called, because, being a Canaanite, and not standing in the public genealogical register as belonging to the family of Aaron, he was a priest not by right of sacerdotal descent, but by the grace of God. His priesthood, therefore, was of a higher order than Aaron's. Here, then, we have a striking counterpart in the antitype Christ, who was likewise ἀγενεαλόγητος. The above view of the expression is strongly confirmed by the words at ver. 6, ὁ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν.

— μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωῆς τέλος ἔ.] These words seem meant to be taken in two senses, 1. as applied to Melchizedec, and 2. as to Christ, the type and the antitype respectively. As said of the former, they may mean either, 'having no beginning of his [Sacerdotal] days, nor end of his [Sacerdotal] life;' or, according to others, 'having no limited time for the commencement and expiration of his office,' as had the Levitical priests, who were restricted to serve between the ages of 30 and 50. As applied to the latter, CHRIST, the words will have their literal sense, denoting eternity, and consequently Deity.

The next words ἀφωμοιωμένος τῷ Υἱῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ are not, it would seem, to be referred to what immediately follows (since Melchizedec's priesthood ended with his life; while Christ's will only terminate with his Mediatorial reign); but to the words just preceding, taken by themselves, and no other assimilation understood, but that of his 'being made, by the Divine decree, a type of that great High Priest, who had neither beginning of days, nor end of life.'

4—7. The argument arising from the fact, that one of Abraham's contemporaries was in some things superior to him, as here stated, serves to introduce with great advantage a most conclusive argument against the perpetual obligation of the Levitical law, and the continuance of the Aaronick priesthood, and that of the covenant made with the nation of Israel at Sinai. (Scott.) We have here set forth the superiority of Melchizedec to Abraham, on the ground that this superiority was acknowledged by Abraham himself, in the act of rendering tithe to him; consequently the inferiority acknowledged by him must attach to his descendants.

4. τῶν ἀκροθ.] Ἀκροθίνια at first denoted only the first fruits (ἀπαρχαὶ) of the spoils μὲν ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν Λευῒ τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμβάνοντες ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν ἀποδεκατοῦν τὸν λαὸν κατὰ τὸν νόμον, τουτέστι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτῶν, καίπερ ἐξεληλυθότας ἐκ τῆς ὀσφύος [d Gen. 14. 20. Rom. 4. 13. Gal. 3. 16.] Ἀβραάμ· [d] ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλογούμενος ἐξ αὐτῶν δεδεκάτωκε 6 τὸν Ἀβραάμ, καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα τὰς ἐπαγγελίας εὐλόγηκε· χωρὶς δὲ πάσης ἀντιλογίας τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος 7 εὐλογεῖται. Καὶ ὧδε μὲν δεκάτας ἀποθνήσκοντες ἄνθρωποι 8 λαμβάνουσιν· ἐκεῖ δὲ, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ. Καὶ, ὡς ἔπος 9 εἰπεῖν, διὰ Ἀβραὰμ καὶ Λευῒ ὁ δεκάτας λαμβάνων δεδεκά[e Gen. 14. 20. f Gal. 2. 21. infra ver. 18, 19.] τωται· [e] ἔτι γὰρ ἐν τῇ ὀσφύϊ τοῦ πατρὸς ἦν, ὅτε συνήν- 10 τησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Μελχισεδέκ. [f] Εἰ μὲν οὖν τελείωσις διὰ τῆς 11 taken in war, but came at length to mean the whole of those spoils; and since Josephus and Philo, in relating the story, both of them testify that Melchizedec received the tenth of the whole of the spoils, the best Expositors have, with reason, supposed that to be the meaning here.

5. καὶ οἱ μὲν—αὐτῶν.] Render, 'And those, indeed, of the tribe of Levi, who hold the office of the priesthood, have a direction, by the law, to take tithe of the people; that is, their brethren, though sprung from the loins of Abraham [like themselves].' Τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμβ. is said, since, though all the tribe had a right to tithes, all were not priests, but only the sons of Aaron. The argument goes on the principle (acknowledged by the persons addressed) that the rendering of tithes to another implied inferiority in the payer. With ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν we may compare John xix. 7, νόμον ἔχομεν. Ἀποδεκατόω generally signifies to pay tithes, but here to cause them to be paid, to receive them, as also in 1 Sam. viii. 15. Nehem. x. 37. Ἐξέρχεσθαι ἐκ τῆς ὀσφύος τινὸς is a Hellenistic phrase, found in the Sept., and corresponding to the Classical one γεννᾶσθαι ὑπό τινος.

6. ὁ δὲ μὴ γενεαλ. ἐξ α.] 'But he (i. e. Melchizedec) who did not trace his origin from them (and consequently might be thought no priest by the Jewish law), yet received tithes;' intimating that his priesthood was of another kind, and in virtue of another authority. There is an emphasis on Ἀβρ.; and εὐλόγ. contains the other argument for superiority; which is plain if the word be taken in the same sense as at ver. 1. The plural in ἐπαγγελίαι here, and at Gal. iii. 16, as used of one promise (that in him should all the families of the earth be blessed), is used either dignitatis gratiâ, or rather with reference to the several repetitions of the original promise.

7. χωρὶς δὲ πάσης—κρείττονος.] The δὲ is argumentative, and may be rendered now. The expression τὸ ἔλαττον is reckoned among those examples, so frequently occurring, of the use of the neuter for the masculine; as John vi. 37, πᾶν, and 1 Cor. vi. 11, ταῦτα, and occasionally in the best writers. In the Scriptures, however, the idiom seems rarely introduced (as it is in the Classical writers) for the mere purpose of elegance in style, but almost always on account of some delicate propriety. Here the neuter, we may observe, has the advantage of being better adapted to a general proposition such as the present; and moreover, by its use, makes the comparison in question (a comparison not a little humbling to the national self-complacence of the persons addressed) less invidiously prominent.

8. A yet further ground of superiority is now urged.

— ὧδε.] Meaning, under the Levitical law, which assigned them tithes. Ἀποθνήσκοντες ἄνθ. Meaning 'those who exercise their office only in succession,' each succeeding to the other by death, and consequently only life-possessors. Ἐκεῖ δὲ, 'but there;' meaning, in the case of Melchizedec's priesthood. Of the words following, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῇ, the full sense is, 'one receiveth them, of whom it is testified (namely, Psalm cx. 4) that he liveth [for ever], μένει εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, as it is said supra v. 3.

9. The argument here urged is, that even Levi himself, though unborn, virtually paid tithes to Melchizedec through Abraham his ancestor. On this argument, however, as it is somewhat precarious, (though proceeding on a principle recognised by those to whom it is addressed,) the writer, by the qualifying expression ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, hints that he does not mean to press, or particularly insist on it.

10. ἐν τῇ ὀσφύϊ, &c.] Meaning, that 'even then, when Melchizedec met Abraham, Levi already (in a certain sense) existed, and through Abraham, paid tithes to the king of Salem, i. e. acknowledged inferiority compared with him.' Here, as often, the conclusion is left to be supplied, and the argument is, Christ is a priest after the order of Melchizedec. Melchizedec is superior to the Aaronical priests; consequently Christ, as a priest, is superior to them. (Stuart.)

11—18. Turning from the type to the antitype, the Apostle now proceeds to prove the superiority of Christ by another mode of argument, which may be stated, with Stuart and Holden, as follows: 'If the Levitical priesthood had accomplished all that was needed (a free atonement and salvation), there would have been no occasion for another priest to arise after a different order; namely, after the order of Melchizedec, ver. 11. But if the priesthood were changed, there must also be a change of the law under which it was appointed, ver. 12. Now that the Levitical priesthood was intended to be changed, is evident from this, that Christ, of whom the things in Psalm xc. 4 were said, sprang from Judah, of which tribe no one was allowed by the Mosaic law to officiate at the altar, vv. 13, 14. And farther, it

Λευϊτικῆς ἱερωσύνης ἦν, (ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νενομοθέτητο,) τίς ἔτι χρεία, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδὲκ ἕτερον ἀνίστασθαι 12 ἱερέα, καὶ οὐ κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Ἀαρὼν λέγεσθαι; μετατιθεμένης γὰρ τῆς ἱερωσύνης, ἐξ ἀνάγκης καὶ νόμου μετάθεσις γίνεται.
13 Ἐφ' ὃν γὰρ λέγεται ταῦτα, φυλῆς ἑτέρας μετέσχηκεν, ἀφ' 14 ἧς οὐδεὶς προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσιαστηρίῳ. [g] Πρόδηλον γάρ, g Isa. 11. 1. Matt. 1. 2, &c.
ὅτι ἐξ Ἰούδα ἀνατέταλκεν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν· εἰς ἣν φυλὴν Luke 3. 33. Rom. 1. 3.

is still more clear, from God's oath, that there was to be another priest, different from, and superior to, the Aaronical priesthood, inasmuch as he was to be after the order of Melchizedec, vv. 15—17, and perpetual: consequently the law of Moses was to be abolished, and to give place to a more perfect dispensation, vv. 18, 19, the High Priest of which must therefore be pre-eminent.'

11. The Apostle now evinces that the Levitical priesthood must yield to the priesthood of Christ, because Melchizedec, after whose order he is a priest, 1. is opposed to Aaron, vv. 11—14; 2. hath no end of life, vv. 15—19, but remaineth a priest continually. (Bengel.) The argument is as follows: 'From what has been said, then, it appears that the Levitical priesthood is by no means a perfect institution (i. e. perfectly answering all God's designs and man's wants in its making a perfect expiation for sin); for thus the order of Aaron needed not to have been superseded by that of Melchizedec. Whence it follows that both the priesthood and the law were to give way to a better priesthood, and more excellent dispensation.'

— ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῇ νενομ.] 'for by it the people were put under the law,' or, had the law given them. So the Pesch. Syr. renders, 'per quod imposita fuit lex.' Many eminent recent Commentators, indeed, interpret the ἐπὶ 'on condition of,' or, 'on account of;' neither of which senses is here suitable. In the Vulgate it is well rendered sub; for the Dative here denotes the foundation upon which any thing or person rests, and through which it is supported: consequently it may signify, as here, simply sub, though the genitive would have been plainer; as Luke iii. 2, ἐπ' ἀρχιερέων Ἄννα καὶ Καϊάφα. The same use of the Dative has place in a kindred passage infra viii. 6, ἐπὶ κρείττοσιν ἐπαγγελίαις νενομοθέτηται, 'was founded on, or under the sanction of, through.'

Here, then, we have a parenthetical remark, intended to pre-occupy an objection; 'since some (as Mr. Wesley observes) might thence infer that perfection was by that priesthood and law.' Now that is, in the words following, shown not to be the case; and consequently any plea for the retaining of the law overruled.

— τίς ἔτι χρεία—ἱερέα;] Meaning, 'What need was there for it to be abolished, and another substituted for it, unless for its insufficiency for expiation; which would prove the Levitical priesthood inferior to Christ's,' and consequently to be abolished?

— ἀνίστασθαι] 'to be raised up.' The word is often used of introduction to any public office, especially the Regal or Sacerdotal; see Note on Acts iii. 26. Many recent Commentators take λέγεσθαι as put for ἐκλέγεσθαι, 'to be constituted.' For that signification, however, no sufficient authority has been adduced. It is best rendered, 'to be nominated or styled,' which may imply appointment.

12. μετατιθεμένης γὰρ—γίνεται.] Needless perplexity has here been occasioned by assigning to γὰρ the sense for. The word has here, I apprehend, a use falling under that extensive class in which the reason referred to is to be gathered from the context, or the subject-matter. In the present case it may, as often, be rendered nempe, scilicet, quippe. By the term μετατιθ. is imported abandonment of the old, and the substitution of a new, law.

The necessity here spoken of is, as Rosenmuller remarks, a necessity arising from the condition of human nature; i. e. what Dialecticians call a necessity of consequence; the means of atonement, as Abp. Newcome says, depending on the priesthood. That a change of the priesthood involved a change of the law, is not what the writer means to prove; for that his readers would admit without proof; but that there was this change of priesthood (necessarily involving a change of law) is what he proceeds to establish in vv. 13—17; and that by two arguments; 1. that the High Priest Christ was not descended from the tribe of Judah, vv. 13, 14; 2. that he was to be a High Priest for ever, and consequently no change of priesthood is any longer to be expected. Moreover, as Christ's priesthood differed from the Levitical, so must the law by which it is regulated differ from that which regulated the Aaronical priesthood. See more in Kuinoel and Stuart.

13. ἐφ' ὃν γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ here, and in the next verse, refers to a clause omitted, and which is well supplied by Mr. Wesley, thus: '[But the priesthood is changed from one order and tribe to another;] for he,' &c. Ταῦτα, i. e. his being a priest after the order of Melchizedec, and his having an eternal priesthood. Μετέσχ. Literally, 'had part in, had to do with, i. e. belonged to.' So Diod. Sic. p. 217 (cited by Munthe), μετέχειν τῆς παραλίου. Προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσ. is equivalent to προσεδρεύειν τῷ θυσ. in 1 Cor. ix. 13, where see Note.

14. πρόδηλον, &c.] This is a stronger term than δῆλον, and being synonymous with κατάδηλον in the verse following, it may be supposed to mean, 'prominently conspicuous;' literally, 'plain at first sight;' see Note on 1 Tim. v. 24. In the term ἀνατέταλκεν the best Commentators are agreed that the metaphor is derived from the springing up of plants. Certain it is that the Hebr. צמח (a plant) is often used in the Old Test. of the Messiah, and that צמח is sometimes rendered by the Sept. ἀνατολή, and sometimes βλάστημα. That ἔρνος and θάλος are, in the Classical writers, used of illustrious persons, is well known.

οὐδὲν περὶ ἱερωσύνης Μωϋσῆς ἐλάλησε. Καὶ περισσότερον 15 ἔτι κατάδηλόν ἐστιν, εἰ κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα Μελχισεδὲκ ἀνίσταται ἱερεὺς ἕτερος, ὃς οὐ κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς ‡ σαρκικῆς 16 γέγονεν, ἀλλὰ κατὰ δύναμιν ζωῆς ἀκαταλύτου· [h] μαρτυρεῖ 17 γάρ· Ὅτι σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ. [i] Ἀθέτησις μὲν γὰρ γίνεται προαγούσης 18 ἐντολῆς διὰ τὸ αὐτῆς ἀσθενὲς καὶ ἀνωφελὲς, ([k] οὐδὲν γὰρ 19 ἐτελείωσεν ὁ νόμος,) ἐπεισαγωγὴ δὲ κρείττονος ἐλπίδος, δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ. Καὶ καθ' ὅσον οὐ χωρὶς ὁρκωμοσίας· 20 h Ps. 110. 4. supra 5. 6.

i Rom. 8. 3. Gal. 4. 9. k Gal. 3. 24. & 2. 16. infra 9. 9. Acts 13. 39. Rom. 3. 20, 21. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. supra 4. 16.

15. περισσότ. ἔτι κατάδ.] 'still plainer is it,' namely, that the priesthood of Christ is far superior to that of Aaron, and consequently that the law is to be changed.

— εἰ κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα, &c.] 'if [as is the case] another priest,' &c. Meaning to say (as Mr. Wesley well points out) that both the priesthood and the law are changed, because the priest now raised up is not only of another tribe, but of a quite different order. Κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα here is equivalent to κατὰ τὴν τάξιν before.

16. ὃς οὐ κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς γέγονεν.] Of these words various novel interpretations have been proposed by recent Commentators, all of which are justly rejected by Kuinoel, who, with reason, acquiesces in the commonly received mode of explanation, as best supported by the context. According to this the words may be rendered, 'Who (namely, Christ) was not made such (i. e. a High Priest) by a law of fleshly commandment [like the Mosaic, which was so, inasmuch as its ordinances were frail, looked no further than this life, and therefore temporary, and to be abrogated, Ephes. ii. 15], but through the power of an endless life;' namely, as having in him the power of endless life, i.e. both as Son of God, and also as involved in the promise and oath of God, 'Thou art a Priest for ever,' &c.; see more in Hyperius, Calvin, and Bp. Hall. By the expression σαρκικῆς the Apostle may also have meant to suggest the inferiority of the old Law in respect of its carnality; and to intimate that the exalted excellence of the new High Priest demanded a corresponding excellence in the law, namely, by passing from a carnal to a spiritual service. On the var. lect. σαρκίνης see Note on 2 Cor. iii. 3.

17. μαρτυρεῖ] scil. ὁ Θεός. The conclusion, that the law is also changed, is left to be supplied by the reader. (Stuart.)

18, 19. The Apostle here repeats more positively, what he has before said indirectly, respecting a change of the law and the priesthood, and at the same time gives a reason for the change. Thus verse 18 is closely connected with the words of the Psalm, v. 17, especially the phrase κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχ.; for this order of things was contrary to the Mosaic law. (Kuinoel.)

18. ἀθέτησις μὲν γὰρ, &c.] To advert to the construction here, the best Expositors are agreed that ἀθέτησις μὲν here has corresponding to it ἐπεισαγωγὴ at ver. 19; γίνεται being repeated; q. d. 'For there is indeed [implied in those words] an annulling of the former ordinances [concerning the priesthood], and an introduction of a better hope.' The commandment here spoken of (ἐντολῆς) is not to be confined to the priesthood, but extended to the whole of the Mosaic law, so as to be equivalent to νόμος, as Mark vii. 8, 9. Of this it is said (as a reason for its abrogation) that it is weak, and useless for the desired object, expiation; as is made clear by the parallel clause, οὐδὲν γὰρ ἐτελείωσεν, &c. Not that the law was weak or unprofitable as to the end for which God made it, to lead men to Christ (Gal. iii. 24), but utterly weak for justification and salvation, and comparatively unprofitable, though answering for a time many important ends. See Gal. iii. 19—24.

With the language here applied to the Law we may compare that used of it in the Epistles of St. Paul to the Romans and Galatians. There, as here, it is shown how the Law was weak, and in what sense it was useless; evincing, as Carpzov observes, that neither can the moral law make us holy, nor the ceremonial one expiate our sins.

19. οὐδὲν ἐτελείωσε.] Meaning, that the Law, by its sacrifices, and the observances of the priesthood, 'provided no real expiation and atonement' for sin. On which signification of τελειοῦν see Note at ii. 10, and supra v. 11. Ἐπεισαγωγὴ (which signifies literally 'superinduction') is a very rare word, of which only one example has been adduced, from Josephus, Ant. xi. 6. 2; though another is found in Thucyd. viii. 92. By the hope here spoken of understand the hope of salvation held forth in the Gospel, and introduced by Christ,—a hope, as it is added, by which alone we have approach to God. Compare Eph. iii. 12.

— δι' ἧς ἐγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ.] Ἐγγίζομεν is a very forcible expression, the 'drawing near' being meant to intimate a great point of superiority in the new Law over the old one. Under the latter the priests only, not the people, were permitted, in their acts of worship, to draw near to the manifestation of the Divine presence in the Tabernacle; but under the former, by the sacrifice of Christ, all believers are alike permitted to come to the throne of grace, in full dependence on the all-powerful intercession of an ever-living High Priest.

20—23. Here is further proved, by implication, the superiority of Christ, from his having been appointed with the solemnity of an oath, while the Aaronical priests were not.

20. καὶ καθ' ὅσον οὐ χωρὶς ὁρκωμοσίας.] Supply, from what follows, ἱερεὺς γέγονε Ἰησοῦς: or, with Kuinoel, διαθήκης ἔγγυος γέγονεν. Moreover, καθ' ὅσον here has answering to it κατὰ τοσοῦτον at v. 22; the intermediate portion (v. 21) being parenthetical, and added for explanation. The whole passage may be literally 21 ([l] οἱ μὲν γὰρ χωρὶς ὁρκωμοσίας εἰσὶν ἱερεῖς γεγονότες, ὁ δὲ l Ps. 110. 4.

μετὰ ὁρκωμοσίας, διὰ τοῦ λέγοντος πρὸς αὐτόν· Ὤμοσε Κύριος καὶ οὐ μεταμεληθήσεται· Σὺ ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸν 22 αἰῶνα κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ·) [m] κατὰ τοσοῦτον m Infra 8. 6.
23 κρείττονος διαθήκης γέγονεν ἔγγυος Ἰησοῦς. Καὶ οἱ μὲν πλείονές εἰσι γεγονότες ἱερεῖς διὰ τὸ θανάτῳ κωλύεσθαι 24 παραμένειν· ὁ δὲ, διὰ τὸ μένειν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἀπαρά- n Rom. 8. 34. 1 Tim. 2. 5.
25 βατον ἔχει τὴν ἱερωσύνην· [n] ὅθεν καὶ σώζειν εἰς τὸ παντελὲς infra 9. 24. 1 John 2. 2. δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους δι' αὐτοῦ τῷ Θεῷ, πάντοτε o Rom. 8. 34. supra 4. 14, 15.
26 ζῶν εἰς τὸ ἐντυγχάνειν ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν. [o] Τοιοῦτος γὰρ ἡμῖν infra 9. 24. 1 John 2. 2.

rendered, 'And [there is this argument too,—that] inasmuch as he was made a priest not without an oath, (for those have been made priests without an oath, but he with an oath, even that of him who said unto him, "The Lord hath sworn and will not repent," &c.) in just so much is he made the mediator of a better covenant.' Comp. viii. 6.

21. The term here, ὁρκωμοσία, is not (as Kuin. considers it) merely equivalent to ὅρκος, but (as Tittman de Synonym. observes) denotes a solemn affirmation, or promise on oath. It is a rare word, though found in Ezek. xvii. 19, and 3 Esdr. viii. 9. The Classical writers use ὁρκωμόσιον, though only in the sense covenant, or treaty sanctioned by oath.

By the words οὐ μεταμεληθήσεται we have expressed the nature of the oath in question, which is such an one as implies that the appointment itself shall not be reversed, or (in the words of the Psalmist elsewhere) that the swearer 'will not alter the purpose which hath gone out of his mouth.'

22. With respect to the two terms διαθήκης and ἔγγυος, the former signifies, 1. a disposition or arrangement of any thing; 2. a covenant; 3. when applied to the Jewish law, or to Christianity, it denotes (with allusion to the engagements and conditions involved) a dispensation. Ἔγγυος denotes sponsor, or surety; a word occurring no where else in the New Test., but found in Ecclus. xxix. 15. 2 Macc. x. 28. The Classical writers use ἐγγυητὴς or ἐχέγγυος. The term is one of extensive signification, and here carries with it a double sense,—namely, of Surety and Mediator; as is plain from the parallel passage at viii. 6, where the term used is μεσίτης. These senses answer to the two principal parts of Christ's office in the working of man's redemption.

23, 24. We have here stated another and final point of superiority in Christ's priesthood over that of the Levites, founded on the fact that the latter is continually changing, and passing into different hands by succession, while the former is unchangeable and perpetual. This comparison, however, is especially intended to apply to the High Priest's office; Jesus being all along considered as ἀρχιερεὺς, though the term ἱερεῖς, and not ἀρχ., seems here to be used in order to include the ordinary priests as well as the High Priest. And here, it may be observed, the argument proceeds on the principle that multiplicity argues inferiority. 'Hence (says Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 657,) the Apostle proves the insufficiency of the legal priesthood and sacrifice: the priests were many, and there was a constant repetition of the sacrifice, because of the mortality of the one and the insufficiency of the other to take away sins; as, on the contrary, he further on, x. 1—14, proves the sufficiency of the priesthood and sacrifice of Christ from the unchangeableness and one-ship both of Priest and sacrifice.'

23. εἰσι γεγονότες] for γεγόνασι, by an idiom not unfrequent in the New Test., and sometimes occurring in the Classical writers, as Thucyd. i. 38, ἀρέσκοντές ἐσμεν. The term πλείονες (as Stuart observes) refers, not to the number of priests existing at any one time (said to have been 1500), but to the numbers formed by repeated succession. Of the High Priests there had been 75 at the destruction of Jerusalem. Of παραμένειν the meaning must be, not 'continue alive,' (as is clear from vv. 3. 17. 21,) but 'continue in their office;' though μένειν in the next verse must have the former sense, to signify that Christ is immortal in his nature, πάντοτε ζῶν, as it is said at ver. 25.

24. ἀπαράβατον.] Literally, 'not transmissible,' not having to be transmitted or to pass into different hands in succession, ἀδιάδοχον, as Theophylact explains. Here, then, it is shown that God having by oath constituted Christ 'priest for ever,' his priesthood has not, like Aaron's, any succession in office. He is one and the same to his Church 'yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' Hence is then drawn the conclusion, that He alone (and not the Jewish High Priest) is able to fully save from condemnation all who have access to God through him: the proof of which ability lies in the words following, πάντοτε ζῶν, 'since he liveth for ever.'

25. εἰς τὸ παντελές.] This expression has been somewhat differently understood by different Expositors. Some, taking it of time, assign to it the sense always, for ever; which is not a little confirmed by the context in the words following, πάντοτε ζῶν. Most Expositors, however, connecting it closely with σώζειν, and taking it for the adverb παντελῶς, render it 'entirely,' (lit., 'to the utmost of their need,') 'in the highest degree;' which latter interpretation is preferable, both as yielding the weightier sense (see Hyperius), and as being more agreeable to the usus loquendi; for of εἰς τὸ παντελὲς, as used of time, no example has been adduced; whereas, as standing for παντελῶς, it occurs in Luke xiii. 11, and several times in Josephus, the Sept., and sometimes in the Classical writers.

— εἰς τὸ ἐντυγχάνειν ὑπὲρ α.] 'so that he can [always] make intercession for them.' The ἔπρεπεν ἀρχιερεὺς, ὅσιος, ἄκακος, ἀμίαντος, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, καὶ ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος· p ὃς οὐκ ἔχει καθ' ἡμέραν ἀνάγκην, ὥσπερ οἱ ἀρχιερεῖς, 27 πρότερον ὑπὲρ τῶν ἰδίων ἁμαρτιῶν θυσίας ἀναφέρειν, ἔπειτα τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ· τοῦτο γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἐφάπαξ, ἑαυτὸν ἀνενέγκας.

p Lev. 9. 7. & 16. 6, 11. supra 5. 3. Zech. 3. 9. Rom. 6. 10.

expression may, however, like ἔγγυος at ver. 22, advert to all the various offices of our great High Priest, as well as his intercession; on which see Scott. Kuinoel, indeed, in an elaborate Note on this word, is of opinion 'that Christ, as our great High Priest, is here compared with the Jewish priest in the work of deprecation.' This, however, is taking too confined, not to say low, a view. Intercession, in its fullest sense, must here be intended, which may include both deprecation and that sort of intercession which is ascribed to our Lord by St. John, 1 Ep. ii. 1. Παράκλητον ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, Ἰησοῦν Χρ. Now from the full discussion on the sense of παράκλητος, which will be found in the Note on John xiv. 16, it appears that the word denotes advocate, or intercessor; which is, I conceive, the principal sense here and at 1 John ii. 1; though that of helper, the one ascribed by most eminent Expositors to παράκ. in the above passage of St. John's Epistle, may be included.

26—28. As a means of exciting them to come unto the all-sufficient and never-failing Helper and Intercessor, the Apostle now adverts to the infinite superiority of the High Priest of the new to the one of the old dispensation, in the spotless purity of his character, which is such that he needs not to offer sacrifice on his own account: a point on which, perhaps, he was induced to treat, because (as Stuart observes) having at ver. 7 ascribed to Christ the sympathies and infirmities of human nature, he here—to preclude any idea of his partaking likewise of the sinfulness of humanity—shows that whereas they were encompassed with infirmities, he was spotless; whereas they were ceremonially undefiled, he was morally so. Finally, when it is said that such a High Priest as could effectually be our Intercessor and Helper was needful to be such (for that is admitted to be the force of the expression ἔπρεπε) for the purposes of expiation and salvation, we have here strikingly represented the superiority of Christ, who was such; and this the words of the Apostle imply.

26. ὅσιος, ἄκακος, ἀμίαντος, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμ.] These several terms seem to have allusion to the qualities required (though rarely, if ever, found) in the earthly High Priest. The first of them (ὅσιος) regards the duties to God, accompanied with internal purity of mind and nature; the second (ἄκακος) those to men, accompanied with purity in the life. Ἀμίαντος signifies intaminatus. So at James i. 27 we have καθαρὰ καὶ ἀμίαντος, corresponding to the integer vitæ scelerisque purus of the Latin poet. The concluding expression, κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, denotes (as Abp. Newcome and Kuinoel interpret) 'differing very far from the rest of men, and consequently not of their number;' in short, one who has no need to offer expiation for his own sins (ver. 27), as being χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, as it is said, iv. 15.

— ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν.] Equivalent to διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς at iv. 14, and ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τῆς μεγαλωσύνης ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς at viii. 1. Thus Jesus is represented as being σύνθρονος. (See John xvii. 5. Eph. iv. 10. Rev. iii. 21). All which phrases denote the most exalted dignity and majesty, not on earth only, but in heaven; and consequently representing him as infinitely superior to the Jewish High Priests.

27. καθ' ἡμέραν.] Some would here supply ὡρισμένην, or τεταγμένην, understanding this of the day of expiation. The ellipsis, however, is one quite destitute of authority. There is no sufficient reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned, daily. And that the High Priest did make a daily offering for the sins of himself and the people, is asserted by Commentators, and seems proved by Philo, who says, ἀρχιερεὺς, κατὰ τοὺς νόμους εὐχάς τε καὶ θυσίας τελῶν καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν. See also Levit. vi. 20. Num. xxviii. 3, 4. On the exact nature, indeed, of this sacrifice, some difference of opinion exists. Kuinoel is of opinion that the sacrifice was not expiatory, but eucharistical, and he thinks that the expression is used populariter (as at Mark xiv. 49. Acts xvi. 5), to denote from time to time, i. e. 'as often as he was conscious of any private sins, of course including the sacrifice on the day of expiation.' Yet this is running counter to the sacred writer, in whose words it is, at least by implication, asserted, that the High Priest did offer a sacrifice daily, and that not a mere eucharistical, but an expiatory sacrifice, as is necessarily to be inferred from the words ὑπὲρ τῶν ἰδίων ἁμαρτιῶν, and the force of the sacrificial term ἀναφέρειν (for ἀναφ. εἰς τὸ θυσιαστήριον) which occurs at xiii. 15. And so 1 Pet. ii. 5 we have ἀναφ. πνευματικὰς θυσίας.

— τοῦτο γὰρ, &c.] The true purpose and import of the γὰρ here, and that in the next verse, is, I think, best pointed out by Bp. Jebb, in his Sacr. Lit. p. 385, who brings this passage (vv. 27, 28) under the head of those Parallelisms of the New Test. wherein, when a precept is delivered, an assertion made, or a principle laid down, co-ordinate reasons for it are independently assigned, without any repetition of the common antecedent, and without any other indication of continued repetition to the original proposition than the repeated insertion of some causative particle, γὰρ or ὅτι: of which he adduces as examples Matt. v. 11, 12. v. 17—20. vi. 7. 9. 31, 32. vii. 13, 14. Col. ii. 8, the present passage, and Revel. xiv. 15. xv. 4. xviii. 23. xix. 2. On the present passage he remarks, that the division of the proposition here is clear and explicit: (1) Our great High Priest is under no necessity of offering daily sacrifice for his own sins, nor (2) for the sins of the people. The two-fold proof of which two-fold assertion is divided into two clauses, each commencing with γάρ: the proofs, however, are arranged in inverted order, so as to form an epanodos; the 2d assertion being first proved,

28 [q] Ὁ νόμος γὰρ ἀνθρώπους καθίστησιν ἀρχιερεῖς, ἔχοντας [q Supra 2. 10. & 5. 1, 2, 9.]
ἀσθένειαν· ὁ λόγος δὲ τῆς ὁρκωμοσίας, τῆς μετὰ τὸν νόμον, Υἱὸν, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τετελειωμένον.
1 VIII. [a] ΚΕΦΑΛΑΙΟΝ δὲ ἐπὶ τοῖς λεγομένοις· τοιοῦτον [a Eph. 1. 20. Col. 3. 1. supra 1. 3. & 8. 20. infra 12. 2.]
ἔχομεν ἀρχιερέα, ὃς ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τῆς 2 μεγαλωσύνης ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, [b] τῶν ἁγίων λειτουργὸς, καὶ [b Infra 9. 8, 11, 24. & 10. 21.]
τῆς σκηνῆς τῆς ἀληθινῆς· ἣν ἔπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, καὶ οὐκ 3 ἄνθρωπος. [c] Πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰς τὸ προσφέρειν δῶρά τε [c Eph. 5. 2. supra 5. 1.]
καὶ θυσίας καθίσταται· ὅθεν ἀναγκαῖον ἔχειν τὶ καὶ τοῦτον, 4 ὃ προσενέγκῃ. Εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν ἐπὶ γῆς, οὐδ᾽ ἂν ἦν ἱερεὺς, and after it the first. The non-necessity of offering sacrifice for his own sins is first asserted, and last proved,—in order to give prominence to the grand comparison between him and the legal High Priest. He did once for all offer sacrifice for the sins of the people: he never did, never could, and never will offer sacrifice for his own sins; because he is, and was, and shall be everlastingly PERFECT and FREE FROM SIN.

— ἐφάπαξ.] Meaning once for all; as Rom. vi. 10, and infra ix. 12. x. 10.

— ἑαυτὸν ἀνενέγκας.] When we find it expressly stated, that our Lord offered up himself as a sacrifice for sin; when he is elsewhere asserted to be 'the propitiation for our sins,' 1 John ii. 2; 'the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world,' John i. 29; when God is said to have 'spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all,' Rom. viii. 32; and that by him 'we have received the atonement,' Rom. v. 11; when these and many other such passages are to be found; when every expression, referring to the death of Christ, evidently indicates the notion of a sacrifice of atonement and propitiation; when this sacrifice is particularly represented as the nature of a sin offering;—it may well appear surprising on what ground it has ever been made a question that the death of Christ is indeed pronounced in Scripture to have been a sacrifice of atonement and expiation for the sins of men. (Abp. Magee.)

28. τετελειωμένον.] Render, not 'consecrated,' but, as the best Expositors understand, perfected and exalted to the height of dignity, so as to be able by his own merits to expiate the sins of the whole world. See the Pesch. Syr. Version, Hyperius, and Capell.

VIII. After having treated on the nature of Christ's priesthood, and its superiority over that of the Levitical priests, the Apostle now proceeds to the consideration of the duties themselves,—namely, 'the nature of the sacrifice which Jesus offers; the place where it is offered; the efficacy which it has to atone for sin; and the difference, in regard to all these points, between the sacrifice offered by Christ, and that which was presented by the Jewish priests.' (Stuart.) In the present Chapter he shows the superiority of the former to the latter on these grounds: 1. that Christ, as a Priest, exercises his sacerdotal office in heaven; whereas the Aaronical priests only perform theirs on earth, with a typical and emblematic service. 2. That Christ's ministry is more excellent than theirs, as corresponding with the greater excellence of the covenant, of which he is the Mediator; which covenant it was foretold should in due time be introduced, and by which the old covenant was to be abrogated. (Holden.)

1. κεφάλαιον δὲ, &c.] From what has been already said, and from the fact of a new topic being here introduced, it is plain (as the best Commentators, ancient and modern, are agreed) that the term κεφάλαιον must be interpreted, not sum (i. e. summary, or recapitulation), but principal point, as Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret explain. So also Suidas: κεφάλαιον ἐκεῖ τὸ μέγιστον λέγεται. Ἐπὶ, as the context indicates, must here have the sense quod attinet ad, in respect to.

— ἐκάθισεν ἐν, &c.] See Notes on i. 3, and vii. 26. Here is shown the vast difference between Christ and the Jewish High Priest; the one being seated on the throne of God in the heavens, while the others are only ministers on earth, in a temple reared by the hands of men. (Stuart.)

2. We have now further developed the idea in the preceding verse.

— λειτουργός.] See Notes on Rom. xiii. 6, and Phil. ii. 25. By τὰ ἅγια (scil. μέρη) is here meant (as at x. 19. xiii. 11) the Sanctum Sanctorum, as opposed to the ἅγιον κοσμικὸν at ix. 1; and considering that the term united with it, σκηνῆς, has the epithet ἀληθινῆς (like ἄρτος ἀληθινὸς in John vi. 32), true and worthy of the name,—it would seem that that epithet may also be mentally extended to ἁγ.; and that both ἁγ. and σκ. are so called, as being heavenly, in opposition to that made with hands, constituted by Moses, ix. 11; and therefore truly such, as opposed to the earthly ones, which were only shadows of the heavenly.

3. It is now shown that Christ discharges the office of High Priest and Minister of the Sanctuary on this ground,—that all the Priests had need to offer a sacrifice. In the next verse we have subjoined the reasons why Christ is and must be a Priest in heaven.

— πᾶς γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς, &c.] Γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted, which may be thus supplied: '[We have a High Priest and Minister of holy things in heaven;] for,' &c. By προσφ. δῶρα καὶ θυσ. are especially meant piacular sacrifices, both unbloody and bloody; the piacular sacrifice of Christ being compared with the ceremonial sacrifices of the priests. (Kuinoel.) As High Priest, it was necessary that Christ should have some oblation to present. What that is, we learn from vii. 27. ix. 12, namely, himself; after presenting which, we are told that he sat down at the right hand of God.

ὄντων [τῶν] ἱερέων τῶν προσφερόντων κατὰ τὸν νόμον τὰ d Exod. 25. 40. Num. 8. 4. Acts 7. 44. Col. 2. 17. infra 10. 1. δῶρα· ([d] οἵτινες ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιᾷ λατρεύουσι τῶν ἐπου- 5 ρανίων, καθὼς κεχρημάτισται Μωϋσῆς, μέλλων ἐπιτελεῖν τὴν σκηνήν· Ὅρα γάρ, φησι, ποιήσῃς πάντα κατὰ τὸν e 2 Cor. 3. 6. supra 7. 22. τύπον τὸν δειχθέντα σοι ἐν τῷ ὄρει·) [e] νυνὶ δὲ δια- 6 φορωτέρας τέτευχε λειτουργίας, ὅσῳ καὶ κρείττονός ἐστι διαθήκης μεσίτης, ἥτις ἐπὶ κρείττοσιν ἐπαγγελίαις νενομοθέf Supra 7. 11, 18. τηται. [f] Εἰ γὰρ ἡ πρώτη ἐκείνη ἦν ἄμεμπτος, οὐκ ἂν 7 g Jer. 31. 31, &c. δευτέρας ἐζητεῖτο τόπος. [g] μεμφόμενος γὰρ αὐτοῖς λέγει· 8

4. The writer now proceeds to show the reason why Christ is a Priest in the tabernacle above, and not in that on the earth. (Stuart.)

— εἰ μὲν γὰρ ἦν ἐπὶ γῆς, &c.] Meaning, that '[Christ does really sustain the character of Priest in heaven;] for if,' &c. The argument is one deduced ex absurdo; q. d. 'Christ does not sustain the character of a Priest on earth [as earthly]; since he was not a Priest here: for on earth he would not have been a Priest, much less a High Priest, since he was not of the tribe of Levi, nor of that race which offers up, &c. Consequently the oblation he presents must be in the heavenly temple,' meaning heaven.

5. οἵτινες ὑποδείγματι, &c.] i. e. 'who serve unto a ministry [in a temple] which is but an image and adumbration of the Temple in heaven.' So xiii. 10, τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύειν. Ὑπόδειγμα signifies properly a sketch (sometimes called σκιαγράφημα) marked out by a painter, to serve as an exemplar for any one to copy, who may fill up the outlines. 'Something (says Mr. Wesley) like the strokes pencilled out upon a piece of fine linen, which exhibit the figures of leaves and flowers, but have not yet received their splendid colours and curious shades.' Σκιᾷ is added, to make the sense more distinct, and with allusion to the substantial reality of the other ministry, or temple, in which consists the superiority of its High Priest. Τῶν ἐπουρανίων is equivalent to τῶν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς at ix. 23.

— καθὼς κεχρημάτισται—σκηνήν.] This is meant to show the propriety of the terms ὑποδ. and σκιᾷ, and alludes to the directions given to Moses respecting the construction of the tabernacle, as intimating its emblematical nature. On χρηματίζειν see Notes at Matt. ii. 12. Luke ii. 26.

6. νυνὶ δὲ διαφ. τ. λ.] Meaning, 'But, as things now are (i. e. since Christ is a Priest in heaven), his priestly function is very far superior to that of the Levitical priesthood; as far as the covenant, of which he is the Mediator, is more excellent than the one introduced by Moses; and such it is, inasmuch as it is founded on better promises.' Compare supra vii. 22. Μεσίτης signifies 'one who mediates between two parties,' and is equivalent to the expression there used, ἔγγυος. The same term is also employed at Gal. iii. 19, and is applied to Moses, but in a more eminent sense to Christ at ix. 15, and 1 Tim. ii. 5, though μεσέγγυος is the pure Greek term.

As to the manner in which this mediation was effected, it is clear from the context, the whole of this Epistle, and, more or less, from all the Books of the New Test., that it was not merely, as the Unitarians aver, by Christ's interceding for the remission of the forfeiture of salvation, but by his rendering satisfaction for the debt. On this deeply important subject,—the means of recovering what was lost by Adam's transgression,—the reader is referred to Bp. Warburton's Divine Leg., l. ix. ch. vii.

— ἥτις ἐπὶ κρείττοσιν ἐπαγγ. νεν.] By these words it is shown how they are better,—namely, since they respect an eternal, not a temporal and earthly inheritance, by supplying that expiation and atonement of which the old Covenant was destitute. Ἐπὶ has here the sense sub, 'under the sanction of.' See Note supra vii. 11. Νενομοθέτηται. Meaning, 'is promulgated and established with all the solemnity of a law;' the term being used in order to indicate that this was both a covenant and a law. 'The better promises (observes Stuart) follow in vv. 8—13, and the perfection of the second is further disclosed at ix. 9—14. x. 1—22. xiii. 9—14.'

7. The subject of the superiority of the new Covenant touched on at vii. 22, and resumed at viii. 6, is here continued up to the end of the Chapter; and this portion is justly regarded by Kuinoel as parenthetical, since at ix. 1, is introduced the parallel between the two tabernacles, which would have come in after viii. 5, had not the Apostle, on the mention of the better promises, stopped to show them to be such, from the inferiority of those which subsist under the old Law.

— εἰ γὰρ—τόπος.] The argument here is, that 'the introduction of a new Covenant implies the insufficiency of the former.' Ἄμεμπτος signifies literally, 'what could not be justly found fault with,' as being perfectly adequate to accomplish the purposes in view,—the reformation and salvation of men; which, however, does not imply that the Mosaic Law had positive faults, but only that it did not contain the provision necessary for the pardon of sin, and the quieting of the conscience, which the Gospel does. See Whitby.

— οὐκ ἂν δευτ. ἐζητ. τόπος.] Here we have (as often in the writings of St. Paul) a sentence composed of two sentences blended into one; i. e. 'there would have been no place (i. e. room or occasion) for a better covenant, and [consequently] a better covenant would not have been sought for.' The term ἐζητεῖτο was, it would seem, used with reference to that anxious desire and expectation, which had long filled the hearts of the pious, for the new Dispensation, and which 'the sure word of prophecy' had told them should be promulgated by the Desire of all nations. (Haggai ii. 7.) See 1 Pet. i. 10.

Ἰδοὺ, ἡμέραι ἔρχονται, λέγει Κύριος, καὶ συντε-λέσω ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰσραὴλ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰούδα 9 διαθήκην καινήν· οὐ κατὰ τὴν διαθήκην ἣν ἐποίησα τοῖς πατράσιν αὐτῶν, ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιλαβομένου μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν, ἐξαγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς ἐκ γῆς Αἰγύπτου· ὅτι αὐτοὶ οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ μου, 10 κἀγὼ ἠμέλησα αὐτῶν, λέγει Κύριος. [h] ὅτι αὐτη ἡ h Jer. 31 33, &c. Zach. 8. 8. διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσομαι τῷ οἴκῳ Ἰσραὴλ μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει Κύριος, διδοὺς νόμους μου εἰς τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω αὐτούς· καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς εἰς Θεὸν, καὶ

8. μεμφόμενος γὰρ, &c.] Γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[But there was such a place to be found;] for,' &c. It has been disputed whether μεμφόμενος should be joined with αὐτοῖς, or be referred to διαθήκη at ver. 6. The former mode is generally adopted by the older Commentators, the latter by the more recent ones; who justly urge that the context, and the precision of style, observable in this Epistle, alike require it.

In the passage which follows, this dissatisfaction of God with the old Covenant is implied; and therefore it is not unaptly adduced to prove that that covenant, and the religion thereby introduced, was not ἄμεμπτος. See vii. 12. The Apostle, indeed, might well adduce the passage, since, in its literal sense, at least, it has been always referred, even by the Jews, to the times of the Messiah. In the words themselves, however, there exist not a few minute discrepancies from the Sept., which the recent Commentators in general ascribe to the writer's citing from memory; but as they are, for the most part, found in some of the MSS. of the Sept., they may have been in the text at the time of St. Paul.

— ἔρχονται] i. e. 'are to come;' the Present being here used after the manner of prophecy. Καὶ here answers to the Hebr. ו, for when.

— διαθήκην καινήν] i. e., as Mr. Wesley explains, new in many respects (though not as to the substance of it): 1. as being ratified by the death of Christ; 2. as freed from those burdensome rites and ceremonies; 3. as containing a more full and clear account of spiritual religion; 4. as attended with larger influences of the Spirit; 5. as extended to all men; and, 6. never to be abolished.

9. οὐ κατὰ, &c.] Κατὰ here, like the Heb. כ, denotes similitude, as in 1 Pet. i. 15, and sometimes in the Classical writers. In the words ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιλαβ. μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν there is a Hebraism, for ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὅτε ἐπελαβόμην τ. χ. α. On the sense of ἐπιλαμβ., see Note on ii. 16. The expression is one to denote the care and tenderness of a parent.

— οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ μ.] A mode of speaking (per meiosin) equivalent to 'they violated my covenant.' This suggests the reason why the new covenant was framed,—namely, because the old one had not been observed. By διαθ. are here meant the precepts enjoined in the covenant,—τὰ νενομοθετημένα (see Note on v. 6), and what had been undertaken to be performed. Ἠμέλησα αὐτῶν, 'I disregarded them,' 'took no care of them.' This agrees throughout with the Sept.; but, judging from Symm. and the Vulg., most of the modern Versions would seem to be very dissimilar. And yet there is no discrepancy. The sense assigned by the Versions in question is quite unsuitable to the context, nay, as many eminent Commentators contend, contrary to the proprietas linguæ. The best Expositors, both Jewish and Christian, have long been agreed that בעלתי בם should be rendered, 'I was weary of and cared not for them;' which is confirmed by the words of 1 Sam. ii. 30.

10. διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσομαι, &c.] Of the phrase διατίθεσθαι διαθήκην an example is also found in Aristoph. Av. 438. By μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας understand 'after the time when the Mosaic dispensation shall be abolished.' See Rev. xxi. 3.

— διδοὺς νόμους, &c.] For διδοὺς the Septuagint has διδοὺς δώσω, and the Heb. simply נתתי, I will give. Most Commentators suppose διδοὺς put for δώσω; but it is better to suppose an ellipsis of εἰμι or ἔσομαι. This use of δίδωμι is supposed to be peculiarly Hebraic; yet an example has been adduced from Xen. Cyr. viii. 2. 20, ὁ μὲν οἱ θεοὶ δόντες εἰς τὰς ψυχὰς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις. We have here, I suspect, a blending of two modes of expression. Finally, of the metaphor in ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω, other examples occur in Rom. ii. 15, and 2 Cor. iii. 3; nor is it unfrequent in the Classical writers. So in Æschyl. Choëph. 447, we have τοιαῦτ' ἀκούων ἐν φρεσὶ γράφου· and in Joseph. Cont. Ap. ii. 18, it is said that the Jews have Moses's νόμους ἐγκεχαραγμένους ταῖς ψυχαῖς. On the full import of this and the foregoing expression see Hyperius, Calvin, and Aretius. Suffice it here to say (in the words of Mr. Wesley), that 'by "putting his laws in their minds" is meant, opening their eyes and enlightening their understanding, to see the true, full, spiritual meaning of those laws; and by "writing them on their hearts" is meant, making them to inwardly experience whatever he hath commanded.'

— καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς εἰς Θεὸν, &c.] A mode of speaking frequent in the Old Testament, and which may be, as Carpzov says, a formula solemnis, pertaining to any Divine covenant, importing the giving protection and blessing, on the one i John 6. 45, 65. infra 10. 16. 1 John 2. 27. αὐτοὶ ἔσονταί μοι εἰς λαόν. [i] Καὶ οὐ μὴ διδάξω- 11 σιν ἕκαστος τὸν *πολίτην αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἕκαστος τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, λέγων· Γνῶθι τὸν Κύριον· ὅτι πάντες εἰδήσουσί με ἀπὸ μικροῦ αὐτῶν ἕως μεγά-k Rom. 11. 27. infra 10. 17. λου αὐτῶν. [k] ὅτι ἵλεως ἔσομαι ταῖς ἀδικίαις αὐτῶν, 12 καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ ἔτι. ἐν τῷ λέγειν καινήν, πεπαλαίωκε 13 τὴν πρώτην· τὸ δὲ παλαιούμενον καὶ γηράσκον, ἐγγὺς ἀφα-a Exod. 25. 8. & 26. 1. b Ex. 25. 30. & 26. 1, &c. Lev. 24. 5, &c. νισμοῦ. IX. [a] Εἶχε μὲν οὖν καὶ ἡ πρώτη [σκηνὴ] δικαιώ- 1 ματα λατρείας, τό τε Ἅγιον κοσμικόν. [b] Σκηνὴ γὰρ κατ- 2 hand, and rendering obedience and worship on the other. See the admirable note of Hyperius.

11. οὐ μὴ διδάξωσιν, &c.] Meaning (as the best Expositors are agreed) that 'they will have no need to teach,' &c. Instead of the common reading πλησίον, almost all the MSS. and early Editions, and several Versions and Fathers, have πολίτην, as in the Sept., which is adopted by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and justly; such being required by the weight of external evidence, though internal might be urged for πλησίον. The words λέγων· Γνῶθι τὸν Κύριον are, as Kuinoel says, 'illustrative of the admonition adverted to in διδάσκειν;' for thus speaking, it is predicted that there will be, comparatively, no need of this under the new and better covenant; since the knowledge of true religion will be so universally diffused as to dispense with it.

12. ὅτι ἵλεως ἔσομαι, &c.] Here is adduced the reason why all should worship God,—namely, because Christ, by his death, hath obtained full pardon of sin, and hope of eternal felicity. Ἵλεως is properly applicable to persons, and consequently ἀδικίαις here stands for ἀδίκοις.

— μὴ μνησθῶ.] A refined mode of expressing forgiveness of sins. The general sense is, that 'under the new covenant a complete atonement will be made for the sins of men, whereby they may, under the conditions of that covenant, attain salvation.

13. ἐν τῷ λέγειν—ἀφανισμοῦ.] From the prophecy, announcing that a new covenant would be formed, the Apostle justly infers the abrogation of the old.

— πεπαλαίωκε.] Meaning, 'represents it as antiquated.' This is then followed up with a general sentiment; q.d. 'Now what is grown old, and, by implication, weak and useless, is near dissolution;' implying the inference, that as the old covenant is considered by God as antiquated, it would be succeeded by a new and perfect one; see infra x. 21. The expression ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ may be supposed to indicate the writer's persuasion that the Jewish Temple worship was destined to experience a speedy destruction, which indeed took place a few years after. See infra x. 37.

IX. Thus far has been evinced the entire inferiority of the priesthood of Aaron, as compared with that of Christ. It has been proved that Christ is High Priest in the temple of heaven; while the Aaronical priests offer sacrifice in a temple which is no more than the image and shadow of the heavenly: finally, that to Christ belongs a far more excellent priesthood, as being Mediator of an infinitely superior covenant. On this subject the Apostle now further enlarges; proceeding, in this and the next chapter, to consider the nature and purpose of the Temple service. And here, while he speaks with due respect of ordinances of remote antiquity, instituted by God himself, and with evident complacency dilates on the splendour of the tabernacles formed under Divine direction,—yet he shows that there is in the new religion what far overbalances the external magnificence, which so dazzled the eyes of the Jews in the old; nay, what was truly august; that respecting merely what is external, and requires constant repetition; this, what is internal, and sufficient once for all. Accordingly the one, though of Divine appointment, was calculated to be merely temporary, and meant to last only till a more perfect and permanent one should be introduced by the promised Messiah; when, having already answered its end, and become useless, it must cease. See more in Calvin.

1. μὲν οὖν.] The particle is here transitive and continuative (as in Acts i. 18. ix. 31. xv. 30. xvii. 30. xxiii. 22), and may be rendered now or therefore. Σκηνή, not found in most of the MSS., many Versions, Fathers, Commentators, and early Editions, has been cancelled or rejected by almost every Editor from Mill to Scholz; and justly; for, as Kuinoel shows, the context will not even permit it to be understood. The best Commentators from Chrysostom to Kuinoel are agreed that διαθήκη is to be understood from the preceding, as in our common version.

— δικαιώματα λατρ.] 'ordinances of divine service,' or worship; signifying literally, what God, ἐδικαίωσε, 'was pleased to ordain.' So λατρεία and λατρεύειν are often used, κατ' ἐξοχήν, of Divine service. The Genitive in the substantive λατρ. may (as in the case of an adjective preceding) be rendered 'respecting,' of which sense examples may be seen in Winer's Gr. Gr. § 23. 3, though he omits this use after a substantive.

— τό τε Ἅγιον κοσμικόν.] Of these words the sense has been not a little disputed. Almost all our English translators render, 'a worldly sanctuary.' This, however, Bp. Middleton pronounces to be a sense utterly inadmissible. It would, he says, require either τὸ ἅγιον τὸ κοσἐσκευάσθη, ἡ πρώτη, (ἐν ᾗ ἥ τε λυχνία καὶ ἡ τράπεζα 3 καὶ ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν ἄρτων) ἥτις λέγεται Ἅγια· [c] μετὰ δὲ c Ex. 26. 31, 33. & 40. 3.

μικὸν, or else τὸ κοσμικὸν ἅγιον. So also Professor Scholefield (in his Hints for an improved Translation) remarks that 'both ἅγιον and κοσμικὸν being adjectives, one of them must be taken substantively; and the position of the Article determines that that one must be κοσμικὸν,' which is by Homberg, Bp. Middleton, Wakefield, and Professor Stuart, understood to mean 'the sacred furniture,' vasa sacra, totumque apparatum Leviticum; though that interpretation has been rejected by Dind. and Kuin., on account of the signification being destitute of sufficient authority; and rightly: for though Bp. Middleton adduces that of the Coptic version, which renders ornamentum, yet that is taking for granted the existence of κοσμικὸν as a substantive, which, without positive proof, must remain a matter of doubt. Indeed, I have myself sought sedulously for an example in the Classical writers of every age, but without success. It is true that in a passage of Leo Grammaticus, cited by Ducange, Gloss. Gr. in voce, I find καὶ ἐνέδυσεν αὐτὸν κοσμικά. But this proof halts on the same foot as the last,—Leo being a writer infimæ Græcitatis, who lived long after even the Coptic version was formed; not to say that the passage is evidently corrupt. Instead of ἐνέδυσεν, the true reading, I suspect, is ἀνέδησεν. Thus κοσμικὰ is an adjective plural, and signifies sæcularia; the sense being, 'and secular affairs enchained him.' So in a Hymn cited by Facciolati in voc. sæculum, we have 'et servientem corpori Absolve vinculis sæculi.' See also 2 Pet. ii. 19, compared with Luke viii. 14 and Rom. vii. 23, 24. In short, we may suspect that the substantive κοσμικὸν never had any existence: especially as even the adjective κοσμικὸς is very rare; and it is not likely that the substantive would be formed from so rare a form, but rather from κόσμιος, which was common. Indeed, all the nouns substantive in ικον are rare,—such, I mean, as are real substantives, and not adjectives taken substantively; for almost all of them are, like λεξικὸν, adjectives neuter taken substantively, by the ellipsis of some noun. In short, the only vestige of the existence of the substantive is in a passage of a Rabbinical writer adduced by Bp. Middleton. Yet there may we not suspect (considering that κοσμικὸν no where occurs, and κόσμιον very often in the later Greek writers) that the Rabbi wrote, not קוזמיקון, but קוזמיון? And though Bp. Middleton appeals to other Hebrew words similarly formed from the Greek, as διαθήκη and παῤῥησία, yet those, it must be observed, were words of frequent occurrence, quite unlike the one in question,—which, if it did exist at all, was scarcely known to the Greeks themselves, and therefore would not be likely to be adopted by a foreigner. Of the word κόσμιον, and in the sense ornament (namely, of dress), examples occur in the Alexandrine writers, as Judg. viii. 26 (Symm.), Cohel, xii. 9. And so the Glossary Cyrill. has κόσμια γυναικὸς and κόσμια κεφαλῆς. Other examples, too, are adduced by Ducange from Achmet., Oneir., Theophanes, Didymus on Homer, and Liban: insomuch that I strongly suspect the Coptic Translator, here appealed to by Bp. Middleton, had in his copy κόσμιον. Certainly the existence of κόσμιον discountenances that of κοσμικόν; since the latter word was not wanted. At all events, no proof has been adduced of the existence of the substantive κοσμικὸν, at least so early as the time of St. Paul. Hence it is best here to retain the adjective use of the word. Nor will it thus be necessary to read, as Bp. Middleton says, τὸ κοσμικὸν ἅγιον. We have only to suppose, as we very well may, that the writer intended this, though he did not so express his meaning. Indeed, to rest thus much on such minute points as the omission of the Article, or the disarrangement of that order which strict propriety would require, is peculiarly ill judged when applied to the case of one writing in a foreign language, who cannot be expected to know, much less observe, such niceties.

Rejecting, then, the supposition (which Bp. Middleton admits to be not necessary) of κοσμικὸν being a substantive, and regarding it as an adjective, it remains to ascertain what is its real import. First, however, it will be necessary to explain that of τὸ Ἅγιον. Now this must surely mean the Temple, δῶμα being understood. And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator renders it 'domus sancta,' meaning the Sanctum Sanctorum. Of κοσμικὸν, the ancient and some modern Expositors take the meaning to be, 'which belongs to the whole world;' while others, as Grotius, Wetstein, and Middleton, render it mundane, i. e. emblematical of the mundane system. Both interpretations are alike harsh and unsupported by the context. The true sense is, I apprehend, that adopted by Calvin, Crellius, Hyperius, Wolf, Estius, Gomar, Casaubon, Beza, Piscator, Bengel, Ernesti, Dindorf, and Stuart, who regard κοσμικὸν as equivalent to ἐπίγειον, χειροποίητον, ταύτης κτίσεως at ver. 11, and so distinguished from the σκηνὴ ἀληθινὴ at supra viii. 2, and the τὰ ἅγια ἀληθινὰ and ἐπουράνια infra v. 23, 24. So Hyperius explains it 'mundanum duntaxat, i. e. externum, temporale, carnale, et nequaquam spirituale.' And Calvin determines the meaning to be, that 'to the old dispensation was annexed all that manner of Divine worship, which consisted in sacrifices, ablutions, and other symbols, together with the Sanctuary.'

Here, as a means of arriving at the scope of the passage, it is not without its importance to attend to the force of the more minute expressions μὲν οὖν, καὶ, and τό; these all tending to throw light on the general intent of the writer. Now καὶ belongs to πρώτη, and serves to suggest the indirect parallel, meant to be instituted between the terrene, or secular, Sanctuary, and the heavenly one; there being here suppressed the words necessary to fill up the parallel,—namely, 'as the second covenant has ordinances of worship and a heavenly Sanctuary.' A comparison, I find, also noticed by Calvin, and likewise by Crellius, who remarks: 'Mundanum vocat respectu illius cœlestis; ita ut mundanum idem quod terrenum vel sæculare sit.' And here the Article τὸ has the force of reference; the worldly having, in this indirect parallel, reference to the heavenly. Finally, the formula μὲν οὖν has a continuative, and slightly illative force, and may b rendered now. Properly, however, the μὲν here should be separated from the οὖν, since it serves d Ex. 16. 33. & 25. 10, 16, 21. & 26. 33. Lev. 16. 12. Num. 17. 10. 1 Kings 8. 9. 2 Chron. 5. 10.

τὸ δεύτερον καταπέτασμα σκηνὴ ἡ λεγομένη Ἅγια ἁγίων, d χρυσοῦν ἔχουσα θυμιατήριον, καὶ τὴν κιβωτὸν τῆς διαθή- 4 to form a protasis, to which the δὲ at verse 11 (Χριστὸς δὲ) forms the apodosis.

Thus, then, we may render: 'Now the first covenant, also, had ordinances of worship, and the worldly or terrene Sanctuary,' as mentioned in the apodosis at v. 11.

2. ἡ πρώτη.] Meaning (by the frequent use of πρῶτος for πρότερος) the anterior, or outward part of the tabernacle, corresponding to the היכל or πρόναος in the Temple; for the Tabernacle of Moses (like the temple of Solomon, and that of Zorobabel) was divided by a Veil into two tabernacles; in allusion to which the whole Sanctuary is called in Psal. xliii. 3, משכנות, Sept. σκηνώματα. Prof. Stuart thinks that 'we should here have expected, according to the rules laid down by Grammarians, that either σκηνὴ would have the Article, or πρώτη omit it;' whence he argues that the Canons of Bp. Middleton on this subject are unfounded. That, however, does by no means appear from the present passage; in which, whatever there may be of irregularity in other respects, there is none as regards the use of the Article. We have only a brevity of expression common in St. Paul and Thucydides. Σκηνὴ, whether considered as an appellative or as a proper name, did not require the Article; whereas πρώτη (sub. σκηνὴ, and ἦν) could not dispense with it; since the writer meant, after mentioning the tabernacle generally, to advert to its two σκηναί. And it is referred to in the words ἥτις λέγεται ἅγια just after. No difficulty, indeed, would have existed, had the writer expressed his meaning more fully, thus: 'For a tabernacle was constructed [consisting of two compartments]; the first, which is called Holy, wherein was, &c., and the second, which contained,' &c.

Finally, I would observe, the misconception, as to the sense, of the recent Expositors appears to have arisen from the incorrect punctuation of the modern Editions. I have adopted that which propriety requires, and which is supported by the authority of Beza, Schmid, Piscator, Capellus, and Crellius; by which the words ἐν ᾗ—ἄρτων are regarded as parenthetic. And so they are viewed by Abp. Newcome; though, in order to remove a harshness, he introduces ἥτις λέγεται Ἅγια in the former part of the sentence, after ἡ πρώτη. For the same reason, the Pesch. Syr. renders ἥτις 'and it is.'

At Ἅγια, here and in the next verse, the Article is omitted, from the word being a kind of proper name. And, moreover, to write, as some Editors do, ἁγία (instead of Ἅγια) is quite incorrect; for the Sacred writers do not denote the Sanctum by ἡ ἁγία, but by τὸ ἅγιον, scil. δῶμα, or (as at vv. 8, 12, and infra xiii. 11) τὰ ἅγια scil. μέρη; or, again, ἅγια (as at v. 24); for the Article was only omitted when the term became a sort of proper name. The same propriety attended the use of the singular. Thus Ἅγιον, when applied to the whole Temple, or the Sanctum, was considered as an appellative, and consequently a sort of proper name. So Joseph. Ant. iii. 6. 4, we have, ὁ μὲν πᾶς νεὼς Ἅγιον ἐκαλεῖτο· and Bell. v. 5. 2, τὸ γὰρ δεύτερον ἱερὸν Ἅγιον ἐκαλεῖτο.

— λυχνία καὶ ἡ τράπεζα, &c.] On the first of these particulars see Exod. xxv. 31, seqq. and on the two others see Exod. xxv. 31. Ἡ πρόθεσις τῶν ἄρτων we may either, with some, regard as standing for οἱ ἄρτοι οἱ προτιθέμενοι; or, with others, take the expression as standing for οἱ ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως (see Matt. xii. 4), the Show-bread (so called as being placed before the Lord), elsewhere denominated לחם הפנים, literally, presence-bread. The altar of incense is here not mentioned, because the writer, as he expressly says at verse 5, does not profess to give a full detail.

3. μετὰ δὲ τὸ δεύτερον, &c.] Μετὰ has here (as Hom. Od. ii. 206. and Thucyd. vii. 58.) the sense of post, as used of succession in place. This second veil was that which separated the Sanctum from the Court, and was called ἐπίσπαστρον.

4. θυμιατήριον.] This is usually interpreted 'the altar of incense;' a sense found in Josephus and Philo: though the Sept. always calls it θυσιαστήριον. And from Exod. xxx. 20. 26. Joseph. Ant. viii. 4. 11. and Philo, p. 512, it is plain that the altar of incense was in the Sanctum, not the Sanctum Sanctorum. Besides, its very use shows that it could not have been put in the Sanctum Sanctorum, because to that there was access only once a year, by the High Priest alone. (Kuinoel.)

It seems best, with Kuinoel and many other eminent Commentators (as Deyling, Alting, Ernesti, and Stuart), to understand by this expression the golden censer which the High Priest took with him on entering the Sanctum Sanctorum, on the day of expiation; (see Levit. xvi. 12, sq.) a use of the word often found in the Sept. and the Classical writers. That this censer was of gold (while we know the censers used daily in the Sanctum were of brass) would of itself be highly probable, and is proved by Josephus, Ant. iii. 8. 3. Bell. i. 1. 7. A perplexing circumstance, however, still remains to be explained; namely, that as the High Priest only entered the Sanctum Sanctorum once, how could this censer be laid up, as the ἔχουσα would seem to suggest? Stuart, in his Excursus on the subject, has not noticed this difficulty; merely arguing, that as there is no proof that it was not laid up in the Sanctum Sanctorum, we may take it for granted that it was. Grotius, Limb., Storr, and Kuinoel, attempt to remove the difficulty by taking ἔχουσα in a modified sense, and supposing that the Sanctum Sanctorum is said to have the golden censer, because it was brought there once a year, and only used there. More probable, however, appears the solution of Zeibech, in a Dissertation on the subject, who is of opinion, that the golden censer was always in the Sanctum Sanctorum, by being left there by the High Priest until he replaced it the next year by another. But may it not be supposed that another censer was used, solely for the purpose of conveying the fire to the censer which remained in the Sanctum Sanctorum; and by the use of which it would not have to be removed or replaced at all?

— πάντοθεν] i. e. both outside and inside, as we find from Exod. xxv. 11, Josephus, and Philo.

κης περικεκαλυμμένην πάντοθεν χρυσίῳ, ἐν ᾗ στάμνος χρυσῆ ἔχουσα τὸ μάννα, καὶ ἡ ῥάβδος Ἀαρὼν ἡ βλαστήσασα, καὶ 5 αἱ πλάκες τῆς διαθήκης, [e] ὑπεράνω δὲ αὐτῆς Χερουβὶμ e Exod. 25. 18.
δόξης κατασκιάζοντα τὸ ἱλαστήριον· περὶ ὧν οὐκ ἔστι νῦν 6 λέγειν κατὰ μέρος. [f] Τούτων δὲ οὕτω κατεσκευασμένων, εἰς f Num. 28. 3.
μὲν τὴν πρώτην σκηνὴν διαπαντὸς εἰσίασιν οἱ ἱερεῖς τὰς 7 λατρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες· [g] εἰς δὲ τὴν δευτέραν ἅπαξ τοῦ g Exod. 30. 10.
ἐνιαυτοῦ μόνος ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς, οὐ χωρὶς αἵματος, ὃ προσφέρει Lev. 16. 2, 15, 34. infra v. 25.
8 ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ ἀγνοημάτων· [h] τοῦτο δη- h John 14. 6. infra 10. 19, 20.
λοῦντος τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ ἁγίου, μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι τὴν τῶν ἁγίων ὁδὸν, ἔτι τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς ἐχούσης στάσιν.
9 [i] Ἥτις παραβολὴ εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστηκότα, καθ' ὃν i Acts 13. 39. Gal. 3. 21.

Ἐν ᾗ, i. e. 'in the ark.' This, indeed, would seem to be at variance with what is said at 1 Kings viii. 9, that the ark contained only the two tables of stone. Hence various methods of removing the discrepancy have been proposed; while Kuin. and Stuart here decide, with Deyling and Carpzov, that all we have to do is to show this description to be true of the tabernacle constructed and furnished by Moses (of which alone the Apostle is speaking), though not of the Temple of Solomon. That the pot of manna and Aaron's rod were laid up in the ark of the covenant is, they show, proved from Exodus xvi. 32—34, and Numbers xvii. 10, at least according to the interpretation of the Rabbins and Jewish Interpreters even to the present day. The pot, too, is called golden in the Sept., though not expressly said to be so in the Hebrew; and yet that it was so, considering the purpose, cannot be doubted.

5. αὐτῆς] scil. τῆς κιβωτοῦ, not διαθήκης, as some suppose (for thus the sense would be inapposite); and though this is going far back for an antecedent, yet the words ἐν ᾗ στάμνος—διαθήκης are, in some measure, parenthetical.

— Χερ. δόξης.] From a comparison of the passages where these Cherubim are mentioned, it appears that they were symbolical emblems of the Divine nature, denoting the supreme governance of the Deity over all creation, and representing his tutelary presence. The term δόξης is by recent Commentators in general supposed to refer to the splendour of these figures, which were covered all over with gold; while the earlier ones, more properly, understand it of 'the glory of the Lord' dwelling between and shining around them, as alluded to in Psalm lxxx. 1.

— ἱλαστήριον.] This was the כפר, cover, or lid, of the ark (or the mercy-seat), so called because, by the sprinkling of blood upon it, the atonement was effected on the day of expiation.

— οὐκ ἔστι νῦν λέγειν κατὰ μέρος.] Meaning, that 'he does not enter into so particular a description as to trace their symbolical allusions.'

6. τούτων δὲ οὕτω κατεσκ.] Render, 'Now these things being [thus] set in due order.' Εἰσίασι is best rendered by a Present, not, as it is usually done, by a Past tense; since the Present, from its indefinite sense, suits all times, and was here used with propriety, the Temple being yet in being. Λατρ. is a general term, including all sacred rites, and not limited to sacrifices, as some suppose.

7. ἅπαξ τ. ἐν.] Since from Levit. xvi. 12—15 it appears that the High Priest entered the Sanctum Sanctorum twice (some say thrice, and the Rabbins even four times), ἅπαξ τ. ἐν. must (as the best Commentators are agreed) mean, 'on one day only in the year;' i. e. on the day of expiation; and, indeed, as the two enterings were in continuity, and forming one and the same service, they might be almost said to enter the Sanctum Sanctorum but once. From Philo, p. 591, cited by Kuinoel, we learn that if the High Priest entered on more than one day in the year, or oftener than twice on that day, he was put to death without mercy.

— μόνος] 'alone:' a point on which all authorities concur. The Heathens carried this still further; sometimes not allowing even the Priest to enter the adytum except with his head shrouded.

— ἀγνοημάτων.] Meaning all such sins for which expiation was held available; sins of presumption and wilfulness, and the more heinous offences (as murder, adultery, incest, blasphemy), being excluded from expiation.

8. τοῦτο.] Some supply διὰ, or κατά; meaning, 'by this restriction and difficulty of access.' That, however, involves a needless harshness; and it is better, with others, to regard τοῦτο as representing the subject of what was signified in the instruction,—meant to be intimated by a sort of figurative and spiritual application of the injunctions, or by the inference from them,—which (he means to say) is, that the true approach to God, and access to the real holy of holies, HEAVEN, by the expiation of sin, was not clearly revealed while the Jewish œconomy subsisted. Τὴν τῶν ἁγ. ὁδὸν is put for τὴν εἰς τὰ ἅγια (scil. τὰ ἐπουράνια) ὁδόν. So Matt. x. 5, εἰς ὁδὸν ἐθνῶν μὴ ἀπέλθητε. The meaning is, that 'through Jesus alone mankind, whether Jews or Gentiles, have free access to the heavenly mercy-seat, the throne of grace, which had before been obstructed by the impediments of the ceremonial law.' By τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς is meant simply the first dispensation; i. e. that under the first Temple. The image in ἐχούσης στάσιν is adapted to the figure in σκηνῆς. The phrase στάσιν ἔχειν signifies literally 'to have a standing,' and hence to subsist, of which sense examples are adduced from Dionys. Hal. vi. 95.

δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι προσφέρονται, μὴ δυνάμεναι κατὰ συν-k Lev. 11. 2. Num. 19. 7, & εἴδησιν τελειῶσαι τὸν λατρεύοντα, [k] μόνον ἐπὶ βρώμασι 10 καὶ πόμασι, καὶ διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς, [καὶ] δικαιώμασι l Supra 3. 1. & 4. 14. σαρκὸς, μέχρι καιροῦ διορθώσεως ἐπικείμενα. [l] Χριστὸς δὲ 11 & 6. 20. & 8. 1. παραγενόμενος, ἀρχιερεὺς τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, διὰ τῆς

9. ἥτις] scil. σκηνὴ, 'which [dispensation]' impeding free access to God. Παραβ. scil. ἐστι, 'is, or has been, a type or figure;' namely, of the entrance of the more excellent High Priest into Heaven, whereby is obtained free access to God. Εἰς τὸν καιρὸν τὸν ἐνεστ. Render, 'up to the present time;' meaning τὸν καιρὸν τῆς διορθώσεως at ver. 10, which had then begun (see x. 10—14. 19, 22), when there was no longer occasion for the type in question; though, by the continuance of the Temple service, and the perverse unbelief of the Jews, it might be said still to exist.

— δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι.] Meaning all sorts of expiatory sacrifices. In μὴ δυνάμεναι κατὰ συνείδησιν τελειῶσαι τὸν λατρ. the expression δυνάμεναι is accommodated in gender to the latter of the above terms, as being the nearer and more important noun. The full sense is, 'which cannot perfectly tranquillize the conscience of the worshipper [who offers these expiatory sacrifices];' or, what 'never could make full expiation for him so as to satisfy his conscience;' literally, 'cannot make the worshipper perfect in respect to his conscience.' This doctrine, indeed, the Jews had been taught by their Prophets; but, as far as the great multitude was concerned, in vain.

10. μόνον ἐπὶ βρώμασι—ἐπικείμενα.] Of these words, the construction, and (as dependent thereon) the sense, have been not a little disputed, the reading itself being a matter of debate. Here several varr. lectt. exist (especially δικαιώματα for δικαιώμασι); which, however, seem only so many different attempts at removing what seemed a harsh construction; namely, δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίαι—δυνάμεναι—ἐπικείμενα: in adjusting which most Commentators take ἐπικείμενα twice; i. e. with ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι, and with μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ., the ἐπὶ being put for ἐν. And, indeed, this would seem the most natural construction; but it leads to a sense not a little objectionable; for how oblations and sacrifices can be said to consist in meats, drinks, and ablutions, it is not easy to see. It would, therefore, seem that ἐπικ. is only to be taken once, and that μόνον μέχρι καιροῦ διορθ. ἐπικ. are alone to be referred to δῶρα καὶ θυσίαι; also that the words ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ—σαρκὸς are meant to designate another class of ritual observances, as being mere ordinances of the flesh, and therefore not able to quiet the conscience, or make the worshipper perfect. Thus ἐπὶ must be rendered not in, but either præter or cum; and by δικαιώμασι σαρκὸς we may understand other similar observances, as circumcision, &c.; or (as such an ellipsis of ἄλλοις involves a certain harshness) we may rather suppose this clause intended to qualify the preceding, and show the true nature of the βρώματα καὶ πόματα here spoken of; in which case καὶ before δικαιώμασι σαρκὸς will have the explanatory force (as when placed between two nouns in apposition), and signify nempe. The word is, however, not found in eight ancient MSS., six Versions and Fathers, and has been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz.

Of βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι the subject of the context (piacular sacrifices) plainly shows the meaning to be, 'the regulations concerning meats and drinks permitted or forbidden by the Mosaic law.' By διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς are denoted those ceremonial ablutions,—some respecting the priests, others the Levites, or the people at large,—which are detailed in the Books of Leviticus and Numbers. Hence they are here termed διάφοροι, 'of various kinds,' namely, as pertaining to the different orders of persons, whether Priests, Levites, or others. So Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 12, says of the Essenes, that they professed to foretel future events by the Sacred Books (doubtless like the Sortes Virgilianæ), καὶ διαφόροις ἁγνείαις. These, then, in addition to the preceding class of ritual observances, are said to be ἐπικείμενα, 'enjoined,' and intended to be in force, μεχρὶ καιροῦ διορθώσεως, meaning, 'the period which should introduce a reformation of religion, by a change of external forms into vital and spiritual worship, namely, that of the Gospel.' Now to this the term διόρθωσις is especially appropriate; the word signifying, 1. the making straight any thing which has been crooked; 2. the setting right what has been wrong; comp. Is. xl. 3. And so, corresponding to καιρὸς διορθώσεως here, we have at Acts iii. 21, χρόνοι ἀποκαταστάσεως.

Here, then, it is meant (as Professor Stuart expresses it) that oblations and sacrifices are offered up, which cannot fully accomplish what is needful for the purging and quieting of the conscience of him who performs the services in question; being enjoined and in force (together with meats and drinks, and various ordinances pertaining to the flesh) only until the time of reformation; a use of μόνον also found at 1 Cor. vii. 39.

11—15. The Apostle now contrasts these symbolical and temporary ministrations and ordinances with the effectual services of our Redeemer, who exercises the office of High Priest in a greater and more perfect tabernacle, even in heaven (ver. 11), into which he entered by his own blood; thus procuring eternal redemption for us (ver. 12); for, he argues, if the blood of bulls and goats, offered by the Levitical priests, could effect an outward purification (ver. 13), much more must the blood of Christ purify the conscience, and fit the believer for heaven (ver. 14); for this reason he is appointed the Mediator of the new covenant, that by dying to purchase redemption for sinners, even in former times, believers of all ages might receive the promise of an eternal inheritance (ver. 15). Holden.

11. Χριστὸς δὲ παραγενόμενος, ἀρχιερεὺς τῶν μελλόντων ἀγ.] Of this the complete sense seems to be that expressed by Kuinoel thus: 'cum Christus has in terras venisset, eum in finem, ut, morte superata (δι' αἵματος ἰδίου, ver.

μείζονος καὶ τελειοτέρας σκηνῆς, οὐ χειροποιήτου, (τουτ-12 έστιν οὐ ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως,) [m] οὐδὲ δι' αἵματος τράγων καὶ μόσχων, διὰ δὲ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, εἰσῆλθεν ἐφάπαξ εἰς 13 τὰ ἅγια, αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν εὑράμενος. [n] Εἰ γὰρ τὸ αἷμα ταύρων καὶ τράγων, καὶ σποδὸς δαμάλεως ῥαντίζουσα τοὺς κεκοινωμένους, ἁγιάζει πρὸς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα· 14 [o] πόσῳ μᾶλλον τὸ αἷμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὃς διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου ἑαυτὸν προσήνεγκεν ἄμωμον τῷ Θεῷ, καθαριεῖ τὴν συνείδησιν ὑμῶν ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων εἰς τὸ λατρεύειν Θεῷ m Acts 20. 28 Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1 14 infra 10. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 19. Rev. 1. 5. & 5. 9. n Lev. 16. 14, 16. Num. 19. 2, 4. infra 10. 4.

o Luke 1. 75. Rom. 6. 13. Eph. 5. 2. Gal. 1. 4. & 2. 20. Tit. 2. 14. supra 6. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 19. & 3. 18. & 4. 2. 1 John 1. 7. Rev. 1. 5.

12), fieret pontifex, cui deberemus bona futura.' He rightly regards τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν as a Genitive of cause, as John vi. 35, ὁ ἄρτος τῆς ζωῆς, and Phil. iv. 9, ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης. By the future benefits here spoken of are (he adds) 'to be understood free access to God (ver. 8), expiation perpetually available (ver. 12. x. 4), peace of conscience (ver. 9. x. 2, 3), and eternal felicity (ver. 15); blessings which, while the Levitical worship flourished, were yet future, and reserved for the time of reformation.' These, however, might be called future, as commencing in this world, and to be consummated in the next. See Abp. Newcome.

— διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τελ. σκηνῆς.] Render, 'by the better and more perfect tabernacle.' To what this σκηνῆς is to be referred has been debated. To understand it, with some, of the Christian Church, lies open to various objections, well stated by Dindorf, Stuart, and Kuinoel. It is the opinion of these, and many other eminent Commentators, that we have here a comparison of Christ with the Jewish High Priest, who, on the day of expiation, passed through the Sanctum into the Holy of Holies, answering to that part of heaven wherein is the immediate presence of God himself. Thus, then, the Apostle will here mean to compare the visible heavens (called by the Jews the tent of God),—through which Jesus passed in his ascension to the highest heaven,—with the veil which separated the Jewish Sanctum from the Holy of Holies; and σκηνὴ τελ. will thus denote the exterior parts of the heavenly Adytum. So at iv. 14 Christ is spoken of as διεληλυθὼς τοὺς οὐρανούς. The above view, it may be observed, is not a little confirmed by the Article τῆς; which alludes, it would seem, to the worldly or earthly σκηνὴ, vv. 1, 2. Χειροπ. means 'not made by human hands,' οὐ ταύτης τῆς κτίσεως, 'not of this world or creation, not of earthly, but heavenly fabric,' scil. ἣν ἔπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, viii. 2. Finally, διὰ is here for σὺν or ἐν, as in Rom. xiv. 20, and often.

12. οὐδὲ δι' αἵματος, &c.] Meaning, 'Neither by the blood of victims, such as bulls and goats, but with his own blood he entered, once for all, into the Holy of Holies, after having obtained eternal redemption for us by his own blood.' The term ἐφάπαξ alludes to the High Priest's entering once only every year into the Holy of Holies; intimating that whereas he entered once every year, Christ, the great High Priest, entered once for all; see infra x. 10. Αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν, 'eternal,' as opposed to the Levitical annual one. Εὑράμενος, lit., 'having acquired for himself,' obtained. So in Josephus, i. 19. 1, we have δόξαν ἀρετῆς εὑράμενος. See my Note on Thucydides, i. 13.

13, 14. Here we have a conclusion à minori ad majus.

13. σποδὸς δαμάλεως.] See Numbers, xix. 2—9. Ῥαντίζουσα, 'sprinkling;' namely, when mixed with running water, thus forming a sort of holy water used to purify the defiled. See Numbers, xix. 17.

14. διὰ Πνεύματος.] Of this expression (which is an unusual one) the exact sense and application have been not a little disputed. Some eminent modern Expositors suppose the term Πνεύμ. used with reference to the eternal and spiritual nature of Christ; a view adopted by Bp. Bull (Def. Fid. Nic. p. 19), who takes the sense to be, 'æternam Christi Divinitatem, sive divinam Filii Dei personam, unitam humanam naturam in arâ Crucis Deo obtulisse;' adducing, in support of this, a passage from the Epistle of Barnabas, ch. vi., where it is said of Christ, αὐτὸς ὑπὲρ τῶν ἡμετέρων ἁμαρτιῶν ἤμελλε σκεῦος τοῦ πνεύματος (the vessel of the spiritual nature of Christ) προσφέρειν θυσίαν. Others, consisting of the ancient Commentators in general, and many modern ones (as Calvin, Estius, Whitby, Bp. Middleton, Winzer, Kuinoel, and Stuart), understand it of the Holy Spirit, either personally, or through his influences, by which every circumstance of our Redeemer's course is said in Scripture to have been accompanied: an interpretation which seems to deserve the preference. According to the former, this text supplies a proof of the essential Deity of Christ; according to the latter, of the eternal Divinity of the Holy Spirit.

— καθαριεῖ τὴν συνείδησιν, &c.] A strong expression, to denote the removal of guilt, by a comparison of the washing the surface of any unclean vessel with water, or other liquid, so as to thoroughly cleanse it. Thus it is said, Rev. i. 5, τῷ λούσαντι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ. Here, by the term συνείδησις is, as Stuart observes, meant, not simply the conscience as a faculty of the soul, but the mind, meaning the conscious power of man. This is said figuratively and by metonymy to be purified, by the removal of the oppressive sense of conscious guilt cleaving to us, like the fatal robe of Nessus, and entailing spiritual death. So infra x. 22 it is said, ἐρραντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς.

By dead works, as here opposed to 'the living God,' we must understand such works as pollute the soul, even as dead bodies were thought to do the living body; from which pollution the blood of Jesus alone cleanses the defiled. In the words p Rom. 3. 25. & 5. 6. 1 Tim. 2. 5. supra 3. 1. & 12. 24. 1 Pet. 3. 18.

ζῶντι; [p] Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο διαθήκης καινῆς μεσίτης ἐστὶν, ὅπως, 15 θανάτου γενομένου εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῶν ἐπὶ τῇ πρώτῃ διαθήκῃ παραβάσεων, τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν λάβωσιν οἱ κεκλημέfollowing (εἰς τὸ λατρεύειν Θεῷ ζῶντι) we have expressed the purpose answered by this washing in the blood of the Lamb, i. e. that we are thus permitted to draw near unto God, and offer him, after this cleansing, an acceptable service; as those under the old dispensation were not permitted to approach God before they had gone through a previous ceremonial purification.

15—18. In this obscure passage the difficulty mainly turns on the import of the term διαθήκης. The sense formerly assigned to it, testament, is now generally rejected, from its involving something like an absurdity. For how, it is asked, can any one be called the mediator of a testament? How can a testament need a mediator? How can any one be called the mediator of his own testament? How can the Mosaic law be called a testament? Who was the testator? And how can it be said that the testator died to render it valid? This, indeed, is so plain, that no Expositors of any note now contend for the sense testament throughout the passage; though some (as Limborch and Medhurst, in a Dissertation on the subject, in the Bibl. Hag.) ascribe to it the double sense of covenant and testament, namely, a covenant which partakes of the nature of a testament. It is, however, generally admitted, that in ver. 15 the sense is covenant (as viii. 6, κρείττονος διαθήκης μεσίτης, and often elsewhere in this book and other parts of the New Test.); and the only difference of opinion is, whether, at vv. 16, 17, it is to have the same sense, or another, namely, that of testament (i. e. will). The former position is maintained by Pierce, Doddridge, Michaelis, Macknight, Parkhurst, and especially by Professor Scholefield; the latter by Calvin, Erasmus, Wolf, Abp. Newcome, Alberti, Bengel, Schleusner, Wahl, Bretschneider, Rosenmuller, Kuinoel, Stuart, Slade, and Mr. Rose on Parkhurst. Those who adopt the former view allege that such is likely to be the sense here, since it is found in the preceding verse; that the Mosaic covenant cannot well be considered as a testament; and that accuracy of argument requires the above sense: in order to evince which they trace the course of the reasoning, which is done by Mr. Holden (chiefly from Pierce and Macknight), as follows: 'The expiation of sin by Christ, and the promise of an eternal inheritance, are made sure and ratified by the death of Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, ver. 15. Of this we cannot doubt, since all solemn covenants are ratified by the death of a sacrificial victim, vv. 16, 17; and such was the case with respect to the Mosaic covenant, vv. 18—21, under which almost all things were purified by blood, and without shedding of blood there was no remission of sin, ver. 22. It was, therefore, necessary that the heavenly things, of which those under the Levitical law were types and representations, should be purified with better sacrifices, ver. 23; and this Christ effected by the offering of himself once for all, vv. 24—26. Whence it follows, that as men must die, and be called to judgment, so sure is it that Christ died for the redemption of transgressions, and that he will appear a second time on earth to bestow the promised inheritance of eternal life on all true believers, vv. 27, 28.' Professor Scholefield traces the course of argument as follows: 'For this end, viz. that he might purge our consciences from dead works to serve the living God, Jesus "is the mediator of the new covenant," that by his death he might entitle us to the inheritance. For (the strictness of his argument would require him to proceed) in a covenant the Mediator must die; else, how does the declaration of ver. 16 assign a reason for that of ver. 15? He became the Mediator of the covenant, in order to answer the desired end; and this could not be without his death; for, that the covenant may be valid, there must be the death of the Mediator or mediating sacrifice. In one sense Moses was the mediator of the old covenant, and so a type of Christ; but not in that sense which required the death of the Mediator, which is clearly the sense required in ver. 15, ὅπως θανάτου γενομένου, &c. In that sense the sacrifices, whose blood was sprinkled on the people (ver. 19), were the types of Christ; and the points of coincidence between them as the types, and Christ as the anti-type, is, their being mediating sacrifices to ratify the respective covenants. Now upon the other view of the subject, the argument would clearly be inaccurate: "Christ is the Mediator of the New Testament, that by his death he might procure us the blessings of the testament; for a testament requires the death of the testator." Nay, he ought to have said, the death of the Mediator: so that by that view we have a double confusion introduced into the Apostle's style; in the general argument we have testament and covenant confounded together; in the particular argument of this passage we have the testator and the mediator of the testament confounded together.' Agreeably to the above statement he proposes the following version of vv. 16, 17: 'For where a covenant is, there must of necessity be brought in the death of the mediating [sacrifice]. For a covenant is valid over dead [sacrifices]; since it is never of any force while the mediating [sacrifice] continues alive.' This mode of interpretation, however (notwithstanding the ability with which it is supported by the learned Professor), lies open to serious, if not insuperable objections. 1. Such a sense of διαθεμένου is, as he himself frankly admits, quite unsupported by the usus loquendi; nay, it would seem that the word never could have had any such sense, consistently with its original signification, i. e. to make a disposition or arrangement of any thing; and to understand it not only in the sense mediating, but 'the mediating [sacrifice],' is beyond measure harsh. 2. The sense assigned to νεκροῖς is quite at variance with the usus loquendi; for the word is one only used of the dead corpses of men, not of the carcases of sacrificed animals: not to say that the use of the plural for the singular would, according to that sense, be very harsh, and no reason would appear why the writer should not have written νεκρῷ; whereas, according to the common interpretation, it is quite agreeable to the idiom of the language. Moreover, 3dly, the latter clause (as Mr. Slade observes), if thus explained, would imply that there was a custom, at the time when a treaty was made, of appointing some particular animal for its ratification, and afterwards of suspending the execution of the compact, by preserving the animal alive; whereas we do not hear of any such custom: on the conclusion of a treaty, the animal was immediately slain. 'It is (Professor Stuart remarks) yet to be proved that no covenants were valid, except those made by the intervention of sacrifices; and yet such is implied in the interpretation in question.' But, waiving the argument as dubious, 'the proposition (as Prof. Stuart says) in ὅπου διαθήκη is too general to admit of being limited to covenants of a special nature (as of those ratified by blood).' Finally, I would add, to suppose διαθεμένου and διαθέμενος to be taken in a sense different from that contained in διαθήκη, is exceedingly harsh; since the sentence is highly antithetical, and the points of antithesis fall on those very words. To remove this formidable objection, some who support the interpretation in question render διαθεμένου (as does Dr. Burton, after Whitby), 'the covenanting party.' But we may ask (with Prof. Stuart), 'where is the death of a person covenanting made necessary, in order to confirm [or ratify] the covenant?' 'Besides (as the learned Commentator observes) Christ ratified the covenant, not as a maker, but as a mediator,' agreeably to what is said in the preceding verse.

16 νοι τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας.—ὅπου γὰρ διαθήκη, θάνατον
17 ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι τοῦ διαθεμένου· [q] διαθήκη γὰρ ἐπὶ νεκροῖς q Gal. 3. 5.

Upon the whole, I see not how the above interpretation can be admitted; for to run directly counter to the usus loquendi, and violate the common idiom of the language, in order to make the sacred writer's argument accurate, is a course which no conscientious Expositor of the word of God will think allowable; and in a passage like the present, where the fitness of an argument is not the matter in question, it is better to leave the sacred writer's argumentation (be it what it may) as it is, than to attempt to improve it at the expense of violating the laws of sound interpretation. Here, however, no such great perplexity exists; for there would seem no serious difficulty involved in supposing (to use the words of Mr. Slade) that 'the Apostle takes advantage of the two-fold sense of διαθήκη, intimating that it is applicable to the Christian dispensation, not only as denoting a covenant (which is the usual signification of the word in Scripture), but also in its general acceptation, of a testament, the death of a testator being not less requisite to the operation of a will, than the death of a victim to the validity of a covenant.' 'As διαθήκη (says Mr. Rose) means both covenant and testament (each being a solemn disposition), and as covenants in general anciently (and especially that of Mount Sinai) were ratified with blood, the Apostle, in comparing the new διαθήκη with the old, represents it in a double light, a covenant ratified by blood, of which the former sacrifices were the types, and a testament ratified and brought into action by the death of a testator.' The occasion of here introducing διαθ. in a sense deviating from, though closely connected with, that adopted in the preceding verse, is ably pointed out by Prof. Stuart as follows: 'The whole comparison of testaments among men which confer a valid title to an inheritance (vv. 16, 17) seems evidently to spring from the mention of Christ's death in the preceding verse, and of the confirmation thereby of the believer's title to a heavenly inheritance. It is as much as to say, "Brethren, regard it not as strange that the death of Christ should have given assurance of promised blessings to believers—should have ratified the new διαθήκη, of which he is the author; other διάθηκαι are ratified by the death of their respective testators, and only in this way."' And then he goes on to show that even the ancient covenant, though it could not be called a διαθήκη in all respects so well as the new one, was still ratified in a manner not unlike the new one, viz. by blood, the emblem of death, vv. 18—22. There is, as Kuinoel observes, a similar play on the double meaning of a word, and a similar transition (ex dilogia) in the use of κατάπαυσις supra ch. iii. and iv., and of εὐλογία, 1 Pet. iii. 9; and paronomasias little differing from this are frequent in the Epistles of St. Paul, and both of these are found in the best writers of antiquity, especially Thucydides, Plato, and Philo-Judæus. See Calvin, and especially Crellius, who completely answers those who object to this view, as if it involved something trifling and bordering on a sophism. His elaborate discussion completely establishes the view taken by the above eminent Expositors, especially Mr. Rose. It is moreover confirmed by considering the scope of vv. 15—18; the purpose of the writer being (as Kuinoel shows) to clear the doctrine of the death of the Messiah from objections and scruples, by showing the necessity of it to effect the grand purposes of his mediatorial office, namely, 'the expiation of the sins of the whole world.' It may be added, that vv. 16, 17 are, in some measure, parenthetical, and are intended not so much for proof, as for illustration, showing that ἡ καινὴ διαθήκη, whether regarded in the light of a testament or of a covenant, requires to be ratified by death. So Crellius observes that the argumentation is here 'à simili, sed contractam (ut sæpe fit) non explicatam.'

Finally, μεσίτης is here used in that peculiar sense as applied to a thing, to denote what we express by a person's negociating a business for another party by transacting it with the other party; which, in the present case, was done by Christ's negociating with God the work of reconciling man to his offended Creator. This use of the word is, however, so rare, that no example of it has been adduced. I have, however, noted one in Josephus, Ant. xvi. 2. 2, where it is said of Herod, καὶ τῶν παρ' Ἀγρίππα ἐπιζητουμένων μεσίτης ἦν· καὶ διεπράττετο (I conjecture διεπράττετο τὸ) μηδενὸς ἀτυχῆσαι τοὺς δεομένους.

— ὅπως, θανάτου γενομένου, &c.] Render, 'so that [his] death having taken place for the expiation of the transgressions committed under the first covenant, they who are called might receive the promise (i. e. the promised blessing) of the eternal inheritance.' Compare Rom. iii. 25, 26. Οἱ κεκλημένοι must not be joined with τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας, but be referred to τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν; τὴν ἐπαγγ. τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας being taken for κληρ. ἐπηγγελμένην.

βεβαία, ἐπεὶ μή ποτε ἰσχύει ὅτε ζῇ ὁ διαθέμενος.—Ὅθεν 18 r Exod. 24. 5, 6. Lev. 16. 14, 15, 18. οὐδ' ἡ πρώτη χωρὶς αἵματος ἐγκεκαίνισται· r λαληθείσης 19 γὰρ πάσης ἐντολῆς κατὰ νόμον ὑπὸ Μωϋσέως παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, λαβὼν τὸ αἷμα τῶν μόσχων καὶ τράγων, μετὰ ὕδατος καὶ ἐρίου κοκκίνου καὶ ὑσσώπου, αὐτό τε τὸ βιβλίον καὶ s Exod. 24 8. Matt. 26. 28. πάντα τὸν λαὸν ἐῤῥάντισε, s λέγων· Τοῦτο τὸ αἷμα τῆς 20 t Exod. 29. 36. Lev. 8. 15, 19. & 16. 14. διαθήκης, ἧς ἐνετείλατο πρὸς ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεός. t καὶ 21 τὴν σκηνὴν δὲ καὶ πάντα τὰ σκεύη τῆς λειτουργίας τῷ αἵματι u Lev. 17. 11. ὁμοίως ἐῤῥάντισε. u Καὶ σχεδὸν ἐν αἵματι πάντα καθαρί- 22 ζεται κατὰ τὸν νόμον, καὶ χωρὶς αἱματεκχυσίας οὐ γίνεται ἄφεσις. Ἀνάγκη οὖν τὰ μὲν ὑποδείγματα τῶν ἐν τοῖς 23

16. φέρεσθαι.] Render, 'be brought in.' In which sense the word occurs in a passage of Plato cited by Kuinoel.

18. 'Aliud argumentum, quo probatur æquum esse, ut novum testamentum, intercedente morte Christi, ratum fiat, a collatione typi ad veritatem: veritas debet respondere typo.' (Hyperius.) To evince the necessity of the blood-shedding of Christ, adverted to at ver. 15, θανάτου γεν., the Apostle shows that, from the first, God ratified his covenant by sacrifice. Hence not even the Sinai covenant was ratified without sacrifice or blood. See Exod. xxiv. 1—8.

— ἐγκεκαίνισται.] In this sense, 'to consecrate or dedicate,' the word occurs in 1 Kings viii. 63 (as used of the Temple), καὶ ἐνεκαίνισε τὸν οἶκον (corresponding to the Heb. חנך), and Deut. xx. 5, where it answers to our handsel, as used of a house; and as the handselling of any building was anciently celebrated by formal rites, which served to ratify the possession of the thing, so the word came to simply mean to ratify, as applied to covenants.

19. 'Instituit probationem propositionis seu antecedentis, idque verbis pluribus, necnon argumentis petitis ex diversis locis.' (Hyperius.) This verse, then, is explanatory and confirmatory of what was contained in the preceding.

— λαληθείσης γὰρ πάσης, &c.] 'for when Moses had recited the whole Law (meaning the formula of the covenant) to the people, as had been prescribed [by God],' &c. By πάσης ἐντολῆς we must understand all the precepts contained in Exod. xxi.—xxiii., as referred to Exod. xxiv. 3. Κατὰ νόμον is by Theophylact, Beza, and the best recent Commentators, well rendered, 'by command of God:' a sense required by the context, and confirmed by the absence of the Article.

— λαβὼν—ἐῤῥάντισε.] Moses, in his account of this transaction, says nothing of the blood of goats, nor of the water and scarlet wool, nor the hyssop, nor of the sprinkling the book of the Law with blood; circumstances justly supposed to have been derived from ancient tradition, and adverted to by the writer as things well known to his readers. Be that as it may, since similar rites are mentioned in Levit. xiv. 4—6, 49—52, there can be little doubt that they were used on this occasion. The water and hyssop are easily accounted for as necessary, or at least very suitable, to the thing; and that it was usual for water to be mixed with the blood, we learn from Levit. xiv. 49—51. Finally, as to the sprinkling of the book, that involves no discrepancy, being only an addition to, though no variation from, the Mosaic account; and as the altar was sprinkled, so might the book, as it lay upon the altar.

— πάντα τὸν λαόν.] The expression need not be pressed on, but may be taken in a restricted sense.

20. τὸ αἷμα τ. διαθ.] i. e. 'the blood by which the covenant was solemnly established and ratified;' ἐντέλλεσθαι here standing for the preceding συντελεῖν or ἐγκαινίζειν. Πρὸς ὑμᾶς is put for a dativus commodi.

The words here cited do not exactly correspond to those of the Sept., but they well represent the sense.

21. The dedication of the Tabernacle, here adverted to, is described at Exod. xl. 8, sq. and Levit. viii. 10, sq.; where, however, the circumstance in question is not mentioned, and might very well, for brevity sake, be omitted by Moses. It is supposed to have been derived from tradition, and mention of it is made in Josephus and Philo.

22. σχεδόν.] This limitation is employed, because some things, i. e. such as could endure fire, were purified by fire, and others which could not, by water. See Levit. xvi. 28. Numb. xxxi. 23.

— χωρὶς αἱμ., &c.] Answering to this is what is said by Josephus, Philo, and the Rabbins, that without blood (typical of the remission of sins by the Messiah) no one was absolved from his sins or defilements. On the reasons, see Braun, Owen, Dindorf, Kuinoel, and the 9th Book of Bp. Warburton's Div. Leg. The word αἱματεκχυσία does not occur elsewhere; yet we need not suppose it to be, as the Commentators say, coined by the writer. It is sufficient to consider it as one among the very numerous words of the Hellenistic Alexandrian and common dialect not preserved in the remains of antiquity.

23. 'Illatio est ex tribus membris probationis, seu repetitio propositionis, sed paulo aliis verbis enunciatæ.' (Hyperius.) The Apostle now, reverting to what was said at ver. 21, again treats on the main point,—the atonement; subjoining a conclusion to be drawn from the whole of the preceding.

— ἀνάγκη οὖν τὰ ὑποδείγματα, &c.] q. d. 'Hence it was necessary that the shadow of heavenly things [the Tabernacle] should be purified οὐρανοῖς τούτοις καθαρίζεσθαι, αὐτὰ δὲ τὰ ἐπουράνια κρείττοσι 24 θυσίαις παρὰ ταύτας. [x] οὐ γὰρ εἰς χειροποίητα ἅγια εἰσῆλ- x Rom. 8. 34. supra 7. 25. 1 John 2. 2. θεν ὁ Χριστὸς, ἀντίτυπα τῶν ἀληθινῶν, ἀλλ' εἰς αὐτὸν τὸν οὐρανὸν, νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι τῷ προσώπῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.

25 [y] Οὐδ' ἵνα πολλάκις προσφέρῃ ἑαυτὸν, ὥσπερ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς y Exod. 30. 10. Lev. 16. 2, εἰσέρχεται εἰς τὰ ἅγια κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἐν αἵματι ἀλλοτρίῳ· 34. supra ver. 7 26 ([z] ἐπεὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν πολλάκις παθεῖν ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου·) z 1 Cor. 10. 11.
νῦν δὲ ἅπαξ, ἐπὶ συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων, εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρ- Gal. 4. 4.
27 τίας, διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ πεφανέρωται. [a] Καὶ καθ' ὅσον a 2 Esd. 14. 35.
ἀπόκειται τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἅπαξ ἀποθανεῖν, μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο Eccles. 12. 14.

[with or consecrated to sacred uses] with such rites as these [of bulls and goats], but that heaven itself should be purified (i. e. an approach to it be made by purification) by a more effectual sacrifice,' even the blood of Christ. In the expression καθαρίζεσθαι there is, Rosenmuller observes, 'a metonymy, such as we often find, when things partly similar, partly dissimilar, are compared; for as by the legal purification an entrance was afforded to the sanctuary, so, by taking the effect as standing for the cause, heaven is said καθαρίζεσθαι, instead of saying that an entrance by them is given to that heaven.'

24. Having by these two reasons evinced that the new testament could not have been ratified, except by Christ's dying, the Apostle now proceeds, as he had before begun, to again show by several arguments the superior efficacy and excellence of the sacrifice of Christ, as compared with the legal sacrifices. (Hyperius.) Here, then, the heavenly priesthood of Christ, which had been treated of previously to the parenthetical passage on the necessity of his dying, is here resumed and further illustrated.

— οὐ γὰρ εἰς χειροποίητα ἅγια, &c.] Meaning that Christ did not enter into the earthly holy of holies, which was only an image of the heavenly, but into heaven itself. On these two terms, χειροπ. and ἅγια, see supra vv. 11 and 2. Ἀντίτυπα here is nearly synonymous with ὑπόδειγμα before explained, denoting the resemblances relative to Christ both in his mediatorial high-priestly capacity, and as Lord in heaven.

— νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι, &c.] Ἐμφανισθῆναι is a forensic term, signifying to present oneself before a tribunal or court, either as a plaintiff or advocate. Here, from the context, the latter must be the sense intended.

25. The writer now contrasts the offering of Christ with his own blood, with the entrance of the priest into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another, and accordingly declares Christ to have appeared before God, and entered into heaven, not in order to make a frequent offering of himself, i. e. not, after having entered into heaven, to again go forth from thence, and descend on earth, and there again be killed as a victim, and rising again, make repeated offerings of himself in heaven to God. Herein, then, he shows both the dissimilarity of Christ to the High Priest, and his superiority to him: 1. inasmuch as the High Priest entered into the Sanctum Sanctorum with the blood of another,—namely, of the victims, so that the High Priest and the victim were distinct; Christ, by his own blood, so that the High Priest is identified with the victim; 2. that the High Priest, after having entered the Sanctuary, again went forth from it, and repeated this ingress and egress yearly, so as to enter several times, while Christ entered once only. (Limborch.) Here, then, as Hyperius observes, we have an argumentum à circumstantia, that Christ only offered his sacrifice once, and that once fully sufficed for the expiation of sin.

— οὐδ' ἵνα, &c.] Οὐδὲ here corresponds to οὐ γὰρ at ver. 24, and ἀνάγκη must be repeated; the sense being, 'neither was it necessary that he should present himself often, as the High Priest enters the temple every year with another's blood.' Ἑαυτὸν is for τὸ ἴδιον αἷμα, supra ix. 12.

26. In this clause (which Hyperius justly considers as parenthetical) we have a reductio ad absurdum. 'It is shown (says Calvin) what an absurdity would follow, if this one sacrifice of Christ should be not sufficient; for thus he must needs die often, death being inseparable from sacrifice. It follows, then, that the virtue of this one sacrifice is eternal, and extends to all ages.'

— ἐπεὶ ἔδει, &c.] At ἐπεὶ there is, as often in the case of γὰρ, an ellipsis of ἄλλως, on which see Note infra x. 2. The term ἔδει may, with Grotius, be understood, not of necessity, but of expediency; q. d. 'Had there been any greater efficacy in a repeated offering, it would have been expedient that, &c.; but as things now are (νῦν δὲ), as there was no such utility,' &c.

— συντελείᾳ τῶν αἰώνων.] Meaning, 'the close of the Mosaic dispensation.' See Note on 1 Cor. x. 11. Schoettgen supposes the term συντέλεια to be here used, rather than τέλος, by way of marking the junction of the two τέλη or periods. Accordingly it is well observed by Bengel and Wesley, that 'the sacrifice of Christ divides the whole age or duration of the world into two parts, and extends its virtue backward and forward, from this middle point wherein they meet, to abolish both the guilt and power of sin.'

27. It is now shown, by a new argument, derived à simili, that Christ ought once only to offer himself,—namely, because his sacrifice and death were one and the same. And here it is not meant to be affirmed that all men must die (that being undoubted), but only that it is appointed for them once to die, and that after death nothing shall remain but judgment. (Dindorf.)

— ἀπόκειται] 'it is laid up,' or reserved, by the appointment of God, as in the case of a sentence passed on a criminal, and of which the b Matt. 20. 28. & 26. 28. Rom. 6. 9, 10. 1 Pet. 3. 18. 1 John 3. 5. a Col. 2. 17. supra 8. 5. & 9. 9.

κρίσις· [b] οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς, ἅπαξ προσενεχθεὶς εἰς τὸ 28 πολλῶν ἀνενεγκεῖν ἁμαρτίας, ἐκ δευτέρου χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὀφθήσεται τοῖς αὐτὸν ἀπεκδεχομένοις εἰς σωτηρίαν.
X. [a] ΣΚΙΑΝ γὰρ ἔχων ὁ νόμος τῶν μελλόντων ἀγα- 1 execution is certain, though the period not defined. Ἅπαξ, 'once for all,' as Thucyd. i. 139, ἐδόκει ἅπαξ περὶ ἁπάντων ἀποκρίνασθαι.

28. οὕτω καὶ, &c.] Here we have the application; 'as it is appointed unto men,' &c., 'so Christ,' &c.: in which is implied the reason of the above, namely, the fact that the legal sacrifice could not atone for sin. At προσενεχθεὶς (which is a sacrificial term) supply εἰς θυσίαν. In εἰς τὸ πολλῶν ἀνενεγκεῖν ἁμαρτίας we have another sacrificial term, which, from its connexion with the cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, the Atonement, deserves especial attention. 'Now (observes Prof. Stuart) the phrase to bear sin is to suffer the punishment due to sin, or to subject oneself to its consequences, and sometimes to expose others to its consequences; but to bear the sins of others is to bear the penalty or suffering due to their ἁμαρτία; meaning the consequences of sin, as supra v. 26, also Lament. v. 7. Ezek. xviii. 19, sq. Isaiah liii. 4. So נשא at Prov. xix. 19, and φέρω at Heb. xiii. 13. 'Αναφέρω has the same (or even a stronger.—Ed.) sense as, and corresponds to, the Heb. נשא and סבל. So St. Peter (1 Pet. ii. 24) says of our Saviour ἀνήνεγκε —τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν, in his own body, on the cross; to explain which he adds, "by whose stripes ye were healed." From which, and other passages, it is plain that the sense attached in Scripture to bearing any one's sins, is the actual suffering of the consequences due to sin (or rather those sins. —Ed.). And that such is the sense here, is plain, 1. since the passage can have no other sense; for our Saviour did not take upon himself the moral turpitude, nor remove it as of itself, but the consequences of sin he prevented by his own sufferings. 2. Since the corresponding Hebrew terms חטאת, עון and פשע all mean punishment of sin, as well as sin itself.'

The term πολλῶν is generally explained by the Arminian Expositors, 'even as many as were born into the world;' by Calvinistic ones, 'as many as truly believe in Christ.' The former sense cannot be admitted, as being a manifest gloss. The difficulty however is ably met by Bp. Middleton as follows: 'We are told that οἱ πολλοὶ is often equivalent to πάντες. It is not, however, quite certain that the Apostle here meant to express πάντων: the verse concludes with the mention of those "who wait for him," i. e. who wait for Christ's second coming, in humble hope of receiving their reward; and these manifestly are not the whole human race. So also supra ii. 10, it is said that Christ bringeth many sons, πολλοὺς υἱοὺς, unto glory. See also Matt. xx. 28. xxvi. 28. Mark x. 45. The reason why, in some places, Christ is said to give himself a ransom for all, and in others only for many, seems to be, that when all are mentioned, it is meant that to all he has offered the terms of salvation; and where many are spoken of, it is considered that by all the terms will not be accepted.'

— χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὀφθήσεται.] By ἁμαρτ. should not be understood, with some, a sin-offering. Considering the correspondence of these words with εἰς ἀθέτησιν ἁμαρτίας, διὰ τῆς θυσίας αὐτοῦ πεφανέρωται at ver. 26, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας must mean 'without having occasion to bear our sins [in order to atonement].' Εἰς σωτηρίαν may (as it is by some) be referred to ἀπεκδεχομένοις; but it seems better referred to ὀφθήσεται, whence, as Kuinoel observes, will arise a weightier and more apposite sentiment; q. d. 'that he will not appear as a piacular victim, to expiate sin, but to bestow eternal felicity on his faithful worshippers;' or (as Abp. Tillotson expresses it) will appear, not as a Sacrifice, but as a Judge.

X. As the Hebrews would be very backward in admitting the foregoing conclusion concerning the inefficacy of the Legal expiations, the Apostle proceeds to further argue with them therein. (Scott.)

The scope of vv. 1—18 is to evince the utter inefficacy of the Jewish sacrifices, as contrasted with the perfect expiatory sacrifice made by our great High Priest. This subject the Apostle had glanced at before; vii. 11—19; viii. 7—10; ix. 8. 10. 13, 14; and he now enlarges on it, beginning with declaring, that the Levitical sacrifices could not be a perfect satisfaction for sin (v. 1); for if they had been so, once offering them would have been sufficient (v. 2). But the continual repetition of them shows, that sin remained unpardoned, notwithstanding the previous sacrifices offered for it (v. 3); and, from their very nature it is impossible that they should procure the pardon of sin (v. 4). This is also asserted in Ps. xl. which is prophetical of the Messiah (v. 5—7); and from which it is evident, that God designed to abolish his former dispensation concerning the Levitical sacrifices, and to establish another and better one (vv. 8, 9), which offers a perfectly efficacious sacrifice through the offering of the body of Jesus once for all (vv. 10—14); and which is also testified by the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures (vv. 15—18). (Holden.)

1. σκιὰν γὰρ ἔχων, &c.] Meaning, that Christ effectually by one sacrifice expiated the sins of many (see ix. 28, and x. 10); for the law, &c. There is here an ellipsis of μόνον; the sense being, 'the law having [only] a faint adumbration or outline of future blessings (see ix. 11), and not the full form or image of the things in question.' The term σκιὰ signifies an outline or sketch, as opposed to the filled up figure of any thing, so as to constitute a substantial form. So in Philo, p. 218, we have ἐκεῖνος γὰρ τὰς σκιὰς πλάττει, ὥσπερ οἱ ζωγραφοῦντες. On the other hand, εἰκὼν (to which it is here opposed) denotes the full and complete image of the thing. So Cicero, Offic. iii. 17, we have, 'solidam et expressam effigiem nullam tenemus; umbrâ et imaginibus utimur.'

This and other passages (see v. 12, and ix. 9—14) abundantly prove (as observes Abp. Magee) that the sacrifice of Christ was not, as the Socinians aver, a figurative sacrifice, founded only in allusion to the sacrifices of the Law, but a real and proper, a true and effective sacrifice, θῶν, οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων, κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις ἃς προσφέρουσιν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, οὐδέ-2 ποτε δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους τελειῶσαι· ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν ἐπαύσαντο προσφερόμεναι, διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν ἔτι συνείδησιν ἁμαρτιῶν τοὺς λατρεύοντας, ἅπαξ κεκαθαρμένους; b Mic. 6. 6—8. c Ps. 40. 7.

3, 4 ἀλλ' ἐν αὐταῖς ἀνάμνησις ἁμαρτιῶν κατ' ἐνιαυτόν· [b] ἀδύνα- & 50. 8, &c. Isa. 1. 11.
5 τον γὰρ αἷμα ταύρων καὶ τράγων ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας. [c] Διὸ Jer. 6. 20. Amos 5. 21, 22.

while those of the Law were only faint representations intended for its introduction.

— κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις, &c.] There is here a transposition, for ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις ἃς προσφέρουσι κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, &c. The words ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις belong to the following τελειῶσαι, which signifies to 'make a complete atonement for.' See ix. 9, and vii. 11.

2. ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν, &c.] Here we have a proof of the assertion at v. 1. Instead of the common reading ἐπεὶ ἂν, many of the most ancient MSS., some Fathers and Versions, and almost all the early Editions except the Ed. Princ., have ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἂν with a mark of interrogation at the end of the verse; which reading was preferred by Mill and Wetstein, and has been edited by Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Schoettgen, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and I think on just grounds; since the word οὐκ might more easily be omitted by accident, than intentionally inserted. And though it may be supposed that the sense is the same according to either reading, yet with the οὐκ and a mark of interrogation, it has far more of spirit and animation; though, from its greater obscurity and difficulty, it was more liable to alteration. It may, however, be doubted whether the sense be really the same either way. At least, that yielded by the interrogation is, by Mr. Scott, shown to be the more satisfactory. 'If (says he) any sacrifice has been offered of sufficient efficacy to atone for sin, there would have been no need for a continual repetition of it; and that repetition showed the inefficacy of the most solemn legal sacrifices. On the contrary, when the one sacrifice of Christ had been offered, the legal sacrifices were virtually abolished; no other sacrifice was required; no repetition was necessary; the end was fully answered; nothing, except faith in him, was needful; and the appointed ordinances were no longer prefigurations, but memorials, of his one all-sufficient atonement.'

'Ἐπεὶ has here, as at ix. 26, the sense 'since otherwise,' by an ellipsis of ἄλλως. Render: 'for otherwise (i. e. if the sacrifices could have perfectly expiated sin) would they not have ceased to be offered [as no longer necessary]?' That ἐπεὶ may thus commence an interrogative as well as declarative sentence, is certain from Rom. iii. 6, and Aristoph. Nub. 689. This use I have observed to occur especially in sentences where γὰρ or some equivalent particle occurs, and also when accompanied with Verbs in the Imperfect, or Aorists Indicative, thus assuming the sense of the same tenses in the Subjunctive. So at Thucyd. i. 11, we have τὸ γὰρ ἔρυμα οὐκ ἂν ἐτειχίσαντο· and i. 68, οὐ γὰρ ἂν Κέρκυραν βίᾳ ἡμῶν εἶχον· and i. 102, βίᾳ γὰρ ἂν εἷλον τὸ χωρίον· and iv. 54, ἀνέστησαν γὰρ ἂν Κυθηρίους· where Poppo observes that in this case there is an omission of the protasis hypothetica. Other examples in the New Test. occur at 1 Cor. xiv. 16, and xv. 29; and in the Old Test. at Job xxxv. 7. And that it is not without parallel in the Classical writers appears (besides the passages above adduced) from Lucian, Dial. Mort. ii. 2; Xenoph. Cyr. ii. 2. 21. See more in Matth. Gr. Gr. § 618; Buttm. Gr. Gr. § 149; and Passow, Lex. in voc. ἐπεὶ, No. 2. Here, however, a Classical writer would probably have written ἐπεὶ οὐχὶ ἐπαύσαντο ἄν;

— διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν ἔτι συνείδησιν, &c.] Meaning, 'because the worshippers, being, once for all, made clean from sin, would have been no longer troubled in their consciences with the remembrance of sins, those being thus expiated.' Or, as Mr. Scott expresses it, 'the worshippers having been once purged from their guilt, would have no more been burdened with such a consciousness of sin as required further sacrifices to take it away.' The term συνείδησις here includes the two senses of conscience and consciousness; the latter as the result of the former, or the one mutually acting and reacting on the other. See Note supra ix. 14.

3. ἀλλά.] The word has here (as at Acts xix. 2) the sense imo vero. The force of the argument here urged, mainly turns on the expression ἀνάμνησις, and the full sense is well represented by Boehme and Kuinoel, who explain: 'Nay, so far are they, by these continued sacrifices, from being freed from the consciousness of unexpiated sin, that there is [rather] therein (or only) a commemoration of the sins of the people.' So Philo (cited by Carpzov) says of the sacrifices of the wicked, that οὐ λύσιν ἁμαρτημάτων, ἀλλ' ὑπόμνησιν, scil. μόνον ἐργάζονται.

4. Here we have another argument to prove the insufficiency of legal sacrifices to take away sin, derived from the nature of the things offered up; which, it is obvious, bear no proportion, either to God, who was to be propitiated, or to man, for whom they were offered, or to sin, which they should expiate. (Hyperius.)

— ἀδύνατον γὰρ, &c.] The γὰρ is confirmatory of the preceding proposition; it being meant, that 'the thing aimed at is impossible, because such sacrifices are of no value in the sight of God;' cannot atone for sin (ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας), by procuring its pardon, or arrest its punishment. 'The Apostle's argument (observes Mr. Scott) is, that no sacrifice could really atone for sin, or bring sinners into a state of acceptance with God unto eternal life, which did not make full satisfaction to his offended justice, and render it honourable to him to remit the punishment of it. But the legal sacrifices were so far from being thus efficacious, that they did not suffice for the individuals, or the generation of Israel, who presented them, even in respect of a εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον λέγει· Θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν οὐκ ἠθέλησας, σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι. ὁλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ εὐδόκησας. 6 τότε εἶπον· Ἰδοὺ, ἥκω (ἐν κεφαλίδι βιβλίου γέγρα- 7 permanent exemption from temporal judgments; for the most solemn of them, at the day of atonement, was rather an annual remembrance of their sins, than a removal of the guilt of them; so that they had only a respect to the year which was past, and the same remembrance. As Divine appointments, such sacrifices might be a suitable acknowledgment of guilt, and profession of repentance, and reliance on the mercy of God, on account of which he might bear with the Israelites, and give them temporal benefits; and they aptly typified the sacrifice of Christ; but they could not possibly render pardoning mercy, in its most plenteous exercise, consistent with the infinite justice and holiness of God; without which nothing could take away sin, according to the Apostle's reasoning in this place.'

5. To prove his doctrine in the most unanswerable manner, the Apostle shows that, however opposed to Jewish prejudices, it is no other than what is recognized in their own Scriptures; adducing, and arguing from, Psalm xl. 6—9, which passages showed that his coming was the necessary consequence of the inefficacy of the legal sacrifices, and of the Almighty's purpose of saving sinners.

— διὸ εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον λέγει, &c.] Meaning, 'Wherefore (i. e. in proof of this) in a Psalm which is prophetic of the coming of the Messiah, he is represented by David as saying, on his coming into the world,' &c. The quotation is from the Sept., with only the change of ᾔτησας into εὐδόκησας; and at ver. 7 there is only a shortening of the words of the Sept. Upon the whole, the discrepancy is not so great as it would appear from the writers on the Quotations, who subjoin καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου, though the Apostle plainly did not intend to take them. The Sept. Version itself is only a free translation of the Hebrew, and its true sense will better appear when it is pointed (as it ought to be) thus: Ἰδοὺ, ἥκω· (ἐν κεφαλίδι—ἐμοῦ) τοῦ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου, ὁ Θεός μου, ἠβουλήθην, καὶ τὸν νόμον σου ἐν μέσῳ τῆς καρδίας μου. In order to properly understand the last clause, it should be observed, that the Septuagint Translators, erroneously indeed, took the תורתך as an Accusative, not a Nominative. The most remarkable circumstance connected with the passage in question is, that in the words σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω the Sept. and the Apostle both differ widely from the Hebrew, which is well rendered, 'mine ears hast thou opened.' To remove this discrepancy various methods have been proposed, either by altering the Hebrew to correspond to the Greek, or the Greek to the Hebrew. None of these, however, can be adopted, since the present reading in the Hebrew is confirmed by all the MSS. and Versions; and in the Greek by all the MSS. both of the Sept. and the Apostle. More attention is due to the methods proposed of reconciling the sense of the Hebrew with the Greek, and making them, though different in words, coincide in meaning; of which the most probable is that of Joseph Mede (Works, p. 897), who translates the Greek thus: 'Thou hast fitted my body [to be thy servant],' namely, in such a manner as servants' bodies usually are; with allusion to the custom among the Jews of boring the ears of perpetual servants. All these methods, however, are, more or less, harsh.

Again, though the words in the Hebrew may, with a reference to Isaiah l. 5, be explained of obedience; yet to bring that sense to any coincidence with what is contained in the Sept. and the New Test., σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι, is impracticable. Indeed, the best Hebraists are now agreed that the meaning of the Hebrew words אזנים כרית לי is, 'me docuisti;' as in Isaiah l. 5, and 1 Sam. xx. 2, the phrase פתח אזן signifies that the Messiah has opened out some profound truth.

Finally, for σῶμα here we have the strongest evidence external and even internal; such being required by the words εἰσερχόμενος εἰς τὸν κόσμον just before. And at ver. 10, in the words διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Ἰ. Χρ., there is an evident reference to the σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι at ver. 5, which must, together with the εἰσερχ. εἰς τὸν κόσμον before, be understood of the incarnation of the Redeemer, with allusion also to the expiation he made with that body offered up as a sacrifice for the sins of the world; see ii. 14. ix. 25. x. 10. It may be urged, indeed, that this is not the sense of the Psalmist. Granted: but the Apostle is amenable to no blame; for, as Stuart shows, 'the circumstance adverted to in σῶμα κατηρτ. μοι is not primary or essential, but only incidental to the argument he is carrying on.' And as the writer had occasion to quote the long passage in which it occurs for another purpose, and was obliged to quote it from the Sept., which alone was understood by his readers in general, the words which he there found he was fully justified in retaining; especially as they did not impede, but rather promote, the purpose he had in view; namely, by turning the minds of his readers to CHRIST, who, in his incarnation, became the true expiatory sacrifice, of which the sacrifices in the law were but types and symbols.

7. τότε] 'then.' In the Hebr., אז. The words, however, have so perplexed some Critics that they choose to regard each of them as redundant; but that is cutting the knot. It is better to suppose some rather unusual, yet suitable, sense of אז and τότε; and we might (with Carpzov, Ernesti, Morus, Tittman, Gesenius, and Kuinoel) render, 'therefore.' Yet no sufficient reason exists to deviate from the usual sense, of time; this being rather, as Stuart suggests, to be understood of the time referred to in the preceding context of Psalm xl., wherein are related the wonderful works of God. By the expression κεφαλίδι βιβλίου is meant the Pentateuch, and such other parts of the Scriptures of the Old Test. as were then in being. Κεφαλ., 'roll.' So called with reference to the wooden rollers about which the sheets of parchment were rolled, πται περὶ ἐμοῦ) τοῦ ποιῆσαι, ὁ Θεὸς, τὸ θέλημά 8 σου. Ἀνώτερον λέγων· Ὅτι θυσίαν καὶ προσφορὰν καὶ ὁλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐκ ἠθέλησας, οὐδὲ εὐδόκησας· (αἵτινες κατὰ τὸν νόμον προσ-9 φέρονται·) τότε εἴρηκεν· Ἰδοὺ, ἥκω τοῦ ποιῆσαι, [ὁ Θεὸς,] τὸ θέλημά σου· ἀναιρεῖ τὸ πρῶτον ἵνα τὸ 10 δεύτερον στήσῃ. [d] Ἐν ᾧ θελήματι ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν [οἱ] d Supra 9. 12. infra 13. 12.

διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ 11 ἐφάπαξ. Καὶ πᾶς μὲν ἱερεὺς ἕστηκε καθ' ἡμέραν λειτουρ-γῶν, καὶ τὰς αὐτὰς πολλάκις προσφέρων θυσίας, αἵτινες 12 οὐδέποτε δύνανται περιελεῖν ἁμαρτίας· [e] ‡ αὐτὸς δὲ, μίαν e Col. 3. 1. supra 1. 3, 13.
ὑπὲρ ἁμαρτιῶν προσενέγκας θυσίαν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, ἐκά-13 θισεν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, [f] τὸ λοιπὸν ἐκδεχόμενος ἕως f Ps. 110. 1. Acts 2. 35. 1 Cor. 15. 25.

and which had at one end a κεφαλὶς, or sort of carved head, which gave name to the whole.

8. On the passage of the Psalm the Apostle now offers some remarks, showing, from the words of the Messiah, briefly repeated, that the Levitical sacrifices, from their inefficacy to obtain the full pardon of sins, are abrogated, and the sacrifice of Christ substituted in their place.

9. ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου.] Namely, by offering myself on the cross, according to thy command, John xiv. 31. The words ὁ Θεὸς are not found in several ancient MSS. and some Versions and Fathers, and have been cancelled by Griesbach and Scholz; but they are well defended by Matthæi and Valcknaer.

— ἀναιρεῖ τὸ πρῶτον, &c.] These words contain a conclusion from the foregoing sentence. By τὸ πρῶτον we are to understand the Levitical sacrifices; and by τὸ δεύτερον the will of God as evinced in the sacrifice of the body of Christ.

10. The Apostle now proceeds to explain what is meant, in this case, by doing the will of God, and what is the efficacy of that obedience. (Stuart.)

— ἐν ᾧ θελ.] 'in conformity with which will' [of God], whereby he was pleased that Christ should be a victim, and which Christ came to fulfil; see vv. 7. 9. Ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν, 'we are atoned for, purified, and made holy,' expiation being made for us, and the pardon of our sins obtained; compare vv. 4. 11. ii. 11. Ἐφάπαξ must be referred, not (as it is by some) to ἡγιασμ., but to προσφ.; compare ver. 14, and supra ix. 26. 28. The full sense is, 'once for all;' a very significant term. 'The Apostle (says Stuart) meets the objection as to dissimilarity in the act of expiation, by showing that being once slain as an expiatory offering, was quite sufficient to satisfy all the demands of the case.'

11—18. The Apostle had, in the term ἐφάπαξ, again adverted to a point on which his Hebrew readers might think there was a superiority in the Jewish dispensation; namely, that the expiation made by the High Priest was made every year, that of Christ only once. Here he again encounters the objection; showing that it was made once for all, by an act neither needing nor admitting of repetition,—on which our atonement may safely be rested, since it will be for ever availing, and not be temporary like the sacrifices of the old dispensation. And here he applies generally to the sacrifices offered daily by the priests the argument by which he had proved the inefficacy of the annual sacrifices of the High Priest in the Holy of holies; namely, that the very repetition of such services evinced their inefficacy, viz., to obtain permanent pardon and complete expiation. Whereas Christ offered but one sacrifice for the sins of the world, yet that was so effectual as not to need being repeated; and, as a proof of which completion he shows he was seated at the right hand of God as Lord of the universe. At ver. 14 he affirms that the repetition need not be made, since it has already fully produced the effect, the perfect expiation of those who have an interest in that sacrifice by faith and repentance. Then it is said, that to this efficacy the Holy Spirit has testified, in the before-mentioned account of the covenant of which Jesus Christ is the mediator; namely, that under the new covenant, sin should be no more remembered: consequently, since pardon is obtained, no more offering for sin is necessary, 17, 18.

11. πᾶς μὲν ἱερεὺς, &c.] Meaning, in a generic sense, 'the priests generally in their course,' including the High Priest. In ἕστηκε, to which we have opposed at ver. 12 ἐκάθισεν, there is an allusion to the rule which required the Priests to stand while in the Temple; involving a tacit contrast between the humble posture of those ministers standing, and that of Jesus, who, in quality of Lord, sits in the presence of God,—and that at his right hand, and σύνθρονος. See Matt. xxvi. 55.

12. αὐτός.] Instead of this, Griesbach and Scholz edit, from some MSS., οὗτος: a reading, however, evidently proceeding from a grammatical correction; οὗτος being here better Greek than αὐτός; though αὐτὸς was here used rather than οὗτος, honoris causâ, as Hom. Il. θ. 4, αὐτὸς δέ (Jupiter) σφ' ἀγόρευε, θεοὶ δ' ὑπὸ πάντες ἄκουον: in which view we may compare the expression αὐτὸς ἔφα, as used by the Pythagoreans of their master. Εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς is construed by Valcknaer, Dindorf, Böhme, and Stuart with θυσίαν; but by Commentators generally with ἐκάθισε, which is more agreeable to the context.

τεθῶσιν οἱ ἐχθροὶ αὐτοῦ ὑποπόδιον τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ. μιᾷ γὰρ προσφορᾷ τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς τοὺς 14 ἁγιαζομένους. Μαρτυρεῖ δὲ ἡμῖν καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον· 15 μετὰ γὰρ τὸ προειρηκέναι· [g] Αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη ἣν δια- 16 θήσομαι πρὸς αὐτοὺς μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει Κύριος, διδοὺς νόμους μου ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν διανοιῶν αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω αὐτούς·
καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν 17 οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ ἔτι. Ὅπου δὲ ἄφεσις τούτων, οὐκ ἔτι 18 προσφορὰ περὶ ἁμαρτίας.
[h] Ἔχοντες οὖν, ἀδελφοί, παῤῥησίαν εἰς τὴν εἴσοδον τῶν 19 ἁγίων ἐν τῷ αἵματι Ἰησοῦ, ἣν ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν, ὁδὸν πρόσ- 20 φατον καὶ ζῶσαν, διὰ τοῦ καταπετάσματος, τουτέστι τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ· [i] καὶ ἱερέα μέγαν ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ· 21

g Jer. 31. 31, &c. Rom. 11. 27. supra 8. 8.
h John 10. 9. & 14. 6. Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 2. 13, 18. & 3. 12. supra 9. 8, 12.
i Supra 4. 14, 16.

13. ἐκδεχ.] 'awaiting.' See i. 13. On the next words see supra ii. 8. Matt. xxii. 44. Acts ii. 35. 1 Cor. xv. 27, 28.

14. τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ δ. τοὺς ἁγ.] Meaning, 'For by (or at) one offering [that of himself, ver. 9] hath he perfectly expiated those that are sanctified.' By the term τετελείωκεν (on which see supra ix. 9. x. 1, and Notes) is denoted that provision which was made, by the sacrifice of Christ, for perfect reconciliation and justification, unto eternal life; so importing (to use the words of Bp. Beveridge) that 'our High Priest, by the one oblation of himself, once offered, was a complete propitiation, or has made sufficient satisfaction for the sins of the whole world; so that we need no other sacrifice but that whereby to obtain the remission of our sins, and to make reconciliation for us.'

By the expression τοὺς ἁγιαζομένους are denoted not merely (as Hammond and Wetstein explain) obedient Christians, i. e. such as obey the Gospel, and so become entitled to the benefits of Christ's death; but those who are sanctified by faith springing from regeneration, and evidenced by the sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience. See Hyperius and Melancthon.

15, 16. Here Beza, De Dieu, and Storr rightly connect μετὰ γὰρ τὸ προειρηκέναι with λέγει Κύριος a little after. In διδοὺς νόμους μου ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν there is a slight deviation from both the Sept. and the Hebrew, and that in order to make the words better understood and applied by Hebrew readers.

17. καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν, &c.] 'Here (observes Rosenmuller) is the nervus probandi; the sense being, 'I will remit and not punish them.'

18. ὅπου δὲ ἄφεσις, &c.] The Apostle thus sums up the reason why, under the Gospel dispensation, absolute and final pardon is obtained. (Stuart.)

19. Here ends the doctrinal part of the Epistle, the remainder being occupied with admonitory, hortatory, and consolatory matter. And first the Apostle proceeds to the practical application of the foregoing doctrines, exhorting his Hebrew readers to constancy in their Christian profession, warning them against apostasy, and pointing to its awful consequences; intermingling, however, encouragement and promises, to excite them to strive for the prize of their high calling in Christ Jesus, by enduring unto the end.

The general sense of vv. 19—25 is well expressed by Hammond and Whitby as follows: 'Such being the sum of my argument, viz. that as the High Priest entered into the Holy of Holies with the blood of a sin offering, by passing through the veil,—so Christians enter into heaven by virtue of the atoning blood of Christ, let us cherish an assured confidence in the faithful promises of God, and persevere steadily in a Christian course, receiving mutual encouragement from each other from the near approach of that day,' &c., meaning the advent of Christ to judgment.

— παῤῥησίαν εἰς τὴν εἴσοδον.] Literally, 'a confidence for the access;' meaning, a confidence (or confident trust) that we shall enter; or, freedom of access. In τῶν ἁγίων we have a Genitive for an Accusative with εἰς. The expression is intended to denote the true Holy of Holies,—heaven.

20. ζῶσαν] for εἰς ζωὴν ἄγουσαν, 'which leadeth to salvation.' Ἐνεκαίνισεν ἡμῖν, 'hath dedicated it to us,' i. e. unto our use; lit., 'has first opened it to us.' So Chrysostom explains, 'first formed it, and himself first entered upon it.' In this sense the term occurs at Deut. xx. 5. 1 Kings viii. 63, and 2 Chron. vii. 5, answering to the Heb. חָנַךְ. As, then, to handsel any house is to open it for the first time for use (thus Deut. xx. 5, it is said, τίς—οἰκοδομήσας οἰκίαν καινὴν, καὶ οὐκ ἐνεκαίνισεν αὐτὴν), so to handsel (ἐγκαινίζειν) any road is to open it for access, and dedicate it to use. See Note supra ix. 18.

— διὰ τοῦ καταπετάσματος.] Supply ἄγουσαν. By this somewhat obscure expression (on which see Note at vi. 19) is meant Christ's body, which is, by a figure similar to that at John x. 7, and xiv. 6, compared to the veil of the Temple; q. d. 'As the veil of the Temple had to be removed for the entrance of the High Priest into the Holy of holies, so was Christ's body to be removed by death, in order to enter into the true sanctuary, heaven, and open the way to all Christians.'

22 [k] προσερχώμεθα μετὰ ἀληθινῆς καρδίας ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστεως, ἐῤῥαντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς, 23 [l] καὶ λελουμένοι τὸ σῶμα ὕδατι καθαρῷ· κατέχωμεν τὴν ὁμολογίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος ἀκλινῆ· (πιστὸς γὰρ ὁ ἐπαγγειλάμε-24 νος·) καὶ κατανοῶμεν ἀλλήλους εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης 25 καὶ καλῶν ἔργων· [m] μὴ ἐγκαταλείποντες τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν k Ps. 51. 6. Ezek. 36. 25. James 1. 16. 1 John 3. 21. Eph. 3. 12.

l 1 Cor. 1. 9. 1 Thess. 5. 24. supra 4. 14.
m Rom. 13. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9, 11, 14.

21. τ. οἶκον τ. Θεοῦ.] Meaning, it would seem, the true sanctuary, heaven (for that there is here an allusion to the Jewish Holy of holies, is plain from the words παῤῥησίαν, προσερχώμεθα, and ἐῤῥαντισμένοι), though the expression may also denote, in an under sense, 'the spiritual house or family of God on earth, namely, Christ's holy Catholic Church.' So 1 Tim. iii. 15, ἵνα εἰδῇς πῶς δεῖ ἐν οἴκῳ Θεοῦ ζῶντος ἀναστρέφεσθαι, and supra iii. 6, οὗ οἶκός ἐσμεν ἡμεῖς.

22. προσερχώμεθα] 'let us approach in prayer.' Comp. iv. 16. vii. 19. Ἀληθ. καρδίας is best explained 'a faithful and true disposition of heart.' So Is. xxxviii. 3, ἐπορεύθην ἐνώπιόν σου μετ' ἀληθείας, ἐν καρδίᾳ ἀληθινῇ. See also 2 Kings xx. 3, ἐν πληροφορίᾳ πίστ., 'with a fully assured faith,' such as to exclude any approach to apostasy. I would compare Dionys. Hal. p. 729. 21. Sylb., δόξα ἰσχυρὰ, καὶ οὐ πολὺ ἀπέχουσα πίστις εἶναι. See supra vi. 11. Col. ii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 5. Ἐῤῥαντ. and λελουμένοι are terms belonging to the Temple-service; and the rites to which they allude, had a reference respectively to expiation and to moral purity. See ix. 13. There is here, however, a more particular allusion,—namely, as Kuinoel suggests, to what is said at Exod. xxix. 21, and Levit. ix. 2. 20, of the vests of Aaron and his sons being sprinkled with blood, in order to their being allowed to enter the Sanctuary. May we not, therefore, suppose that when the High Priest entered the Sanctuary, he entered not only with blood, but also having his robes sprinkled with blood? The words ἐῤῥαντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συν. πον. (with which compare 1 Pet. i. 2, ῥαντισμὸν αἵματος Ἰ. Χριστοῦ) may be rendered 'sprinkled, as to our hearts, from an evil conscience,' i. e. (laying aside the metaphor, on which see Note at ix. 13, 14,) 'cleansed and freed from whatever dispositions corrupt the conscience, and defile the heart.' With the expression συνειδ. πον. I would compare Joseph. Ant. i. 1. 4, ἐπὶ συνειδότι πονηρῷ.

23. λελουμένοι, &c.] The expression here turns wholly on a comparison with the legal rite of washing for purification; and there is here an allusion to baptism, as also in the foregoing expression we have a parallel with a Jewish rite. The Jews (says Prof. Stuart) 'were sprinkled with blood, in order that they might be purified, so as to have access to God: Christians are internally sprinkled, i. e. purified by the blood of Jesus. The Jews were washed with water, in order to be ceremonially purified, so as to come before God: Christians have been washed by the purifying water of baptism.'

— τὴν ὁμολογίαν τῆς ἐλπ.] One would rather have expected ὁμολ. τῆς πίστεως; but the phrase, as it stands, admits of a very satisfactory explanation. It is not necessary to resolve it (with most recent Commentators) into a mere periphrasis for the Christian religion. We may regard it as a brief form of expression, of which the full sense intended is, 'Let us abide by the faith we profess, and cling to the hope which it ministers,' or the hope of salvation which we then professed. Compare supra iv. 14. There may, too, be an allusion to the confession in baptism. Ἀκλινῆ, 'firm and unwavering.' So Lucian (cited by Wetstein) has ἀκλινῆ τὴν ψυχήν.

— πιστὸς γὰρ ὁ ἐπαγγειλάμενος, &c.] Meaning, '[And this we may well do;] for God will surely keep his promises, of all needful present support and future salvation; and therefore we may well perform our engagements.'

24. κατανοῶμεν ἀλλήλους, &c.] Of this expression the exact sense has been disputed. The interpretation of some, 'let us take care of,' proceeds on a signification of the word unauthorized. And as to that proposed by others, 'let us consider, bear in mind,' namely, by showing a mutual concern for each other, it is one not sufficiently authorized by the usus loquendi, nor indeed quite agreeable to the context. It would seem that as the Apostle has just been exhorting to a sincere and lively faith, so here he intends to subjoin an admonition to those good works, which are the surest proof of its sincerity, and the fairest fruits of its efficacy (see Gal. v. 6, and Tit. iii. 7), and especially to that important branch of them which consists in works of benevolence; 'for charity (as Dr. Is. Barrow says) being the main point of our religion, and beneficence the chief point of charity, it may well be ranked so high in the divine heraldry of Scripture.' See more in the Note on James ii. 16, 17. Or the same sense will arise, if, with Dr. A. Clarke, and others, we explain, 'Let us excite each other to an increase in love to God and man, and, as a proof of it, to be fruitful in good works; for as the great proof of love to God is obedience to his law, so the great proof of love to man is actually doing him good.' Be that as it may, the admonition is so expressed as to advert to a certain principle, which might be serviceable towards producing and maintaining these good works,—that of mutual emulation, and the sense of acting under the eyes of each other, as well as of God. Accordingly the sense seems best represented by the Pesch. Syr., Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Theodoret, among the ancient Commentators, and Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Estius, Menochius, Wolf, Carpzov., and Kuin., among the modern ones, who take καταν. ἀλλ. to mean, 'let us keep our observation attentively fixed on each other.' So infra xii. 15, we have ἐπισκοποῦντες μή τις ὑστερῶν, &c. How great an incitement to virtue would arise from acting as each in the presence of others, both on the principle of emulation, and that of fear, is obvious. See Thucyd. i. 84. 13. Comp. xii. 1.

25. μὴ ἐγκαταλείποντες τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν ἑαυτῶν.] Meaning, 'not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together in public worship,' either, as Mr. Wesley says, 'from a fear of persecution, or from a vain imagination that they were ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς ἔθος τισὶν, ἀλλὰ παρακαλοῦντες· καὶ τοσούτῳ μᾶλλον ὅσῳ βλέπετε ἐγγίζουσαν τὴν ἡμέραν. [n] Ἑκουσίως 26 γὰρ ἁμαρτανόντων ἡμῶν μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας, οὐκ ἔτι περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἀπολείπεται θυσία· [o] φοβερὰ δέ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως, καὶ πυρὸς ζῆλος ἐσθίειν 27 μέλλοντος τοὺς ὑπεναντίους. [p] Ἀθετήσας τὶς νόμον Μωϋσέως 28 χωρὶς οἰκτιρμῶν, ἐπὶ δυσὶν ἢ τρισὶ μάρτυσιν, ἀποθνήσκει· n Num. 15. 30. supra 6. 4. 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21. 1 John 5. 16.

o Ezek. 36. 5. Zeph. 1. 18. & 3. 8. p Supra 2. 2. Num. 15. 30. Deut. 17. 6. & 19. 15. Matt. 18. 16. John 8. 17. 2 Cor. 13. 1.

above external ordinances.' Several eminent Expositors, indeed, take τὴν ἐπισυναγωγὴν to mean, 'the society of Christians,' regarding the admonition as directed against apostasy: a view which has something to countenance it in the context, yet not sufficient to establish it, especially as there is so much more of aptness in the above sense, assigned by almost all the ancient and the best modern Expositors. The word ἐπισυναγωγὴ is indeed rare, only occurring elsewhere in the New Test. at 1 Thess. ii. 1; but it is found at 2 Macc. ii. 7, in the sense religious assembly, and was here employed in preference to συναγωγὴ, by way of distinction from the Jewish religious meetings. See Bengel.

Here, then, it would seem that, as one principal means of maintaining their faith, hope, and charity, and by a wholesome emulation counteracting that sluggishness with which he charges them at ver. 11, the Apostle enjoins a regular attendance on the various assemblies for divine worship, whether in the public congregation, or in their more private meetings held for social worship. How indispensable this was to the producing the above ends, and how the neglect of this duty would tend to apostasy itself, it is scarcely necessary to observe; nor are we justified in seeking to diminish the force of the implied admonition, by adverting to the peculiar circumstances in which the Hebrew Christians were placed, and the temptation to which it appears they were of themselves too prone,—apostasy, or, at least, backsliding. The importance, and even necessity of the duty of Christians assembling themselves together at stated times is such as exists in every age.

— παρακαλοῦντες.] Supply ἑαυτοὺς, which word is expressed at iii. 13, παρακ. ἑαυτοὺς—ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῇ τις ἐξ ὑμῶν. By παρακ. is meant 'exhorting each other to constancy in the performance of the above and all other religious duties;' there being here, it would seem, a reference to that especial benefit resulting from these meetings, as they were then carried on,—namely, the mutually teaching and exhorting or admonishing each other. And so, I find, Hyperius, in his explanation of παρακαλοῦντες, unites the idea of teaching. Indeed, that the two ideas are conjoint, is plain from 1 Tim. vi. 2, ταῦτα δίδασκε καὶ παρακάλει.

— τὴν ἡμέραν.] The full sense is, 'and so much the rather ought ye to mutually exhort and excite each other to the performance of all good works, inasmuch as ye see the day approaching.' What day is here to be understood, whether the day, or time, of the destruction of Jerusalem, or the day of judgment, is disputed. Most modern Commentators adopt the former interpretation, which is ably maintained by Prof. Stuart; but though it be true that the day of God's judgments on the unbelieving or apostatizing Jews, in that catastrophe, would be a seasonable deliverance of Christians from their persecutions, yet that was not, I think, intended to be made the prominent idea: and when we consider that the expression the day, or that day, is almost always in the New Test. used of the day of judgment, I prefer, with the ancient and several eminent modern Commentators, as Calvin, Hyperius, Wolf, Bp. Fell, and Newcome, to take it of the advent of Christ to judgment. See 1 Thess. v. 2. 4. Doubtless the Hebrew Christians united in their minds these two great events, the second advent of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the world, called ἡ συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων. And so it is said, 1 Pet. iv. 7, πάντων δὲ τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε· σωφρονήσατε οὖν, &c. Hence both the above senses might here be intended,—the latter as founded on the former.

26, 27. Here is suggested a reason why they should beware of whatever tended to apostasy,—namely, that if, after having acknowledged and embraced the truth, they slide back into error, and deliberately apostatize, there would be no hope of pardon and acceptance, but their case would be desperate.

26. μετὰ τὸ λαβεῖν τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν τῆς ἀληθείας.] A phrase nearly equivalent to that supra vi. 4, φωτισθῆναι, but a more expressive one, as being compounded of two phrases.

— οὐκ ἔτι περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, &c.] 'there is no other mode of expiation provided;' and since God will not pardon sin without some satisfaction (else the argument here would be inconclusive), it follows that nought can remain to apostates but a horribly fearful expectation of future judgment unto perdition, strongly alluded to in the awful expression πυρὸς ζῆλος, denoting the fiery anger of God, often thus designated in the Old Test. See Ps. xxi. 9. Mal. iv. 1. infra xii. 29, and we may compare the terms διάπυρος and αἴθων in the Greek Classical writers. See Blomfield on Æschyl. Agam. 444.

27. φοβερὰ δέ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσ.] With this expression φοβ. ἐκδοχὴ I would compare that of Thucyd. vii. 61, ἐλπίδα τοῦ φόβου. Τις has here great emphasis, being intensive of the force of the adjective, as in Eurip. ap. Stobæum, p. 173. 11, δεινή τις ὀργή.

28, 29. Here is an argumentum à minori ad majus, to show the heavy wrath, which hangs over apostates, when even Moses' law punished such defection most severely.

28. νόμον Μ.] Evidently meaning the ceremonial law, for a wilful violation of which no persons whatever were exempted from punishment.

29. πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρονος, &c.] These words

29 [q] πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρονος ἀξιωθήσεται τιμωρίας ὁ τὸν Υἱὸν q 1 Cor. 11. 29.
τοῦ Θεοῦ καταπατήσας, καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης κοινὸν ἡγησάμενος ἐν ᾧ ἡγιάσθη, καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυ-30 βρίσας; [r] Οἴδαμεν γὰρ τὸν εἰπόντα· Ἐμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, ἐγὼ r Deut. 32. 35, 36. Rom. 12. 19.
ἀνταποδώσω, [λέγει Κύριος·] καὶ πάλιν· Κύριος κρι-31 νεῖ τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ. φοβερὸν τὸ ἐμπεσεῖν εἰς χεῖρας 32 Θεοῦ ζῶντος. [s] Ἀναμιμνήσκεσθε δὲ τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας, s Gal. 3. 4. Phil. 1. 29, 30. Col. 2. 1.
ἐν αἷς φωτισθέντες πολλὴν ἄθλησιν ὑπεμείνατε παθημάτων· 33 [t] τοῦτο μὲν, ὀνειδισμοῖς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι· τοῦτο t Phil. 1. 7. & 4. 14.

are meant to place in a strong light the guilt of apostates. The expression δοκεῖτε has great energy; and ἀξιωθήσεται no little elegance. Καταπατεῖν, like the Latin conculcare, is a term denoting generally the utmost contempt and insult; in the present case, by representing Jesus, with the Jews, as an impostor.

— καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης, &c.] Render, 'and who regards the blood of the covenant (i. e. the blood of Christ shed to ratify the new covenant) wherewith he was sanctified (i. e. cleansed from his sins, and set apart to the service of God) as a thing common and ordinary, no more than that of a man (and that an impostor), and consequently having no expiatory efficacy.'

— καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβ.] Render, 'and hath treated with contumely the Spirit of grace;' i. e. the Holy Spirit, the bestower of grace; viz., by resisting His holy influences, which would have preserved him from apostasy. Thus, supra vi. 4, the persons in question are described as once μέτοχοι Πνεύματος ἁγίου. Many recent foreign Commentators, indeed, attempt to lower the sense to 'the mercies of the Gospel;' but it has been convincingly shown by Bp. Middleton that this version is wholly inadmissible. 'Attributes (he observes) are frequently expressed in the ancient Oriental tongues and scriptural phraseology, not, as with us, by means of adjectives, but by the genitives of the names of attributes, made to depend on the noun to which the attribute belongs. The Holy Spirit is continually named in the Syr. Version the Spirit of holiness; the gracious throne, a title of the Almighty, is in this Epistle, iv. 16, ὁ θρόνος τῆς χάριτος; and the all-gracious God is in 1 Peter, v. 10, ὁ Θεὸς πάσης χάριτος; and here τὸ Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος, the gracious Spirit, i. e. the Holy Ghost.' And this interpretation exactly suits the context: that the writer should in the same verse speak of 'trampling on the Son of God,' and of 'insulting the gracious Spirit,' will seem very intelligible and natural to those who admit the personality of the Holy Ghost; and they who do not, ought at least to show that ἐνυβρίζειν in Greek has for its object things, and even qualities; and that to 'insult the mercies of the Gospel' is tolerable sense. Thus, then, to insult the Holy Spirit is to reject his holy influences with disdain, to deny their reality, or, it may be, ascribe them to demoniacal agency,—the sin against the Holy Ghost.

30, 31. This solemn warning the Apostle follows up by adducing two passages from Scripture, showing the tremendous nature of the punishment threatened; applying to apostates what was originally said of the idolatrous Gentiles. To give greater force to the words, he has employed, in the place of the usual formula of citation, a mode of expression adapted to suggest the acknowledged greatness of the Speaker (i. e. God by Moses), in His attributes of infinite power, justice, and truth; see vv. 31. 37. The first passage is from Deut. xxxii. 35; but the words quoted do not entirely agree either with the Sept. or the Hebrew; though the sense is faithfully represented; and probably some copies of the Sept. so read in the time of St. Paul. The words λέγει Κύριος, not found in some MSS. and Versions, are, with some reason, rejected by several Critics. The second passage is taken from Deut. xxxii. 36, though found also in Psalm cxxxv. 14. The term κρινεῖ is by some explained 'will avenge.' But though that sense seems very suitable to the passage of Deut. the context in the Apostle seems to require that assigned by many eminent Commentators, 'will condemn and punish his [apostatizing] people;' of course, by an accommodation of the sense of the original.

31. φοβερὸν τὸ ἐμπεσεῖν, &c.] The term φοβ. here answers to the Latin horribile. The expression ἐμπίπτειν εἰς χεῖρά τινος, denotes to fall into any one's power for evil, as revenge or punishment. The epithet ζῶντος may refer either to the eternity or the omnipotence of God, or may allude to both, in order to show how utterly hopeless is the condition of his enemies.

32. To the influence of threatenings is now subjoined the argument of self-interest. They are reminded of the supports that had been provided for them under the trials they had experienced in the former days of their Christian profession; and it is intimated that, as to what they had suffered, and renounced for Christ, the sacrifices would be lost if they should now give way and apostatize. The best comment on this passage is a very similar sentiment at Gal. iii. 3, 4.

— τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας.] Πρότερον is here, as often in Thucydides, used adjectively. On the term φωτισθέντες see Note at vi. 5. Ἄθλησιν παθημάτων. Render, 'a great conflict or struggle with afflictions:' an agonistic metaphor. The nature of these sufferings is indicated in the two verses following.

33. ὀνειδισμοῖς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι.] A mode of expression suggested by the foregoing agonistic metaphor, of which the sense is, 'being exposed to open and public insult,' as criminals in a theatre, exposed to the gaze of the assembled multitude, who to cruelty often added contumely. So Tacitus, Annal. xv. 'pereuntibus u Matt. 5. 12. & 6. 20. & 19. 21. Lu. 12. 33. Acts 5. 41. & 21. 33. 1 Thess. 2. 14. 1 Tim. 6. 19. James 1. 2. x Matt. 10. 32.

y Luke 21. 19.
z Hab. 2. 3, 4. Hag. 2. 7. Luke 18. 8. Rom. 1. 17. Gal. 3. 11. 1 Pet. 1. 6. & 5. 10. 2 Pet. 3. 8.

δὲ, κοινωνοὶ τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρεφομένων γενηθέντες. [u] καὶ 34 γὰρ τοῖς ‡ δεσμοῖς [μου] συνεπαθήσατε, καὶ τὴν ἁρπαγὴν τῶν ὑπαρχόντων ὑμῶν μετὰ χαρᾶς προσεδέξασθε, γινώ-σκοντες ἔχειν [ἐν] ἑαυτοῖς κρείττονα ὕπαρξιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ μένουσαν. [x] Μὴ ἀποβάλητε οὖν τὴν παῤῥησίαν ὑμῶν, 35 ἥτις ἔχει μισθαποδοσίαν μεγάλην· [y] ὑπομονῆς γὰρ ἔχετε 36 χρείαν, ἵνα τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιήσαντες κομίσησθε τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν. [z] Ἔτι γὰρ μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον ὁ ἐρχόμενος 37 addita ludibria.' The best comment on the present passage is one of 1 Cor. iv. 9.

— τοῦτο μὲν—τοῦτο δέ.] Of these partitive formulas, examples are frequent in the best writers. Render, 'partly while ye were made partakers with those who were so circumstanced;' namely, by sympathizing with, and, as it were, participating in their afflictions, by assisting them in their distress.

34. καὶ γὰρ τοῖς δεσμοῖς, &c.] The words of this verse are illustrative of both the above sorts of suffering,—that personally, and that by sympathy and mental participation (as members of the same body); only they are taken in inverse order, per Chiasmum. The sense is, 'Ye had, for instance, sympathy with, and succoured me in my bonds.' To this same principle of sympathy, which makes us, as it were, participators in the evils of our friends, the Apostle has another allusion at xiii. 3, μιμνήσκεσθε τῶν δεσμίων, ὡς συνδεδεμένοι.

Here, indeed, a difference of opinion exists as to the reading. Instead of the lect. recepta δεσμοῖς μου, 11 MSS. and several Versions have δεσμίοις, which was preferred by Grotius, Hammond, Le Clerc, Mill, Bengel, Wetstein, and others, and has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Schott, and Scholz. The former, however, is ably defended by Heinsius, Capellus, Wolf, Carpzovius, Michaelis, Noess., Matthæi, Macknight, Schleusner, Bp. Jebb, and Rinck; and has been retained by Tittman and Vater; and, I think, rightly; since the external evidence for it is very greatly superior, and the internal not inferior. The recent Critics, I suspect, have been chiefly induced to reject the common reading from the opinion of Valcknaer that it is not good Greek; but as it has been shown by Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit. p. 354, Valcknaer's testimony is negatived by his own admission supra iv. 15, συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις, that 'it might be used by the best Greek writers.' And such was the opinion of H. Stephens and Wetstein. That συμπ. can be, and is, used of things, even by the writer of this Epistle, is plain from the above passage, and from a passage of Isocrates, adduced by Bp. Jebb, very similar to the one before us: ὥστε καὶ ταῖς μικραῖς ἀτυχίαις ἕκαστος ἡμῶν πολλοὺς εἶχε συμπαθήσαντας, 'so that each of us had many to sympathize even with our small mischances.' 'Now (says he) since it is unquestionably pure Greek to say συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀτυχίαις, where can be the solecism in saying τοῖς δεσμοῖς συμπαθῆσαι? These phrases, indeed, may be elliptical: δεσμοῖς μου συνεπαθήσατε [μοι]. συμπαθῆσαι [ἡμῖν] ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν. ἀτυχίαις ἡμῶν συμπαθήσαντας [ἡμῖν].' The ellipsis, however, extends even further than this. The complete phrase is συνεπ. μοι ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου; and, in the process of abbreviating it, there is an hypallage. So also in Phil. iv. 14, συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τῇ θλίψει, there is a similar hypallage for συγκ. μοι ἐν τῇ θλίψει μου. Besides, as Wolf and Rinck observe, the correctness of the common reading is strongly attested by the καὶ (even), which, with δεσμίοις, would be unnecessary.

— προσεδέξασθε] 'endured:' a signification found in the Sept., but not in the Classical writers. Ὕπαρξιν, 'wealth, or property:' a signification confined to the later writers. Ἐν, not found in many MSS. and Versions, and almost all the early Editions, has been, with reason, cancelled by Wetstein, Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, and Scholz. It probably arose from the Grammatici, who did not perceive that ἑαυτοῖς is a Dativus commodi.

35. μὴ ἀποβάλητε τ. π. ὑ.] 'Abandon not, then, this your confident hope,' namely, the παῤῥησίαν spoken of supra v. 19; implying, as Wesley suggests, that none could deprive them of it but themselves.

— μισθαποδοσίαν.] The word signifies literally 'full payment of wages,' and hence 'recompense;' also, requital, whether for good or evil. It is a later Grecism for μισθοδοσία, which occurs in Thucydides, viii. 83.

36. ὑπομονῆς γὰρ ἔχετε χρείαν, &c.] Well is it said, 'Ye have need of patience;' for, 1. we live here in a vale of misery, where we meet with a thousand petty crosses and vexations in the common road of our lives, which we have need of patience to digest; 2. we are beset, surrounded with a world of temptations, assaulting us within and without, which we have need of patience to withstand; 3. we are exposed to manifold injuries, obloquies, and sufferings, which we have need of patience to bear; 4. we have many precious promises made us in the word of grace, of glory, and of outward things; of some of which we find as yet but slender performance, and of others no visible probability of their future performance; these we have need of patience to expect: 5. we have many duties required of us in our Christian callings, and in our particular vocations (for the honour of God, and the service of our brethren), which we have need of patience to go through. (Bp. Sanderson.)

37, 38. Here a remarkable discrepancy exists between the Hebrew and the Sept. and the Apostle; for while the Apostle's words agree with the Sept., except in the transposition of the two clauses of the latter verse, for better adaptation to his purpose, they both vary considerably from the Hebrew. The words ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἥξει καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ follow the Septuagint, except in adding ὁ to ἐρχόμενος, which, however, it is not improbable, was anciently in the Septuagint text, since otherwise the Framers of that Version would probably have written τὸ ἐρχόμενον; i. e. the prediction. At verse 38 the discrepancy seems very great between the Septuagint and the Hebrew; yet it is, I think, better not to ascribe that (as is done by most Critics) to corruption in the Hebrew text; for it has been shown by Pocock that the Septuagint may very well be reconciled with the present text, there being a change of person to make the sense plainer. It may, however, be thought, with Grotius and others, that the LXX. read עלפה and נכשי instead of עפלה and נפשי. The μου of the Sept., where, according to the Hebrew, it should have been αὐτοῦ, may be accounted for on the same principle as that above mentioned. It would seem, however, that the writer did not adopt the μου; for though it is found in two of the most ancient MSS. and some Versions, yet it seems to have been introduced from the Sept., where it was meant to be taken for εἰς ἐμέ. In the two other places of the New Test. where this passage is quoted (namely, Rom. i. 17, and Gal. iii. 11), the μου is not found.

38 ἥξει καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ. Ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται· καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχή

37. μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον.] A phrase used by the best writers, to denote (according to our own idiom) 'a very little while,' 'a very short time.' In ὁ ἐρχόμενος we have an usual designation of the Messiah. This coming is to be understood of the advent of Christ to destroy Jerusalem, and put an end to the Jewish state.

38. ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.] Here are suggested the means by which the just shall attain this life; namely, by his persevering and enduring faith and reliance on God; of which the Apostle soon after takes occasion to illustrate the nature, and exemplify the efficacy, by reference to the worthies of the Old Testament.

— καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, &c.] Here it has been not a little disputed what is the subject of the verb ὑποστείληται. Almost all Commentators, from the time of Beza and Grotius, have thought it to be τις; while the ancient and earlier modern Commentators, and a few after their time, as Bp. Pearson (Parænesis prefixed to Sept.), Macknight, Whitby, Abp. Newcome, Dr. A. Clarke, and Professor Turton (in his Text of the English Bible, p. 89), refer it to the just man before mentioned. Of course, the advocates for the doctrine of Final Perseverance adopt the former mode; the opponents of that doctrine the latter; according to which Whitby shows that the doctrine in question is utterly untenable. 'The words (says he) plainly suppose that the "just man," who "liveth" by "that faith," in which, if he persisted, he would "save his soul," may "draw back unto perdition." And this is also evident from the expression, "My soul shall have no pleasure in him;" for they plainly intimate that God took pleasure in him before his drawing back; for otherwise this threat would signify nothing, the Lord taking pleasure in none but "just" men only, and such as "live by faith."' The question, however, is, which of the two above-mentioned modes of reference should here be adopted, and in order thereto, whether there can be any principle which may suffice to decide a point of such importance. Now here Professor Turton, at pp. 78—86 of his Text of the English Bible, comes opportunely to our aid in the following able remarks: 'The Apostle (says he) exhorting those whom he is addressing to stedfastness in the faith, employs, with some variation, the words of the Septuagint Version of Hab. ii. 4, which may be rendered, "If a man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him; but the just shall live by faith." In this rendering, the words "a man," or "any man," are more than the Greek contains, and are introduced because there is, in the Greek, no reference to any individual before mentioned; but it suited the Apostle's argument to invert the order of the clauses. Indeed, if the latter clause, as used by the Apostle, had stood first in the Prophet, and from its position had had a more general application, there would have been some difficulty in conceiving how any other version than the one now given could ever have been thought of. That the bearing and import of words are frequently changed by their position, is known to all who know any thing of the nature of language; and thus the inquiry is reduced to this,—whether, for the purpose of confirming the faith of the Hebrew converts, the Apostle used a sentence, the signification of which should be determined by its own obvious construction, or by what might happen to be recollected of its form when used by a Prophet, who here seems rather to be referred to than quoted. This point the reader shall decide for himself. As to the light in which this passage appeared to the older Commentators, Erasmus manifestly did not contemplate the introduction of quis, "any man." Zeger explained the drawing back with reference to the just man [as did also that consummate theologian, Hyperius; and without any hesitation; see his able examination of the sense. Edit.]. J. Capellus and Grotius examined the Septuagint Version of Habakkuk; and finding τις to be understood there, seemed to think that it must be understood in Hebr. x. 38 likewise. Beza, the great authority for the rendering "but if any man draw back," described the Apostle as inverting the clauses of the sentence, but retaining the Prophet's meaning; and this, so far as I can perceive, is his ostensible reason for introducing τις. That, by this rendering, another version was avoided, by no means agreeable to Beza's Theological opinions, there can be no doubt. From Bp. Pearson's Præf. ad Paræn. we learn that, in his opinion, the inverted order of the clauses, adopted by the Apostle, at once gave to the verb "draw back" a nominative case "he," the just man, (which also was the opinion of Theophylact,) and that when Beza translated, "But the just shall live by faith; but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in it;" his two methods of excluding the "just man" from being the subject of the latter clause—1. by introducing the words "any man;" and, 2. by transferring God's displeasure from the person who draws back (him) to the act of withdrawing (it)—indicate either a want of good faith or an undue concession to theological opinions.'

μου ἐν αὐτῷ. Ἡμεῖς δὲ οὐκ ἐσμὲν ὑποστολῆς εἰς ἀπώ- 39
λειαν, ἀλλὰ πίστεως εἰς περιποίησιν ψυχῆς.

a Rom. 8. 24, 25. 2 Cor. 4. 18. b Gen. 1. 1. Psal. 33. 6. Rom. 4. 17. 2 Pet. 3. 5.

XI. [a] ἜΣΤΙ δὲ πίστις ἐλπιζομένων ὑπόστασις, πραγ- 1 μάτων ἔλεγχος οὐ βλεπομένων. ἐν ταύτῃ γὰρ ἐμαρτυρή- 2 θησαν οἱ πρεσβύτεροι. [b] Πίστει νοοῦμεν κατηρτίσθαι τοὺς 3 αἰῶνας ῥήματι Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐκ φαινομένων τὰ βλεπό-

And although Bp. Middleton on John viii. 14 seems to be of opinion that τις is here to be supplied, yet, as Prof. Turton observes, 'he was in quest of passages in which τις must from necessity be supplied; and it does not appear that he had made himself acquainted with the peculiar circumstances of Heb. x. 38.' I would further observe, that the learned Prelate would be the more induced to receive this proof without too severe examination, as to whether the τις must here be supplied, because he was in great straits to adduce any one unexceptionable example in the New Test. The reader will now be enabled to determine whether the τις should be introduced or not. In the former case he must suppose that when the Apostle inverted the order of the clauses in the Sept., he intended that the verb ὑποστείληται should carry its indefinite nominative case along with it; in the latter he will do so because the passage, as it is read in the Epistle, is perfectly clear without it: and assuredly the common laws of interpretation are decidedly in favour of the latter. I would further observe, that the censure here applied by Bp. Pearson and Prof. Turton to Beza should also be applied, in some measure, to Calvin, who has on this occasion evinced not a little disingenuousness; for though he did not venture on the change introduced by Beza, yet he strove to suppress the sense naturally resulting from the words, by rendering ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, 'si subductus fuerit;' though such is evidently at variance with the usus loquendi both of the Classical and the Scriptural writers. Thus in the Septuagint the term always carries with it the idea of fear; and so in Joseph. Ant. ii. 5. 5, and vi. 5. 5, we have φόβῳ added, to make the sense stronger. In the Bell. Jud., i. 20. 1, it is used without φόβῳ thus: οὐδὲ τοῦτο ἂν ὑπεστειλάμην εἰπεῖν. In short, the term in question implies a desertion of one's pledged faith, by a metaphor derived from the case of a soldier who deserts his post, by shrinking back from danger: which, moreover, seems to have been had in view by St. John, Revel. xxi. 8, where he speaks of 'the fearful and unbelieving' (τοῖς δειλοῖς καὶ ἀπίστοις), 'for whom is reserved the second death.'

39. Here the ensuing discourse on faith is well introduced by what may be considered the connecting link of an indirect exhortation to it; q. d. 'But we [I trust] are not of the number of,' &c. On the terms ὑποστέλλεσθαι and ὑποστολὴ see Note at Acts xx. 20.

— εἰς ἀπώλειαν.] Εἰς here indicates result or event. Περιποίησις, being here opposed to ἀπώλεια, must mean, not possession (as some explain), but preservation (i. e. salvation): a sense of the word found in 2 Chron. xiv. 13, and Test. xii. Patr. p. 633, ἵνα γένηται περιποίησις τῷ Ἰωσήφ.

XI. Having mentioned faith as a peculiar characteristic of those who persevere to the end in Christian religion, the Apostle now proceeds to make his appeal to the Old Test., in order to show that such faith, or confidence in the Divine promises, has, in all ages, been the means of such perseverance. (Stuart.) Here, then, to lead them to patient and persevering endurance, the Apostle shows that the very nature of faith and the character of believers demand this. In order to which, he first describes the nature, and then illustrates the efficacy of religious faith; proving, by Scriptural examples, that it had always been the grand characteristic of God's faithful servants from the beginning of the world.

1. ἔστι δὲ πίστις—βλεπομένων.] Ὑπόστασις is best explained, not by substance (the sense generally assigned), but, as the best Expositors are agreed, firm persuasion, as supra iii. 14. 2 Cor. ix. 4. xi. 17. The Pesch. Syr. Translator well expresses the general sense thus: 'Est autem fides persuasio de rebus illis quæ sunt in spe, ac si jam essent actu.'

— ἔλεγχος.] The term is by some explained evidence; by others, conviction (i. e. the conviction of that which cannot be demonstrated to the senses); by others, again, firm persuasion. All which senses, indeed, merge into each other; conviction being the result of satisfactory moral evidence of any fact, and that naturally producing firm persuasion. Thus, then, faith is both a disposition and a principle.

From the Apostle's definition, and the illustrations by example which he subjoins, it is plain,—as the best Expositors are agreed,—that the faith here meant is not specifically faith in Christ, but faith in the genus (from which the species, a Gospel-faith, proceeds), i. e. a firm belief and unshaken confidence in the promises and declarations of God. The faith here spoken of is (as Abp. Magee, Prof. Stuart, and others observe) 'that firm belief in God's declarations, which, whether exercised by believing in the Scriptural account of the creation, or in respect to specific objects, or by believing on the Messiah, yet is the same disposition of mind in all cases, whereby we believe such things on the testimony of God as firmly as if they were set before us by the evidence of our senses.'

2. The γὰρ serves to show the proof; q. d. '[This is the very nature of faith,] for by the possession of this disposition the ancient worthies were approved unto [God and man],' &c.

3. πίστει—Θεοῦ.] The Apostle now proves, by reference to the creation of the world, that faith regards even things long past, and which do not strike the senses. (Kuinoel.) Here several Expositors connect μὴ with φαινομένων, assigning as the sense 'ita ut ex iis quæ non essent, ea quæ sunt existerent,' as in 2 Macc. vii. 28, οὐκ ἐξ ὄντων ἐποίησεν αὐτὰ (i. e. the universe); but its natural construction is rather with γεγονέναι: and from this there is no reason to depart, since the same sentiment will either way προσήνεγκε τῷ Θεῷ, δι' ἧς ἐμαρτυρήθη εἶναι δίκαιος, μαρ- Matt. 23. 35. infra 12. 24.

4 μενα γεγονέναι. [c] Πίστει πλείονα θυσίαν Ἄβελ παρὰ Κάϊν c Gen. 4. 4, 10.
τυροῦντος ἐπὶ τοῖς δώροις αὐτοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ· καὶ δι' αὐτῆς 5 ἀποθανὼν ἔτι * λαλεῖ. [d] Πίστει Ἐνὼχ μετετέθη τοῦ μὴ d Gen. 5 24. Ecclus. 41. 16. & 49. 16. ἰδεῖν θάνατον, (καὶ οὐχ εὑρίσκετο, διότι μετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς,) πρὸ γὰρ τῆς μεταθέσεως αὐτοῦ μεμαρτύarise, and that founded on Gen. i. 1. It is meant that 'through faith we clearly apprehend, that the world we see was not made out of apparent materials, from matter which had existed from eternity, but was produced out of nothing; so that, at his fiat, the material creation was brought into existence, and formed into the things we see.' So Rom. iv. 17, Θεοῦ καλοῦντος τὰ μὴ ὄντα ὡς ὄντα, and Philo, de Creatione, τὰ μὴ ὄντα ἐκάλεσεν εἰς τὸ εἶναι. See John i. 3, and compare 2 Pet. iii. 5.

4. πίστει πλείονα—Θεῷ.] 'By virtue of faith Abel,' &c.; implying that it was his faith which made his offering more acceptable. Some, indeed, are of opinion that his offering was more acceptable as being of animals, not of the fruits of the earth; but it would seem that the offering itself was made from the superiority of his faith. Not only did Abel evince a more decided devotion to his God, by offering victims of the choice of the flock, but (as is shown by Abp. Magee on the Atonement, p. 52) there is great reason to suppose that 'his faith was especially superior, as being not directed to God alone (recognizing his existence, authority, and providence), but also to the Great Redeemer promised immediately after the fall (Gen. iii. 15), whose expiatory death was typified by animal sacrifices; by offering which Abel evinced his faith in the great sacrifice of the Redeemer prefigured by it; and thus he obtained that acceptance from God, and witnessing of his offerings, which was refused to Cain.'

— ἐμαρτ. εἶναι δίκ.] Literally, 'he was borne testimony to [by God] to be,' &c., i. e. testimony was borne by God that he was such. Δίκ. is an epithet constantly applied to Abel in the Scriptures, Philo, and Josephus. The words μαρτυρ. ἐπὶ τοῖς δώροις αὐτοῦ are explanatory of the preceding. Ἐπὶ here signifies respecting, as at viii. 1. Μαρτ., 'bearing his [approving] testimony.' The nature of the term and the language of Scripture (Gen. iv. 10) point at some visible token of approbation, though what that was we are not told in the Old Test. But the Jewish Expositors and the most eminent Christian Commentators are agreed that it was signified by fire from heaven consuming Abel's victims, while Cain's fruits of the ground remained untouched. How ancient this opinion is, appears from the circumstance being inserted by Theodotion in the words of his Version of Gen. iv. 4, where, instead of ἐπεῖδεν, we have ἐπεῖδεν καὶ ἐνεπύρισεν. For the latter words were doubtless an insertion, though probably not made by Theodotion without authority, however it might originate from tradition only.

— καὶ δι' αὐτῆς ἀποθανὼν ἔτι λαλεῖ.] Of these words the sense depends upon the reading, which is disputed. Instead of the Vulg. λαλεῖται 20 MSS., most of the Versions, and many Fathers have λαλεῖ, which is preferred by Grotius, Mill, Valcknaer, Dindorf, Kuinoel, and Böhme, and edited by Bengel, Griesbach, Knapp, Schott, and Scholz; while the former is retained by Wetstein, Matthæi, Vater, and Tittman. But notwithstanding all that has been urged by them in favour of the common reading, λαλεῖ is certainly preferable, not only as being the more difficult reading, but as yielding the only sense worthy of the writer; for that of 'is celebrated' were frigid, and not very appropriate, since, as Kuinoel observes, Noah, Abraham, and others had equal claim to celebrity. On the contrary, the other sense (namely, that, though dead, yet he by his faith, as it were, speaketh, bidding us follow his example, and inculcating a like faith in God as 'the rewarder of those who diligently seek him,') is highly suitable, and recommended by its simplicity and gravity. The figure by which the dead are said to speak, and admonish others by their own example, is found in the best writers, especially the Poets and Orators. So Virg. Æn. vi. 618, 'magnâ testatur voce per umbras: Discite justitiam moniti, et non temnere Divos.' Perhaps this mode of expression may have been suggested by the still bolder figure (similar to some found in the Greek tragedian Æschylus) at Gen. iv. 10, φωνὴ αἵματος τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου βοᾷ πρός με ἐκ τῆς γῆς, with which compare infra xii. 24, αἵματι ῥαντισμοῦ κρείττονα λαλοῦντι, &c.

5, 6. Abel's faith the Apostle justly infers from his having a testimony of approbation from God; since without faith it is impossible to have such approbation. To this faith the Apostle ascribes his being 'translated, so as not to experience death.' The import, however, of the words μετετέθη, &c., has been not a little disputed. Most foreign Commentators for the last half century have been of opinion that neither Moses nor the Apostle meant to say that Enoch was taken to heaven alive, but that he was removed thither by a sudden death, probably by lightning. The arguments urged are detailed and reviewed by Kuinoel, who, very properly, rejects that notion, and accedes to the opinion of the ancient and most modern Commentators, that both writers meant to represent Enoch as removed to heaven alive. Indeed the words of the Apostle, τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, admit of no other construction; and though what is here said appears to rest on the words of the Sept. (the καὶ οὐχ—Θεὸς being a citation, justificatory of what is said in the foregoing clause,) yet the expression οὐχ εὑρίσκετο, taken in conjunction with μετέθηκε, is so strong as to admit of scarcely any other interpretation: and the Hebrew terms are quite as remarkable; for, as Kuinoel observes, while Moses constantly uses the term וימת in recording the death of the other patriarchs, of Enoch alone he employs the term לקח (accurately rendered by the Sept. μετέθηκε), which is no where used of ρηται εὐηρεστηκέναι τῷ Θεῷ· χωρὶς δὲ πίστεως ἀδύνατον 6 εὐαρεστῆσαι· πιστεῦσαι γὰρ δεῖ τὸν προσερχόμενον τῷ Θεῷ, ὅτι ἐστὶ, καὶ τοῖς ἐκζητοῦσιν αὐτὸν μισθαποδότης γίνεται.

e Gen. 6 13. Ecclus. 44. 17. Rom. 3. 22. Phil. 3. 9. [e] Πίστει χρηματισθεὶς Νῶε περὶ τῶν μηδέπω βλεπομένων, 7 εὐλαβηθεὶς κατεσκεύασε κιβωτὸν εἰς σωτηρίαν τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ· δι' ἧς κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον, καὶ τῆς κατὰ πίστιν f Gen. 12. 1, 4. Acts 7. 2. δικαιοσύνης ἐγένετο κληρονόμος. [f] Πίστει καλούμενος Ἀβ- 8 removal by death, but only employed to describe the translation of Elijah. Again, οὐχ εὑρ. is a faithful version of the Hebrew ואיננו, 'and he was not,' with which Kuinoel compares 'nec deinde in terris Romulus fuit,' in Livy, i. 16. That the Septuagint Translators affixed such a sense to the words, cannot be doubted, especially as Josephus and Philo did the same. Also that the author of Ecclus., who lived at a much earlier period, so understood לקח in both the above passages, appears from chap. xlviii. and xlix. 14, where, if the term ἀνελήφθη could be thought doubtful, the context proves it to mean what we understand by translation. Such, too, has been the way in which the words have been understood by the best Jewish Interpreters from the earliest periods.

6. πιστεῦσαι γὰρ δεῖ—γίνεται.] Meaning, 'Sincere worship of God implies a firm belief in his existence and moral government, and that he will reward those who study to do his will, and, by implication, punish those who disobey it. Faith in his existence must precede worship of him. And who would worship a Being who remained an unconcerned spectator of what passes on the earth, and with whom is no retribution?' Προσέρχεσθαι in this sense, to denote divine worship, is frequent in the present Epistle, and indeed may be said to be peculiar to this Book, since it occurs no where else in the New Test. nor in the Septuagint, though something approaching to it is found in Jer. vii. 16, μὴ προσέλθῃς μοι περὶ αὐτῶν.

7. πίστει χρηματισθεὶς, &c.] 'It was by faith that Noah, being admonished by a divine revelation concerning things not yet seen, and only to be viewed by the eye of faith,' &c. By τῶν μηδέπω βλεπομένων is meant the Deluge and the events subsequent to it; the expression being used with allusion to the definition of faith at ver. 1, ἔλεγχος οὐ βλεπομένων. Εὐλαβηθεὶς is by some eminent Expositors interpreted 'metuens diluvium.' And so our common Version, 'moved with fear.' Here, however, the idea of fear seems scarcely to the purpose; and it is better, with Ernesti, Carpzov, Wakefield, Newcome, Rosenmuller, Kuinoel, and Stuart, to understand the expression to mean 'a reverential regard to the Divine commands,' as communicated by the sacred oracle. And in this sense the word occurs at Acts xxiii. 10. Finally, πίστει must (as Kuinoel shows) be referred to εὐλαβηθεὶς κατεσκεύασε (as πίστει at ver. 8 to ὑπήκουσε, not to καλούμενος).

— κατεσκεύασε κιβωτὸν] 'built an ark.' Thus obeying the Divine order, 'Make thee an ark of gopher-wood.' And when we consider the length of time it took, the immense labour it must have required, to effect the thing, we may appreciate the value of Noah's obeying in faith. The labour must have been enormous, in the then state of the arts, to build a ship, or rather a floating edifice, of the form of a parallelogram, 300 cubits long, 50 cubits broad, and 30 cubits high; far exceeding in size the largest ship of the line ever built. It was called תבה, or κιβωτὸς, (or, as Josephus terms it, λάρναξ,) with allusion to its chest-like shape, doubtless chosen as far easier to build than one of a round form, and which is even yet, in a great measure, preserved in the form of the Chinese junks.

As, then, by this wonderful occurrence, i. e. Noah's building so vast a structure, we see established the strength of his faith, so by that event connected with it, an universal Deluge—(of which the truth has been attested by all nations, 'the savage and the sage,' wherever written records have been preserved, tradition been maintained, or rites commemorative of the Deluge and the deliverance of Noah and his family by an ark been celebrated) we see established the very fact, which the Infidel denies,—the existence of a Divine Revelation; namely, that the Deity has condescended to make known his will to man; since Noah's conduct surely implies foreknowledge of the Deluge, and that could only be founded on a communication from God to man; to refuse admitting the evidence of which, must consequently expose the infidel to the same condemnation, as that by which Noah's faith condemned the unbelieving world, and expose him to the same destruction that overwhelmed them. On this whole subject see more in Mr. Taylor's Note in Calmet's Dictionary, art. Ark.

— δι' ἧς.] Several eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, refer this to κιβωτόν; q. d. 'by the building of which ark.' But it is better, with others, to refer it to πίστιν, the principal subject in view, though not the nearest antecedent.

— κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον.] Namely, 'inasmuch as any one may be said to condemn others, who, by his own deeds, shows what they ought to have done, and thus convicts them of blame for not having so done.'

— τῆς κατὰ πίστιν δικ. ἐγένετο κληρονόμος] for ἐκληρονόμησε, 'became possessed of,' &c. By the expression here, ἡ δικαιοσύνη κατὰ πίστιν, is meant 'acceptance with God, the felicity of those who are justified by faith.' See Rom. i. 17. So at Rom. iv. 9, Abraham is said to have been justified by faith, viz. in the declarations of God respecting the land of promise and the Redeemer; of whom the promise was confirmed in the renewal of the covenant made originally with Noah, to whom the doctrine of justification by faith in a Redeemer was, no doubt, made known.

ραὰμ ὑπήκουσεν ἐξελθεῖν εἰς τὸν τόπον, ὃν ἤμελλε λαμβάνειν εἰς κληρονομίαν, καὶ ἐξῆλθε μὴ ἐπιστάμενος ποῦ ἔρχεται.
9 Πίστει παρῴκησεν εἰς τὴν γῆν τῆς ἐπαγγελίας ὡς ἀλλοτρίαν, ἐν σκηναῖς κατοικήσας, μετὰ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακὼβ τῶν συγ-10 κληρονόμων τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῆς αὐτῆς· [g] ἐξεδέχετο γὰρ τὴν τοὺς θεμελίους ἔχουσαν πόλιν, ἧς τεχνίτης καὶ δημι-11 ουργὸς ὁ Θεός. [h] Πίστει καὶ αὐτὴ Σάῤῥα δύναμιν εἰς κατα-βολὴν σπέρματος ἔλαβε, καὶ παρὰ καιρὸν ἡλικίας [ἔτεκεν], 12 ἐπεὶ πιστὸν ἡγήσατο τὸν ἐπαγγειλάμενον. [i] Διὸ καὶ ἀφ᾽ ἑνὸς ἐγεννήθησαν, καὶ ταῦτα νενεκρωμένου, καθὼς τὰ ἄστρα g Supra 3. 4. infra 12. 22. & 13. 14. Rev. 21. 2.

h Gen. 17. 19. & 21. 2. Luke 1. 36. Rom. 4. 19.

i Gen. 15. 5. & 22. 17. Rom. 4. 18.

8. καλούμενος] 'being called upon, invited, bidden.' See Gen. xii. 1, compared with Acts vii. 3. At ἐξελθεῖν supply ὥστε. The words μὴ ἐπιστ. ποῦ ἔρχ. are meant to illustrate his faith, and have been wrongly supposed to mean that he was in ignorance about the land or its qualities; for that is inconsistent with Gen. xii. 1. We may regard the words as a popular mode of expression, denoting that he threw himself wholly on Divine providence.

9. παρῴκησεν εἰς τὴν γῆν] for εἰσῆλθεν εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ παρῴκησεν ἐκεῖ. Ὡς ἀλλ., for οὐκ ἰδίαν, 'as if it were a land in which he had no concern.' Παρῴκησε is for πάροικος (i. e. ἀλλογενὴς) ἦν, in opposition to ἐπιγενής. The words following, ἐν σκηναῖς κατ., are meant to prove and illustrate the preceding term παρῴκ.; designating the life of the Nomades, or rovers of the desert, in every age. Now the building of a house would have implied a property in the land; not so the setting up of a tent. In those early periods, when population was thin, even foreigners seem to have been allowed to fix tents, and bring cattle to graze, where the land was not occupied by the natives.

— μετὰ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακὼβ—αὐτῆς.] These words are to be referred to all that has preceded in the verse. Here μετὰ is meant to mark, not time, but parity of circumstances; signifying as well as, in the manner of (by a use of the word found also at Phil. iv. 3); so denoting community both of circumstances and of disposition; q. d. 'as also did Isaac and Jacob after them, to whom the same promise belonged.' Here, then, his so living is mentioned to evince his faith; q. d. 'It was by faith in the promise of God, that he was content to go and live in a foreign land, and sojourn as a foreigner there, though fully assured that it was to be the inheritance of his posterity.'

10. ἐξεδέχετο γὰρ—ὁ Θεός.] q. d. 'No wonder that he believed in God's temporal promises; for he fully expected, i. e. looked forward to,' &c. Compare Gen. xlix. 18. Ps. xl. 1. Is. xxv. 9. xxvi. 8. xxxiii. 2. Rom. viii. 19. 23. 25. Phil. iii. 20. 1 Cor. i. 7. These words, then, are meant to show the principle on which he was content so to live,—namely, that of faith (agreeably to the description at ver. 1); even the patient hope of the city which hath foundations, (as opposed to the wandering life adverted to at ver. 9,) the heavenly Jerusalem mentioned at xii. 22, and often in the Apocalypse described in glowing imagery, such as the Jews applied to the new Jerusalem, which they supposed was to descend from heaven—imagery also employed by the sacred writers, but intended to designate the new Jerusalem in heaven, i. e. heaven itself.

The expression here, θεμελίους ἔχουσαν is, of course, to be understood in a figurative sense, as equivalent to that at xiii. 14, μένουσαν, denoting a community never to be dissolved, namely, the Gospel plan of salvation, the θεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ at 2 Tim. ii. 19.

— ἧς τεχνίτης καὶ δημιουργὸς ὁ Θ.] These terms are used by way of adaptation to the foregoing metaphor, though they have in themselves a great propriety, being often in ancient writers used of God as Creator of the universe.

11. αὐτὴ Σάῤῥα.] 'Sarah herself.' Αὐτὴ is used with allusion to that which, from circumstances, seemed physically impossible, and the consequent incredulity which she had at first harboured, when the thing was announced to her, and which was even entertained by Abraham; though the reproof of the Lord and due reflection brought both to a firm belief.

— εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος.] This may be regarded, with many of the best Expositors, ancient and modern, as a brief mode of expression, simply denoting, in a popular manner, the act of conception. Some, indeed, as Ernesti, Kuinoel, &c., render it, 'for the foundation of a family,' 'in order to found a family:' a sense, however, frigid in itself, and little suited to the words following, especially if ἔτεκε be cancelled, as these Critics contend it should, and as has been done by Griesbach and Scholz; though when it is considered how very frequently the two stages, of conception and parturition, are introduced by the sacred writers, where one might have sufficed, the cancelling is ill judged; for which, indeed, there is next to no authority, and internal evidence is against it. Possibly, however, the word may not be genuine, and the writer may have meant, under the idea of conception, to be implied its consequent parturition; by a similar inartificial and popular mode of expressing the idea of conception, as that in Levit. xii. 2, 'When a woman shall conceive,' תזריע, ἐὰν σπερματισθῇ (Sept.), and Numb. v. 28 (speaking of a woman who has been tried for adultery and found pure) she shall be declared innocent, ונזרעה זרע, καὶ ἐκσπερματίσει (for ἐκσπερματισθήσεται) σπέρμα, (Sept.) where the sense, as is universally agreed, is, 'she shall conceive [and bring forth children].'

12. ἑνὸς] 'from one person [only],—namely, Abraham.' Καὶ τ. νενεκ., 'and he [as it were] τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τῷ πλήθει, καὶ * ὡς ἡ ἄμμος ἡ παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος k Gen 23. 4. & 47. 9. τῆς θαλάσσης ἡ ἀναρίθμητος. [k] Κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον 13 1 Chron. 29. 15. οὗτοι πάντες, μὴ λαβόντες τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, ἀλλὰ πόῤῥωθεν Ps. 39. 13. & 119. 19. John 8. 33. αὐτὰς ἰδόντες, [καὶ πεισθέντες] καὶ ἀσπασάμενοι, καὶ ὁμο-λογήσαντες ὅτι ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοί εἰσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.

οἱ γὰρ τοιαῦτα λέγοντες ἐμφανίζουσιν ὅτι πατρίδα ἐπιζη- 14 τοῦσι. Καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐκείνης ἐμνημόνευον ἀφ᾽ ἧς ἐξῆλθον, εἶχον 15 l Exod. 3.6. Matt. 22.32. Acts 7. 32. ἂν καιρὸν ἀνακάμψαι· [l] ‡ νυνὶ δὲ κρείττονος ὀρέγονται, τουτ- 16 dead,' namely, as to propagation. See Note on Rom. iv. 19. Ταῦτα, for τοῦτο, and that for οὗτος. The Classical writers often so use καὶ τοῦτο, (as the Latin ones do idque, 'and that;') very rarely ταῦτα, though some examples are adduced by the Commentators.

— καθὼς τὰ ἄστρα—θαλάσσης.] Oriental and popular hyperboles, though such are found also in the Western writers. So Aristoph. Lys. 1260, we have ἦν γὰρ τὤνδρες οὐκ ἐλάσσως τᾶς ψάμμας, τοὶ Πέρσαι.

Here, for the common reading ὡσεὶ ἄμμος, many ancient MSS., some Fathers, and early Editions have ὡς ἡ ἄμμος, which has been adopted by Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and justly; for propriety of language at once requires the Article (as in the passage of Aristophanes), and rejects ὡσεί. We may suppose in this, as in many other cases, η to have passed into ει.

— τὸ χεῖλος.] Meaning margin, by an idiom occurring also in the Classical writers, and found both in the Hebrew שפה and the Latin labrum.

13—16. These verses are introduced to confirm what was said at ver. 10 on the nature of the faith of the Patriarchs,—that it regarded not an earthly, but a heavenly country, the same as that which Christians expect. (Kuinoel.)

13. κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὗτοι πάντες.] Some learned Commentators interpret the promises alluded to in this chapter as temporal; and are consequently reduced to the necessity of confining the expression οὗτοι πάντες to some of the persons that had been named; or of referring it to all Abraham's descendants, of whom mention has been made in the preceding sentence. Now it is obvious, as Whitby remarks, that all the descendants of Abraham did not die in faith; and how, on the other hand, any particular individuals of those before named can be selected by an expression which comprehends all, it is not easy to discover; and if all who had been before named are referred to (as is unavoidable), then the promises cannot have been temporal, there being some to whom no temporal promises were made, as Abel and Enoch. As to the difficulty arising from the declaration, that the persons enumerated had died in faith, when it is known that Enoch did not die, but was translated; this is easily removed by considering that the stress is not laid upon the death of those believers, but upon their having retained their faith through life. (Abp. Magee.) So Chrysostom observes that the words are to be understood of those that went before, q. d. all that did die.

The words καὶ πεισθέντες, not found in most of the MSS., Versions, early Editions, and many of the Fathers, have been rejected by almost all Critics, and cancelled by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. It is plain from the Greek Commentators that the reading is a mere gloss on ἀσπασάμενοι following, of which (from the many examples adduced by Wetstein, Kypke, Loesner, and Kuin.) the sense appears to be, 'having hailed them, joyfully anticipating their fulfilment.'

— ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοί ε. ἐ. τ. γ.] Render, 'foreigners, and sojourners on earth;' i. e. in this world as compared with heaven.

14—16. The course of argument here may be thus traced: 'The Patriarchs professed themselves to be strangers, and thereby showed they were desirous of some country as a permanent abode. Now if they had sought a country in those parts, or had regarded their native or ancestral land as their true country, they might have found means to return thither. But they did not consider Canaan as their country, nor did they return to Chaldea; therefore they desired not an earthly, but a better, even a heavenly one.'

16. νυνὶ δὲ, &c.] Meaning, 'But as things now are, since they so spoke and acted, it is plain that they rested only on the promises of God respecting the possession of Canaan, as a country, by their posterity; as they did of the attainment by themselves of another country, even a heavenly.' For νυνὶ, many MSS., and some Fathers and early Editions, have νῦν, which is edited by Bengel, Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz; but without sufficient reason; for though νῦν is used in this sense in other parts of the New Test., yet νυνὶ is stronger in sense than νῦν, and is more suitable when, as here, used in antithesis, after εἰ has preceded. Thus it is found at Rom. vii. 17. Heb. vii. 6, and sometimes in the Classical writers. It is true that we have νῦν δὲ used in antithesis at 1 Cor. xiii. 13. Thucyd. iii. 43, and after εἰ at Luke xix. 42. Yet as νυνὶ occurs in antithesis supra viii. 6 without any varr. lect., I have thought proper, with Wetstein and Vater, to retain the common reading, found also in the Ed. Princ.

That heaven is man's proper country was indeed acknowledged by most of the heathen philosophers who believed in a future state. So, too, Scaliger, in his Epitaphium, says, 'Profecto vera patria viro forti cœlum est: quippe hic peregrinamur boni, mali in exilio sunt.'

— διὸ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται, &c.] 'therefore (i. e. since they had such undoubting faith in the Divine promises) God does not (i. e. did not) disdain (meaning, per meiosin, vouchsafes, see Note on ii. 11) to be called their God;' an expression implying the ideas of protection, preservation, and benefitting.

ἐστιν ἐπουρανίου. διὸ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς, Θεὸς 17 ἐπικαλεῖσθαι αὐτῶν· ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν. [m] Πίστει [m] Gen. 22. 2, &c. προσενήνοχεν Ἀβραὰμ τὸν Ἰσαὰκ πειραζόμενος· καὶ τὸν Ecclus. 44. 21.
18 μονογενῆ προσέφερεν ὁ τὰς ἐπαγγελίας ἀναδεξάμενος, [n] πρὸς [n] Gen. 21. 12. Rom. 9. 7. ὃν ἐλαλήθη· Ὅτι ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθήσεταί σοι σπέρμα· Gal. 3. 29.
19 λογισάμενος ὅτι καὶ ἐκ νεκρῶν ἐγείρειν δυνατὸς ὁ Θεὸς, 20 ὅθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβολῇ ἐκομίσατο. [o] Πίστει περὶ μελ- [o] Gen. 27. 27, 29.
21 λόντων εὐλόγησεν Ἰσαὰκ τὸν Ἰακὼβ καὶ τὸν Ἡσαῦ. [p] Πί- [p] Gen. 48. 5, 15, 16, 20.
στει Ἰακὼβ ἀποθνήσκων ἕκαστον τῶν υἱῶν Ἰωσὴφ εὐλόγησε· & 47. 31.
καὶ προσεκύνησεν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ῥάβδου αὐτοῦ.

— ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν.] Meaning, '[And he shows himself such,] for he hath prepared and destined for them a city,' or permanent abode (as opposed to the σκηναὶ at ver. 9), even a heavenly one. On ἡτοίμ. see Note on Matt. xxv. 34.

17—19. On these verses see a Discourse by Bp. Coneybeare, vol. ii. p. 243, seqq., in which, after settling the meaning of faith in this Chapter, he adverts to the remarkable example of it in the person of Abraham, who was therefore dignified with the title of Father of the faithful. He points out the instances in which he was tried, and the reasons and grounds on which he built his confidence; and finally applies what has been said of Abraham to the case of Christians under the Gospel Dispensation.

17. προσενήνοχεν.] This is one of the many instances of verbs being simply expressed, when the will or endeavour to perform the action is alone meant: an idiom (as appears from the examples adduced by the Commentators) as old as the time of Homer. In the present case the action was all but done, and was only hindered by the Divine command. It had, therefore, the same merit as if done; and has been always regarded by the Jewish writers, from Philo downwards, as a complete sacrifice. Πειραζόμενος, 'when he was put to the proof as to his faith.'

— καὶ τὸν μονογενῆ—ἀναδεξάμενος] 'and he offered up his only son, who had received the promises;' or rather, he who had received them into his heart in full faith; for it would seem (as Grotius suggests) that ἀναδεξ. is more significant than δεξ. would have been. This clause is (as Stuart observes) designed to augment the force of the description of Abraham's case.

18. πρὸς ὃν ἐλαλήθη.] Render, 'to whom, or, concerning whom it had been said,' &c. Meaning, 'that Abraham, to whom it had been said by God, "In Isaac shall there be named a posterity to thee."'

— ἐν Ἰσαὰκ κληθ. σ. σπ.] As much as to say, 'the seed which is promised thee must descend only from Isaac.'

19. λογισάμενος ὅτι—ὁ Θεός.] The full sense intended is, 'as reflecting that, though Isaac should die, yet the promise of posterity by him would be sure, inasmuch as the same Omnipotence, which at first brought him into being, could even raise him from the dead.' Here αὐτὸν must be supplied from the clause following.

— ὅθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβολῇ ἐκομίσατο.] These words, not a little obscure, have been variously interpreted. Many eminent Expositors, ancient and modern, have taken ἐν παραβολῇ for ἐν τύπῳ, or ἐν συμβόλῳ, scil. τῆς ἀναστάσεως: an ellipsis, however, too harsh to be admitted; and, as Ernesti observes, Isaac is no where called a type of Christ in that respect; nor could he be. The expression may rather be supposed to mean, 'simili modo,' 'with similitude;' though on the point of similitude here intended there is a difference of opinion. Some, as Newcome, Hammond, Whitby, and Stuart, referring the words to the miraculous birth of Isaac, explain, 'Abraham believed that God could raise Isaac from the dead, because he had, as it were, obtained him from the dead;' i. e. because he was born of those 'as good as dead:' an interpretation, however, not a little harsh, and, moreover, inconsistent with the usus loquendi as respects κομισ.; κομίσασθαι never signifying simply to obtain, but to receive back, either in the way of recovery of what is lost, or in return for what has been given. Hence I prefer, with Calvin, Limborch, and Kuinoel, to interpret, 'Abraham believed that God could recal his son to life; wherefore (because of this faith) he also in like manner (i. e. as it were raised from the dead) received him back [safe];' for Isaac was in a manner dead,—i. e. in his father's opinion and his own,—and was restored to his father, as it were from the gates of the grave. Compare 2 Cor. i. 9, 10.

20. πίστει] 'by faith,' viz. in the revelations made to him respecting his sons' future condition, firmly trusting that the blessings he was invoking would have their effect; and though those blessings turned out different from Isaac's intention, yet they were not the less delivered in faith that they would be fulfilled: nay, by Philo they are regarded in the light of predictions.

21. ἀποθνήσκων.] Render, 'in dying,' i. e. 'when about to die;' a sense required by the facts, as recorded in Genesis.

— προσεκύνησεν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον, &c.] Here we have, as often in this Book, a citation from the Septuagint; consequently the present passage decides nothing as to the question whether the Hebrew מטה should be rendered 'staff,' or 'bed's head.' The word will bear either sense, according to the pointing; and Doddridge, Macknight, Stuart, and others, adopt the former. I rather agree with Rosenmuller, Gesenius, and Kuinoel in preferring the latter, which is supported by the Masoretic pointing, and by all the ancient Versions except the Sept. Nor is this sense liable to any serious objection, if we understand מטה not of the head of a bed such as we q Gen. 50. 24. [q] Πίστει Ἰωσὴφ τελευτῶν περὶ τῆς ἐξόδου τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ 22 r Exod. 1. 16. & 2. 2, 11. Acts 7. 20. ἐμνημόνευσε, καὶ περὶ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ ἐνετείλατο. [r] Πίστει 23 Μωϋσῆς γεννηθεὶς ἐκρύβη τρίμηνον ὑπὸ τῶν πατέρων αὐτοῦ, διότι εἶδον ἀστεῖον τὸ παιδίον· καὶ οὐκ ἐφοβήθησαν τὸ s Exod. 2. 10, 11. Ps. 84. 11. διάταγμα τοῦ βασιλέως. [s] Πίστει Μωϋσῆς, μέγας γενόμενος, 24 ἠρνήσατο λέγεσθαι υἱὸς θυγατρὸς Φαραώ· μᾶλλον ἑλό- 25 μενος συγκακουχεῖσθαι τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἢ πρόσκαιρον ἔχειν ἁμαρτίας ἀπόλαυσιν· μείζονα πλοῦτον ἡγησάμενος τῶν 26 use, but the upper part of a long pillow or divan, something like our Grecian sofa. Certainly, the sense bed's-head is far more suitable than that of staff, since, at the time in question, Israel was, doubtless, confined to his bed. On this, then, it appears he was reclining with his arm, and towards this, in aiming at the kneeling posture appropriate to worship, he would necessarily be turned. The worshipping here spoken of may be supposed to have been an act of devout thankfulness to that God, who had protected him through life, and ordained that his bones should rest in that land of promise, whither he, with the eye of faith, looked forward to the removal of his posterity.

From what is said in the passage of Genesis, it appears that Jacob's blessing his sons took place not at the time of his worshipping towards the bed's head, but afterwards; not, however, as Michaelis imagines, a considerable time after; for the Hebr. אחרי and the Greek μετὰ ταῦτα are often used of a short time after any event; and that it could not be long, is plain from the words of Gen. xlvii. 29, 'the time drew nigh that Israel must die.' Admitting, however, that the circumstances were distinct, yet it will not follow that there is any discrepancy between the accounts of Moses and the Apostle. We may regard the words καὶ προσεκύνησε—αὐτοῦ as forming a clause quite distinct from the preceding; and suppose that πίστει is meant to be repeated. Render, 'by faith, too, he worshipped, &c.' Thus all difficulty vanishes; for we cannot regard the transposition of the order of time as any, such being frequent in Scripture. And here it is of very little consequence, since, from the air of the Mosaic account, it is evident that the two circumstances were within a very short time of each other; and as the principle of faith was equally conspicuous in both, they are therefore mentioned conjointly.

22. πίστει—ἐνετείλατο.] These words seem meant to be explanatory of what was said at vv. 20, 21, and to more fully develop their sense. It was faith, the Apostle shows, that was the moving principle both in the εὐλογία and the προσκύνησις. And the words ἐμνημόνευσε περὶ τῆς ἐξόδου τῶν υ. Ἰ. (where ἐμνημ. must be understood of prophetical mention, probably from inspiration at the time) are intended to illustrate the expressions περὶ μελλόντων, as περὶ τῶν ὀστέων α. ἐνετείλ. to point to the circumstance which led to the προσκύνησις. That the same injunction should have been again given at the last solemn blessing was natural. On the former occasion, it seems, the Patriarch did not give the chief reason for the injunction; but did so in the latter, when he spoke περὶ μελλόντων.

23—28. Here the Apostle illustrates the principle of faith, as operating on another great Founder, as it were, of the Jewish nation; and introduces the chief instances of his faith, by adverting to that of his parents, as evinced in so confidently committing to the care of Providence the child whom, from a persuasion of his being destined to something great, they had, at their imminent peril, preserved for three months.

23. τῶν πατέρων α.] Of this use (exceedingly rare) of πατέρες to signify both parents (occurring also at Eph. vi. 4), an example is adduced by Wetstein from Parthenius. In the same manner patres occurs in Latin. See Facciol. Lex.

— διότι εἶδον ἀστεῖον τὸ παιδίον.] This is not meant as the chief reason why they preserved the child. It was their faith and implicit reliance on the blessing of Providence upon their endeavours to save the child, that principally induced them thus to conceal him. The other was only an inferior reason; though it has been thought that, from his remarkable comeliness, they augured he would turn out something extraordinary; beauty being by the ancients regarded as a mark of the Divine favour. It is, however, the opinion of Josephus and Philo, that the expression ἀστεῖος is to be understood, not of personal beauty, but of a certain august air which announced the probability of future greatness.

24. μέγας γενόμενος.] Meaning, 'when he had attained to man's estate;' a sense of μέγας found in the best writers, from Homer downwards, and here required by the original Hebrew.

— ἠρνήσατο λέγεσθαι.] It is not necessary to understand by this a formal refusal. The expression may merely be supposed to denote that he was not disposed to be so called, which is attested by the whole of the narration in Exodus. It seems he had been regarded as son of Pharaoh's daughter. In his disavowal of this he was actuated by his resolution to renounce his splendid prospects, and devote himself to the deliverance of his countrymen; and not being the real, he did not choose to be the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter.

The next two verses show the extent of the sacrifice; Moses being there represented as exchanging the wealth, luxury, and sinful pleasures of a court, then the wealthiest and most magnificent, though the most corrupt, in the world, for the oppression and insult which, when he professed himself an Israelite, he must have to encounter.

25. πρόσκ. ἔχ. ἁμαρτ. ἀπόλ.] Adverting to one of the chief reasons for this preference,—the everlasting blessings which God can bestow, as contrasted with the fleeting pleasures of sin.

‡ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ θησαυρῶν τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν τοῦ Χριστοῦ· ἀπέ-27 βλεπε γὰρ εἰς τὴν μισθαποδοσίαν. [t] Πίστει κατέλιπεν Αἴ- t Exod. 10. 28, 29.
γυπτον, μὴ φοβηθεὶς τὸν θυμὸν τοῦ βασιλέως· τὸν γὰρ & 12. 31, &c. & 13. 17, &c.
28 ἀόρατον ὡς ὁρῶν ἐκαρτέρησε. [u] Πίστει πεποίηκε τὸ πάσχα u Exod. 12. 3, &c. καὶ τὴν πρόσχυσιν τοῦ αἵματος, ἵνα μὴ ὁ ὀλοθρεύων τὰ & 21. 22.
29 πρωτότοκα θίγῃ αὐτῶν. [x] Πίστει διέβησαν τὴν Ἐρυθρὰν x Exod. 14. 21, 22.
θάλασσαν, ὡς διὰ ξηρᾶς· ἧς πεῖραν λαβόντες οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι, 30 κατεπόθησαν. [y] Πίστει τὰ τείχη Ἱεριχὼ ἔπεσε, κυκλωθέντα y Jos. 6. 20.

26. ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ.] For this several MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers and early Editions, have Αἰγύπτου, which has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, Schott, Tittman, and Scholz, who regard the common reading as a gloss. But how Αἰγύπτου should require a gloss, it is not easy to see. It is more probable that Αἰγύπτου is a correction.

— τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν τοῦ Χριστοῦ.] This expression has been variously explained. The ancient and most modern Expositors take it to mean, 'contumely similar to that which Christ suffered;' remarking that the Genitive often denotes comparison, or similitude, as Luke xi. 29, τὸ σημεῖον Ἰωνᾶ· 2 Cor. iv. 10, ἡ νέκρωσις τοῦ Ἰησοῦ· 2 Cor. i. 5, τὰ παθήματα τοῦ Χριστοῦ. To this, however (which seems too confined a view of the sense), I prefer that adopted by others, as Bp. Hall, Doddridge, Scott, and Kuinoel, who interpret, 'the reproach which he, together with the people of Israel, suffered for the expectation of Christ;' i. e. a Redeemer who should arise from among them; see 1 Cor. x. 4. 9. Both senses, indeed, may be conjoined; and we may suppose, with Bp. Bull, that 'the reproach of the Israelites is called the reproach of Christ, not only for the similarity between it and that which Christ also suffered (or from its being a type thereof), but also, and chiefly, because that people was the people of Christ, and so their reproach was his.' See Exod. iii. 6, 7.

— τὴν μισθαποδοσίαν.] Namely, the future reward of faith and constancy to be expected in heaven, of which the possession of Canaan was but a type.

27. πίστει κατέλιπεν Α., μὴ φοβ.] The best Expositors are agreed that the Apostle is speaking, not of Moses' flight to Midian, but of his departure from Egypt the second time, when he led forth the Israelites from Egypt. And though, in the former case, he had been in great fear, in the latter he was fearless, not heeding the minatory words of the King on his leaving, 'See my face no more;' nor the vengeance with which the tyrant was sure to visit the Israelites for their departing in spite of him.

— ἐκαρτέρησε] 'bore up.' In this elegantly elliptical use (corresponding to that of our verb to bear up) the word occurs in the best Classical writers. So Thucydides, ii. 44, καρτερεῖν δὲ χρὴ καὶ ἄλλων παίδων ἐλπίδι· Euripid., Alcest. 1074, ῥᾷον παραινεῖν, ἢ παθόντα καρτερεῖν· and Rhes. 148, ὄψει με καρτεροῦνθ', ὅταν δέῃ. And so in Virgil Æn. i. 207, we have 'Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis.' Thus, then, it is meant that he courageously encountered the hazards of disobedience to the earthly and visible King, as keeping in view his paramount duty to that Monarch who is invisible, the Lord of heaven and earth. See 1 Tim. i. 17.

28. πεποίηκε.] Almost all Expositors take πεπ. to mean 'he celebrated;' but Böhme and Kuinoel, 'he instituted;' observing that a term of latitude is adapted, to suit both τὸ πάσχα and τὴν πρόσχυσιν τοῦ αἵματος. It is plain that this was done 'in faith;' i. e. in full confidence of the preservation promised, and also in faith of a higher kind; the rite being not only a memorial of Israel's deliverance, but also a typical prefiguration of our salvation by the death of Christ, and through faith in his blood: see Owen, Macknight, and Scott; and compare 1 Cor. v. 7. Τὴν πρόσχυσιν, i. e. the sprinkling of blood mentioned in Exod. xii. 7. 22; lit., 'a pouring out upon,' as Exod. xxiv. 6.

29. τὴν Ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν.] Said by the best Commentators to be so called from the red tinge, imparted by the weeds with which it abounds, insomuch that it is called in Genesis ים־סוף, 'the weedy sea.' And so the Pesch. Syr. Translator calls it. Rosenmuller, however, is of opinion that it ought to be called the sea of Madrepores; those occupying the bottom: a view also adopted by Laborde, Travels into Palestine, p. 264, who quotes Giovanni Finati as saying, 'that the water of this sea is so transparent that he amused himself with observing the peculiarity of the depths below him, where weeds and corals grow to such a size as almost to have the appearance of groves and gardens.' These particulars, however, serve to confirm the former view quite as much as the latter.

— ἧς.] Here many supply θαλάσσης; others, διαβάσεως; but I prefer, with Kuinoel, to understand ξηρᾶς, meaning, 'cujus sicci periculum facturi, an transitum esset præbiturum.' Πεῖραν λαμβ. τινὸς is a phrase common in the best writers, but also found in the Sept., as Deut. xxviii. 56.

30. πίστει τὰ τείχη, &c.] Meaning, 'It was by faith that the walls of Jericho fell, after having been compassed about seven days;' the period foretold by God at which the city walls should fall. Now this was permitted to happen ἐπὶ πίστει; i. e. on account of the faith of Joshua and his army in the assurances of God: and therefore to that faith the fall of the city may in a certain sense be ascribed. Indeed, the whole affair was supernatural; for the Israelites were merely to march round the place for seven days, blowing the trumpets, but abstaining from attack. That the walls did fall without any physical cause is a fact which cannot be explained away by any Philological device of those who seek to remove the supernatural.

ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας. [z] Πίστει Ῥαὰβ ἡ πόρνη οὐ συναπώλετο 31 τοῖς ἀπειθήσασι, δεξαμένη τοὺς κατασκόπους μετ᾽ εἰρήνης.
[a] Καὶ τί ἔτι λέγω; ἐπιλείψει γάρ με διηγούμενον ὁ χρόνος 32 περὶ Γεδεὼν Βαράκ τε, καὶ Σαμψὼν καὶ Ἰεφθάε, Δαυΐδ τε καὶ Σαμουὴλ καὶ τῶν προφητῶν· [b] οἳ διὰ πίστεως κατη- 33 γωνίσαντο βασιλείας, εἰργάσαντο δικαιοσύνην, ἐπέτυχον ἐπ-αγγελιῶν, ἔφραξαν στόματα λεόντων, [c] ἔσβεσαν δύναμιν 34 πυρὸς, ἔφυγον στόματα μαχαίρας, ἐνεδυναμώθησαν ἀπὸ ἀσθενείας, ἐγενήθησαν ἰσχυροὶ ἐν πολέμῳ, παρεμβολὰς ἔκλιz Jos. 2. 1. & 6. 23. James 2. 25. a Jud. 4. 6. & 6. 11. & 11. 1. & 12. 7. & 13. 24. 1 Sam. 1. 20. & 12. 17, &c. & 13. 14. & 17. 45. b Jud. 14. 6. 1 Sam. 17. 34. 2 Sam. 8. 1. & 10. 19. & 12. 29. Dan. 6. 22. c Jud. 7. 21. & 15. 15. 1 Sam. 14. 1, &c. & 20. 1. 2 Sam. 7. 12. 1 Kings 9. 4. & 19. 1, &c. 2 Kings 6. 16. & 20. 7. 1 Chron. 22. 9. Job 42. 10. Psal. 6. 9. & 89. 20, &c. Isa. 38 21. Dan. 3. 25.

31. πίστει.] Meaning, implicit faith in the declarations of God, that Jericho would be taken.

— ἡ πόρνη.] Many Commentators have so stumbled at this term,—employed here and in James ii. 25,—that they have attempted to affix to it some signification varying from the common one; either idolatress, or hostess. Now the former is quite inadmissible in a plain narration like that in Josh. ii. 1. vi. 17; and the latter, though somewhat countenanced by Josephus and the Chaldee paraphrast, is untenable; for, as the best Hebraists are agreed, זונה will bear no such sense, since it cannot come from the root זון, to feed, but from זנה, to 'commit whoredom;' see Stuart. Kuinoel, indeed, suggests, that were we even to adopt that sense, 'it would come to the same thing; since, in ancient times, those hostesses were generally harlots.' But that, I apprehend, only applies to much later times. At this early period inns were scarcely in use at all. It was the frequency of travelling that, in later times, rendered inns necessary; and the multitude of travellers at such places tended to produce vice. It is best, however, to retain the usual sense of the word, and, with Macknight, to suppose that Rahab is here so called, because she had once been so; viz. before she had been brought to the knowledge of the true God, and had been received into the body of the holy people, Josh. vi. 25; after which she, it seems, was still called by her former appellation, though she had reformed her life. So at Matt. xvi. 6, Simon is called the Leper, because he had formerly been such; and Matthew was called the Publican for the same reason.

Εἰρήνης is by the best Expositors interpreted 'kindness, courtesy, hospitality.' But the term may also have allusion to some form of address used on receiving any one to one's house; such, we may suppose, as 'Come in peace!' to correspond to the usual one for salutation at parting, 'Go in peace!' a salutation which (as peace included security, tranquillity, and good of every kind) would be an implied assurance of kind treatment.

32—35. Here the Apostle briefly sums up some remaining examples of faith, by the mention (though not in the order of time) of the persons most remarkable for it. The principle of faith, he intimates, was conspicuous in them all, though its fruits were various; and the writer proceeds to enumerate the distinct effects of each person's particular faith. All, therefore, that is meant seems to be this, that the subsequent particular circumstances are true in regard to one or other of the persons in question; of whom some (as Joshua and David) subdued kingdoms; others, as Abraham and David, received promises. In some it was evinced by courageously attempting the subjection of kingdoms far above their strength to master; in others, 'by living soberly, righteously, and godly,' and faithfully discharging their public duties as rulers, through faith in Him 'who will render to every man according to his works.' With the actions which especially evinced their faith, the Apostle intermixes a reference to the reward of that faith, in the attainment of the temporal blessings promised by Jehovah; and amongst the rest, success in their public measures, whether of war, or legislation and government in general.

32. ἐπιλείψει γάρ με διηγ. ὁ χρόνος, &c.] A form of expression such as frequently occurs in the best writers; though it is worthy of remark that in none of the many examples adduced have we, as here, χρόνος simply. Thus in Athen. v. p. 220, we have ἐπιλείποι δ᾽ ἄν με πᾶς χρόνος εἰ, &c. In numerous other cases ἡμέρα is used, as also dies in the Latin; see Liv. Hist. xxviii. 41. Cicero, de Nat. D. iii. 32. The most elegant use of this form of expression is found in Virgil, Æn. i. 372, sq. imitated from Homer, Od. ii. 379. Finally, though I have never seen any instance of χρόνος thus used by itself in the Greek writers, yet of tempus in Latin so used an example occurs in Cicero pro S. Roscio, 32, 'Tempus, perdite, citius quam oratio deficeret:' a sense, I apprehend, the very one here intended to be expressed.

33. εἰργάσαντο δικαιοσύνην.] In the term εἰργ. we have involved a notion of what is habitual; as in Matt. vii. 23, οἱ ἐργαζόμενοι τὴν ἀνομίαν.

33, 34. ἔφραξαν στόματα λεόντων, &c.] These several expressions are partly general, and intended to show how it was that the promises were obtained: of which character is ἐνεδυναμώθησαν ἀπὸ ἀσθενείας, which is by Owen supposed to be used with reference to Isaiah xxxviii. 8; but it is probably to be taken of political or military strength, the words following, ἐγενήθησαν ἰσχυροὶ ἐν πολέμῳ, carrying the idea still further, and being meant to intimate, that 'faith animates to the most heroic enterprises, both civil and military.' And both expressions apply to Joshua, Barak, Gideon, Samson, Jephtha, and others. Of the former the literal sense is (by an idiom fre-

35 ναν ἀλλοτρίων. [d] Ἔλαβον γυναῖκες ἐξ ἀναστάσεως τοὺς νεκροὺς αὐτῶν· ἄλλοι δὲ ἐτυμπανίσθησαν, οὐ προσδεξάμενοι τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν, ἵνα κρείττονος ἀναστάσεως τύχωσιν· 36 [e] ἕτεροι δὲ ἐμπαιγμῶν καὶ μαστίγων πεῖραν ἔλαβον, ἔτι δὲ 37 δεσμῶν καὶ φυλακῆς. [f] ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ‡ ἐπειd 1 Kings 17. 23. 2 Kings 4. 36. 2 Mac. 6. 19, 28. & 7. 7, &c. Acts 22. 25. e Jer. 20. 2.

f 1 Kings 21. 13. 2 Kings 1. 8. Matt. 3. 4.

quent in the Classical writers), 'from being weak, became powerful.' The words following, παρεμβολὰς ἔκλιναν ἀλλοτρίων, seem meant as a climax on those preceding; ἔκλιναν here standing for ἐνέκλ. (as in Hom. Il. ε. 37.) The sense may be literally expressed, 'made their ranks give way;' i. e. routed their troops. Here, as often in the Classical writers, παρεμβολή denotes, not camps, but the armies which fill the camps.

The other expressions in verse 34 are special; the first adverting to the cases of Daniel, Samson, and David; the second to that of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who may be said to have 'quenched the power of the fire,' because their firm faith in the protection of the God of Israel caused that it should have no power over them, but, as far as regarded them, be quenched. The third, ἔφυγον στόμ. μαχ., may refer to the frequent and wonderful escapes of David from the sword of Saul. The expression is regarded as a Hebraism, and occurs at Josh. viii. 24. Yet it is sometimes found in the Classical writers, as Soph. Aj. 651.

35, 36. The Apostle now passes (by a natural association of ideas) from the case of those who were delivered from danger, through faith, to that of those who endured evils of every kind under its support; in which there is an allusion to 2 Kings iv. 18—37. 1 Kings xvii. 17—24. In all these cases πίστει, or διὰ πίστεως, may be supplied from the preceding; and indeed it is plainly implied. In this and the next two verses the Apostle passes from the earlier periods to the later times of the Hebrew nation, and from persons in public to those in private stations, in order to show that the duty of faith quite as much pertained to one as the other.

35. ἐξ ἀναστ.] Render, 'by a resurrection.'

— ἐτυμπανίσθησαν.] On the exact nature of the punishment here denoted, no little difference of opinion exists. Many understand ἐτυμπ. to mean, generally, 'were tortured to death;' while others suppose a special sense; though what that is, they are not agreed. The import of the expression will best appear by considering its derivation; namely, from τύμπανον, which signified, 1. a beating-stick; 2. a beating-post, which was of the form of a T, and thus suggests the posture of the sufferer. Moreover, from this beating being inflicted sometimes with sticks or rods, sometimes with leather thongs inclosing pieces of lead, hence τυμπανίζω came to be equivalent to σφαιρίζω, ἐκδέρω; nay, even ἀποκεφαλίζω or ἀναιρέω; because in general (when the poor sufferer was not already dead by this kind of knout) the punishment ended with beheading him, or beating out his brains with a club. When the Lexicographers explain τύπτειν by κρεμᾶν, they had an allusion to the hanging posture in which the position of the poor wretch brought him; for his feet did not touch the ground; see Note on Acts xxii. 25. Here the Apostle is supposed to allude to the torture applied to Eleazar, 2 Macc. vi. 19.

— οὐ προσδεξάμενοι τὴν ἀπολ.] 'not accepting the proffered deliverance,' i. e. at the price of apostasy: a rare sense of ἀπολύτρωσις, but occurring in Luke xxi. 28.

— κρείττονος ἀναστ.] Meaning, 'resurrection to another and a better life.' So Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 10, recounting the various tortures inflicted on the Essenes, in order to induce them to abandon their religion (στρεβλούμενοι, &c.), adds, that 'they heeded them not, but εὔθυμοι τὰς ψυχὰς ἠφίεσαν, ὡς πάλιν κομιούμενοι.'

36. ἐμπαιγμῶν καὶ μαστ. πεῖραν ἔλ.] See 2 Macc. vii. 1. The phrase πεῖραν ἔλαβον is for ἐπειρῶντο, 'experienced,' 'felt the force of.'

37. The punishment of the τύμπανον was, as we have seen, generally unto death; but the various punishments next mentioned (ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν—ἀπέθανον) are decidedly of that character. Of these the first, stoning, had been in use from the early ages, and was at first appropriated to crimes involving profanity. The prophet Zechariah, and, as some say, Jeremiah, died this death. The second, that of sawing in two, was an atrocious punishment also of a very early date, as being mentioned in 2 Sam. xii. 31, and elsewhere, and which Isaiah suffered. Vestiges, too, of this are found in the heathen writers; as Herodotus, ii. 139, συμβουλεύειν—τοὺς ἱρέας —μέσους διαταμέειν. It is, indeed, even yet in use in the East, being recently employed by Tharawaddae, the usurper of the Birman throne.

With respect to the expression following, ἐπειράσθησαν, some regard it as an interpolation, or a var. lect. of ἐπρίσθ., or a gloss on that word. Others suppose it an error of the scribes for some other word; and about a dozen different conjectures have been proposed, not one of them in the least countenanced by the MSS. How it should be a gloss, or why an emendation of ἐπρίσθ., it is not easy to see; for so plain a term as that required not the one, and that the other should find its way into all the MSS., were unaccountable. Kuinoel coincides in the opinion of those who would cancel the word; for which there is alleged the authority of three MSS. and some Versions and Fathers: a testimony, however, very inadequate; for in so few as three MSS. the omission may surely be imputed to accident; besides that, a term so difficult would be likely to be cancelled by those who, like the above Critics, were ready enough to remove what appeared to them inexplicable. And it was, no doubt, omitted in the Versions because the Translators could not explain it. As to the Fathers, they, in citation, only passed it over; and, therefore, we cannot infer that they had it not in their copies. Indeed, in almost all the cases they elsewhere introduce the word. For these several reasons, then, it is best to retain the word.

In order to ascertain the exact import of the term, it must first be determined whether it here ῥάσθησαν, ἐν φόνῳ μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον· περιῆλθον ἐν μηλωταῖς, ἐν αἰγείοις δέρμασιν· ὑστερούμενοι, θλιβόμενοι, κακουχούμενοι· (ὧν οὐκ ἦν ἄξιος ὁ κόσμος!) ἐν ἐρημίαις 38 πλανώμενοι καὶ ὄρεσι, καὶ σπηλαίοις καὶ ταῖς ὀπαῖς τῆς γῆς.

[g] Καὶ cὗτοι πάντες, μαρτυρηθέντες διὰ τῆς πίστεως, οὐκ 39 ἐκομίσαντο τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν· τοῦ Θεοῦ περὶ ἡμῶν κρεῖττόν τι 40 προβλεψαμένου, ἵνα μὴ χωρὶς ἡμῶν τελειωθῶσι.

XII. [a] ΤΟΙΓΑΡΟΥΝ καὶ ἡμεῖς, τοσοῦτον ἔχοντες περι- 1 κείμενον ἡμῖν νέφος μαρτύρων, ὄγκον ἀποθέμενοι πάντα, g Supra v. 2. a Rom. 6. 4. & 12. 12. 1 Cor. 9. 24. 2 Cor. 7 1. Eph. 4. 22. Phil. 3. 13, 14. Col. 3. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 1. & 4. 2. supra 10. 36.

bears a general or a special sense. Against the former (viz. tried or tempted to apostasy) it is urged, that that sense had been before expressed, and that it is not likely so accurate a writer would pass from very special terms to one so general; and, therefore, Sykes, Semler, and Ernesti take it, by a change of genus for species, to denote 'being put to the torture:' a view in itself not improbable, considering that the writer seems here to have intended only to exemplify some of the most cruel kinds of punishment. As in like manner in Æschylus, Eumen. 180, we have οὗ καρανιστῆρες ὀφθαλμώρυχοι Δίκαι, σφαγαί τε—ὑπὸ ῥάχιν παγέντες· and in Lucretius, iii. 1029, 'Carcer, et horribilis de saxo jactus eorum, Verbera, carnifices, robur, pix, lamina, tædæ.' As, however, no authority exists for the above sense, it is best to adopt the figurative and general one first mentioned, to which the objection that has been urged is far from being formidable, considering that irregularities as great may be found in the acknowledged writings of St. Paul. Thus we may (with Crellius, Limborch, J. Capell, Hasæus, Wells, Macknight, Carpzov, and Stuart) take it to mean, that they were assailed by temptations to apostasy,—or at least simulation,—by the motives both of hope and fear, especially the former, sometimes insinuated under the prospect of exquisite tortures; a sort of trial like the fiery darts of the Evil one, in bearing which even great and good men have yielded, and which might, therefore, be reckoned among the heavy trials of the people of God.

Finally, in the expression following, ἐν φόνῳ μαχ. ἀπέθανον, which literally means, 'they died by slaughter of the sword,' there is a blending of two phrases, such as I know no example of elsewhere. From the trials of faith in those who had to encounter death or torture, the Apostle now passes to the less violent, but scarcely less severe, fate of the unhappy persons who, after having escaped out of the hands of their tyrants and persecutors, were, as wretched outcasts, exposed to every variety of woe.

— περιῆλθον ἐν μηλωταῖς, &c.] By the terms μηλωταῖς and αἰγείοις δέρμασι we may understand rude garments formed of sheep or goat skins with the wool on, which, Carpzov shows, were worn by the very poorest class, and are still used in Russia and elsewhere.

— ὑστερούμενοι, ϑλιβόμενοι, κακουχούμενοι.] Terms designating every variety of pinching want and dire distress, while the words following, ἐν ἐρημίαις πλανώμενοι καὶ ὄρεσι, &c., advert to the other miseries of their condition, as houseless wanderers.

38. ὧν οὐκ ἦν ἄξιος ὁ κόσμος, &c.] Of this remark the true intent is doubtless that suggested by Dr. Owen (or rather Calvin, who originally pointed it out); namely, to anticipate a possible objection, that the persons in question were thus outcasts, because not worthy of human society! Contrariwise, it is asserted, the world itself was not worthy of them! alluding, as Hyperius observes, to the obstinate rejection of the ungodly. In like manner it may be said that the Jews were not worthy of John the Baptist, Christ, and the Apostles.

— σπηλαίοις καὶ ταῖς ὀπαῖς τῆς γῆς.] By the former are meant caverns; by the latter, caves. These were, it would seem, not only used for sleeping in at night, but sometimes for abode by day. And Palestine abounds in caverns very well adapted for the habitation, however dreary, of numerous persons; as is clear from the account of what befel Josephus and the Jews after the capture of Jotapata, in the persecution under Antiochus. See Antiq. xii. 8.

39. μαρτυρηθέντες.] See Note supra ver. 2.

— οὐκ ἐκομίσαντο τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν, &c.] Of these words, and those which follow to the end of ver. 40, the sense mainly depends upon the import of the expressions τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν and κρεῖττόν τι, of which the former must, from the context, be understood of the promised blessings of a Redeemer; and the latter, of the fulfilment of that promise—the Gospel dispensation. Thus the general sense is: 'They all received not the promise [held out to virtue], neither perfectly in the temporal world, nor at all in the spiritual one of the Messiah. No: God was pleased, in the exercise of his providence for us, to destine that they should not attain the perfect fruition of the Divine promises, till the time when they should enjoy them in common with us.' On this sense of τελ. (in which there is an agonistic metaphor) see Note on ii. 10.

XII. 1, 2. Having pointed out the nature, and shown by examples the efficacy of faith, the Apostle now proceeds to exhort his Hebrew converts to bring the same principle into action in the Christian faith; inculcating stedfast perseverance even under the greatest trials, and comforting them with the assurance, that the evils they were suffering were not marks of God's wrath, but rather paternal chastisements, intended for their good in the end. He founds his exhortation on a view which seems to have been suggested by the foregoing agonistic allusion, and of which the imagery in vv. 1 & 2 is a continuation. Thus he represents the persons whom he is adκαὶ τὴν εὐπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, δι' ὑπομονῆς τρέχωμεν τὸν 2 προκείμενον ἡμῖν ἀγῶνα· [b] ἀφορῶντες εἰς τὸν τῆς πίστεως b 1 Cor. 1. 8 Ps. 110. 1. Luke 24. 26. Phil. 2. 8, &c. 1 Pet. 1. 11. supra 1. 3, 13. & 2. 10. & 8. 1.

dressing as placed in a race-course, of which the spectators are the innumerable company of the Worthies of the old Dispensation just adverted to; who, by their words and actions, testified how far the objects of their faith were raised above worldly considerations.

In developing this figure, the Apostle adverts to three circumstances respecting the runner, in order to deduce from thence the exhortation he had in view: 1. That he carefully cast aside every encumbrance to his progress, not only ridding himself of unnecessary clothing, but (by means of previous training) of all superfluous flesh. 2. That he patiently endured the toil necessary to fit him for the race. 3. That he kept his eye fixed on the goal, where the βραβευτὴς sat ready to determine the contest, and distribute the prizes. On each of these particulars a few remarks will be necessary, and especially to point out the application. First, the term ὄγκος signifies weight, load, encumbrance; and as ὄγκος τοῦ σώματος, or τῶν σαρκῶν, or such like, often occur in the later writers, there is reason to think the allusion is chiefly to the weight of flesh, though also to that of clothes. In the application, the expression may be understood, in a general way, of whatever disposition (as sensuality or worldly-mindedness) bows the soul down to earth, and consequently impedes it in running its spiritual race. Thus, then, it is meant, that 'as one running in a race would be cumbered by a heavy load of useless flesh or superfluous clothing, so is the Christian, by sensuality and worldly-mindedness, equally hindered in running the race set before him.' To this purpose it is well said by an heathen moralist, 'Quin corpus onustum Hesternis vitiis animum quoque prægravat una, Atque affigit humo divinæ particulam auræ.' And Philo similarly observes, in a fine passage cited by Carpzov on Rom. vii. 5, ὅσαι δὲ τὸν σαρκῶν φορτὸν ἀχθοφοροῦσι, ἄνω βλέπειν εἰς τὰς οὐρανίους περιόδους ἀδυνατοῦσι.

In the words following, καὶ τὴν εὐπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, the above metaphor is abandoned; not, indeed, as some suppose, from inadvertence, but to suggest the application; and as ὄγκον was meant in a general sense, so here τὴν εὐπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν points to one particular evil disposition which they should strive to throw off. The sin in question (or rather the disposition to it) may, with the best Expositors, be supposed to be that of unbelief (the want of the πίστις before inculcated), or timidity in professing the Gospel; which would constantly tempt them to apostasy, either actual or virtual, and to which their peculiar circumstances especially exposed them. Thus it will not be difficult to fix the sense of the disputed expression εὐπερίστατον, which, being an ἅπαξ λεγόμενον, is best understood from the context. Now, although, from its etymology, it might bear almost any one of the various senses assigned by Commentators, yet from the context it will admit only one of the two following: either, 1. that of Chrysostom and most Expositors, 'which doth so easily beset us;' or, 2. that of Grotius, Crellius, Capellus, Kypke, and Kuinoel, 'the sin which especially winds around us, and hinders our course;' namely, unbelief and a disposition to apostasy, thus said to wind round, with allusion, it is supposed, to the long Oriental garments, which in such exercises were cast aside. Of these two interpretations, the former is not a little objectionable, from the confusion of metaphor it introduces, and from the term εὐπερίστατον having thus to be taken in an active, instead of a passive, sense, — quite against the analogy of the language, as seen in εὐπερίχυτος and other similar forms. Whereas, according to the latter interpretation, the word will have the very sense in which the noun περίστασις is used by Max. Tyr. (as cited by Kypke), τὰς περιστάσεις πάσας (all impediments) ἀπεδύσατο, καὶ τῶν δεσμῶν ἐξέλυσεν αὐτόν. And how applicable is this sense, it is scarcely necessary to observe; sins being most fitly compared to burdens and bonds, by which man is 'sore let and hindered in running the race which is set before him.' See Note on Gal. vi. 2. 5. Perhaps, however, the evil disposition here adverted to is, not unbelief, but rather that sluggishness, νωθρεία, with which the Hebrew Christians are often upbraided in this Epistle, either directly or indirectly. See supra v. 11.

— δι' ὑπομονῆς τρέχωμεν τὸν προκ., &c.] The term ὑπομονὴ is here meant to denote endurance and perseverance. The expression ἀγὼν is used to intimate the struggle necessary to be maintained with various evil passions and propensities,—a struggle only to end with life, so multiform are the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil, which beset us both in body and mind. So, by a similar form of expression, it is said in Philo, p. 203 (cited by Carpzov), τὸν προτεθέντα ἀγῶνα τῶν θείων καὶ Ὀλυμπίων ἀρετῶν.

2. ἀφορῶντες εἰς τὸν—Ἰησοῦν.] Thus far the Apostle has, for the confirmation of the Hebrew Christians, set before them the examples of those worthies of former times who had, by the strength of their faith, done and suffered so much; 'scarcely any thing,' as Bp. Sanderson observes in a Sermon on ver. 3, 'being so calculated to stir up men to the performance of duty as the examples of such as have performed the same before them with glory and success; for, besides that this leads them to emulate their glory, it cheers them with hopes of like success, and effectually removes that which is the common excuse of sloth and neglect of duty,—the pretence of impossibility.' 'Thus far, then, (adds Bp. Sanderson) he brings to their view this cloud of witnesses, as also witnesses of their success or failure. But now through this cloud, as a medium, he bids them look at a higher example,—the Sun of Righteousness. An example recommended to them, 1. from the completeness of Him who is at both ends of the race, at once the ἀγωνοθέτης and the βραβευτὴς,—he that gives the law at the start, and he that gives the prize at the goal, —the Author and Finisher of our faith. 2. From the manner of his sufferings; not patiently alone enduring, but also courageously despising them. 3. From the issue and consequents of his sufferings, which were in lieu of the pain, joy; of the shame, glory. So that if they desired to reign with him, they must first suffer with him.'

ἀρχηγὸν καὶ τελειωτὴν Ἰησοῦν· ὅς, ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης αὐτῷ χαρᾶς, ὑπέμεινε σταυρὸν, αἰσχύνης καταφρονήσας, ἐν δεξιᾷ τε τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ * κεκάθικεν. Ἀναλογίσασθε 3 γὰρ τὸν τοιαύτην ὑπομεμενηκότα ὑπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν εἰς αὐτὸν ἀντιλογίαν, ἵνα μὴ κάμητε ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὑμῶν ἐκλυόμενοι.

c 1 Cor. 10. 13. supra 10. 32—34.

[c] Οὔπω μέχρις αἵματος ἀντικατέστητε, πρὸς τὴν ἁμαρ- 4

— τὸν τῆς πίστεως ἀρχηγόν.] Ἀρχ. here signifies author and exemplar; Christ being so termed, as calling forth our faith by his promises in the Gospel, and exemplifying it in his person. In like manner the βραβευτὴς (to whom Christ is here compared) was almost always one who had himself been victor, and who therefore presented in himself an example to the candidates for the prize.

— τελειωτὴν] Rewarder: a term used with allusion to the βραβευτὴς, or person who distributed the prize. So, by a similar metaphor, it is said in Philo, p. 74 (cited by Kuinoel), πότε οὖν, ὦ ψυχὴ, μάλιστα νεκροφορεῖν σαυτὴν ὑπολήψῃ; ἆρά γε οὐχ ὅταν τελειωθῇς, καὶ βραβείων καὶ στεφάνων ἀξιωθῇς; or the expression may mean, 'one who brings us through to the goal;' by an allusion to the trainer of the athletæ at the games.

— ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης, &c.] The term ἀντὶ here has been variously interpreted; but no sense, as Kuinoel proves, is so suitable to the context as the one commonly assigned, because of, which he, in conjunction with Wetstein, shows to be one naturally arising out of that use of ἀντὶ, by which it denotes the price of any labour or service. Of this use examples occur at Eph. v. 31. Luke i. 20, and Joseph. Bell. i. 8. 6. Indeed the idea of reward is inherent in the very term following, χαρᾶς, which implies exaltation at the right hand of God, and a glorious reigning with him: an idea suggested by the words further on, ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ κεκάθικεν.

— σταυρόν.] Meaning the death of the cross. Αἰσχύνης καταφρονήσας. With this Wetstein compares from Herodian ii. 10. 10, κρύους καὶ θάλπους καταφρονῶν.

— κεκάθικεν.] This (instead of ἐκάθισεν) I have thought proper to edit, with the best Critics, from Bengel to Scholz; such being found in all the best MSS. and all the early Editions except the Erasmian, which first gave ἐκάθικεν, by an error of the press, afterwards unwarily corrected by the Editor to ἐκάθισεν.

3. The Apostle now, as Hyperius observes, accommodates the above example to the particular case of the Hebrews themselves; here (as Calvin says) further enforcing the above exhortation by a comparison of Christ with those that are Christ's; q. d. 'Compare him who suffered such things [though the Son of God] with yourselves.'

— ἀναλογίσασθε τὸν τοιαύτην, &c.] 'Consider Him [high and holy as he is] who experienced so great an opposition of the ungodly against him.' 'The term ἀναλογίσασθαι imports (as Bp. Sanderson well observes) not the bare consideration of a thing by itself alone, but also by weighing and comparing it with some other things of like nature, and observing the analogies or proportions between it and them.' Ἀντιλογία (as Kuinoel shows) may be understood to denote opposition generally, both in words and deeds. And so we have ἀντίλεξις used in Joseph. Ant. xviii. 1. 3. And Kuin. (with Chrysostom, Carpzov, Dindorf, and Rosenmuller,) assigns that sense here; yet contumely and calumny must be chiefly intended. The full import of the expression is well pointed out by Bp. Sanderson, ubi supra.

— ἵνα μὴ κάμητε, &c.] We have here a continuation of the agonistic metaphor; these two terms κάμητε and ἐκλυόμενοι being both è palæstrâ. It is, however, not quite agreed whether ταῖς ψυχαῖς should be construed with κάμητε, or with ἐκλ. Kuinoel decides in favour of the latter mode, citing from Plutarch ταῖς διανοίαις ἐκλελυμένοις· but that the words would be as suitable to κάμ., is certain from a passage of Diod. Sic., vol. ix. p. 220, ἤδη κάμνοντες ταῖς ψυχαῖς. We may, indeed, suppose that they were meant for both κάμ. and ἐκλ.

4. The writer now employs a fresh argument for courageous endurance of the afflictions laid upon them; here meaning to shame them for the want of resolution which, contrary to the express injunction of God, they began to evince under present evils, and those not of the most serious kind.

— οὔπω μέχρις αἵματος, &c.] The best Expositors are of opinion that we have here a continuation of the agonistic metaphor at ver. 1. There would rather, however, seem to be a resumption of that at x. 32, sq., πολλὴν ἄθλησιν ὑπεμείνατε παθημάτων—θεατριζόμενοι, though it may have been suggested by that just occurring at ver. 1. Here the metaphor is plainly derived è palæstrâ, by an allusion to the pancratium. There is supposed to be a contest, yet of that nature which is rather preludial than actual; though the contest in question would seem to suppose some persons against whom it was carried on. Accordingly certain eminent Expositors suppose τὴν ἁμαρτίαν to be put (abstract for concrete) for τοὺς ἁμαρτωλοὺς, meaning the heathen or Jewish persecutors, who, though they had inflicted many evils upon them, had not yet proceeded to the shedding of their blood. Yet this sense, besides being scarcely apposite, involves no little harshness; for how the oppressed party could be said to oppose persecutors who had so much power over them, as to render resistance useless, it is difficult to imagine. Indeed the above idiom is one which ought never to be called in without an absolute necessity, which is not the case here; for we have only to suppose (with Crellius, Estius, and Kuinoel) a prosopopœia in ἁμαρτία, by which (as at Rom. vi. 16) sin is personified as an adversary assailing us with temptations to fail in our duty, whether in faith or practice; and as in the pancratium here alluded 5 τίαν ἀνταγωνιζόμενοι· [d] καὶ ἐκλέλησθε τῆς παρακλήσεως, d Job 5. 17.

ἥτις ὑμῖν ὡς υἱοῖς διαλέγεται· Υἱέ μου, μὴ ὀλιγώρει Prov. 3. 11, 12. Rev. 3. 19.
παιδείας Κυρίου, μηδὲ ἐκλύου ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐλεγχό-6 μενος· ὃν γὰρ ἀγαπᾷ Κύριος παιδεύει· μαστιγοῖ 7 δὲ πάντα υἱὸν ὃν παραδέχεται. [e] Εἰ παιδείαν ὑπο- e Deut. 8. 5. 2 Sam. 7. 14.
μένετε, ὡς υἱοῖς ὑμῖν προσφέρεται ὁ Θεός· τίς γάρ ἐστιν Prov. 13. 24. & 19. 18.
8 υἱὸς ὃν οὐ παιδεύει πατήρ; [f] Εἰ δὲ χωρίς ἐστε παιδείας, f Ps. 73. 15. 1 Pet. 5. 9. ἧς μέτοχοι γεγόνασι πάντες, ἄρα νόθοι ἐστὲ, καὶ οὐχ υἱοί. g Num. 16. 22.
9 [g] Εἶτα τοὺς μὲν τῆς σαρκὸς ἡμῶν πατέρας εἴχομεν παιδευ- & 27. 16. Eccl. 12. 1, 7.
τὰς, καὶ ἐνετρεπόμεθα· οὐ πολλῷ μᾶλλον ὑποταγησόμεθα Isa. 57. 16. Zach. 12 1.

to, until blood was drawn, the contest was not thought serious, so here the writer means to say that, in the struggles which they had hitherto had to sustain against the temptations to apostasy, or to backsliding, presented by the malice or the arts of their adversaries, they had not yet been called to the severest trial, that of sealing their faith with their blood. They had only been tempted or tried by the lighter evils, of confiscation, or ignominious punishment, or persecution generally. Surely, then, it were most base to turn their backs, as it were, in the prelude to the contest, and not resolve to bear the heat and burden of the day, to faint where they ought to persevere, and to stop short where it is their duty to 'endure unto the end.'

5. καὶ ἐκλέλησθε — διαλέγεται.] In these words we have reprehension joined with exhortation. The passage here cited is from Prov. iii. 11, 12, and agrees with the Sept., except that the μου, corresponding to the Heb. בני, is not found in the Sept. Παιδεία, in the sense chastisement, is not used in the Classical writers, but it occurs in Ecclus. xviii. 14, and παιδεύειν in the Sept.

— μηδὲ ἐκλύου] 'be not disheartened.'

7. εἰ παιδείαν ὑπομένετε, &c.] Here we have a conclusion drawn from the above Scripture, though with the omission (per asyndeton) of a conclusive particle. As, however, εἰ seldom begins a sentence, the ancient scribes stumbled at it, and supposing it to be connected with the preceding words, wrote εἰς, the ς arising from the ϖ following. Such is, I apprehend, the true origin of the εἰς, which has been half approved by Griesbach, and received into the text by Matthæi, though most rashly. Finally, εἰ is required by the course of reasoning, and by the antithetical εἰ at ver. 8. Ὑπομένετε, 'ye bear patiently.' Προσφέρεται ὑ., 'treateth you:' a signification common in the best writers.

— τίς γάρ ἐστιν, &c.] Meaning to say (as Stuart explains) 'how can ye expect, although ye are children, not to receive any chastisement?' The sense of the whole passage is well expressed by Iaspis and Kuinoel thus: 'Hence, if ye have to conflict with trials and tribulations, you may thence infer that you are the objects of God's fatherly love and care; but if you are exercised with no afflictions, you have reason to fear that God neglects you, as men do their illegitimate children, of whose education and morals they take no care, leaving them χωρὶς παιδείας.' By 'all,' ver. 8, are meant all true sons of God, and beloved by him. The ἄρα is well rendered by Kuinoel 'inde sequitur.'

9, 10. Here is adduced another reason why their tribulations, suffered for religion's sake, should be borne with patience, and that by a comparison of the discipline of a human parent with that of God. Ver. 9 contains an argumentum à minori ad majus; and in ver. 10 it is proved that the discipline of God is far better, and more beneficial than that of human parents. (Kuinoel.)

9. εἶτα.] The word is best rendered atqui, jam vero. Τῆς σαρκὸς, the best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed, stands for σαρκικοὺς, natural, as in Rom. ix. 8, τὰ τέκνα τῆς σαρκός. Here, then, as before, we have an argumentum ad hominem.

— ἐνετρεπ.] Meaning, 'we reverently submitted to their behests.' Οὐ π. μ. ὑποταγησόμεθα, &c., 'shall we not then obediently suffer what is inflicted by τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων?' A peculiar expression, and variously explained. Some, regarding the sentence as quite antithetical, and repeating ἡμῶν from the preceding clause, interpret, 'Father (i. e. Creator and Vivifier) of our souls.' A view of the sense adopted by most of the earlier modern Expositors, and, of the later ones, by Doddridge, Macknight, Stuart, and Scholefield.' Yet to this it may be objected, that God is the Creator of the body as well as the soul (and so at Numb. xvi. 22, God is addressed as ὁ Θεὸς τῶν πνευμάτων καὶ πάσης σαρκός); and indeed the sense thus arising is scarcely suitable to the argument. By others, the expression is taken as a Hebraism for spiritual Father, as opposed to our fleshly fathers. And so Kuinoel quotes Quintilian ii. 9, as calling preceptors 'parentes non quidem corporum, sed mentium.' This, however, presents too limited a view of the expression, of which the true purpose may rather be supposed to refer to the work of regeneration, effected by the Divine Spirit, whereby faithful Christians are said to be 'begotten again' of God, 1 Pet. i. 3; 1 John v. 18. So Wolf well remarks, 'that we have here a reference at once to the original corruption by sin, derived to us from our first parents, and that regeneration which we receive from our heavenly Father.' Thus, then, as Calvin observes, 'while God is the Father both of our souls and bodies (and to God alone, properly speaking, belongs the name of Father, though, by a sort of concession, that be applied to men); yet as in creating our souls He uses not the instrumentality of men, and also by the power of his Spirit He in a wonderful manner renews τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων, καὶ ζήσομεν; Οἱ μὲν γὰρ πρὸς 10 ὀλίγας ἡμέρας, κατὰ τὸ δοκοῦν αὐτοῖς, ἐπαίδευον· ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τὸ συμφέρον, εἰς τὸ μεταλαβεῖν τῆς ἁγιότητος αὐτοῦ.

h Is. 33. 17. James 3. 18. [h] Πᾶσα δὲ παιδεία πρὸς μὲν τὸ παρὸν οὐ δοκεῖ χαρᾶς εἶναι, 11 i Isa. 35. 3. Job 4. 3, 4. Ecclus. 25. 23. ἀλλὰ λύπης· ὕστερον δὲ καρπὸν εἰρηνικὸν τοῖς δι' αὐτῆς γεγυμνασμένοις ἀποδίδωσι δικαιοσύνης. [i] Διὸ τὰς παρει- 12 them, He is peculiarly κατ' ἐξοχὴν styled the Father of spirits.' Certainly, He alone who formed us in his image, can by his Spirit renew in us that defaced image.

— καὶ ζήσομεν] for ἵνα ζήσωμεν. So the Pesch. Syr. Translator renders, 'ut vivamus.' Not that the καὶ is absolutely (as Kuinoel considers it) used in the sense of ἵνα. It is rather put elliptically for καὶ οὕτως ζήσωμεν; and so corresponds to the preceding καὶ ἐνετρεπόμεθα. Render, 'and thus live;' i.e. attain everlasting happiness; according to that peculiar sense of the word also found in the Latin vivere; as in the well-known epigram, 'dum vivimus vivamus.'

10. Here the words πρὸς ὀλίγας ἡμέρας are to be repeated in the second member of the sentence. In the former case referring to the period of childhood; in the second, to the brief space of our sojourn on earth. Comp. 1 Pet. i. 6. Moreover, corresponding to κατὰ τὸ δοκοῦν αὐτοῖς in the first member, we have in the second, ἐπὶ τὸ συμφέρον scil. ἡμῖν. This expression, κατὰ τὸ δοκ. αὐτοῖς, (with which may be compared a similar one in Thucyd. i. 84, παρὰ τὸ δοκοῦν ὑμῖν) is to be understood not only of the arbitrary infliction of punishment, but also, by implication, of the neglecting to direct punishment to its chief end, the reformation and the final good of the offender; the aiming rather to excite fear, which is only the means, than endeavouring to promote that which is the real end of correction, moral improvement,—in short, the seeking an end of their own, or at least the gratification of their own ill-humour.

— εἰς τὸ μεταλαβεῖν τῆς ἁγιότητος αὐτοῦ.] Corresponding to what is said, 2 Pet. i. 4, ἵνα γένησθε θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως. These words are explanatory of the expression just before, συμφέρον; and while recognising the power of adversity to exercise and strengthen virtue, doubtless also allude to that regenerating influence of God's Spirit (referred to in the preceding verse), whereby adversity is sanctified to the spiritual good of the faithful.

11. πᾶσα δὲ παιδεία, &c.] Πρὸς τὸ παρόν. Meaning, 'the time while suffering under it.' Χαρᾶς may be considered as a Genitive of quality, put for an adjective. The expression δοκεῖ is very significant, nay emphatical, importing that adversity, however for the time it seem to be not joy, but rather grief, yet in reality it is, in its effects, 'all joy.' (James i. 2.)

— εἰρηνικόν.] A peculiar use of the word, of which consequently the exact sense has been disputed. Some explain the expression pacatum, or pacificum; i. e. as bringing with it the peace with God which springs from faith: an interpretation, however, not a little harsh. Others, as Theophylact, Calvin, Estius, Bengel, Macknight, and Scott, interpret tranquil, peaceful, lit. peace-bearing; with allusion to the result of such salutary chastisement, in producing peace of mind and peace with God (see Phil. iv. 7. Col. iii. 15), as opposed to the tumultuous impatience and rebellious murmuring too often felt and expressed during the period of correction. Others, again, as Kuin., Schleusner, Bretschneider, and Wahl, take the expression to mean (by an idiom derived from the Heb. שלום, which denotes whatever is in any way beneficial) wholesome, with reference to its effects in bestowing happiness. Yet this sense, though agreeable to the context, is quite unsupported by authority, and indeed too vague and indefinite. Still less admissible is that assigned by Grotius and Bos, jucundum, such being at once destitute of authority, and in itself frigid and jejune.

Of these several interpretations the second is, I apprehend, the best founded; according to which the sense may be well expressed in the words of Hyperius, 'qui pacem affert certam ac stabilem, et quidem non externam modo, sed quâ habent pacem apud Deum in conscientiis, ac certo sciunt Deum esse pacatum et propitium.' See Rom. v. 1. In δικαιοσύνης we have a Genitive of explication; q. d. 'even of righteousness.' Not, however, understanding thereby (with Kuinoel and others) rectitude, or probity, but that righteousness which has regard to God and his Law, and that not merely external (see Phil. iii. 6, 9), but internal, when the heart is right with God; so denoting piety towards God, godliness: a sense which the term not unfrequently bears in the New Test. So, Matt. v. 10, we have μακάριοι ἐστε οἱ δεδιωγμένοι ἕνεκεν δικαιοσύνης. And as peace and righteousness are here combined, so at James iii. 18, it is said, καρπὸς τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἐν εἰρήνῃ σπείρεται, &c.

Finally, as πρὸς τὸ παρὸν denotes the time of suffering, so does ὕστερον the period of experiencing its benefits, when we find that 'it is good for us that we have been afflicted,' (Ps. cxix. 71) and when we can say, with David, 'I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou of very faithfulness hast afflicted me;' or, in the words of a great Poet,

'For all we bless thee, most for the severe.
Great source of good alone, how kind in all!
In vengeance kind! Pain, Death, Gehenna save.'

12. On the above arguments respecting the uses of affliction, the Apostle now founds an impressive exhortation to constancy in the faith; and, as at the beginning of this hortatory part of the Epistle (x. 19, sq.) he had treated of the superiority of Christ's priesthood, and held out to view the severe punishments to be inflicted on apostates, since not even contempt of the Mosaic Law went unpunished; so now, on concluding at v. 12 the more general part of his hortatory portion of the Epistle, he finally excites them to perseverance in the faith. In the first place he treats μένας χεῖρας καὶ τὰ παραλελυμένα γόνατα ἀνορ-13 θώσατε· [k] καὶ τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς ποιήσατε τοῖς ποσὶν k Prov. 4. 26, 27.

14 ὑμῶν, ἵνα μὴ τὸ χωλὸν ἐκτραπῇ, ἰαθῇ δὲ μᾶλλον. [l] Εἰρή- Gal. 6. 1. l Rom. 12. 18.
νην διώκετε μετὰ πάντων, καὶ τὸν ἁγιασμὸν, οὗ χωρὶς 2 Tim. 2. 22. Matt. 5. 8. 2 Cor. 7. 1.
15 οὐδεὶς ὄψεται τὸν Κύριον· [m] ἐπισκοποῦντες μή τις ὑστερῶν m 2 Cor. 6. 1. 2 Pet. 1. 10. ἀπὸ τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ· μή τις ῥίζα πικρίας ἄνω Deut. 29. 18. supra 3. 12. Gal. 5. 12.

on the difference between the old and the new dispensation, showing the superiority of the latter over the former; and thence (at ver. 25) argues, that if despisers of the Mosaic Law suffered the severest punishment from men, much less shall apostates from the Gospel escape punishment from God. (Kuinoel.)

— τὰς παρειμένας—ὑμῶν.] These words are taken from Is. xxxv. 3, though forming, not a regular citation, but only an accommodation of a passage of Scripture to the present purpose. The exact nature of the metaphor in παρειμ. and παραλελ. has been disputed. Some suppose an allusion to the effects of disease, especially of paralysis, on the body: a view not a little harsh and frigid. It has been proved that both παραλύεσθαι and παρίεσθαι are used to denote the effects of fatigue and over-exertion on the body. So Eurip. Alc. 203, παρειμένη δὲ χειρὸς ἄθλιον βάρος· and at Jerem. vi. 24 we have παρελύθησαν αἱ χεῖρες. and μὴ ἐκλυέσθωσαν αἱ χεῖρες. Thus, though there may be, as many have supposed, an agonistic allusion; yet this is rather, I apprehend, meant to convey a graphic allusion to the effects of mental anxiety and dejection, by their effect on the body, when a man's soul sinks within him: in which light Bp. Sanderson seems to have viewed the expression in the following paraphrase: 'Support the hands that hang loose, and have not strength enough to lift up themselves; and bind up the feeble knees that are not well knit up in the joints, and are unable to bear up the body.' 'If, then, (says he) our spirits within us should be so shattered and disjointed through distrust in God, or, by entertaining fears and irresolution, be so enfeebled, that it is not able to stand out when fiercely assaulted, but yields the fort to Satan and his temptations; i. e. if, when persecution or tribulation arises, we forsake our standing, and shrink from the rules of true religion and good conscience, this is the ἔκλυσις and κέκμησις here spoken of.'

13. καὶ τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς, &c.] The words are taken from Prov. iv. 26, ὀρθὰς τροχιὰς ποίει σοῖς ποσὶ, καὶ τὰς ὁδούς σου κατεύθυνε. The meaning (withdrawing the metaphor) is, that 'they should avoid or remove every obstacle which might impede them in running their Christian course; whether of self-indulgence on the one hand (what is called, Luke xxi. 34, the being overcharged with surfeiting, &c.), or of a slavish fear on the other;' the whole, as Stuart observes, conveying the idea that to go straight forward in their Christian course, regardless of any afflictions to which this may subject them, is the only way of safety for those who are in danger of halting.

14. The Apostle now proceeds to remind them of various duties to which their Christian profession, and the times in which they lived, rendered it necessary that they should pay a particular regard. (Stuart.) Exhortations to peace and to holiness are well introduced after that to perseverance in the faith, since the former would much contribute to produce and promote the latter.

— εἰρήνην διώκετε.] So at 1 Cor. xiv. 1, we have διώκ. τὴν ἀγάπην.

— καὶ τὸν ἁγιασμόν.] The term ἁγιασμὸς in general signifies purity of heart and life, conformity to God (Levit. xix. 2), and to the holy example of Christ. But, from what follows, ver. 16, it is evidently meant (as the ancient and the best modern Commentators are agreed) to denote purity of morals, and that which forms the principal part of sanctification, the abstaining from fornication. So it is said, 1 Thess. iv. 3, τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ ἁγιασμὸς ὑμῶν, &c.; and at ver. 8 the two terms ἀκαθαρσία and ἁγιασμὸς are opposed.

— οὗ χωρὶς οὐδεὶς ὄψεται τὸν K.] Meaning, by a Hebrew idiom, 'shall be admitted to the happiness of heaven, the abode of God and Christ.' 'It is (says Dean Tucker) the very end and essence of the covenant of grace, that God might purify unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works. The whole of the Gospel is uniform as to this point, and is summed up in this short but expressive sentence, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."'

15. ἐπισκοποῦντες μή τις, &c.] Literally, 'seeing to it;' i. e. looking diligently, both to themselves and to others. At μή τις ὑστερῶν supply ᾖ. By τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ is usually understood the Christian religion; the caution being thus supposed to be against apostasy. Yet such a sense is forbidden by the term ὑστ., unless that be taken, in a very unusual sense, for deficere. Hence it is better to understand the expression to denote the special mercy and favour of God in giving us his sanctifying grace; and, from the close connexion of this clause with the preceding one, καὶ τὸν ἁγιασμὸν, οὗ χωρὶς οὐδεὶς ὄψεται τὸν Κύριον, we may suppose the two sentiments to have a mutual affinity; the admonition being, that 'no one fail of,' i. e. by not improving, lose that portion of sanctifying grace given from above, whereby alone he can be enabled to fulfil the injunction to 'perfect holiness in the fear of God,' 2 Cor. vii. 1. 2 Thess. ii. 13. In a similar sense ὑστερεῖν occurs at Rom. iii. 23, ὑστεροῦνται τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, 'the favour and approbation of God.'

Viewing the scope of the whole passage, it will appear that the words μή τις ὑστερῶν—πολλοὶ contain the general sentiment intended to be expressed; and the two following clauses, μή τις πόρνος, ἢ βέβηλος, &c., certain particular ones, serving the purpose of exemplification, and meant to make the warning in question more pointed. Thus as the words μή τις ῥίζα πικρίας, &c., are meant (as appears from the passage of Deut. xxix.

n Gen. 25. 33. Eph. 5. 3. Col. 3. 5. 1 Thess. 4. 3. o Gen. 27. 34, &c.
p Exod. 19. 12, &c. & 20. 18. Deut. 5. 22 φύουσα ἐνοχλῇ, καὶ διὰ ταύτης μιανθῶσι πολλοί· [n] μή 16 τις πόρνος, ἢ βέβηλος ὡς Ἠσαῦ, ὃς ἀντὶ βρώσεως μιᾶς ἀπέδοτο τὰ πρωτοτόκια αὐτοῦ· [o] ἴστε γὰρ ὅτι καὶ μετέ- 17 πειτα, θέλων κληρονομῆσαι τὴν εὐλογίαν, ἀπεδοκιμάσθη· μετανοίας γὰρ τόπον οὐχ εὗρε, καίπερ μετὰ δακρύων ἐκζητήσας αὐτήν.

[p] Οὐ γὰρ προσεληλύθατε ψηλαφωμένῳ ὄρει, καὶ κεκαυ- 18

18 here adverted to) of the crime of apostasy, or of heresy, or profaneness in general; so what follows, μή τις πόρνος, ἢ βέβηλος, is directed against sensuality or worldly-mindedness in general; the person thus profligate and profane being compared with Esau, because, as he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, so such an one sells the favour of God for gratifications the most fleeting and worthless.

In thus explaining the expression ῥίζα πικρίας at once of apostasy and heresy, and of a corrupt life, I am supported by the authority of Theodoret, who thus annotates: ῥίζαν δὲ πικρίας καὶ πονηρὰ δόγματα καὶ τὸν διεφθαρμένον ὠνόμασε βίον.

With respect to the nature of the metaphor in these words, μή τις ῥίζα πικρίας—ἐνοχλῇ, we have here, I apprehend, one of the many agricultural allusions found in the New Test.; the infection of 'evil communication' being compared to that of bitter and noxious weeds finding their way into a garden, which strike their roots deep and wide, so as to be with difficulty eradicated, and spread so fast as to infect the ground in every direction; an allusion dropped in the term following, μιανθῶσι, which denotes, in a general way, the pernicious influence in question. And here we may compare similar sentiments, conveyed under different metaphors, at 1 Cor. v. 6—13. xv. 31—34. 2 Tim. ii. 14—18. iii. 6—9. The expression ἐνοχλῇ signifies, 'should annoy,' 'give trouble to.'

In order to avoid the confusion of metaphor in ἐνοχλῇ and μιανθῶσι, Grotius, Whitby, Mill, and Valcknaer would, for ἐνοχλῇ, read ἐν χολῇ, which is supported by the Hebrew text in the passage of Deut. xxix. 18, here referred to. But since seven MSS. of the Septuagint (including the Alexandrian) read as in the Apostle's text, it is little probable that the other reading was the general one in his age. Indeed, the researches of Mr. Jackson, cited in Holmes's Septuagint, go far to prove that such was a true rendering of the Hebrew, according to the copies used by the LXX., and that the Masoretical reading of our present copies is wrong. Be that as it may, such seems to have been the reading of the Septuagint, whether the true one or not matters little, since the words in question are not a regular quotation, but only (as at ver. 12) an application of the passage to the case in point; and the above reading being suited to the Apostle's purpose was adopted by him.

16. μή τις πόρνος, &c.] These words (as we have before seen) are illustrative of the preceding; and, as Calvin observes, having first exhorted them to 'holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord,' the Apostle now warns them against such things as are contrary thereto, fornication and profaneness. So meaning to say, 'lest, for instance, any of you be a fornicator, or profane person generally, as was Esau.' 'Fornication, (as Macknight observes) from the great propensity of mankind to it, being here especially mentioned, as an instance of the vicious sensuality which excludes men from heaven.' In subjoining ἢ βέβηλος the Apostle, as Calvin well points out, 'descends from what is particular to what is general,—from fornication, which is one of the things contrary to holiness, to profaneness, which is the general opposite of holiness.'

By the term βέβηλος is denoted one who treats sacred things with contempt, who has no sense of religion, and lives without God in the world; who despises spiritual blessings, from being wholly carnal and sensual, and therefore will readily barter his heavenly inheritance for one wretched sensual gratification, as that of gluttony. Hence, as Hyperius observes, 'it is here meant that all those are profane, who being given up to any sensual appetites, lightly esteem spiritual goods, preferring carnal things to spiritual.' Compare Rom. viii. 6 (which passage serves to confirm the foregoing view), and the Note of Calvin, and also that of Bp. Beveridge in D'Oyly and Mant.

17. ἀπεδοκιμάσθη] 'he was (i. e. his request was) rejected.'

— μετανοίας γὰρ τόπον, &c.] The best Expositors are agreed that the term μετάνοια here signifies a changing of any one's intention (as in Thucydides, iii. 36. 5, ὑστερείᾳ μετάνοιά τις εὐθὺς αὐτοῖς, καὶ ἀναλογισμὸς, &c., and Josephus, Bell. i. 4. 4, ἐμισοῦν τὴν μετάνοιαν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοῦ τρόπου ἀνωμαλίαν), and that τόπος here denotes means; the general sense being, 'he found no means of inducing [Isaac] to change his intention, or alter his words.' So Wisd. Sol. xii. 10, we have κρίνων δὲ καταβραχὺ ἐδίδους (read ἐδίδως) τόπον μετανοίας, and at Clemens Alex. i. 7, μετανοίας τόπον ἔδωκε. According to the more common interpretation, by which the term μεταν. is understood of Esau, the αὐτὴν will have to be referred, somewhat harshly, to εὐλογίαν.

18—21. In again pressing on his readers the duty of perseverance in faith and holiness, the Apostle dwells on the superior excellence of the Christian religion; contrasting the condition of worshippers under the Old and the New law, which he designates by the two mountains, Sinai and Sion; illustrating the subject from the narration at Exod. xix. 20, sq., and with reference also to Deut. iv. 11. v. 5. The latter dispensation, he shows, is not, as was the Mosaic, severe, onerous, and minatory; but holds out salvation, and infuses joy, hope, and confidence. Hence, however, he argues that its very superior excelγος ἤχῳ καὶ φωνῇ ῥημάτων, ἧς οἱ ἀκούσαντες παρῃτήσαντο Deut. 5. 5, 25. & 18. 16.

19 μένῳ πυρὶ, καὶ γνόφῳ καὶ σκότῳ καὶ θυέλλῃ, [q] καὶ σάλπιγ- q Exod. 20. 19.
20 μὴ προστεθῆναι αὐτοῖς λόγον· ([r] οὐκ ἔφερον γὰρ τὸ δια- r Exod 19. 13.
στελλόμενον· Κἂν θηρίον θίγῃ τοῦ ὄρους, λιθοβολη-21 θήσεται [ἢ βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται]· καὶ — οὕτω s Gal. 4. 26. φοβερὸν ἦν τὸ φανταζόμενον,—Μωϋσῆς εἶπεν· Ἔκφοβός Rev. 3. 12. & 21. 2, 10. Phil. 8. 20.
22 εἰμι καὶ ἔντρομος·) [s] ἀλλὰ προσεληλύθατε Σιὼν ὄρει, καὶ Deut. 33. 2. Jude 14.

lence would render its rejection proportionably more criminal and perilous to reject it.

18. οὐ γὰρ προσεληλύθατε, &c.] The γὰρ has reference to the caution at ver. 15, μὴ ὑστερεῖν ἀπὸ τ. χάρ. τ. Θ. Προσέρχεσθαι is a term denoting religious service and worship generally; though it may designate, as here, embracing a religion. Of the expression ψηλαφ. the sense has been disputed. Many Expositors explain it, 'touched [from heaven],' scil. ἐν πυρὶ, by lightning, with which, as the narration of Moses shows, the mountain was struck. But it is observable that the term ψηλαφάω signifies, not to touch, but (what were quite unsuited to the idea of fire) to feel of, to handle. Hence it is better to retain the ancient and common interpretation, by which ψηλαφωμένῳ is taken for ψηλαφητῷ, in the sense ad contrectabilem, 'which could be handled;' and so will be equivalent to αἰσθητῷ and ἐπιγείῳ, denoting 'the material and corporeal, or palpable and tangible mount, in opposition to the incorporeal, spiritual, and heavenly one,' the heavenly Sion, ver. 22. So Quintil. (cited by Kuinoel) says, 'jus, quod sit incorporale, apprehendi manu non posse.' Κεκαυμ. π., 'and that burnt with fire.' See Deut. iv. 11.

The words following advert to the tremendous circumstances attending the promulgation of the law at Mount Sinai, and which struck such terror into those present at it; circumstances whose august dignity must not be lowered by attempts at minute explanation; and where (as in similar passages at 1 Cor. xv. 52, and 1 Thess. iv. 16) it becomes the inquirer to 'pull off his shoes from off his feet, as being on holy ground.'

19. παρῃτήσαντο μὴ προστεθῆναι, &c.] On this use of μὴ after verbs containing a negation, see Matthæi, Gr. Gr. § 533.

20. Here the Apostle adverts to a circumstance which had especially caused their alarm; namely, that so strict was the edict which forbad the mountain to be touched, that even a beast touching it was to be stoned. See Exod. xix. 13.

— τὸ διαστελλόμενον] 'the interdict [expressed as follows].' For the words ἢ βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται after λιθοβ. there is so little authority of MSS. and Versions, that they have been justly cancelled by almost all Editors from Bengel to Scholz.

21. καὶ, οὕτω, &c.] Render, 'Nay, so terrible was the spectacle;' καὶ here standing for ἀλλὰ καί. Τὸ φανταζόμενον is for τὸ φαινόμενον. Μωϋσῆς, i. e. 'even Moses,' notwithstanding his typical mediatorship, sanctity, and long communion with God.

— ἔκφοβός ε. καὶ ἔντ.] This, indeed, is not expressly mentioned in the Old Test. narration of the transaction; the terror ascribed to Moses at Deut. ix. 19 being upon another occasion. Stuart, however, thinks it is implied in Exod xix. 16. And, indeed, Moses may be supposed, in effect, to have said this to himself (see Job iv. 14); and, therefore, the Apostle might ascribe to him words uttered by him on a similar occasion, as recorded in Deut. ix. 9; and that, in order the more strongly to impress on his readers the terrific nature of the Mosaic economy. That the words καὶ ἔντρομος were then in some copies of the Sept., we may infer from the reading of the Vulgate.

22—25. Here the contrast between the two dispensations is strongly marked. By Σιὼν is meant the heavenly Sion, as opposed to the palpable or tangible mount Sinai; and the general sense intended (withdrawing the sublime imagery under which it is conceived) is as follows: 'You are now admitted to the privileges of the heavenly city, are come to a dispensation mild and benign, and which will lead to the possession of all the glories and blessings of the celestial Jerusalem.' Here, however, it is of importance to ascertain what is the exact subject of the present description. Most Commentators suppose this to be the Christian Church on earth. To this view, however, Kuinoel strongly objects, as inconsistent with the words μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων, and those further on, πνεύμασι δικαίων τετελειωμένων. The intent of this portion is rather, he thinks, to set forth the certainty of that blessedness destined for Christ's faithful worshippers; a blessedness as certain as if they were already enjoying it, insomuch that they are said, in a manner, to have already arrived at heaven, and the life everlasting; see ix. 11. 13, 14, compared with xi. 10. 14. Such, too, is the view taken by Knapp and Stuart, the latter of whom observes, that 'the mention of such an assembly of angels, &c., shows that the writer intends to describe the objects of the invisible world, as seen with the eye of faith; not things palpable, nor the objects of sense.' And so Abp. Newcome remarks, that 'Christians are represented as already come to that state which faith and obedience will secure to them,' meaning (as a celebrated writer well expresses it), that 'a lively faith is able to anticipate, in some measure, the joys of that heavenly society which the soul shall actually possess hereafter.' Considering, however, the manifest contrast here intended of the new with the old dispensation, I see not how the sense first mentioned can be excluded, under any plea of certain expressions occurring unsuitable thereto. Both the above senses, indeed, may be supposed to have been intended; the economy of Christ's Church on earth, with all its promises and ordinances, being intimately connected with that which subsists in the holy abode of God and Christ in heaven, to which it is continually transmitting fresh inhabitants. See t Luke 10. 20. Gen. 18. 25. supra 11. 40. Phil. 3. 12. u Gen. 4. 10. Exod. 24. 8. 1 Tim. 2. 5. supra 8. 6. & 9. 15. & 10. 22. & 11. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

πόλει Θεοῦ ζῶντος, Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ· καὶ μυριάσιν, ἀγγέλων ᵗ πανηγύρει, καὶ ἐκκλησίᾳ πρωτοτόκων ἐν οὐρα- 23 νοῖς ἀπογεγραμμένων, καὶ κριτῇ Θεῷ πάντων, καὶ πνεύμασι δικαίων τετελειωμένων· ᵘ καὶ διαθήκης νέας μεσίτῃ Ἰησοῦ, 24 καὶ αἵματι ῥαντισμοῦ * κρεῖττον λαλοῦντι παρὰ τὸν Ἄβελ.

Revel. xi. 1, 2. xiv. 1—5. xxi. 9—27. It is probable, however, that the former sense was at first the sole one intended, and, properly speaking, terminates at the words Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ (though resumed at ver. 24); after which, for the encouragement of those now fighting 'the good fight of faith' is, at ver. 23, interspersed imagery suited to no other than the heavenly Jerusalem, in the full sense of the expression, even heaven itself; the persons here addressed being represented as having already joined the great family of God in heaven, and become registered citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem (over which reigns God, the supreme Ruler of all), and already in the blessed presence of Christ, the Mediator of that covenant which had brought them thither. And here it may be observed, that at the words καὶ διαθήκης νέας μεσίτῃ the writer forsakes the imagery suited to the Church of God in heaven, and returns to that on earth; for Ἰησοῦ seems to belong to the former, and μεσίτῃ διαθήκης νέας to the latter; Ἰησοῦ being the vinculum which connects them; though the term προσεληλύθατε must be accommodated in sense to each. In the latter they are said to come to Christ, as coming to his religion, embracing the covenant and dispensation obtained by His mediation; and not mediation only, but atonement (as is expressed in the next words, καὶ αἵματι ῥαντισμοῦ, which contain a contrast to the typical sprinkling under the Levitical law; see Exod. xxiv. 8); an atonement, it is said (by a boldly sublime figure, probably suggested by that at Gen. iv. 10, φωνὴ αἵματος τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ σου βοᾷ πρός με, ἐκ τῆς γῆς), which 'speaketh better things than the blood of Abel;' namely, inasmuch as that cried aloud to God for vengeance, this proclaims pardon and peace.

Such, then, appears to be the general import of the whole passage. As respects the phraseology itself, it must be observed that Ἱερουσαλὴμ ἐπουρανίῳ is in apposition with, and explanatory of, the preceding; and on the sense of the expression the reader is referred to the Note at xi. 10. The term πανήγυρις properly denoted any solemn festival, as that of the Olympic or Pythian games, at which great multitudes used to be assembled together (see Blomfield on Æschyl. Theb. 206, and Thucydides, iii. 104. 1); and thus the word was adopted by the LXX. to express the Hebr. מועד, 'a solemn religious assembly,' at Hos. ix. 5, where is added חג, 'a festival,' rendered πανήγυρις by Symmachus, at Levit. xxiii. 41. Hence is, I think, confirmed the propriety of the punctuation of the next words, which I have here adopted, with the best Critics, from Bengel to Vater, Kuinoel, and Scholz, who show that while the common punctuation, καὶ μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων, πανηγύρει καὶ ἐκκλησίᾳ, involves a pleonasm unsuitable to the close brevity of the writer, this is required by the structure of the whole portion, of which each paragraph is commenced by καί, and continued, where any addition is made to it, by nouns in apposition, without any conjunctive particle between them. Render, 'and to myriads, even the joyful convocation or assembly of angels, as hymning the praises of God around his throne;' compare Rev. v. 11, seq. and Psalm cxlviii. 2. If, however, there be thought a harshness in thus pointing after μυριάσιν, we may remove the comma, and place it after ἀγγέλων, so that we retain it after πανηγύρει; or, what is still better, we may point καὶ μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων πανηγύρει, with Theophylact, who, after remarking that πανηγύρει implies the idea of joy, adds, ἡ πανήγυρις οὖν αὕτη ἐν μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων συνίσταται. And such is probably the true construction; and certainly that adopted by the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who renders, 'et ad cœtum myriadum angelorum.'

The term πρωτότοκοι here simply denotes (without any reference to the original idea of primogeniture, see Kuinoel and Stuart) 'those who enjoy distinguished privileges, or are well beloved,'—those a little after designated as 'the spirits of just men made perfect;' including, however, those who, in every age, have lived in the faith and fear of Christ, whose robes have been washed in the blood of the Lamb, and who are accordingly admitted to the 'inheritance of the saints in light.' Ἀπογεγραμμένων should be rendered 'enrolled;' the term being employed suitably to the preceding ones πόλει and ἐκκλησίᾳ. Heaven is often in the New Test. represented under the figure of an earthly political society, of which those entered on its list are citizens, with allusion to which the heavenly city is represented as having its 'book of life,' wherein are inscribed the names of those admitted to salvation, though that is not here applicable.

At κριτῇ Θεῷ πάντων there is a transposition for Θεῷ κριτῇ πάντων. The expression κριτῇ πάντων has, indeed, been thought scarcely suited to the context; but we may suppose (with Kuin.) that this is a designation of God intended at once for consolation and for warning. By the term πνεύμασι must, of course, be understood the disembodied spirits, as 1 Pet. iii. 19, τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, and the Song of the three children, v. 63, εὐλογεῖτε, πνεύματα καὶ ψυχαὶ δικαίων, τὸν Κύριον. Τετελ. signifies consummated by admission to their final state of glory and happiness. See Notes at xi. 39, and Phil. iii. 12.

Instead of the common reading κρείττονα, most of the MSS. and Versions, together with several Fathers and all the early Editions except the Erasmian, have κρεῖττον, which was preferred by Mill, Bengel, and Wetstein, and has been adopted by Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Tittman and Scholz. The common reading may, as Kuinoel thinks, have been introduced from vi. 9. vii. 19. viii. 6. x. 34; but it would rather seem to have come from the scribes, and the A to 25 [x] Βλέπετε, μὴ παραιτήσησθε τὸν λαλοῦντα· εἰ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι x Supra 2. 2, 3. & 10. 28, 29.

οὐκ ἔφυγον, τὸν ἐπὶ [τῆς] γῆς παραιτησάμενοι χρηματί-ζοντα, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἡμεῖς οἱ τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν ἀποστρε-26 φόμενοι· [y] οὗ ἡ φωνὴ τὴν γῆν ἐσάλευσε τότε· νῦν δὲ y Hag. 2. 6. supra v. 19.
ἐπήγγελται, λέγων· Ἔτι ἅπαξ ἐγὼ σείω οὐ μόνον 27 τὴν γῆν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν οὐρανόν. [z] Τὸ δέ, Ἔτι ἅπαξ z Ps. 102. 27. Matt. 24. 35. 2 Pet. 3. 10.
δηλοῖ τῶν σαλευομένων τὴν μετάθεσιν, ὡς πεποιημένων, have arisen from the A following. The expression signifies what is more salutary and available towards removing the wrath of God, namely, mercy and pardon. By Abel must of course (as Knapp, Bp. Middleton, and Kuinoel observe) be meant, by implication, the blood of Abel, or as Abel speaks by his blood; for, as Crellius, Theophylact, Fell, Rosenmuller, and Stuart explain, while that called for vengeance (see Gen. iv. 10) on the murderer, that of Christ (the blood of sprinkling) speaks (i. e. assures us of) atonement and pardon, promising us admission to the true holy of holies, heaven itself. See x. 19.

25. τὸν λαλοῦντα.] This is by many modern Expositors referred to God; but by the ancient and some modern ones, to Christ; which is far more agreeable to the context.

— οὐκ ἔφυγον.] Supply, from the subject matter, δίκην; as at ἡμεῖς, also φευξόμεθα. In πολλῷ μᾶλλον we have an argumentum à minori ad majus. 'Αποστρ. signifies, 'turn away from,' reject, or renounce; a stronger term than παραιτησάμενοι just before.

With respect to the words τὸν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς χρηματίζοντα, as opposed to τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν, these have been not a little disputed. One thing is clear,—that χρηματίζειν here signifies to 'promulgate the will of God to man,' as Jer. xxix. 18, λόγον ἐχρημάτισαν ἐν τῷ ὀνόματί μου, and Hebr. viii. 5, καθὼς κεχρημάτισται Μωϋσῆς, and xi. 7, and often in Josephus. Most Commentators understand by these two expressions Moses and Christ; the former as being God's internuncius on earth; the latter as speaking from heaven, by the Apostles and ministers in the Gospel. Yet thus the emphasis would be rather in words than in sense; and the sentiment expressed would involve something not a little incongruous and frigid. Some, indeed, understand the two expressions of God; others, the last only: but the former is quite inadmissible, and the latter not a little harsh. There is here evidently a reference to Moses and Christ, though not, I conceive, in the way above adverted to. It is best (with Cramer, Storr, Böhme, and Kuinoel) to take the two expressions τὸν ἐπὶ γῆς (for such, instead of ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, has been rightly edited, from many MSS. and early Editions, by Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Scholz, Vater, and Tittman,) and τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν as belonging, not to χρημ., but to ὄντα understood, so as to be equivalent to the adjectives ἐπίγειον and οὐράνιον. Compare i. 1. That ὁ ὢν ἐπὶ γῆς may be for ἐπίγειος, is plain from 1 Cor. xv. 47, ὁ πρῶτος ἄνθρωπος ἐκ γῆς, χοϊκός. Thus also the expression τὸν ὄντα ἀπ' οὐρανῶν here corresponds to ὁ Κύριος ἐξ οὐρανοῦ there; denoting the heavenly origin of Christ. Hence, though almost all Commentators repeat χρηματίζοντα at τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν, yet it seems not only unnecessary, but even improper, as not agreeable to the writer's meaning; which, I apprehend, was to designate Jesus as him who actually came from heaven, the Lord from heaven; q. d. 'not merely an inspired person such as Moses, but as Son of God, one with, and therefore representing, the Deity.'

26. οὗ ἡ φωνὴ, &c.] i. e. 'the voice sounding from Sinai.' See supra ver. 19. The best Expositors are in general agreed that the word οὗ refers (as grammatical propriety would require) to Christ, notwithstanding that the thing is in Exodus ascribed to God; nor is there any inconsistency, since the New Test. and the Rabbinical writings agree in representing it as the Son of God, who appeared to the patriarchs, who delivered the Law by angels, and who was the Angel-Jehovah worshipped in the Hebrew Church. See Acts vii. 53, and 1 Cor. x. 4. 9. By ἐσάλευσε is meant, literally, 'made it shake as a ship at anchor is tossed by the waves.'

— νῦν δέ.] By νῦν, as opposed to τότε, is here denoted the period of the new dispensation, to which (as is indicated by the preterite passive ἐπήγγελται) pertained that promise which had long ago been declared. (Kuinoel.) The term ἐπαγγ. seems here to include the ideas both of declaration and of promise; the latter, however, predominating. See Newcome.

The citation in question is from Hagg. ii. 7, Sept., and we have here exactly represented the sense of the Hebrew, though with a slight change of words, for adaptation to the present purpose; and οὐ μόνον—ἀλλὰ is intended to strengthen the sentiment. It would seem, too, that the writer did not intend to stop at οὐρανὸν, but to go forward to the end of ver. 7; and, indeed, the mention of the first words would, to persons so conversant in Scripture, bring to mind the whole. The words plainly predict that mighty change in religion, which was to be introduced by the promulgation of the Gospel. In these, and other descriptions given by the Prophets (as Is. xiii. 13, and Joel ii. 10. iii. 16), of the changes which should precede, and the mighty power which should accompany, the last and perfect dispensation of Christ, the thing is represented by God's shaking—not, as at the giving of the Law, the earth only, but both the earth and the heaven, i. e. effecting a complete and total change.

27. τὸ δὲ, ἔτι ἅπαξ—μετάθεσιν.] Here we have, as Kuinoel remarks, a sort of comment from the writer on the passage of the Prophet; q. d. 'This yet once more signifieth the removal of the things that are put in commotion;' evidently meaning the abolition of the polity, rites, and ordinances of the Jewish dispensation: of which use of ἅπαξ an example is adduced by Carpzov from Philo, p. 305, τὸ μὲν γὰρ ἅπαξ, ἔοικε, &c. Thus, then, (as Peirce observes) 'from this expres-a 1 Pet. 2. 5. b Deut. 4. 24. Is. 66. 15. Ps. 97. 3. a Rom. 12. 10. Eph. 4. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 2. 17. & 3. 8. & 4. 8. b Gen. 18. 1. & 19. 1. Rom. 12. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 9. c Matt. 25. 36. Rom. 12. 15. Col. 4. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 8.

ἵνα μείνῃ τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα. [a] διὸ βασιλείαν ἀσάλευτον 28 παραλαμβάνοντες, ἔχωμεν χάριν, δι' ἧς λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως τῷ Θεῷ μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας· [b] καὶ γὰρ ὁ 29 Θεὸς ἡμῶν πῦρ καταναλίσκον.

XIII. [a] Η ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΙΑ μενέτω· [b] τῆς φιλοξενίας 1,2 μὴ ἐπιλανθάνεσθε· διὰ ταύτης γὰρ ἔλαθόν τινες ξενίσαντες ἀγγέλους. [c] Μιμνήσκεσθε τῶν δεσμίων, ὡς συνδεδεμένοι· 3

sion ἅπαξ (which may signify, in such a context, once for all), the Apostle means to suggest the inference that God will make but one such alteration, and consequently that the things which succeed upon that shaking shall continue unshaken.' Of ὡς πεποιημένων the sense is, upon the whole, best explained, 'as of things that were merely created, and therefore so constituted as to be temporary.' Thus πεποιημένων will be for χειροποιήτων, caduca, mutabilia, as opposed to τοῖς ἀσαλεύτοις, as at viii. 2. ix. 24, τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις; it being meant, that 'the ancient order of things, viz. the Jewish dispensation, will be changed, removed, abolished, in like manner as the objects of the natural creation: all which change or abolition of the old dispensation was to take place, in order that a new one might be introduced, which should undergo no change; ἵνα μείνῃ τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα, i. e. continue to the end of the world unshaken, so as not to be abolished.'

28, 29. Here we have an inference from the preceding, forming a continuation of the exhortation commenced at ver. 25, to peace and holiness; and constituting, as Hyperius observes, a conclusion to the three suasory considerations preceding, especially the last; q. d. 'Such being the case, let us,' &c.

28. βασιλείαν ἀσάλευτον.] Meaning the βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, the Gospel dispensation, which is never to be abolished.

— ἔχωμεν χάριν.] This is usually explained, 'let us hold fast the grace vouchsafed to us in the new dispensation; let us continue stedfast in that faith and dispensation delivered in the Gospel, whereby alone both our persons and our services are rendered acceptable unto God:' an exposition, however, involving no little harshness, and which would require the Article τὴν before χάριν. Hence preferable is the sense assigned by Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Œcumenius, of the ancient, and, of modern Expositors, Dindorf, Rosenmuller, Stuart, Böhme, Kuinoel, &c.: 'Let us manifest our gratitude to God, whereby we may serve Him acceptably, with reverence and godly fear.' Yet even this does not suit well with the words following. It would rather seem that the sense is simply, 'Let us [seek to] have grace, whereby,' &c.; by that use of ἔχειν (also found at Matt. xiii. 12, and Luke viii. 18, ὅστις γὰρ ἔχει, δοθήσεται αὐτῷ), by which it signifies to have to good purpose by keeping and improving it. And in nearly the same way, I find, Doddridge understood the passage, observing that 'in this oblique intimation, by which it is, as it were, taken for granted that we may certainly have grace if we take proper methods for obtaining it, there is something peculiarly impressive.' The grace here spoken of is by Estius explained, the grace of reconciliation, regeneration, and adoption by Christ. But we may rather, with Grotius, understand by it the grace of the Holy Spirit, as agent in that reconciliation,—a grace, it must be borne in mind, to be sought by the prayer of faith. So Hyperius observes: 'Gratia hæc diligenter apprehendenda est per fidem, siquidem in ea stamus (2 Cor. i. 24) et certificati de salute æterna gloriamur sub spe gloriæ Dei.'

— μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας.] The term εὐλαβ. is not well rendered by Stuart, devotion. The sense is best represented by our common Version, 'godly fear,' which, besides being supported by the authority of the ancient Versions and Glossographers, and by the best modern Commentators, is required by the words following (derived from Deut. iv. 24), which assign a reason why this godly fear should be entertained, denouncing the same severity of Divine wrath to apostatizing Christians, as that which formerly lighted on unbelieving Israel.

29. καὶ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς, &c.] An awfully sublime image, suggesting the idea of a God who can, like a consuming fire, bring to utter destruction; the terrible fate of those who 'know not God, and obey not the Gospel.'

XIII. The portion of the Epistle which now follows is occupied with particular exhortations to various duties. (Heinrichs.)

1. ἡ φιλαδελφία μενέτω.] Meaning, 'let mutual love one to another, as Christians, continue to be cultivated [as heretofore], and firmly rooted in your lives and conversation.'

2. τῆς φιλοξενίας.] A virtue closely connected with the foregoing, and a main evidence thereof; being one especially to be practised towards their Christian brethren, since the distress occasioned by persecution would cast many upon the charity of others.

— ἔλαθόν τινες ξενίσαντες] 'unconsciously entertained.' So meaning to evince that greater honour among men, and consequently reward from God, sometimes attends the discharge of this duty, than the circumstances of the case would lead us to expect; alluding to the case of Abraham and of Lot, of whom the former entertained three, and the latter, two angels. See Gen. xviii. 1, & xix. 1.

3. μιμνήσκεσθε τῶν δεσμίων, &c.] Meaning, that 'they should have such a lively fellow-feeling with the prisoners, as if they were fellow-sufferers;' though from the context the term μιμν. must imply relief as well as sympathy. Τῶν κακουχουμένων, 'those who are suffering distress,' namely, for the Gospel's sake; see supra xi. 37. By the words ὡς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὄντες ἐν σώματι it is intimated, that they themselves are, while yet alive, exposed to similar distress, so as to need sympathy and support from others.

4 τῶν κακουχουμένων, ὡς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὄντες ἐν σώματι. Τίμιος ὁ γάμος ἐν πᾶσι, καὶ ἡ κοίτη ἀμίαντος· πόρνους δὲ καὶ 5 μοιχοὺς κρινεῖ ὁ Θεός. [d] Ἀφιλάργυρος ὁ τρόπος· ἀρκούμενοι τοῖς παροῦσιν. αὐτὸς γὰρ εἴρηκεν· Οὐ μή σε ἀνῶ, οὐδ' 6 οὐ μή σε ἐγκαταλίπω· [e] ὥστε θαῤῥοῦντας ἡμᾶς λέγειν· Κύριος ἐμοὶ βοηθὸς, καὶ οὐ φοβηθήσομαι τί ποι-7 ήσει μοι ἄνθρωπος; [f] Μνημονεύετε τῶν ἡγουμένων ὑμῶν, οἵτινες ἐλάλησαν ὑμῖν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ· ὧν ἀναθεωροῦντες τὴν ἔκβασιν τῆς ἀναστροφῆς, μιμεῖσθε τὴν πίστιν.

d Ex. 23. 8. Deut. 16. 19. & 31. 6, 8. 1 Chr. 28. 20. Josh 1. 5. Prov. 15. 16. Matt. 6. 25, 34. Phil. 4. 11. 1 Tim. 6. 6, &c. e Ps. 56. 4. 11, 12. & 118. 6.
f Infra v. 17. supra 6. 12.

4. τίμιος ὁ γάμος.] From the nature of the contest (which is hortatory) the ellipsis here must be, not ἔστι, but ἔστω. Ἐν πᾶσι may be rendered 'inter omnes,' as is done by the Peschito Syriac Translator. Here Böhme and Kuinoel supply cœlibes; supposing (what is very probable) that among these Hebrew Christians there were some,—like those censured at 1 Tim. iv. 3,—who, by what they thought a holy contempt of matrimony, gave a handle to immorality both in themselves and others. Yet ἐν πᾶσι may simply mean 'among persons,' without exception on the score of peculiar engagements to piety and holiness.

In the next words, καὶ ἡ κοίτη ἀμίαντος, we have a particular injunction, intended for the married,—namely, that they should keep themselves from adultery; ἡ κοίτη being a term to signify (as often in the later writers) marriage. So we have the phrase κοίτην μιαίνειν in Josephus and Plutarch.

This injunction is then followed up with a solemn assurance, which seems to have reference to both the preceding injunctions; q. d. 'Let the single marry; for fornicators God will judge: let the married keep themselves pure from adultery; for adulterers God will judge,' i. e. condemn and punish. This judgment, then, the Apostle denounces not only against adultery, but fornication, which leads to it. How different from the heathen sages and legislators,—who tolerated simple fornication, as tending to preserve the virtue of married women! See Plato in his Philebus, cited in Athenæus, 511. D.

5. ἀφιλάργυρος ὁ τρόπος] scil. ἔστω. Τρόπος here stands for ἦθος, signifying, as often in the Classical writers, habits and character; liter., 'turn of mind, disposition.' Ἀρκ. τοῖς παροῦσιν. Meaning, by an ellipsis of πράγμασι (which word is expressed in Dinarch, p. 94. 34), 'be content with your present condition.' So Phocyl. 4, ἀρκεῖσθαι τοῖς παρέουσι, καὶ ἀλλοτρίων ἀπέχεσθαι. On the various grounds and reasons, which exist for contentment with our present condition (whatever it be) see Bp. Sanderson's two Sermons on Contentment (text, Phil. iv. 11).

— αὐτὸς γὰρ εἴρηκε, &c.] Here is assigned the strongest of all reasons for this contented acquiescence,—namely, the assurance of God, that He will never forsake those who put their trust in Him; αὐτὸς here referring to Θεὸς just before.

From what particular part of Scripture these words are cited, has been disputed. Some say, from Josh. i. 5; others, from Deut. xxxi. 6; others, again, from 1 Chron. xxviii. 20. Yet, considering that none of those passages exactly correspond, it would rather seem that the expression εἴρηκεν is meant of the general purport of God's declarations in those and such like passages, as Psal. xxxvii. 25 & 28. Isaiah xli. 10. Though, as Philo, p. 344, cites these very words as a λόγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, Storr and Kuinoel suppose these words to have been a proverbial form founded on Scripture. Indeed, the manner in which the citation following (from Ps. cxviii. 6) is introduced, serves to show that the passage was commonly employed for the purpose of consolation; q. d. in the words of Bp. Sanderson, 'Lean upon God's Providence, and repose thyself upon his promises, and contentment will follow.'

6. τί ποιήσει μοι ἄνθρωπος;] Here I have, with Bengel, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, Gratz, Kuinoel, and Scholz, introduced a mark of interrogation; such being required by the Hebrew original. And as the interrogative form, besides being supported by the Pesch. Syr. Version, is strongly confirmed by the antithesis, I have adopted it; though the declarative one may be defended.

7. μνημονεύετε] 'preserve in mind,' namely, so as to feel grateful for their instruction, and to follow their example. By the expression τῶν ἡγουμένων are, I apprehend, meant, not (as is commonly supposed) spiritual pastors and masters (elsewhere called προϊστάμενοι); but simply guides to the faith; what is here said having regard, I conceive, not to discipline, (as further on, ver. 17, πείθεσθε τοῖς ἡγουμένοις,) but to doctrine. A view of the sense, I find, also adopted by Calvin. Again, ἡγουμένων, instead of being (what Translators usually make it) a Present, is, as appears from ἐλάλησαν following, an Imperfect. The meaning, then, is this: 'Bear in mind the spiritual guides who first guided you into the faith, by preaching to you the Gospel, and led you into the way of righteousness.' See Ps. xxiii. 3.

— ἀναθεωροῦντες] 'attentively reflecting on.' We have here, as Theophylact remarks, a metaphor taken from painting, in learning which art the pupils carefully look up at the picture of their master which they are copying. Τὴν ἐκβ. τ. ἀναστ., meaning, 'the result of their conduct,' or manner of life; viz. as seen in their blessed exit from this life, and the termination of their earthly trials by entering into the joy of their Lord. The next words advert to the means by which they might best follow their examples and attain their end,—namely, by 'imitating their faith:'—where by faith is, I apprehend, to be understood not constancy in their Christian profession (as it is usually explained), but the holding g Eph. 4. 14. & 5. 6. 1 John 4. 1. Rom. 14. 17. Col. 2. 8, 16. 1 Tim. 4. 3. h 1 Cor. 9. 13 & 10. 18. i Ex. 29 14. Lev. 4. 12, 21. & 6. 30. & 16. 27. Num. 19. 3.

Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς χθὲς καὶ σήμερον ὁ αὐτὸς, καὶ εἰς τοὺς 8 αἰῶνας. [g] διδαχαῖς ποικίλαις καὶ ξέναις μὴ ‡ παραφέρεσθε· 9 καλὸν γὰρ χάριτι βεβαιοῦσθαι τὴν καρδίαν, οὐ βρώμασιν, ἐν οἷς οὐκ ὠφελήθησαν οἱ περιπατήσαντες. [h] Ἔχομεν θυσιαστή- 10 ριον, ἐξ οὗ φαγεῖν οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν οἱ τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύοντες. [i] ὧν γὰρ εἰσφέρεται ζώων τὸ αἷμα περὶ ἁμαρ- 11 the same points of faith that they held. So also Hyperius.

8. Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς χθὲς καὶ σήμερον, &c.] It is not quite agreed what is the exact reference here,—whether to the verses which precede, or to those which follow. The former view is adopted by the ancient and very many modern Commentators; the latter, by some of the most eminent modern ones, especially those of the last half century. So it is observed by Dr. Pye Smith, 'that we have here as it were an axiom laid down, from which is drawn the subsequent exhortation to constancy in the faith.' We may, indeed, suppose the reference to be two-fold,—namely, both to that which precedes and that which follows. And as what is here said seems to have been suggested by the words μιμεῖσθε τὴν πίστιν in the former verse, so, it would seem, in these words Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς, &c., we have a vinculum to unite the sentiments both at ver. 7 and ver. 9; q. d. 'Jesus Christ is always the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever; his faith is always the same. Let, then, your faith be the same; and be not carried away,' &c. Compare Gal. i. 8, 9. By 'Christ' may possibly be denoted (as at Rom. viii. 10, and Eph. iv. 20,) the doctrine of Christ; yet also with a marked reference to his eternal and immutable nature and person. Nay, Dr. Pye Smith (Scrip. Test. vol. iii. p. 225) thinks there is nothing in the argument to prevent our understanding the passage as referring primarily to the person of Christ; q. d. 'With our Divine Saviour there is no changeableness. His perfections are always the same—infinite in their glory; therefore let your submission to his authority, and your adherence to his truth, be firm and unwavering.' So Ernesti observes that this passage expresses the immutability and eternity of Christ, and consequently proves his Divinity.

9. διδ. ποικίλ. κ. ξέναις.] Meaning, 'doctrines varying in themselves, and all of them at variance with "the truth as it is in Jesus," who is the same yesterday,' &c. The doctrines in question were chiefly those of the Judaizers, though probably others also are intended. Instead of the common reading περιφέρεσθε many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have παραφ., which was preferred by Mill, Grotius, Bengel, and Wetstein, and has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Schott, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz; and justly; for though παρὰ and περὶ in composition are perpetually confounded, yet here παραφ. yields a stronger and better sense,—there being here a metaphor taken from a ship carried out of its course by violent winds. So Plut. Arat. 12, has πρὸς δὲ μέγα πνεῦμα—παραφερόμενος μόλις ἥψατο τῆς Ἀδρίας.

— καλὸν γὰρ χάριτι βεβαιοῦσθαι.] This is meant to show why we ought to keep to simple and certain doctrine;—and that from the end of doctrine, which is to confirm and establish us, and assure us respecting Divine grace. Now this is not done by variety and novelty, but by simplicity and certainty: therefore divers and novel doctrines are not to be admitted. (Aretius.)

The Apostle, then, means to say, 'The grand end in view is, that the heart be established in the certainty of Divine truth. In order to which, seek for more grace, and do not go back to meats and other observances of the Mosaic ritual,' &c. In this mention of meats the Apostle, as Calvin and Estius observe, descends from what is general to what is particular, by specifying one among the 'divers and strange doctrines' just before spoken of.

From the words following, οὐκ ὠφελήθησαν, it is plain that καλόν ἐστι here is for συμφέρει, as at 1 Cor. vii. 1 & 26. ix. 15. The expression βεβαιοῦν τὴν καρδίαν is aptly compared by Michaelis with the Heb. סעד לב, 'to refresh the heart [with food],' Gen. xviii. 5, and Judg. xix. 5 & 8. στήρισον τὴν καρδίαν σου, as Ps. civ. 15. Here, however, by καρδία is meant the soul of man, which is confirmed and refreshed by Gospel doctrine.

— οὐκ ὠφελήθησαν] i. e. 'have contributed nothing to that heart-felt peace and blessedness which the Gospel confers; nay, are pernicious, as working contrary to it.'

10. This is a passage which, owing to the recondite nature of the metaphors employed, involves no little difficulty. Much here depends upon the connexion of v. 10 with vv. 9 & 11, which Kuinoel, after a full discussion, lays down as follows: 'We Christians are not to rest on those ritual injunctions so scrupulously observed by the Jews, as to meats lawful or unlawful, and meats sacred: we have a sacred meat, and that far more precious, yet such as they who are of Moses' law cannot eat, for it is the flesh of the piacular victim.' He further observes, that the expression οἱ τῇ σκηνῇ λατρεύοντες, though properly applicable to the Jewish priests, yet is here used of those generally who approach the altar as worshippers. Now Christ is a piacular victim, like that offered on the day of expiation, which even the priests were forbidden to eat. Θυσιαστήριον most of our best Commentators suppose to be put, by metonymy, for the victim offered on the altar, being suggested by the βρώματα preceding; q. d. 'We Christians, too, have our sacrifice (namely, that of Christ by his atonement, shadowed out in the Law and typified in the Lord's Supper), of which those who rest their hopes of salvation on the ritual sacrifices of the Mosaic Law (viz. Jews or Judaizers) have no right to partake;' i. e. they are not authorized to eat, with any hope of benefit thereby, seeing that they rest their hopes of salvation on another and very different one.

11, 12. These verses are illustrative of the preτίας εἰς τὰ ἅγια διὰ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, τούτων τὰ σώματα k John 19. 17, 18.

12 κατακαίεται ἔξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς. [k] Διὸ καὶ Ἰησοῦς, ἵνα Acts 7. 58. l Supra 11. 26.
ἁγιάσῃ διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος τὸν λαὸν, ἔξω τῆς πύλης Acts 5. 41. m Mic. 2. 10.
13 ἔπαθε. [l] Τοίνυν ἐξερχώμεθα πρὸς αὐτὸν ἔξω τῆς παρεμβο- Phil. 3. 20.
14 λῆς, τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν αὐτοῦ φέροντες. [m] οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ὧδε supra 11. 10, 16.
15 μένουσαν πόλιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν μέλλουσαν ἐπιζητοῦμεν. [n] Δι' n Lev. 7. 12. Ps. 50. 23. & 51. 19. αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν θυσίαν αἰνέσεως διαπαντὸς τῷ Θεῷ, Hos. 14. 2. Eph. 5. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 5. τουτέστι καρπὸν χειλέων ὁμολογούντων τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ.
16 [o] Τῆς δὲ εὐποιΐας καὶ κοινωνίας μὴ ἐπιλανθάνεσθε· τοιαύταις o 2 Cor. 9. 12. Phil. 4 18.
γὰρ θυσίαις εὐαρεστεῖται ὁ Θεός. p Ezek. 3. 17. & 33. 2, 7.
17 [p] Πείθεσθε τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν καὶ ὑπείκετε· αὐτοὶ γὰρ Phil. 2. 29. 1 Thess. 5. 12.
ἀγρυπνοῦσιν ὑπὲρ τῶν ψυχῶν ὑμῶν, ὡς λόγον ἀποδώσοντες· 1 Tim. 5. 17. supra v. 7.

ceding; and, as Stuart observes, 'their chief object is to introduce Christ as an example of suffering, in order to impress on the Hebrews the necessity of perseverance in their Christian p ofession, amidst all their trials and difficulties.' There is, however, meant to be an indirect comparison between the Jewish sacrifice on the great day of atonement and the expiatory sacrifice of Christ. Indeed a regular antithesis runs through the whole passage, both in words and things. As, in sacrifices περὶ ἁμαρτίας, the victims were burnt out of the camp, so Christ was carried out of the city (according to a custom then common) and nailed to the cross. In this respect, too, Christ was like unto these victims, namely, that he suffered without the gates of Jerusalem. 'The blood of the former was presented before God in the most holy place; the blood of the latter, in the eternal sanctuary above, ix. 12. 23, 24. The bodies of the beasts used for the former were consumed or destroyed without the camp; the body of Jesus was sacrificed or destroyed without the gate of Jerusalem. The atoning sacrifice of Christians is analogous, then, to that of the Jews, but of infinitely higher efficacy.' Compare ix. 13, 14. x. 4. 12.'

13. τοίνυν ἐξερχ., &c.] Most Expositors here interpret, 'let us abandon the profession of Judaism, and abide by that of Christianity.' To this sense, however, Kuinoel justly objects, as little agreeable to the context; and he (in common with Rosenmuller, Dindorf, and Stuart) adopts the one assigned by Chrysostom: 'Let us, after his example, patiently endure the "cruel mockings," persecutions, and revilings of the Jews;—all, in short, that is to be borne for Christ and his name's sake.' Thus, then, to 'go out to him' is to bring ourselves to the same mind as that with which he went thither, and so to consider what he there suffered for us, as to be prepared ourselves to 'endure all things' for his sake.

In the words τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν αὐτοῦ φέροντες there is (as at Matt. x. 38) an allusion to Christ's bearing his cross; for by the expression τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν is to be understood the cause of his reproach,—the cross.

14. οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν, &c.] Here is suggested a reason why they should be prepared to thus suffer for Christ's sake,—namely, 'since they have here no permanent city, but seek one yet to come,' even the heavenly Jerusalem above mentioned, the city which hath foundations (i. e. a permanent abode), xi. 10. xiv. 38.

15. δι' αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν—Θεῷ.] It is justly observed by Kuinoel, that the exhortation now subjoined is deduced not from what immediately preceded, but from the whole argumentation, especially vv. 10—12. The sense is: 'By Him therefore (i. e. Christ) [as our Mediator and High Priest] let us offer up, [in return for the blessings of the Gospel, not the bloody sacrifices of animals, or the vain oblations of the fruits of the earth, but] the sacrifice of praise.' The words following, τουτέστι καρπὸν χειλέων, &c., are explanatory of the preceding; the sense being, 'I mean the fruit or oblation of lips (a mode of expression derived from Hos. xiv. 2, καρπὸν τῶν χειλέων ἡμῶν), giving thanks to his name;' a sacrifice more acceptable than the first-fruits of their crops, or the firstlings of their flocks. Ὁμολογ. has here the usual sense of praising, celebrating, &c.

'Thus, then (says Dr. Barrow, Serm. viii.), while we are no longer required to yield material, we are still bound to yield spiritual sacrifices (1 Pet. ii. 5). We must burn incense still,—that of fervent devotion: and send up continually to heaven the thank-offering of praise.' So it is a saying of the Rabbins, that the sacrifices of praise will be the only ones that will remain in the time of the Messiah.

16. εὐποιΐας καὶ κοιν.] These terms are nearly synonymous; but the latter is added to strengthen the sense of the former.

17. πείθεσθε—καὶ ὑπείκετε.] It is well observed by Bretschneider (cited by Kuinoel): 'Indicatur verbis πείθεσθε, ὑπείκετε, obsequium quod cedit aliorum admonitionibus, et eorum præceptis se duci patitur.' We may, with Kuinoel, consider ἀγρυπνεῖν and γρηγορεῖν as general terms, denoting the doing any thing with great diligence and circumspection. Ὡς λόγον ἀποδ. may be translated, 'as those who must render an account' [at the day of judgment]; implying both the zeal and diligence necessary, and also the awful responsibility of ministers; comp. Ezek. iii. 17, 18. In the next words, ἵνα μετὰ χαρᾶς τ. π., many refer τοῦτο to λόγον ἀποδ., and suppose an ellipsis, thus: '[Obey them, I say,] that they may give this account with joy.' It is better, however, with others, to refer it to ἀγρυπν. ὑπὲρ τ. ψυχ. ὑμ., that being the primary thing; q Rom. 15. 30. 1 Thess. 5. 25. Acts 23. 1. r Philem. 22.

s Isa. 40. 11. Ezek. 34. 23. Zach. 9. 11. John 10. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 25. & 5. 4 t 2 Thess. 2. 17. 1 Pet. 5. 10. Phil. 2. 13.

ἵνα μετὰ χαρᾶς τοῦτο ποιῶσι, καὶ μὴ στενάζοντες· ἀλυσιτελὲς γὰρ ὑμῖν τοῦτο. [q] Προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν· πεποίθαμεν 18 γὰρ, ὅτι καλὴν συνείδησιν ἔχομεν, ἐν πᾶσι καλῶς θέλοντες ἀναστρέφεσθαι. [r] Περισσοτέρως δὲ παρακαλῶ τοῦτο ποιῆσαι, 19 ἵνα τάχιον ἀποκατασταθῶ ὑμῖν.
[s] Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης, ὁ ἀναγαγὼν ἐκ νεκρῶν τὸν 20 ποιμένα τῶν προβάτων τὸν μέγαν ἐν αἵματι διαθήκης αἰω-νίου, τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν, [t] καταρτίσαι ὑμᾶς ἐν παντὶ 21 ἔργῳ ἀγαθῷ—εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ, ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ εὐάρεστον ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ—διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· ᾧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. ἀμήν.
Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοί· ἀνέχεσθε τοῦ λόγου τῆς 22 παρακλήσεως· καὶ γὰρ διὰ βραχέων ἐπέστειλα ὑμῖν. Γι- 23 νώσκετε τὸν ἀδελφὸν Τιμόθεον ἀπολελυμένον, μεθ' οὗ (ἐὰν τάχιον ἔρχηται) ὄψομαι ὑμᾶς. Ἀσπάσασθε πάντας τοὺς 24 ἡγουμένους ὑμῶν, καὶ πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους. ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας. ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν. ἀμήν. 25

Πρὸς Ἑβραίους ἐγράφη ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας διὰ Τιμοθέου.

the other introduced to show the consequence thereof. Ἀλυσιτελὲς γὰρ ὑ. τ., 'for that is unprofitable (i. e. by litotes hurtful) to you,' since if you give them cause to complain of you, it will be hurtful to yourselves. Meaning to intimate that this obedience is for their own ultimate benefit.

18, 19. προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν· πεποίθαμεν γὰρ, &c.] The general sense is, 'Pray for us; for we trust we merit it by having a good conscience, in all things wishing to act righteously and holily.' 'So glancing (as Rosenmuller observes) at the Jewish teachers, who had calumniated him, and raised disturbances among the Christian brethren.' Compare Acts xxiii. 1.

20, 21. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης, &c.] The full sense is, 'May God, the author of peace, who raised from the dead the great and supreme Shepherd of the sheep (even the Lord Jesus Christ), by the blood of the everlasting covenant [offered by that great Intercessor], may He make you perfect in every good work, to the doing of his will, ["which is your sanctification;"] [in order thereto] working in you the power to do what is well-pleasing in his sight;' see Phil. ii. 13. On the expression ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης, see Rom. xv. 33, and on τὸν ποιμένα τῶν προβάτων, John x. 11. The epithet αἰωνίου applied to διαθήκης is used by way of contrast with the temporary one of the Jewish law.

The words following, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, connect with καταρτίσαι preceding; the intermediate words being parenthetical. Render, 'for Jesus Christ his sake.' Possibly, however, they may be meant to connect with what immediately goes before: in which case the passage will imply (as Bp. Sanderson thinks, Sermons, p. 378) that our good works are pleasing unto God upon these two grounds; 1. because He worketh them in us; 2. because He looketh upon us and them in Christ Jesus. Compare Isaiah xxvi. 12.

ΙΑΚΩΒΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ.

---

1 I. [a] ΙΑΚΩΒΟΣ, Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοῦ- [a John 7. 35. 1 Pet. 1. 1.]
λος, ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ, χαίρειν.

We are now arrived at the Epistles called Catholic; an appellation variously accounted for, but, by the generality of Commentators, supposed to have been given, because they were addressed, not to any particular Church (like the Epistles of St. Paul), but to Christians in general. The appellation, however, was not coeval with the time when these Epistles were written, but given at a much later period; probably at the time when the Canon of Scripture was first settled. And such catholicity must be taken with much modification, and denote the Christian Church, as in general of a country or class, as the Jewish of the Eastern or Western Dispersion, then the Churches of, as we should say, Christendom. Two of them, indeed, (2d and 3d John) are the farthest from Catholic, yet it is not improbable that, at the time when the appellation was first given, those Epistles had not been received into the Canon of Scripture, and that afterwards they were placed after 1st John, as being by the same writer.

But to proceed to the Epistle now under consideration;—since two Apostles of the name of James are mentioned in the New Test., there has been some doubt as to which of them was the writer of this Epistle. The learned, however, are in general agreed that it was not the son of Zebedee, but the son of Alpheus or Cleopas, called 'the Less' and 'the Just;' who was Bishop of Jerusalem, and is called brother, i. e. kinsman, of our Lord, Gal. i. 19. With respect to the date of the Epistle, we know that this James was put to death in a tumult of the Jews, A. D. 62; and internal evidence (arising from allusions to the troubles which were then disturbing Judæa, and did not long precede the destruction of Jerusalem) shows that it must have been written only a short time previous to that period; and the learned are agreed in fixing it at 61 or 60. This Epistle (like the second of Peter and the second and third of John) was not at first received as Canonical; but after a severe scrutiny (attesting the great caution of the primitive Church in receiving any books into their Canon), all doubts respecting its genuineness being removed, it was at a very early period admitted into the sacred Volume.

The Epistle consists of three parts: the first of which (chap. i.) is hortatory; the second (chap. ii.—v. 6) accusatory; the third (chap. v. 7—20) partly hortatory and conciliatory, partly accusatory and monitory. The design of the writer was, 1. to guard Christians against the vices of the Jews, namely, such as, under the form of religion, denied the power of it; and to warn them against being deceived into the opinion, that the profession of doctrines, and the observance of outward forms, can stand for practical religion, i. e. 'faith which worketh by love,' and moral obedience: 'thereby,' as Mr. Wesley observes, 'reproving the Antinomian spirit which had even then sprung up and infested many, who perverted the glorious doctrine of justification by faith into an occasion of licentiousness.' Moreover, the Apostle here intends, not only to reprove the vicious and worldly-minded, and set right those who were misinformed as to the nature of the Gospel, but also to comfort and encourage those who had right notions of it, and were regulating their lives by its requisitions,—to console those who were suffering under sickness, or sinking under the persecutions of their adversaries, with the assurance, that the Lord is mindful of them, and can heal their sickness, in answer to prayer; also that their adversity and the tyranny of their adversaries would be alike short, since the coming of the Lord to judgment was near at hand. Accordingly, this Epistle ranks among the most instructive and edifying in the New Test.

As respects manner and style, this Epistle is characterized by deep earnestness and true pathos, by grandeur of thought, and beauty of imagery. It possesses a singular vividness of thought and pointed terseness of expression (see Col. iv. 6), united, at the same time, with an unaffected simplicity. We observe an almost oratorical (not rhetorical) δεινότης and force in the reproofs, tempered with true Christian meekness; and finally, a sound wisdom in the counsels, such as may well be called (in the Apostle's own words) 'the meekness of wisdom.'

I. 1. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοῦλος.] On this expression see Note at Rom. i. 1. That the title ἀπόστολος is not added, will, as Benson observes, by no means prove the writer not to have been an Apostle; since the same omission may be b Matt. 5. 11, 12. Acts 5. 41. Rom 5. 3. Heb. 10. 34. 1 Pet. 1. 6. c Rom. 5. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 7. d Prov. 2. 3. Matt. 7. 7. & 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. John 14. 13. & 15. 7. & 16. 23. 1 John 3. 22. & 5. 14.

[b] Πᾶσαν χαρὰν ἡγήσασθε, ἀδελφοί μου, ὅταν πειρασμοῖς 2 περιπέσητε ποικίλοις· [c] γινώσκοντες ὅτι τὸ δοκίμιον ὑμῶν 3 τῆς πίστεως κατεργάζεται ὑπομονήν. Ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ ἔργον 4 τέλειον ἐχέτω, ἵνα ἦτε τέλειοι καὶ ὁλόκληροι, ἐν μηδενὶ λειπόμενοι. [d] Εἰ δέ τις ὑμῶν λείπεται σοφίας, αἰτείτω παρὰ 5 observed in the Epistles of St. John and those of St. Paul to the Philippians, Ephesians, and Thessalonians.

— ταῖς δώδεκα φυλαῖς ταῖς ἐν τῇ διασπορᾷ.] This may be an abstract for the concrete διεσπαρμένοις, as sometimes in the Sept. Perhaps, however, the sense may be best expressed (by an ellipsis of οὖσι), 'those who are in dispersion,' or a state of dispersion; so Deut. xxviii. 25, ἔσῃ διασπορά. Now there were properly two Dispersions; the Eastern (beyond the Euphrates) and the Western; which latter had commenced at the time of Alexander the Great, and increased so much, that, in the Apostle's age, all the commercial and manufacturing cities of Syria, Egypt, and other parts of the sea-coasts of Africa, Asia Minor, Greece, Italy, and Spain, were full of them. The persons who formed the latter cultivated the use of the Greek tongue, as if it had been their vernacular one, because it was indispensably necessary to the commercial transactions by which they almost invariably lived. These Jews of the Western Dispersion were by far the most numerous; and therefore the Apostle employed the Greek tongue; though, had he addressed himself to the Eastern Dispersion solely or chiefly, he would probably have written in the Hebrew (i. e. Syro-Chaldee) tongue; which they, no doubt, understood far better than Greek. We may, however, understand both the Eastern and the Western Dispersion,—the Jews dispersed in all countries.

— χαίρειν.] Supply λέγει. So εὖ πράττειν, or ὑγιαίνειν, and other formulas of salutation frequent in the Classical writers. The present occurs also in Acts xv. 23. xxiii. 26, and often in the Apocrypha. The complete phrase is found in 2 John, 10, 11.

2. πᾶσαν χαρὰν—ποικίλοις.] An admonition, serving to pave the way to the first topic treated of in this Epistle,—namely, patience under affliction, and constancy in adhering to the Gospel; a subject, we may observe, on which the Apostle proceeds to enter without any of those preliminary considerations with which writers in general would have introduced it; as, for instance, 'Though it may seem to you hard that God's people should be so afflicted, yet consider your afflictions not as regards their present evil, but their future good; and accordingly count,' &c. Πᾶσαν χαρὰν, 'nought but joy,' i. e. a matter of pure and entire rejoicing; see Col. i. 9—11 and 1 Tim. i. 16: of which use of πᾶς several examples are adduced by Wetstein and Hottinger. So in Euripides, Med. 454, we have, πᾶν κέρδος ἡγοῦ ζημιουμένη φυγῇ. By πειρασμοὶ are denoted trials and tribulations generally (as Luke viii. 13, and xxii. 28, and often); those however being especially meant which try our religious faith by proceeding from the persecutions of adversaries. The term ποικίλοις has reference to the various kinds of trial by persecution, and proceeding from unjust accusations to the most cruel deaths. Περιπίπτειν with a Dative is equivalent to ἐμπίπτειν εἰς (as Luke x. 30); though it is a stronger expression, and always used of what is calamitous, as Thucydides, ii. 54, τοιούτῳ πάθει περιπεσόντες.

3. γινώσκ. ὅτι—ὑπομονήν.] This is intended to confirm and illustrate the assertion of the preceding verse. There seems, too, to be a brevity in the expression, whereby a link in the chain of argument is passed over, which may be thus supplied: 'knowing as you do, that afflictions are trials of your faith, and that it is this trying of your faith which [alone] produces patient endurance [of what God may lay upon you],' &c. True it is, as St. Paul says, Rom. v. 4, ὑπομονὴ κατεργάζεται δοκιμήν: but δοκίμιον differs from δοκιμὴ in this,—that the latter signifies the proof or test itself, the former, the δοκιμασία, or act of proving. Here I would compare a sentiment of Æsch. Eumen. 495, ξυμφέρει σωφρονεῖν ὑπὸ στένει.

4. ἡ δὲ ὑπομονὴ ἔργον τέλ. ἐχ.] Most recent Expositors (after Benson) take the sense to be, 'And let patience thus have its work thoroughly perfected.' Others propose other interpretations. But, after all, there seems no sufficient reason to abandon the sense commonly assigned, which is required by the adversative δὲ and the Article in ὑπομ., 'this patience.' The expression is, however, somewhat unusual, being, as Hottinger observes, for τῆς δὲ ὑπομονῆς ἔργον τέλειον ἔστω. The complete sense intended is, 'let it have its full scope and produce its perfect operation.'

— ἵνα ἦτε τέλειοι, &c.] The two terms τέλειοι and ὁλόκληροι are nearly synonymous, and corresponding to ὁλοτελὴς in 1 Thess. v. 23. The proper difference between the three terms is well expressed by Tittman, de Syn. p. 181, as follows: "Ὁλόκληρος est integer suis partibus; τέλειος est perfectus et solutus omnibus numeris (so ὁλοκληρία at Acts iii. 16); ὁλοτελὴς est omni ex parte perfectus.' The two terms in question may, as Loesner, Hottinger, and Pott suppose, be used with allusion to the sacrificial law of the Jews, by which both the victims and the sacrificing priests were required to be τέλειοι, ὁλόκληροι, and ἄμωμοι. Here, then, it is meant, that they should be complete both in principle and practice, consummate in every part of the Christian character, and, in short, deficient in nothing essential to the performance of every good work; as it is said, Josephus, Ant. ix. 11. 2, οὐδεμίας ἀρετῆς ἀπελείπετο. In requiring of them to be thus perfect, the Apostle requires no other than his Master had done before him, Matt. v. 48, ἔσεσθε τέλειοι, ὥσπερ ὁ Πατὴρ ὑμῶν ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς τέλειός ἐστι.

5. εἰ δέ τις ὑμῶν λείπεται σοφίας, &c.] The best Expositors are in general agreed that by σοφία is here meant, not spiritual knowledge, but practical wisdom, prudence, and judgment (as iii.

τοῦ διδόντος Θεοῦ πᾶσιν ἁπλῶς, καὶ μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος, καὶ 6 δοθήσεται αὐτῷ. [e] Αἰτείτω δὲ ἐν πίστει, μηδὲν διακρινόμενος· e Mark 11. 24 ὁ γὰρ διακρινόμενος ἔοικε κλύδωνι θαλάσσης ἀνεμιζομένῳ 1 Tim. 2. 8.
7 καὶ ῥιπιζομένῳ. Μὴ γὰρ οἰέσθω ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος, ὅτι
8 λήψεταί τι παρὰ τοῦ Κυρίου· [f] ἀνὴρ δίψυχος ἀκατάστατος f Infra 4. 8.

13. 15. 17. 2 Pet. iii. 15), namely, how to act in any critical conjuncture; such being highly instrumental to the τέλειον ἔργον just mentioned, by enabling them to improve their afflictions to their own spiritual benefit and the glory of God. Yet the term may also be meant to denote that spiritual wisdom by which we are enabled to see whence, and why, afflictions come, and how they are to be improved; see Zuingle and Beza. The words, indeed, seem meant (as T. Aquinas, Aretius, and Calvin suggest) to anticipate a possible objection: 'But we have not the gift so to think or act.' To which it is replied: 'Seek it, then, of God;' namely, says Œcumenius, inasmuch as he it is who must originate this 'perfect work.' Thus, then, by the wisdom here spoken of may be understood not only the wisdom how to act and how to suffer, but how to live, or walk worthy of their high calling.

— τοῦ διδόντος Θεοῦ πᾶσιν ἁπλῶς.] Meaning, 'who giveth this, and all other good gifts, to all men,' &c. The term ἁπλῶς is by some ancient and by the recent Commentators in general explained simpliciter, candidè, namely, as opposed to the selfish motives and private ends which too often accompany human gifts. So at Rom. xii. 8, we have ὁ μεταδιδοὺς, ἐν ἁπλότητι. But more natural is the sense commonly assigned (which is supported by many ancient Versions), liberally, abundantly. And so of God it is elsewhere said, 1 Tim. vi. 17, that he 'giveth men all things richly to enjoy.' Yet together with the idea of liberal bounty (implying simplicity, candour, and perfect purity of motive) seems to be intended that of promptitude; for as it may well be said of God, that he is 'more ready to hear than we to pray,' so is he sometimes, in his mercy, more ready to give than we are to ask, giving us at once more than we desire or deserve; see Calvin. Finally, by the term πᾶσι we have intimated, that which is more fully expressed at Acts xvii. 25, 'seeing that he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things.'

— καὶ μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος.] Much meaning is contained in this expression μὴ ὀνειδίζοντος; q. d. 'does not [as men often do] rebuke those who ask with importunity, or give to them contemptuously and scornfully, or, having given, upbraid them with the benefits bestowed' (what the Latin writers similarly express by exprobrare beneficia); dwelling on them with that irksome commemoration, of which it is finely said by Seneca, 'lacerat animum et premit frequens beneficiorum commemoratio;' and by Terence, Andr. i. 1. 16, 'est hæc commemoratio quasi exprobratio, ut immemores beneficii.' So in a passage of Menander some one is represented as saying to such a giver, καλῶς ποιήσας, οὐ καλῶς ὠνειδίσας· ἔργον καθεῖλες πλούσιον πτωχῷ λόγῳ; and justly is it observed by Plutarch, de Adul. p. 64, ἅπασα ὀνειδιζομένη χάρις ἐπαχθὴς καὶ ἄχαρις.

Thus, then, as applied to God, it is meant (as Abp. Newcome explains) 'that he is not as one who upbraids, withdraws not his gifts from the sincerely penitent, because they have formerly abused his mercies.' Neither (it may be added) does he withhold future gifts because he has bestowed so many already. 'Whereas (says Calvin) men, even those the most liberal, are apt to make mention of former benefits, to excuse themselves for not bestowing future ones; God, on the contrary, is ever ready to crown former with fresh benefits without end and without limit.'

— καὶ δοθήσεται αὐτῷ.] A promise most sure and most comfortable, but which must be understood with the limitations, 'if God shall see it expedient to grant what we ask, and we shall pray for it as we ought.' On which see Bp. Sanderson's second Concio ad Clerum, p. 50.

From the passages here cited by the Commentators it appears, that even the heathens were of opinion that wisdom was alone to be successfully attained by seeking it of God. So Hierocles (cited by Wetstein), Πῶς ἂν λάβοι τις τὸ εὖ, μὴ διδόντος Θεοῦ; πῶς δ' ἂν δοίη τῷ πρὸς τὰς ὁρμὰς αὐτεξουσίῳ μὴ αἰτοῦντι ὁ διδόναι πεφυκὼς Θεός;

6. αἰτείτω δὲ—διακρ.] Meaning, '[But he who would obtain what he asks,] let him ask [it] in firm faith, ἐν πληροφορίᾳ, full assurance,'—namely, of God's power to give, and of his willingness to bestow it, as far as shall be fitting; that being the pledge and condition of success. Μηδὲν διακρ., i. e. with an undoubting dependence: a sense of διακρ. which has been explained at Matt. xxi. 21. Mark xi. 23. Acts x. 20. This is then illustrated by comparing the state of mind of one who doubts with a wave of the sea: a figure sometimes employed in the Classical writers to designate the contrary to γαλήνη, or calm confidence.

—ἀνεμιζομένῳ καὶ ῥιπιζομένῳ.] Ἀνεμίζεσθαι and ῥιπίζεσθαι here, as κλυδωνίζεσθαι and περιφέρεσθαι at Eph. iv. 14, signify to be raised by the wind into waves or ripples. And so in Philo, cited by Wetstein, we have εἰ μὴ πρὸς ἀνέμου ῥιπίζοιτο τὸ ὕδωρ. Of the word ἀνεμίζω no example has been adduced by the Commentators; but I find it in Hesychius, ἀναψύξαι· ἀνεμίσαι.

Here we have an apt image of the mind of an unstable man, fluctuating between belief and disbelief, hope and despair. So Dio Chrys. p. 368, (cited by Wetstein) speaking of the mob, says, ἄστατον κακὸν, θαλάσσῃ ὅμοιον, ὑπ' ἀνέμου ῥιπίζεται.

7, 8. These verses are closely connected, and γὰρ has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. '[Let him, I say, ask in faith;] for otherwise he must not suppose he shall obtain any thing;' an assertion then confirmed by a weighty apophthegm, introduced, for greater effect, per asyndeton. Δίψυχος is a very rare word, but found in Clemens, 1 Ep. to the Corinthians, and the Const. Apost., and is nearly synonymous with δίλογος and διπλόος. The difference is well stated by Tittm. de Syn. Nov. Test. In its present use and g Job 4. 2. Ps. 102. 12. & 103. 15. Eccl. 14. 18. Isa. 40. 6. 1 Cor. 7. 31. infra 4. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 24. 1 John 2. 17.

h Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11. Matt. 10. 22. & 19. 28, 29. 2 Tim. 4. 8. Heb. 12. 5. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Rev. 3. 19.

ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτοῦ. Καυχάσθω δὲ ὁ ἀδελφὸς ὁ 9 ταπεινὸς ἐν τῷ ὕψει αὐτοῦ· [g] ὁ δὲ πλούσιος, ἐν τῇ ταπει- 10 νώσει αὐτοῦ. ὅτι ὡς ἄνθος χόρτου παρελεύσεται·—ἀνέτειλε 11 γὰρ ὁ ἥλιος σὺν τῷ καύσωνι, καὶ ἐξήρανε τὸν χόρτον, καὶ τὸ ἄνθος αὐτοῦ ἐξέπεσε, καὶ ἡ εὐπρέπεια τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ ἀπώλετο·—οὕτω καὶ ὁ πλούσιος ἐν ταῖς πορείαις αὐτοῦ μαρανθήσεται. [h] Μακάριος ἀνὴρ ὃς ὑπομένει πειρασ- 12 μόν· ὅτι, δόκιμος γενόμενος, λήψεται τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς, ὃν ἐπηγγείλατο ὁ Κύριος τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν.

application it means 'a man of unsettled and fluctuating sentiments, too solicitous about the present to attain the future—too anxious about the future to secure the present; who this moment would sacrifice all for eternity, and the next would renounce every thing for this present life.' Now it is implied that such a one will not obtain his request, because, unstable in all his purposes, he cannot ask with that undoubting faith which is indispensable in him who addresses God in prayer.

I have here, with Vater, Rob. Stephens, the Pesch. Syr., and Newcome, placed a colon after Κυρίου, because I agree with Prof. Theile (in his recent Edition of this Epistle) that ἀνὴρ δίψυχος is in apposition with the preceding ὁ διακρινόμενος, ver. 6, and that through the medium of the intermediate ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος, ver. 7; and thus what was before (verse 6) expressed figuratively is now conveyed in plainer terms. Finally, ὁδοῖς is for ἐπιτηδεύμασι.

9—11. The Apostle now passes from general to particular trials—from those of Christians in general to those of the poor in particular, as contrasted with the rich; admonishing the poor not to be cast down and depressed by their poverty, nor the rich to be puffed up by their riches, suggesting certain considerations, to the one of comfort, to the other of humiliation; but expressed, for greater force, by an acutè dictum, or oxymoron. Here, then, the Apostle adverts to the temptations peculiar to poverty and riches respectively; in the former to discontent, in the latter to pride and arrogance. And with reason, for that both conditions have their particular snares, is unquestionable. So it is well observed by the great Philosophic Historian, ἡ μὲν πενία, ἀνάγκῃ τὴν τόλμαν παρέχουσα, ἡ δ' ἐξουσία, ὕβρει τὴν πλεονεξίαν καὶ φρονήματι, αἱ δ' ἄλλαι ξυντυχίαι, ὀργῇ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ὡς ἑκάστη τις κατέχεται ὑπ' ἀνηκέστου τινὸς κρείσσονος, ἐξάγουσιν ἐς τοὺς κινδύνους. (Thucyd. iii. 45.) Against, then, the temptations to each respectively are suggested various Christian considerations, with which may be compared similar ones of St. Paul, at 1 Cor. vii. 22, a passage in its nature and mode of expression closely resembling the present. In both these cases the high party required lowering, and the low, raising; and this the Gospel is fully able to effect, by the one being taught to cultivate contentment, by the other to study humility. Καυχάσθω, as applied to the poor brother, signifies, 'let him rejoice,' 'comfort himself under his distresses:' ἐν τῷ ὕψει αὐτοῦ, 'in his exaltation,' viz. to the privileges of the Gospel. See 1 Pet. v. 6. Καυχ. ἐν τῇ ταπεινώσει αὐτοῦ, as applied to the rich brother, signifies, 'let him rejoice in his humiliation;' i. e. that he is brought by the Gospel to be lowly in heart, poor in spirit, and is thus in the way of salvation. The words following suggest a strong motive to cultivate this humility, by forcibly representing the instability of wealth.

10. ὅτι ὡς ἄνθος χόρτου παρελ.] An image frequent both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, taken from the ephemeral duration of the gaudy flowers of the field.

11. ἀνέτειλε γὰρ ὁ ἥλιος, &c.] Here we have the image further unfolded; γὰρ, as Theile observes, pointing at the reason of the foregoing comparison, as in a similar case, ver. 24, and elsewhere. Moreover here, as often in the parables of our Lord, the development of the imagery merges into a narration of the things signified therein.

— σὺν τῷ καύσωνι.] It is admitted that these words are not correctly rendered in our common Version, 'with a burning heat;' 1. because that sense would render the Article useless; 2. because it were (as Bp. Middleton observes) unnatural to represent the sun as rising with its heat, which cannot be intense, compared with that of noon. In short, the learned are agreed, that by the expression τῷ καύσωνι is denoted the burning wind called in Hebrew קדם, and in the Septuagint rendered by καύσων or νότος, and in Arabia called the Simoom. Now this, as we learn from Oriental travellers, often blows up at sunrise. See Chardin, Shaw, Niebuhr, and Burckhardt. The above view is, moreover, confirmed by a passage of Jonah iv. 8, καὶ ἐγένετο, ἅμα τῷ ἀνατεῖλαι τὸν ἥλιον, προσέταξεν ὁ Θεὸς πνεύματι καύσωνι συγκαίοντι, &c.

It is worthy of observation, that throughout the present passage we have what Grammarians call co-ordinatio, in which, as Winer (Gr. Gr.) remarks, 'quæ se invicem excipiunt, sibique artificiosius subjungi poterant, non sine vi juxta ponuntur; ex. gr. "Surgit sol, insiccat herbam, cadit flos, ponit decor;"' thus expressing both the certainty and the suddenness of the event.

— οὕτω καὶ ὁ πλούσιος, &c.] Here we have the application: 'So [suddenly] perisheth the rich man in the midst of his pursuits or occupations.'

12. Here the subject at vv. 2, 3, is resumed, and a gnome generalis is subjoined, resulting from what was said at vv. 9, 10 (ver. 11 being a parenthetical illustration), and of which the sense is, 'Accordingly, or on the other hand, blessed is the man [whether he be rich or poor,] that en-

13 Μηδεὶς πειραζόμενος λεγέτω, ὅτι "ἀπὸ [τοῦ] Θεοῦ πειράζομαι·" ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἀπείραστός ἐστι κακῶν, πειράζει 14 δὲ αὐτὸς οὐδένα. [i] ἕκαστος δὲ πειράζεται, ὑπὸ τῆς ἰδίας i Hos. 13. 9.
15 ἐπιθυμίας ἐξελκόμενος καὶ δελεαζόμενος· [k] εἶτα ἡ Ἐπιθυμία k Job 15. 35. συλλαβοῦσα τίκτει Ἁμαρτίαν· ἡ δὲ Ἁμαρτία ἀποτελεσθεῖσα Ps. 7. 14. Rom. 6. 21.

dureth temptation or trial; for,' &c. Of δόκιμος γενόμενος the sense is best rendered, according to the Pesch. Syr. and Vulgate Versions, 'after he has been approved.' See Note on 1 Cor. xi. 19. The term δόκ. is supposed to be an agonistic one, and it is illustrated by Kypke from the δοκιμασία of the Grecian ἀγῶνες; but it seems rather to refer to the δοκιμασία of metals, as in 1 Pet. i. 7, δοκίμιον ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεως—πολὺ τιμιώτερον χρυσίου—δοκιμαζομένου. So Prov. xvii. 3, ὥσπερ δοκιμάζεται ἐν καμίνῳ ἄργυρος καὶ χρυσὸς, οὕτως ἐκλεκταὶ καρδίαι παρὰ Κυρίῳ. On the expression στέφανος τῆς ζωῆς see Note at 2 Tim. iv. 8. By the expression ὁ Κύριος is evidently meant the Lord Jesus, as appears from his several declarations while on earth, in which is the oft-repeated promise, 'I will give eternal life.' See Matth. x. 37. John iv. 14. x. 28. xiv. 23.

13—18. Having spoken of the benefit of temptations, in the sense of trials, the Apostle now touches on temptations in the more usual sense, namely, solicitations to sin [which may be called internal, as those, external trials]; guarding his readers against the fatal error of ascribing such temptations to God, as if impelling men to sin. Such, he says, proceed not from God, but from the lusts of men, which, if yielded to, will bring death rather than a crown of life; and therefore, though trials may be ascribed to God, yet temptations, in the bad sense, must not. Sin and death proceed from the lusts and wickedness of men; whereas God is not the author of evil, but the giver of all good. (Benson.) Many probably excused their immorality, by pleading (as the corruption of our nature urges men of every age to do) the force of temptation,—and seeking refuge in the doctrine of necessity, as the Pharisees did, by the very same dogma: in opposition to which, the Apostle assures them, that as afflictions are not sent by God to make men worse, but better, so when trials of virtue generate temptations to sin, no man must dare to say that he is tempted by God [thus making God the author of sin]; for as God is not tried or tempted to moral evil (i. e. is not liable to evil, and consequently cannot be tempted to sin), so he of himself tempteth no man: a truth this, recognized by the wiser Heathens. See Hom. Od. i. 32. So also in a passage of Epicurus, cited by Theile, it is said, τὸ θεῖόν τε καὶ μακάριον, οὔτε αὐτὸ πράγματα ἔχει, οὔτε ἑτέροις παρέχει, where for πράγματα I conjecture ταράγματα.

13. πειραζόμενος.] Of course implying, as Bp. Sanderson suggests, that the person yields to the temptation.

14. ἕκαστος δὲ πειράζεται, ἀπὸ τῆς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας ἐξελκ., &c.] 'But (or, nay) whosoever is tempted and impelled to sin, is hurried away and enticed by his own lust,' or evil desire. Ἐπιθυμία has here the Article, because it is personified; on which see Note at Col. iii. 5. The term ἐξέλκεσθαι simply signifies 'to draw off or away,' and, in a moral sense, to draw away from the paths of virtue. So Xenophon (cited by Raphel) has εἰ αὐτὸς ἐπιδεικνύει ἑαυτὸν μὴ ὑπὸ τῶν παραυτίκα ἡδονῶν ἑλκόμενον ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγαθῶν, and Test. xii. Patr., εἰς πορνείαν με ἐξειλκύσατο. From what follows, however, there would seem to be a metaphor taken from a harlot, such as is, in the Tabula Cebetis and elsewhere, represented as laying hold of men, and drawing them off to their company. In δελεαζόμενος there is a piscatory metaphor, added to complete and illustrate the idea. So Athen., p. 308, (cited by Wetst.) ἀνελκυσθεὶς δὲ οὐ δελεάζεται, οὔτε σαρκὶ οὔτε ἄλλῳ τινὶ ἐμψύχῳ. The term is, indeed, one not unfrequently used, in this metaphorical sense, of pleasure, desire, hope, &c., agreeably to the saying of Plato, that men are caught with pleasure, as fishes with a hook and bait. So Plutarch, in a strikingly similar passage, cited by Pott, says, τὸ γλυκὺ τῆς ἐπιθυμίας, ὥσπερ δέλεαρ, ἐξέλκειν ἀνθρώπους.

'Thus, then, (says Bp. Sanderson) every man's temptation, if it take effect, is merely from his own lust. It is his own act and deed, and to be imputed to himself alone. Persecutions, and all occurrences without, are not the chief causes, nor indeed causes at all, but the occasions only of the soul's fainting under them. Temptations or trials they are, but no more. The will has its natural liberty still, and it is at our choice whether we will yield or no. But every man is tempted (i. e. cum effectu, or so as to be overcome by the temptation) by his own lusts, whether drawn away by injuries and affrightments from doing good, or enticed by pleasures and allurements to do evil.'

Finally, that the whole blame of sin rests with the sinner himself, and that evil deeds have their origin in men's evil desires, is a truth also recognised by the wiser Heathens. So, in a passage of Cicero, Orat. pro Pisone, it is said, 'Sua quemque fraus, suum facinus, suum scelus—de sanctitate ac mente deturbat.' And to the same purpose is the following fine sentiment of Æschines contra Timarch., p. 27. 5: Μὴ γὰρ οἴεσθε τὰς τῶν ἀδικημάτων ἀρχὰς ἀπὸ θεῶν, ἀλλ' οὐχ ὑπ' ἀνθρώπων ἀσελγείας γίνεσθαι·—ἀλλ' αἱ προπετεῖς τοῦ σώματος ἡδοναὶ, καὶ τὸ μηδὲν ἱκανὸν ἡγεῖσθαι, ταῦτα πληροῖ τὰ λῃστήρια, ταῦτ' εἰς τὸν ἐπακτροκέλητα ἐμβιβάζει, ταῦτά ἐστιν ἑκάστῳ ποίνη.

15. εἶτα ἡ Ἐπιθυμία συλλαβοῦσα, &c.] Here lust, or evil concupiscence, is represented as a harlot, who allures men to her impure embraces, (see Prov. vii. 10,) and, from that conjunction, conceives and brings forth SIN; and when Sin is grown up, she is represented as following the same lewd courses with the same man, and the issue is DEATH, which destroys the sinner. This, then, is the true genealogy of Sin and Death. Lust is the mother of Sin, and Sin is the mother of Death, and the sinner the parent of both. Compare Rom. vii. 8—13, though the genealogy

1 Prov. 2. 6. John 3. 27. 1 Cor. 4. 7. Mal. 3. 6. Rom. 11. 29. m John 1. 13. & 3. 3. 1 Cor. 4. 15. Gal. 4. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 23. Matt. 20. 15. Jer. 2. 3.

ἀποκύει θάνατον. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοί· 16 [1] πᾶσα δόσις ἀγαθὴ, καὶ πᾶν δώρημα τέλειον, ἄνωθέν ἐστι, 17 καταβαῖνον ἀπὸ τοῦ Πατρὸς τῶν φώτων, παρ' ᾧ οὐκ ἔνι παραλλαγὴ ἢ τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα. [m] Βουληθεὶς ἀπεκύησεν 18

there is just the reverse. Hence, I would observe, may be emended and illustrated a corrupt and most obscure passage of Æschyl. Agam. 738—746, where, after saying that Ὕβρις begets, to the evil of men, a new progeny, he adds, Νεαρὰ φαοὺς κότον, Δαίμονα τὰν ἄμαχον Ἀνίερον θράσος μελαί-Νας μελάθροισιν ἄτας, Εἰδομέναν τοκεῦσιν. I would there, with Dr. S. Butler, read νεαρὰ φύει κόρον, which is confirmed by a passage of Theogn., cited by Wakefield: τίκτει τοι κόρος ὕβριν. Also by Herodot. viii. 77. Indeed that κόρον ought there to be read, is placed beyond doubt by a passage of Pind. Olymp. i. 90, κόρῳ δ' ἔλεν (for ἔλαβεν) Ἄταν, where, by a similar personification as that of the Apostle, we have in Ἄτη a personification of human folly, by which men are hurried into vice and destruction. Finally, with a view, probably, to the above passages of Pindar and Æschylus, Longinus de Sublim. § 44, after pointing out φιλαργυρία and φιληδονία as the two great diseases of the moral world, similarly says of these, that, where they abide long in any one, they soon generate fresh ones, νεοττοποιεῖται, καὶ ταχέως γενόμενα περὶ τεκνοποιΐαν, ἀλαζονείαν τε γεννῶσι καὶ τύφον καὶ τρυφήν· and these, it is added, breed ὕβριν, καὶ παρανομίαν, καὶ ἀναισχυντίαν.

To return to the passage of the Apostle, here, as Iaspis observes, under this sublime imagery, we have conveyed 'a sort of history of sin from Eve downward;' and the various gradations by which evil concupiscence produces sin, are ably traced by Gataker (cited in Pol. Synop.). Finally, the general meaning intended to be conveyed under this imagery is well expressed by Mr. Scott.

By the lust (ἐπιθυμία) here spoken of ought not to be understood (what many take it to mean) ungoverned sensual inclination only, but, in a general way, the vehement desire for any object (wealth, power, or fame. See 1 Cor. iii. 4), such as cannot be attained without sin. Indeed the idea of ἐπιθυμία here in the mind of St. James seems to have been the very one attached by St. Paul to what he calls τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, Rom. viii. 6, where it is similarly said, τὸ φρόνημα τῆς σαρκὸς, θάνατος; of which expression the import is well represented in the ninth Article of our Church by 'the lust of the flesh,' namely, that propensity to evil springing from the inward depravity of our corrupt nature.

16, 17. Here we have a confirmation of what was said at ver. 13, ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἀπείραστός ἐστι κακῶν, πειράζει δὲ αὐτὸς οὐδένα· and that, as Calvin says, by an argumentum à repugnantibus; showing, that as God is confessedly the author of all good, to suppose him to be the author of evil were absurd. This erroneous notion, then, the Apostle refutes, by opposing to it the contrary truth,—namely, that so far from God being the author of moral evil, by tempting men to sin, he is the giver of every good gift, the great source of all good.

16. μὴ πλανᾶσθε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγ.] A formula similar to several in St. Paul's Epistles, as 1 Cor. vi. 9. xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7, soliciting serious attention to some momentous (though not sufficiently acknowledged) truth, by a caution against the opposite error. Compare Matt. xxii. 29. Gal. vi. 7. 1 Cor. xv. 33.

17. πᾶν δώρημα τέλειον.] The term τέλειον is here used by way of climax; q. d. 'every gift that is full, complete, and without defect.' So the Pesch. Syr. renders it complete; Beza, integrum; and Doddridge, 'completely excellent.'

— τοῦ Πατρὸς τῶν φώτων.] Of this expression various interpretations have been proposed; some Commentators assigning to it a physical, others, a metaphorical sense. It may be best to suppose both here intended, though chiefly the former, and that by an allusion not only to the sun, but also to the other celestial luminaries; q. d. 'the Creator of the heavenly bodies [but not, like them, subject to change].' And so we have φῶτα, as used of the heavenly bodies, in Ps. cxxxv. 7. Jer. iv. 23. In the latter and secondary sense, the expression may be understood to allude to the spiritual light, and consequently happiness, which is dispensed by God in the Gospel. So John i. 4, it is said, καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ἦν τὸ φῶς τῶν ἀνθρώπων, and 1 Tim. vi. 16, God is described as φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον.

In the next words, παρ' ᾧ οὐκ ἔνι παραλλαγὴ ἢ τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα, many eminent Expositors, from Strigel and Grotius down to Bp. Jebb, regard παραλλαγὴ and τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα as astronomical metaphors; and Mr. Valpy (from Hammond) explains thus: 'Παραλλαγὴ signifies astronomically the several positions in which the sun appears to us every day at the rising, in the meridian, and when he sets. So τροπὴ is applied not to the daily, but yearly, course of the sun, as it moves towards the Northern or Southern Tropic; and according to the different shadows which it casts, geographers have learned to divide the different people into ἄσκιοι, ἑτερόσκιοι, and περίσκιοι. According to which is the word ἀποσκίασμα, casting of shadow, which, joined with τροπῆς, turning, signifies the variation of the shadows, according to the various motions of the sun above mentioned,' properly, 'the turning back of the heavenly bodies in their courses at the solstices.' It is, however, truly observed by Benson, that such is not the astronomical sense of παραλλαγὴ, which means the sun's parallax, though the above sense of παραλλαγὴ might be the popular one; and, indeed, as Morus suggests, it is not well either to neglect, or to too much press upon the astronomical metaphor; for by the very disposition of the words, it is plain that the Apostle meant the image to be twofold, and he shows the force intended to be expressed thereby, namely, alienation and obscuration, meaning, that 'nec benignitatis nec sanctitatis mutationem cadere in Summum Numen. Constat sibi luce suâ, i. e. perfectione.' The sense is well expressed by Mr. Wesley thus: 'In God is nothing of this kind (i. e. of vicissitude): he is ἡμᾶς λόγῳ ἀληθείας, εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἀπαρχήν τινα τῶν αὐτοῦ κτισμάτων.

19 [n] Ὥστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ, ἔστω πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ταχὺς εἰς τὸ ἀκοῦσαι, βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι, βραδὺς εἰς ὀργήν· 20 [o] ὀργὴ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς δικαιοσύνην Θεοῦ οὐ κατεργάζεται.
21 [p] Διὸ ἀποθέμενοι πᾶσαν ῥυπαρίαν καὶ περισσείαν κακίας, n Prov. 17. 27. Eccl. 5. 1, 2. o Eccl. 7. 9. p Col. 3. 8. 1 Pet. 2. 1. Ps. 25. 9. Acts 13. 26. Rom. 1. 16.

mere light. If there is any such vicissitude, it is in ourselves, not in him.'

18. βουληθεὶς ἀπεκύησεν—κτισμάτων.] This is meant to confirm and illustrate the assertion a little before, πᾶσα δόσις ἀγαθὴ, &c. The expression βουληθεὶς is by some understood of God's sovereign will or pleasure; by others, of his goodness and grace. Both senses seem intended, and the best comment on this expression is the similar one, Eph. i. 5, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ. In the words ἀπεκύησεν ἡμᾶς λόγῳ ἀληθείας we have a recurrence to the metaphor at ver. 15; there being here given a kind of genealogy of righteousness, of which God is the prime mover. Otherwise for ἀπεκύησε we should have had the usual term ἀνεγέννησε, denoting our regeneration by the Gospel. See 1 Pet. i. 3, 23. This, then, is analogous to the sonship spoken of at Gal. iii. 26. John i. 12, seq. iii. 3, seq. Eph. iv. 22, seqq. By ἡμᾶς is meant, 'us Jews,' as appears from the term ἀπαρχήν; for though the word has been variously explained, it can, in this context, only mean 'the first Christian converts,' in which sense ἡμεῖς occurs at Rom. xvi. 5, ὅς ἐστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀσίας εἰς Χριστόν. 1 Cor. xvi. 15, ἀπαρχὴ τῆς Ἀχαΐας. As the Jews were the peculiar people of God, chosen as instruments for preserving the true religion, and primarily called to embrace the Gospel, they might well be called ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κτισμάτων. Compare Jer. ii. 3.

19—21. An inference (as indicated by ὥστε) is now drawn from what has been said of God's goodness in bringing men to the knowledge of him by the word of truth; and that by way of admonition, though Expositors are not agreed whether it regards the words immediately preceding, or others farther back. It would seem to have respect to the whole of what has been said concerning the dealings of God with men in the work of salvation, vv. 5. 12, 13. 17, 18; q. d. 'Since God is the liberal giver of wisdom and every good and perfect gift, the Father of lights, unchangeable in his attributes, who tempteth no man, but of his free benignity hath begotten us again by the Gospel to be the first-fruits of his creatures, and hath promised a crown of life to those who love and obey him,—therefore, let every one,' &c. The general admonition here given, ἔστω πᾶς—λαλῆσαι, together with another just after subjoined, γίνεσθε ποιηταὶ λόγου, καὶ μὴ μόνον ἀκροαταί, form, as it were, a text, on which the Apostle dilates (with the exception of a digression at ii. 1—13, censuring the undue respect of persons in religious assemblies) up to iv. 12. The substance of what is contained in these general admonitions is,—that they should feel alacrity in receiving the word of truth, the GOSPEL, and in hearing it should be prompt to listen, but slow to speak (i. e. dogmatically or dictatorially). Also that they should not give way to that hot-headed zeal and controversial spirit (for which the Jews were so marked, see Hor. Sat. i. 4. 12) which makes men impatient of contradiction, and apt to break out into invectives against those who oppose what they think the truth. This position the Apostle fortifies by the general axiom, that 'the angry disputation of man can never promote the knowledge nor further the interests of true religion.' Moreover, he admonishes them not to rest in hearing only, but so to learn the Gospel as to act upon it.

— ταχὺς εἰς τὸ ἀκοῦσαι.] An expression probably formed on that at Ecclus. v. 11, γίνου ταχὺς ἐν ἀκροάσει. Βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι. Here by λαλῆσαι is to be understood not only conversation, but discussion, and, in a certain sense, teaching.

The admonition, ver. 21, ἐν πραΰτητι δέξασθε τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον, seems meant to be explanatory of the two admonitions here, ἔστω βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι, and βραδὺς εἰς ὀργήν. Moreover, in the words at ver. 20, ὀργὴ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς, &c., we have an incidental illustration of the βραδὺς εἰς ὀργὴν here, though that, as well as the other heads of admonition, is more fully illustrated further on; the writer commencing with the last, as being nearest.

21. διὸ ἀποθέμενοι πᾶσαν ῥυπαρίαν, &c.] These words seem added by way of resumption and completion of the admonition at ver. 19; or we may say, with Zuingle, 'Epilogus est superiorum, quæ de gratuitâ Dei bonitate per Christum cœperat.' The general sense intended is, 'This being the case, let every one, laying aside all that is evil, &c., receive, and, being swift to hear, receive with meekness,' &c. Thus, then, they are first to 'cease to do evil,' to lay aside all the iniquities of their former life (seeking, in the words of 2 Pet. i. 9, καθαρίζεσθαι τῶν πάλαι ἁμαρτιῶν); then 'to learn to do well;' to embrace the truth with alacrity, hear and learn its doctrines with docility, and finally to put in practice whatsoever they have acquired. Referring the words, however, (with most recent Expositors) to those which immediately precede (ὀργὴ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς, &c.) the terms ῥυπαρίαν and περισσείαν κακίας may be understood to denote ill language and excessive censoriousness, or moroseness (see Col. iii. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 1); but it would rather seem, according to the view adopted by the ancient Expositors, that they are meant to designate vice in general; an opinion confirmed by what is said 1 Pet. iii. 21. 1 Cor. v. 8. Acts viii. 22. 1 Pet. ii. 16. 1 Cor. xiv. 20, and finally a passage at 2 Cor. vii. 1, the best comment on the present. Thus, then, the term κακία here denotes vitiositas in general; and the expression περισσεία is meant to raise the sense of the two terms ῥυπαρία and κακία; being intended (as Theile explains it) to represent such vice as beyond all bounds of what might be expected in Christians, and those 'a kind of first-fruits' (ver. 18).

ἐν πραΰτητι δέξασθε τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον τὸν δυνάμενον σῶσαι τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν. [q] Γίνεσθε δὲ ποιηταὶ λόγου, καὶ μὴ 22 μόνον ἀκροαταὶ, παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυτούς. [r] Ὅτι εἴ τις 23 ἀκροατὴς λόγου ἐστὶ καὶ οὐ ποιητὴς, οὗτος ἔοικεν ἀνδρὶ κατανοοῦντι τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως αὐτοῦ ἐν ἐσόπτρῳ· κατενόησε γὰρ ἑαυτὸν καὶ ἀπελήλυθε, καὶ εὐθέως ἐπελάθετο 24 ὁποῖος ἦν. [s] Ὁ δὲ παρακύψας εἰς νόμον τέλειον τὸν τῆς 25 ἐλευθερίας, καὶ παραμείνας, οὗτος, οὐκ ἀκροατὴς ἐπιλησμονῆς γενόμενος, ἀλλὰ ποιητὴς ἔργου, οὗτος μακάριος ἐν τῇ ποι-q Matt. 7. 21. Luke 11. 28. Rom. 2. 13. 1 John 3. 7.

r Luke 6. 46.
s 2 Cor. 3. 18. infra 2. 12. John 13. 17. Luke 6. 47

— ἐν πραΰτητι δέξασθε τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον.] By λόγος is here denoted the revelation of the will of God to man in the Gospel. Of the term δέξασθε the full import is, as Calvin explains, 'ita suscipite ut vere inseratur, ut viva fiat insitio, quâ veluti cum corde nostro coalescat.' On the manner of its reception, as denoted by ἐν πραΰτητι, Calvin has admirably treated. Finally, the term ἔμφυτος here applied to the Gospel is used agreeably to that figure, by which its effects on the heart are compared to seed sown or plants planted in the ground; with allusion to that cardinal doctrine of the Gospel, that holiness and righteousness are not natural to the human heart, but require to be first implanted there by a Divine hand, and then nurtured by the Spirit of grace. And here I would observe that the expression ἔμφυτον λόγον should rather be rendered 'the implanted' than (as it is commonly done) the 'engrafted word;' for though there may be here an allusion to the grafting of trees, yet the other may be considered the principal idea: a view, I find, supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. Translator, who renders, 'planted into our nature.' For an able statement of the full sense intended by the Apostle, the reader is referred to the Notes of Calvin and Zuingle; as also a Sermon of Bp. Sanderson on 'the fruit of the Spirit' (Gal. v. 22, sq.).

22. γίνεσθε δὲ ποιηταὶ λόγου, &c.] q. d. 'But then in order that the word of truth may really produce those blessed effects on the soul which it was designed to do, ye must be not hearers only,' &c. With the admonition καὶ μὴ μόνον ἀκροαταὶ we have conjoined, in the next words, παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυτοὺς, a warning; it being thus intimated that, by being mere hearers only, they will but deceive themselves, and not attain the expected salvation. See vv. 26, 27; and compare Matt. vii. 21. Rom. ii. 13.

23—25. Here the Apostle illustrates the case of the unfruitful hearer by a familiar comparison, presenting a most apt emblem thereof.

23. ὅτι εἴ τις ἀκροατὴς λόγου, &c.] Meaning (as Hammond explains) 'that the word of God is a glass, reflecting to a man the portraiture of himself, ὁποῖός ἐστι, whether there be any thing amiss in him; and he that hears the word of God and doeth it not, is as if a man should look upon and contemplate his face in a looking-glass, and no more. As for any use or effect of this looking, he beheld and went away, and presently forgot. When he has seen what blemishes are to be corrected, to be reformed in him, he contents himself with having seen them, thinks no more of them, and forgets to amend them.' Πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως is, as Rosenmuller says, for πρὸς γνήσιον (native or natural), the τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ προσώπου ὁμοίαν of Artemid. On. ii. 7, where he says κατοπτρίζεσθαι δὲ, καὶ ὁρᾶν τὴν ἑαυτοῦ εἰκόνα ὁμοίαν ἐν κατόπτρῳ, ἀγαθόν.

25. Here the Apostle contrasts with the case of the careless that of the attentive hearer, and, as Aretius remarks, 'antithesi opponit contrariorum vitæ generum contrarios effectus.' Thus to κατανοοῦντι (which only denotes the act of beholding, i. e. with no marked attention) is antithetically opposed παρακύψας· which, as it primarily signifies 'to stoop down, for the purpose of carefully looking at' (see Luke xxiv. 12. John xx. 5. 11), sometimes, as here, denotes simply 'to look at, as in a glass, attentively;' see 1 Pet. i. 12, εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι. Here, however, there is an accommodation to the same metaphor (of a looking-glass) as in the foregoing sentence.

— νόμον τέλειον τὸν τῆς ἐλευθερίας.] Not meaning, as some explain, the Moral law, as opposed to the Ceremonial one; for that, however it may deserve such a title in itself, cannot give liberty to such as transgress it. Nor must we, with others, explain it 'the Gospel;' but rather, in a general sense, the law of Divine Revelation in the Gospel, which may truly be said to be the Law of Liberty, and that in various respects; 1. as being in itself of a free spirit, not burdened with slavish ceremonies; 2. as freeing those who embrace it, and fulfil it at once, from the burdensome observances of the Mosaic Law, and from bondage to the Law of sin in their members (Rom. vii. 23), liberating them from the curse of the broken Moral Law, and bringing them (as St. Paul says, Rom. viii. 21) from 'the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God;' see Rom. viii. 12—17. Gal. iv. 21, seqq. Hebr. xii. 18, seq. This, then, is no other than what St. Paul, at Rom. viii. 2, calls 'the law of the spirit of life in Christ,' which 'hath made' us 'free from the law of sin and death.' Now this is here justly styled τέλειος, both as being perfect in itself, and in its character, as containing a perfect rule of life (see Ps. xix. 7. Rom. xii. 2); and also as making its votaries perfect, by repairing and restoring the defaced image of God, in which man was originally created. See Col. iii. 10. 2 Cor. iii. 18.

This Law is represented as a mirror into which the Christian may look, to judge of his true spiritual character. By the term παραμείνας is denoted fixedness and permanency of attention.

— ἀκροατὴς ἐπιλησμονῆς.] Here ἐπιλησμονῆς is a Genitive substantive for adjective, 26 ήσει αὐτοῦ ἔσται. [t] Εἴ τις δοκεῖ θρῆσκος εἶναι [ἐν ὑμῖν], μὴ t Ps. 34. 13. infra 3. 6. χαλιναγωγῶν γλῶσσαν αὐτοῦ, ἀλλ' ἀπατῶν καρδίαν αὐτοῦ, 1 Pet. 3. 10. Matt. 15. 11, 18.

27 τούτου μάταιος ἡ θρησκεία. [u] Θρησκεία καθαρὰ καὶ ἀμίαντος u Is. 1. 16, 17. & 58. 6, 7.
παρὰ [τῷ] Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ αὕτη ἐστίν· ἐπισκέπτεσθαι ὀρφα- Rom. 12. 2. νοὺς καὶ χήρας ἐν τῇ θλίψει αὐτῶν, ἄσπιλον ἑαυτὸν τηρεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου.

1 II. [a] ᾿ΑΔΕΛΦΟΙ μου, μὴ ἐν προσωποληψίαις ἔχετε a Lev. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. τὴν πίστιν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τῆς δόξης. & 16. 19. Prov. 24. 23.
2 ἐὰν γὰρ εἰσέλθῃ εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν ὑμῶν ἀνὴρ χρυσοδακ- Eccl. 42. 1. Matt. 22. 16.

ἐπιλήσμων. Ποιητὴς ἔργου, scil. τοῦ νόμου, 'of the work enjoined by the law.' Ἐν τῇ ποιήσει αὐτοῦ, scil. τοῦ νόμου, 'in his performing [of the law].'

26. The Apostle here brings the admonition close home to their bosoms, and that by drawing a marked line of distinction between true and feigned religion. Accordingly, he here—with reference, we may suppose, to certain persons among those whom he is addressing,—puts the case of one who has the reputation of piety (δοκεῖ ϑρῆσκος εἶναι, on which form of expression see my Note on Thucydides, i. 79. 1), and, as appears from what follows, 'thinketh himself,' but mistakingly, 'to be pious;' and who, moreover, doth not bridle his tongue, is not βραδὺς εἰς τὸ λαλῆσαι. This man's religion, it is said, is vain, and will profit him nothing. Θρῆσκος is a rare word, only found elsewhere in Hesych. Ἀπατῶν καρδίαν is synonymous with the παραλογ. ἑαυτοὺς at ver. 22. By not bridling the tongue is meant, the giving loose to vain and polluting, or boastful and slanderous, discourse. Of the metaphor in χαλιναγ. several examples are adduced by Wetstein.

27. ϑρησκεία καθαρὰ—ἐστίν.] Here, as Paley well remarks, the Apostle is describing religion, not in its principle, but in its effects. Having declared what religion is not, he now points out what it is. This, however (as Carpzov and Grotius observe), is not to be taken as a description of the whole of religion, but as an illustration of its nature and effects, by a reference to some of its principal duties,—beneficence and moral purity. See Matt. xxv. 34, seqq., and the Notes of Burkitt and Abp. Secker in D'Oyly and Mant.

— παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρί.] Render, 'before God, even the Father.' Ἀμίαντος is subjoined to καθαρὰ, both to strengthen the sense, and to correspond to the term ἄσπιλον in the next clause. On ἐπισκέπτεσθαι see Note at Matt. xxv. 36. Finally, by the words following, ἄσπιλον ἑαυτὸν, &c., is meant the keeping oneself apart from the sinful pursuits, corrupt maxims, and evil customs of the world. See 1 John ii. 13—16. 2 Pet. ii. 18—20, and Paley's Sermons, xxi.

II. The connexion here is by Pott supposed to be with what immediately precedes, by a sort of illustration è contrario. But it is rather with the general subject of vv. 22—27 of the foregoing chapter, namely, the necessity of doing, and not merely hearing or believing the Gospel; implying the great truth, that the external part of religion is fruitless, when men live in the neglect of its moral duties. Indeed, the scope of this whole chapter seems to be, that of further inculcating what was before said, on the necessity of doing, as well as professing. This the Apostle presses on their attention, by pointing out the breach of the duty in their general conduct, even when engaged in the performance of religious services: the poor being, in the places of Divine worship, treated with contumely, and elsewhere suffered to starve, and their miseries only visited with faint good wishes. Accordingly, the first part of this chapter (v. 1—13) is occupied in animadverting on their breach of the most important of the works of the Gospel law,—Christian love in its extensive sense. This serves to introduce, in the second part (v. 14. fin.), a serious warning against an error prevalent in that age (almost general, indeed, amongst the Jews, and which also might lead to the neglect of other moral duties, as well as charity), namely, that a speculative belief of the doctrines of the Gospel was sufficient to save men, however deficient they might be in those moral duties which it enjoins. He then proceeds to show the emptiness of such faith, and consequently its inadequacy to salvation, by some plain and familiar examples, tending to evince that moral actions are the only sure evidence of a true and well principled faith, and that where these do not exist, all else is valueless.

1. μὴ ἐν προσωποληψίαις, &c.] From the above introductory remarks, it is clear that μὴ here is not (as some suppose it) interrogative, but prohibitive. And of the expression ἐν προσωποληψίαις ἔχειν τὴν πίστιν, the true sense seems to be, 'Do not so hold the faith of Christ, as to show respect of persons.' This plural use of the word προσωποληψία is very rare, perhaps no where else occurring, insomuch that one might suspect the C to have arisen from the ε following; and, indeed, a few MSS. have it not. But probably that was only ex emendatione; and the common reading is defended by 2 Pet. iii. 11, ἐν ἁγίαις ἀναστροφαῖς καὶ εὐσεβείαις, and Col. iii. 22, μὴ ἐν ὀφθαλμοδουλείαις. Moreover, as Hottinger here observes, the plural use of abstract substantives is found in good writers, namely, 'ubi non tam notio generalis, quam res vel eventa singularia significantur.'

Τῆς δόξης may be construed with πίστιν before; but it is better joined with τοῦ Κυρίου; by which it will stand for ἐνδόξου, as in similar expressions at 1 Cor. ii. 8. Heb. ix. 5. Acts vii. 2. Eph. i. 17. And so ἐν δόξῃ at 2 Cor. iii. 9.

2. ἐὰν γὰρ εἰσέλθῃ.] This is intended to illustrate by example what was meant by ἐν προσ. ἔχ. τὴν πίστιν.

— τὴν συναγωγὴν ὑμῶν.] From what is said τύλιος ἐν ἐσθῆτι λαμπρᾷ, εἰσέλθῃ δὲ καὶ πτωχὸς ἐν ῥυπαρᾷ ἐσθῆτι, καὶ ἐπιβλέψητε ἐπὶ τὸν φοροῦντα τὴν ἐσθῆτα τὴν 3 λαμπρὰν, καὶ εἴπητε αὐτῷ· Σὺ κάθου ὧδε καλῶς, καὶ τῷ πτωχῷ εἴπητε· Σὺ στῆθι ἐκεῖ, ἢ κάθου ὧδε ὑπὸ τὸ ὑπο-πόδιόν μου· καὶ οὐ διεκρίθητε ἐν ἑαυτοῖς, καὶ ἐγένεσθε κρι- 4 ταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν; [b] Ἀκούσατε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγα- 5 πητοί· οὐχ ὁ Θεὸς ἐξελέξατο τοὺς πτωχοὺς τοῦ κόσμου [τούτου], πλουσίους ἐν πίστει, καὶ κληρονόμους τῆς βασι-λείας, ἧς ἐπηγγείλατο τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν; [c] ὑμεῖς δὲ 6 b Luke 6. 20. & 12. 21. John 7. 48. 1 Cor. 1. 26, &c. 1 Tim. 6. 18, 19. Exod. 20. 6. c 1 Cor. 11. 22.

at vv. 4. 6. 9, some eminent Commentators would render this, not 'your place of worship,' but 'your judicial assemblies;' such being, they say, by a Jewish custom, held in the places of worship. Yet of the word συναγωγὴ to signify of itself a judicial assembly, no example has been adduced. Such, however, may be included, if the term be taken to denote (what it very well may) a place of assembly, whether for worship, or for judicial purposes. On either of which occasions this προσωποληψία would be alike improper. Certain it is that συναγωγὴ was sometimes used to denote a Christian place of worship; as, indeed, might be expected; the term being, in its peculiar conveniency, likely to be retained, with other similar ones, by the Jewish Christians. And here, it may be observed, the singular is used generically for the plural.

— ἀνὴρ χρυσοδακτύλιος.] Meaning (like χρυσόχειρ in Lucian) one who wears rings on his fingers, as the rich generally did. The word is no where else found, but it is formed analogically, like χρυσοπλόκαμος, &c. Λαμπρᾷ, 'splendid,' 'sumptuous,' (so Rev. xviii. 14, τὰ λαμπρά); namely, as opposed to the term following ῥυπαρᾷ, mean, shabby; as the word is used in Joseph. Ant. vii. 11. 3, ῥυπαρὰν ἐσθῆτα.

3. ἐπιβλέψητε ἐπὶ] i. e. 'look upon with respect and favour,' like the Latin suspicere. Καλῶς is for ἐν καλῷ, 'in a good place.' So Lucian, Ver. Hist. ii. 13, καλῶς ἐκάθισε.

4. καὶ οὐ διεκρίθητε—πονηρῶν;] On the construction and sense of this passage some difference of opinion exists. One thing is certain, that the sentence is interrogative; for understanding it declaratively, the sense arising will be most frigid and forced. It is true that to this the commencing καὶ is adverse, and for that reason was cancelled by the early Critics; but it may very well be rendered now, or then, as in Luke x. 29, καὶ τίς ἐστί μου πλησίον; 1 Cor. v. 2. 2 Cor. ii. 2, and often in καὶ πῶς; Or rather it may be said to correspond to ἐὰν γὰρ at ver. 2, and καὶ at ver. 3; there being here, as Pott remarks, a bipartite apodosis to the protasis at vv. 2 & 3.

Of the words οὐ διεκρίθητε — πονηρῶν, the general sense is, doubtless, that expressed by Theile: 'Tunc profecto, hac tali ratione divitem præ paupere suspicientes, magnopere vos peccatis judicando ac discernendo.' On the exact import, however, of the term διεκρίθητε a difference of opinion exists. Some eminent modern Commentators take it to mean, 'ye are in doubt, or hesitation.' But there is no reason to abandon the sense assigned by the ancient and most modern Expositors, 'are ye not partial?' i. e. do ye not, then, make partial distinctions? Or the meaning may be, 'do ye not decide rashly one amongst another?' If, however, the sense of doubting or hesitation be here intended, it will be better, with Theile, to distribute the sentence into two interrogative clauses, as follows: 'Et non dubitastis apud vosmet ipsos? Et facti estis iniqui judices?' Ἐν ἑαυτοῖς is for ἐν ἀλλήλοις, or ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν, as Mark xi. 23. The words καὶ (οὐκ) ἐγένεσθε κριταὶ διαλογισμῶν πονηρῶν are explanatory of the foregoing; and the Genitive here is one not of object, but, by Hebraism, put for our attributive; q. d. 'are ye not judges who surmise evil,' (as it is said, Matt. ix. 4, ἱνατί ὑμεῖς ἐνθυμεῖσθε πονηρὰ ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν;) who form your judgments on erroneous reasonings and false estimates? viz. by judging of any one's worth by his outward appearance; in short, that kind of judgment against which Christ himself warns, John vii. 24, 'Judge not according to the appearance, but judge ye righteous judgment.'

5—7. Duplici argumento nunc probat, facere eos præposterè, quum in divitum gratiam pauperes contemnunt. (Calvin.) The Apostle now convicts them at once of impiety and of folly by this unjust preference; showing that the class of persons whom they despise are especially objects of God's favour; while they whom they thus prefer, are those by whom Christ's followers are especially oppressed.

5. οὐχ ὁ Θεὸς ἐξελέξατο τοὺς πτωχοὺς, &c.] This choice, and the favour which it implies, are to be understood only as that resulting from the better disposition towards the Gospel evinced by the class in question, from their not being entangled in the temptations which beset the rich. Τούτου after κόσμου, not found in many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, has been cancelled by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz; a procedure supported by a passage of 1 Cor. i. 27. Yet the word is probably genuine, τοῦ κόσμου τούτου being for ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ τούτῳ, like the expression elsewhere πλουσίους ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι.

At πλουσίους ἐν πίστει most Commentators supply εἶναι. Yet thus a sense arises which we can hardly suppose intended by the Apostle. It is better, with others, to suppose an ellipsis of ὄντας; or, which comes to the same thing, regard πλουσίους as in apposition with πτωχούς: the Apostle meaning thus to intimate the grounds of the favour and preference just adverted to, by adverting to the contrary condition, as to the things of another world, of the others, 'poor, indeed, in the treasures of this world, but rich in those of faith.'

ἠτιμάσατε τὸν πτωχόν. Οὐχ οἱ πλούσιοι καταδυναστεύουσιν 7 ὑμῶν, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἕλκουσιν ὑμᾶς εἰς κριτήρια; οὐκ αὐτοὶ 8 βλασφημοῦσι τὸ καλὸν ὄνομα τὸ ἐπικληθὲν ἐφ᾿ ὑμᾶς; [d] Εἰ d Lev. 19. 18. Matt. 22. 39.
μέν τοι νόμον τελεῖτε βασιλικὸν, κατὰ τὴν γραφήν· Ἀγα- Mark 12. 31. Rom. 13. 8, 9. Gal. 5. 14.
πήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς σεαυτὸν, καλῶς ποιεῖτε· 9 [e] εἰ δὲ προσωποληπτεῖτε, ἁμαρτίαν ἐργάζεσθε, ἐλεγχόμενοι e Lev. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. & 16. 19.
10 ὑπὸ τοῦ νόμου ὡς παραβάται. [f] Ὅστις γὰρ ὅλον τὸν νόμον f Deut. 27. 26.
11 τηρήσει, πταίσει δὲ ἐν ἑνὶ, γέγονε πάντων ἔνοχος. [g] ὁ γὰρ Matt. 5. 19, 27. Gal. 3. 10. εἰπών· Μὴ μοιχεύσῃς, εἶπε καί· Μὴ φονεύσῃς· εἰ δὲ g Exod. 20 13, 14.
οὐ μοιχεύσεις, φονεύσεις δὲ, γέγονας παραβάτης νόμου. Deut. 5. 17.

6. οὐχ οἱ πλούσιοι—εἰς κ.;] Here, as Rosenmuller and Pott observe, we have another argument against the undue and indecorous partiality in question; namely, that the persons to whom it is shown are the least worthy of it. Render: 'Are not the rich those who lord it over you? are not they the persons who drag you into the courts of justice? are not they the persons who blaspheme, defame, or profane the honoured name [of the Redeemer] pronounced over you [at baptism]?' namely, by calling him impostor. It is well observed by Calvin, that this is not said to incite them to avenge themselves on the rich (for that were contrary to their Christian profession); but it is merely mentioned in order to set forth the unreasonableness of their conduct in thus paying court to their oppressors, and slighting their friends, or at least those who have done them no injury. See also Beza in loc.

8—13. Having carried the argument thus far, the Apostle now waives it, considering what may be urged on the other side. Now it might be pleaded, that honouring the rich man was no more than fulfilling the injunction of the Law, which bids us honour our neighbour as ourselves. This the Apostle admits, but shows that the objection in question does not hold good, since loving one's fellow-creatures does not authorize undue preference. (Aretius.) The Apostle shows that this respect of persons involves a violation of the Law; here urging what is not only a positive injunction of that Law, but what forms a fundamental principle of all Divine law, and consequently extends to the Gospel likewise; for the best Expositors are agreed that the term βασιλικὸς here employed, as it often denotes what is principal, or eminently good and excellent, (thus Plato, in a passage cited by Wetstein, similarly says, τὸ μὲν ὀρθὸν νόμος ἐστὶ βασιλικὸς, and in Josephus, Bell. iii. 10. 8, we have the term βασιλικὴ used in the sense præstantissima,) so it is here applied to this maxim, as being what Christ, Matt. xxii. 38, calls the πρώτη καὶ μεγάλη ἐντολὴ, and St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 10, and Gal. v. 14, designates as the πλήρωμα νόμου; with reference to the superior obligation and pre-eminence of this precept, as governing all the other duties to our neighbour.

8. εἰ μέν τοι.] 'Now if.'

9. εἰ δὲ προσωποληπτεῖτε, &c.] As much as to say, 'But if ye have respect to persons [especially if ye are partial to your own persons] that is not well, nay, ye commit sin, being, indeed, convicted by the law as transgressors.' By the law is here meant the law just mentioned, or such others as more particularly forbade respect of persons, as Levit. xix. 15. Now any one may be said to be convicted by a law, when he acts contrary to its injunctions.

10. ὅστις γὰρ—ἔνοχος.] Πάντων ἔνοχος is for ἔνοχος κρίματι πάντων; meaning, 'is amenable to condemnation as a breaker of the whole body of the Law,' and consequently his punishment will be proportioned to his offence. On the proper force of the term ἔνοχος see Note at Matt. xxvi. 66. 1 Cor. xi. 27.

Here, then, the Apostle goes yet further, and (by an argument, as Aretius observes, taken from the intimate connexion of the whole Law, which is so perfectly united, that no one part can be violated without the rest being also violated) affirms that he who thus offends against the particular law in question will be condemned as a transgressor of the Divine law in general, and thereby be obnoxious to the punishment of transgression; for 'he who keepeth, or endeavours to keep, the whole of the Law, except in one point (and especially if that be against the scope of the whole), wherein he deliberately, presumptuously, and habitually offends (for the argument itself implies these limitations), he is adjudged to punishment as a transgressor of the law, quite as much as if he had broken all its precepts.' Now it was an acknowledged principle among the Jewish casuists, that the wilful breach of one law of a body of laws involves a transgression of the whole; and accordingly the Apostle here means to say, that the same is applicable to the laws of Christianity. And, in the present case, he who offends in one point may well be pronounced guilty, inasmuch as the point concerns Christian charity, 'on which hang all the law and the Prophets;' see Matt. xxii. 40. 'Thus then (says Bp. Bull) the Apostle means to affirm, that he may well be said to be guilty of all who offends against that on which all depend: a chain consisting of many links is broken when any one link is broken.'

11. This verse serves to explain and illustrate what was said in the preceding; suggesting also the reason of the thing, and that, as Aretius observes, from the nature of Him who is the author of that Law; q. d. 'He is one who made the whole law; therefore whosoever offends in one particular, whatever it may be, offends against God himself, and so is guilty of the non-observance of the whole Law.'

— γέγονας παραβάτης νόμου.] Meaning, it would seem (as Bp. Middleton explains), 'Thou art a violator of that morality which the whole

h Supra 1. 25. [h] Οὕτω λαλεῖτε καὶ οὕτω ποιεῖτε, ὡς διὰ νόμου ἐλευθερίας 12 i Matt. 6. 15. & 18. 35. & 25. 41, 42. Luke 16. 25. μέλλοντες κρίνεσθαι· [i] ἡ γὰρ κρίσις ἀνίλεως τῷ μὴ ποιήσαντι 13 ἔλεος· [καὶ] κατακαυχᾶται ἔλεος κρίσεως.
k Matt. 7. 26. supra 1. 23. [k] Τί τὸ ὄφελος, ἀδελφοί μου, ἐὰν πίστιν λέγῃ τις 14 ἔχειν, ἔργα δὲ μὴ ἔχῃ; μὴ δύναται ἡ πίστις σῶσαι αὐτόν; l Luke 3. 11. 1 John 3. 17. [l] Ἐὰν δὲ ἀδελφὸς ἢ ἀδελφὴ γυμνοὶ ὑπάρχωσι, καὶ λειπό- 15 m 1 John 3. 18. μενοι ὦσι τῆς ἐφημέρου τροφῆς, [m] εἴπῃ δέ τις αὐτοῖς ἐξ 16 ὑμῶν· "Ὑπάγετε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, θερμαίνεσθε καὶ χορτάζεσθε,"— μὴ δῶτε δὲ αὐτοῖς τὰ ἐπιτήδεια τοῦ σώματος· τί τὸ ὄφελος; οὕτω καὶ ἡ πίστις, ἐὰν μὴ ἔργα ἔχῃ, νεκρά ἐστι καθ' 17 n Infra 3. 13. ἑαυτήν. [n] Ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις· Σὺ πίστιν ἔχεις, κἀγὼ ἔργα ἔχω· 18 and every part of the Law was designed to promote.'

12, 13. These verses contain a general admonition, founded, by way of inference (though the usual form to denote it, διὸ, is here, by asyndeton, omitted), and that followed up at ver. 13, by a particular denunciation, serving for exemplification. The inference in question is (as Aretius observes) this: 'therefore our lives and conversation are to be so framed that we may be judged according to the law of love.'

12. οὕτω λαλεῖτε καὶ οὕτω, &c.] The word κρίνεσθαι appears to be emphatic; it being shown (as Bp. Middleton remarks) that the παραβάτης νόμου does not act as one who shall be judged by the law of liberty. The general sense, then, seems to be that expressed by Dr. Burton: 'Do not be so fond of talking of your law of liberty, as if you might act as you pleased; but rather remember, that you will be judged by this law of liberty. For instance, if you have not shown mercy, you will find none at the day of judgment; but the merciful man has nothing to fear on that score at the day of judgment.' The νόμος ἐλευθερίας here spoken of is that of which mention was made supra i. 25, where see Note. Moreover, διὰ νόμου is for κατὰ νόμον. The γὰρ, ver. 13, has reference to a clause omitted; q. d. 'And remember how you exercise judgment on earth; for,' &c.; there being here, as Aretius observes, a fresh argument connected with the foregoing inference, and founded on the fear of Divine punishment. These two clauses, ἡ γὰρ κρίσις—κρίσεως, have in them an adagial air; and of the term κατακαυχᾶται the sense seems to be that expressed by Vater, 'non solum lætatur, sed confidenter expectat;' meaning (by a use of κατὰ found in Thucydides, iii. 83) 'has not the least fear of judgment;' which must, however, be limited in the present application, to import, that pity shown to others, as it were, disarms severe judgment; though Dr. Barrow explains it, 'appeases God's wrath and prevents our condemnation.'

Καὶ before κατακαυχ., not found in many MSS., Versions, and early Editions, has been cancelled by Griesbach, Matthæi, Vater, and Scholz; and justly. Probably the true reading is, as Matthæi supposes, κατακαυχᾷ τε, which is found in several MSS.

14—26. The Apostle now returns to the subject treated of supra i. 22—27, that they should be not hearers only, but doers of the word; thereby showing that all but practical religion is vain and ineffectual for salvation. And here he glances at a kindred subject,—the error of those who (falling into the Jewish notion, that the profession of a covenanted religion was sufficient, without suitable practice,—and perverting the Gospel doctrine of justification by faith) maintained, that faith alone without works would avail for salvation. By the supposed case of one thus professing to have faith, but at the same time being destitute of works, he shows that such a faith will be utterly unavailable for salvation; and at vv. 15, 16 he illustrates this inutility by a familiar comparison, and one bearing upon the very failure in question.

16. ὑπάγετε ἐν εἰρήνῃ, &c.] Forms of expression constituting such sort of common-place expressions of good-will, as similar ones in Homer, Odyss. ζ. 207, πρὸς γὰρ Διός εἰσιν ἅπαντες Ξεῖνοί τε πτωχοί τε, and Menand. ap. Stob. Serm. p. 512, Gesn., Ἀεὶ νομίζονθ' οἱ πένητες τῶν θεῶν. The inference is, 'As good words, even if accompanied by good will, do not profit the distressed; so neither does faith, without works, benefit the believer; it is of itself dead; i. e. utterly without effect; resembling good words to the poor, unattended with actual relief.'

18. ἀλλ' ἐρεῖ τις, &c.] A passage which, with the appearance of plainness, has not a little embarrassed Expositors, both ancient and modern. And here, as in other cases of difficulty and perplexity, not a few various readings exist. Of these may be especially noticed that remarkable one, by which, instead of the lectio recepta ἐκ, fourteen MSS. and most of the ancient Versions have χωρὶς, which has been adopted by almost all Critics, and edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Pott, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz. According to this the Apostle is supposed to prove the necessity of good works, by showing the impossibility of evincing the existence of faith without them; q. d. (ironically) 'Show me now the excellence of thy faith [if thou canst] without works.' I will not believe that the faith of which thou boastest is worthy of the name, unless thou show it me in re, and by thy deeds. Yet this reading, while it is greatly inferior to the above in external authority, so also is it in internal evidence; for far more likely is it that ἐκ should have been altered to χωρὶς, than χωρὶς to ἐκ (especially considering the occurrence of χωρὶς at ver. 20). That χωρὶς, the plainer, should be purposely altered to ἐκ, the more difficult, reading, were in the highest degree improba-δεῖξόν μοι τὴν πίστιν σου ‡ ἐκ τῶν ἔργων σου, κἀγὼ δείξω 19 σοι ἐκ τῶν ἔργων μου τὴν πίστιν μου. [o] Σὺ πιστεύεις ὅτι o Matt. 8. 29. Mark 1. 24.

ὁ Θεὸς εἷς ἐστι; Καλῶς ποιεῖς· καὶ τὰ δαιμόνια πιστεύ- Acts 19. 15.
20 ουσι, καὶ φρίσσουσι. Θέλεις δὲ γνῶναι, ὦ ἄνθρωπε κενὲ, 21 ὅτι ἡ πίστις χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων νεκρά ἐστιν; [p] Ἀβραὰμ ὁ p Gen. 22. 9, 12.
πατὴρ ἡμῶν οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη, ἀνενέγκας Ἰσαὰκ, τὸν 22 υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον; [q] Βλέπεις ὅτι ἡ πίστις q Heb. 11. 17.
συνήργει τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἔργων ἡ πίστις r Gen. 15. 6.
23 ἐτελειώθη; [r] καὶ ἐπληρώθη ἡ γραφὴ ἡ λέγουσα· Ἐπίστευσε 2 Chron. 20. 7.
δὲ Ἀβραὰμ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐλογίσθη αὐτῷ εἰς δικαιο- Isa. 41. 8. Rom. 4. 3. Gal. 3. 6.

ble; and utterly impossible is it that χωρὶς could be accidentally altered to ἐκ, any more than ἐκ to χωρίς. In short, the reading in question is manifestly, as Matthæi says, a mere 'correctio arguta,' or ingenious mode of removing the difficulty of the passage. To reject, then, a reading so strongly attested as ἐκ, were surely unwarrantable, unless it could be shown to yield either no sense, or one utterly unsuitable, which is by no means the case; for while it yields a sense equally good in itself and suitable to the context as χωρὶς, it is superior to it in weight of sentiment and pointedness of expression. According to this, the sense of the passage is well represented in the following paraphrase of Dr. Mill: 'Dixerit pius vereque Christianus aliquis, homini inani isti qui ex nuda fidei professione, neglecto pietatis studio, se salutem consecuturum arbitratur: Age vero, tu fidem habes, eamque mire jactitas; ego, de fide mea tacens, opera habeo; Fideique (quam crepas) legem ipsam vita ac moribus exprimo. Ostende mihi fidem tuam ex factis tuis; Ex factis, inquam; neque enim alias norim te credere. Verum hoc non potes; opera non habes, quæ ostendas. Ego vero interim ex operibus meis nullo negotio Fidem meam indicabo. Opera ipsa quæ dico, sunt opera Fidei; produntque luculente satis, etiam me tacente, fontem ipsum ex quo profluunt.' To which may be subjoined the closer and less paraphrastic representation of the sense by Theile: 'Nay, rather to such a person any one might well say, Now then thou hast faith, and I have works; now show me thy faith, if thou cánst, namely, from thy works; and I could most easily show thee from my works my faith.'

19. σὺ πιστεύεις—φρίσσουσι.] Here we have an illustration of the position at ver. 17. To show the vanity of such a faith as does not influence the conduct, the Apostle adverts to the fundamental article of all true religion, the existence of one God, the only object of worship, as distinguished from the worship paid to idols: a doctrine held alike by the Jews and the heterodox Christians here alluded to.

By the belief here spoken of is to be understood a merely speculative and inoperative belief; such an involuntary belief as even the demons entertain, who, we know, confessed Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of God. See Luke iv. 41.

20. The Apostle now proceeds to confirm the above assertion from Scripture.

— ἄνθρωπε κενὲ] 'foolish man.' An address, like others of our Lord and of St. Paul, used by any one when inculcating that of which the truth is so obvious, as scarcely to require proof; and also employed in cases of grave and just reprehension.

— ὅτι ἡ πίστις χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων νεκρά ἐστιν.] An apophthegm which may be illustrated from the arts of common life, in which theory is dead (i. e. useless) if not carried into practice. So Philo, p. 430, says, Τίς ὄνησις εὐφώνου ἡσυχάζοντος, ἢ μὴ αὐλοῦντος αὐλητοῦ, ἢ κιθαριστοῦ μὴ κιθαρίζοντος, ἢ συνόλως τεχνίτου τοῦ κατὰ τὴν τέχνην μὴ ἐνεργοῦντος; ἡ γὰρ ἄνευ πράξεως θεωρία ψιλὴ, οὐδὲν ὄφελος τοῖς ἐπιστήμοσιν.

21. In proof and illustration of the foregoing assertion, of the necessity of good works to a true justifying faith, the Apostle adduces the examples of Abraham and of Rahab. Ἀνενέγκας is well rendered by Prof. Scholefield, 'in offering up,' i. e. in being ready to offer him up; for it is always regarded in Scripture as a real sacrifice. Abraham's justification by faith had, indeed, taken place long before this offering up of his son, and, as Prof. Scholefield observes, 'all that this action did towards it was supplying the evidence of the nature of the faith by which he was justified.' For a complete refutation of the discrepancy which at first seems to subsist between St. James and St. Paul on faith and works, the reader is referred to Bp. Bull's Harmonia Apostolica. Suffice it here to say, with Mr. Wesley, 'there is no contradiction between the Apostles; because, 1. They do not speak of the same faith; St. Paul speaking of living faith,—St. James here of dead faith: 2. they do not speak of the same works; St. Paul speaking of works antecedent to faith,—St. James, of works subsequent to it.'

It may be added, that as the very same Scriptural examples are adduced by St. Paul to prove the doctrine of justification by faith only, and by St. James, to prove justification by works, this strongly confirms the supposition that each Apostle wrote to correct the errors that had sprung up among Christians on this subject—the opposite errors of Legalists and of Antinomians.

22. ἡ πίστις σ. τ. ἔ. α.] 'his faith wrought with his works;' i. e. was subservient to the production of them: a rare use of συνεργεῖν, but of which examples are adduced from Philo. Καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἔργων—ἐτελ., 'and by works his faith was rendered complete,' made available to justification by actual obedience. See 2 Cor. xii. 9.

23. ἐπληρώθη.] Meaning, as Abp. Newcome explains, 'was thus more fully verified,' though σὔνην· καὶ φίλος Θεοῦ ἐκλήθη. Ὁρᾶτε [τοίνυν] ὅτι ἐξ 24 ἔργων δικαιοῦται ἄνθρωπος, καὶ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως μόνον; s Ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ Ῥαὰβ ἡ πόρνη οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων ἐδικαιώθη ὑπο- 25 δεξαμένη τοὺς ἀγγέλους, καὶ ἑτέρᾳ ὁδῷ ἐκβαλοῦσα; Ὥσπερ 26 γὰρ τὸ σῶμα χωρὶς πνεύματος νεκρόν ἐστιν, οὕτω καὶ ἡ πίστις χωρὶς τῶν ἔργων νεκρά ἐστι.

III. a ΜΗ πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι γίνεσθε, ἀδελφοί μου, 1 εἰδότες ὅτι μεῖζον κρῖμα ληψόμεθα· b πολλὰ γὰρ πταίομεν 2 ἅπαντες. Εἴ τις ἐν λόγῳ οὐ πταίει, οὗτος τέλειος ἀνὴρ δυνατὸς χαλιναγωγῆσαι καὶ ὅλον τὸ σῶμα. * c Ἴδε, τῶν 3 ἵππων τοὺς χαλινοὺς εἰς τὰ στόματα βάλλομεν πρὸς τὸ πείθεσθαι αὐτοὺς ἡμῖν, καὶ ὅλον τὸ σῶμα αὐτῶν μετάγομεν.

s Josh. 2. 1. & 6. 23. Heb. 11. 31.
a Matt. 7. 1. & 23. 8. Rom. 2. 20, 21.
b Eccles. 7. 20. Prov. 20. 9. Ecclus. 14. 1. & 19. 16. & 25. 11. Matt. 12. 37. supra 1. 26. 1 Pet. 3. 10. c Ps. 32. 9.

it was equally true at the time it was spoken. Ἐκλήθη, 'he was regarded,' accounted as.

24. Here we have the conclusion, of which the meaning is, 'Ye see, therefore, that works may contribute to show a man's justification, and the act of faith is not the only thing which proves it.' (Burton.)

25, 26. ἡ πόρνη.] On the sense of this term see Note at Heb. xi. 31. Ὑποδ., 'by having received into her house.' Ἐκβαλ., 'by having put them forth,' simply sent them away: a sense occurring in Matt. ix. 25. Ἑτέρᾳ ὁδῷ, i. e. by a different way from that by which they had entered,—namely, by the wall. By being justified it is meant that she was justified in the same way as was Abraham,—namely, by works proceeding from faith, and also by faith made perfect by works. The same conclusion, therefore, as that at ver. 24, is here implied, with a striking similitude employed to enforce it, namely, that as a lifeless corpse is not a man, so the faith which does not produce good works, is only the dead carcass of faith, and not the living and genuine Christian faith. It is not vital, and therefore fails of leading to salvation.

III. On the connexion here much has been written, but little determined; and indeed some have thought there is none. To me it appears that the purpose of the Chapter is to further develope the admonition supra i. 19, 'let every man be slow to speak;' the Apostle meaning thus to repress their too great fondness for talking, rather than acting, and especially when the vice showed itself, as it too often did, by persons setting up for teachers, though without the proper qualifications for the office.

1. μὴ πολλοὶ διδάσκαλοι γίνεσθε.] This may be considered as a popular and familiar mode of expression, for 'let there not be among you a πολυδιδασκαλία.' By teachers we are to understand not so much public ministers, as private instructors and monitors in religion. In giving the reason why they should avoid this evil, the Apostle, waiving higher considerations, only adverts to what may be called a motive of interest—'knowing that we [who are teachers] will be called to a stricter account than others, and, if found wanting, incur severer punishment.'

2. πολλὰ γὰρ πταίομεν ἅπαντες.] Γὰρ refers to a clause omitted; q. d. '[And reason have we to fear we may be found deficient;] for in many respects we all err.' Implying (as Rosenmuller suggests) that 'as all persons are liable to commit faults, so they who take upon themselves the office of teaching, make their liability the greater.'

In the next words the Apostle enforces the caution in question, from the difficulty of governing the tongue,—adverting to one especial error into which persons, who set up for teachers, mostly run,—namely, that of too great vehemence of speech and bitterness of censure, or, in some way or other, 'speaking unadvisedly with their lips.'

— εἴ τις ἐν λόγῳ οὐ πταίει, οὗτος, &c.] Meaning, 'If any one, indeed, offend not in speech, he is [comparatively] a perfect man; able, we may presume, [if he can govern his tongue,] to hold in subjection the other members of the body likewise;' i. e. all his appetites and passions; and 'thereby,' as Benson observes, 'he will be best able to instruct the ignorant, and rebuke the guilty.' That the assertion of the Apostle is to be understood with the above qualifications, is evident at once from the very nature of the thing, and from the whole tenour of what the Apostle is saying; from which it appears that no one comes at all near to perfection, properly speaking. Consequently, by the term perfect is to be understood perfect in such a kind and degree as human frailty permits.

Certain it is that in these expressions, πολλὰ πταίομεν ἅπαντες and οὗτος τέλειος ἀνὴρ, we have implied the extreme difficulty of attaining to this governance of the tongue;—consequently involving a tacit dissuasive against lightly rushing into so difficult and responsible an office, as that of a teacher of religion.

3, 4. Here we have the importance of this government of the tongue illustrated by two similitudes, in which it is shown that, as we manage the most untractable horses by bridles, ver. 3, and steer ships, even in the midst of storms, by means of a small helm,—ver. 4, so the tongue is a little member,—yet boasting great things, ver. 5. That such is its power, is further shown at vv. 6—10; from which it follows, that he who is able to govern his tongue, is able to govern his bodily passions: thus evincing, that 'little things can effect great objects.'

3. ἴδε, τῶν ἵππων, &c.] q. d. 'He who has a

4 Ἰδοὺ καὶ τὰ πλοῖα, τηλικαῦτα ὄντα, καὶ ὑπὸ σκληρῶν ἀνέ-μων ἐλαυνόμενα, μετάγεται ὑπὸ ἐλαχίστου πηδαλίου, ὅπου 5 ἂν ἡ ὁρμὴ τοῦ εὐθύνοντος βούληται· [d] οὕτω καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα [d] Ps. 12. 3, 4. & 73. 8, 9. μικρὸν μέλος ἐστὶ, καὶ μεγαλαυχεῖ. Ἰδοὺ ὀλίγον πῦρ ἡλί- Prov. 12. 18. & 15. 2.
6 κην ὕλην ἀνάπτει! [e] καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα πῦρ, ὁ κόσμος τῆς [e] Prov. 16. 27. ἀδικίας. οὕτως ἡ γλῶσσα καθίσταται ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν ἡμῶν, Matt. 15. 11, 18, 19.
ἡ σπιλοῦσα ὅλον τὸ σῶμα, καὶ φλογίζουσα τὸν τροχὸν τῆς 7 γενέσεως, καὶ φλογιζομένη ὑπὸ τῆς γεέννης. Πᾶσα γὰρ φύσις θηρίων τε καὶ πετεινῶν, ἑρπετῶν τε καὶ ἐναλίων, proper controul over his tongue can govern his whole body, just as he who holds a horse by the bridle governs and turns about his whole body.' (Carpzov.)

4. ἰδοὺ καὶ τὰ πλοῖα—ὑπὸ ἐλαχίστου πηδαλίου.] Similarly Aristotle says, Quæst. Mech. l. v., μεγέθη πλοίων κινεῖται ὑπὸ μικροῦ οἴακος. Of the term σκληρὸς, as used of a wind, many examples occur in the Classical writers.

— ὅπου ἂν ἡ ὁρμὴ, &c.] The word ὁρμὴ here is not well translated force. It rather means, as the Pesch. Syr. renders, impetus, will; in which sense the term is often used by the later Historians. So in Procop. p. 67, Dionys. Hal. p. 611, and Nicoph. p. 25 (Corp. Byz.) we have ἡ ὁρμὴ τοῦ εὐθύνοντος, 'the will of the steersman.'

5. οὕτω καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα, &c.] The full sense is, '[As ships are turned about with a comparatively small implement,] so also the tongue, though a little member compared with the rest of the body, may boast of effecting great things [good or evil, according to its use or abuse].' I would here compare Diog. Laërt. i. 105, ἐρωτηθεὶς τί ἐστιν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἀγαθόν τε καὶ φαῦλον; ἔφη· γλῶσσα.

— ὀλίγον—ἀνάπτει.] It is not agreed whether ὕλην signifies materiam or silvam. The former sense may be confirmed from Thucyd. ii. 75, where the word signifies a pile of fagots, but the latter is equally well supported; and, considering the nature of the context, it deserves the preference, as presenting the nobler image. So in Pind. Pyth. iii. 66, 67, we have πολλάν τ' (I conjecture γ' scilicet) ὄρει πῦρ ἐξ ἑνὸς Σπέρματος, and in Eurip. Ino, Frag., μικροῦ γὰρ ἐκ λαμπτῆρος Ἰδαῖον λέπας πρήσειεν ἄν τις.

6. καὶ ἡ γλῶσσα—ἀδικίας.] A difficulty here presents itself, chiefly turning on the term κόσμος, which some would alter, while others propose to understand it in a sense different to that usually assigned to it. The context, however, rather requires the word to be taken, in the common acceptation, to denote an immense congeries. It is justly observed by Bp. Jebb, that 'the image of fire, thus elicited, is immediately applied to the tongue; while the image of vastness naturally induces a mention of the world.'

— οὕτως (scil. ὡς πῦρ) ἡ γλῶσσα, &c.] Meaning (as Bp. Jebb well expresses it) 'In like manner, though with a very different design, the tongue is placed among the members of the human frame: intended by our Maker to be the incentive and instrument of all goodness, it becomes, by human malice, the corrupter of the whole body.'

Οὕτως is, indeed, not found in several MSS. and Versions, but its omission may very well be attributed to the difficulty of explaining it. In ἡ σπιλοῦσα we have a Participle for Subst. verbal, the ὁ σπιλητὴς or σπιλατὴς, the contaminator of the whole body, namely, by inflaming the passions, and thereby making the members of the body instruments of sin, to its defilement. From this, the collateral, the Apostle then (as Bp. Jebb observes) returns, in the words following, to the previous ideas, as before expressed, of a fire, and the world.

— καὶ φλογίζουσα τὸν τροχὸν τῆς γενέσεως.] Of these words the true sense seems to be that assigned by Grotius, Carpzov, Rosenmuller, Pott, and Schleusner, 'it is that which sets on fire, and destroys the whole course (lit. wheel) of life from its beginning to its decline;' i. e. by raising and fostering hatred and enmity, it renders life a scene of misery. For, as Bp. Butler observes, 'this wantonness of speech sows the seeds of strife among men, and inflames little disgusts and offences, which, if let alone, would wear away of themselves: it is often of as bad effect upon the good name of others as deep envy or malice.' With this comparison of the course of life to the rolling about of a carriage-wheel, Wetstein aptly compares from Anacreon, iv. 7, τροχὸς ἅρματος γὰρ οἷα, βίοτος τρέχει κυλισθείς.

— καὶ φλογιζομένη ὑπὸ τῆς γεέννης.] Meaning (as Bp. Jebb well expresses it) 'it is also a world, itself inflamed from hell,' i. e. the powers of hell—the Devil and his angels, who, through the medium of the evil passions of our nature, inflame men with 'darts tempered in hell,' and goad them to sin with this instrument of all evil, the tongue. In short, from this source all kinds of atrocities continually proceed.

7, 8. Other associations now arise. The consideration of the world and of the wheel of nature, or generation, would naturally lead a contemplative mind to expatiate over the vast scene of nature, animate and inanimate. Thus St. James introduces the whole brute creation, whether dwelling upon the earth, or beneath it, in the air, or in the waters of the sea.' (Bp. Jebb.) Of this passage the scope, as Aretius and Calvin point out, is to show, by a new reason, what an evil thing the tongue is—inasmuch as it continues always unsubdued, whereas the most ferocious animals may be tamed.

7. πᾶσα γὰρ φύσις θηρίων, &c.] Here I would not, with some, regard the term φύσις as pleonastic. Neither would I, with others, take the words πᾶσα φύσις as standing for πάντα τὰ ἐν φύσει θηρία, to denote what we call the various f Ps. 140. 3. δαμάζεται καὶ δεδάμασται τῇ φύσει τῇ ἀνθρωπίνῃ· [f] τὴν δὲ 8 γλῶσσαν οὐδεὶς δύναται ἀνθρώπων δαμάσαι· ἀκατάσχετον g Gen. 1. 26. & 9. 6. κακὸν, μεστὴ ἰοῦ θανατηφόρου. [g] Ἐν αὐτῇ εὐλογοῦμεν τὸν 9 Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα, καὶ ἐν αὐτῇ καταρώμεθα τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τοὺς καθ' ὁμοίωσιν Θεοῦ γεγονότας· ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ στόματος 10 ἐξέρχεται εὐλογία, καὶ κατάρα. Οὐ χρὴ, ἀδελφοί μου, ταῦτα οὕτω γίνεσθαι! Μήτι ἡ πηγὴ ἐκ τῆς αὐτῆς ὀπῆς βρύει 11 τὸ γλυκὺ καὶ τὸ πικρόν; μὴ δύναται, ἀδελφοί μου, συκῆ 12 ἐλαίας ποιῆσαι, ἢ ἄμπελος σῦκα; οὕτως οὐδεμία πηγὴ ἁλυκὸν καὶ γλυκὺ ποιῆσαι ὕδωρ.

kinds of animals. It would rather seem that φύσις is here used, by a popular mode of expression, to denote genus, in that sense by which we speak of the brute species or animal creation, as distinguished from the human species, or rational creation. And so, just after, we have φύσει τῇ ἀνθρωπίνῃ: also, 3 Macc. iii. 29, πᾶσα θνητὴ φύσις. Soph. Œd. Tyr. 869, θνατὰ φύσις ἀνέρων: and what is still more to the purpose, Lucret. i. 16, 'Omnis natura animantium,' and 57, 'Omnis Divûm natura;' and finally, Soph. Antig. 342—348:

κουφονόων τε φῦλον ὀρνίθων ἀμφιβαλὼν ἄγει, καὶ θηρῶν ἀγρίων ἔθνη,
πόντου τ' εἰναλίαν φύσιν σπείραισι δικτυοκλώστοις, ἀριφραδὴς ἀνήρ.

All these being so many particulars intended to illustrate the power of man to tame the animals, as it was said a little before:

πολλὰ τὰ δεινὰ, κοὐδὲν ἀνθρώπου δεινότερον πέλει.

But, to return to the present passage; in the Genitives θηρίων, πετεινῶν, &c., we have Genitives of explanation, equivalent to τὰ θηρία, καὶ πετεινὰ, καὶ ἑρπετὰ, καὶ ἐναλία. The distribution of the brute creation, here laid down, is founded on that at Gen. ix. 2, 3, and Ps. viii. 7, 8, Sept.; which passages are the best illustration of the present: nor is there any thing to contravene the three-fold division generally adopted, suitably to the three elements, earth, air, and water. The same distribution is also found in the Classical writers; as appears from the above passage of Sophocles' Antig., and another from a Greek Poet, Alcman, cited by Blomfield on Æschyl. Choëph. 579.

Finally, the words δαμάζεται καὶ δεδάμασται, far from being pleonastic, form a most energetic mode of expression.

8. τὴν δὲ γλῶσσαν, &c.] 'but the tongue of man can no one subdue;' meaning, that the evils produced by the tongue are more difficult to check than any suffered from beasts the most savage. In the words following, ἀκατάσχετον κακὸν, μεστὴ ἰοῦ θανατηφόρου, there is a blending of two images; one taken from a virulent disease, which cannot be stopped; and the other from the bite of a venomous reptile, which cannot be healed. In the latter of these we may recognise an allusion to Ps. cxl. 3, 'adders' poison is under their lips.'

9—13. The Apostle now enforces the duty of restraining the tongue, on the ground of the inconsistency of employing to wicked and pernicious purposes that faculty of speech by which we are enabled to laud and magnify God, even the Father. Here, indeed, (as Aretius observes) we have adduced a proof of the evil in question, from a comparison of contraries. The use of the tongue is to praise God for his benefits; the abuse of the tongue is to curse 'man formed after his image' (see Gen. i. 26, 27). Accordingly, 'the tongue is an organ of infinite mischief, as being the worker of contraries, such as nature itself abhors.'

It is well remarked by Bp. Jebb, that 'the deep moral contrast just before induces a still profounder moral here; where, moreover, the ideas of the world, and of the ill effects of the tongue upon it, are not lost sight of: the animal, or brute creation, had been just brought forward; now GOD, the Maker of all, and man, his last best work, and living image, are no less practically, than magnificently, introduced.'

9. ἐν αὐτῇ εὐλογοῦμεν, &c.] That blessing and cursing should proceed from the same mouth is evidently unnatural. Hence the Apostle proceeds to prove, by analogies of nature, that 'these things ought not to be so.' His analogies, however, are so derived as to complete his picture of the world. He draws our attention to the department of inanimate nature; and that every part of this visible creation may contribute to the illustration of his subject, the fountains (ver. 11) stand forth as representatives of unorganized matter; and (ver. 12) various kinds of trees as representatives, at once, of organic bodies and of vegetable life. (Bp. Jebb.)

By the grave and dignified rebuke at ver. 10, οὐ χρὴ, ἀδελφοί μου, ταῦτα οὕτω γίνεσθαι, it is shown how unsuitable it is, that the noblest of God's creatures should so abuse the high faculties bestowed on him by his Maker. This the Apostle then illustrates from two familiar examples, arguing, as Grotius says, from what is impossible in nature, to what is incongruous in morals: a mode of reasoning also adopted by our Lord, Matt. vii. 16.

11—12. μήτι ἡ πηγὴ, &c.] By the interrogation is implied strong negation; with allusion to which it is added, in the next clause, οὕτως οὐδεμία, &c. It is true that there, for οὐδεμία —γλυκὺ many MSS. and several Versions have οὔτε ἁλυκὸν γλυκὺ, which was approved by Grotius, Beza, Mill, and Bengel, and has been edited by Griesbach, Knapp, Lachmann, and Tittman; but I have thought proper, with Matthæi, Vater, and Scholz, to retain the received reading; for though the other be the more brief, 13 [h] Τίς σοφὸς καὶ ἐπιστήμων ἐν ὑμῖν; δειξάτω ἐκ τῆς h Gal. 6 4. supra 1. 21.

14 καλῆς ἀναστροφῆς τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ ἐν πραΰτητι σοφίας. [i] Εἰ Eph. 5. 8. i Rom. 13.
δὲ ζῆλον πικρὸν ἔχετε καὶ ἐριθείαν ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ ὑμῶν, μὴ 13.
15 κατακαυχᾶσθε καὶ ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας. [k] Οὐκ ἔστιν k 1 Cor. 2. 6, 7.
αὕτη ἡ σοφία ἄνωθεν κατερχομένη, ἀλλ᾽ ἐπίγειος, ψυχική, 16 δαιμονιώδης· [l] ὅπου γὰρ ζῆλος καὶ ἐριθεία, ἐκεῖ ἀκαταστα- l 1 Cor. 3. 3. Gal. 5. 20.
17 σία καὶ πᾶν φαῦλον πρᾶγμα· ἡ δὲ ἄνωθεν σοφία πρῶτον it is not the more difficult reading; and we can better account for the longer having been cut down to a shorter and neater mode of expression, than the shorter expanded into a more diffuse and less elegant one. That the reading in question is one of the Alexandrian class is plain from the character of the MSS. in which it is found.

13. Having cautioned them against the abuse of the tongue, the Apostle now proceeds to strike at the root of that evil, warning them against envy and malice in their hearts; assuring them that meekness, peace, and beneficence, proceed from heaven; but that envy and contention are the offspring of hell. (Benson.) We may rather suppose it to have been the intent of the Apostle first to enforce the admonition supra i. 22, γίνεσθε ποιηταὶ λόγου, and then, at ver. 14, to advert to the other subject. In short, as Aretius observes, 'to reduce the grand subject of the Epistle (that of adorning our Christian faith by a suitable life) to a general proposition,—that it is true and heavenly wisdom to thus "adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things."' As introductory, however, to this, he, in the words τίς σοφὸς, &c., glances at the original fountain of these bitter waters, pride and vain-glory, the frequent offspring of false wisdom, and naturally productive of envy and contention: a view of the passage, I find, also adopted by Calvin.

— σοφὸς καὶ ἐπιστήμων.] Of these two terms the former term may have reference to acquired wisdom (meaning, of course, Divine, and suited to a Christian teacher); the latter, to that natural sagacity necessary to fit any one for the office of instructing others.

— δειξάτω ἐκ τῆς καλῆς, &c.] Meaning, 'Let him show, by a virtuous life and conversation, the works of wisdom [as well as utter the words]; and that a mild wisdom.' By the ἔργα here spoken of we may understand, with Schneckenburg, 'singula σοφίας documenta, quorum series continua τὴν καλὴν ἀναστροφὴν efficit.' On the term ἀναστρ. see Note at Gal. i. 13. In the expression πραΰτητι σοφίας (which stands for σοφίᾳ πραείᾳ) the Apostle glances at the proud, morose, and dictatorial dispositions of the teachers in question, and other self-appointed censors. Similarly it is said by Philostratus, Vit. Soph. p. 407, τὸ τῆς φιλοσοφίας ἦθος κεχρωσμένον, οἷον ἡδύσματι, τῇ πρᾳότητι. See also p. 528.

14. εἰ δὲ ζῆλον πικρὸν ἔχετε, &c.] By several Commentators the words μὴ κατακαυχᾶσθε, &c., are taken interrogatively; q. d. 'Do ye not falsely boast, arrogating to yourselves the title of wise?' But the declarative form (adopted by all the ancient and most modern Expositors) is, in its greater simplicity and appositeness, entitled to the preference. According to this the sense will be, 'But if ye have bitter envy and strife in your heart, do not glory and lie against the truth;' i. e. true wisdom; for such seems to be the meaning of the expression ψεύδεσθε κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας: a remarkable one and exceedingly rare; insomuch that Commentators have not adduced a single example of it. I have, however, noted something similar to it in Josephus, Bell. Jud. Præf. § 1, καταψεύδονται τῶν πραγμάτων.

15. Having before (supra i. 5, seq.) adverted to the want of wisdom, and the means of acquiring it, the Apostle now enters upon a description of it, vv. 15—18; and in order to this, he makes a previous distinction between true and false wisdom,—between that which is heavenly, and that which is mere earthly wisdom; depicting both according to the true source from which they proceed, and the proper fruits by which they may be known.

— οὐκ ἔστιν αὕτη, &c.] Render, 'This is not the wisdom which cometh from above, but is earthly (i. e. animal or carnal, belonging only to the natural man), nay demoniacal;' meaning, such as we may conceive of demons, whose wisdom is but cunning and deceit, and is subversive of all order,—qualities the very opposite to those by which true wisdom is then described. Ἐπίγειος, as opposed to ἐπουράνιος, involves the ideas of weakness and perversity; being a stronger term than ἀνθρωπινή. Ψυχική signifies animal or natural, as opposed to πνευματική; consequently implying the natural corruption of man, and the need of preventing grace. See more in the Note at 1 Cor. ii. 14.

16. ὅπου γὰρ ζῆλος, &c.] We have here (as Calvin observes) an argumentum à repugnantibus; envy producing effects the very opposite to those of true wisdom. And well is it said, πᾶν φαῦλον πρᾶγμα; since from such a source nought but evil can arise. The best comment on the present passage is a kindred one of St. Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 3, ὅπου γὰρ ζῆλος καὶ ἔρις, καὶ διχοστασίαι, οὐχὶ σαρκικοί; see also Gal. v. 20. Luke xxi. 9. 1 Cor. xiv. 33. 2 Cor. xii. 20. Indeed, we may suppose the Apostle, in writing these two verses, 15 and 16, to have had before him that passage of St. Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 7—14, where he speaks of the wisdom of God revealed to man by the Spirit.

17. Having shown what is not, the Apostle now proceeds to show what is, true wisdom, describing it by its qualities,—all in direct opposition to those of these arrogant self-constituted teachers. First it is pure, in respect of its objects, motives, and tendency, 'perfecting holiness in the fear of God;' see supra i. 27. 2. It is peaceable and peace-making, disposed to cultivate 'peace with all men,' and to promote it among them; see supra i. 19. 3. It is gentle and forbearing, m Prov. 11. 18. Hos. 10. 12. Matt. 5. 9. Phil. 1. 11. Heb. 12. 11. a Rom. 7. 23. 1 Pet. 2. 11.

b Job 27. 9. & 35. 12. Ps. 66. 18. Prov. 1. 28. Isa. 1. 15. Jer. 11. 11. & 14. 12. Ezek. 8. 18. Zach. 7. 13. Mic 3. 4. Rom. 8. 26. 1 John 3. 22. & 5. 14.

μὲν ἁγνή ἐστιν, ἔπειτα εἰρηνική, ἐπιεικής, εὐπειθής, μεστὴ ἐλέους καὶ καρπῶν ἀγαθῶν, ἀδιάκριτος καὶ ἀνυπόκριτος.
[m] Καρπὸς δὲ [τῆς] δικαιοσύνης ἐν εἰρήνῃ σπείρεται τοῖς ποι- 18 οῦσιν εἰρήνην.

IV. [a] ΠΟΘΕΝ πόλεμοι καὶ μάχαι ἐν ὑμῖν; οὐκ ἐντεῦθεν, ἐκ τῶν ἡδονῶν ὑμῶν τῶν στρατευομένων ἐν τοῖς μέλεσιν ὑμῶν; Ἐπιθυμεῖτε, καὶ οὐκ ἔχετε· φονεύετε καὶ 2 ζηλοῦτε, καὶ οὐ δύνασθε ἐπιτυχεῖν· μάχεσθε καὶ πολεμεῖτε, οὐκ ἔχετε δὲ, διὰ τὸ μὴ αἰτεῖσθαι ὑμᾶς· [b] αἰτεῖτε, καὶ οὐ 3 ready to comply in all things not sinful; see ver. 3, and supra i. 21. 4. It is easy to be persuaded to what is reasonable, or to extend any reasonable excuse for error. 5. It is full of mercy and compassion, and abounds in the good fruits springing from thence, beneficence and charity to the poor and afflicted. 6. It is impartial, having no respect for persons or parties; compare 1 Cor. iii. 3, 4. Finally, it is described as free from hypocrisy, free from the affectation of superior sanctity. See supra i. 8, and iv. 8.

18. Now are represented the effects of this peaceable spirit.

— καρπὸς δὲ τῆς δικαιοσύνης, &c.] Meaning (as Whitby well explains), 'They who cultivate a peaceful temper may assure themselves that they shall reap the fruits of it in a harvest; namely, in a world where righteousness flourishes in eternal peace.' So Carpzov well renders: 'Emolumentum et præmium pietatis, nimirum felicitas cœlestis:' a sense of εἰρήνη frequent. By a similar mode of expression Josephus, Ant. xviii. 5, calls peace τοῦ δικαίου τὴν πρόσοδον; i. e. the emolumentum arising from righteousness, which may serve to illustrate the Ciceronian 'Magnum vectigal est parsimonia.' Here, then, the term καρπὸς denotes both effect and reward. So in Aristides, vol. i. p. 388, we have καρπὸς ἀρετῆς. By δικαιοσύνης we may understand the heavenly wisdom just adverted to, as exhibited in a virtuous and holy life and conduct. Finally, the Article τῆς has the force of renewed mention, and ought not to have been cancelled on the authority of some MSS. by Griesbach, Lachmann, and Scholz.

IV. From exhortations to the cultivation of peace, the Apostle slides into reprehension of the opposite dispositions which violate it, as displayed in quarrels and disputes,—dispositions these to which too many among them, especially of those exercising the office of teachers, or arrogating to themselves that title, were probably prone; and all to be traced to their original spring, the lusts and passions natural to the human heart. (Pott.)

1. πόλεμοι καὶ μάχαι] 'contests and strifes;' whether civil or religious, is not agreed. We may suppose both; the Jews being prone at once to sedition and to religious disputes. In either case the contests themselves originated in the same source, the cherished lusts of those from whom they proceeded. Here, then, the Apostle means to say (as Bp. Sanderson well expresses it), 'Marvel not to see so many scandals, divisions, distractions, and wranglings in the Church, and factions and convulsions in the commonwealth, so long as there is pride and selfishness in every man's bosom, or indeed any other lust unsubdued; for all these wars and fightings from without, what other are they than the scum of the pot that boils within? even the ebullitions of those lusts that war in our members, and the dictates of a corrupt nature.'

Finally, the best comment on this passage may be found in a similar one at 1 Pet. ii. 11, and Rom. vii. 23, where see Notes.

2, 3. What is said in these verses is illustrative of the foregoing; there being here presented a sort of concise, but comprehensive, description of 'the carnal mind (even the passions and appetites of our corrupt nature), which is enmity against God.' And most graphically does the Apostle describe its aims and purposes, and the disappointment of those purposes, tending to make manifest its utter folly.

2. ἐπιθυμεῖτε, καὶ οὐκ ἔχετε, &c.] Of this briefly-worded passage the general sense may be thus expressed: 'Ye eagerly pursue whatever your lusts prompt. Ye nourish a bloody hatred and envy of all that stands in the way of your designs; yet ye cannot attain that which ye seek;' i. e. ye cannot have that which might satisfy your cravings. 'Ye battle hard [to obtain what may satisfy your desires]; but ye possess [them] not. Ye have not [what would satisfy you], because ye ask not for it [even true peace and happiness]. Ye do seek, indeed, for it, but ye obtain it not, because ye seek it amiss; i. e. only in order that you may consume [what you obtain from God] upon your lusts [where God has decreed it should not be found].' Meaning, that they do not seek for what they aim at, true happiness [' our being's end and aim'], where alone it can be found, in righteous obedience to the will of Him who is alone 'able to make all' happiness, as all 'grace,' to 'abound.'

The various particulars above supplied are, I apprehend, no more than the context requires to be understood. And as respects the most important one, that which may be supposed to form the object of all this vehement desire and anxious striving,—namely, something that should satisfy that ardent desire of happiness natural to the human heart, the same view is, I find, adopted by the able Commentator Theile.

For φονεύετε, some would conjecture φθονεῖτε; as thinking the former too strong a term. But for an alteration so unauthorized no real necessity exists; since the expression may very well be understood of intention rather than act; as in Sophocles, Œd. Tyr. 534, φονεὺς ὢν τοῦδε τἀνδρὸς, and Rom. i. 29, μεστοὺς φθόνου, φόνου: a disposition, however, involving much of the guilt of actual murder. See 1 John iii. 15.

λαμβάνετε, διότι κακῶς αἰτεῖσθε, ἵνα ἐν ταῖς ἡδοναῖς ὑμῶν 4 δαπανήσητε. [c] Μοιχοὶ καὶ μοιχαλίδες, οὐκ οἴδατε ὅτι ἡ c Ps. 73. 27. John 15. 19. φιλία τοῦ κόσμου ἔχθρα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστιν; Ὃς ἂν οὖν βου- & 17. 14. Gal. 1. 10. ληθῇ φίλος εἶναι τοῦ κόσμου, ἐχθρὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ καθίσταται. 1 John 2. 15. d Gen. 6. 5. & 8. 21.
5 [d] ἢ δοκεῖτε ὅτι κενῶς ἡ γραφὴ λέγει; Πρὸς φθόνον ἐπι- e Job 22. 29. Prov. 3. 34 & 29. 23.
6 ποθεῖ τὸ πνεῦμα ὃ κατῴκησεν ἐν ἡμῖν; [e] Μείζονα δὲ δίδωσι Matt. 23. 12. Luke 1. 52. χάριν· διὸ λέγει· Ὁ Θεὸς ὑπερηφάνοις ἀντιτάσσεται, & 14. 11. & 18. 14. 1 Pet. 5. 5.
7 ταπεινοῖς δὲ δίδωσι χάριν. [f] Ὑποτάγητε οὖν τῷ Θεῷ f Eph. 4. 27. 1 Pet. 5. 9.

4. The Apostle now adopts the language of severe reproof, seriously warning them to abstain from those lusts whence come strifes and dissensions, and indeed from all excessive attachment to the things of this world. (Pott.) For such, Commentators in general are agreed, is adverted to in the expressions μοιχοὶ καὶ μοιχαλίδες, which may be supposed to denote spiritual adultery, or that base worldly-mindedness which sacrifices the love of God to the pleasures of the world.

— ἡ φιλία τοῦ κόσμου] 'friendship with the world' (meaning the corrupt part of it), which is an implied enmity to God, as being at variance with his plans for the promotion of virtue and happiness. Thus Œcumenius calls the whole of the animal life by the name of the world, ὡς μητέρα τῆς φθορᾶς, ἧς ὁ μετασχεῖν σπεύδων, ὀλιγώρως ἔχει τῶν θείων.

5, 6. ἢ δοκεῖτε, &c.] A no inconsiderable difficulty attaches to this passage (at least according to the common punctuation and interpretation), which is (as Prof. Scholefield states it), that 'the words thus represented as a quotation from Scripture are no where to be found there, nor any thing sufficiently near to it to pass for another form of what the Apostle had in his mind. Nor, if it were so, would it make any thing of a clear argument in connexion with the context. Nor, finally, if we take πνεῦμα in the sense of the human disposition, as seems in this view to be necessary, does it appear capable of explanation why this should be called "the spirit that dwelleth in us," which, on the other hand, is a very usual, and proper, and intelligible description of the Holy Spirit, who comes into believers for the very purpose.' To avoid this difficulty, some resort to conjecture, while others suppose the words taken from an Apocryphal book, or regard them as an interpolation: methods, these, alike objectionable. It is best, with many eminent Commentators, to suppose the expression ἡ γραφὴ to refer, not to any particular passage of Scripture, but only to the general tenour of Scripture in its declarations on the above subject, of friendship with the world, or worldly-mindedness (on which subject see John xv. 18—20. Matt. vi. 24. Luke xvi. 13, 15, &c.); also, that the verse is to be divided into two interrogative clauses. And so the passage is pointed by Carpzov, Calvin, Griesbach, Knapp, and Scholz. The sense, then, will be (as Prof. Scholefield renders), 'Do ye think that the Scripture speaketh in vain? Does the Spirit that dwelleth in us lust to envy?' In both cases οὕτως is, of course, to be understood thus: 'Think ye that the Scripture speaketh in vain [or without good reason in condemning this worldliness]? No! And again, do you think that the Holy Spirit which dwelleth in us is prone to envy? does the new nature which he creates produce such fruits? See Gal. v. 22—26. No! On the contrary, he giveth more grace, in order to resist it.' This last clause, indeed, some suppose to have reference, not to envy, but to a worldly spirit. We may, however, understand it of all the unchristian dispositions above adverted to; q. d. 'Nay, so far from that, he giveth more grace than to leave those who obey his holy motions to such worldly and unchristian tempers.' Or, if this be thought to involve too harsh an ellipsis, we may suppose the meaning to be, that the Spirit giveth more grace to those who have obeyed his holy motions, in the cultivation of dispositions the opposite from those of the worldly, the envious, and the proud. See Matt. xiii. 11, 12, and the Note of Bp. Hall in D'Oyly and Mant. Of the phrase ἐπιποθεῖν πρὸς φθόνον (which is rare) examples occur in Deut. xiii. 8, and Ps. xli. 1. lxxxiii. 2.

Here, then, the purpose of the Apostle is (as Aretius observes) to minister comfort from a consideration of the kindness of God in helping our infirmities, and enabling us to 'will and to do of his good pleasure.'

In the words here cited from Prov. iii. 34, ὑπερηφάνοις must, from the present application, be supposed to comprehend all the foregoing classes of persons—the envious, the vain, the censorious, the quarrelsome, the spiritually proud, and the worldly; who, as they resist the grace, and, in various ways, transgress the will of God, may be said to be ὑπερήφ., as setting themselves against God. Compare 1 John ii. 15, 16. Similarly it is said by Æschylus, Pers. 832—6, Blomf.

Ζεύς τοι κολαστὴς τῶν ὑπερκόπων ἄγαν φρονημάτων ἔπεστιν, εὔθονος βαρύς.
Πρὸς ταῦτ' ἐκεῖνον, σωφρονεῖν κεχρημένοὒ, πινύσκετ' εὐλόγοισι νουθετήμασι λῆξαι θεοβλαβοῦνθ' ὑπερκόπῳ θράσει.

And to this purpose is the well-known line of Virgil, Æn. vi. 853, here adduced by the Commentators:

'Parcere subjectis, et debellare superbos.'

Finally, this whole portion of the Chapter, up to the end of ver. 11, has been ably illustrated by Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit., p. 251—257, who thus traces the connexion and moral gradations of the passage: 'First, God is described as setting himself in battle array against the proud, but holding out terms of peace, reconciliation, and favour, to the humble; whence the Apostle exhorts those whom he is addressing humbly to enroll themselves under God, and firmly to keep their ranks. In the next words, "stand against the Devil," &c., the military metaphor is continued: after which it is dropped, and the moral meaning stands forth.

g 2 Chron. 15. 2. Isa. 1. 16. supra 1. 8. h Matt. 5.4.
i Job 22. 29. Prov. 29. 23. Matt. 23.12. Luke 14. 11. & 18. 14. 1 Pet. 5. 6. k Matt. 7.1. Luke 6 37. Rom. 2. 1. 1 Cor. 4. 5. l Matt. 10. 28. Rom. 14. 4. m Prov.27.1. Luke 12. 18.

ἀντίστητε τῷ Διαβόλῳ, καὶ φεύξεται ἀφ' ὑμῶν· [g] ἐγγίσατε 8 τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ἐγγιεῖ ὑμῖν. Καθαρίσατε χεῖρας, ἁμαρτωλοὶ, καὶ ἁγνίσατε καρδίας, δίψυχοι. [h] ταλαιπωρήσατε καὶ πεν- 9 θήσατε καὶ κλαύσατε. Ὁ γέλως ὑμῶν εἰς πένθος μετα-στραφήτω, καὶ ἡ χαρὰ εἰς κατήφειαν. [i] Ταπεινώθητε ἐνώπιον 10 τοῦ Κυρίου, καὶ ὑψώσει ὑμᾶς.
[k] Μὴ καταλαλεῖτε ἀλλήλων, ἀδελφοί· ὁ καταλαλῶν ἀδελ- 11 φοῦ, καὶ κρίνων τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, καταλαλεῖ νόμου, καὶ κρίνει νόμον· εἰ δὲ νόμον κρίνεις, οὐκ εἶ ποιητὴς νόμου, ἀλλὰ κριτής. [l] Εἷς ἐστιν ὁ νομοθέτης ὁ δυνάμενος σῶσαι καὶ ἀπο- 12 λέσαι· σὺ τίς εἶ, ὃς κρίνεις τὸν ἕτερον;
[m] Ἄγε νῦν, οἱ λέγοντες· “ Σήμερον * καὶ αὔριον ‡ πορευ- 13

It is shown how those who had newly enrolled themselves, here termed sinners, or transgressors, are to resist the Devil; namely, by cleansing their hands, i. e. abstaining from wicked actions; and how the double-minded, i. e. persons wavering between long-confirmed habits of evil and incipient wishes to become good, are to "draw nigh to God;" namely, by "purifying their hearts," i. e. by acquiring an inward principle of goodness. But how is this to be attained? On the one hand, we cannot give it to ourselves; on the other hand, God will not grant it to lazy wishes and half-formed resolutions. A preparatory process must take place, which the preventing grace of God is ever at hand to facilitate and prosper; the process,—namely, of sincere repentance. At ver. 9 we have graphically described the workings of repentance. Of the two clauses ὁ γέλως—μεταστραφήτω and καὶ ἡ χαρὰ εἰς κατ., the former recapitulates the state of temporary sorrow; wailing being but an action of the feelings when excited, not a calm habitual temper of the mind and heart. Thus it is most correctly opposed to laughter, also the temporary effect of temporary excitement. The latter describes not any thing external, or dependent in any degree on animal impressibility, but a disposition whose root is in the heart; dejection being a sense of sorrow mingled with shame, the daughter of contrition, and the parent of humility; most suitably opposed to the senseless joy of the transgressor; an inward habit, too, but of a character the most inconsistent with a Christian spirit. Moreover, the outward act of wailing corresponds with the outward cleansing of hands, just before; and, in like manner, the inward feeling of dejection agrees with that inward purification of heart so lately and so forcibly enjoined. The concluding sentence, ταπεινώθητε, &c. happily terminates this moral process. The fruit of well-attempered dejection is religious humiliation before God: with this the Apostle had commenced, and with this he concludes; annexing only the sure and certain result and reward of humiliation, so pursued, and so attained.'

10. ταπεινώθητε ἐνώπιον—ὑμᾶς.] So, while recommending them to 'turn unto' their God 'with weeping and mourning' (Joel ii. 12), at the same time suggesting, for their comfort, that 'such a sorrow,' if it be indeed that 'godly sorrow which worketh repentance' (2 Cor. vii. 10), will not be unheeded by Him who is 'ever ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them that call upon him.'

11, 12. Here the Apostle takes occasion to warn them against another evil disposition nearly allied to a quarrelsome and envious spirit, namely, that of censoriousness and detraction (a subject before touched, ch. iii., but here resumed and expanded), reminding them that such arrogant censoriousness was, in effect, censuring or condemning the Christian law, which forbids such a disposition, 1. by despising its prohibitions against detraction; 2. by sitting in judgment upon the fitness of the law rather than performing it; and by thus setting up as arbiters of the law, usurping the office at once of lawgiver and judge from Him who alone has the power of condemning or acquitting, awarding destruction, or bestowing salvation. Compare Rom. xiv. 4, which passage is the best comment on the present.

11. νόμου.] By this some understand the law of Moses; others, the Gospel: but it is best, with Bp. Middleton, to suppose the term here, as in Rom. ii. 25, to have reference to religion generally, i. e. moral obligation in its most general sense; the Apostle meaning thus to inculcate, that 'to all religion, candour and good-will are essential, whether we be Jews, Christians, or even of the number of those who are a law unto themselves. Religion of every kind forbids calumny, and accordingly he who is guilty of it, tramples on all religious sanctions by thus usurping the prerogative of the one Judge universal.'

12. εἷς ἐστιν ὁ νομοθέτης, &c.] Meaning, 'Thou intrudest into a province that is none of thine. There is one lawgiver and judge [and one only], who [alone] hath the right and power to save [those who obey him] and to destroy [those who disobey him; such being the case], who art thou [weak and erring mortal, thyself accountable to that one Judge,] that darest to wrest judgment from his hands, and exercise it on another?'

13—16. The Apostle next proceeds to reprove the self-sufficiency, worldly spirit, and unbelieving irreligious language, which were manifested by many in another way. (Scott.) Presuming too much on the present life, and not sufficiently considering 'how frail' they are (Ps. xxxix. 4), and how perpetually dependent on the providence of God, they spoke too confidently of the future.

13. ἄγε νῦν.] A form of soliciting attention, σώμεθα εἰς τήνδε τὴν πόλιν, καὶ ‡ ποιήσωμεν ἐκεῖ ἐνιαυτὸν 14 ἕνα, καὶ ‡ ἐμπορευσώμεθα, καὶ ‡ κερδήσωμεν." [n] οἵτινες οὐκ n Job 7. 7. Isa. 40. 6. ἐπίστασθε τὸ τῆς αὔριον! (ποία γὰρ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν; ἀτμὶς 1 Cor. 7. 31. supra 1. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 24.

γάρ ἐστιν ἡ πρὸς ὀλίγον φαινομένη, ἔπειτα δὲ ἀφανιζο- 1 John 2. 17.
15 μένη·) [o] ἀντὶ τοῦ λέγειν ὑμᾶς· Ἐὰν ὁ Κύριος θελήσῃ, καὶ o Acts 18. 21. 1 Cor. 4. 19.
16 ζήσωμεν, καὶ * ποιήσομεν τοῦτο ἢ ἐκεῖνο· [p] νῦν δὲ καυχᾶσθε Heb. 6. 3. p 1 Cor. 5. 6. ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζονείαις ὑμῶν. Πᾶσα καύχησις τοιαύτη πονηρά q Luke 12. 47. John 9. 41.
17 ἐστιν. [q] Εἰδότι οὖν καλὸν ποιεῖν, καὶ μὴ ποιοῦντι, ἁμαρτία Rom. 1. 20, 21, 32 & 2. 17, 18, 23.
αὐτῷ ἐστιν.
1 V. [a] ΑΓΕ νῦν, οἱ πλούσιοι, κλαύσατε ὀλολύζοντες ἐπὶ a Prov. 11. 28. Amos 6. 1. Luke 6. 24. 1 Tim. 6. 9.
2 ταῖς ταλαιπωρίαις ὑμῶν ταῖς ἐπερχομέναις. [b] Ὁ πλοῦτος b Matt. 6. 19, 20.

like δεῦτε δὴ in Origen's Version of Is. i. 18. In the words σήμερον καὶ αὔριον—κερδήσωμεν the Apostle represents the worldly-minded persons in question as saying what perhaps was usually only the subject of their thoughts. See Ps. xiv. 1. liii. 1. The rebuke, however, is well pointed and just. There is an allusion to the commercial business, in which almost all foreign Jews were engaged, and for the furtherance of which they had to take long journeys to distant trading places, as Tyre, Alexandria, Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth, Rome, &c.

Here, instead of Subjunctive verbs, some MSS. have Indicative ones; but the former, found in the greater part of the MSS. and all the early Editions, is the only authenticated reading; and, besides its support from external, has an equal one from internal evidence, in its presenting the more difficult reading: insomuch that no Editor until the time of Beza ever ventured to introduce the other into the text. As to the ancient Versions presenting the Indicative, that constitutes no sufficient evidence; the Versions themselves being of a character distinguished rather by freedom than strict literality. Finally, in the sense thence arising, there is no real ground of objection, since the same presumptuous confidence is implied, though not so directly expressed.

14. οἵτινες — αὔριον!] Literally, 'ye who know not (i. e. though ye know not) [the event of] the morrow,' i. e. whether you shall retain your wealth, or be withdrawn from all enjoyment of it by hopeless sickness, or removed from all possession of it by death. Compare Prov. xxvii. 1. Similarly it is said by Sophocles, Œd. Col. 567, "Ἔξοιδ', ἀνὴρ ὤν, χὤτι τῆς ἐς αὔριον Οὐδὲν πλέον μοι σοῦ μέτεστιν ἡμέρας. And in illustration of this the Apostle subjoins, ποία γὰρ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν; &c. 'For what (or, how fleeting) is your life! how short a span is it at the utmost!'

— ἀτμὶς γὰρ, &c.] q. d. '[It is as nothing,] for 'tis a vapour, appearing for a short time, and then vanishing away,' even as an ignis fatuus. Compare Wisd. ii. 2. 4. Similar sentiments are found in Hom. Il. vi. 146, and Horat. Art. Poët. 60.

The conclusion is, that we ought not to be too anxious to provide necessaries for so short a sojourn, but should cast ourselves wholly on the protection of that God on whom we entirely depend, and study to seek his favour.

15. ἀντὶ τοῦ λέγειν—ἐκεῖνο.] These words are closely connected with σήμερον καὶ αὔριον, the clause ποία γὰρ—ἀφανιζομένη being parenthetical. Render, 'instead of saying [as ye ought], If the Lord please that we live, we will do so and so.' Even the Heathens, indeed, used expressions of this sort, though, we may suppose, rather as words of course than with any settled belief.

16. νῦν δὲ καυχᾶσθε ἐν ταῖς ἀλαζονείαις ὑ.] 'Whereas now (meaning, as the case too frequently now is) ye exult in your ambitious projects and proud plans, [anticipating your success].' Such is, I apprehend, the true import here of the term ἀλαζον., with which we may compare the expression at 1 John ii. 16, ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου, as said of ambition.

17. εἰδότι οὖν καλὸν, &c.] An inference or conclusion meant to preoccupy the possible objection, 'We all know this very well:' to which it is replied, 'Well, then, he who sins against light and knowledge is guilty of an aggravated offence;' lit. 'to him there is sin,' answering to what is said, Gen. iv. 7, 'sin lieth at the door.' See Luke xii. 47. John ix. 41. xv. 22. Rom. i. 20. By the term καλὸν is meant 'what is right,' namely, the acknowledging of the providence of God, the humble expression of dependence on which is bounden duty.

V. 1—6. Some Commentators suppose this portion to be addressed to the unbelieving Jews, among whom the Jewish Christians lived under persecution, and of whom many were rich, and led a dissolute life. Accordingly by the miseries here adverted to are, they think, to be understood those in which the Jews, even in foreign countries, were involved, together with those of Judæa itself, during the war with the Romans, and which the rich must have been especially exposed to suffer. I prefer, however, with others, as Carpzov, Rosenmuller, and Schott, to understand the Apostle's words in a more extended point of view, as meant to apply also to, if not exclusively intended for, those worldly-minded and nominal Christians whom he censures supra iv. 13—17; persons whose minds were wholly devoted to the business and the pleasures of this life. Here, then, enumerating the evils which shall one day overtake the rich and prosperous of this world, the Apostle, we may suppose, has in view, besides particular evils belonging to particular times, those evils which in all times and ages may be said to result from riches abused,—evils which, in the present misery and future woe entailed on their possessors, may well be called so many ὑμῶν σέσηπε, καὶ τὰ ἱμάτια ὑμῶν σητόβρωτα γέγονεν· c Rom. 2. 5. [c] ὁ χρυσὸς ὑμῶν καὶ ὁ ἄργυρος κατίωται, καὶ ὁ ἰὸς αὐτῶν 3 εἰς μαρτύριον ὑμῖν ἔσται, καὶ φάγεται τὰς σάρκας ὑμῶν d Lev. 19. 13. Deut. 24. 14. Job 24. 10, 11. Mal. 3. 5. Ecclus. 34. 21, 22. ὡς πῦρ· ἐθησαυρίσατε ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις. [d] Ἰδοὺ, ὁ μισθὸς 4 τῶν ἐργατῶν τῶν ἀμησάντων τὰς χώρας ὑμῶν, ὁ ἀπεστερη-μένος ἀφ' ὑμῶν, κράζει· καὶ αἱ βοαὶ τῶν θερισάντων εἰς τὰ e Job 21. 13. Luke 16. 19, 25. ὦτα Κυρίου Σαβαὼθ εἰσεληλύθασιν. [e] Ἐτρυφήσατε ἐπὶ τῆς 5 γῆς, καὶ ἐσπαταλήσατε· ἐθρέψατε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν ὡς ἐν f Supra 2. 6. ἡμέρᾳ σφαγῆς. [f] Κατεδικάσατε, ἐφονεύσατε τὸν δίκαιον· οὐκ 6 ἀντιτάσσεται ὑμῖν.

'sorrows with which they have pierced themselves through!' (1 Tim. vi. 10.)

2, 3. Here, under imagery derived from the Prophets of old, we have designated the perishable nature of all earthly possessions. See Job xiii. 28. Ps. xxi. 9. Is. x. 16. xxvii. 11, and especially Lament. iv. 1.

3. καὶ ὁ ἰὸς αὐτῶν εἰς μαρτύριον.] Meaning, that 'the rust of these treasures, which have been amassed and suffered to rust and decay in useless hoards, instead of having been, as it were, brightened by a liberal circulation, will be a witness against their possessors.' From various passages of the Classical writers here adduced, it sufficiently appears that the gold and silver utensils of ancient times were subject to something like rust, probably from the metal having a greater proportion of alloy than that of modern times. Of this amassing of useless wealth it is well said by Philetærus ap. Athen. p. 280. D.:

Εἰς αὔριον οὐχὶ φροντίζειν (scil. δεῖ) ὅ, τι ἔσται. Περίεργόν ἐστιν ἀποκεῖσθαι πανὺ ἕωλον ἔνδον ἀργύριον.

For so I would point the passage.

— φάγεται τὰς σάρκας, &c.] Meaning, that 'it will be to them the occasion of misery and woe the most dire.' We have here, Pott thinks, an image borrowed from the painful and deleterious effects of rust when rubbed into raw flesh: an apt designation of the misery here, and endless woe hereafter, which shall be the punishment of riches abused, or wealth amassed by unlawful means. We may, however, also suppose here an allusion to that 'fire never to be quenched' which is, to a certain degree, alluded to in the next words, ἐθησαυρίσατε, &c.

— ἐθησαυρίσατε ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμ.] Meaning, as Bp. Jebb well explains, 'Ye have laid up treasures for the last days:—treasures! but of what kind? Let the last days tell—the days of the destruction of your nation.' Here (he adds) St. James indignantly suppresses what St. Paul, Rom. ii. 5, thus expresses in full: θησαυρίζεις σεαυτῷ ὀργὴν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὀργῆς.

4. The Apostle now proceeds to severely rebuke the cruelty and injustice of certain amassers of wealth, who, among other iniquitous expedients for increasing it, used to oppress their labourers by diminishing their wages, or keeping back part, on various pretexts. Here, then, by a figurative mode of speaking, also found in Levit. xix. 13. Deut. xxiv. 14, 15. Malachi iii. 5, he represents the withheld wages of the labourers as calling on God for vengeance. And, indeed, (as Wesley observes) those sins chiefly cry to God, concerning which human laws are silent. Such are luxury, unchastity, and various kinds of injustice.

— εἰς τὰ ὦτα Κυρίου Σαβ. εἰσελ.] Meaning, that 'they will be surely attended to.' The expression seems formed on two similar ones, Ps. xvii. 6, Sept., ἡ κραυγή μου ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ εἰσελεύσεται εἰς τὰ ὦτα αὐτοῦ, and Is. v. 9, ἠκούσθη εἰς τὰ ὦτα Κυρίου Σαβαὼθ ταῦτα.

5, 6. The propriety of the transition here will appear from a comparison with the kindred passage of Malachi iii. 5, and Jerem. xii. 3. Here we have described the same luxurious profligacy, leading to the same terrible destruction, on which the last of the Prophets expatiated, while describing 'the great and terrible day of the Lord.' (Bp. Jebb.) Thus, then, after severely rebuking their rapacity, the Apostle proceeds to stigmatize their sensuality.

5. ἐσπαταλήσατε.] On this expression see Note at 1 Tim. v. 6.

— ἐθρέψατε τὰς καρδίας, &c.] Meaning, 'Ye have pampered yourselves in sensuality, as animals are fattened for slaughter;' alluding to the punishment that shall overtake them in that 'day of slaughter,' when they shall be slain like cattle: an image (as Bp. Jebb observes) of the highest order of prophetic sublimity. Similar ones are found in the Classical writers. So in Æschyl. Agam. 1659, the Chorus thus addresses the sensualist, Ægisthus: Πράσσε, πιαίνου, μιαίνων τὴν δίκην· ἐπεὶ πάρα ('is at hand'); meaning the avenger, Orestes. See ver. 9.

6. κατεδικάσατε, ἐφονεύσατε, &c.] Besides the cruelty and gross sensuality above mentioned, the Apostle here stigmatizes another and worse kind of cruelty, namely, that of persecution even to condemnation and death, as denoted by the expressions κατεδ. and ἐφονεύσατε. Here, however, it has been disputed whether by τὸν δίκαιον be meant, 'the just man' (meaning good men generally), or, 'the Just One,' namely, Christ, who is so called at Acts vii. 52, and iii. 14, 15. Of these two modes of interpretation the former is adopted by the generality of Commentators, ancient and modern; the latter, by a few modern Commentators, as Macknight, Newcome, Middleton, and Jebb, and, of ancient ones, by Œcumenius and Theophylact. As an argument for this latter view of the sense, Bp. Middleton urges that the hypothetical use of the Article, by which τὸν δίκαιον would stand for τοὺς δικαίους, would present too strong an expression.

7 [g] Μακροθυμήσατε οὖν, ἀδελφοὶ, ἕως τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ g Deut. 11. 14.
Κυρίου. Ἰδοὺ, ὁ γεωργὸς ἐκδέχεται τὸν τίμιον καρπὸν τῆς γῆς, μακροθυμῶν ἐπ᾽ αὐτῷ, ἕως ἂν λάβῃ ὑετὸν πρωϊμον καὶ 8 ὄψιμον· μακροθυμήσατε καὶ ὑμεῖς, στηρίξατε τὰς καρδίας 9 ὑμῶν, ὅτι ἡ παρουσία τοῦ Κυρίου ἤγγικε. [h] Μὴ στενάζετε h Supra 4. 11. κατ᾽ ἀλλήλων, ἀδελφοὶ, ἵνα μὴ [κατα]κριθῆτε· ἰδοὺ, ὁ Matt. 24. 23.
10 κριτὴς πρὸ τῶν θυρῶν ἕστηκεν. [i] Ὑπόδειγμα λάβετε τῆς i Matt. 5. 12.
κακοπαθείας, ἀδελφοί μου, καὶ τῆς μακροθυμίας, τοὺς προ-11 φήτας, οἳ ἐλάλησαν τῷ ὀνόματι Κυρίου. [k] Ἰδοὺ, μακαρίζομεν k Num. 14. 18.
τοὺς ὑπομένοντας. τὴν ὑπομονὴν Ἰὼβ ἠκούσατε, καὶ τὸ Job 1. 21, 22. & 42. 10. τέλος Κυρίου εἴδετε· ὅτι πολύσπλαγχνός ἐστιν ὁ Κύριος Ps. 103. 8. Matt. 5. 11.

Yet how that objection can hold good in a context abounding in strong expressions, it is not easy to see. With far greater reason may we urge against the above view, the forced and jejune sense which must thus be assigned to the words following, οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται ὑμῖν: namely, 'the Saviour opposes not your perverseness.' Not to mention other objections ably stated by Dr. Burton.

Here, then, the common interpretation, as being the more simple, natural, and agreeable to the context, would seem to be the true one. According to this the Aorist will, in the present case, have that frequent use, by which it denotes what is done at all times and continually; and so ἐφονεύσατε here will correspond to φονεύετε supra iv. 2. As highly illustrative of this passage of the Apostle, we may compare a very similar one at Wisd. ii. 20, θανάτῳ καταδικάσωμεν αὐτόν: meaning the righteous poor man.

In the concluding clause, οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται ὑμῖν, the purpose of the Apostle is to further set forth the guilt of this cruelty and oppression, by representing it as inflicted on the helpless and unresisting; see Calvin. And how little effectual resistance the oppressed poor could, in that age, make to the oppressing rich, no one, conversant with ancient literature, will need to be informed. It is observable, that in οὐκ ἀντιτάσσ. we have an asyndeton for καὶ οὐκ ἀντιτάσσεται, and that for τὸν ἀντιτασσόμενον, which, indeed, is found in at least one MS., though doubtless originating in a marginal gloss.

7. Here the Apostle turns to the Christian converts suffering under their oppression, and exhorts them patiently to endure the injuries inflicted on them, seeing that the advent of the Lord Jesus Christ approaches. This he confirms and illustrates by the example of the husbandman, and by those held out to them in the suffering Prophets. (Pott.)

— μακροθυμήσατε.] The term has here a double signification; namely, patiently endure, and patiently wait for. Τῆς παρουσίας τοῦ Κυρίου. By this some understand the advent of our Lord at the destruction of Jerusalem and of the Jewish polity: others, his final advent to judgment; which latter view is ably supported by Bp. Horsley, in a Sermon on this text. Perhaps it may be best to unite both; and how closely these two events were associated in the minds of the Jews is well known.

— τὸν τίμιον καρπόν.] So called, as supplying that which forms the most necessary part of food to man, bread, the staff of life. Ὑετὸν πρωϊμον. Meaning the autumnal, as ὄψιμον does the vernal rains.

8. στηρίξατε τὰς καρδίας ὑ.] i. e. 'stablish your hearts in faith and patience.'

9. μὴ στενάζετε κατ᾽ ἀλλήλων] 'do not murmur, or be impatient, against each other.' Thus warning them against (what is the very opposite to the patience above inculcated) that querulous feeling, originating in various un-Christian tempers, the most powerful motive to suppress which would be supplied by the consideration, that 'the Judge standeth at the door' (ἐγγύς ἐστιν ἐπὶ θύραις, as it is said, Matt. xxiv. 33), and will soon award a just retribution.

10. To encourage them to the above patient endurance, the Apostle now points to the examples of those who had trodden the same thorny path before them; so supplying what has ever been a powerful incentive to 'the faith and perseverance of the saints.' See the Note of Dr. Jortin in D'Oyly and Mant.

— ὑπόδειγμα λάβετε.] On the force of the term ὑπόδειγμα see Note at John xiii. 15. Τῆς κακοπαθείας. The expression may be understood to mean, 'constancy in enduring sufferings;' or it may with μακροθυμίας just after form an Hendiadys, to denote 'patient endurance of evils.' On the various evils endured by the Prophets, see Hebr. xi. 33, seqq.

— οἳ ἐλάλησαν τῷ ὀνόματι Κ.] This is intended to at once set forth the high character of those who 'endured the like things,' and to give greater point to the argument; q. d. 'If their high commission did not screen them from suffering; if they bore such evils, well may ye.'

11. μακαρίζομεν] 'we pronounce those blessed,' agreeably to Christ's words, Matt. v. 11, 12. Τοὺς ὑπομ., 'who bear with patience the trials appointed for them by God.' On this absolute use, see Note on Rom. xii. 12. Here we may suppose the Apostle to have had in mind the words of Dan. xii. 12, μακάριος ὁ ὑπομένων, with which compare Matt. xxiv. 13.

— τὸ τέλος Κυρίου.] Render, 'the [happy] end which the Lord put to his sufferings;' with reference to what is said, Job xlii. 12. In Κυρίου we have a Genitive of cause, for ὑπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, scil. δοθέν; of which idiom several examples have been adduced both from the Scriptural and Classical writers.

1 Matt. 5. 34, &c. 2 Cor. 1. 17, 18. m 2 Chron. 33. 12. Ps. 50. 16. Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16. n Mark 6. 13. & 16. 18.

καὶ οἰκτίρμων. [l] Πρὸ πάντων δὲ, ἀδελφοί μου, μὴ ὀμνύετε, 12 μήτε τὸν οὐρανὸν μήτε τὴν γῆν, μήτε ἄλλον τινὰ ὅρκον· ἤτω δὲ ὑμῶν τὸ ναὶ, ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὒ, οὔ· ἵνα μὴ ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσητε. [m] Κακοπαθεῖ τις ἐν ὑμῖν; προσευχέσθω· εὐθυμεῖ 13 τις; ψαλλέτω. [n] ἀσθενεῖ τις ἐν ὑμῖν; προσκαλεσάσθω τοὺς 14 πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλησίας· καὶ προσευξάσθωσαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν,

12. The Apostle now takes occasion to advert to one among other modes of expressing impatience, namely, by the use of angry oaths uttered under impatience, and from great provocation; for such, as Bp. Sanderson and Abp. Newcome show, are meant by the oaths here spoken of. Besides these, however, we may suppose,—especially from the use of the solemn formula πρὸ πάντων,—that the Apostle here speaks generally of all oaths used in common conversation; such kind of swearing being, there is reason to think, very prevalent among the Jews. That the Apostle's words have nothing to do with judicial swearing, all the best Commentators are agreed. And, indeed, such is certain from the similar words of our Lord, Matt. v. 34—37, on which, doubtless, the present injunction was formed.

It may be observed that the practice of the Essenes wholly coincided with these prohibitions. Thus we find from Josephus, Bell. ii. 8. 6, that they avoided swearing, as if it were worse than perjury; though there, as in the present case, the injunction, as Whiston remarks, must be supposed to have had its particular exceptions, as on certain great and necessary occasions. Thus, in the next section, we find it related of these very Essenes, who are before said to have so zealously avoided swearing, that they admitted none into their brotherhood till they had taken certain tremendous oaths to perform their several duties to God and to their neighbour; so evidently not accounting this any violation of the rule 'not to swear at all.' The case is the same in the Christian system, as we learn from the Apostolical Constitutions, which, although they coincide with these prohibitions of Christ and his Apostle as to swearing in general, yet they explain it elsewhere by avoiding to swear falsely, and to swear often and in vain. And so when they enjoin not to swear at all, they add that, 'if such cannot be avoided, we must swear truly;' which sufficiently serves to explain the nature and measures of this general injunction.

— ἤτω ὑμῶν τὸ ναὶ, ναὶ, καὶ τὸ οὒ, οὔ.] This seems to have been a proverbial form of expression, to denote simple affirmation or negation; repeated, if need be, but unaccompanied with oaths. Ὑπὸ κρίσιν πέσ. is for εἰς κρίσιν ἐμπέσητε, which phrase occurs in Ecclus. xxix. 19. And so in Diod. Sic. xix. 8, we have πιπτ. ὑπὸ ἐξουσίαν τῶν ἐχθίστων.

13—18. Here the Apostle adverts to other trials of patience and resignation, namely, those of sickness, or other calamity; pointing out the best means of removing, or mitigating, the evils. And first he enjoins the use of prayer, as the best balm for the wounds of affliction, and the most effectual preservative against the allurements of prosperity.

13. εὐθυμεῖ τις; ψαλλέτω.] Not meaning thus to say that cheerfulness is always to be so expressed (see Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 15. Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16); but recommending them to adapt their devotions to their present frame of mind and to external circumstances;—in sorrow and affliction offering up prayer; in joy offering 'the sacrifice of praise' (Heb. xiii. 15), giving thanks for past and present blessings, with prayer for future ones, and for grace at all times to withstand temptations.

14. ἀσθενεῖ.] This must, from the context, be understood of severe and dangerous sickness, especially if (as is generally, and with reason, supposed) this and the next verse relate to the miraculous gifts of healing, which were vouchsafed to certain in the Apostolic age. See Deyling, Wolf, and Benson.

— τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους τῆς ἐκκλ.] It is a disputed question, whether by this expression be denoted the elders, or the ministers, of the Church; see Note on 1 Tim. v. 17. The former is the more probable opinion.

— προσευξάσθωσαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν—Κυρίου.] Ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου some construe with προσευξάσθωσαν ἐπ' αὐτόν: others, with ἀλείψ. αὐτὸν ἐλαίῳ. We may, however, suppose them to belong to both; the whole thing being done in dependence on the aid of God, solemnly invoked in prayer. That oil (especially the generous oil of the East) is highly salutary in various disorders, will, however, by no means prove it to be here enjoined as a medical means; for from the Gospels (see Mark vi. 13) we learn that this (which was a general remedy among the Jews) was used by the disciples even in conjunction with miraculous power. Nay, our Lord himself condescended to employ certain media in working miracles. In the case of these presbyters, as in that of the Apostles, the oil may have been only used as symbolical of the cure to be effected by the Divine means. Upon the whole, it involves, I apprehend, the least difficulty to suppose that by the healing in question is meant preternatural healing; otherwise the strong expressions ἡ εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως σώσει τὸν κάμν., καὶ ἐγερεῖ α. ὁ K., and others, must be taken with such a limitation as, in the present context, would involve a very great harshness. In the next generation, indeed, there is little doubt that the thing became a solemn religious ceremony comprehending a symbolical rite, the use of which tended to produce the blessings invoked, as far as was consistent with the purposes of Divine wisdom: in which case, of course, the expression prayer of faith would bear a very different sense to what it does in the present passage. Here it may be supposed to denote 'the prayer which proceedeth from that faith to which was formerly granted the power of working miracles;' see Acts iii. 16. Rom. xii. 3. 1 Cor. xii. 9. xiii. 2: in which view the sins (namely, sins sincerely repented of) of which it is here said that they shall be forgiven, are supposed 15 ἀλείψαντες αὐτὸν ἐλαίῳ ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου. [o] Καὶ ἡ o Is. 33. 24.

εὐχὴ τῆς πίστεως σώσει τὸν κάμνοντα, καὶ ἐγερεῖ αὐτὸν Prov. 15. 29. Gen. 20. 17. Num. 11. 2.
ὁ Κύριος· κἂν ἁμαρτίας ᾖ πεποιηκὼς, ἀφεθήσεται αὐτῷ. Josh. 10. 12.
16 Ἐξομολογεῖσθε ἀλλήλοις τὰ παραπτώματα, καὶ εὔχεσθε ὑπὲρ ἀλλήλων, ὅπως ἰαθῆτε. πολὺ ἰσχύει δέησις δικαίου 17 ἐνεργουμένη. [p] Ἠλίας ἄνθρωπος ἦν ὁμοιοπαθὴς ἡμῖν, καὶ p 1 Kings 17. 1. προσευχῇ προσηύξατο τοῦ μὴ βρέξαι· καὶ οὐκ ἔβρεξεν ἐπὶ & 18. 42, 45. Luke 4. 25. Acts 14. 15.
18 τῆς γῆς ἐνιαυτοὺς τρεῖς καὶ μῆνας ἕξ. [q] Καὶ πάλιν προσ- q 1 Kings 18. 41, &c. ηύξατο, καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς ὑετὸν ἔδωκε, καὶ ἡ γῆ ἐβλάστησε τὸν 19 καρπὸν αὐτῆς. [r] Ἀδελφοὶ, ἐάν τις ἐν ὑμῖν πλανηθῇ ἀπὸ r Matt. 18. 15.
20 τῆς ἀληθείας, καὶ ἐπιστρέψῃ τὶς αὐτὸν, [s] γινωσκέτω ὅτι ὁ s Rom. 11. 14. ἐπιστρέψας ἁμαρτωλὸν ἐκ πλάνης ὁδοῦ αὐτοῦ, σώσει ψυχὴν 1 Cor. 9. 22. 1 Tim. 4. 16.
ἐκ θανάτου, καὶ καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν. 1 Pet. 4. 8.

to be those of which the disorders in question were a temporal and judicial punishment; see Matt. viii. 17. John v. 14. 1 Cor. xi. 30, seq. 'It cannot be supposed (as observes Mr. Scott) that these miraculous cures could be performed at all times; but there seems to have been some impression on the mind of the person who wrought the miracle, and a peculiar exercise of faith for that purpose.' Certain it is that the Romish practice of Extreme Unction is by no means justified by this passage; such being administered under circumstances widely different; as being employed, not for cure, but where life is despaired of.

16. ἐξομολογεῖσθε ἀλλήλοις τὰ παραπτώματα, &c.] Some, regarding this as a fresh exhortation, unconnected with the preceding context, suppose it to enjoin generally a mutual confession of faults or injuries committed against each other, with a mutual supplication to God for spiritual health. This view, however, lies open to no little objection in the harshness which it involves, of assigning such a figurative sense to ἰαθῆτε in a context like the present. Hence most Expositors, with reason, connecting the exhortation with what precedes, understand the injunction not as a general, but a special one, referring only to cases of dangerous sickness, and when the confession and reconciliation in question would materially tend to promote the recovery of the sick person. The 'prayer' here mentioned seems intended chiefly of the injured person, who should not only forgive, but pray for his injurer, if penitent; though it may be also understood of all other prayers for the recovery and pardon of sins of the sick person, except those mentioned at vv. 14, 15. It seems that the Apostle here meant to recommend and extol a disposition to freely confess, on all proper occasions, the wrongs we have done to any one. Certain it is that the present passage will by no means support the Romish practice of auricular confession, especially to a priest; the confession, in the present case, being supposed to be made to the injured person, in order to obtain his forgiveness.

Finally, to encourage the use of prayers for the sick, not only on the part of ministers, but that of Christians in general, we have added the assurance, πολὺ ἰσχύει δέησις δικαίου ἐνεργουμένη, meaning, that 'the earnest prayers of the righteous have great efficacy.' Some Commentators, indeed, interpret ἐνεργουμένη, 'inwrought by the Spirit;' but such a signification of the word, besides that it rests on no certain proof, is here unsuitable to the context.

19, 20. To the above injunctions to mutual confession, forgiveness, and prayer for each other, the Apostle now subjoins another, to mutually co-operate in correcting each other's errors in the doctrines, or failures in the practice, of Christianity.

20. καὶ καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμ.] Expositors are not agreed whether the covering here spoken of is to be understood of the sins of the converter, or of the converted. The former interpretation is espoused by Origen and several Latin Fathers, and of the moderns, by Hammond, Whitby, Wells, Pyle, Atterbury, and Doddridge; the latter, by Grotius, Vorstius, Calvin, Estius, Bp. Hall, Wolf, Benson, Sherlock, Rosenmuller, Macknight, Newcome, Pott, Scott, and almost all recent Commentators, who argue that it seems hardly consonant with the language and doctrines of the Gospel, that any sin should be forgiven, if it be unrepented, or persisted in; and if it be repented and forsaken it will be pardoned without the meritorious act here mentioned. Indeed, the latter interpretation is that alone suitable to the context; and how early it was adopted will appear from its being followed by the Pesch. Syr. Translator. Thus, then, we may suppose the meaning to be, that so doing he will cause these his sins to be covered up in the sight of God, and to be unpunished,—that Christ's atoning blood might cover the multitude of his sins, never to appear in judgment against him. By this, however, we are only to understand that the good offices of the reformer will powerfully tend to procure the forgiveness of sins and final salvation of the penitent sinner, since conversion does not necessarily imply final perseverance, and therefore can by no means ensure salvation.

ΠΕΤΡΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

a John 7. 35. Acts 2. 5, 9, 10. James 1. 1.

I. [a] ΠΕΤΡΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐκλεκτοῖς 1 παρεπιδήμοις διασπορᾶς Πόντου, Γαλατίας, Καππαδοκίας,

The authenticity, and consequently canonical authority, of this Epistle has never been disputed. On the time, however, when, and the place where it was written, nothing certain can be pronounced. Indeed of the history of St. Peter's life subsequent to his being at Antioch, A.D. 46, we know nothing from the New Test. That he suffered martyrdom at Rome at the close of the reign of Nero, about the year 67, we learn from the early Ecclesiastical Historians; and that his remains were deposited at Rome, we have the same testimony; to which I am enabled to add that of Procopius, Hist. p. 195. 10. But though the time when this Epistle was written cannot be exactly fixed, yet, from some allusions in it to the troubles in Judæa, it is supposed to have been not long before the death of the Apostle; probably about the year 64. See Prof. Steiger's Introd. § 10. With respect to the place where it was written, the determination of that point is closely connected with the interpretation of the passage at chapter v. 13, where see Note. As to the persons to whom it was addressed, that, too, is a matter of some uncertainty. They were probably the Christians dispersed through various parts of Asia Minor and the East,—chiefly Jews, but partly Gentiles. Lastly, as regards the matter contained therein, this Epistle bears a close affinity to that of the Epistle of St. James in scope and argument, adverting to the persecutions to which the Christians were exposed, exhorting to patience and resignation, perseverance in the true faith, and inculcating universal love and the practice of all the relative duties. In short, the great purpose here of the Apostle is to confirm the faith of believers, and to stimulate them to continue in a holy life and conversation: insomuch that a more perfect system of Christian morality cannot be found in Scripture, than that which is contained in this and the second Epistle of St. Peter; in which (as Steiger observes) the essential doctrines of the Gospel are handled briefly, but distinctly, and with practical force.

I. 1. ἐκλεκτοῖς] i. e. 'elected to the privileges of the Gospel;' meaning professed Christians, whether originally Gentiles or Jews. Hence such are further on, ii. 9, called γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, 'a chosen generation,' i. e. chosen to be God's peculiar people. By this term, as Bp. Hall says, are denoted 'those who, in their outward profession and in the judgment of charity, are reputed for the elect of God, and chosen by him to salvation.' See Rom. viii. 33. Of course it is by no means meant to be asserted that all such would be ultimately saved. They are said to be elect, as being admitted to the light of the Gospel, while others are still in the darkness of heathenism.

By calling them elect κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ, 'according to the foreknowledge of God,' (on which expression see Acts ii. 23. Rom. viii. 28, seq., and Eph. i. 5,) the Apostle means to signify that the calling of these persons to the knowledge of the Gospel was (like every other circumstance relative to his gracious dispensation) foreknown by God. They might all (as Macknight says) be elected according to the foreknowledge of God, because, agreeably to the original purpose of God, discovered in the prophetical writings, Jews and Gentiles were indiscriminately made the visible Church and people of God, and entitled to all the privileges thereof.

Here, indeed, some Commentators (including Cyril, Œcumenius, and Theophylact,) instead of referring κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ Π. to ἐκλεκτοῖς, would construe it with ἀπόστολος; thus taking the expression κατὰ πρόγνωσιν as equivalent to διὰ θελήματος at 2 Tim. i. 1, and Titus i. 1—4. But this would suppose a very harsh transposition; ἀπόστολος being too remote for such a reference; and, as Pott observes, it would suit ill with the words following, εἰς ῥαντισμὸν αἵματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which have respect, not to the Apostle only, but all Christians without exception.

— παρεπιδήμοις] for the more Classical παροίκοις, though the word is used by the later Classical writers. Render, 'sojourners.' By the expression παρεπ. διασπορᾶς are meant the Jewish Christians. On the term διασπορὰ see Note at John vii. 35, and James i. 1; and on παρεπ. see Note on ii. 11, and Heb. xi. 13.

— Πόντου, Γαλατίας, Καππαδοκίας, Ἀσίας, καὶ Βιθυνίας.] In the enumeration of the different lands, the Apostle appears to have described in thought the whole circle, beginning at the north, and then proceeding southwards to Galatia,

2 Ἀσίας, καὶ Βιθυνίας, [b] κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος, εἰς ὑπακοὴν καὶ ῥαντισμὸν αἵματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη πληθυνθείη.
3 [c] Εὐλογητὸς ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ, κατὰ τὸ πολὺ αὐτοῦ ἔλεος, ἀναγεννήσας ἡμᾶς εἰς ἐλπίδα ζῶσαν δι' ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐκ νεκρῶν, 4 [d] εἰς κληρονομίαν ἄφθαρτον καὶ ἀμίαντον καὶ ἀμάραντον, 5 τετηρημένην ἐν οὐρανοῖς εἰς * ὑμᾶς, [e] τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους διὰ πίστεως εἰς σωτηρίαν, ἑτοίμην ἀπο-b Eph. 1. 4. infra 2. 9. & v. 14. Rom. 8. 29. & 16 26. & 1. 7. 2 Thess. 2. 13. Heb. 12. 24. 2 Pet. 1. 2. c Joh. 3. 3, 5. 1 Cor. 15. 20. 2 Cor. 1. 3. James 1. 18.

d Col. 1. 5. 2 Tim. 1. 12. e John 10. 28, 29. & 17. 11, 12, 15. Jude 1, 24. Eph. 2. 8.

south-east to Cappadocia, and from thence, passing through the contiguous parts of Asia, he turns himself towards Bithynia, which carries him back to the borders of Pontus. Bengel rightly suggests, that the survey proceeds, as if the prospect had been taken from Babylon. (Steiger.)

2. ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος] 'by the sanctification, i. e. sanctifying influences, of the Spirit.' So at 2 Thess. ii. 13, Christians are spoken of as chosen εἰς σωτηρίαν ἐν ἁγιασμῷ Πνεύματος καὶ πίστει ἀληθείας. Εἰς ὑπακοήν. Meaning, 'in order that they should obey the Gospel.' Καὶ [εἰς] ῥαντισμὸν αἵμ. Ἰ. Χρ. is for ἵνα ῥαντίσωνται αἵματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 'and that they should be purified from sin by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ,' in opposition to that of the Mosaic law. See Heb. xii. 24, and compare Eph. i. 4. Thus, then, it is meant, that they should obey the Gospel, and be made partakers of the benefit of Christ's death.

Here, as Gilpin well observes, 'we have a sketch of the whole œconomy of our redemption. It is the free gift of God the Father. We are led to obedience through the sanctification of the Holy Spirit, and are finally justified by the blood of Christ;' or, in the words of Mr. Scott, 'we are taught to ascribe our salvation to the electing love of the Father, the redemption of the Son, and the sanctification of the Spirit; and so to give glory to the Triune God.'

3—5. The Apostle opens his subject by calling on his readers to join with him in blessing the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ for his mercy and grace. He reminds them of the happy immortality set before them in the Gospel, and which they would obtain, if they continued true to their Christian profession. This paves the way for the mention, at ver. 6, of trials and persecutions.

3. ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κ. ἡ. Ἰ. Χ.] On this form of expression see Note at Rom. xv. 6.

— κατὰ τὸ πολὺ αὐτοῦ ἔλεος.] These words are highly significant, inculcating (as Luther shows) 'a most important evangelical doctrine, that it is only of the exuberant compassion of God (see Luke i. 78) that we are saved.'

— ἀναγεννήσας ἡμᾶς εἰς ἐλπίδα, &c.] Namely, by having 'called us out of darkness into his marvellous light,' (see infra ii. 9) whereby we were placed in a new state, had new duties, and new hopes. So, at Titus iii. 5, it is said, κατὰ τὸν αὐτοῦ ἔλεον ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶς διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας, καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος ἁγίου.

— ζῶσαν] for ζωοποιοῦσαν, in allusion to the life and immortality brought to light by the Gospel. So we have ὁδὸς ζῶσα at Heb. x. 20. See also John i. 11—13. This hope is represented as introduced by Christ's resurrection, inasmuch as that showed the possibility of our own resurrection, as being both a proof and pledge thereof. Thus, then, in εἰς ἐλπίδα ζῶσαν we have indicated the end and result of the new birth just before spoken of. In εἰς κληρονομίαν ἄφθαρτον, &c., v. 4, is shown the object of this hope—namely, an inheritance, here represented by such epithets (noting the properties belonging to it) as entirely distinguish it from mere worldly inheritances; for whereas the latter are (as Benson and Scott observe) corruptible in themselves, and fading, as to the trivial solid comfort they impart, and its perishing nature, palling on the appetite, and becoming insipid; this, the inheritance to which the regenerate are entitled, is incorruptible in itself, and they will be rendered incorruptible and immortal to enjoy it. Of the two terms ἄφθαρτον and ἀμίαντον, the former represents it as imperishable; the latter, as uncontaminated by those vices which so grievously disturb all human happiness, and untainted with that evil which, in this world, ever intermixes itself with what is good. Moreover the inheritance in question is termed ἀμάραντον, 'never-fading,' because it never grows old, but perpetually endureth such as it is to all eternity. Finally, it is said to be 'reserved in heaven' for them, and consequently is out of the reach of frustration or deprivation. On which see Col. i. 5. 2 Tim. iv. 8.

Here, for ἡμᾶς, all the most eminent Editors, from Wetstein to Scholz, are agreed in preferring ὑμᾶς. Very slender authority, indeed, exists for the former, which first appeared in the third Edition of Stephens, and was thence introduced into the textus receptus.

5. τοὺς ἐν δυνάμει Θεοῦ φρουρουμένους διὰ πίστεως εἰς σωτ.] Render, 'for you who are preserved and guarded by the powerful protection of God [who can give us all the felicity we wish for] through faith.' In the expression φρουρουμένους we have a figure derived from an impregnable fortress, where whatever is deposited is secure from all attacks: so forming a beautiful representation of the complete security of true believers under the protection of a God who is engaged by covenant to keep them safe unto salvation. By διὰ πίστεως, just after, we have denoted the means through which this power of God works in us. Faith is here represented as the medium through which this event is brought about; q. d. 'through the outward exercise of a firm and settled faith, which endureth unto the end.' See Col. i. 23. Heb. iii. 6. Finally, in εἰς σωτηρίαν καλυφθῆναι ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ· [f] ἐν ᾧ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, ὀλίγον 6 ἄρτι (εἰ δέον ἐστὶ) λυπηθέντες ἐν ποικίλοις πειρασμοῖς, [g] ἵνα 7 τὸ δοκίμιον ὑμῶν τῆς πίστεως, πολὺ τιμιώτερον χρυσίου, τοῦ ἀπολλυμένου, διὰ πυρὸς δὲ δοκιμαζομένου, εὑρεθῇ εἰς ἔπαι-νον καὶ τιμὴν καὶ δόξαν, ἐν ἀποκαλύψει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [h] ὃν, οὐκ εἰδότες, ἀγαπᾶτε· εἰς ὃν, ἄρτι μὴ ὁρῶντες, πιστεύ- 8 f Rom. 12. 12. 2 Cor. 4. 17. infra 5. 10. Wisd. 3. 5. g Prov. 17. 3. Isa. 48. 10. 1 Cor. 3. 13. James 1. 3. infra 4. 12.

h Joh. 20. 29. 2 Cor. 5. 7. Heb. 11. 1, 27.

we have intimated the end of that preservation and support; namely, final and complete salvation. Ἑτοίμην ἀποκαλυφθῆναι, 'ready to be revealed and imparted;' meaning, ready for them (though they are not ready for it), inasmuch as it is reserved for them. Ἐν καιρῷ ἐσχάτῳ, 'at the final consummation of all things,' at the day of judgment.

6. The Apostle proceeds, after expressing thankfulness to God on account of the blessings provided for believers, to console and animate them, agreeably to his design, in their present condition, which, because of those blessings, notwithstanding their temporal sufferings, was as full of joy, as it was safe and gloriously distinguished. (Steiger.)

— ἐν ᾧ ἀγαλλιᾶσθε, &c.] Render, 'in which [circumstance] (namely, of being kept by the power of God, and in hope in his salvation) ye greatly rejoice,' &c. Meaning to say, 'this felicity ye expect, though now, for a time,—if thus it must be by God's providence,—ye suffer annoyance under various tribulations.' These we may suppose to have been different in different persons. In some the trials would be from the infliction of Jewish or Heathen persecution; in others, from the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, with which all have, more or less, to contend, while in this earthly state of trial. And so, through means of sin, there would be many interruptions to that complete joy of which they should be made partakers at 'the revelation of Jesus Christ.' By the restriction involved in the words εἰ δέον ἐστὶ (with which Luther aptly compares those infra iii. 17, εἰ θέλοι τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ), we are taught (as Steiger observes) that 'suffering is not absolutely necessary and salutary to the faithful.' 'They must not (says Luther) lay upon themselves a cross out of their own will, but wait for that which God lays upon them.'

7. ἵνα τὸ δοκίμιον—Χριστοῦ.] Ἵνα here denotes result; these words signifying (as Steiger says), 'God's purpose in trying the faithful, and its happy result to those who are kept in the faith.' Render: 'In order that this proof of your faith [by affliction], in importance far exceeding that of gold which perisheth, though tried in the fire, may be found [to terminate] unto praise.' Here we have a comparison, à minori ad majus, between the proof of the genuineness of gold, by the assay of fire, with that of faith, tried in the furnace of affliction: a comparison found elsewhere in Scripture (as Prov. xvii. 3, ὥσπερ δοκιμάζεται ἐν καμίνῳ ἄργυρος καὶ χρύσος, οὕτως ἐκλεκταὶ καρδίαι παρὰ τῷ Κυρίῳ), and occurring not unfrequently in the Classical writers. So Seneca, de Prov. 5, 'ignis aurum probat, miseria fortes viros.' Philo, p. 54, D., ἡ φρόνησις, ἣν εἴκασε χρυσίῳ, ἀδόλῳ καὶ καθαρᾷ, καὶ πεπυρωμένῃ καὶ δεδοκιμασμένῃ, καὶ τιμίᾳ φύσει, ἐκεῖ μέν ἐστιν ἐν τῇ τοῦ Θεοῦ σοφίᾳ, &c., where the more recondite term πεπυρ. is explained by the more familiar one δεδοκιμασμένῃ. Moreover, as corresponding to εἰς τιμὴν here is τιμίᾳ there.

Besides the above, however, we have another point of superiority in the proof of tried faith and virtue over that of gold tried in the fire; and that is suggested by the expression τοῦ ἀπολλυμένου; by which it is intimated, that whereas the one wears out and perishes in the use, however approved by the fire, the other, on the contrary, in use loses nothing of its weight and value, but rather acquires more. Moreover, besides its value being increased by time, it will also (as is intimated by the words following, εὑρεθῇ εἰς ἔπαινον καὶ τιμὴν—Χριστοῦ) be found to terminate in increasing glory unto eternity, 'enduring even unto everlasting life;' for the words ἐν ἀποκαλύψει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ are to be taken in close connexion with the preceding δόξαν; this revelation of Jesus Christ at the day of judgment naturally suggesting the idea of what St. Paul speaks of at Rom. viii. 19—21, 'the revelation (or manifestation), at that day, of the glory (coexistent with Christ's, Rom. viii. 17, and therefore eternal) of the sons of God,'—the glory which shall be then revealed at the redemption of our bodies. See Rom. viii. 23.

For πολὺ τιμιώτερον, many MSS. and some Versions and Fathers have πολυτιμότερον, which has been edited by Griesbach, Vater, Lachmann, and Scholz; but, I apprehend, injudiciously; for while the latter is surely not (what Steiger calls it) the more difficult reading, so neither is it the more 'suitable.' The one is as suitable as the other; but the common reading is more agreeable to the ordinary Greek character of style (and we may compare a similar mode of expression, 2 Cor. viii. 22, πολὺ σπουδαιότερον); whereas the other has every appearance of being a mere Alexandrian correction. And this is the more probable from the nature of the MSS. in which it is found: otherwise I should be inclined to think, with Macknight, that the reading in question arose from an accidental blending of πολὺ with τιμιώτερον.

8. The Apostle here, after the above parenthetical digression respecting the glory that is to ensue upon the close of their trials, turns back to the present condition of believers; q. d. 'I thank God for your redemption and appointment to eternal blessedness, in the apprehension of which you do even now rejoice, notwithstanding your preparatory sufferings; ye rejoice,' he repeats again, 'with love and confidence toward the Saviour, as though you were already crowned by him with that blessedness.' (Steiger.)

— ὃν, οὐκ εἰδότες, ἀγαπᾶτε, &c.] 'whom, though not having seen [in the flesh on earth], yet ye love; in whom, though not yet seeing, ye οντες δὲ, ἀγαλλιᾶσθε χαρᾷ ἀνεκλαλήτῳ καὶ δεδοξασμένῃ, 9 κομιζόμενοι τὸ τέλος τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, σωτηρίαν ψυχῶν·

10 [i] περὶ ἧς σωτηρίας ἐξεζήτησαν καὶ ἐξηρεύνησαν προφῆται οἱ 11 περὶ τῆς εἰς ὑμᾶς χάριτος προφητεύσαντες, [k] ἐρευνῶντες, εἰς τίνα ἢ ποῖον καιρὸν ἐδήλου τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς Πνεῦμα Χριστοῦ, προμαρτυρόμενον τὰ εἰς Χριστὸν παθήματα, καὶ τὰς μετὰ 12 ταῦτα δόξας· [l] οἷς ἀπεκαλύφθη, ὅτι οὐχ ἑαυτοῖς, ἡμῖν δὲ διηκόνουν αὐτὰ, ἃ νῦν ἀνηγγέλη ὑμῖν διὰ τῶν εὐαγγελισα-μένων ὑμᾶς ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ ἀποσταλέντι ἀπ᾽ οὐρανοῦ, i Gen. 49. 10. Dan. 2. 44. & 9. 24. Hag. 2. 8. Zach. 6. 12. Matt. 13. 17. Luke 10. 24.

k Ps. 22. 7. Isa. 53. 3, &c. Dan. 9. 24. Luke 24. 25.
l Dan. 12. 9, 13. Acts 2. 4. Eph. 3. 10. Heb 11. 13, 39.

believe,' &c.; compare Hebr. xi. 1. John xx. 29. Steiger well remarks on the parallelism which here exists, and the double contrast here involved: 'Not to know, and yet to love, forming one contrast; and not to behold, but still, through faith to rejoice, forming another.' With the parallelism here Raphelius compares a similar one in Xenophon, Cyr. i. 1. 1.

'Here,' Calvin remarks, 'two things are laid down,—that they should love that Saviour whom they had not seen, and believe on him whom they had not beheld. Yet the former is produced by the latter; for faith is the cause of the love.' That their loving Christ is here placed before their believing on him, we may account for on this principle, that while faith is the cause of love, yet love, when sincere, may outrun faith, even as the loving and beloved disciple outran his companion, and came first to the Lord (John xx. 4). If this be not admitted, the two terms loving and trusting in Christ may be understood (as they have been by many eminent Commentators) to denote recognising him as their Saviour, and from him alone expecting salvation.

By the words ἀγαλλιᾶσθε χαρᾷ ἀνεκλαλήτῳ καὶ δεδοξασμένῃ it is intimated, that the trust in question is an inexpressibly joyful one. And truly as the happiness prepared in another world for the righteous is so great as to be inconceivable to human imagination (1 Cor. ii. 9), well may the joy of its expectation and anticipation be termed, as it is here, unspeakable.

10. The Apostle now sets forth the preciousness of this salvation, by showing what a deep interest was taken in it by the Prophets of old, who earnestly inquired concerning it. See Luke x. 24.

— περὶ ἧς σωτηρίας—προφητεύσαντες.] Meaning, 'Concerning which felicity [and its nature] the Prophets studiously examined, and diligently enquired after; [the Prophets, I say, who prophesied of the grace which was to come unto you.]' The ἐξ in ἐξεζήτησαν and ἐξηρεύνησαν is (like our word out) intensive, conveying the idea of anxious and diligent search: from which expressions it appears (as Macknight observes) that the Prophets, in many instances, did not understand the meaning of their own prophecies, but studied them, as others did, with great care to find them out (see Dan. ix. 22. vii. 28. xii. 8), especially as respected the Messiah. 'They knew (says Rosenmuller) that something good was reserved for our later times; but the exact nature thereof they did not fully comprehend. They prophesied of the blessings whereof we are partakers, though mostly shadowed under types and figures.' See more in Calvin.

11. ἐρευνῶντες, εἰς τίνα—δόξας.] Meaning, 'investigating [I say] at what particular period, and in what kind of times, [whether of national prosperity or of adversity,] that would come to pass, which the Holy Spirit within them, given by Christ, had showed to them; signifying what Christ should suffer, and the glory to which he should be exalted.' Of the terms here, τίς and ποῖος, it is well observed by Steiger, 'that the former marks the object after its abstract determination, as this or that, for the object in question; the latter, its quality, its properties.' So Mark iv. 30, τίνι ὁμοιώσωμεν τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ; ἢ ἐν ποίᾳ παραβολῇ, &c. Also Aristid. p. 91, ναοὺς δὲ ποίους καὶ τίνας μάλιστα ὁρῶντες, &c., 'what sort of ships, and what particularly are they whose sight,' &c. 'Now it was natural,' says he, 'that the prophets should seek for a double mark of the advent of Christ—the announcement of the appointed distance of it as to time, and delineations of the character of that period in relation to others.' In the expression τὸ ἐν αὐτοῖς Πνεῦμα, &c., we have involved the doctrine of immediate internal revelation. Compare Matt. x. 20; Gal. i. 15. Moreover, the Holy Spirit is here called 'the Spirit of Christ,' as being that given by Christ unto the Prophets. At τὰ εἰς Χρ. παθήματα supply ἐσόμενα scil. ἀποβησόμενα. Finally, the term δόξας refers, not only (as Grotius supposes) to Christ's resurrection, but, as Bengel explains, to the whole of that exaltation which began with it. See John xiii. 31. Acts iii. 13. Phil. ii. 9.

12. οἷς ἀπεκαλύφθη—ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι.] 'To whom, [I say, as a reward of their diligent inquiry,] it was revealed, that not for their own benefit, or with relation to themselves, but for us, and to us, they were made ministers of announcing those things unto us; [those things I say] which now have been [plainly] revealed to you by those who have preached the Gospel to you, through the influence and assistance of the Holy Spirit sent from heaven; [things, I say] over which the angels bend with admiration, and desire to look into.'

Of the expression διακονεῖν τοῦτό τινι, ('to minister or supply to any one the intelligence he desires,') we have an example in Josephus, Antiq. vi. 13. 6, ταῦτα (meaning, 'this message') δὲ τῶν πεμφθέντων διακονησάντων πρὸς τὸν Νάβαλον. By ἃ we are to understand 'all the wonderful things above-mentioned,' which, before they took place, were not known even to the Angels, but are now contemplated by them with wonder and delight. By the term παρακύψαι is meant to be denoted, not (as many later Commentators understand) com- εἰς ἃ ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἄγγελοι παρακύψαι. [m] Διὸ ἀναζωσάμενοι 13 τὰς ὀσφύας τῆς διανοίας ὑμῶν, νήφοντες, τελείως ἐλπίσατε ἐπὶ τὴν φερομένην ὑμῖν χάριν ἐν ἀποκαλύψει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

[n] ὡς τέκνα ὑπακοῆς, μὴ συσχηματιζόμενοι ταῖς πρότερον ἐν 14 τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ ὑμῶν ἐπιθυμίαις· [o] ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν καλέσαντα 15 ὑμᾶς Ἅγιον, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἅγιοι ἐν πάσῃ ἀναστροφῇ γενήθητε· [p] διότι γέγραπται· Ἅγιοι γένεσθε, ὅτι ἐγὼ ἅγιός εἰμι. 16 [q] Καὶ εἰ Πατέρα ἐπικαλεῖσθε τὸν ἀπροσωπολήπτως κρίνοντα 17 m Luke 12. 35. & 21. 34. Rom. 13. 13. Eph. 6. 14. 1 Thess. 5. 6. n Rom. 12. 2. intra 4. 2.

o Lev. 11. 44. & 19. 2. & 20. 7. Luke 1. 74, 75. 2 Cor. 7. 1. p Lev. 11. 44. & 19. 2. & 20. 7.
q Deut. 10. 17. 2 Chr. 19. 7. Job 34. 19. Acts 10. 34, 35. Rom. 2. 10, 11. 2 Cor. 5. 6. & 7. 1. Eph. 6. 9. Gal. 2. 6. Col. 3. 25. Phil. 2. 12. Heb. 11. 13.

prehensive and complete knowledge; but (according to the view of the expression adopted by the ancient Expositors, and Bp. Sanderson) that finite and limited knowledge, which differs from perfect knowledge, as a glimpse of an object differs from the full vision of it. A use of the word sufficiently established by two passages elsewhere, Luke xxiv. 12, and John xx. 5, where it occurs in the physical sense; also another, James i. 25, where it has, as here, the moral; denoting the looking into the Gospel to appreciate its excellence, just as a person looks at any thing through a glass to see it more clearly. And so Lucian, Pisc. § 38, speaking of the moral maxims of the Philosophers, says, ἐπειδὴ μόνον παρέκυψα τὰ ὑμέτερα, 'and after I had only taken a slight peep into your maxims.' Here, then, by the term παρακύψαι (in which there is supposed to be an allusion to the Cherubim. which were represented as bending over the ark of the covenant) it is meant, that the angels have such a glimpse of the Gospel, as to admire it, and to desire to know more of it; though not sufficient insight into it as to thoroughly fathom and entirely comprehend that which indeed 'passeth knowledge.' (Eph. iii. 19.)

13. On the above impressive representation of the glories and blessings of the Gospel, (which forms the exordium of the Epistle,) are now founded certain weighty exhortations to a life suitable to such high privileges and glorious promises.

— διὸ ἀναζωσάμενοι—χάριν.] Meaning (by a metaphor derived from the custom of the Orientals, and indeed the ancient world in general, of girding the long flowing robes about the loins, on engaging in any active exertion): 'Such, then, being the case, gird up the loins of your mind, engage with activity in working out your salvation;' or, in other words, 'keep your minds and affections continually disencumbered and prepared to run the race set before you, by casting aside all carnal prejudices, and abandoning all anxious cares about the things of this life, and whatever might prevent you from understanding, embracing, and obeying the word of truth.' On the term νήφω, to denote serious sober-mindedness, see 1 Thess. v. 6, and 2 Tim. iv. 5. Ἐλπίζειν here signifies 'to place one's hope on, as a sure ground of faith.' So at Ps. xxxiii. 18 we have ἐλπίζοντες ἐπὶ τὸ ἔλεος αὐτοῦ. Τελείως some take as standing for εἰς τέλος, 'unto the end;' while others assign to it the sense constantly, or entirely. Both senses may be united. By χάριν is to be understood the fulness of grace to be conferred at the period in question, and of which they were now to hold fast the blessed hope. Of φερομένην ὑμῖν ἐν ἀποκαλύψει Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ the full sense is, 'which is brought or offered to you, and to be conferred on you at the appearance of Christ [to judgment].' See Bp. Bull's Harm., p. 10.

14. 'Propositionem sequitur confirmatio argumentosa.' (Aretius.)

— ὡς τέκνα ὑπακοῆς, &c.] A Hebraism for τέκνα ὑπήκοα. Μὴ συσχημ. See Note on Rom. xii. 2, and compare infra iv. 2. Ἐν τῇ ἀγνοίᾳ, for ἐν τῷ χρόνῳ τῆς ἀγνοίας, which occurs at Acts xvii. 30. By this is denoted their state before they were enlightened by the Gospel.

'Here (says Calvin) it is intimated, 1. that we are called to God through the Gospel to the privilege and honour of adoption. 2. That we are adopted on the condition of acquitting ourselves as obedient sons; for though obedience does not make sons, yet it distinguishes sons from aliens.'

15. 'Sequitur enumeratio argumentorum, cur piè atque honestè nobis vivendum sit.' (Pott.)

— ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸν καλέσαντα, &c.] Meaning, 'but, conformably to the example of Him [the Holy One] who hath called you [unto salvation] (see Gal. v. 8) be ye also holy.' This, indeed, was a frequent appellation of God among the Jews, the Holy One. Here, then, we have an argument for personal holiness, on the ground that we are bound, as obedient children, to follow the example of our heavenly Father, who hath called us to the imitation of his own holiness: a truth this which the Apostle then proceeds to confirm from certain words of Scripture, in which, as Calvin observes, we have what was a frequent exhortation of God to his chosen people of old, whom, as surrounded on all sides by the profane heathen nations, from whose pernicious example they were ever in danger of suffering, he thus calls to himself, as though he would say, 'It is with me that you have to do; ye are mine: keep yourselves, then, from the pollutions of the heathen.'

17, 18. Here we have a second argument for holiness in the life, derived from the absolute integrity of the Divine judgment, in which no bare title of profession will excuse us; but the judgment will be impartial, making no distinction between Jew or Gentile (see Acts x. 34), but judging every man's profession and character by his works. See Rom. ii. 7—11. Hence it behoved them to pass the time of their earthly pilgrimage in fear, as well as in hope, 'working out their salvation with fear and trembling,' (Phil. ii. 12) lest they should 'come short of the glory of God.' Considering, too, at what a price they had been redeemed—a price so infinitely precious—they ought indeed to walk worthy of it.

17. εἰ Πατέρα ἐπικαλεῖσθε, &c.] Here εἰ κατὰ τὸ ἑκάστου ἔργον, ἐν φόβῳ τὸν τῆς παροικίας ὑμῶν 18 χρόνον ἀναστράφητε· [r] εἰδότες ὅτι οὐ φθαρτοῖς, ἀργυρίῳ ἢ χρυσίῳ, ἐλυτρώθητε ἐκ τῆς ματαίας ὑμῶν ἀναστροφῆς 19 πατροπαραδότου, [s] ἀλλὰ τιμίῳ αἵματι, ὡς ἀμνοῦ ἀμώμου 20 καὶ ἀσπίλου, Χριστοῦ· [t] προεγνωσμένου μὲν πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, φανερωθέντος δὲ ἐπ' ἐσχάτων τῶν χρόνων δι' ὑμᾶς 21 [u] τοὺς δι' αὐτοῦ πιστεύοντας εἰς Θεὸν, τὸν ἐγείραντα αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν, καὶ δόξαν αὐτῷ δόντα· ὥστε τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν 22 καὶ ἐλπίδα εἶναι εἰς Θεόν. [x] Τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν ἡγνικότες ἐν τῇ ὑπακοῇ τῆς ἀληθείας, διὰ Πνεύματος, εἰς φιλαδελφίαν ἀνυπόκριτον, ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας ἀλλήλους ἀγαπήσατε ἐκ-23 τενῶς· [y] ἀναγεγεννημένοι οὐκ ἐκ σπορᾶς φθαρτῆς, ἀλλὰ ἀφθάρτου, διὰ λόγου ζῶντος Θεοῦ καὶ μένοντος εἰς τὸν r 1 Cor. 6. 20. & 7. 23.

s John 1. 29, 36. Acts 20. 28. 1 Cor. 5. 7. Heb. 9. 12, 14. 1 John 1. 7. Rev. 1. 5. & 5. 9. t Acts 2. 24. Rom. 3. 25. & 16. 25. Eph. 1. 9. & 3. 9. Gal. 4. 4. Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1 9. Tit. 1 2. Heb. 1. 2. Rev. 13. 8. u Acts 2. 33. Phil. 2. 9.
x Acts 15. 9. Rom. 12. 10. Eph. 4. 3. 1 Tim. 1. 5. Heb. 13. 1. infra 2. 17.
y John 1. 13. & 3. 3, 5. James 1. 18. 1 John 3. 9.

stands for διότι, since. Render, 'If [as is the case] ye worship as a father Him who impartially judgeth every one according to his works, namely, by showing no preference to Jew over Gentile.' So suggesting that God is not only their father, but their judge. On the term ἀναστρ. see 2 Cor. i. 12. Eph. ii. 3. With the expression here τὸν τῆς παροικίας ὑμῶν χρόνον may be compared a similar one in Philostr. Vit. Ap. i. 22, χρόνος τῆς ἀποδημίας.

18, 19. Here we have a third argument to holy living, from the merit of that sacrifice offered for us in the precious blood of Christ.

— εἰδότες ὅτι οὐ φθαρτοῖς, &c.] 'knowing [as ye do] and bearing in mind that ye were not by corruptible things [however precious] (as gold and silver) liberated from your vain and foolish manner of life, received from your forefathers.' Ματαίας here signifies vicious, as Tit. iii. 9, with allusion both to idolatry and to the vices which it brought with it. In ἐλυτρώθητε and τιμίῳ αἵματι there is reference (by an allusion to the Paschal lamb) to the work of atonement, effected by the sacrifice of Christ; and in ἀμώμου and ἀσπ. there is an allusion to the perfection required in the legal victims, which typified the great sacrifice of Christ. See John i. 29.

20, 21. προεγνωσμένου μὲν πρὸ, &c.] Meaning, 'of Christ, [I say] who was ordained, or destined, to this work, of liberation and redemption, before the creation of the world, but made his appearance in these latter times for your sakes, who, through him, believe in God, that raised him from the dead, and glorified him; so that your faith and hope rest on (or should rest on) God.' Προεγνωσμένου is equivalent to προώρισε (with which it is conjoined) at Rom. viii. 21. And so the word is used in Thucyd. ii. 64, fin. On the expression πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, see Eph. iii. 9; and on δόξαν, Acts ii. 33. iii. 13. Heb. ii. 9. In the words τὸν ἐγείραντα αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν we have adverted to the evidence by which it is shown that Jesus is the Christ. Finally, in the concluding clause, ὥστε τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν καὶ ἐλπίδα εἶναι εἰς Θεὸν, we have an inference from the foregoing, corresponding to the two parts of the preceding proposition, on constancy in the faith and the performance of good works, supra v. 13.

This whole portion (vv. 20, 21) is, as Aretius remarks, intended to explain what was said, ver. 18, on the preciousness of our redemption, showing that the plan thereof was no new thing, but as ancient as the world, and consequently entitled to the greater regard. And so Calvin. By the words δι' ὑμᾶς τοὺς δι' αὐτοῦ πιστεύοντας it is intimated that the godly alone have an interest in the benefits of this redemption; the terms τοὺς δι' αὐτοῦ πιστεύοντας εἰς Θεὸν serving, as Calvin observes, to express in a brief way the nature of true faith. See John xiv. 6. On this subject Calvin has excellently treated, showing why there can be no true faith in God except through the intervention and mediation of Christ.

22. τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν ἡγνικότες, &c.] To the above exhortation to holiness the Apostle subjoins another to charity: 'Wherefore, having purified your hearts by your obedience, through the Spirit, to the true doctrine [the Gospel], so far as to bear a sincere love to your Christian brethren, see that ye [continue to] love each other with a pure heart, and ardently.' By the truth here spoken of is, of course, to be understood the truth as it is in Jesus, or the Gospel of Christ. So in John xvii. 17 the word of God in Christ is said to be the truth. See Note there. On the expression ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας see Note at 1 Tim. i. 5.

The words διὰ Πνεύματος are in several MSS. not found, but they were probably omitted, as seeming to overload the sense; yet they were, I doubt not, inserted by the Apostle, to inculcate the important doctrine of the influence of the Holy Spirit, both in the promulgation of the Gospel, and in its operation on the hearts of believers unto sanctification.

23. ἀναγεγεννημένοι οὐκ ἐκ, &c.] These words suggest why they are expected to be thus obedient to the word of truth and kindly affectioned one to another, namely, 'because they have undergone a moral regeneration, which may be expected to produce the fruits of righteousness.' Compare infra iii. 9. John i. 10—13. iii. 3, 8, and especially James i. 16—18, which passages supply the best comment on the present.

The expression here, μένοντος εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, may be referred either to Θεοῦ (as it is by Grotius and Elsner, who cite Dan. vi. 26, αὐτός ἐστι Θεὸς ζῶν καὶ μένων) or rather to λόγου, i. e.

z Ps. 103. 15. Ecclus. 14. 18. Isa. 40. 6. 1 Cor. 7. 31. James 1. 10. & 4. 14. 1 John 2. 17. a Ps. 102. 12, 26. Is. 40. 8. Luke 16. 17. a Matt. 18. 3. Rom. 6. 4. 1 Cor. 14. 20. Eph. 4. 22, 25. Col. 3. 8. b Ps. 34. 9.

αἰῶνα. [z] Διότι πᾶσα σὰρξ ὡς χόρτος, καὶ πᾶσα 24 δόξα ἀνθρώπου ὡς ἄνθος χόρτου. ἐξηράνθη ὁ χόρτος, καὶ τὸ ἄνθος αὐτοῦ ἐξέπεσε· [a] τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα 25 Κυρίου μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα. Τοῦτο δέ ἐστι τὸ ῥῆμα τὸ εὐαγγελισθὲν εἰς ὑμᾶς. II. [a] Ἀποθέμενοι οὖν πᾶσαν 1 κακίαν καὶ πάντα δόλον, καὶ ὑποκρίσεις, καὶ φθόνους, καὶ πάσας καταλαλιὰς, ὡς ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον 2 γάλα ἐπιποθήσατε, ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ αὐξηθῆτε [εἰς σωτηρίαν]· [b] εἴπερ 3

the Gospel, which is more agreeable to the propriety of language and more suitable to the context.

24, 25. In confirmation of this position, reference is now made to the words of Is. xl. 6—8, which passage is by the best Commentators regarded as prophetical of the eternal duration of the truths of the Gospel. By this, too, the Apostle intimates that the carnal ordinances of the Law would soon be done away, whereas the Gospel dispensation would continue for ever. In ver. 24 the comparison is similar to that in James iv. 14, and another in James i. 11, where see Note.

25. τὸ δὲ ῥῆμα, &c.] Meaning, 'but the word of the Lord is invariable in its truth, and its power perpetual; its truths, promises, and threatenings, will be accomplished to all eternity.' Τοῦτο δέ ἐστι, &c. Meaning, 'And that eternal truth is the very doctrine which is now preached to you.'

II. Having shown that the faithful are regenerated by the word of God, the Apostle now exhorts those whom he is addressing to lead a life correspondent thereto: for the οὖν at ver. 1 seems to have reference, not, as most Commentators suppose, to what was just said, ver. 25 of the preceding Chapter, respecting the everlasting permanency and invariable certainty of the Gospel, but rather to the whole of what was said in that Chapter on the Christian's privileges: a view, I find, adopted by Mr. Horne, Introd., vol. ii. p. 397, who ably traces the connexion with the preceding context. At the same time it may be true what Steiger says (after Gerhard), that this first verse is less the continuation than the resumption of the preceding exhortation at ver. 22, forming also the link of connexion with what follows. Hence the οὖν is well rendered by Beza and Calvin proinde.

1. ἀποθέμενοι οὖν πᾶσαν κακίαν, &c.] An exhortation, with which may be compared similar ones at Eph. iv. 22—25, and Rom. vi. 4. The whole passage is parallel to that of James i. 21.

— ὡς ἀρτιγέννητα βρέφη, &c.] Meaning (by a figure adapted to that in the term ἀναγεγεννημένοι, supra i. 23) persons regenerated by divine grace, who are well styled new-born, inasmuch as they were newly converted to the Christian faith. The Apostle here, it may be observed, employs a mode of expression frequent with the Jewish Rabbis, who used to call new proselytes to their religion new-born babes.

2. τὸ λογικὸν ἄδολον γάλα.] Meaning the pure and uncorrupt doctrines of the Gospel. The same use of ἄδολος occurs in Æschyl. Agamem. 94, ἀδόλοισι παρηγορίαις, where Bp. Blomfield compares Pind. Ol. vi. 99, ἄδολος σοφία.

— ἵνα ἐν αὐτῷ αὐξηθῆτε] i. e. 'that ye may make a suitable progress in Christian holiness.' See 1 Cor. iii. 2.

After αὐξηθῆτε 42 MSS. (including the three earliest ones) have εἰς σωτηρίαν, which words are found in almost all the ancient Versions, and read by several Greek and Latin Fathers, and have been received into the text by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz; to whose authority I have here deferred. Undoubtedly they convey an important sense, serving to 'show (as Mr. Horne observes, Introd., vol. ii. p. 398,) the reason why the believing Jews were regenerated, and also why they were to desire the unadulterated doctrines of the Gospel, viz. that they might thereby increase, or grow up, unto salvation.' Yet it may be asked, how came words, apparently so important to the sense, to be omitted? Wetstein accounts for their omission on the supposition that they were expunged by those who thought the words would thus seem to signify that infants are excluded from salvation; while Pott supposes them to have been thrown out by those who thought they might favour the erroneous notion that we can be saved solely by the efficacy of Christian doctrine. The latter is the more probable opinion; but where, I would ask, is the proof that the integrity of the sacred text was ever so systematically tampered with from doctrinal reasons and on such slight grounds, at least by the orthodox, as to be safely recurred to as a principle on which to account for the absence of words in MSS.? Until this can be established (which, I apprehend, never can, and which, indeed, would involve dangerous consequences to the certainty of our faith), I shall continue to think it far more probable that the words in question are an insertion from the early Scholiasts, and intended to complete the sense, by showing the great end here to be kept in view. In doing which, the Scholiasts or Expositors judiciously adopted a phrase occurring, in the same import, supra i. 5, and often in St. Paul's Epistles. So Rom. i. 16 we have δύναμις Θεοῦ εἰς σωτηρίαν, and 2 Cor. vii. 10, μετάνοιαν εἰς σωτηρίαν. Upon the whole, it is plain that internal evidence is quite against the words, which, it may be observed, are not found in the Ed. Pr. and those of R. Stephens and Erasmus. Hence I have thought proper to place them in brackets.

3. εἴπερ ἐγεύσασθε — Κύριος.] Render, 'If ye have indeed experienced how gracious the Lord is.' The words seem formed on those at Ps. xxxiv. 9, and, taken in conjunction with ἐπιποθήσατε just before, are meant to suggest, that 'as infants, in experiencing the sweetness and purity of the mother's milk, seek it the more, and love the mother the better, so Christians, 4 ἐγεύσασθε ὅτι χρηστὸς ὁ Κύριος. [c] Πρὸς ὃν προσ- c Ps. 118. 22. Eph. 2. 20.

ερχόμενοι, λίθον ζῶντα, ὑπὸ ἀνθρώπων μὲν ἀποδεδοκι- d Is. 61. 6. & 66. 21.
5 μασμένον, παρὰ δὲ Θεῷ ἐκλεκτὸν, ἔντιμον, [d] καὶ Hos. 14. 2. Mal. 1. 11. αὐτοὶ ὡς λίθοι ζῶντες οἰκοδομεῖσθε, οἶκος πνευματικὸς, Rom. 12. 1. Eph. 2. 21, 22. ἱεράτευμα ἅγιον, ἀνενέγκαι πνευματικὰς θυσίας, εὐπροσδέκ- Phil. 4. 18. Heb. 3. 6.
6 τους τῷ Θεῷ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [e] ‡ Διὸ καὶ περιέχει ἐν τῇ & 12. 28. & 13. 15. Rev. 1. 6. γραφῇ· Ἰδοὺ, τίθημι ἐν Σιὼν λίθον ἀκρογωνιαῖον, & 5. 10. e Isa. 28. 16. ἐκλεκτὸν, ἔντιμον· καὶ ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ μὴ Rom. 9. 33. f Ps. 118. 22. Isa. 8. 14.
7 καταισχυνθῇ. [f] Ὑμῖν οὖν ἡ τιμὴ τοῖς πιστεύουσιν· ἀπει- Matt. 21. 42. Luke 2. 34.
θοῦσι δὲ,—λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν οἱ οἰκοδομοῦντες, Acts 4. 11. Rom. 9. 33.

having experienced the salubrity of the sincere milk of the word, should be similarly affected towards Christ.' On the term γεύεσθαι, in this sense, see Matt. xvi. 28.

4, 5. These verses are closely connected; the former containing a protasis, the latter an apodosis; the purpose of the Apostle being here to exhort Christians not only to receive, but to observe and act upon the precepts of the Gospel. In fact they contain, as Aretius says, the consequent to the antecedent at ver. 3, as to the sweetness they acknowledged. Whence the inference is, that having experienced this goodness, they should frame their lives suitably thereto. In enforcing this exhortation, the Apostle, as addressing Hebrew Christians, employs images derived from the Temple and its services. In the expression λίθοι ζῶντες there is an allusion to Is. xxviii. 16, where the Prophet predicts the establishment of the Christian Church, under the image of a temple, built by God himself, of which Christ should be the corner-stone. Accordingly the Christian Church is represented as a spiritual building, whose stones are the living members of Christ's body, he himself being the Head, and the fountain of life to them. They are termed living stones of that building, inasmuch as they live by 'the faith of the Son of God;' he being in them. See more in Bp. Beveridge, cited in D'Oyly and Mant.

From the Temple itself the Apostle then proceeds to the service of the Temple, with reference thereto applying to Christians various titles originally applied to the Jews. They are, he shows, 'an holy priesthood' (or, as it is said, ver. 9, 'a royal priesthood') in a higher sense than the Israelites were called 'a kingdom of priests;' (Exod. xix. 6.) for they are appointed to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable unto God by Jesus Christ. See Rev. i. 6.

4. προσερχόμενοι.] The term properly denotes approach generally, but is here used of that species of approach, which consists in any one's resorting to another as a teacher, and becoming his disciple: a sense in which it sometimes occurs in the Classical writers, as Xenoph. Mem. i. 2. 47. Compare Matt. xi. 28.

— ἀποδεδοκιμασμένον] 'disapproved,' or rejected. A term not unfrequently employed of Him whom the Prophet speaks of as 'despised and rejected of men,' even Jesus, whom the Jewish hierarchy refused to acknowledge. There is here an allusion to the words of Ps. cxviii. 22, where Christ is prophesied of as 'the stone which the builders rejected.'

— ἐκλεκτὸν] 'select, excellent.' So in the Book of Enoch, Fabricii Cod. Pseud. V. Vet. i. 184, we have, λίθος ἐκλεκτός.

6—10. The Apostle confirms what he has said of Christ, in relation to believers, who acquire all their glory through building upon him, and in relation to those who reject him, out of the Old Testament, and in such a manner, that he strengthens the first by repeating it in a short but apposite citation (v. 6), but the other he represents at large, in words derived from other portions of Scripture, contrasting it with the relation of believers to Christ (v. 7, 8), through which the transition is effected to the representation, set forth in the next section, of the calling of Christians in their relation to unbelievers, which transition itself contains the beginning, the principle of this representation, ver. 9, 10. (Steiger.)

6. περιέχει.] Impersonal for περιέχεται; as in Joseph. Ant. xi. 4. 7, καθὼς ἐν αὐτῇ (scil. ἐπιστολῇ) περιέχει. See Note on Rom. ix. 33. The words here cited do not exactly correspond with the words either of the Hebrew or the Sept.; but they represent the sense, though in a somewhat compressed yet clearer form; especially in that sublimer and mystical acceptation, which was doubtless intended by the Prophet in conjunction with the primary one.

— ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ] 'whosoever confideth on it,' or him; the latter springing from the former. See Steiger. Ἐπ' αὐτῷ is added in order to complete the sense, and suit the application. Οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ, i. e. 'shall not be disappointed of his hope.' See Note on John viii. 51.

7. ὑμῖν οὖν ἡ τιμὴ τοῖς πιστ.] Render: 'Unto you, therefore, who [thus firmly] believe, belongs the preciousness [which I speak of].' By most Commentators, indeed, τιμὴ is taken as standing for ἔντιμος; a mode of exposition which might be tolerated as regards the usus loquendi; for so in Plutarch, de Is. & Osir. § 5, we have, οὐδὲν οὕτω τιμὴ Αἰγυπτίοις ὡς ὁ Νεῖλος. Yet the sense there arising is not so apposite as that yielded by the former.

— ἀπειθοῦσι.] Meaning, 'the unbelieving, and [consequently] disobedient.' In this sense the term occurs also in John iii. 36. Acts xiv. 2, and elsewhere. We have here a blending of two ideas, as in the case of τοῖς ἀπολλυμένοις at 2 Thess. ii. 10—12, where see Note.

— λίθος προσκόμματος.] Meaning, 'a stone at which any one may stumble.' Just as a corner-stone, though placed to sustain the walls of a οὗτος ἐγενήθη εἰς κεφαλὴν γωνίας,—καὶ λίθος προσκόμματος καὶ πέτρα σκανδάλου· ([g] οἳ προσ- 8 κόπτουσι, τῷ λόγῳ ἀπειθοῦντες, εἰς ὃ καὶ ἐτέθησαν.) [h] ὑμεῖς 9 δὲ γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, ἔθνος ἅγιον, λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν, ὅπως τὰς ἀρετὰς ἐξαγγείλητε τοῦ ἐκ σκότους ὑμᾶς καλέσαντος εἰς τὸ θαυμαστὸν αὐτοῦ φῶς· [i] οἱ ποτὲ οὐ λαὸς, νῦν δὲ λαὸς 10 Θεοῦ· οἱ οὐκ ἠλεημένοι, νῦν δὲ ἐλεηθέντες.

[k] Ἀγαπητοὶ, παρακαλῶ ὡς παροίκους καὶ παρεπιδήμους, 11

g 1 Cor. 1. 23.
h Exod. 19. 5, 6. Deut. 7. 6. & 14. 2. & 26. 18. Eph. 1. 14. & 5. 8. Col. 1. 13. Rev. 1. 6. & 5. 10.
i Hos. 1. 10 & 2. 23. Rom. 9. 25. k 1 Chron. 29. 15. Ps. 39. 12. & 119. 19. Rom. 13. 14. Gal. 5. 16, 24. Heb. 11. 15. James 4. 1. supra 1. 17.

building, yet may be stumbled at by a careless passer by, to his injury. So Steiger, too, I find, explains; observing, (after the ancient Commentators and Horneius) 'that the corner-stone is commonly of a twofold nature; designedly and essentially the foundation-stone of the building, accidentally and unintentionally a stumbling-block for those who incautiously turn round the corner, and drive themselves against it; but here the latter also is given as intentional.'

8. οἳ προσκόπτουσι, τῷ λόγῳ ἀπειθοῦντες.] These words are explanatory of the preceding, and serve to intimate the application. The construction here has, indeed, been disputed; some (as the older Commentators in general) construing τῷ λόγῳ with προσκόμματος; others, as the Pesch. Syr. Translator, and the more recent Commentators, with ἀπειθοῦντες. But it is well observed by Steiger, that the construction is only grammatically, not exegetically, doubtful. And he justly thinks, with Benson, 'that the comparison here of Christ with the stone at which unbelievers stumble, taken in conjunction with the very common form of expression, ἀπειθεῖν τῷ λόγῳ and τῷ εὐαγγελίῳ (as infra iii. 1, and iv. 17.) decide in favour of the latter construction.' According to which he well expresses the sense thus: 'But to the unbelieving,—who, because they believe not the word, stumble upon this stone,' &c.

— εἰς ὅ.] Supply πρόσκομμα. It is ably evinced by Mr. Horne (Introd. vol. ii. p. 397, 398), that, from an examination of the foregoing context, the sense here cannot be, that 'God had ordained them to disobedience (for in that case their obedience would have been impossible, and their disobedience would have been no sin); but that God, the righteous Judge of all the earth, had appointed, or decreed, that destruction and eternal perdition should be the punishment of such disbelieving persons, who wilfully rejected all the evidences that Jesus Christ was the Messiah, the Saviour of the world.' See more in Dr. Hammond and Abp. Secker in D'Oyly & Mant. There is here an allusion to the words of Isaiah, viii. 15; with which compare Matt. xxi. 44. Luke ii. 34. Rom. ix. 32; and see also the Note on Acts xiii. 47.

9, 10. Here are further set forth the high privileges, which are obtained by faith in Christ (see Note supra iii. 4); and that in language originally employed to denote those of God's chosen people of old.

9. ὑμεῖς δὲ γένος ἐκλεκτὸν, &c.] Of these expressions, γένος ἐκλ. is derived from Isa. xliii. 20; βασίλειον ἱεράτευμα, from Exod. xix. 6; ἔθνος ἅγιον, from Deut. vii. 6, and xiv. 2; and λαὸς εἰς περιποίησιν (answering to λαὸς περιούσιος at Tit. ii. 14), from Exod. xix. 5, and Mal. iii. 17. See Note on Acts xx. 28, and on Eph. i. 13, 14.

— ὅπως τὰς ἀρετὰς, &c.] Meaning, 'that ye should show forth [by words and deeds] the excellences, or perfections, of Him who hath called [and drawn] you from the darkness [of ignorance, sin, and misery] to his marvellous light,' namely, 'the true light,' 1 John ii. 8; 'the light of the Lord,' Isa. ii. 5. Ἐξαγγ. literally signifies, 'to tell those without what is done within;' and here, (as Ps. lxxi. 15, and lxxiii. 28,) in a general way, to tell at large. Ἀρετὰς is not well rendered praises: it rather signifies virtues; i. e. virtuous attributes—' whatever calls for praise' (see Phil. iv. 8); meaning especially the Divine goodness; though also the other attributes, of faithfulness and truth. So δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς, 2 Pet. i. 3, and Hab. iii. 3, ἐκάλυψεν οὐρανοὺς ἡ ἀρετὴ αὐτοῦ. In Josephus the term is often used to denote clemency, benevolentia. See Bell. i. 20. 1, and Ant. xvii. 5. 5.

10. οἱ ποτὲ οὐ λαὸς—ἐλεηθέντες.] Predicates for elevating the feeling of gratitude and confidence, derived from Hos. ii. 25. (Steiger.) The full sense intended is, 'who were not a people of God, but now are so; who were not [formerly] in favour with God, but now have become such,' being received into the pale of Christ's church. In οὐ λαὸς the words are to be conjoined, so as to form a sort of anomalous compound, as ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, at Rom. x. 19. And so the Hebrew לא and the Sept. οὐ at Deut. xxxii. 21, and sometimes in the Classical writers; as Thucyd. i. 137, ἡ οὐ διάλυσις, where see my Note.

11, 12. Here we have an impressive exhortation to walk worthy of so precious a Gospel, by abstaining from those fleshly lusts which 'drown men in perdition,' 1 Tim. vi. 9. See Rom. vi. 12. James iv. 1.

The nature of the argument here will be best understood by supposing (with Grotius, Rosenmuller, and Pott) that the Apostle is reminding them of their situation as πάροικοι and παρεπίδημοι in a foreign country, strangers and pilgrims in this world, as compared with the next. After which, in the following verse, he takes occasion, from their situation as Christian strangers in Heathen countries, to press on them the duty of adorning the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things.

ἀπέχεσθαι τῶν σαρκικῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν, αἵτινες στρατεύονται 12 κατὰ τῆς ψυχῆς· [l] τὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν l Rom. 12. 17. ἔχοντες καλὴν, ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καταλαλοῦσιν ὑμῶν ὡς κακοποιῶν, 2 Cor. 8. 21. Phil. 2. 15.
ἐκ τῶν καλῶν ἔργων, ἐποπτεύσαντες, δοξάσωσι τὸν Θεὸν Tit. 2. 8. infra 3. 16. Matt. 5. 16.
13 ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς. [m] Ὑποτάγητε οὖν πάσῃ ἀνθρωπίνῃ Luke 1. 68. & 19. 44.
14 κτίσει διὰ τὸν Κύριον· εἴτε βασιλεῖ, ὡς ὑπερέχοντι· [n] εἴτε m Rom. 13. 1. Titus 3. 1. ἡγεμόσιν, ὡς δι' αὐτοῦ πεμπομένοις εἰς ἐκδίκησιν [μὲν] n Rom. 13. 3, 4.
15 κακοποιῶν, ἔπαινον δὲ ἀγαθοποιῶν· ([o] ὅτι οὕτως ἐστὶ τὸ o Titus 2. 8. θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἀγαθοποιοῦντας φιμοῦν τὴν τῶν ἀφρόνων p John 8. 22. Rom. 6. 18.
16 ἀνθρώπων ἀγνωσίαν·) [p] ὡς ἐλεύθεροι, καὶ μὴ ὡς ἐπικάλυμμα 1 Cor. 7. 22. Gal. 5. 1, 13. 2 Pet. 2. 19.

11. τῶν σαρκικῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν.] Meaning, as Calvin and Locke explain, not only fleshly lusts, properly so called, but likewise all those carnal affections of the mind to which we are by nature prone, inasmuch as every thought of the flesh (or our unregenerate nature) is 'enmity against God.' See Rom. viii. 7.

12. ἀναστροφὴν] 'conduct.' See Note on Gal. i. 13. Ἐποπτεύσαντες. Supply, not ὑμᾶς, but αὐτὰ, meaning, the 'good works' just spoken of. So, in a similar passage, infra iii. 2, we have ἐποπτεύσαντες τὴν ἁγνὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν. Ἐποπτεύω signifies to inspect closely, and ἐποπτεύσαντες here stands for ἐὰν ἐποπτεύσωσι, meaning, 'upon close inspection and severe scrutiny.'

— ἵνα ἐν ᾧ—τὸν Θεόν.] Meaning, 'that by this means they (namely, the Gentiles) may be led to glorify God, i. e. to give glory and praise to, and conceive highly of that religion of which they before thought and spoke evil.' Compare 1 Cor. xiv. 25, and see Note at Rom. xiii. 11.

— ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς.] This expression has been variously interpreted; some understanding it of the day of Christ's visitation, at the destruction of Jerusalem; others, of the day or time of persecution and affliction, as respected Christians; others, again, of the time of God's visiting the unbelieving with a conviction, through his grace, of the truth of the Gospel. Of which several interpretations the last-mentioned one is, on various accounts, deserving of the preference, being at once agreeable to the context, and supported by the usage of Scripture, in which God is said to visit men, not only in wrath, but in mercy. See Ps. cvi. 4. Ps. viii. 4, compared with Heb. ii. 6, and Luke i. 68. Acts xv. 14. Here, then, the expression is used, because the holy lives of Christian people are the means of impressing unbelievers with a conviction of the truth of that Gospel, which brings forth such fruits.

13, 14. The Apostle now illustrates the general precept of vv. 11, 12, by adverting to the particular duties to be observed by those residing among the Heathens, both by Jewish and Gentile Christians. (Pott.) From the highest standing of Christians he goes straight to their commonest obligations,—from the glorifying of their royal priesthood to their obligation to human authorities. (Steiger.)

13. ὑποτάγητε πάσῃ ἀνθρωπίνῃ, &c.] The sense here of κτίσις, 'political institution,' is rare, and founded on the use of the Hebr. ברא, like that of the Latin creare, as used of appointing magistrates. The term βασιλ. may here have reference to the Roman Emperor, styled by the Greeks βασιλεύς; and the expression following, ἡγεμόσιν δι' αὐτοῦ πεμπομένοις, may be understood of the Roman governors sent out from Rome to rule over the provinces with the power of life and death.

In what St. Peter here says of government, as a human ordinance, and what St. Paul says, Rom. xiii. 1, that 'the powers which be (or rule) are ordained of God,' no real discrepancy exists; for, as Bp. Sanderson observes, 'the substance of the power of every magistrate is the ordinance of God, but the specification of the circumstances thereto belonging,—as in regard of places, persons, titles, continuance, jurisdiction, subordination, and the rest,—is a human ordinance, introduced by custom or positive law.'

15. In this parenthetical portion we have introduced an additional argument for the above, deduced from the Divine will; so suggesting the motive for obedience. On this, however, is engrafted another, from the good effects of a blameless conduct, inasmuch as they may thus stop the mouths of foolish calumniators,—men who know not the religion they revile; for by the term ἀγνωσίαν is especially denoted unjust accusation founded on ignorance.

16. ὡς ἐλεύθεροι—ἐλευθερίαν.] On this text see an admirable Discourse of Bp. Sanderson, (Serm. 7 ad Clerum,) where, after observing that 'there is not any thing in the world more generally desired than liberty, nor scarce any thing more generally abused, he shows that such has been the case, even in respect of that blessed liberty which the eternal Son of God purchased for his Church.' 'Accordingly (continues he) St. Peter and St. Paul, the two chief planters of the Churches, endeavoured to early instruct believers in the true doctrine, and direct them in the right use of their Christian liberty, especially in the cases of scandal and of obedience. St. Paul usually treats of the former; St. Peter (having to deal mostly with stiff-necked and insubordinate Jews), generally the latter, and no where more fully than in this Chapter.' The learned Prelate then proceeds to show that the words of the text are to be understood as an anticipation of an objection which might be made by some new converts of the Jews; q. d. 'We have been taught that the Son of God hath made us free, and then we are free indeed, and so not bound to subject ourselves to any masters and governors upon earth,—no, not to kings, but much rather bound q Matt. 22. 21. Rom. 12. 10. Eph. 4. 3. Phil. 2. 3. Heb. 13. 1. supra 1. 22. infra 5. 5. 2 Pet. 1. 7.

r Eph. 6. 5. Col. 3. 22. 1 Tim. 6. 1. Titus 2. 9.
s Matt. 5. 10. 2 Cor. 7. 10.
t Infra 3. 14. & 4. 14, 15.
u Matt. 16. 24. John 13. 15. 1 Thess. 3. 3. Phil. 2. 5. infra 3. 17, 18. 1 John 2. 6.

ἔχοντες τῆς κακίας τὴν ἐλευθερίαν, ἀλλ᾽ ὡς δοῦλοι Θεοῦ.
[q] Πάντας τιμήσατε, τὴν ἀδελφότητα * ἀγαπᾶτε· τὸν Θεὸν 17 φοβεῖσθε, τὸν βασιλέα τιμᾶτε.
[r] Οἱ οἰκέται, ὑποτασσόμενοι ἐν παντὶ φόβῳ τοῖς δεσπό- 18 ταις, οὐ μόνον τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς καὶ ἐπιεικέσιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῖς σκολιοῖς. [s] Τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις, εἰ διὰ συνείδησιν Θεοῦ ὑπο- 19 φέρει τὶς λύπας, πάσχων ἀδίκως. [t] Ποῖον γὰρ κλέος, εἰ 20 ἁμαρτάνοντες καὶ κολαφιζόμενοι ὑπομενεῖτε; ἀλλ᾽ εἰ ἀγαθο-ποιοῦντες καὶ πάσχοντες ὑπομενεῖτε, τοῦτο χάρις παρὰ Θεῷ.
[u] Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ ἐκλήθητε, ὅτι καὶ Χριστὸς ἔπαθεν ὑπὲρ 21

not to do it, that so we may preserve that freedom which Christ hath purchased for us, and reserve ourselves the more entirely for God's service, by refusing to be the servants of men. To this objection the Apostle fully replies. He tells them, that being indeed set at liberty by Christ, they are not therefore any more to enthral themselves to any living soul or other creature; not to submit to any ordinance of man as slaves; that is, as if the ordinance itself did, by any proper direct and immediate virtue, bind the conscience. But yet, notwithstanding, they might and ought to submit thereunto as the Lord's freemen, and in a free manner; i. e. by a voluntary and unenforced subjection to their power, and obedience to their lawful commands. They must, therefore, take heed that they use not their liberty for an occasion to the flesh,—nor, under so fair a title, palliate an evil licentiousness, making that a cloak for their irreverent and undutiful carriage towards their superiors.' Thus, then, the general sense here intended is (as Bp. Sanderson well expresses it), 'Submit yourselves to public governors, both supreme and subordinate; be subject to your own particular masters; honour all men with those proper respects due to their stations; but do all this [not as slaves, but] as free; do it without any impeachment of the liberty you have in Christ.' The term κακία here is, as Bp. Sanderson shows, to be taken in an extended sense, of sin and iniquity in general, yet with especial reference to that particular kind of it before spoken of, insubordination and disobedience to lawfully constituted authority. Accordingly the injunction of St. Peter here is akin to that of St. Paul at Gal. v. 13, μὴ τὴν ἐλευθερίαν εἰς ἀφορμὴν τῇ σαρκὶ, where the expression σάρξ has reference to carnality of every kind.

17. Here the Apostle closes his general exhortation concerning subjection to superiors with four short precepts or aphorisms, which may not unfitly be ranged into two combinations. The two former into one, thus: Honour all men, but not all men alike. You must be ready to do all offices of respect and love, as occasion serves, to every man; but you are to remark that your brethren in Christ claim a nearer interest in your affections, and charity too, than they that are without. Honour all men, but especially love the brotherhood. The two latter may be ranged into one thus: Fear God and the king, where the fear of one will consist with the fear of the other; but where they are incompatible, hold fast to the fear of God. Yet even in this case, where you may not fear the king, still you must do him all the honour otherwise that may be. (Bp. Sanderson.)

— πάντας τιμήσατε.] 'Honour all,' viz. to whom honour is due. See Rom. xiii. 7: a general injunction then explained by its species. Bp. Sanderson here shows that 'the term cannot be taken in the full sense, but is rather to be understood in that laxer one, by which it imports all that esteem or regard, be it more or less, which (either in justice or charity) is due to any man in respect of his place, person, or condition, according to the eminence, merit, or exigency of any of them respectively, together with the willing performance of all such just and charitable offices, as in proportion to any of the said respects can reasonably be expected.'

— τὴν ἀδελφότητα.] Meaning the Christian fraternity, 'them who are of the household of faith,' Gal. vi. 10.

— φοβεῖσθε.] A term which in Scripture includes the kindred ideas of reverence (involving that of worship) and obedience.

18. σκολιοῖς.] The term has here a sensus prægnans, for perverse and wicked.

19. τοῦτο γὰρ χάρις.] Supply ἐστι. Meaning, 'This obtains acceptance with, is well-pleasing [to God];' παρὰ Θεῷ being here understood from Θεοῦ following, and παρὰ Θεῷ at ver. 20. So Luke vi. 32, we have ποία ὑμῖν χάρις ἐστί; where see Note. Διὰ συνείδησιν Θεοῦ. Meaning, 'from a consciousness of his duty to God,' and from religious motives. So in a similar passage of St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 5 (here, doubtless, had in mind by the Apostle) it is said, ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν. Finally, λύπας stands for τὰ λυπηρὰ, grievances, as Gen. iii. 16.

21—23. The Apostle now suggests a powerful motive for showing this obedience to the will of God, holding out, for their imitation, the bright example of Him who, in his sufferings for us, endured more cruel contumelies and far greater sorrows, with unshaken constancy. See Matt. xxvi. 67.

The scope and bearings of the argument in this whole portion, vv. 21—25, are well marked out by Steiger, thus: 'We have here expressed in pregnant language, and in close succession, the double thought: 1. Ye are bound to obey Christ, because (ὅτι) he has suffered for you; 2. ye are consequently called to patient, though undeserved, ἡμῶν, ὑμῖν ὑπολιμπάνων ὑπογραμμὸν, ἵνα ἐπακολουθήσητε 22 τοῖς ἴχνεσιν αὐτοῦ· [v] ὃς ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἐποίησεν, οὐδὲ v Isa. 53. 9. 2 Cor. 5. 21.

23 εὑρέθη δόλος ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτοῦ· [x] ὃς λοιδορούμε- 1 John 3. 5. x Matt. 27. 39.
νος οὐκ ἀντελοιδόρει, πάσχων οὐκ ἠπείλει· παρεδίδου δὲ τῷ John 8. 48, 49.
24 κρίνοντι δικαίως· [y] ὃς τὰς ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν αὐτὸς ἀνήνεγκεν y Isa. 53. 4, 5.
ἐν τῷ σώματι αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὸ ξύλον, ἵνα ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ἀπο- Matt. 8. 17. Rom. 6. 2, γενόμενοι, τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ ζήσωμεν· οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ 11. & 7. 6.
25 ἰάθητε. [z] Ἦτε γὰρ ὡς πρόβατα πλανώμενα· ἀλλ' z Isa. 53. 6. Ezek. 34. 6, 23.
ἐπεστράφητε νῦν ἐπὶ τὸν ποιμένα καὶ ἐπίσκοπον τῶν ψυχῶν & 37. 24. Luke 15. 4. John 10. 11.
ὑμῶν. Heb. 13. 20. a Gen. 3. 16.
1 III. [a] ὉΜΟΙΩΣ, αἱ γυναῖκες, ὑποτασσόμεναι τοῖς ἰδίοις 1 Cor. 7. 16. & 14. 34.
ἀνδράσιν, ἵνα καὶ εἴ τινες ἀπειθοῦσι τῷ λόγῳ, διὰ τῆς τῶν Eph. 5. 22. Col. 3. 18. Tit. 2. 5.

suffering, because also (καὶ) Christ, while he suffered for you, suffered undeservingly, and indeed (partic.) with the design that ye should therein imitate him as your pattern. By the first Christ is represented as our master, whose call we must obey; by the second, as our pattern, in suffering; from which it is clear, that we also must suffer patiently. These two positions are presently illustrated in an inverted order, yet so that each is distributed into two clauses, and in such a way that the two first begin with ὃς, as also the third; but the fourth, as being dependent upon the third, with ἵνα. Ver. 22 designates Christ as innocent; ver. 23, as suffering patiently,—as a Pattern; ver. 24, as a SACRIFICE for all; and ver. 24 with 25, as a PHYSICIAN AND SHEPHERD, especially for those believing servants;—as a REDEEMER.'

21. ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν.] Here, instead of the common reading ὑμῶν, ἡμῶν, found in the Editio Princeps, has been adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Vater, Tittman, and Scholz; and with good reason; this reading, in the slight harshness it involves, having a greater appearance of being genuine. Indeed, in the reading here, ὑμῶν, and just after ἡμῖν, for ὑμῖν, we may trace the attempts of the early Critics to remove the harshness arising from extreme brevity. Expressed at full length the passage would run thus: 'For even hereunto (viz. unto suffering) ye are called, for Christ also suffered for you, nay, for us all, thereby leaving,' &c.

— ἐπακολουθήσητε τοῖς ἴχνεσιν αὐτοῦ.] Answering to the expression, Rom. iv. 12, στοιχεῖν τοῖς ἴχνεσι, and 2 Cor. xii. 18, περιπατεῖν τοῖς ἴχνεσι: forms of speaking, to signify (by an idiom found alike in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin), 'the following any one's example.' In ὑπογραμμὸν just before we have a pictorial metaphor; the term signifying properly, 'the faintly-chalked line for another to fill up;' and metaphorically, an example.

24. ὃς τὰς ἁμαρτίας—ξύλον.] Alluding to the words of Isaiah liii. 12. Of the term ἀναφέρειν the full sense here is, 'who bare the punishment of our sins;' compare Hebr. ix. 27, 28; which passage and the present emphatically attest the doctrine of the vicarious and atoning nature of Christ's sufferings.

— ἵνα ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις ἀπογενόμενοι, &c.] These words mark the purpose of this vicarious sacrifice, and are meant to intimate the bounden duty of those for whom Christ suffered; namely, that, being freed from the guilt of sin, and having renounced the practice of it, by being dead thereto (see Rom. vi. 2), they should live to the purposes of righteousness.

— οὗ τῷ μώλωπι αὐτοῦ ἰάθητε.] Meaning, 'by whose stripes and wounds your spiritual wounds and diseases are healed.' So Isaiah viii. 3, it is said of Christ, 'He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows;' both which expressions denote the spiritual sicknesses produced by sin. See Isaiah i. 5, and Note at Matt. viii. 17.

25. ἦτε γὰρ—ὑμῶν.] 'The γὰρ is meant to show the ground on which they are said to be healed: 1. because they actually needed healing; 2. but now were brought back to their original state.' (Steiger.) Here we have set forth in a strong point of view the preciousness of the salvation, by contrast with the opposite state of misery and utter destitution, represented by a most expressive and pathetic image.

In the words ἀλλ' ἐπεστράφητε νῦν, &c., we have a blending of the comparison with the thing compared; and the term ἐπίσκοπον is added after ποιμένα by way of explaining in what sense Christ is our shepherd.

III. 1. The Apostle here carries forward the duties of obedience,—from that of subjects to sovereigns, and servants to masters,—to the domestic relations of wives to husbands.

— τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν.] The term ἰδίοις is usually regarded as standing for the pronoun ἑαυτῶν; but it rather seems (with Bengel and Steiger) to be emphatic, as intended to caution wives against any suspicious attentions to other men. 'Thus (observes Steiger) every time that obedience is enjoined upon women towards their husbands, ἰδίοις is used, while the wives of men are designated only by ἑαυτῶν. See 1 Cor. vii. 2.'

— ἀπειθοῦσι τῷ λόγῳ] 'are not believers in the Gospel, have not embraced the Gospel.' Τῆς ἀναστροφῆς, 'the conduct;' meaning such virtuous and prudent behaviour as the Apostle here enjoins. Ἄνευ λόγου, i. e. 'without any formal argument or proof.' Meaning, as Steiger explains, that 'an impression should be made by the conduct, upon those whom the word has not won.' Such fruits of the Gospel supplying a tacit, but γυναικῶν ἀναστροφῆς, ἄνευ λόγου, κερδηθήσωνται, ἐποπτεύ- 2 b Isa. 3. 18. 1 Tim. 2. 9. Titus 2. 3. σαντες τὴν ἐν φόβῳ ἁγνὴν ἀναστροφὴν ὑμῶν. [b] Ὧν ἔστω 3 οὐχ ὁ ἔξωθεν, ἐμπλοκῆς τριχῶν καὶ περιθέσεως χρυσίων ἢ c Ps. 45. 14. Rom. 2. 29. & 7. 22. 2 Cor. 4. 16. ἐνδύσεως ἱματίων κόσμος· [c] ἀλλ' ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς καρδίας 4 ἄνθρωπος, ἐν τῷ ἀφθάρτῳ τοῦ πραέος καὶ ἡσυχίου πνεύματος· ὅ ἐστιν ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ πολυτελές. Οὕτω γάρ ποτε καὶ 5 αἱ ἅγιαι γυναῖκες, αἱ ἐλπίζουσαι ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν, ἐκόσμουν d Gen. 18. 12. ἑαυτὰς, ὑποτασσόμεναι τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν· [d] ὡς Σάῤῥα 6 ὑπήκουσε τῷ Ἀβραὰμ, κύριον αὐτὸν καλοῦσα· ἧς ἐγενήθητε τέκνα, ἀγαθοποιοῦσαι καὶ μὴ φοβούμεναι μηδεμίαν e 1 Cor. 7. 3. & 12. 23. Eph. 5. 25, &c. Col. 3. 19. πτόησιν. [e] Οἱ ἄνδρες ὁμοίως, συνοικοῦντες κατὰ γνῶσιν, 7 ὡς ἀσθενεστέρῳ σκεύει τῷ γυναικείῳ ἀπονέμοντες τιμὴν, ὡς καὶ * συγκληρονόμοι χάριτος ζωῆς, εἰς τὸ μὴ * ἐγκόπτεσθαι τὰς προσευχὰς ὑμῶν.

powerful, proof of its beneficial tendency, and a popular argument for its truth. On κερδ. in this sense, namely, 'to gain over to the Gospel,' to put into the way of salvation, see Note at 1 Cor. ix. 19.

2. ἐν φόβῳ] for σὺν φόβῳ, 'with respectful deportment.' See Eph. v. 33.

3. ὧν ἔστω οὐχ—κόσμος.] An injunction, like a similar one, 1 Tim. ii. 9, sq., to be understood in a comparative sense; the οὐ—ἀλλὰ being for non tam—quam. With the expression περιθέσεως χρυσιῶν may be compared similar ones in Diod. Sic. xii. 21, μηδὲ περιτίθεσθαι χρυσία, and Ælian, Var. Hist. i. 26, κόμη περίθετος.

4—6. The Apostle now enforces his exhortation to the internal adorning, and the conjugal respect before enjoined, by showing that such had ever distinguished holy women in the earliest times. Of these the Apostle mentions in particular Sarah, the wife of Abraham, whom he recommends as an especial example to 'women professing godliness,' with allusion, we may suppose, to the more than feminine strength of mind and firmness of character which distinguished that excellent woman, in common with the other holy women here adverted to,—who were eminent examples at once of fearless trust in God, duteous subjection to their husbands, and that undaunted perseverance in well-doing, from which no trepidation of feminine weakness could turn them aside.

4. ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς κ. ἄνθρ.] i. e. 'let it extend to the mind,' τὸν ἔσω ἄνθρωπον, Rom. vii. 22; internal and mental, being opposed to external ornament; q. d. 'Vestments soon fade and wear out, while the internal ornament is ever-during.'

— ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ πολυτελές.] The word Θεοῦ is emphatic; involving an opposition to the preference too often given to external over internal adorning.

5. αἱ ἐλπίζουσαι ἐπὶ τὸν Θεόν.] A form of expression derived from the Sept., and denoting eminent piety and devotedness to God.

6. κύριον αὐτὸν καλοῦσα.] Thereby (it is meant) acknowledging her subjection; a subjection, however, having nothing in it servile or slavish. So of Abraham it is said by Philo, vol. ii. p. 36. 9, διὰ τὴν τιμὴν, ἣν ἀπένειμε τῇ γαμέτῃ.

— ἀγαθοποιοῦσαι καὶ μὴ φοβούμεναι μηδεμίαν πτόησιν.] Of these words the true sense appears to be that assigned to them by Estius, Erasmus, Carpzov, Calvin, and partly Rosenmuller: 'not being deterred from persevering in their duty, or in their Christian profession, by the timidity natural to their sex.' Similar to φοβούμεναι μηδεμίαν πτόησιν here we have τὸν φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε at ver. 14.

7. Before proceeding to the general precepts at ver. 8 the Apostle subjoins to the above lengthened admonition to the women a word or two to the men, to prevent any abuse on their part of the power committed to them, and to represent the conjugal relation as one not merely of right, but of reciprocal affection. The obligation on the part of the husband to support the wife he does not touch upon; merely adverting to the higher and spiritual duties of the husband to the wife; duties partly general, (consisting in that devoted affection which counts the welfare of another as its own, and therefore not according to any prescribed rule, but its own best knowledge, κατὰ γνῶσιν); and partly special, in the mutual participation of grace, in which the married persons stand in respect to eternity, and in which both parties must seek to have themselves at present confirmed. (Steiger.)

— κατὰ γνῶσιν.] Meaning such a well-informed knowledge of the understanding, as is determined and directed by the religious knowledge implied in the context.

— ὡς ἀσθενεστέρῳ σκεύει τῷ γυναικείῳ.] Many explain the term σκεύει to signify tool, utensil, as answering to the expression ὄργανον, employed by Aristotle to designate the wife. This, however, appears any thing but the sense had in view by the Apostle, who, so far from intending thus to depreciate and degrade, here evidently (from what follows) means to elevate the weaker sex. Certain it is, that the above sense is by no means required by the expression itself, σκεῦος; for this word, as it literally signifies any thing made, so it may here very well have the sense creature, in reference to God the Creator. And so, I find, it was explained by Luther,

8 [f] Τὸ δὲ τέλος, πάντες ὁμόφρονες, συμπαθεῖς, φιλάδελφοι, 9 εὔσπλαγχνοι, ‡ φιλόφρονες· [g] μὴ ἀποδιδόντες κακὸν ἀντὶ κακοῦ, ἢ λοιδορίαν ἀντὶ λοιδορίας· τοὐναντίον δὲ εὐλογοῦντες, εἰδότες ὅτι εἰς τοῦτο ἐκλήθητε, ἵνα εὐλογίαν κληρο-10 νομήσητε. [h] Ὁ γὰρ θέλων ζωὴν ἀγαπᾷν, καὶ ἰδεῖν ἡμέρας ἀγαθὰς, παυσάτω τὴν γλῶσσαν αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ κακοῦ, καὶ χείλη αὐτοῦ τοῦ μὴ λαλῆσαι δόλον.
11 [i] Ἐκκλινάτω ἀπὸ κακοῦ, καὶ ποιησάτω ἀγαθόν· 12 ζητησάτω εἰρήνην καὶ διωξάτω αὐτήν. [k] Ὅτι οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ Κυρίου ἐπὶ δικαίους, καὶ ὦτα αὐτοῦ εἰς δέησιν αὐτῶν· πρόσωπον δὲ Κυρίου ἐπὶ ποιοῦντας f Rom. 12. 16. & 15. 5. 1 Cor. 1. 10. Phil. 2. 2. & 3. 16. g Lev. 19. 18. Prov. 17. 13. & 20. 22. & 24. 29. Matt. 5. 39. & 25. 34. Rom. 12. 17. 1 Cor. 6. 7. 1 Thess. 5. 15. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

h Ps. 34. 13, &c. James 1. 26.
i Ps. 37. 27. Isa. 1. 16. 3 John 11. k Ps. 33. 18. Job 36. 7. John 9. 31.

who interprets the term frame-work; as Wahl, after him, fabric.

— ἀπονέμοντες τιμήν.] From the context it plainly appears that τιμὴ is here meant to denote that kind of respect, attention, and care, which is shown for valuable, but fragile, articles. So a Rabbinical writer, cited by Schoettgen, says, 'Sicut honor quidam habetur crystallinis, quia solicitè tractantur.' And similarly Eurip. Troad. 735, we have ὦ φίλτατ', ὦ περισσὰ τιμηθεὶς τέκνον, and Orest. 449, παῖδ' ἀγκαλαῖσι περιφέρων, τιμῶν τε.

In the words following it is suggested why they are entitled to be thus treated,—namely, as being fellow-heirs with their husbands of the same salvation. To which is then subjoined a further reason, in the words εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐγκόπτεσθαι τὰς προσευχὰς ὑμῶν, i. e. to prevent that greatest evil arising from want of domestic harmony, that the minds of the parties cannot unite in prayer, and are, indeed, indisposed for that fervent supplication, which can alone ascend to the throne of grace. For, as it is well observed by a Scholiast in Matthæi, p. 199, 'domestic tumult is a hindrance to the performance of works towards God,' meaning devotional exercises of every kind. And certainly social prayer (as Calvin and Benson remark) suffers more than any thing else from the interruption of unity and love; nay, is thereby deprived of the blessing annexed, by a gracious promise, to its right performance, Matt. xviii. 19.

Here, instead of the received readings, συγκληρονόμοις and ἐκκόπτεσθαι, the readings συγκληρονόμοι and ἐγκόπτεσθαι, adopted by all the Critical Editors from Wetst. to Scholz, have very weighty external authority and internal evidence in their favour. As to the latter, indeed, no doubt exists; such being required by the context. The case as regards συγκληρονόμοι is not so certain; the common reading συγκληρονόμοις yielding a very good sense, nay, perhaps a better one than συγκληρονόμοι. Yet, on that very account, there is the greater probability of its having arisen from correction; and συγκληρονόμοι being the more difficult reading (from its involving the harsher construction) may be supposed to be the true one, especially as external authority is not a little in its favour. Moreover, the sense thence arising is sufficiently good. According to this, then, the meaning will be, 'as also being joint heirs with them (i. e. one with another) of the grace of life.'

Finally, of the expression χάριτος ζωῆς the simple sense appears to be, 'the free gift bestowed by grace solely.' See Eph. ii. 8, and Rom. iv. 16.

8. Here are subjoined some general directions to Christians at large; exhorting them to mutual love and concord, kind treatment of all men, even enemies, as most likely to soften their animosity, and draw down the favour of God.

— τὸ τέλος.] This is best rendered by Erasmus, Grotius, Rosenmuller, and Pott, 'in summâ;' answering to the Classical ἐν κεφαλαίῳ. Ὁμόφρ. is equivalent to τὸ αὐτὸ φρονοῦντες at Rom. xii. 16. xv. 5, and τὸ ἓν φρονοῦντες at Phil. ii. 2. For φιλόφρονες several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have ταπεινόφρ., which was preferred by Calvin and Bengel, and has been introduced into the text by Griesbach, Knapp, Vater, Tittman, and Lachmann. I cannot venture to follow their example; the common reading having decidedly in its favour not only external authority, but also, I apprehend, internal evidence; for, while it is most improbable that φιλόφρονες should have been introduced from the preceding φιλάδελφοι, it is not difficult to imagine that ταπεινόφρ. might, as Matthæi supposes, arise from the Scholiasts or Catenists. Perhaps, however, it may be an ancient alteration of the homily writers; for, as Matthæi observes, φιλοφροσύνη is a word occurring no where else in the New Test.; and, like φιλοξενία at iv. 9, is more of a virtus civilis, and far inferior to the rest here mentioned. On the contrary, ταπεινοφροσύνη is a Christian virtue of the highest rank; and the word elsewhere occurs in the New Test.

9. μὴ ἀποδιδόντες κακὸν, &c.] Compare Rom. xii. 17. There is here, Steiger thinks, a climax: q. d. 'not actively to repay evil with evil, nor even with the mouth to retaliate it; but, on the contrary, to return good for evil.' See Matt. v. 44. The words following suggest a reason why the admonition should be observed; q. d. 'For to this end were ye called in the Gospel, that ye should obtain a blessing [from God],' (meaning, good of every kind;) accordingly, it behoves you to wish and pray for blessings upon others. At ver. 10 the Apostle enlarges on and confirms the foregoing admonition in words derived from Ps. xxxiv. 13, 14.

10. ὁ θέλων ζωὴν ἀγαπᾷν.] Render, 'he who desires to enjoy life and happiness,' i. e. to live happily.

12. ὅτι οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ, &c.] The ὅτι seems to have reference to the admonition at ver. 9, and also the reason for its observance at vv. 10, 11.

κακά. Καὶ τίς ὁ κακώσων ὑμᾶς, ἐὰν τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ μιμηταὶ 13 γένησθε; [l] ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ πάσχοιτε διὰ δικαιοσύνην, μακάριοι· 14
Τὸν δὲ φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, μηδὲ ταραχθῆτε·
[m] Κύριον δὲ τὸν Θεὸν ἁγιάσατε ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν. 15 Ἕτοιμοι δὲ ἀεὶ πρὸς ἀπολογίαν παντὶ τῷ αἰτοῦντι ὑμᾶς λόγον περὶ τῆς ἐν ὑμῖν ἐλπίδος μετὰ πραΰτητος καὶ φόβου· [n] συνείδησιν ἔχοντες ἀγαθὴν, ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καταλαλοῦσιν ὑμῶν ὡς 16 κακοποιῶν, καταισχυνθῶσιν οἱ ἐπηρεάζοντες ὑμῶν τὴν ἀγαθὴν ἐν Χριστῷ ἀναστροφήν. Κρεῖττον γὰρ ἀγαθοποιοῦντας, 17 εἰ θέλει τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, πάσχειν, ἢ κακοποιοῦντας· l Isa. 8. 12, 13. Jer. 1. 8. Matt. 5. 10. & 10. 28. supra 2. 20. & 4. 14. m Ps. 119. 46. Acts 4. 8. Col. 4. 8. 2 Tim. 2. 25. n Titus 2. 8. supra 2. 12, 15, 19.

The same sense will arise, if, with Calvin, we suppose the words intended to suggest a powerful motive of consolation amidst evil of whatever kind,—that we are looked upon by the Lord, who will give us help in due season. In the words οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ, &c. God is represented as ever mindful of the righteous, and in the words following, ὦτα αὐτοῦ, &c. as ever ready to hearken to their petitions. Compare John ix. 31. James v. 16.

13. τίς ὁ κακώσων—γένησθε;] Here we have, as Calvin and Beza remark, a further confirmation of the foregoing sentiment, by an argument deduced from common experience. Hence the assertion is to be taken (like a similar one, Prov. xvi. 7,) with due limitation, as to what is ordinarily the case. From the context, indeed, it is plain that this is not to be understood as an assurance that they shall never be harmed, but only not so harmed as to be utterly destroyed; though 'persecuted, yet not forsaken;' though 'cast down,' yet 'not destroyed,' 2 Cor. iv. 9. This, then, and other passages of Scripture concerning temporal promises, (see 2 Pet. ii. 9) are, as Bp. Sanderson observes, to be understood, not as universally, but as commonly true, and not absolutely, but with this reservation, 'unless the Lord, in his infinite wisdom, sees cause why it should be good for us to have it otherwise.' Certain it is, as Calvin remarks, that 'if there be in our minds this deep-seated persuasion, that God's promised help is sufficient for us, we shall be quite prepared to repel all the fears of unbelief.'

14. ἀλλ', εἰ καὶ πάσχοιτε διὰ δικαιοσύνην, μακάριοι.] An assertion (as Aretius points out) intended to correct the foregoing general assertion, and meant to anticipate the obvious objection, that the righteous are observed frequently to suffer at the hands of the wicked: to which it is replied, 'True, you may suffer; but it will be for righteousness' sake, and then yours is the blessing and reward promised of the Lord.' (See Matt. v. 10.)

The connexion of these words with those which follow, τὸν δὲ φόβον αὐτῶν μὴ φοβηθῆτε, μηδὲ ταραχθῆτε, is well traced by Steiger as follows: 'Happy are ye, I say, if ye suffer persecution; but this must ye do under persecution (otherwise there is no salvation in it); ye must not quail before your persecutors, but must sanctify God (i. e. fear and honour him who is really your Lord, and not man), and that in your inmost hearts;' such a deep-seated persuasion that our help is in God, being (as Calvin observes) 'the best support against the misgivings of timidity or unbelief.'

15. Κύριον τὸν Θεὸν ἁγιάσατε, &c.] Meaning, 'Set up God in your hearts as the object of a holy fear and pious trust.' Well may it be said, in the words of the pious Abp. Leighton, that 'the fear of God drives away all other fears; there is no room for them, where this great fear is; and being greater than all those, yet it disturbs not as they do; yea, it brings as great quiet as they brought trouble.'

— ἕτοιμοι δὲ ἀεὶ πρὸς ἀπολογίαν, &c.] for πρὸς τὸ λόγον διδόναι. See Acts xxii. 1. At τῆς ἐλπίδος supply ἐπὶ τὸν Κύριον, from Κύριον preceding. See supra i. 13. The connexion of these words with the foregoing ones is well pointed out by Bp. Hall in D'Oyly and Mant, and still better by Steiger, who explains, 'But with this inward and exclusive fear of and homage to God, be also ready to give an account to men.' See Col. iv. 5, 6, and compare Rom. x. 10. Matt. x. 32, and the Note of Calvin here.

16. συνείδησιν ἔχοντες ἀγαθὴν, &c.] It is not well, with some, to connect these words closely with the preceding (for thus there will arise a sense not a little forced and jejune); they must rather be taken with those in the former part of ver. 15. So Steiger explains; 'Fear God, but be ready to give an answer to inquirers, and calumniators refute by your conduct.'

— ἵνα ἐν ᾧ καταλαλοῦσιν—ἀναστροφήν.] Render, 'so that, in that whereof they speak against you, as evil doers, they who thus slander your virtuous and Christian conversation may be ashamed,' i. e. put to the shame of being convicted of falsehood. On ἐπηρ. see Note at Matt. v. 44. Here, for καταλαλοῦσιν, Matthæi and Scholz read καταλαλῶσιν.

17, 18. The Apostle here suggests (by anticipation), for the comfort of those suffering under the injuries of the ungodly, certain considerations deduced from the will of God and the example of Christ,—intimating, at the same time, a sort of warning; q. d. 'He who suffers for crimes can expect no recompense; but he who suffers for righteousness' sake, and in God's cause, may confidently look forward to a sure reward.' Meanwhile the consideration that he is suffering for good, and not for evil, will be a great consolation.

In the words following, ὅτι καὶ Χριστὸς ἅπαξ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν, &c. (with which compare those supra ii. 21—24), the argument is: 'If Christ suffered for us, who were then evil, how much more should we be prepared to suffer tribulation

18 [o] ὅτι καὶ Χριστὸς ἅπαξ περὶ ἁμαρτιῶν ἔπαθε, δίκαιος ὑπὲρ ἀδίκων, ἵνα ἡμᾶς προσαγάγῃ τῷ Θεῷ· θανατωθεὶς μὲν σαρκὶ, 19 ζωοποιηθεὶς δὲ [τῷ] πνεύματι· [p] ἐν ᾧ καὶ τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ o Rom. 1. 4. & 5. 6. 2 Cor. 13. 4. Heb. 9. 15, 28. p Eph. 2. 17. infra 4. 6.

for the glory of Christ and the edification of his Church!'

This whole portion, vv. 18—22, and that infra iv. 1—7, Steiger regards as corresponding in character and connexion to vv. 21, seqq. of the preceding Chapter. 'Here we have likewise (continues he) a ground for patient continuance in well-doing and suffering, derived from the blameless patient sufferings of the Redeemer, not only in so far as these were a pattern, but also as being the ground of our salvation.' He further observes, that as ὅτι at ver. 18 intimates Christ's suffering to be an objective ground of obligation, so the καὶ following it intimates its similarity to the suffering which is required of us.

Here, for the common reading θέλει, θέλοι is adopted, on the highest authority, by all the most eminent Editors from Wetstein to Scholz.

18. προσαγάγῃ] i. e. 'bring us unto a state of reconciliation.' See supra ii. 21, and Rom. v. 2.

— θανατωθεὶς μὲν σαρκὶ—πνεύματι.] The two terms σαρκὶ and πνεύματι are antithetically opposed; the former denoting Christ's human nature, wherein he suffered in the body; the latter, his divine and spiritual nature. By this it is intimated, that as Christ suffered in the body, but was quickened and glorified in the Spirit, so it will be with 'them who are Christ's.'

19. ἐν ᾧ καὶ τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι, &c.] This passage, as it is not a little obscure, so it has been variously interpreted. Many (as Beza, Elsner, and Macknight,) take the meaning to be, not that 'the spirits were in prison at the time when Christ preached to them through Noah,' but that he preached by his Spirit, or divine nature, to the antediluvians, who are now (viz. in the age of the Apostle) in prison, detained, like the fallen angels, unto the day of judgment, Jude 6. Thus the Apostle, they think, proposes this example to his Christian brethren as a wholesome warning to deter them from being corrupted by those around them. This exposition, however, like several others proposed, lies open to various objections. Upon the whole, I know of no interpretation involving so little difficulty as the common one, by which this is understood to denote (according to the plain tenour of the words) that Christ went down and preached (i. e. proclaimed his Gospel) to the antediluvians in Hades; and it is shown by Bp. Horsley (in an able Sermon on this text), that this plain and obvious sense is not to be rejected because it contains what may seem strange and unaccountable; otherwise scarcely any thing might be believed. 'The interpretation of this whole passage (says the learned Prelate) turns upon the expression "spirits in prison." Now it is hardly necessary to mention that spirits here can signify no other spirits than the souls of men; for we read not of any preaching of Christ to any other race of beings than mankind. The Apostle's assertion, therefore, is this, that Christ went and preached to souls of men in prison. The invisible mansion of departed spirits, though certainly not a place of penal confinement to the good, is nevertheless in some respects a prison. It is a place of seclusion from the external world, a place of unfinished happiness, consisting in rest, security, and hope, more than enjoyment. It is a place which the souls of men never would have entered, had not sin introduced death, and from which there is no exit by any natural means for those who have once entered. The deliverance of the saints from it is to be effected by our Lord's power. As a place of confinement, therefore, though not of punishment, it may well be called a prison. The original word, however, in this text imports not of necessity so much as this, but merely a place of safe keeping; for so this passage might be rendered with great exactness: He went and preached to the spirits in safe keeping. And the invisible mansion of departed spirits is to the righteous a place of safe keeping, where they are preserved under the shadow of God's right hand, as their condition sometimes is described in Scripture, till the season shall arrive for their advancement to future glory; as the souls of the wicked, on the other hand, are reserved, in the other division of the same place, unto the judgment of the great day. Now if Christ went and preached to souls of men thus in prison, or in safe keeping, surely he went to the prison of those souls, or to the place of their custody; and what place that should be but the hell of the Apostles' Creed, to which our Lord descended, I have not met with the Critic that could explain. The souls in custody, or in prison, to whom our Saviour went in his disembodied soul, and preached, were those which formerly were disobedient. The expression formerly were, or one while had been, disobedient, implies that they were recovered, however, from that disobedience, and, before their death, had been brought to repentance and faith in the Redeemer to come. To such souls he went and preached. But what did he preach to departed souls? and what could be the end of his preaching? Certainly he preached neither repentance nor faith; for the preaching of either comes too late to the departed soul. These souls had believed and repented, or they had not been in that part of the nether regions which the soul of the Redeemer visited; nor was the end of his preaching any liberation of them from we know not what purgatorial pains, of which the Scriptures give not the slightest information. But if he went to proclaim to them the glad tidings, that he had actually offered the sacrifice of their redemption, and was about to appear before the Father as their Intercessor, in the merit of his own blood, this was a preaching fit to be addressed to departed souls, and would give new animation and assurance to their hope of the consummation in due season of their bliss; and this, it may be presumed, was the end of his preaching.' Such also is the view of the passage adopted by Bp. Pearson (on the Creed), who remarks, that 'though this preaching was not effected by an immediate act of the Son of God, as if he personally had appeared on earth, and actually preached to that old world, but by the ministry of a Prophet, by the sending of Noah, q Gen. 6. 3, 5, 14. & 7. 7. & 8. 18. Matt. 24. 38. Luke 17. 26. Rom. 2. 4. 2 Pet. 2. 5. r Eph. 5. 26. supra 1. 3. s Ps. 110. 1. Rom. 8. 34, 38. Eph. 1. 20. Col. 3. 1. a Rom. 6. 2, 7. b Rom. 14. 7. 2 Cor. 5. 15. Eph. 4. 24. Gal. 2. 20. 1 Thess. 5. 10. Heb. 9. 14. c Ezek. 44. 6. & 45. 9. Acts 17. 30. Eph. 4. 17.

πνεύμασι πορευθεὶς ἐκήρυξεν, [q] ἀπειθήσασι ποτὲ, ὅτε * ἀπεξε- 20 δέχετο ἡ τοῦ Θεοῦ μακροθυμία, ἐν ἡμέραις Νῶε, κατα-σκευαζομένης κιβωτοῦ, εἰς ἣν ὀλίγαι (τουτέστιν ὀκτὼ) ψυχαὶ διεσώθησαν δι' ὕδατος· [r] ᾧ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἀντίτυπον νῦν σώζει 21 βάπτισμα, (οὐ σαρκὸς ἀπόθεσις ῥύπου, ἀλλὰ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα εἰς Θεὸν,) δι' ἀναστάσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [s] ὅς ἐστιν ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, πορευθεὶς εἰς οὐρανὸν, ὑπο- 22 ταγέντων αὐτῷ ἀγγέλων καὶ ἐξουσιῶν καὶ δυνάμεων.
IV. [a] Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν σαρκὶ, καὶ 1 ὑμεῖς τὴν αὐτὴν ἔννοιαν ὁπλίσασθε, (ὅτι ὁ παθὼν ἐν σαρκὶ πέπαυται ἁμαρτίας,) [b] εἰς τὸ μηκέτι ἀνθρώπων ἐπιθυμίαις, 2 ἀλλὰ θελήματι Θεοῦ τὸν ἐπίλοιπον ἐν σαρκὶ βιῶσαι χρόνον. [c] Ἀρκετὸς γὰρ ἡμῖν ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος τοῦ βίου 3

"a preacher of righteousness;" yet to do any thing by another not able to perform it without him, as much demonstrates the existence of the principal cause as if he did it of himself without any intervening instrument.'

For the common reading ἅπαξ ἐξεδέχετο almost all the MSS. and early Editions, except the Erasmian and Stephanic ones, have ἀπεξεδέχετο, which is preferred by almost all the Critics, and has been edited by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz: and on just grounds; for not only is external evidence decidedly in favour of that reading, but internal; since, considering the rarity of the word ἀπεκδέχομαι, it is likely that the scribes should fall into error, and mistake ἀπεξ. for ἅπαξ.; and then those who revised the MSS. would perceive that ἐδ-χετο was not right, and would, by reference to other MSS., alter it to ἐξεδέχετο, omitting to cancel the ἅπαξ. The force of ἀπο in this compound may be illustrated from the expression ἀποκαραδοκία at Rom. viii. 19. Phil. i. 20. The term denotes 'long and anxiously waited,' namely, during the 120 years given the persons in question to repent on hearing the preaching of Noah. So it is said, Is. xxx. 18, 'for the Lord will wait to be gracious.'

20. εἰς ἣν ὀλίγαι—δι' ὕδατος.] Render, 'into which a few (namely eight) persons embarked, and were saved through (i. e. out of) the water;' δι' ὕδατος here being a mode of expression similar to διὰ πυρὸς at 1 Cor. iii. 15.

21. ᾧ καὶ ἡμᾶς ἀντίτυπον—εἰς Θεόν.] Meaning, 'The antitype to which thing (namely, what corresponds to, and was figured by the preservation of Noah and his family in the ark) doth now save us, through the resurrection of Christ, as the ark did them; [I mean] baptism, which is not merely the putting away the filth of the flesh [by material water], but the answer of a good conscience towards God.' Of the term σώζει the full meaning is well expressed by Mr. Wesley, who explains, 'through the water of baptism we are saved from the sin which overwhelms the world as a flood; not, indeed, the bare outward sign, but the inward grace: a divine consciousness that both our persons and our actions are accepted, through Him who died and rose again for us.' With this expression, συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς ἐπερώτημα, I would compare a similar one in Herodian vi. 3. 9, τῆς ἀγαθῆς συνειδήσεως τὸ θαρσάλεον, 'the confidence arising from a good conscience.'

22. ἐν δεξιᾷ τοῦ Θεοῦ.] See Note at Rom. viii. 34; and on the expressions ἐξουσιῶν καὶ δυνάμεων, see Eph. i. 21.

IV. The Apostle here returns to the subject he had been treating on at iii. 17, and again proposes the example of Christ, whom he enjoins them to imitate in his holiness as well as in his sufferings, notwithstanding the opposition they might encounter; and, for their comfort, he reminds them of a righteous judgment to come, when they should be rewarded, and their enemies punished.

1. Χριστοῦ οὖν παθόντος—ὁπλίσασθε.] Of these words the sense, somewhat disputed, appears to be, 'Since, then, Christ suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves with the same temper of mind which animated him [in his sufferings],' namely, that resigned, self-denying, and meek, but stedfast and resolute, frame of spirit, which results from trust in God, love to him, and zeal for his glory: on which subject see more in Bp. Atterbury, in D'Oyly and Mant; and on the exact import of Christ's sufferings for us in the flesh, see Bp. Pearson, there cited.

2. εἰς τὸ μηκέτι—χρόνον.] In these words we have expressed the result of the spirit just spoken of. Thus, it is intimated, they would no longer live the time that might be allowed them on earth, conformably to the lust of men (i. e. the carnal), but to the will of God; see Rom. xii. 2, and 1 Thess. iv. 4, 5. Moreover, as the term ὁπλίζ. before used naturally suggests the idea of endurance, self-denial, and suffering, so, for their consolation, the Apostle throws in the additional consideration, ὁ παθὼν—ἁμαρτίας, namely, 'he that suffers adversity is [usually or naturally] freed from the dominion of sin,' the temptations of prosperity being withdrawn.

3. Here is adduced a further reason why they should live unto the will of God, by the same argument as that at Eph. ii. 1—3, the remembrance of past iniquity serving, by the feelings of shame they call forth, to preserve future innocence. (Aretius.)

τὸ θέλημα τῶν ἐθνῶν κατεργάσασθαι, πεπορευμένους ἐν ἀσελγείαις, ἐπιθυμίαις, οἰνοφλυγίαις, κώμοις, πότοις, καὶ 4 ἀθεμίτοις εἰδωλολατρείαις· [d] ἐν ᾧ ξενίζονται μὴ συντρεχόντων ὑμῶν εἰς τὴν αὐτὴν τῆς ἀσωτίας ἀνάχυσιν, βλασφη-5 μοῦντες· [e] οἳ ἀποδώσουσι λόγον τῷ ἑτοίμως ἔχοντι κρῖναι 6 ζῶντας καὶ νεκρούς. [f] εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ νεκροῖς εὐηγγελίσθη, ἵνα κριθῶσι μὲν κατὰ ἀνθρώπους σαρκὶ, ζῶσι δὲ κατὰ Θεὸν πνεύματι.
7 [g] Πάντων δὲ τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε· σωφρονήσατε οὖν, καὶ 8 νήψατε εἰς τὰς προσευχάς. [h] Πρὸ πάντων δὲ τὴν εἰς ἑαυτοὺς ἀγάπην ἐκτενῆ ἔχοντες, ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη καλύψει d Is. 8. 18. Acts 13. 45. supra 3. 16. e Acts 10. 42. 1 Cor. 15. 51, 52. f John 5. 25. supra 3. 19.

g Matt. 26. 41. Luke 21. 34, &c. Rom. 13. 12. Phil. 4. 5. Col. 4. 1. infra 5. 8. 2 Pet. 3. 9, 11. 1 John 2. 18.
h Prov. 10. 12. 1 Cor. 13. 7.

— ἀρκετὸς γὰρ ἡμῖν ὁ παρεληλυθὼς, &c.] Meaning, 'Let it suffice for the time past of our life to have practised the things to which the heathens are prone.' So Josephus, Ant. xix. 1. 12, we have, ὁ παρεληλυθὼς χρόνος ὀνειδίζει τὸ ἐπιμέλλον ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τοῖς οὕτω βουλευθεῖσι μετὰ ἀρετῆς. In τὸ θέλημα τῶν ἐθνῶν we have a tacit opposition to θέλημα Θεοῦ at ver. 2. By this is meant that kind of life to which the heathens were attached.

— πεπορευμένους ἐν ἀσελγείαις, &c.] These words (with which compare Rom. xiii. 13) are explanatory of the foregoing. Πεπορευμένους depends upon ἡμᾶς, to be supplied at κατεργάσασθαι just before. The expression may be explained, 'habitually living.' Ἀσελγείαις and the subsequent terms seem meant to exemplify the vices just adverted to. By ἀσελγείαις and ἐπιθυμίαις are denoted fornication, adultery, and other sins of uncleanness; by οἰνοφλυγίαις, κώμοις, and πότοις, intemperance in drinking, and the debauchery and revelling consequent thereupon; see Rom. xiii. 3. Finally, as respects the term εἰδωλολατρείαις, this, considering that the Jews were not guilty of idolatry properly so called, is supposed to have reference only to the Gentile converts; or to be meant to denote vices as bad as idolatry, or rather the practices usually connected with idolatry, and the falling into idolatrous and heathen manners, customs, and opinions, by participation (as we may imagine) in the heathen feasts to the honour of their gods. So in Test. xii. Patr. p. 615, we have enumerated ἀσελγεῖαι, γοητεῖαι, καὶ εἰδωλολατρεῖαι, and in Origen, de Orat., εἰδωλολατρείας, μοιχείας, πορνείας.

4. ἐν ᾧ ξενίζονται, &c.] This may be resolved into ἐν τούτῳ δὲ ξενίζονται, ὅτι, &c., 'they are amazed at this, namely, that,' &c.: a sense of ξενίζεσθαι found only in the later writers, as Polybius, Plutarch, and Josephus; and by Rosenmuller derived from the admiration with which strangers view public buildings, &c. By τῆς ἀσωτίας ἀνάχυσιν is literally meant 'sink of profligacy,' i. e. abominable dissoluteness.

5. οἳ ἀποδώσουσι λόγον, &c.] Meaning, that they shall suffer severe punishment for such profaneness.

— τῷ ἑτοίμως ἔχοντι, &c.] 'to him who is ready [at his own appointed season] to judge the quick and the dead:' a designation of the office of the great Judge.

6. εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ νεκροῖς—πνεύματι.] In the interpretation of these words, not a little obscure, and consequently disputed, it is especially necessary to attend to the context. Now, according to this I see not how we can, with Whitby, Doddridge, and others, assign to the term νεκροῖς the figurative sense 'spiritually dead,' namely, in trespasses and sins; as understood of the Gentiles: though, taking the expression in a physical sense, the perplexing question arises, how the Gospel can be said to be preached to the dead? a thing no where asserted in Scripture, and contradictory to what is there said. To obviate this, some, as Slade, comparing the passage with iii. 19, understand the assertion to be, 'that the Gospel had been proclaimed even to the dead (καὶ νεκροῖς); that they will be judged by the law of nature for the things done in the body, and be rewarded, in proportion to their deserts, by a spiritual life, according to the will and power of God.' Since, however, νεκροῖς must, it would seem, be interpreted as in the preceding verse, it involves the least difficulty to suppose (with Wetstein, Rosenmuller, and Dr. Burton) that it is meant of those who, being Christians, have died for the profession of the faith.

7, 8. From the consideration of the awful event just adverted to, the Apostle proceeds to exhort them to the performance of those duties calculated to prepare them for it, namely, sobriety and constant prayer; to which he then subjoins mutual love, hospitality, and a right use of the gifts of God, of whatever kind.

7. πάντων τὸ τέλος ἤγγικε.] This is usually explained of the end of the Jewish state at the destruction of Jerusalem. But far more satisfactory is the natural and obvious interpretation, by which the expression is understood to denote (as at Phil. iv. 5. James v. 8, 9) the end of the world, and the final consummation of all things. With this, however, the Apostle may have intended to include that individual and personal consummation of all things, which takes place at the hour of death.

— σωφρονήσατε, καὶ νήψατε εἰς τὰς προσευχάς.] Meaning, 'be vigilant for the exercise of prayer, so as to preserve a sober-mindedness of character;' see Eph. vi. 18, and Col. iv. 2. 1 Thess. v. 6. 8. I would here compare Plutarch, adv. Stoic. § 19, νήφων πρὸς ἀρετὴν ὅδε ἐστί.

8. ἐκτενῆ] i. e. as Œcumenius explains, διαρκῆ, ἐπὶ πολὺ διατείνουσαν, 'continual and uninterrupted.' Εἰς ἑαυτοὺς, 'one to another.' 'From the impressive manner in which the Apostle intro-i Rom. 12. 13. Phil 2. 14. Heb. 13. 2. k Prov. 3. 28. Matt. 25. 14. Luke 12. 42. Rom. 12. 6. 1 Cor. 4. 1, 2. & 12. 4. Eph. 4. 11. l Rom. 12. 6—8.

πλῆθος ἁμαρτιῶν· [i] φιλόξενοι εἰς ἀλλήλους, ἄνευ γογ- 9 γυσμῶν. [k] Ἕκαστος καθὼς ἔλαβε χάρισμα, εἰς ἑαυτοὺς αὐτὸ 10 διακονοῦντες, ὡς καλοὶ οἰκονόμοι ποικίλης χάριτος Θεοῦ.
[l] Εἴ τις λαλεῖ, ὡς λόγια Θεοῦ· εἴ τις διακονεῖ, ὡς ἐξ ἰσχύος 11 ἧς χορηγεῖ ὁ Θεός· ἵνα ἐν πᾶσι δοξάζηται ὁ Θεὸς διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ᾧ ἐστιν ἡ δόξα καὶ τὸ κράτος εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. ἀμήν.

duces this exhortation, πρὸ πάντων, "above all things have," &c., it plainly appears (as Bp. Sherlock observes) how highly he esteemed this great virtue of charity; and that it is the perfection of a Christian, the very life and soul of all other duties, which without this are empty performances, and of no value in the sight of God.' Compare 1 Cor. xiii. 4.

— ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη καλύψει πλῆθος ἁμ.] This is by most ancient, and many modern, Commentators understood to mean, that 'our charity to others will induce the mercy of God to pardon our sins, i. e. be the means of procuring the pardon of our sins from him.' Yet thus there arises a sense not a little objectionable, and indeed (even with all the qualifications introduced by Bp. Sherlock, Abp. Secker, and Dr. Doddridge) at variance with the whole Gospel plan of salvation, according to which the only cover for our sins is the blood of Christ, working with repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; see Calvin and Melancthon, and especially Luther, who well remarks: 'No one can cover sin for thee but faith only. My love, however, covers the sins of my neighbour. And just as God with his love covers my sins if I believe, so must I also cover the sins of my neighbour (1 John iv. 19, seq. Eph. iv. 32. Col. iii. 13, and Matt. xviii. 23—33).' Thus, then, the sense appears to be (as the best Expositors in general are now agreed), 'for charity will cover a multitude of offences;' meaning (according to the import of the passage of Prov. x. 12, from which the present is derived) 'this charitable disposition will lead us to throw a cloak over, and forgive, a multitude of offences in others against ourselves. So by a similar mode of expression it is said, in a passage of Plutarch, cited by Weston ap. Bowyer (of Pompey): τὰ πλεῖστα περὶ αὐτὸν ἁμαρτήματα φίλων ἀπέκρυπτε: and at Ps. xxxi. 1, and lxxxiv. 2, we have ἀφιέναι interchanged with καλύπτειν. Indeed, the literal and proper sense of the word is, 'to cover up a thing out of sight, so that it may not be brought forward again for censure or judgment:' a sense very agreeable to the above passage of Proverbs, which may be rendered, 'hatred stirreth up strife, but love covereth all manner of offences.' Thus, then, as Beza observes, mutual love is here commended, because it buries innumerable trespasses, and so is a favourer and preserver of peace; compare Prov. xvii. 9. As to the passage of James v. 20, commonly adduced, I am quite of opinion, with Steiger, that it cannot be compared with this of St. Peter. There we have merely the same expression, καλύψει ἁμαρτίας, but with another reference; see the Note on that passage. The general sense, then, is, as Mr. Scott well expresses it, that 'as the love of God in Christ covereth the multitude of the sins of believers from his sight, so they ought to cast the mantle of love over the number of faults into which their brethren would fall in their conduct towards them, and thus hide them from their eyes, by forbearing and forgiving one another, as Christ had forgiven them.'

9. φιλόξενοι, &c.] See Rom. xii. 13. Hebr. xiii. 2, and Notes.

10, 11. The best Expositors, ancient and modern, are agreed that these verses have reference to the various spiritual gifts (or, as some recent Commentators explain, mental endowments), by which persons were fitted to discharge various offices and duties in the Church, whether as ministers or deacons. And first we have laid down a general duty, which is there considered specially, as applied to gifts of Christian knowledge (as Rom. i. 11, and 1 Cor. i. 7); in adverting to which the Apostle may be supposed to especially have in view Ministers; though certainly also intending to include Christians generally. As they regard the former, the expressions have relation to the distinct duties of preachers of the word, and of deacons. The preacher, it is said, 'is to speak as delivering the oracles of God,' and, consequently, what is the truth of the Gospel, and not mere human notions; see Note on 1 Cor. xiv. 27. The deacon, having various laborious duties incumbent on him (as we may imagine to have been the case), is to discharge them with the full strength supplied by God for this effect.

Such, too, is, I find, the view of the passage adopted by Steiger, who acutely remarks, that 'the command of the Apostle lies in the clause with διακονοῦντες; the manner of this serving is determined in that with καθώς; but the quality of the persons, which as well capacitates and obliges thereto, as it must be proved through the service performed, with ὡς, &c.' 'Thus, then, (continues he) this last clause declares their relation to the grace of God. Christians are householders of this, and must prove themselves to be good householders (1 Cor. iv. 2); but grace is manifold in its nature (ποικίλης); and this peculiarity the Apostle has here principally in view.' What results from this he then proceeds to state: 'The administration is also manifold; every Christian has his peculiar office in the divine household, and not that only, but also the gift to fulfil his office, the χάρισμα, the capacity to administer the grace of God as a good householder, which is itself a gift of grace.' Here, we may observe, the Apostle divides the spiritual activity required (compare Rom. xii. 11) into two leading classes,—speaking and acting. As to the former he says, let him speak the word of God as indeed such (i. e. truly); consequently with conviction, and such a manner of expression as becomes the ἑρμηνεὺς of God; compare 1 Cor. xiii. 3. 2 Cor. ii. 17. Finally, διακονεῖν here 12 [m] Ἀγαπητοὶ, μὴ ξενίζεσθε τῇ ἐν ὑμῖν πυρώσει πρὸς πει- m Is. 48. 10. 1 Cor. 3. 13. supra 1. 7.

13 ρασμον ὑμῖν γινομένῃ, ὡς ξένου ὑμῖν συμβαίνοντος· [n] ἀλλὰ, n 2 Cor. 4. 10. καθὸ κοινωνεῖτε τοῖς τοῦ Χριστοῦ παθήμασι, χαίρετε, ἵνα Phil. 3. 10. Col. 1. 24.
καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀποκαλύψει τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ χαρῆτε ἀγαλλιώ- 2 Tim. 2. 10.
14 μενοι. [o] Εἰ ὀνειδίζεσθε ἐν ὀνόματι Χριστοῦ, μακάριοι! ὅτι o Matt. 5. 10, 11.
τὸ τῆς δόξης καὶ τὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ Πνεῦμα ἐφ᾽ ὑμᾶς ἀναπαύεται· supra 2. 20. & 3. 14.
κατὰ μὲν αὐτοὺς βλασφημεῖται, κατὰ δὲ ὑμᾶς δοξάζεται.
15 [p] Μὴ γάρ τις ὑμῶν πασχέτω ὡς φονεὺς, ἢ κλέπτης, ἢ κακο- p Supra 2. 20.
16 ποιὸς, ἢ ὡς ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοπος· εἰ δὲ ὡς Χριστιανὸς, μὴ simply signifies to discharge an active service; as Acts vi. 1, 2.

In the words following, ἵνα ἐν πᾶσι δοξάζηται ὁ Θεὸς διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χρ., we have intimated (as Steiger observes) the final end of all that has been enjoined. 'And (he adds) the doxology then subjoined follows naturally after the precept to consider all spiritual thoughts and words, as also the power of discharging Christian services, as gifts from God, and to be used for his glory.'

— ᾧ ἐστιν, &c.] The reference in ᾧ has been disputed. Most Commentators, ancient and modern, refer it to God; while others, as Grotius and Hottinger, suppose it to relate to Christ; as at 2 Thess. i. 12. Rev. i. 6. v. 12, and 2 Pet. iii. 18. The connexion may, indeed, seem to favour the former; every thing in the preceding context being ascribed to God. But thus, as Steiger observes, the words διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ will have too formal an air. 'Whereas (continues he) if we refer the doxology to Christ, then the expression in question will receive its proper emphasis, and the whole period conclude most impressively with a new thought; namely, that it is only through the mediation and help of Christ that God can be glorified in us and our actions; hence to him in reality belongs the glory which arises from these, and the power over us and all things throughout all ages.'

12—19. After the above doxology, the Apostle, abandoning the strict order, returns to recapitulate and complete the foregoing exhortations in regard to persecutions. (Steiger.) He exhorts them to patiently endure afflictions in the cause of Christ, from these several arguments: 1. that the heavier the trials are, which we have borne on earth, after the example of Christ, the greater will be our reward in heaven (ver. 13); 2. that afflictions, when suffered for conscience' sake, are no longer to be accounted such, (ver. 14—fin.) since it was not, the Apostle hints, a strange or unusual thing for the people of God to be persecuted; 3. that though they suffered here, as Christ did, they should hereafter be glorified together with him; 4. that, besides the prospect of that future glory, they had, at present, the Spirit of God for their comfort and support; 5. that it was an honour for any one of them to suffer, not as a malefactor, but as a Christian; 6. that though afflictions began with the faithful, yet the weight of the storm would fall on the unbelievers.

12. μὴ ξενίζεσθε—συμβαίν.] Meaning: 'Be not surprised [and therefore troubled] by, or through, the fire for trial (i. e. the severe persecution permitted for your trial) which ye now suffer;' see Note on Luke xii. 49. The words ὡς ξένου—συμβ. are exegetical of ξενίζ. In the expression πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμὸν there is an allusion to the quæstio, or torment by fire. See Note on 1 Cor. iii. 13.

13. ἀλλὰ, καθὸ—ἀγαλλ.] By this participation in the sufferings of Christ it is implied that the cause is the same, that of true religion; compare 2 Cor. i. 7. Phil. iii. 10. 2 Tim. ii. 11. Heb. x. 34.

14. εἰ ὀνειδίζεσθε, &c.] See Note supra iii. 13.

— ὅτι τὸ τῆς δόξης—ἀναπαύεται] 'for the glorious Spirit of God rests on you [for your support and consolation];' see Numb. xi. 25, and James iv. 5. Here, then, we have (as Steiger observes) shown the ground on which Christians are blessed amidst the reproaches they suffer in the cause of Christ,—because the Spirit of God rests upon them, who strengthens and glorifies them the more as he is reviled by unbelievers. See Luther.

— κατὰ μὲν αὐτοὺς βλασφημεῖται, &c.] Meaning, that while he is blasphemed and denied by the ungodly, in them he is glorified; proving himself glorious in his effects, by which he is indeed evinced to be the Spirit of God himself. So Calvin observes, that 'it cannot obstruct the happiness of the righteous, if they should have to endure reproach in the cause of Christ, because they retain before God the entire possession of glory, being an habitation of God through the Spirit (Eph. ii. 22), with whom glory is inseparably conjoined.'

15. μὴ γάρ τις ὑμῶν πασχέτω ὡς φονεὺς, &c.] The connexion is: '[I speak not of suffering in a bad cause;] for let none of you so act as to suffer,' &c.

— ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοπος.] Of this expression (which has been variously explained) the most natural and probable sense is the one commonly assigned, 'a busy-body,' 'one who intermeddles in business which does not belong to him:' a sense illustrated by Steiger from Cyprian, Epist. iv. 6, alienas curas agens. It is not improbable that by this term were denoted those otherwise called λογοποιοὶ, or inventors and circulators of false political reports; and as it can be proved that there were laws enacted against such, so it is not unlikely that there were laws also in force against persons convicted of busily prying into other people's affairs, exaggerating what might be true, and inventing what was false. To this hateful vice of slander, naturally connected with the idea of a busy, intermeddling spirit, St. Paul seems to allude, 1 Tim. v. 13, in the words περίεργοι, λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δέοντα, whence it appears that the two terms περίεργος and ἀλλο-αἰσχυνέσθω, δοξαζέτω δὲ τὸν Θεὸν ἐν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ.

q Isa. 10. 12. Jer. 25. 29. & 49. 12. Luke 23. 31. & 10. 12. [q] ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς τοῦ ἄρξασθαι τὸ κρίμα ἀπὸ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ 17 Θεοῦ. Εἰ δὲ πρῶτον ἀφ᾽ ἡμῶν, τί τὸ τέλος τῶν ἀπειθούνr Prov. 11. 31. των τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ εὐαγγελίῳ; [r] καὶ εἰ ὁ δίκαιος μόλις 18 σώζεται, ὁ ἀσεβὴς καὶ ἁμαρτωλὸς ποῦ φανεῖται; s Ps. 31. 6. Luke 23. 46. [s] Ὥστε καὶ οἱ πάσχοντες κατὰ τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὡς πιστῷ 19 κτιστῇ παρατιθέσθωσαν τὰς ψυχὰς ἑαυτῶν ἐν ἀγαθοποιΐᾳ.

a Luke 24. 48. Rom. 8. 17, 18. V. [a] ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕΡΟΥΣ τοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν παρακαλῶ, ὁ 1 συμπρεσβύτερος καὶ μάρτυς τῶν τοῦ Χριστοῦ παθημάτων, ὁ b Acts 20. 28. 1 Tim. 3. 3. Titus 1. 7. καὶ τῆς μελλούσης ἀποκαλύπτεσθαι δόξης κοινωνός· [b] ποιμά- 2 c 1 Cor. 3. 5. 2 Cor. 1. 24. Phil. 3. 17. 2 Thess. 3. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 12. Titus 2. 7. νατε τὸ ἐν ὑμῖν ποίμνιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐπισκοποῦντες μὴ ἀναγ-καστῶς, ἀλλ᾽ ἑκουσίως· μηδὲ αἰσχροκερδῶς, ἀλλὰ προθύμως· [c] μηδ᾽ ὡς κατακυριεύοντες τῶν κλήρων, ἀλλὰ τύποι γινόμενοι 3 τριοεπίσκοπος are, as nearly as may be, of the same import; the former signifying malè sedulus, 'one frivolously busy, occupying himself with unnecessary matters;' the latter, an intermeddler in other people's affairs. The affinity of the two terms is well illustrated by a passage of Philostr. Epist. Apoll. 59, where it is said, εἰ μὴ περίεργος ἦς, οὐκ ἦς ἐν τοῖς ἀλλοτρίοις πράγμασι δίκαιος, 'you would not have been a judge in other men's business.'

16. Χριστιανός.] See Note on Acts xi. 26. Ἐν τῷ μέρει τούτῳ, 'on this account;' as 2 Cor. iii. 10.

17, 18. Here, as Hottinger and Steiger observe, we have explained at once the reason why, and the grounds on which, the Apostle has given the foregoing exhortations; 'it being meant (as Calvin explains) that this necessity awaits the whole Church of God, that it be not only subject to the common evils of men, but also, in an eminent and peculiar way, be chastened by the hand of God. Therefore must persecutions for Christ be borne so much the more patiently.' We have here an obscure intimation of the fiery trials which were about to come upon that part of the world where the persons whom the Apostle is addressing resided: to which is then subjoined the assurance, that 'though the judgment, or affliction, in question would, according to the manner of God's dealings of old, begin with his faithful servants, it would be far from ending with them;' for such is the import of the words τί τὸ τέλος τῶν ἀπειθούντων; (taken from Ezek. ix. 5, 6.) in which we have a popular mode of expression to imply, that 'the end of those would be utter perdition.'

18. εἰ ὁ δίκαιος μόλις σώζεται, &c.] Here many eminent Commentators, supposing the application to be the same as at ver. 17, explain the term σώζεται of temporal deliverance, i. e. 'is to be saved.' But while the words admit of being applied to the temporal judgments in question, they have reference chiefly to the great day of judgment (see Scott), or at least as regards the preparation for it in our earthly trials: a view, it may be observed, confirmed by the expression μόλις, of which the import is (as Steiger well expresses it), that 'it costs believers much to remain stedfast in their endurance of trials, and to glorify God.' Many a struggle must be sustained, and much trouble gone through, in order to final perseverance.

19. ὥστε καὶ οἱ πάσχοντες, &c.] With these words the Apostle closes his exhortation, recommending those who thus suffer, according to the will of God, to commit their lives and souls unto Him, as unto a faithful and merciful Creator and preserver; and withal to continue stedfast and persevering in well-doing.

V. The Apostle now enters upon a new series of exhortations, as to certain external distinctions in the Church; and as much depended on the conduct of the rulers of the Church in times so critical, he now gives particular injunctions to presbyters (namely, bishops and pastors) and teachers; exhorting the former to feed the flock of Christ committed to their charge; the latter, to obey the admonitions of their Spiritual pastors and masters.

1. ὁ συμπρεσβύτερος.] Here St. Peter, we observe, though one of the chief Apostles, yet modestly styles himself simply a co-presbyter.

— μάρτυς τῶν τοῦ Χριστοῦ παθημάτων.] Meaning, 'an eye-witness of the sufferings and of the resurrection of Christ from the dead.'

— ὁ καὶ τῆς μελλούσης ἀποκαλύπτεσθαι δόξης κοινωνός] 'and who am also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed,' namely, at the resurrection. See Phil. iii. 21.

2. ποιμάνατε τὸ ἐν ὑμῖν ποίμνιον τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Meaning (by a pastoral metaphor frequent in Scripture,—see John x. 10,—and found also in the Classical writers,) that they should nourish with sound doctrine, and carefully superintend the morals of those committed to their charge. Μὴ ἀναγκαστῶς. Alluding, we may suppose, to some who served, indeed, the office without pay, but with no zeal. In the words following, μηδὲ αἰσχροκερδῶς, there is a reference to those who served it rather from the motive of gain, than from any cordial alacrity.

3. The Apostle here adverts to the fault of another class of persons, namely, that of certain presbyters, who, though not deficient in zeal or diligence, yet gave way to a too domineering spirit (comp. 3 John 9, ὁ φιλοπρωτεύων Διοτρ.),

4 τοῦ ποιμνίου· [d] καὶ, φανερωθέντος τοῦ ἀρχιποίμενος, κομι-εῖσθε τὸν ἀμαράντινον τῆς δόξης στέφανον.
5 [e] Ὁμοίως, νεώτεροι ὑποτάγητε πρεσβυτέροις· πάντες δὲ ἀλλήλοις ὑποτασσόμενοι, τὴν ταπεινοφροσύνην ἐγκομβώσασθε· ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ὑπερηφάνοις ἀντιτάσσεται, ταπει-6 νοῖς δὲ δίδωσι χάριν. [f] Ταπεινώθητε οὖν ὑπὸ τὴν κρα-7 ταιὰν χεῖρα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα ὑμᾶς ὑψώσῃ ἐν καιρῷ· [g] πᾶσαν τὴν μέριμναν ὑμῶν ἐπιῤῥίψαντες ἐπ' αὐτὸν, ὅτι αὐτῷ μέλει περὶ ὑμῶν.
8 [h] Νήψατε, γρηγορήσατε, [ὅτι] ὁ ἀντίδικος ὑμῶν, Διάβολος, 9 ὡς λέων ὠρυόμενος περιπατεῖ ζητῶν τίνα ‡ καταπίῃ. [i] ᾧ ἀντίστητε στερεοὶ τῇ πίστει, εἰδότες τὰ αὐτὰ τῶν παθημάτων τῇ ἐν κόσμῳ ὑμῶν ἀδελφότητι ἐπιτελεῖσθαι.
10 [k] Ὁ δὲ Θεὸς πάσης χάριτος, ὁ καλέσας ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν d Isa. 40. 11. Ezek. 34. 22. John 10. 11. 1 Cor. 9. 25. 2 Tim. 4. 8. Heb. 13. 20. James 1. 12. supra 1. 4. & 2. 25. e Prov. 3. 34. Rom. 12. 18, 16. Eph. 5. 21. Phil. 2. 3. James 4. 6.

f Job 22. 29. Prov. 29. 23. Matt. 23. 12. Luke 1. 52. & 14. 11. & 18. 14. James 4. 10. g Ps. 37. 5. & 55. 23. Matt. 6. 25, 26. Luke 12. 22. Phil. 4. 6. 1 Tim. 6. 8. Heb. 13. 5. h Job 1. 7. Luke 21 16. & 22. 31. 1 Thess. 5. 6. supra 1. 13. & 4. 7. i Eph. 4. 27. & 6. 11, 13. James 4. 7.
k 2 Cor. 4. 17. Heb. 10. 37. & 13. 21. supra 1. 6.

or by seeking dominion over the consciences of their people.

— κατακυριεύοντες τῶν κλήρων.] Supply Θεοῦ, which, though not expressed, is here (as at ποιμνίου just after) to be understood. Of the term κλήρων the sense has been variously explained. By some it is understood to denote the possessions of the Church: a view sufficiently supported by the signification of the word, but, as regards the thing itself, little borne out by probability; and from the very expression κατακυριεύοντες κλ. being one such as rather suggests the idea of persons, we may suppose the meaning to be (as the best Commentators are agreed) Christian churches or congregations, here called κλῆροι (scil. Θεοῦ) in allusion to the division of Canaan by κλῆροι, lots, which formed so many separate heritages. See Note on Acts i. 16.

4. καὶ] 'and [then].' Ἀμαράντινον, unfading, with allusion to the fading sprig of laurel awarded to him who came off victorious in the Grecian games. On this topic (the future reward annexed to a faithful discharge of the office in question) the Apostles frequently touch, from the office itself being, at that period, one which carried with it much difficulty, nay even danger, and accordingly required all the encouragement supplied by the consideration of an ample future recompense.

5. νεώτεροι.] This, being opposed to πρεσβ., which term is admitted to be one of office, must denote other persons inferior to them (as being under their superintendence), and bound to pay deference to them. Πάντες δὲ ἀλλ. ὑποτ., i. e. 'each according to your different ranks and stations.'

— τὴν ταπειν. ἐγκομβώσασθε.] The verb ἐγκομβοῦσθαι is derived from κόμβος, which signifies, 1. a knot, or top-knot; 2. a button or ornamental fastening, by which vestments were drawn about the body; 3. (or rather ἐγκόμβωμα) a sort of moveable garment, or cape, put over the other vestments, and fastened by knots and bands to the collar. Hence ἐγκομβοῦσθαι came to mean, in a general way, to be ornamentally clothed; and as all sorts of dress are, in the ancient languages, applied to denote moral habits, especially of virtue, so here the Apostle means that they should put on humility as an ornament, and wear it as a habit. So it is said in Æl. V. H. p. 10, ἠμπείχετο δὲ σωφροσύνῃ, and Hom. Il. α. 149, ἀναιδείην ἐπιειμένε.

6, 7. The Apostle here exhorts them at once to humble submission to whatever the hand of God may lay upon them, and pious trust in that gracious Providence ever watchful for their good.

7. ἐπιῤῥίψαντες ἐπ' αὐτόν.] We have here a significatio prægnans, i. e. 'casting off all anxious cares, and reposing them on,' &c. The expression is derived from Ps. lv. 22.

8, 9. ὅτι ὁ ἀντίδικος ὑμῶν, &c.] Here, as an especial reason for watchfulness and circumspection, the Apostle reminds them of the attempts of that Adversary who is ever on the watch for their destruction; warning them by their vigilance to defeat, and by their stedfastness to resist, the temptations with which he is constantly assailing the faithful,—especially the temptation to apostatize, and abandon their profession.

Here, indeed, many recent Commentators, because Διάβολος has not the Article, render it 'a malicious accuser;' but, considering the close connexion of the word with ἀντίδικος preceding, the sense must surely be (as Bp. Middleton explains) 'your opposing evil Spirit,' or 'the Evil Spirit who is your opposer' (for the Article at ἀντίδικος properly belongs to Διάβολος); by which must necessarily be meant tbe DEVIL.

9. εἰδότες τὰ αὐτὰ τῶν παθημάτων, &c.] Thus reminding them (as an argument to reconcile them to what they suffer) that 'their case is not singular; the same persecutions being carried on against their Christian brethren throughout the world.' Ἐπιτελ. here stands for ἐνεργεῖσθαι, and τὰ αὐτὰ τῶν παθ. is for τὰ αὐτὰ τὰ παθήματα.

10. ὁ δὲ Θεὸς πάσης χάριτος, &c.] Thus praying, not that they should be exempt from trials, but that the God of all grace, [see Note on Heb. x. 28.] who had called them to the hope and sure earnest of eternal glory, by Christ, would, after they had suffered awhile [for the increase of their faith], make them mature and complete in holiness, establish them in the peace and hope of the αἰώνιον αὐτοῦ δόξαν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ὀλίγον παθόντας, αὐτὸς ‡ καταρτίσαι ὑμᾶς, ‡ στηρίξαι, ‡ σθενώσαι, ‡ θεμελιώσαι· αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα, καὶ τὸ κράτος εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! 11

ἀμήν.
l Heb. 13.22. [l] Διὰ Σιλουανοῦ ὑμῖν, τοῦ πιστοῦ ἀδελφοῦ, ὡς λογίζο- 12 μαι, δι' ὀλίγων ἔγραψα, παρακαλῶν καὶ ἐπιμαρτυρῶν ταύτην m Acts 12. 12, 25. εἶναι ἀληθῆ χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς ἣν ἑστήκατε. [m] Ἀσπάζεται 13 n Rom. 16. 16. ὑμᾶς ἡ ἐν Βαβυλῶνι συνεκλεκτὴ, καὶ Μάρκος ὁ υἱός μου.
1 Cor. 16. 20. 2 Cor 13. 12 [n] ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλήματι ἀγάπης. Εἰρήνη ὑμῖν 14 1 Thess. 5. 26. πᾶσι τοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. ἀμήν.

Gospel, strengthen them to resist all temptations, endure all sufferings, and perform all duties; settling them immoveably, as a compact building on a sure foundation, which would redound to his praise to whom glory and dominion ought to be ascribed for ever. (Scott.)

The full sense is, 'May he perfect you more and more in the knowledge and practice of true religion, "that ye may be complete, in nothing wanting" (James i. 4); may he confirm you in all that regards faith and practice, that ye may be neither apostatizers nor backsliders; may he strengthen you in the performance of every good purpose; and may he settle you in the truth you profess.'

12. The Apostle here intends to briefly recapitulate the substance of the Epistle, adverting to its main purpose,—admonition and exhortation.

— ταύτην εἶναι ἀληθῆ χάριν, &c.] By χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ is meant the Christian religion; so called, as promulgating, in the Gospel, salvation by grace, in opposition to that by works in the Law. The Apostle solemnly attests that the present announcement of grace in the Gospel (see 2 Pet. i. 12) is the true grace formerly promised by the mouth of the Prophets, and consequently that no other is to be expected. By ἑστήκατε is meant standing stedfast in its profession and practice. So at 1 Cor. xv. 58 we have ἑδραῖοι γίνεσθε, and xv. 1, ἐν ᾧ (scil. εὐαγγελίῳ) ἑστήκατε. Of course the means of standing is by faith in Christ. So 2 Cor. i. 24, τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε, and Rom. v. 2, δι' οὗ καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐσχήκαμεν τῇ πίστει εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτην ἐν ᾗ ἑστήκαμεν.

13. ἐν Βαβυλῶνι.] On the city here intended no little diversity of opinion exists. Some suppose Babylon in Egypt: an opinion, however, highly improbable in itself, and which has been completely overturned by Lardner. Others suppose, that by Babylon is here figuratively denoted Rome. Yet for this no stronger testimony exists than a bare tradition derived from Papias, a weak and credulous person; and as it rests on no sufficient authority, so neither is it borne out by probability, for no tolerable reason has ever been alleged why the Apostle should here call Rome by the name Babylon, and withhold its true name. We may, indeed, justly regard it as a mere notion, first originating in error, and afterwards caught up by the Romanists, for the purpose of supporting their assertion that Peter was the first Bishop of Rome. The best founded supposition is, I apprehend, that of Erasmus, Calvin, Beza, Lightfoot, Scaliger, Salmasius, Le Clerc, Beausobre, Wetstein, Bengel, Bp. Coneybeare, Benson, Rosenmuller, and A. Clarke, that it means Babylon in Assyria; though they are not agreed whether we are to understand Seleucia, i. e. New Babylon, or Old Babylon. We may rather suppose the latter; for there is no satisfactory proof that Seleucia (though it gradually stepped into the place of Old Babylon, and was, indeed, chiefly built from its ruins) ever received the name of Babylon; certainly not so early as the time of St. Peter, whatever might be the case afterwards. Though fallen from its ancient grandeur, Babylon had probably still a tolerably large population, though by no means in proportion to its size. Plutarch, too, in his life of Crassus, c. 17, and in his comparison of Crassus and Nicias, testifies to the existence of Babylon as a city, and speaks of Babylon and Seleucia as distinct: and so also does Strabo. Indeed it were little probable that Babylon should have come to utter desertion so soon after the founding of Seleucia; especially since, as we learn from Pausanias, Seleucus took no decided steps to people his new city at the expense of the old one. In short, there is every reason to think, with Dr. Benson, that Babylon was the metropolis of the Eastern Dispersion of the Jews, where a great number of them had gone to settle, in addition to those who were the posterity that remained in Babylon, and did not return. This is strongly confirmed by a passage of Josephus, Ant. xv. 2. 2, where, speaking of Hyrcanus, he says, that on being carried into captivity by the Parthians, the king permitted him to take his abode ἐν Βαβυλῶνι, ἔνθα καὶ πλῆθος ἦν Ἰουδαίων, where by Βαβυλὼν is probably meant (as I shall further show on some future occasion) the country of Babylonia, as in Philo, 587, πᾶσα γὰρ, ἐκτὸς μέρους βραχέος, Βαβυλὼν, καὶ τῶν ἄλλων σατραπιῶν, αἳ ἀρετῶσαν ἔχουσι τὴν ἐν κύκλῳ γῆν Ἰουδαίους ἔχουσι οἰκήτορας. From which, and other passages that might be adduced from Josephus, it appears that Babylonia was thickly peopled with Jewish colonists, and therefore the more likely was it that the Apostles of the Circumcision should go thither. Accordingly by Βαβυλῶνι in the present passage may (as in that of Philo) be meant the whole country of which Babylon, whatever might be its then condition, was the capital; and such is, I find, the opinion of Steiger, as formerly of Drusius and Is. Capellus.

14. ἀσπάσασθε ἀλλήλους ἐν φιλ. ἀγάπης.] Render, 'Salute each other with a kiss of love:' an injunction answering to that of St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 16. 1 Cor. xvi. 20, and 1 Thess. v. 26, where see Notes.

ΠΕΤΡΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

---

1 I. ΣΥΜΕΩΝ Πέτρος, δοῦλος καὶ ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ
Χριστοῦ, τοῖς ἰσότιμον ἡμῖν λαχοῦσι πίστιν ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ

Of this second Epistle the authenticity was at first called in question, yet it is quoted or alluded to by some very early Fathers, and in the second century was received into the canon. Upon the whole, the external or historical evidence for its authenticity is strong, and the internal yet more so; for if not written by St. Peter, it would indeed be a most daring fabrication: and yet if a fabrication, it would be one of the most artfully contrived on record;—for there is not a single particular that betrays imposture, though it has been a subject of examination for above seventeen centuries. Moreover, it would be very difficult to conceive what motive could have induced any one to fabricate such a composition; for here we see no attempt to support any peculiar doctrine or practice, for which the pious fraud might be supposed to have been committed. Indeed such an air of unfeigned and deep piety breathes through the whole, that it is difficult to imagine how a person possessed of such a spirit could deliberately indite an imposture of that kind. As to the argument of some Critics against its authenticity, derived from the dissimilarity in character of the second Chapter with that of the first Epistle, it is very inconclusive; for though it be different from that Epistle, it is also different from the other two Chapters of this Epistle. In fact, there the subjects are different, and (as in the case of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews) different subjects call for different styles. In the case of the first Epistle, and the first and third Chapters of the second, the whole is simply didactic; whereas in the second Chapter of the present Epistle, more of energy would be requisite, and consequently a higher degree of inspiration would be vouchsafed, even like that granted to the Prophets of the Old Testament. Besides, even waiving such a principle, and supposing St. Peter's style elsewhere to be as plain as those Critics please, yet they will hardly deny that the style of a writer is much influenced by the feelings with which he is affected. Thus, in the present instance, we may suppose that the Apostle's strong indignation at the heresies of the Gnostics quickened his feelings, and consequently somewhat altered the usual character of his style.

The above may suffice to show that internal arguments against the authenticity of this Epistle are unfounded. Proceed we to advert to the internal evidence for the authenticity;—now, to pass over several arguments which are fully stated by Macknight and Horne, 1. There is the same character (namely, of gravity, dignity, energy, and authority, united with simplicity,) observable in this second Epistle, as that which distinguishes the first. 2. There are several incidental allusions to circumstances which correspond to no other Apostle but St. Peter. 3. A truly apostolical spirit breathes through the whole. 4. The style is (with the exception of the second Chapter) the same as the former Epistle. There are repetitions of the same words and allusions to the same events.

This Epistle is supposed to have been written not long after the first Epistle, and shortly before the death of the Apostle; also to have been indited from the same place, and addressed to the same persons as the former one; yet no good reason can be imagined why it should have been written from the same place. Nay, when we consider the great reason there is to think that that place was Babylon, and take in conjunction with that circumstance, the high probability that this Epistle was written but a short time before the Apostle's death,—which we have every reason to think took place at Rome,—we seem authorized to conjecture that this Epistle at least was written from Rome, whither it is probable St. Peter had been called,—as St. Paul was not long before,—to defend himself from the accusations of those who sought to implicate him as encouraging the rebellious spirit against the Roman government, which then pervaded the whole of Judæa and the neighbouring countries.

The design of this Epistle is (with the exception of ch. ii.) very similar to that of the former. In its character it is confirmatory, cautionary, and hortatory. The Apostle first applies himself to establish his readers in the truth and profession of the Gospel. 2dly, He cautions them against false teachers (whose tenets and practices he graphically describes), and warns them of the mockers and scoffers, who would soon start up, a John 17. 3. Rom. 1. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 2. Jude 2.

τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ· [a] χάρις ὑμῖν 2 καὶ εἰρήνη πληθυνθείη ἐν ἐπιγνώσει τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.
῾ΩΣ πάντα ἡμῖν τῆς θείας δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ τὰ πρὸς 3 ζωὴν καὶ εὐσέβειαν δεδωρημένης, διὰ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως τοῦ καλέσαντος ἡμᾶς διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς· ([b] δι' ὧν τὰ μέγιστα 4 ἡμῖν καὶ τίμια ἐπαγγέλματα δεδώρηται, ἵνα διὰ τούτων γένησθε θείας κοινωνοὶ φύσεως, ἀποφυγόντες τῆς ἐν κόσμῳ ἐν ἐπιθυμίᾳ φθορᾶς·) καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο δὲ, σπουδὴν πᾶσαν 5 b Isa. 56. 5. John 1. 12. Rom. 8. 15. 2 Cor. 3. 18. Eph 4. 24. Heb. 12. 10. 1 John 3. 2.

and deride their expectation of Christ's coming; and, after confuting their false assertions, he tells them why the day of the Lord was deferred, and having described its circumstances and consequences (in which there is a strong coincidence with the account given by St. Paul) he subjoins suitable exhortations to prepare for that momentous period: after which he concludes with a truly apostolical commendation of them to the grace of God.

I. 1—4. These verses contain the introduction to the Epistle, in which, after asserting his apostolic character, and addressing the Epistle to the Gentile converts, St. Peter salutes them, and reminds them that their Christian privileges were owing to the favour of God in Christ, and in consequence of the miraculous effusion of the Holy Spirit. (Benson.)

1. τοῖς ἰσότιμον ἡμῖν—Χριστοῦ.] Render, 'to those who have obtained like precious faith with us as to the righteousness of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ;' meaning the method of justification by faith in Jesus Christ, as opposed to the Law. In τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰ. Χρ. we have the same construction as at ver. 11, τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτ. Ἰησ. Χρ.; see Eph. v. 5, and Tit. ii. 13, and also the Note of Bp. Middleton in justification of the above rendering; who evinces that the passage is plainly to be understood as an assumption that Jesus Christ is our God and Saviour; see also Dr. Pye Smith's Script. Test., vol. iii. p. 188. The word ἰσότιμος is formed similarly to ἰσόμοιρος. The term λαχ. has reference to salvation being considered as an inheritance, laid up in heaven for the righteous; see 2 Tim. iv. 8. Col. i. 5. 12. Eph. i. 11. 14. 18.

3. ὡς πάντα ἡμῖν—ἀρετῆς.] The construction is this, ὡς τῆς θείας δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ πάντα τὰ πρὸς ζωὴν καὶ εὐσέβειαν ἡμῖν δεδωρημένης, διὰ—ἀρετῆς (δι' ὧν—φθορᾶς) καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο, &c.; and the sense is, 'forasmuch as God, by his Almighty power, hath bestowed on us all things pertaining to life and godliness [the promise of eternal happiness, and also the holiness which is to fit us for it],' &c. The best Commentators are agreed that δεδωρ. here, as δεδώρηται after, is to be taken in an active sense; an idiom found in verbs which want the Perfect Middle, instead of which the Perfect Passive is used. Διὰ τῆς ἐπιγνώσεως may be rendered, 'by the bringing of us to the knowledge (or acknowledgment) of.' Διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς is, by hendiadys, for 'by his glorious benignity,' or moral excellence generally; the highest ἀρετὴ of God (see Note infra v. 7) being therein conspicuously displayed. So the term ἀρετὴ is used of God at 1 Pet. ii. 9.

4. δι' ὧν.] The ὧν is by some referred to δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς; by others, to πάντα. Both references may be meant; i. e. 'by all which things.' By ἐπαγγ. are meant the Gospel promises of pardon and salvation through Christ.

— διὰ τούτων—φύσεως.] Meaning, it would seem, 'in order that, being excited by these promises, you might strive to become partakers [by imitation] of a Divine nature or disposition;' namely, by that purity and holiness, which is said to be of a Divine nature, as bearing a certain similarity to the Divine attributes, and being produced by Divine influence (see Benson and Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap. p. 45). Nay, as observes Dr. Cudworth, in his Sermon on 1 John ii. 3, 'the Gospel is nothing else but God descending into the world in our form, and conversing with us in our likeness, that he might allure and draw us up to God, and make us partakers of his Divine form.' Nay, Socrates, ap. Xen. Mem. iv. 3, 14, says of the soul of man itself τοῦ θείου μετέχει.

In the words following are pointed out the means whereby this assimilation and participation are to be attained; namely, by escaping the pollutions of this wicked world, arising from carnal appetites.

5—7. The Apostle here calls on his Christian brethren not to rest in their apparent conversion, or the reformation connected with it, or even in the beginning of a renewal to a 'divine nature;' but, depending on the promises of the Gospel, and pursuing the end for which they were given, to 'cleanse themselves from all' remaining 'filthiness of flesh and spirit,' perfecting holiness 'in the fear of God.' (Scott.) To the latter he especially adverts, as the condition on which depends the former; for, as Bp. Sanderson says, 'the promises of God are true, yet they are conditional, and such as must be ever understood with a clause of reservation or exception,—i. e. of obedience, as, in the case of his threatenings, of repentance.

5. καὶ αὐτὸ τοῦτο.] Supply κατὰ or διὰ, 'for this very reason;' q. d. 'Since God has granted all the means of holiness, (vv. 3, 4) do your part;' thus suggesting what they are to render in return for God's mercy, as shown by his thus calling them to salvation, and (as is intimated by the words following, σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παρεισενέγκαντες) in co-operation with God's grace enabling them 'both to will and to do of his good pleasure;' Phil. ii. 12, 13. For such may be considered the import of this expression, σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παρεισενέγκαντες, which is not well taken by Rosenmuller and others as merely standing for σπουδάζοντες.

παρεισενέγκαντες, ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν 6 ἀρετὴν, ἐν δὲ τῇ ἀρετῇ τὴν γνῶσιν, ἐν δὲ τῇ γνώσει τὴν — ἐπιχορηγήσατε ἐν τῇ πίστει ὑμῶν τὴν ἀρετήν.] In order to rightly understand the sense of ἐπιχορ. (which has been variously, but, in general, not correctly explained), it is proper to ascertain the nature of the figure. Now here we have, I apprehend, a certain metaphor derived from the χορηγὸς, or person who, in ancient times, used to furnish the expenses of the players, singers, and dancers, at the public festivals. Indeed, such was the primitive sense of the word χορηγὸς, which afterwards came to denote generally, one who supplies any expense. So in a passage of Plutarch it is said of Pericles, δαψιλὴς ἦν χορηγὸς ταῖς γυναιξί. Hence in like manner the verb χορηγέω has often the sense simply 'to supply or furnish;' and accordingly ἐπιχορ. must signify insuper suppeditate, exhibete, præstate.

In this enumeration of the various duties of faith and practice (forming what is well termed by Mr. Greswell an ascending scale of improvement, or a series of steps to perfection) we may recognise that regular order and nice gradation also observable in similar enumerations of St. Paul (as Rom. v. 3, 4. 1 Tim. vi. 11. Gal. v. 22. Rom. viii. 29, 30. x. 14, 15), by which we have the Christian virtues here represented as so many links in one beautiful chain, wherein FAITH constitutes the primary and leading, as CHARITY the final and completive, link; the former as that from which the various Christian virtues are suspended, and the latter as that in which all the others terminate. 'In this beautiful connexion (as Bengel observes) each preceding grace leads to the following, and each following tempers and perfects the preceding; for though every grace bears a relation to every other, yet here they are so nicely ranged, that those which have the closest dependence on each other are placed together.'

However we are not (with some) to consider the Apostle as laying down what may be called a system of Christian virtues. His purpose is merely to specify, by way of example, the virtues essential to 'that participation of a divine nature' of which he has just been speaking. And here it is not well to refine too much on the order in which these several virtues are thus placed between FAITH and LOVE. Bp. Warburton, indeed, (in a Sermon on this text) here supposes the idea in the Apostle's mind to have been that of an edifice consisting of three courses, from which he means to instruct them in the nature of that Christian edification they were to raise on the foundation of Faith. But this view, though it may seem supported by a passage of Jude 20, seq., is surely too fanciful to be safely adopted. Of far greater importance is it to observe, with Dr. H. More, Works, p. 262, that the ἐν here, far from redundant, is essential to the sentence, and interposed that we might understand a greater mystery than the mere adding of so many virtues one to another, so that none might be wanting, which would be all that could be expressly signified if ἐν were left out. But the preposition here signifying causality, there is more than a mere ENUMERATION of those divine graces; for there is also implied how naturally they rise one out of another, and that throughout the whole series they have a causal dependence one upon another. Thus, then, it is meant, that 'God having on his part fitted all things for their salvation, and they having obtained like precious faith with the Apostle himself, they ought, without delay, to endeavour, that, through the efficacy of their faith, they may also acquire virtue,' &c. &c.

On the exact nature of the order, and arrangement in which these various virtues stand one in respect to the other, no Commentator has, on the whole, so well treated as the learned Prelate above mentioned. 'Here (he well observes) every foregoing virtue gives stability to the following; and every following imparts perfection to that which went before; where the three orders of this heavenly architecture, the HUMAN, the DIVINE, and SOCIAL virtues, are so masterly disposed, that the human and social have their proper strengths and graces heightened and supported by the common connexion of the divine. Commencing with faith, the Apostle, as "a wise master-builder" (1 Cor. iii. 10), chooses for his foundation that ROCK on which our Lord promised him to build the Church, as directed by the same Divine Spirit with St. Paul, who says, "other foundation can (or ought) no man to lay, than that is laid, which is JESUS CHRIST." But, in order to counteract the error (then too prevalent) which regarded faith as alone sufficient to make man acceptable to his Maker, and without good works, entitled him to the rewards of the Gospel covenant, the Apostle first enjoins us to add or build Virtue upon Faith.' Here, it is true, very many Commentators (as Grotius, Hammond, Menoch, Zeger, Dr. H. More, Bengel, Whitby, Benson, Doddridge, Wells, Wesley, A. Clarke, and Scott) take ἀρετὴ to signify courage and constancy [in professing the faith]: a signification of the word frequent in the Classical writers, from Homer downwards. In justification of this Grotius urges, 1. the gradation observable in this passage; 2. the several virtues in particular then specified. Bp. Warburton, however, satisfactorily evinces, that the very beauty and correctness of that gradation depend upon ἀρετὴ being taken in the general sense, as in Phil. iv. 8, and elsewhere in Scripture. Of ἀρετὴ in the sense courage, no example occurs either in the New Test. or the Sept. How peculiarly appropriate here is ἀρετὴ in the usual acceptation of the word, has been shown by Bp. Warburton. 'For whereas (observes he) Faith, while single and solitary, remained dead,—from henceforth, being thus clothed upon by virtue, it becomes alive and vigorous, and productive of all the fruits of grace and immortality; and Virtue, thus erected, receives a reciprocal advantage from Faith. The weakness of unguided reason, and the violence of ill-balanced passions, had reduced MORAL VIRTUE, both in principle and practice, to so shadowy and precarious an existence, that the wisest in the Pagan world could not forbear lamenting its helpless condition, and owning that nothing but a revelation from heaven could realize and support it. They mistook the true foundation of Morality; some placing it in the native excellence of virtue, others in the exterior benefits of which it ἐγκράτειαν, ἐν δὲ τῇ ἐγκρατείᾳ τὴν ὑπομονὴν, ἐν δὲ τῇ ὑπομονῇ τὴν εὐσέβειαν, ἐν δὲ τῇ εὐσεβείᾳ τὴν φιλαδελ- 7

is productive. But it was the Dispensation of Faith which taught us that the true foundation of Morality was compliance to the will of our Creator and sovereign Lord. It was Faith which enabled us to surmount all the opposition of the appetites, by holding out to us an infinite reward, and which the assistance of the Holy Spirit hath placed within our reach. But though Virtue be enjoined here and elsewhere in Scripture, yet if we expect to find there any regular or methodical body of morality, we shall be much mistaken. With respect to this, the New Testament, all along, refers us to another guide; for God, having before revealed the whole doctrine of morality by the religion of nature, and none of God's dispensations contradicting another, it was enough for the first teachers of Christianity, when they preached up Virtue, to refer their followers for particulars to what natural religion taught concerning it. This being so, and that the great Pandect of the Law of Nature is to be searched and studied, in order to attain a perfect knowledge of moral duty, there is need of much pains and exercise of mind to learn that Virtue which we are here enjoined to build upon Faith.'

'By the knowledge next enjoined, is' (he adds) 'to be understood knowledge as respects the virtue before mentioned; namely, that wisdom which is the result of the study of the Law of Nature in the pursuit of truth.' 'To understand this matter truly (continues he), we must consider, that Virtue consists in acting agreeably to those relations in which we stand to our common humanity, our fellow-creatures, and our Creator; for as religion, in the largest sense of the word, includes the duty we owe ourself and neighbour, so morality, in its larger sense of the word, includes the observance of that relation we stand in towards God; and when the practice respects man it is called virtue; when it respects God it is piety. These relations are commonly distinguished into the human, the social, and the divine virtues; the end and design of all which is to perfect man's nature: 1. By restraining, regulating, and directing the private and selfish appetites, according to the dictates of reason. 2. By cultivating, improving, and enlarging the social passions and affections, and employing them in the service of our species, according to the dictates of charity. 3. By exercising our understandings in the contemplation of the first Cause, and by owning our relation to him in suitable acts of rational worship, in order to unite us to our supreme Good, according to the dictates of grace.'

The learned Prelate then proceeds to show the reciprocal service which virtue does to knowledge. 'Knowledge (says he) is the perception and attainment of TRUTH, and useful knowledge the perception and attainment of those truths which tend to the perfecting of our nature; but the carnal passions, operating aversely to such truths, cloud and darken the understanding, so as to mislead us, even in those of the most easy discovery and of the highest importance. Again, to acquire a competent share of knowledge, we must give all diligence in the pursuit of truth, so as to trace her throughout her hidden recesses; but it is only a love for the object which can heartily engage us in the pursuit, and this can arise from nothing but the beauty of it. Now while Vice usurps the heart, Truth, her mortal enemy, will be a neglected guest; but when Virtue has assumed her seat, the passion for Truth will revive. For Truth and Virtue are twin-born sisters, and, with only a name of distinction, participate of one common nature; Truth being speculative Virtue, and Virtue only practical Truth. And now the understanding makes a free progress in knowledge, as having no headstrong appetites to mislead it, nor earthly passions to damp its affections. From henceforth the only danger is from the opposite quarter; lest the mind's ardent love of truth should engage it in abstractions, and carry it beyond the limits of those truths which are given us for our contemplation here. Now this folly so mischievous, and proceeding from a want of due consciousness of the narrow limits of the human understanding, St. Peter, in his next precept, restrains. "Add (says he) to knowledge temperance," i. e. sobriety, moderation, continence, in the pursuit of truth. [So with good reason is it said, 1 Tim. ii. 15, ἁγιασμῷ μετὰ σωφροσύνης.] For as Virtue, without Knowledge, falls into all kind of fanaticism in practice; so Knowledge, without Temperance, leads to all kind of heresy in opinion. To render our Temperance complete, we are enjoined to add Patience, i. e. long-suffering in bearing with the contradiction of others; for having experienced in our own case how insensibly errors insinuate themselves into the mind; how plausibly they assume the air of truth, when called to account; how obstinately they maintain their ground, when now become suspected; and what labour is required to dispossess them, even after they are detected and exposed; having experienced, I say, all this, we shall be well inclined to bear with patience the contradiction of our erring brother.

'To Patience we are enjoined to add Godliness; and then, as St. James counsels us, we "let patience have her perfect work." For then by this means godliness cannot degenerate either into fanaticism or bigotry, but will remain sober and rational; and yet there is another danger to which it is obnoxious; for by long and intense exercise in holy offices, the joy and transport that elevates the mind, thus filled with its true and proper object, God, naturally dispose us to contemn all inferior things, and from despising the things, but too often, to despise the persons who delight in them; and, by making odious comparisons, like the Pharisee to the Publican, to forget our relation, our near relation, both by nature and grace, to the meanest of our species. Hence arises spiritual pride, the last and most fatal enemy to true godliness. Now for this, too, the Apostle provides a remedy. "Add (says he) to godliness brotherly kindness," with which commences the third and last order of this Christian building. Thus godliness placed between and supported, on each hand, by the human and the social virtues, becomes stable and permanent. And while it receives this united aid from both, it returns it back again to both. We have, then, shown the benefits temperance and patience receive from godliness; we are now to speak of that which brotherly kindness receives from it. The most beauteous and elevated branch of brotherly kindness is friendship; but friendship may be a confederacy in vice as well as a community of virtue. Hence it requires to be placed on godliness, whereby alone it stands secure from abuse, and brings forth all its genuine fruits of public beneficence. Brotherly kindness is now only liable to one disorder,—that being enjoined to be built on godliness, or religion, men are too apt (like the Pharisees of old) to confine brotherly kindness to their own sect or pale; but this narrow and partial benevolence the Apostle removes by enjoining them to add to brotherly kindness CHARITY, i. e. the universal love of all mankind. This regulates and perfects all the other virtues, and is itself in no want of a reformer. All the other virtues, as we have observed, degenerate both by defect and by excess: this is incapable of either. Its nature and essence secure it from defect, and its fruits and products from excess. This, then, is the crown, the keystone of this heavenly edifice, this triumphant arch of immortality; or, as the holy Apostle more more emphatically calls it, the bond of perfectness."'

8 φίαν, ἐν δὲ τῇ φιλαδελφίᾳ τὴν ἀγάπην. ^c Ταῦτα γὰρ ὑμῖν ὑπάρχοντα καὶ πλεονάζοντα, οὐκ ἀργοὺς οὐδὲ ἀκάρπους καθίστησιν εἰς τὴν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐπίγνωσιν. c Tit. 3. 14.

Thus far the learned Prelate, to whose statement, as above detailed, it is impossible to deny the praise of great acumen and consummate ability; yet it may be doubted whether certain particulars there be not too artificial, and little agreeable to the simplicity of the sacred writer. In defending the ordinary sense of ἀρετὴν he has indeed rendered good service. The term, it may be observed (as derived from ἄρω), signifies properly the fitness of any thing or person to any particular use or purpose; and hence, 2. the good quality therein involved; and 3. κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the good quality of morality, moral excellence, and moral virtue, as in Phil. iv. 8; but whether the term γνῶσιν can admit of the sense assigned by the Bishop may be doubted. It is by many eminent Expositors, from Calvin downwards, explained rationem prudenter agendi, prudence; but it may rather be supposed to denote religious knowledge, both theoretical and practical, and that deep and real, as in 1 Cor. viii. 7. 10, 11. 2 Cor. xi. 6. So Dr. H. More (Works, p. 261,) in an able exposition of this whole passage, takes γνῶσιν to mean 'a holy experience in the ways of God.' Now such will naturally produce what is here subjoined to knowledge, namely, temperance, ἐγκράτειαν, though not in that sense assigned to the word by Bp. Warburton, but rather in the usual acceptation of self-controul, or holding the mastery over our appetites, passions, and affections: 'a virtue (as says Mr. Wesley) extending to all things inward and outward; the due government of every thought as well as affection.' See 2 Cor. x. 5. Indeed (as is well observed by Dr. More, ubi supra) 'by this true knowledge and holy experience, we are taught how those passions and appetites have often deceived us, and hence arises a stronger resolution of controlling and keeping them under for the future.'

Moreover, as the sense assigned by Bp. Warburton to ἐγκράτειαν must be rejected, so neither can his exposition of ὑπομονὴν be admitted. The term has here evidently the general sense of a patient perseverance in faith and duty under suffering,—a sense in which it frequently occurs in St. Paul's Epistles. Now such naturally produces godliness (εὐσέβειαν) as consisting in all those holy affections which constitute the true spiritual worshipper of God; for, as Bengel truly observes, 'omnia pietatis impedimenta removet ὑπομονή.' Moreover these three, ἐγκράτεια, ὑπομονή, and εὐσέβεια are, as Dr. More observes, closely connected together: for we cannot keep close to the laws of temperance, but patient endurance will emerge therefrom, nor be kept in the spirit thereof without the invocation and acknowledgment of Divine assistance, which is a fruit of godliness properly so called.' To this purpose it is well said by Philo, p. 894, c., Ἐγκράτειαν δὲ, ὥσπερ τινὰ θεμέλιον προκαταβαλόμενον τῇ ψυχῇ, τὰς ἄλλας ἐποικοδομοῦσαι ἀρετάς.

Finally, I must take exception to the connexion between godliness and brotherly kindness, as laid down by the learned Prelate, who seems not to be aware that φιλαδελφία here, as often in all other passages of the New Test. where it occurs, denotes the mutual love of Christian brethren one to another; the next gradation to which is the love of all mankind; and the connexion between the two virtues is excellently pointed out by Dr. More, ubi supra. 'Having (says he) gained such a victory through Divine grace over our lusts and passions, and being transported with a high sense of thankfulness to our Redeemer and Benefactor, who wants nothing of our retributions himself, the stream of our affections is naturally driven downwards to his saints that dwell on earth, and profess the same religion with ourselves; and St. Peter intimates that having 'purified our souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit,' the result thereof is the loving our brethren. But the purified soul cannot stop here, but the quick flame of love mounts upwards, and is reflected again downwards, and vibrates every way, reaching at objects in heaven and on earth; and therefore, in her pure and ardent speculations of the Godhead in his unlimited goodness, and also her observations on the capacity of the whole creation of receiving good both from him and from one another, she overflows those narrow bounds of brotherly love, and spreads out into that ineffably ample and transcendently divine grace and virtue, UNIVERSAL LOVE, which is the highest accomplishment the soul of man is capable of either in this life or that which is to come, and thus at last becomes 'perfect, as her Father which is in heaven is perfect;' even in humble imitation of that God who is LOVE, 1 John iv. 8.

Here, then, as the Apostle begins with faith, so he ends with love, those being the two leading virtues of the Christian, and hence very frequently associated. See 1 Thess. iii. 6. v. 8. 2 Thess. i. 3. 1 Tim. i. 5. 2 Tim. ii. 22.

8. ταῦτα γὰρ—ἐπίγνωσιν.] The sense is, 'For if those virtues reside in and abound (i. e. be on the increase) in you, they will prove you to be those whose knowledge of the religion of Christ d Isa. 59. 10. Soph. 1. 17. 1 John 2. 9, 11. e 1 John 3. 19.

[d] ᾧ γὰρ μὴ πάρεστι ταῦτα, τυφλός ἐστι, μυωπάζων, λήθην 9 λαβὼν τοῦ καθαρισμοῦ τῶν πάλαι αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτιῶν. [e] Διὸ 10 μᾶλλον, ἀδελφοὶ, σπουδάσατε βεβαίαν ὑμῶν τὴν κλῆσιν καὶ ἐκλογὴν ποιεῖσθαι· ταῦτα γὰρ ποιοῦντες οὐ μὴ πταίσητέ ποτε. οὕτω γὰρ πλουσίως ἐπιχορηγηθήσεται ὑμῖν ἡ εἴσοδος 11 εἰς τὴν αἰώνιον βασιλείαν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

Διὸ οὐκ ἀμελήσω ἀεὶ ὑμᾶς ὑπομιμνήσκειν περὶ τούτων, 12 καίπερ εἰδότας, καὶ ἐστηριγμένους ἐν τῇ παρούσῃ ἀληθείᾳ.
f Infra 3. 1.
[f] Δίκαιον δὲ ἡγοῦμαι, ἐφ᾽ ὅσον εἰμὶ ἐν τούτῳ τῷ σκηνώ- 13 g John 21. 18, 19. 2 Tim. 4. 6. ματι, διεγείρειν ὑμᾶς ἐν ὑπομνήσει· [g] εἰδὼς ὅτι ταχινή ἐστιν 14 ἡ ἀπόθεσις τοῦ σκηνώματός μου, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν is not barren and unfruitful in good works [such as religious knowledge should produce].'

9. ᾧ γὰρ μὴ πάρεστι—ἁμαρτιῶν.] Meaning, 'He who is destitute of these moral virtues, and yet expects salvation by the Gospel, which imperatively enjoins them, is blind (lit., blinketh), or sees very little into the true nature of it, and forgets that he was cleansed from his former sins [only on condition of renouncing sin in future].'

10. διὸ μᾶλλον, &c.] There is here drawn an inference; q. d. 'Wherefore [to attain the end spoken of a little before (ver. 8), and to avoid the fatal consequences just adverted to (ver. 9)] more earnestly endeavour,' &c. (Newcome.) Or rather, as Calvin says, 'the Apostle here draws the conclusion, that this is the only way to prove ourselves elected of God and not called in vain, if we have corresponding to the profession of faith a good conscience and an upright conversation. And he infers that we ought the rather to give diligence thereto, because he had before said, that faith must not be barren and unfruitful.'

Here, it is plain, the terms κλῆσις and ἐκλογὴ are synonymous, simply denoting admission into the Christian covenant; and this being conditional, there was (as Mr. Slade observes) no impropriety in the converts being enjoined to make their calling sure and effectual. They were, at that time, in a state of election; but it was a state from which they might fall: they were elect only so long as they were careful to maintain faith and good works.' See more in Bps. Sherlock and Hall, in Mant and D'Oyly.

— οὐ μὴ πταίσητέ ποτε.] Meaning, 'ye shall by no means ever fail of attaining salvation:' an idea further unfolded in the words following, οὕτω γὰρ πλουσίως—Χριστοῦ, of which the sense is, 'by so doing you will, through the rich mercy and grace of God, be admitted into the eternal kingdom;' meaning the kingdom which Christ, as God, will for ever possess in heaven, after having delivered up his mediatorial kingdom on earth unto the Father; see 1 Cor. xv. 24. Dan. vii. 27. iv. 34. vi. 26. vii. 14. Ps. cxlv. 13. Rev. xiv. 6. By πλουσίως, abundantly, is meant, of his abundant goodness. So the Latin opulenter.

12. In vv. 12—15 the Apostle alludes to his Lord's prophecy respecting his martyrdom; see John xx. 18, 19. Moreover, from hence to chap. iii. 13, he warns them against false teachers; premising a brief mention of the reasons for which he thought proper to again and again urge them to hold fast that part of pure doctrine, which was by the false teachers not only corrupted, but even derided.

— καίπερ εἰδότας] 'even though ye know them.' So Appian, Punic. 58, has, εἰδότας ὑμᾶς ἀναμνήσω. In the words οὐκ ἀμελήσω we have not, I apprehend, a mere litotes for σπουδάσω. The Apostle rather means thus to intimate, that he will not be wanting in his duty of reminding, however they might be in theirs of attending to admonition. Yet because this might seem to imply distrust, the Apostle modestly softens it by a correction similar to that of St. Paul, Rom. xv. 14; q. d. (in the words of Calvin,) 'you do indeed hold the truth of the Gospel with all sincerity and constancy, and I say not this as though I thought you wavering; but in so momentous a matter warnings are never superfluous; and therefore they ought not to be unwelcome.'

By the expression τῇ παρούσῃ ἀληθείᾳ almost all Expositors understand, 'the truth he was then inculcating.' But if I mistake not, it should be taken, per hypallagen, for, 'and are at present establised in the truth,' i. e. of the Gospel. And so Calvin and Newcome explain.

13, 14. Hic clarius exprimit, quam utilis adeoque necessarius sit monitionum usus, quia fideles incitare convenit; alioqui enim obrepit a carne torpor. (Calvin.)

13. σκηνώματι.] See Note on 2 Cor. v. 1. Of this word, as denoting the human body, an example occurs in Eurip. Heracl. 690, σμικρὸν τὸ σὸν σκήνωμα.

14. εἰδὼς ὅτι, &c.] The full sense is, '[I am the more earnest herein,] as knowing,' &c. In καθὼς καὶ ὁ Κύριος—μοι the Apostle alludes to the words of Christ, John xxi. 18, sq. But whether καθὼς will admit of the sense assigned to it by Benson, 'in the manner which,' may be doubted. It is plain that Christ foretold to Peter his martyrdom, as he also did to Paul (see 2 Tim. iv. 6); but the question is, whether these words of the Apostle were founded on any fresh revelation, as to the speedy approach of that event? This the ancients say was the case. It seems highly probable that he had another revelation; but it is very possible that he had not; and the words, it is evident, may be explained upon another supposition.

15 Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ἐδήλωσέ μοι. Σπουδάσω δὲ καὶ ἑκάστοτε ἔχειν ὑμᾶς μετὰ τὴν ἐμὴν ἔξοδον τὴν τούτων μνήμην ποι-16 εῖσθαι. [h] Οὐ γὰρ σεσοφισμένοις μύθοις ἐξακολουθήσαντες ἐγνωρίσαμεν ὑμῖν τὴν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δύναμιν καὶ παρουσίαν, ἀλλ' ἐπόπται γενηθέντες τῆς ἐκείνου 17 μεγαλειότητος. [i] Λαβὼν γὰρ παρὰ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς τιμὴν καὶ δόξαν, φωνῆς ἐνεχθείσης αὐτῷ τοιᾶσδε ὑπὸ τῆς μεγα-λοπρεποῦς δόξης· "Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ Υἱός μου ὁ ἀγα-18 πητὸς, εἰς ὃν ἐγὼ εὐδόκησα!" καὶ ταύτην τὴν φωνὴν ἡμεῖς ἠκούσαμεν ἐξ οὐρανοῦ ἐνεχθεῖσαν, σὺν αὐτῷ ὄντες ἐν τῷ 19 ὄρει τῷ ἁγίῳ. [k] Καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον, τὸν προφητικὸν, λόγον· ᾧ καλῶς ποιεῖτε προσέχοντες, ὡς λύχνῳ φαίνοντι h Matt. 17. 1. John 1. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 17. & 2. 1, 4, 13. & 4. 20. 1 John 1. 1. & 4. 14. i Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5. Mark 1. 11. & 9. 7. Luke 3. 22. & 9. 35. Col. 1. 13.

k Psal. 119. 105. John 5. 35. 2 Cor. 4. 6. Rev. 22. 16.

15. σπουδάσω δέ.] 'I will, I say, endeavour;' namely, by committing his admonitions (such as those which follow) to writing.

16. The Apostle now proceeds to exhort them to constancy in the faith, assuring them that it does not rest (as the infidels or false teachers asserted) on mere ingenious fable, but on solid truth, even the testimony of eye-witnesses.

— οὐ γὰρ σεσοφισμένοις, &c.] Render, 'For we did not follow cunningly-devised fables, when we made known unto you,' &c. The connexion, indeed, of these words with the preceding is not very obvious, and accordingly disputed. It seems to be chiefly with ver. 14, though partly with ver. 15. As to the former, it is not merely his death that he alludes to, but his martyrdom, according to the prophecy in John xxi. 19. The Apostle, therefore, meant to advert to the reason why he is so ready to encounter death, and so anxious to establish others in the faith; namely, from his thorough confidence in the truth and certainty of that which he preached; intending thus to hint that they may feel the same confidence, as reposed on the basis of undoubted verity. In ἐξακολουθεῖν we have a stronger term than ἀκολουθεῖν; of which the sense is, to follow any person or thing to the abandonment or exclusion of all others. So ἐξ. μύθοις in Josephus, Ant. Procem. § 4. Σεσοφισμένοις here is equivalent to πεπλασμένοι in Diod. Sic. vol. ii. 134, μύθους ἡγοῦνται πεπλασμένους τὰς περὶ τῶν Ἀμαζονίδων ἀρχαιολογίας.

Δύναμιν καὶ παρουσίαν is for παρουσίαν δυνατὴν, with reference to the second advent of our Lord to judgment. Ἐπόπται γενηθέντες —μεγαλ. is said with reference to the Transfiguration; see Matt. xvii. 5. The expression ἐπόπται is here synonymous with αὐτόπται; the former signifying spectators, the latter, eye-witnesses.

17. The scope of this verse is, as Aretius points out, that of illustration; and the γὰρ is, as often, put by way of explanation. In fact, as Calvin remarks, 'the Apostle here selects one pre-eminently memorable instance, in which Christ, clothed with a celestial glory, afforded the three disciples a conspicuous proof of his divine greatness.'

— λαβὼν γὰρ] scil. ἦν. Φωνῆς ἐνεχθείσης —δόξης. Render, 'such a voice from the exalted glory being pronounced over them, saying,' &c.; see Note at Matt. xvii. 5, seqq. So Plutarch, Vit. J. Cæs. 1, we have φωνῆς ἐνεχθείσης πρὸς Καίσαρα.

19. καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον, τὸν προφητικὸν, λόγον.] In this passage, not a little disputed as to the interpretation, the difficulty chiefly turns on the expression βεβαιότερον, concerning which it has been doubted whether the comparative has here a comparative force, or whether it denotes only a high degree of the positive. Again, the comparative force being retained, the question is, whether there be a comparison intended between the sure evidence afforded by prophecy, and that supplied by the Transfiguration; or whether we are to suppose that the Apostle speaks of the evidence of prophecy being confirmed by the miraculous event in question. Some eminent Commentators, ancient and modern (as Grotius, Wolf, Benson, Doddridge, Wetstein, Abp. Newcome, Bp. Middleton, Macknight, A. Clarke, and others) adopt the latter opinion; according to which the sense is supposed to be: 'We have the prophecies of the Old Testament concerning the Messiah more confirmed by the event of his transfiguration; for if Jesus had not been the Messiah predicted in them, such a miracle would not have been wrought to verify his pretensions.' And so Dr. Henderson (Lect. on Insp.) explains the meaning to be, 'that now that the most important of the prophecies of old had received their fulfilment in the appearance, sufferings, and glorification of the Redeemer, their certainty was confirmed, and their authority heightened in the minds of believers.' Yet notwithstanding that the sense just stated is permitted by the words, and is not at variance with the context, I must rather give the preference to the former view of the sense, which has been adopted by the generality of Expositors, including Estius, Menochius, Calvin, Beza, Grotius, Salmas., Whitby, Scott, and Bps. Warburton, Sherlock, and Horsley; from whose able discussions it is clear that the sense in question is more agreeable to the scope of the whole Epistle, especially this Chapter; the object of the context being not so much the personal character of Jesus, as the truth of the Gospel in general. 'The doctrine (says Bp. Sherlock) which the Apostle all along applies himself to prove is, that we have a far more sure word of prophecy, in evidence of the future coming of Christ in power. In order to this, he had just ἐν αὐχμηρῷ τόπῳ, ἕως οὗ ἡμέρα διαυγάσῃ, καὶ φωσφόρος 1 Rom. 12. 6. ἀνατείλῃ ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν. [1] τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες, 20 ὅτι πᾶσα προφητεία γραφῆς, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως οὐ γίνεται.

told them that he had been himself an eye-witness of Christ's majesty or glory. To this, indeed, it might be objected, that although his testimony showed that Christ himself had been glorified, it was no proof that he would ever again return in glory and power. Accordingly, the Apostle may be supposed to reply: 'It is true that all future events can be learned only from God. All other arguments can amount to no more than probabilities and presumptions; and a great presumption it is that Christ shall come in glory, forasmuch as we have already seen him glorified; and it is a further evidence of his power to deliver his servants, since God has openly declared him to be his well-beloved Son. But to assure us that he will indeed so come, and so use his power, "we have a more sure word of prophecy:" that is, we have the very word of God, speaking by his Prophets, to assure us of the certainty of this future event. No comparison is here intended between miracles and prophecy, as arguments for the truth of the Gospel; for St. Peter speaks only of the coming of Christ in power. And by the "more sure word of prophecy" are to be understood, not merely the prophecies of the Old Testament, but probably also of the New.' The above is strongly confirmed by the researches of Bp. Horsley, in four masterly Sermons on vv. 20, 21. He understands 'the Prophetic word' of the entire volume of the prophetic writings, whether of the Old or New Test., then extant, or hereafter to be promulged; i. e. the prophecies of the Christian Church, together with the prophetical writings of the Old Test. Dr. Henderson, however, in an elaborate examination of this whole passage, confines it exclusively to the Old Testament prophecies, the ancient prophetic oracles of the Jews, which, having been written by men under a prophetic impulse, came to be spoken of under the general designation of προφητεῖαι, prophecies.

By pointing the words as above, much, I conceive, of the difficulty which attaches to the passage will be removed; the construction, I apprehend, being, καὶ ἔχομεν βεβαιότερον λόγον, τὸν προφητικὸν [λόγον]. Thus the τὸν προφ. λόγον is in apposition with, and exegetical of, the former.

— ᾧ καλῶς ποιεῖτε προσέχοντες, ὡς λύχνῳ, &c.] Of these words (somewhat obscure from the boldness of the figurative imagery employed) the meaning is, as Dr. Henderson, ubi supra, explains, that this prophetic word, though, when compared to the sun, it might be said to be only a lantern, the light of which but dimly discovers the objects upon which it shines, yet it would afford certainty to all who availed themselves of its aid. Bp. Horsley, adopting a more enlarged view, explains it to mean, 'a discovery from heaven of the schemes of Providence, which, however imperfect, is yet sufficient for the comfort and support of good men, under all the discouragements of the present life; as it furnishes a demonstration,—not of equal evidence, indeed, with that which the final catastrophe will afford, but a certain demonstration,—a demonstration drawn from fact and experience, rising in evidence as the ages of the world roll on; and, in every stage of it sufficient for the passing generation of mankind, "that the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of the earth,"—that his providence directeth all events for the final happiness of the virtuous,—that there is a reward for the righteous,—that there is a God who will judge the earth.'

Of the words following, ἕως οὗ ἡμέρα διαυγάσῃ—ὑμῶν, Bp. Warburton well explains the sense to be, 'till a long series of events [yet in the womb of time] shall arise, to give testimony by degrees, until the whole evidence concludes in one unclouded blaze of conviction, as emblematic of the dawn of spiritual light and happiness upon the benighted mind.'

20. πᾶσα προφητεία γραφῆς, ἰδίας ἐπιλύσεως οὐ γίνεται.] Of this verse the sense has been nearly as much disputed as that of the preceding. The various interpretations (as detailed by Dr. Henderson, Lect. on Div. Insp. p. 559) are as follows: 1. No prophecy is of arbitrary interpretation. 2. No prophecy is of separate or detached interpretation. 3. All prophecy is not to be literally interpreted. 4. No prophecy could be explained by the prophets themselves. 5. No prophecy can be interpreted by the unassisted powers of the reader. 6. No prophecy is of self-solution. 7. No prophecy can be rendered invalid. 8. No prophecy is the result of private or uninspired disclosure. Of these the second interpretation (by which the words are supposed to import that the sense of no prophecy is to be determined by an abstract consideration of the passage itself, but by taking it in conjunction with other portions of Scripture relating to the subject) while it is one admitted by the words themselves, and expresses what is perfectly true in itself, and presents a rule applicable to the prophetical writings beyond all other parts of Scripture, yet it is one little agreeable to the context. The only sense permitted by the general tenour of the whole passage is, I conceive, that adopted by Knapp and Fritzch, and further developed by Bp. Horsley (in four able Sermons on this text), who suppose the Apostle to lay down as a leading principle (for that well represents the import of the words τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες), that 'not any prophecy of Scripture is of self-interpretation,' i. e. its own interpreter; or (as Dr. Pye Smith expresses it) 'it was essential to the scheme of prophecy that it should not be of self-solution, meaning, that it could not be explained from itself by any scrutiny of its own terms, till light should be cast upon it by the event; for the Scripture prophecies are not detached predictions of separate independent events, but are united in system, all terminating in one great object—the promulgation of the Gospel, and the complete establishment of the Messiah's kingdom.' And the reason is evident from the next verse, which (as Bp. Horsley shows) means 'that the predictions of the prophets did not, like their own private thoughts and sentiments, originate in their own minds. The prophets, in the exercise of their office, were necessary agents, acting under the irresistible impulse of the omniscient Spirit, who made the faculties and the organs of those

21 [m] οὐ γὰρ θελήματι ἀνθρώπου ἠνέχθη ποτὲ προφητεία, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ Πνεύματος ἁγίου φερόμενοι ἐλάλησαν [οἱ] ἅγιοι Θεοῦ ἄνθρωποι.
1 II. [a] 'ΕΓΕΝΟΝΤΟ δὲ καὶ ψευδοπροφῆται ἐν τῷ λαῷ, ὡς m 2 Sam. 23. 2. 2 Tim. 3. 16. 1 Pet. 1. 11. a Deut. 13. 1. Matt. 24. 11. Acts 20. 29. 1 Cor. 11. 19. 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Tim. 3. 1, 5. Jude 4, 18.

holy men his own instruments for conveying to mankind some portion of the treasures of his own knowledge. Futurity seems to have been delineated in some sort of emblematical picture presented by the Spirit of God to the prophet's mind, which, preternaturally filled and heated with this scenery, in describing the images obtruded on the fantasy, gave pathetic utterance to wisdom not its own.' The distinction between the discoveries of general revelation and of prophecy the learned Prelate shows to be this. 'The former is an explicit declaration of the final general event of things, and of whatever else may be the immediate effect of the will and power of the First Cause, or the purport of any original decree of God. Prophecy is a disguised detail of those intermediate and subordinate events which are brought about by the regular operation of second causes, and are in part dependent upon man's free agency.' Accordingly ἐπίλυσις here must mean interpretation, not in the general sense, but in that peculiar to prophecy, which consists in ascertaining the events to which predictions allude, and in showing the agreement between the images of the prediction and the particulars of the history. In short, the term is here the specific name of that sort of exposition which renders the mystic sense of parables, dreams, and prophecies. Of prophecies, in the strict acceptation of the word, 'the Apostle affirms that the mystic interpretation—that interpretation which consists in ascertaining the events with which the predictions correspond—is never to be drawn from the prophecy itself. It is not to be struck out by any process of criticism applied to the words in which a prediction is conceived;—it is not to be so struck out, because, without a knowledge of the event foretold, as well as a right understanding of the terms of the prediction, the agreement of them cannot be perceived.' The learned Prelate then proceeds to prove that the origin of prophecy, namely, its coming from God, is a reason why it should not be capable of self-interpretation. 'The Apostle (says he) asserts that all Scripture prophecies are purposely so conceived as not to be of self-interpretation; and he intimates that it was a part of the scheme of Providence that prophecy should be so delivered as to have to fetch its interpretation from the consistence of the prophetic system, and from the events of the world.'

Ably, however, as this view is supported, Dr. Henderson (on Inspir., p. 559) is of opinion that the same objection lies against it, as that which has been adduced against most of the others, in the want of strict agreement with the statement made in the following verse. The learned writer concludes with giving the preference to the interpretation last mentioned, as the one alone suitable to the preceding and following context. 'The subject of discourse (says he) is the prophetic oracles contained in the Old Testament, which the Apostle proceeds to show were equally to be depended on, as was the voice from the excellent glory, forasmuch as they did not originate with man, but with the Spirit of God.' The only difficulty connected with this interpretation is, as Dr. Henderson admits, that it requires the word ἐπίλυσις to be taken in a sense not elsewhere found. 'But though (urges he) it is not used in the exact sense of revelation or inspiration, the instances in which it or the cognate verb ἐπιλύω are employed (Gen. xl. 8. Sept. and Aquila, Hos. iii. 4. Symmachus, Mark iv. 34) all convey the idea of information imparted respecting obscure or difficult matters, in consequence of supernatural or divine influence.' Finally, I would observe, ἐπίλυσις may well bear the sense of interpretation (meaning a communication made by a Divine interpretation), since the word properly signifies a loosing out what is tied up, as in untying knots. So Dan. v. 12 we have λύων σύνδεσμον. Thus it was used figuratively of the solving of ænigmas; and in this sense the verb is found in a passage of Clemens Alexandrinus in Possin's Catena on Mark, p. 13 (cited by Steiger) τὰ προφητικὰ αἰνίγματα ἐπιλῦσαι: and in the sense 'to explain what is obscure' it occurs at Mark iv. 34, τοῖς μαθηταῖς ἐπέλυε πάντα. And, indeed, considering how exactly this sense, in the present passage, suits both the preceding and the following context, it seems entitled to the preference.

21. οὐ γὰρ θελήματι ἀνθ.] This is, according to the second of the above stated interpretations, explanatory of the preceding. Render, 'for prophecy was not uttered,' &c. The term φέρεσθαι was often used of inspiration. Hence prophets were said to be θεοφόρητοι.

II. From the mention of true and divinely inspired prophets, the Apostle takes occasion to advert to false prophets; and, intimating that there had been such among the Jews, forewarns them that there will be at least false teachers among Christians; men of corrupt lives, promulgating false doctrines to support evil living, and ingratiating themselves with the people, in order to make a greater gain by preaching the Gospel. He contrasts the end of those men with that of the pious and virtuous, and shows that, as in the case of the wicked Antediluvians, destruction would as surely befal the one, as preservation be extended to the other; and, finally, to more effectually forewarn them of the persons in question, he enters into a beautifully graphic description of the false teachers, and thus intimates the hopeless condition of those who should be deluded by them.

1. ἐγένοντο δὲ — ἀπώλειαν.] The sense is, 'There were, however, also false prophets among the [Israelitish] people; and thus, too, will there be among you false teachers, who shall introduce pernicious heresies, even denying the Lord that purchased them [with his own blood]; bringing thereby on themselves speedy destruction.' On the persons here meant by these false teachers, much difference of opinion exists. Some sup-καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν ἔσονται ψευδοδιδάσκαλοι, οἵτινες παρεισάξουσιν αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, καὶ τὸν ἀγοράσαντα αὐτοὺς δεσπότην ἀρνούμενοι, ἐπάγοντες ἑαυτοῖς ταχινὴν ἀπώλειαν· (καὶ πολ- 2 Deut. 32. λοὶ ἐξακολουθήσουσιν αὐτῶν ταῖς * ἀσελγείαις, δι' οὓς ἡ ὁδὸς 35. 1 Tim. 6. 5. Tit. 1. 11. τῆς ἀληθείας βλασφημηθήσεται·) [b] καὶ ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ πλα- 3

Jude 4. c Job 4. 18 στοῖς λόγοις ὑμᾶς ἐμπορεύσονται· οἷς τὸ κρῖμα ἔκπαλαι Luke 8. 31. John 8. 44. 1 John 3. 8. οὐκ ἀργεῖ, καὶ ἡ ἀπώλεια αὐτῶν οὐ νυστάζει. [c] Εἰ γὰρ ὁ 4 Jude 6. Rev. 20. 2. Θεὸς ἀγγέλων ἁμαρτησάντων οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλὰ σειραῖς pose them to have been the Gnostics, or Nicolaitans; others, Judaizers, holding opinions similar to those of the Montanists of the second and third centuries.

By the term παρεισάξ. is denoted the surreptitious craft with which the doctrines in question were introduced. By the words αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας they are designated as both heretical and highly pernicious. A more definite charge is couched in the next words, καὶ τὸν ἀγοράσαντα —ἀρνούμενοι, of which the sense depends upon the reference supposed in δεσπότην, whether to God or to Christ. The latter seems the more correct view; for, as to the passages of the Old Test. cited in proof of the former interpretation, they are not quite to the point, and the latter is almost demanded by ἀγοράσαντα. Thus δεσπ. will, as often, be for Κύριον. We are not, however, to understand that they denied Jesus to be the Messiah; for otherwise they could not have been Christians at all. We may suppose the meaning to be, that 'they denied him who purchased them (i. e. their Redeemer) to be their Lord.' It would seem that, from a misinterpretation of the words of the Apostles, they stumbled at the descriptions of the majesty of Jesus Christ and the ineffable glory of his second advent, and regarded the account of the Apostles on that subject as a fable devised to hold the disciples in subjection. But if so, they must have denied the proper Deity of Jesus Christ, and consequently the Atonement, together with other fundamental doctrines of the Gospel. It is probable that they held opinions not very different from those which paved the way for Pelagianism.

2. ἀσελγείαις.] This (for the common reading ἀπωλείαις), found in almost all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions, except the Erasmian and Stephanic ones, has been preferred by almost all Critics, was adopted by Wetstein, and has been edited by Bengel, Griesb., Matthæi, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz, rightly; for both external and internal evidence are in favour of it. 'Ασελγ. may be rendered 'dissolute doctrines and practices.' By ἡ ὁδὸς τῆς ἀληθείας is meant the 'truth as it is in Jesus,' the Gospel, or Christian religion. See Note on Acts ix. 2. Βλασφ., 'will be calumniated and regarded as false.'

3. καὶ ἐν πλεονεξίᾳ—ἐμπορεύσονται.] Meaning, it would seem, 'And through covetousness, they will make a mere gain of you (i. e. of teaching you) by fabulous words [hawking about their doctrines as merchandize].' So in a passage of Isæus, p. 70, we have λόγοις πεπλασμένοις ἀξιώσει πιστεύειν ὑμᾶς: and with the expression here, ἐμπορεύσονται, may be compared that of Philo, p. 948, and Themist., p. 298, ἐμπορεύεσθαι φιλοσοφίαν. The word is, indeed, not unfrequently used of making a gain of any thing, but no where else of a person. Consequently here the person must be supposed to stand for the thing, namely, the teaching them.

The doctrines here adverted to were certain factitious ones, unfounded in truth, merely devised ad captandum, and to flatter the corruptions and soothe the weakness of human nature.

— οἷς τὸ κρῖμα, &c.] Here the relative is to be resolved into ἀλλ' ἐκείνοις, scil. ἐκείνων, and at ἔκπαλαι (which is for ἐκ παλαιοῦ χρόνου) supply προγεγραμμένον, or such like, as appears from the parallel passage of Jude 4, ἄνθρωποι οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα. Νυστάζει is for χρονίζεται, as Eurip. Hec. 662, οὔποτ' εὕδει λυπρά σου κηρύγματα, and Æschyl. Theb. 54, καὶ τῶνδε πύστις οὐκ ὄκνῳ χρονίζεται. The sense is, 'But their long denounced sentence lingereth not, nor doth their destruction slumber;' meaning, that 'such persons will surely be punished.'

4—9. Of these verses the purpose is to exemplify the method of God's judgment in such cases, and to verify what was before said, that God visits vice with punishment, and virtue with rewards.

4. εἰ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς ἀγγέλων ἁμαρτησάντων, &c.] In ἁμαρτησάντων there is reference to the rebellion of the fallen angels.

In the expression σειραῖς ζόφου ταρταρώσας (which is one of almost Æschylean boldness) the term ταρταρώσας is supposed to be derived from the Heathen, and σειραῖς ζόφου from the Jewish forms of speaking on this subject; Tartarus being a part of Hades, in which criminals were represented as confined till the day of judgment. Be that as it may, the fallen angels here are not spoken of as being in actual torments, but only adjudged to them, and meanwhile committed to the security of, chains of darkness; i. e. to places where utter darkness holds them as it were enchained. So Wisd. xvii. 17, of the wicked, ἁλύσει σκότους ἐδέθησαν. In illustrating the expression, the Commentators might have adduced a very similar one in Herodot. v. 77, where, in an Athenian inscription in the Acropolis, it is said of captives held in fetters, Δεσμῷ ἐν ἀχλυόεντι σιδηρέῳ ἔσβεσαν ὕβριν. Finally, the idea here is beautifully expressed by Milton, Parad. Lost. b. vi. l. 739:

'To their prepar'd ill mansion driven down To chains of darkness and th' undying worm.'

For τετηρημένους almost all the best MSS. and early Editions have τηρουμένους, which has been edited by nearly every Critic from Wetstein to Vater.

ζόφου, ταρταρώσας, παρέδωκεν εἰς κρίσιν * τηρουμένους· 5 [d] καὶ ἀρχαίου κόσμου οὐκ ἐφείσατο, ἀλλ' ὄγδοον Νῶε δικαιο- d Gen. 7. 21. 1 Pet. 3. 19, σύνης κήρυκα ἐφύλαξε, κατακλυσμὸν κόσμῳ ἀσεβῶν ἐπάξας· 20.
6 [e] καὶ πόλεις Σοδόμων καὶ Γομόῤῥας τεφρώσας καταστροφῇ e Gen. 19 24. Num. 26. 10.
7 κατέκρινεν, ὑπόδειγμα μελλόντων ἀσεβεῖν τεθεικώς· [f] καὶ Deut. 29. 23. Isa. 13. 19. δίκαιον Λὼτ, καταπονούμενον ὑπὸ τῆς τῶν ἀθέσμων ἐν ἀσελ- Jer. 50. 40. Ezek. 16. 49. Hos. 11. 8.
8 γείᾳ ἀναστροφῆς, ἐῤῥύσατο — [g] βλέμματι γὰρ καὶ ἀκοῇ ὁ Amos 4. 11. Jude 7. δίκαιος, ἐγκατοικῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς, ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας ψυχὴν f Gen. 19. 7, 8, 15.
9 δικαίαν ἀνόμοις ἔργοις ἐβασάνιζεν· [h] οἶδε Κύριος εὐσεβεῖς g Psal. 119. 158. Ezek. 9. 4. ἐκ πειρασμοῦ ῥύεσθαι, ἀδίκους δὲ εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως κολα- h Ps. 34. 17, 19. 1 Cor. 10. 13.
10 ζομένους τηρεῖν· [i] μάλιστα δὲ τοὺς ὀπίσω σαρκὸς ἐν ἐπι- i Jude 4. 7, 8, 10, 16.
θυμίᾳ μιασμοῦ πορευομένους, καὶ κυριότητος καταφρονοῦντας· (τολμηταὶ, αὐθάδεις, δόξας οὐ τρέμουσι βλασφημοῦντες !)
11 [k] ὅπου ἄγγελοι, ἰσχύϊ καὶ δυνάμει μείζονες ὄντες, οὐ φέρουσι k Jude 9.

5. ὄγδοον Νῶε.] Meaning, by an idiom frequent in the best writers, 'Noah with seven others.' Κήρυκα δικαιοσύνης. Meaning, 'a herald to proclaim to the world tidings of the righteousness that is by faith,' and of which it is said, Hebr. xi. 7, that he was himself an heir. Ἐφύλαξε, &c. So in Ecclus. xliv. 17, he is represented as κατάλειμμα τῇ γῇ.

6. καταστροφῇ κατέκρινεν] i. e. 'executed punishment upon them by utter destruction.' See Note on Rom. viii. 3. Ὑπόδειγμα—τεθεικώς, 'having made them a type and example of the future punishment of the wicked.' See Ecclus. xliv. 16.

7. καταπονούμενον — ἀναστροφῆς] 'wearied out by the profligate behaviour of men who trampled on all laws.' With the term here, καταπον., compare Ps. xcv. 10.

8. βλέμματι γὰρ καὶ ἀκοῇ.] These words denote the mode in which he was daily annoyed with witnessing their wicked conduct; as ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας, the time, day after day, continually.

9. οἶδε Κύριος εὐσεβεῖς—τηρεῖν.] 'In the two members, of which this sentence is composed, we have (as Calvin observes) a two-fold answer returned, to quell the uneasy misgivings of the oppressed righteous, when they see the ungodly in such prosperity, flourishing like a green bay-tree, while themselves seem abandoned to hopeless adversity.' To which purpose is a passage of Ps. lxxiii., where the same process of stumbling is described, occasioned by beholding the prosperity of the wicked and the distressful state of the righteous; where the suggestions of frail nature are most exquisitely depicted, and then are introduced, in opposition thereto, the considerations of Divine grace, by a reference, 1. to the examples of the saints; 2. to the difficulty of judging concerning God's dispensations; and, 3. (as here) to the final issue of things at the day of judgment.

Here, then, the Apostle means to say, that 'if God punished formerly the wicked, and preserved the good, he surely, in the exercise of his own wise providence, well knows how, in all future times, to punish the one and preserve the other, either by relieving them out of trial (for such is the import of πειρασμοῦ), or preserving them under it. Thus Lot's trial was, that 'his righteous soul was vexed with witnessing the deeds of the ungodly around him;' and from that trial he was delivered by their being removed out of his way in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, just as the righteous will, at the day of judgment, be delivered from this, as well as all other trials and tribulations, (see Rev. xxi. 4) by the evil being for ever separated from the good. See Matt. xiii. 49.

10. Here what has been before said is now more directly applied to the persons in question, who are most graphically characterized.

— τοὺς ὀπίσω σαρκὸς—πορευομένους.] Render, 'who live conformably to the flesh, in the lust of pollution,' i. e. in carnal and polluting practices. Then is represented their insubordination and rebellion against any such lawful authority as might check their vicious practices; and while (as at ver. 13) setting forth the greatness of their guilt, the Apostle breaks out into a parenthetical exclamation at their wickedness—'Audacious and self-willed are they! they scruple not to speak evil even of rulers in high stations.'

Αὐθάδεις signifies self-pleasers (for αὐτοαδεῖς), self-willed persons, to whom nothing approves itself but their own conceits, and who will have their own way in every thing, and say and do what they please: of which character a spirited sketch is given by Theophrastus, Char. Eth. xv.

11. οὐ φέρουσι κατ' αὐτῶν, &c.] The reference in κατ' αὐτῶν is disputed. Some suppose it to be to δόξας just before; others, to τολμηταὶ, αὐθάδεις. It is, however, better, with Benson and Abp. Newcome, to refer it to ἀγγέλων ἁμαρτ. at ver. 4; unless we read καθ' αὐτῶν (from some MSS. and the Vulgate Version), meaning those of their own body, i. e. the bad angels; which seems placed beyond doubt by the parallel passage of Jude 9. The argument is, that 'the persons in question calumniate those of high reputation and dignity, their brethren, while the angels, exalted as they are above them in power, do not speak calumniously, or with vituperation, of their fellow angels,' even though the very reverse of ἔνδοξοι.

l Jer. 12. 3. Jude 10.
κατ᾽ αὐτῶν παρὰ Κυρίῳ βλάσφημον κρίσιν. [l] Οὗτοι δὲ, (ὡς 12 ἄλογα ζῶα, φυσικὰ, γεγεννημένα εἰς ἅλωσιν καὶ φθορὰν,) ἐν οἷς ἀγνοοῦσι βλασφημοῦντες, ἐν τῇ φθορᾷ αὐτῶν καταm Jude 12.
φθαρήσονται, [m] κομιούμενοι μισθὸν ἀδικίας· ἡδονὴν ἡγούμενοι 13 τὴν ἐν ἡμέρᾳ τρυφὴν, (σπῖλοι καὶ μῶμοι!) ἐντρυφῶντες ἐν ταῖς ‡ ἀπάταις αὐτῶν, συνευωχούμενοι ὑμῖν· ὀφθαλμοὺς 14 ἔχοντες μεστοὺς μοιχαλίδος καὶ ἀκαταπαύστους ἁμαρτίας· δελεάζοντες ψυχὰς ἀστηρίκτους, καρδίαν γεγυμνασμένην n Num. 22. 7. 21. Jude 11.
‡ πλεονεξίαις ἔχοντες, κατάρας τέκνα! [n] Καταλιπόντες 15 [τὴν] εὐθεῖαν ὁδὸν, ἐπλανήθησαν, ἐξακολουθήσαντες τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ τοῦ Βοσὸρ, ὃς μισθὸν ἀδικίας ἠγάπησεν, ἔλεγξιν 16 δὲ ἔσχεν ἰδίας παρανομίας· ὑποζύγιον ἄφωνον ἐν ἀνθρώπου φωνῇ φθεγξάμενον ἐκώλυσε τὴν τοῦ προφήτου παραφρονίαν.
o Jude 12, 13.
[o] Οὗτοί εἰσι πηγαὶ ἄνυδροι, νεφέλαι ὑπὸ λαίλαπος ἐλαυ- 17

12—16. Here the charge is brought home, and the persons in question described, under various characters; 1. as, like the animals, devoid of reason, and guided solely by their animal senses and instincts (as if created only to be taken and destroyed), and thereby speaking evil of things which they do not understand, viz., the laws and measures of their rulers. 'These (it is added) shall utterly and justly perish, even by their own corrupt practices.' (See Jude 10.)

12. Φυσικὰ is put, probably by an idiom of the common Greek dialect, for ψυχικὰ (which is used in the parallel passage of Jude 19); denoting 'those who are governed by the animal passions of human nature, and consequently are not under the guidance of the spirit or soul.' I have, with Scholz and others, pointed the word off, because it cannot be referred to what goes before, but belongs to what follows, as denoting not the animals, but the persons so designated.

13, 14. Here are introduced more special charges,—those of gross sensuality, nay, profligacy.

13. ἡδονὴν ἡγούμενοι τὴν ἐν ἡμ. τρ.] To indulge in sensual luxury, even in the day-time, was by the ancients ever regarded as a mark of utter sottishness. See 1 Thess. v. 7, and Note.

— ἐντρυφῶντες ἐν ταῖς ἀπάταις, &c.] These words seem intended to further unfold the idea at ἡδονὴν—τρυφὴν preceding, and the full sense may be as follows: 'who, by means of their deceits, contrive to live luxuriously; constant attendants at your feasts.' This mode of taking the passage yields an excellent sense, and involves no harshness; for ἐν may very well be taken for by, and ἐντρυφῶντες for ἐν τρυφῇ διάγοντες; since of ἐντρυφᾷν in the sense luxuriari, examples may be seen in Steph. Thes. Add Is. lv. 2, φάγεσθε ἀγαθὰ, καὶ ἐντρυφήσει ἐν ἀγαθοῖς ἡ ψυχὴ ὑμῶν.

14. ὀφθ. μεστ. μοιχ.] i. e. 'by their looks they show the lasciviousness of their hearts.' So Eurip. Hippol. 525, Ἔρως, ἔρως, ὃ κατ᾽ ὀμμάτων Στάζεις πόθον. See also Note at 1 John ii. 16.

— ἀκαταπαύστους ἁμαρτίας] 'and that cannot cease from impure imaginations or lascivious practices.'

— δελεάζοντες, &c.] Here we have another trait; namely, their craft in beguiling unstable persons, and in making the utmost advantage that was possible by their trickery. By the plural in πλεον. are denoted the various arts by which they extracted gain from their deluded votaries; and by the expression γεγυμν. the habitual mode of doing the thing. For πλεονεξίαις, however, some MSS. have πλεονεξίας, which has been edited by Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz.

The Apostle then exclaims, with reference to their whole character (perhaps having in mind Is. lvii. 4, τέκνα ἀπωλείας), κατάρας τέκνα! which is usually regarded as put for τέκνα κατάρατα. But it rather has the stronger sense of 'persons devoted to destruction.'

15. καταλιπόντες—ἐπλανήθησαν.] Meaning, that 'they have utterly forsaken "the right way" of scriptural truth and holy obedience, and quite gone astray; not merely from an erroneous judgment, but from the corruption of their hearts.' The force of the comparison, ἐξακολ., &c., rests on this, that 'as Balaam, for the gratification of his own inveterate covetousness, counselled the Moabites to entice the Israelites to illicit connexion with their women, and thus lead them into idolatry, and draw on them the heavy punishment of God; so these false teachers, by giving Christians a licence to commit immorality, in like manner called forth the vengeance of God.' Μισθὸν ἀδικίας ἠγ. Of the moral character of Balaam we know nothing; but it is plainly implied in the Old Test. history, and confirmed by Philo, Josephus, and all the Jewish Interpreters, that covetousness tempted him to commit so base a violation of his duty as a Prophet;—just as in the case of these false teachers, avarice and sensuality tempted them to falsify the Gospel, that they might make it the more productive of gain, to expend on their own lusts. There is great force in the term ἠγάπησαν, with which I would compare, from Creon in Soph. Antig. 1048 (of Tiresias), τἀδικεῖν φιλῶν.

Τὴν before εὐθεῖαν is in several MSS. and early Editions not found; and has been cancelled by Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz.

νόμεναι, οἷς ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς αἰῶνα τετήρηται.
18 [p] Ὑπέρογκα γὰρ ματαιότητος φθεγγόμενοι δελεάζουσιν ἐν p Acts 2. 40. Jude 16.
ἐπιθυμίαις σαρκὸς, ἀσελγείαις, τοὺς ὄντως ἀποφυγόντας τοὺς supra 1. 4.
19 ἐν πλάνῃ ἀναστρεφομένους· [q] ἐλευθερίαν αὐτοῖς ἐπαγγελ- q John 8. 34. Rom. 6. 16.
λόμενοι, αὐτοὶ δοῦλοι ὑπάρχοντες τῆς φθορᾶς· ᾧ γάρ τις Gal. 5. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 16 20 ἥττηται, τούτῳ καὶ δεδούλωται. [r] Εἰ γὰρ ἀποφυγόντες τὰ Jude 4. r Matt. 12. 43, &c. μιάσματα τοῦ κόσμου ἐν ἐπιγνώσει τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Σωτῆρος Heb. 6. 4. & 10. 26.
Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τούτοις δὲ πάλιν ἐμπλακέντες ἡττῶνται, 21 γέγονεν αὐτοῖς τὰ ἔσχατα χείρονα τῶν πρώτων. [s] Κρεῖττον s Luke 12. 47, 48.
γὰρ ἦν αὐτοῖς μὴ ἐπεγνωκέναι τὴν ὁδὸν τῆς δικαιοσύνης, ἢ ἐπιγνοῦσιν ἐπιστρέψαι ἐκ τῆς παραδοθείσης αὐτοῖς ἁγίας 22 ἐντολῆς. [t] Συμβέβηκε δὲ αὐτοῖς τὸ τῆς ἀληθοῦς παροιμίας· t Prov. 26. 11.
'Κύων ἐπιστρέψας ἐπὶ τὸ ἴδιον ἐξέραμα· καί· Ὗς λουσαμένη, εἰς κύλισμα βορβόρου.'
1 III. [a] ΤΑΥΤΗΝ ἤδη, ἀγαπητοὶ, δευτέραν ὑμῖν γράφω a Supra 1. 13.

17. οὗτοί εἰσι—ἐλαυν.] A most lively comparison, to designate the persons in question as promising much, but constantly disappointing the expectations of those who seek the refreshment of Gospel truth;—specious, but deceiving, as wells destitute of water, and clouds that bring no rain; than which no disappointment can, in Eastern countries, be greater, and of which the former sometimes not merely disappoint, but lure travellers to destruction. By the highly figurative expression (formed on the image of Tartarus, adverted to supra v. 4) is designated a place and state of woe the most dismal, formed on the image supra v. 4. Compare Matt. viii. 12. xxii. 13. xxv. 30.

18. ὑπέρογκα—φθεγγ., &c.] We have here the same sentiment as at ver. 17; the meaning being, that these persons were not only wicked themselves, but the cause of wickedness in others. At ὑπέρογκα supply ῥήματα. So Aristoph. Ran. 971, speaks of certain diction as οἰδοῦσαν ὑπὸ κομπασμάτων καὶ ῥημάτων ἐπαχθῶν. Thus in ματαιότ. there is an allusion to that folly (κατ' ἐξοχὴν), boasting. See 2 Cor. xii. 11.

—τοὺς ὄντως ἀποφυγόντας, &c.] 'those who had [once] disengaged themselves from,' &c.

19. ἐλευθερίαν.] Meaning, liberty both religious (as releasing them from what was thought unnecessary strictness of life), and, probably, political. This they offered,—but most inconsistently, themselves being slaves of corruption and vice. The best comment here is John viii. 34, and Rom. vi. 16—20; compare also Eurip. Hec. 858, seqq. and Plato de Repub. ix. p. 255. The next words, ᾧ γάρ τις ἥττ., &c., have the air of a proverb, and were, we may suppose, of popular application.

20. This gives another reason why black darkness is reserved for such offenders (Newcome); q. d. 'If professed Christians, having escaped the pollutions of the world, by the knowledge of Christ,' were again, by the artful seduction of false teachers, entangled in those polluting practices, and so 'overcome' as habitually to indulge in their corrupt inclinations, their 'latter end,' after they had learned thus to pervert the Gospel, would be far worse than the beginning, when they had sinned in ignorance; as they must have done violence to far clearer light and fuller conviction. (Scott.) So in Thucydides, i. 86, we have διπλασίας ζημίας ἄξιοί εἰσιν, ὅτι ἀντ' ἀγαθῶν κακοὶ γεγένηνται.

21. This is illustrative of the last clause of the preceding verse, and is meant to show that apostasy, or living unworthy of their Christian profession, is worse than a state of heathenism, since ignorance would then have been some excuse; whereas, by sinning against knowledge, they were at once more condemned and more hardened.

22. The baseness of the conduct of such persons is further illustrated by an apt comparison, formed on two proverbs; one derived from Prov. xxvi. 11, and the other probably current in the East,—both of them representing in the strongest light the folly of those who returned to vices which they had before abandoned. So in Arrian, Epict. iv. 11. 29, we have ἀπελθὲ καὶ χοίρῳ διαλέγου, ἵν' ἐν βορβόρῳ μὴ κυλίηται. Ἐξέραμα is from ἐξεράω, which signifies not only to vomit, but to spit. Κύλισμα βορβόρου means, lit., their wallowing place.

III. The Apostle here declares, that he wrote this, as he had done the former Epistle, to put them in mind of Christ's final advent to judgment, and to induce them to prepare for it. But he warns them that they must expect to hear the notion ridiculed by foolish and profane persons. To show how ill founded is this ridicule, he intimates that the first constitution of the earth was such as to occasion the Flood, and that the present frame tends to a dissolution by fire, which will take place at its appointed time; and that the reason why it is delayed is, to give men an opportunity for previous preparation; but that when the purposes of God are accomplished, the day of the Lord will come suddenly, and the world be destroyed by an universal conflagration; after which there will be new heavens and a new earth for the righteous. Accordingly, that it highly behoved them to prepare for that awful consummaἐπιστολὴν, ἐν αἷς διεγείρω ὑμῶν ἐν ὑπομνήσει τὴν εἰλικρινῆ διάνοιαν· μνησθῆναι τῶν προειρημένων ῥημάτων ὑπὸ τῶν 2 ἁγίων προφητῶν, καὶ τῆς τῶν ἀποστόλων ἡμῶν ἐντολῆς, τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Σωτῆρος· [b] τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες, ὅτι 3 ἐλεύσονται ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν ἐμπαῖκται, κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας αὑτῶν ἐπιθυμίας πορευόμενοι, [c] καὶ λέγοντες· "Ποῦ 4 ἐστιν ἡ ἐπαγγελία τῆς παρουσίας αὐτοῦ; ἀφ' ἧς γὰρ οἱ πατέρες ἐκοιμήθησαν, πάντα οὕτω διαμένει ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κτίσεως." [d] Λανθάνει γὰρ αὐτοὺς τοῦτο θέλοντας, ὅτι οὐρανοὶ 5 ἦσαν ἔκπαλαι, καὶ γῆ ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ δι' ὕδατος συνεστῶσα, τῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ λόγῳ, [e] δι' ὧν ὁ τότε κόσμος ὕδατι κατα- 6 κλυσθεὶς ἀπώλετο. [f] Οἱ δὲ νῦν οὐρανοὶ καὶ ἡ γῆ τῷ αὐτοῦ 7 λόγῳ τεθησαυρισμένοι εἰσὶ, πυρὶ τηρούμενοι εἰς ἡμέραν κρί-b 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Tim. 3. 1. Jude 18. c Isa. 5. 19. Jer. 17. 15. Ezek. 12. 22 d Gen. 1. 6, 9. Ps. 24. 2. & 33. 6. & 136. 6. e Gen. 7. 10, 21.

f Ps. 102. 27. Isa. 51. 6. Heb. 1. 11. 2 Thess. 1. 8. infra v. 10.

tion by holiness and stedfastness in the faith. (Benson.)

1. ταύτην—γράφω ἐπιστολήν.] Meaning, 'This is the second Epistle, beloved, that I am writing to you.' 'Εν αἷς, 'in [both of] which,' for ἐν ᾗ, ὡς καὶ ἐν τῇ πρώτῃ. Τὴν εἰλ. διάνοιαν, 'your pure and well-disposed minds.' The Commentators cite from Plato the phrase εἰλικρινεῖ τῇ διανοίᾳ χρώμενος. So an Apocryphal writer in Fabr. Cod. Ps. v. t. i. 734, has εἰλ. καὶ καθαρὰ διάθεσις.

3. τοῦτο πρῶτον γινώσκοντες, &c.] By πρῶτον is to be understood not so much what was to happen first, as a premise, from whence they might conclude they ought to remember the predictions of the Prophets, and the injunctions of the Apostles; see Benson, and the Note on i. 20. At ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τ. ἡμ. supply μέρους, hereafter; the expression not denoting any precise time, but either a remote or soon approaching one, as best suits the context. After τῶν ἡμερῶν many MSS. and almost all the Versions add ἐν ἐμπαιγμονῇ, which is approved by most Critics, and introduced into the text by Bengel, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. Whether taken with ἐμπ. for σὺν ἐμπ., or with ἐλεύσονται, the addition certainly strengthens the sense; denoting 'shameless scoffers.' But there is not sufficient external authority to warrant its adoption; and internal evidence is rather against it. The term ἐμπαιγμονὴ is, I believe, found no where else.

4. λέγοντες· Ποῦ ἐστιν, &c.] By αὐτοῦ is plainly meant Christ. From the character of the persons, this cannot import any inquiry into the promises of Christ's coming in Scripture; nor is it to be thought (with some) that they expected his second coming, and thought it long. It is merely to be regarded as a popular form of expression, in which was implied a disbelief that he would come at all, and an insinuation that there was no hope of an event so long delayed. By his coming is meant his coming to judgment, as appears from the answer to those scoffers, vv. 5—13.

— ἀφ' ἧς γὰρ—κτίσεως.] q. d. 'Our fathers have successively died, nor has any one come to life; and as from the creation of the world all things are carried on by an alternate course of living and of dying, so does the order of nature remain the same. Thus they will fancy that what has been so long deferred will never come to pass.' (Rosenmuller.)

5—7. To this objection of the scoffers, that all things remained the same from the beginning of the creation, and therefore would continue so, St. Peter answers, that this is not the fact; for the world had been once destroyed by water, and would be again by fire. (Rosenmuller.)

5. λανθάνει αὐτοὺς τ. θέλ.] This is commonly supposed to import a wilful ignorance of what they might have known, but cared not to know. But the sense rather seems to be, 'it escapes the notice of those who opine (or give it as their opinion) that,' &c. And so in Herodian, v. 3. 11, we have εἰκόνα ἡλίου ἀνέργαστον εἶναι θέλουσι. By οὐρανοὶ we are to understand, not the ethereal, but the aërial heavens.

Of the words following, καὶ γῆ ἐξ ὕδατος καὶ δι' ὕδατος συνεστῶσα (which are obscure and have been variously understood), the most probable sense appears to be that assigned by Capellus, Kypke, Elsner, Rosenmuller, and Pott, 'the earth, with its atmosphere (i. e. the aërial heaven), being formed out of water, and consisting by means of water;' συνεστ. being for σύστασιν ἔχουσα. So Thales said that πάντα ἐξ ὕδατος συνιστάναι; as also did other philosophers. The Apostle thus means to confute those deriders, by proving that things had not continued as they were from the creation; and that such an assertion supposes utter ignorance on their part of what they might have known, both from the book of Revelation, and, indeed, the book of Nature;—ignorance of the natural constitution of the earth, which, he proceeds to say, is physically ordained to bring on its own destruction by fire at some future period, as it did formerly by water.

6. δι' ὧν.] Some here supply ὑδάτων; others, τῶν οὐρανῶν καὶ τῆς γῆς. I should prefer πραγμάτων; meaning, by which constitution of things.

7. οἱ δὲ νῦν οὐρανοὶ—ἀνθρώπων.] From the circumstantial manner in which the final conflagration of the heavens and the earth is contrasted with the destruction of the old world, it is plain that the Apostle has given, not a figurative, but a real representation of what will hereafter take place.' See Abp. Sharp, in D'Oyly and Mant.

8 σεως καὶ ἀπωλείας τῶν ἀσεβῶν ἀνθρώπων. [g] Ἓν δὲ τοῦτο g Ps. 90. 4. h Isa. 30. 18.
μὴ λανθανέτω ὑμᾶς, ἀγαπητοὶ, ὅτι μία ἡμέρα παρὰ Κυρίῳ Ezek. 18. 23, 33.
9 ὡς χίλια ἔτη, καὶ χίλια ἔτη ὡς ἡμέρα μία. [h] Οὐ βραδύνει & 33. 11. Hab. 2. 3. ὁ Κύριος τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, ὥς τινες βραδυτῆτα ἡγοῦνται· Rom. 2. 4. 1 Tim. 2. 4. infra v. 15.
ἀλλὰ μακροθυμεῖ εἰς ἡμᾶς, μὴ βουλόμενός τινας ἀπολέσθαι, Heb. 10. 37. 1 Pet. 3. 20. & infra 15.
10 ἀλλὰ πάντας εἰς μετάνοιαν χωρῆσαι. [i] Ἥξει δὲ ἡ ἡμέρα i Ps. 102. 27. Isa. 51. 6.
Κυρίου ὡς κλέπτης [ἐν νυκτί]· ἐν ᾗ οἱ οὐρανοὶ ῥοιζηδὸν Matt. 24. 35, 43, 44. 1 Thess. 5. 2. παρελεύσονται, στοιχεῖα δὲ καυσούμενα λυθήσονται, καὶ γῆ καὶ Rev. 3. 3. & 16. 15.
11 τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ ἔργα κατακαήσεται. Τούτων οὖν πάντων λυο- & 20. 11. & 21. 1.
μένων, ποταποὺς δεῖ ὑπάρχειν ὑμᾶς ἐν ἁγίαις ἀναστροφαῖς 12 καὶ εὐσεβείαις, [k] προσδοκῶντας καὶ σπεύδοντας τὴν παρουσίαν k Ps. 50. 3. 2 Thess. 1. 8 τῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμέρας, δι᾽ ἣν οὐρανοὶ πυρούμενοι λυθήσονται, 13 καὶ στοιχεῖα καυσούμενα τήκεται. [l] Καινοὺς δὲ οὐρανοὺς l Isa. 65. 17. & 66. 2.
καὶ γῆν καινὴν κατὰ τὸ ἐπάγγελμα αὐτοῦ προσδοκῶμεν, Rev. 21. 1. m 1 Cor. 1. 8. Phil. 1. 10.
14 ἐν οἷς δικαιοσύνη κατοικεῖ. [m] Διὸ, ἀγαπητοὶ, ταῦτα προσ- 1 Thess. 3. 13. & 5. 23.

8, 9. The Apostle here proceeds to show why the Lord defers the last judgment; namely, out of his long-suffering, and that the sinner may come to repentance; and this he prefaces with a saying found in Ps. xc. 4, and frequent in the Rabbinical writings.

9. οὐ βραδύνει—ἡγοῦνται.] Meaning, 'The Lord does not procrastinate respecting his promises, as some think, [attributing to him] a slowness of performance.' The scoffers had probably said, that either God had really made no such engagement to judge all men according to their works; or that, if he had, he had not leisure to fulfil it. At ἐπαγγ. supply ἕνεκα, quod attinet ad. And by promise is to be understood fulfilment of promise; namely, that he would return to judgment. The argument is, that the delay of the catastrophe in question does not proceed from God's slowness in making his assurance good (by coming to judgment and putting a final end to the mundane system); especially if we consider that the measure of time with the Deity and with men is quite different; time being as nothing to him in whose sight all is eternity; but that he delays from long-suffering, in order that all may have the opportunity of repentance.

10. ἥξει—ἐν νυκτί.] The words ἐν νυκτὶ are in several MSS. and Versions, and some Fathers, not found; and are cancelled by most recent Editors. They are probably an interpolation from 1 Thess. v. 2.

— ῥοιζηδὸν παρελεύσονται] 'with a mighty crash;' ἠχητικὸν, as Hesych. explains. So in Hero ap. Musæum, 339, we have ῥοιζηδὸν προκάρηνος ἀπ' ἠλιβάτου πέσε πύργου. By this we may understand that the world will pass away only as to the purpose it had served; for, as Benson observes, 'it is not necessary to suppose, with some, that the world will be annihilated, or removed with its atmosphere, from its present orbit.'

— στοιχεῖα δὲ καυσ.—κατακ.] Many think that στοιχ. cannot denote the elements properly so called, but the heavenly bodies. But the usual signification of the word may be retained; see Benson. It denotes the component parts, those on which the Creator (as it were) went in the work of creation. By τὰ ἔργα ἐν αὐτῇ are meant the various works of human art and industry. Thus (to use the words of our English Æschylus),

'The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
And all that it inherits, shall dissolve,
And, like the baseless fabric of a vision,
Leave not a wreck behind!'

11. ποταποὺς δεῖ ὑπάρχειν, &c.] We should here have expected first an interrogation, and then an answer to it. The question and answer, however, are intermingled. The interrogation, indeed, here, as often, partakes of the nature of exclamation.

— ἐν ἁγίαις ἀναστροφαῖς καὶ εὐσεβείαις.] Εὐσεβ. is explanatory of ἁγ. ἀναστ. The use of the word in the plural is so rare, that not even the last Edition of Stephens' Thesaurus contains any example. I have, however, met with one in Josephus, Antiq. xviii. 5. 3, οὐδὲν ὠφελεῖ πληθὺς, οὐδ' ἄλλη ἀλκὴ τῶν ἐπιτετευγμένων, δίχα τῶν πρὸς τὸ θεῖον εὐσεβειῶν, 'acts of piety;' in which, as in the present passage, the plural is used with reference to the persons conjointly; by which the plural is required.

12. σπεύδ. τὴν παρ.] Σπεύδ. is well rendered by Prof. Scholefield, 'hastening on,' as Thucyd. vi. 39, κακὰ σπεύδοντες. Yet, though a good literal version, this seems not the full sense of the word, which is rather 'mentally hastening after, or anticipating:' a sense, indeed, communicated by the preceding term; the complete sense of both being, 'earnestly expecting and ardently wishing and anticipating.' Δι' ἣν, scil. ἡμέραν or παρουσίαν. On the next words see Note at vv. 7, 10, and Benson and Macknight.

14, 15. Meaning, 'Wherefore, seeing that ye expect such things [are some time to happen], strive, by being unspotted and blameless, to be found of him in peace; and reckon, [as you justly may] that this long-extended forbearance of the Lord is meant to be our salvation;' i. e. to promote it by giving us an opportunity for working it out.

14. Σπουδάζειν is here used (as at 2 Tim. ii. 15.

δοκοῦντες, σπουδάσατε ἄσπιλοι καὶ ἀμώμητοι αὐτῷ εὑρεθῆναι n Rom. 2. 4. supra v. 9. ἐν εἰρήνῃ· [n] καὶ τὴν τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν μακροθυμίαν σωτηρίαν 15 ἡγεῖσθε. Καθὼς καὶ ὁ ἀγαπητὸς ἡμῶν ἀδελφὸς Παῦλος o Rom. 8. 19. 1 Cor. 15. 24. 1 Thess. 4. 15. κατὰ τὴν αὐτῷ δοθεῖσαν σοφίαν ἔγραψεν ὑμῖν, [o] ὡς καὶ ἐν 16 πάσαις ταῖς ἐπιστολαῖς, λαλῶν ἐν αὐταῖς περὶ τούτων. Ἐν οἷς ἐστι δυσνόητά τινα, ἃ οἱ ἀμαθεῖς καὶ ἀστήρικτοι στρεβλοῦσιν, ὡς καὶ τὰς λοιπὰς γραφὰς, πρὸς τὴν ἰδίαν αὐτῶν p Mark 13. 23. ἀπώλειαν. [p] Ὑμεῖς οὖν, ἀγαπητοὶ, προγινώσκοντες φυλάσ- 17 σεσθε, ἵνα μὴ τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπαχθέντες, ἐκπέσητε τοῦ ἰδίου στηριγμοῦ. αὐξάνετε δὲ ἐν χάριτι καὶ γνώσει τοῦ 18 Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα καὶ νῦν καὶ εἰς ἡμέραν αἰῶνος! ἀμήν.

Hebr. iv. 11, and 2 Pet. i. 10) of diligence in 'working out our salvation' (Phil. ii. 12), and making our calling and election sure, supra i. 10. Αὐτῷ is by the Commentators construed with εὑρεθῆναι, or taken as standing for παρ' αὐτοῦ; but its true construction seems to be with ἄσπιλοι καὶ ἀμώμητοι, as is plain from the parallel passages in Col. i. 22, ἀμώμους καὶ ἀνεγκλήτους κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ, scil. τοῦ Θεοῦ, and Jude 24. Heb. ix. 14, ἄμωμον τῷ Θεῷ. Thus, in the present case, αὐτῷ stands for ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, and at εὑρεθ. may be supplied, from αὐτῷ preceding, παρ' αὐτοῦ. I have pointed accordingly. Ἐν εἰρήνῃ means 'in peace with their great JUDGE,' that 'peace which passeth all understanding.' See Note on Rom. ii. 10.

15. καθὼς καὶ ὁ ἀγαπητὸς, &c.] We may suppose the Apostle to here refer generally to those Epistles of St. Paul which were written to the Asiatic Churches; for though addressed to particular Churches or persons, they were intended for general circulation, and in all of them he has written of the things mentioned, vv. 14, 15; as, for instance, Eph. ii. 3—5. Col. i. 21. 1 Tim. ii. 4.

16. ἐν οἷς ἐστι δυσνόητά τ.—ἀπώλειαν.] Here some difference of opinion exists as to the sense, which mainly depends upon the reading. Instead of the vulg. οἷς, several Versions and some Fathers have αἷς, 'the Epistles;' which is preferred by Beza, Mill, Benson, and Dr. Maltby, in a Sermon on this text, who thinks that 'it agrees far better with the context; though (for reasons which will readily occur to the minds of Critics) the other might, at an early period, usurp its place.' Yet the weight of authority is decidedly in favour of οἷς, which is retained by all the Editors, and preferred by most of the Commentators. By things are meant subjects; though it is probable the Apostle had also in view the difficulty of St. Paul's manner of writing on those subjects, as well as the subjects themselves.

By the term ἀμαθεῖς is to be understood, not so much unlearned, as unacquainted with the subjects there discussed, and the manner of discussing them; including, of course, the style. Ἀστήρικτοι, i. e. having no fixed principles of Christian doctrine to guide them. By τὰς λοιπὰς γραφὰς we must understand all the Scriptures of the New Test. then extant, as well as those of the Old.

— πρὸς τὴν ἰδίαν αὐτῶν ἀπώλειαν.] Render, 'in suam perniciem' (so supra ii. 1, we have αἱρέσεις ἀπωλείας, 'highly pernicious heresies'), 'to their great spiritual injury,' and consequently tending to the perdition of their souls.

17. φυλάσσεσθε.] Lit., 'be on your guard:' a sense of the word rare, though I have noticed it in the Test. xii. Patr. p. 648.

— τῇ τῶν ἀθέσμων πλάνῃ συναπ.] 'hurried away (see Note on Gal. ii. 13) by the error and deceit of those lawless scoffers' mentioned supra ii. 7. In συναπαχ. there is a metaphor taken, Benson thinks, from a torrent; but it is rather (as that at 1 Cor. xii. 2, πρὸς τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα ὡς ἂν ἤγεσθε ἀπαγόμενοι, where see Note, and especially that at Rom. xii. 16) taken from a crowd. Συμπεριενεχθέντες would have been the more usual term. From the verb being here followed by a dative of thing, not person, it is meant to be taken in the secondary sense of 'yielding to.' Of this use (not a little rare) I have noted an example in Joseph. Ant. xv. 10. 4, μὴ συμπεριφ. τοῖς ἐπιτηδεύμασι.

— τοῦ ἰδίου στηριγμοῦ.] Meaning (in opposition to ἀστήρικτοι at ver. 16) constancy in the faith as well as in the purity of doctrine. On the force of the expression ἐκπίπτειν see Note at Gal. v. 4.

18. αὐξάνετε.] Here, as in other verbs, there is implied a notion of endeavour, i. e. 'strive to grow continually:' an injunction, as is truly observed by Bp. Bull, Exam. p. 82, which has no bounds short of the high perfection attainable by the grace of Christ; so that we are held bound always to increase in virtue, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τελείας, as Clem. Alexandrinus says. Whence it is plain that the Romish doctrine of works of supererogation is utterly excluded.

ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΠΡΩΤΗ.

---

1 I. [a] Ὃ ἮΝ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ὃ ἀκηκόαμεν, ὃ ἑωράκαμεν τοῖς a Lu. 24. 39 ὀφθαλμοῖς ἡμῶν, ὃ ἐθεασάμεθα, καὶ αἱ χεῖρες ἡμῶν ἐψηλά- John 1. 1, 14. & 20. 27. 2 Pet. 1. 16.

THIS Epistle has been universally admitted (except by Marcion and the other early heretics) to be from St. John, though the writer's name is neither prefixed nor subjoined; its authenticity being attested at once by external and internal testimony. The time, however, when, and the place where, it was written, are alike uncertain. Some assign to it as early a date as A.D. 68; others, as late a one as the end of the first century. The arguments for an early date probably preponderate; yet there is no sufficient reason, with the generality of Critics, to suppose it written so early as even the year 68. We may rather adopt the opinion of those who think it was written at least after the destruction of Jerusalem, and before the writer's exile to Patmos. Beyond that period we are forbidden to carry it, for certain reasons stated by Benson, Hales, and others. In addition to which, it may be observed that the same reasons of probability, which exist for an early, rather than a late date to St. John's Gospel serve to establish an early date for this Epistle. Though to suppose, with Michaelis and Dr. Hales, that it was even written before the Gospel, is grounded on no proof or verisimilitude; for, as to the argument urged by Michaelis, it has little or no force, and that of Dr. Hales rests on no solid basis, being merely founded on an error of his own in philology, when he assigns to μεμαρτύρηκε (John xix. 35) the sense 'he had delivered the testimony before;' whereas it is plainly to be taken, according to that idiom frequent in Scripture (and especially in St. John's writings), by which the Preterite is used for the Present tense, or rather has the sense of past and present. See Glass, Phil. Sacr. p. 301, and Alt's Gr. Gr. of the New Test. § 55. p. 127. Thus the sense is 'he hath [hereby] testified and doth testify.' And to suppose, with Michaelis, that if St. John had already given a confutation of the heresies he meant to check when he wrote his Gospel, he would have thought it unnecessary to have again declared their falsehood,—that surely makes nothing to the argument; for what is more certain, than that heresies and errors of all kinds require to be refuted over and over again? Nay, one should think it not improbable that Dr. Lardner might be right in assigning 80 as the date, but that the Epistle seems to be a kind of supplement to the Gospel; in short is (as Dr. A. Clarke observes) to the Gospel what a pointed and forcible application is to a sermon. Accordingly Dr. Lücke, in the Introduction to his able work on this Epistle, though he admits the exact time when the Epistle was written to be doubtful, yet maintains one thing to be certain, that it was written subsequently to the Gospel.

The great purpose of St. John in this Epistle was, as Dr. Lücke says, to exhort his readers to constancy and firmness in the faith, to draw their attention to the chief defects in the Christianity commonly professed, but especially to impress on their minds the commandments to sanctification and brotherly love, and thus preserve them from the seductions of Antichrist; but, united therewith, is a subordinate, but yet highly important one, of preserving them from doctrinal error; on the precise nature of which, and the character of the seducers and antichrists, much difference of opinion exists. From the profound investigations of Dr. Lücke, it appears to have been the intent of St. John, in this Epistle, to encounter both the Docetic heresy as to the humanity of Jesus Christ, and the Antinomian heresy of those who, grossly misinterpreting the language of St. Paul as to the νόμος, or revealed Law of God, perverted the Christian liberty into an antichristian libertinism,—confounding all moral distinctions, and deciding as to what was or was not sin, not according to the revealed law of God, but according to an indefinite so called Christian feeling of their own. To guard against this antichristian error, seems to have been one of the immediate occasions of writing the Epistle, though such may not have been its main purpose.

It is probable, then, that the Epistle was written after the death of all the other Apostles; and as to the disputed question respecting the persons to whom it was addressed, there is reason to coincide in the opinion of those who think that it was intended as a kind of circular letter, or general address to all the Christians of all the churches, especially in Asia Minor.

As the present composition has none of the characteristics of an Epistle (being without inscription, salutation, &c.), it has by some (as Michaelis) been thought more proper to denomi-b John 1. 1, 2. Rom. 16. 26. Col. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 1. 10. Tit. 1. 2. c John 17. 21. 1 Cor. 1. 9. d 2 John 12.

φησαν, περὶ τοῦ Λόγου τῆς ζωῆς· ([b] καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ἐφανερώθη, 2 καὶ ἑωράκαμεν, καὶ μαρτυροῦμεν, καὶ ἀπαγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν τὴν ζωὴν τὴν αἰώνιον, ἥτις ἦν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, καὶ ἐφα-νερώθη ἡμῖν·) [c] ὃ ἑωράκαμεν καὶ ἀκηκόαμεν, ἀπαγγέλλομεν 3 ὑμῖν, ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς κοινωνίαν ἔχητε μεθ' ἡμῶν· καὶ ἡ κοι-νωνία δὲ ἡ ἡμετέρα μετὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ μετὰ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [d] καὶ ταῦτα γράφομεν ὑμῖν, ἵνα ἡ 4 nate it a treatise: an opinion, however, ably refuted by Lücke, who well observes that Michaelis, measuring these Epistles by a Pauline standard, does not bear in mind the peculiar manner of St. John, and judges of the form of apostolical literature according to the form of the modern. We may here steer a middle course, regarding this composition as a didactic address, with the internal character, though not the external form, of an Epistle.

The style of this Epistle is, like that of the Gospel, simple and unadorned, and in which the sense is more to be traced from the context, than deduced from the words themselves,—of which the brevity in certain cases occasions no little obscurity,—where, in short, the words in themselves are plain, but the exact import difficult to be determined; or, again, where the sentences, considered separately, are plain, but the connexion between them is by no means clear. Moreover, as Lücke observes, the aphoristic character of the Epistle increases the difficulty of tracing the chain of thought; so that although, upon the whole, it is clear and simple, yet as strict precision is not found, it is occasionally more difficult there to determine the exact sense than in the Epistles of St. Paul.

Finally, this Epistle is characterised by an artless but dignified simplicity, and unaffected mildness and benevolence, united with a paternal authority, by which it has something in it exceedingly impressive—such, in short, as we may emphatically style 'speaking the truth in love.' It is, indeed, in all respects worthy of 'the disciple whom Jesus loved.'

1—4. These verses form a sort of proeme to the Epistle, in which the Apostle commences with adopting the same declaratory style as in his Gospel, entering at once upon the great subject of his present discourse; namely, 'that uncreate and self-existent Excellency (the Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς) which had been from the beginning, as coequal and co-eternal with the Father, and had at length become incarnate for the salvation of men.' Thus the Apostle, as observes Bp. Horsley, opens with the fundamental topics of God's perfections, man's corruption, and Christ's propitiation.

1. ὃ ἦν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, &c.] Of this passage the construction is much cleared by throwing ver. 2 into a parenthesis, according to the punctuation above adopted. Here it has been not a little disputed whether by ὃ ἦν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, and τοῦ Λόγου τῆς ζωῆς, be meant a thing (i.e. the word of eternal life in the Gospel), or a person, namely, the Redeemer, as God manifest in the flesh. That there is a reference to the Gospel is unquestionable; and quite manifest, too, is it that there is a reference to the LOGOS, otherwise, as says Dr. Pye Smith, the plain parallelism with the first verse in the Gospel of St. John will be lost; and indeed this is required by the whole context: though (as the same learned writer observes) it would still remain clear that Christ is personally intended under the epithet (ver. 2) ἡ ζωὴ, 'the life,' 'the eternal life,' and 'that which was from the beginning;' for the predicates to these agents can only be affirmed of a personal agent. Under these circumstances, the best mode of solving the difficulty will be to suppose, with Dr. Lücke, that there is here a two-fold reference—first, to the doctrine of the Gospel, and secondly, to the Logos.

The several expressions ἀκηκόαμεν, ἑωράκαμεν, ἐθεασάμεθα, and ἐψηλάφησαν are meant to denote, by climax, information and knowledge of the most complete kind; ἐθεασάμεθα expressing the idea of closer contemplation and more intimate familiarity than ἑωράκαμεν. In αἱ χεῖρες ἡμῶν ἐψηλάφησαν we have a figurative mode of expressing any thing being ascertained to be true by the most minute examination. So Acts xvii. 27, εἰ ἄραγε ψηλαφήσειαν αὐτὸν καὶ εὕροιεν. From the χεῖρες being here expressed, there may be supposed to be an allusion to what is related in Luke xxiv. 39, and John xx. 27; probably to indirectly refute the notion of some heretics, that Jesus had not a substantial body.

2. ἡ ζωὴ] for ὁ Λόγος τῆς ζωῆς just before. Render, 'And this life (meaning Author of life, and Giver of life, the Word,) was manifested [among us], and we Apostles have seen it, and do witness and declare unto you [the message of] that eternal Life, or Word, which was with the Father (see John i. 1, 2), and was manifested unto us [in the flesh].' See iii. 5. John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

3. ὃ ἑωράκαμεν καὶ ἀκηκ., &c.] 'that [I say] which we have seen and heard, announce we unto you;' as the Apostle had already done in his Gospel, which had probably not long preceded this Epistle.

— καὶ ἡ κοινωνία δὲ ἡ ἡμετέρα, &c.] These words indicate the purpose of the annunciation just mentioned—namely, 'that ye also may participate with us in the benefits of this life or sal vation];' the Apostle here adverting to the nature, in order to show the dignity of that communion, —viz. a participation in the privileges bestowed by God the Father on men, through his Son Jesus Christ. The δὲ may be rendered now.

4. This verse, as Lücke observes, serves to more precisely indicate the object of the present Epistle.

— καὶ ταῦτα γράφομεν ὑμῖν, ἵνα, &c.] 'And [accordingly] these things write we unto you, that your spiritual joy (that joy in the Lord spoken of in Phil. iii. 1. iv. 4,) [which you have from that communion] may be complete.' This joy, it is shown further on, would alone be attained by faith, 5 χαρὰ ὑμῶν ᾖ πεπληρωμένη. [e] Καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ * ἀγγε- e John 1. 9. & 8. 12.

λία, ἣν ἀκηκόαμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀναγγέλλομεν ὑμῖν, ὅτι ὁ & 9. 5. & 12. 35, 36.
6 Θεὸς φῶς ἐστι, καὶ σκοτία ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν οὐδεμία. Ἐὰν εἴπωμεν ὅτι κοινωνίαν ἔχομεν μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐν τῷ σκότει 7 περιπατῶμεν, ψευδόμεθα, καὶ οὐ ποιοῦμεν τὴν ἀλήθειαν· [f] ἐὰν f Heb. 9. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 19. Rev. 1. 5.
δὲ ἐν τῷ φωτὶ περιπατῶμεν, ὡς αὐτός ἐστιν ἐν τῷ φωτὶ, κοινωνίαν ἔχομεν μετ' ἀλλήλων, καὶ τὸ αἷμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ 8 τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ καθαρίζει ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ πάσης ἁμαρτίας. [g] Ἐὰν g 1 Kings 8. 46. εἴπωμεν ὅτι ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔχομεν, ἑαυτοὺς πλανῶμεν, καὶ ἡ 2 Chron. 6. 36. Job 9. 2.
9 ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν. [h] Ἐὰν ὁμολογῶμεν τὰς ἁμαρτίας Prov. 20. 9. Eccl. 7. 20. James 3. 2. ἡμῶν, πιστός ἐστι καὶ δίκαιος, ἵνα ἀφῇ ἡμῖν τὰς ἁμαρτίας, h Ps. 32. 5. Prov. 28. 13.
10 καὶ καθαρίσῃ ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ πάσης ἀδικίας. ἐὰν εἴπωμεν ὅτι οὐχ ἡμαρτήκαμεν, ψεύστην ποιοῦμεν αὐτὸν, καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν.

as evinced in a life agreeable to the precepts of the Gospel.

5. καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν, &c.] Here, and in the verses following, St. John more fully opens the nature of that message which the Apostles had heard from Jesus Christ, and were to deliver to the world.

For ἐπαγγελία, ἀγγελία is edited, from many MSS., Versions, Fathers, and early Editions, by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; and rightly; for ἐπαγγ. is evidently a gloss. The sense here seems to include the notions of message and declaration. To show the true nature of the doctrine contained in this ἀγγελία, the Apostle lays down, in the words following, a fundamental and unquestionable position, that 'God is the great Fountain of light and purity, unsullied by any shadow of darkness or pollution whatever.'

6. The Apostle here means to argue, that as this is the nature of God, the doctrines and precepts which come from him must be of the same kind; true religion may be distinguished from counterfeit by this criterion; and especially his spiritual worshippers, who really have communion with him, may be known by their conformity to him. (Scott.)

— καὶ ἐν τῷ σκότει περιπ.] 'and yet live in the habitual commission of impurity and vice.' For such is the full sense; see Eph. v. 8. Οὐ ποιοῦμεν τὴν ἀλήθ., 'we do not act agreeably to the doctrine of truth in the Gospel.' The expression ποιεῖν ἀλήθειαν is one peculiar to St. John, and, as Luke observes, corresponds to that of St. Paul, Eph. iv. 15, ἀληθεύειν. By having communion with God is meant being true Christians. Comp. 2 Cor. vi. 14.

7. Here are strongly contrasted the blessed effects of the opposite conduct.

— ἐὰν δὲ ἐν τῷ φωτὶ περιπατῶμεν, &c.] Meaning to say (as Lücke expresses it) that 'only he who is in deed and in truth in communion with God, and accordingly like God himself, is in the light, and likewise removes from himself all darkness, and walks in the divine light (ἐν τῷ φωτὶ), i. e. strives to become like unto God,—only such an one is a true Christian,—only such an one really belongs to the holy fraternal community of Christians,—only such an one can become conscious of Christ's redeeming power, and experience its effect on himself.' The expression κοινωνίαν μετ' ἀλλήλων must, from the context (see ver. 6), denote the holding mutual communion with God, and he with us; implying that communion of the saints elsewhere spoken of.

— καὶ τὸ αἷμα Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, &c.] In these words (forming the counterpart to the preceding) we have pointed out the blessed effects of that communion, and consequent imitation of the Divine perfections. Render, 'And [then] the blood (i. e. sacrifice) of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all [repented] sin;' namely, by ratifying the covenant of pardon to the truly penitent. See infra ii. 2, and Bp. Bull's Harm. p. 56.

8—10. While the Apostle strenuously insists on the necessity of an habitual holy walk, as the effect and evidence of the knowledge of God in Christ Jesus, and of communion with him; he guards with as much care against self-righteous pride, as against an antinomian perversion of the Gospel. (Scott.)

8. ἐὰν εἴπωμεν ὅτι ἁμαρτίαν οὐκ ἔχομεν, &c.] For those are said to deny that they have sinned, who deny that they have incurred guilt by sin, and so either excuse or palliate what they have done, and dissemble the fault.

— ἑαυτοὺς πλανῶμεν, καὶ ἡ ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν.] Meaning, that 'they who so speak or think only deceive themselves, and truth and holiness have no place in their hearts' (see Bp. Bull's Harm. p. 56). This assertion is repeated at ver. 10, with the additional declaration, that by thus denying the consciousness of sin in ourselves, we do not only deceive ourselves, but make God a liar, i. e. (by a form of expression occurring also at Job xxiv. 25) we contradict what he has himself declared, that 'all have sinned and come short of the glory of God' (Rom. iii. 20. 23), and in short renounce his word (ὁ λόγος αὐτοῦ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν ἡμῖν); his word (i. e. his revelation in the Gospel, see John v. 38) has no place in or about our hearts. See James i. 21.

9. To those on the contrary, who are convinced of, and acknowledge, sin (ἐὰν ὁμολογῶμεν τὰς a Rom. 8. 34. 1 Tim. 2. 5. Heb. 7. 24, 25. & 9. 24. b John 4. 42. Rom. 3. 25. 2 Cor. 5. 18. Col. 1. 20. infra 4. 10, 14.

II. [a] ΤΕΚΝΙΑ μου, ταῦτα γράφω ὑμῖν, ἵνα μὴ ἁμάρ- 1 τητε· καὶ ἐάν τις ἁμάρτῃ, παράκλητον ἔχομεν πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν, Δίκαιον, [b] καὶ αὐτὸς ἱλασμός ἐστι 2 περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν· οὐ περὶ τῶν ἡμετέρων δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ περὶ ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου. Καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκο- 3 μεν, ὅτι ἐγνώκαμεν αὐτὸν, ἐὰν τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν.

ἁμαρτίας), humbly casting themselves on the mercy of God for repented and forsaken sin,— to these, it is shown, 'God is faithful to forgive them their sins,' &c.; i. e. he is so faithful to his promises, and just to his covenant engagements [to Christ their surety], as to forgive them their sins, and purify them from all unrighteousness. For such is, I apprehend, the true import of the terms πιστὸς and δίκαιος. 'God (as Lücke observes) is faithful to his promises because he is righteous; his righteousness makes him keep what he has promised and revealed as the law of the New Covenant, that the repentant and reforming sinner shall receive from him free pardon of former offences, and a new power of life.' 'In short, this (as observes Bp. Pearson) is the comfort of the Gospel, that as it discovers sin within us, so it propounds a remedy unto us; and so long as we can offend, so long may we apply ourselves unto God by repentance, and be renewed by his grace, and pardoned by his mercy.'

II. 1—11. The same argument is here continued; and to promote that holiness, which it is the great business of the Apostle to recommend in this Epistle, he urges the propitiation and intercession of Christ, and the necessity of showing our love to God by Christian love and charity, and by overcoming that immoderate love of the world so inconsistent with the love of God.

1. ταῦτα γράφω ὑμῖν, ἵνα, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'his great purpose in writing what he is now writing, is to warn them against sin, that they may not fall into it,' i. e. wilfully and habitually.

— καὶ ἐάν τις ἁμάρτῃ, παράκλητον ἔχομεν, &c.] Meaning, that 'if, indeed, any one (through human frailty) do sin, he need not despair; for in that case we have an advocate or intercessor with the Father;' i. e. one who, standing at the right hand of God, intercedes for us with God, or, as it is said in Hebr. vii. 25. ix. 34, prays for us as the eternal High Priest; see Note on John xiv. 16. So in Philo we have the terms παρακαλεῖν and παράκλητος frequently used of the Jewish High Priest interceding with God for the sins of the people.

From the absence of the Article at Δίκαιον Bp. Middleton thinks that we are forbidden to take it (as is commonly done) for τὸν Δίκαιον. And while, on the one hand, he is not for the disjunction of Δίκ. from the proper name, and uniting it (as is done by Benson, Wakefield, and most recent Commentators) with παράκλ., he, on the other hand, thinks the version 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' beyond the original. He would, therefore, render, 'Jesus Christ, a righteous person.' Yet to assign so frigid a sense merely because such seems required by the canons of the Greek Article, is surely to defend the Greek of the Apostle at the expense of something of far more consequence; and to rest thus much on a minute propriety, in a writer so little exact as St. John, is any thing but judicious. Moreover, the rendering of our common Version, 'the Righteous,' is demanded by the context, from which it plainly appears that Δίκαιον is to be referred not to παράκλητον, which precedes, but to ἱλασμὸς, which follows. So Lücke well remarks that the words καὶ αὐτὸς, ver. 2, are not causal, but explicative, equivalent to idemque ille, and standing, indeed, by a use frequent in St. John, for the relative ὅς; it being here the purpose of the Apostle to show that the office of Christ as Intercessor with God is founded on this, that he himself [the Righteous] became the ἱλασμὸς (answering to ἱλαστὴς in Levit. vi. 6, and often in the Septuagint) for our sins. Certainly there was a propriety in here styling Jesus Christ the Righteous or Just one (as Acts iii. 14. vii. 52. xxii. 14), with allusion to that suffering of 'the just for the unjust' (1 Pet. iii. 18), whereby he made atonement for our sins. In short, the title was here introduced (as Macknight observes) to make us sensible of the dignity of our Advocate, and of the efficacy of his Intercession on our behalf, founded on the merit of his death; see Dr. A. Clarke, and Mr. Scott. Finally, we may here suppose Δίκαιον put for τὸν Δίκαιον, on nearly the same principle as Χριστὸς, and sometimes Υἱὸς, is found to dispense with the Article; namely, because the particular individual is so familiar to the minds of those addressed as not to need being defined.

2. περὶ ὅλου τοῦ κόσμου.] Meaning, all mankind, the whole community of mankind, comprehending men of every description, good and bad, believers and unbelievers (see the Consecration Prayer in our Communion Service); the 'whole world,' as Dr. Barrow well remarks, being here, as often in St. John, said in contradistinction from all Christians, to denote all such as had not embraced Christianity. So at 1 Tim. iv. 10, it is affirmed that God 'is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe;' and at John iv. 42, and infra iv. 14, Christ is said to be 'the Saviour of the world.' 'Hence,' as observes Bp. Beveridge, 'all particular persons comprehended under that general designation are capable of receiving the benefit of Christ's sufferings, if they will but apply them rightly to themselves.' So speaking, then, 'the Apostle (as Lücke observes) refers to the distinction between Christians and non-Christians generally; and that, we may suppose, in order to check the self-complacent pride of Christian particularism and spiritual pride against the world that lay in error and sin; by directing the attention of believers to God's universal grace.'

3—6. Here, by way of further unfolding what was said supra i. 5, 6, the Apostle shows the necessity of repentance and reformation; evincing that a mere outward profession, unaccompanied by holiness of life, is vain and fruitless; also that

4 [c] ὁ λέγων· “Ἔγνωκα αὐτὸν,” καὶ τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ μὴ [c Supra 1. 6. infra 4. 20.]
5 τηρῶν, ψεύστης ἐστὶ, καὶ ἐν τούτῳ ἡ ἀλήθεια οὐκ ἔστιν. [d] ὃς [d John 13. 35. & 14. 21, 23. infra 4. 12, 13.]
δ᾽ ἂν τηρῇ αὐτοῦ τὸν λόγον, ἀληθῶς ἐν τούτῳ ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ τετελείωται. Ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν, ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ 6 ἐσμέν. [e] Ὁ λέγων ἐν αὐτῷ μένειν, ὀφείλει, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος [e John 15. 4, 5. 1 Pet. 2. 21.]
7 περιεπάτησε, καὶ αὐτὸς οὕτως περιπατεῖν. [f] Ἀδελφοὶ, οὐκ [f Infra 3. 11. 2 John 5.] ἐντολὴν καινὴν γράφω ὑμῖν, ἀλλ᾽ ἐντολὴν παλαιὰν, ἣν the only sure test of a saving knowledge of Christianity is an habitual obedience to God's commandments.

3. γινώσκομεν.] Render, 'we may know.' Ἐγνώκαμεν, i. e. 'have a knowledge of his will, or what he would have us to do;' the word having here, as Lücke observes, a practical sense; namely, as far as the knowledge of God leads men to obedience to God's commandments. Αὐτὸν, indeed, is most commonly referred to Christ, as being the nearer antecedent; but by some eminent Commentators (as Calvin, Beza, and Piscator) it is referred to God the Father, as the predominating grammatical subject in the preceding section; and that, as Lücke shows, very properly; since ver. 2 is merely parenthetical.

That this passage has nothing to do with the doctrine of Assurance has been fully evinced by Cudworth, in an admirable Discourse on this text, who well observes, that 'the best assurance that any one can have of his interest in God is the conformity of his soul to God.'

4. ὁ λέγων· Ἔγνωκα, &c.] The sentiment here is the same with, or very similar to, that further on, ver. 9; the test in either case being deficient, and consequently the pretence being evinced to be false.

5. ὃς δ᾽ ἂν τηρῇ, &c.] Meaning, that 'he who keepeth God's commandments is he alone who truly loves God; since in him love produces its proper effect, and is carried to its due height;' see 2 Cor. xii. 9. From the context it fully appears that here ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ cannot mean (as many Commentators explain) the love of God to us (as at iv. 9), but our love to God; as infra v. 15. iii. 16. v. 3, and often in the Gospel of St. John. With respect to the term τετελείωται, this is to be taken in a qualified sense. See Calvin.

In the next words we have the same sentiment as before, with the substitution of the synonymous phrase ἐν αὐτῷ εἶναι. This and other phrases occurring in St. John's writings, denoting communion with God, are meant to denote moral assimilation to God, which can only be attained by the profession and practice of the religion he enjoins; see more in Dr. Isaac Barrow, in D'Oyly and Mant. To this claim, namely, of abiding in God (on which and the consequences of the contrary, see John xv. 2), is, at ver. 6, applied the same test to prove its reality as at i. 5. 7, on communion with God; namely, whether the conduct be habitually conformed to the example of God, as consistent disciples imitate their master; with reference to the example of Jesus Christ, 'the righteous,' who, while on earth, always did that which was well-pleasing to the Father (John viii. 29), keeping his commandments, and abiding in his love (John xv. 10).

7. ἀδελφοὶ, οὐκ ἐντολὴν καινὴν, &c.] On the particular commandment meant by the Apostle in this and the next verse a difference of opinion exists. Some suppose it to be the injunction to the love of God and obedience to him contained in the immediately preceding verses, 3—6; while others understand him to allude to the commandment in the following verses, to 'love one another as Christ had loved them.' Now, this precept might be called old, as having been inculcated from the beginning of the Gospel by Christ himself, and recorded in the Apostle's Gospel, xiii. 34, 35, to which passage he probably alludes. And yet, though an old commandment, it might, on the other hand (πάλιν, as in Matt. iv. 7), be called new, either as being Christ's new commandment,—that first enjoined by him so as to be made the badge of distinction to the true professors of his religion,—or because urged from new and superior motives and obligations, and enforced by a new and perfect example:—new also, if we consider the standard to which the duty was raised, καθὼς ἠγάπησα ὑμᾶς, and thus to be performed in a new manner, and made a peculiar characteristic of the Christian religion. In fact, the precept, if not absolutely new, as being a part of the law of nature, and a precept of the Jewish religion, was yet new as regarded the persons to whom it was promulgated, considering the sentiments and practice of the age, when selfishness had almost eaten out all practical religion, Thus considered, it might be regarded as new, both with respect to Christ and to themselves; for such seems to be the import of the words ὅ ἐστιν ἀληθὲς ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, which I have thrown into a parenthesis; whereby will be removed the great difficulty of making the words ὅτι ἡ σκοτία παράγεται—φαίνει connect with the preceding. They refer to what was just before said, πάλιν ἐντολὴν καινὴν γράφω ὑμῖν, and may either be understood, as some suppose them (see Whitby and Bp. Horsley), to assign a reason for calling the precept of brotherly love a new commandment, namely, as receiving additional authority from the light of the Gospel; or, as meant to suggest why this new precept should be observed in a new and far more perfect manner; namely, since the comparative darkness of Judaism is fast passing away, and the true light of Gospel truth is shining among them in full splendour; and they may therefore well be expected to evince the works of light, inasmuch as Christians might be expected to be more exact in their obedience to God, and more abounding in love to one another and to all men, than ever believers had been under the darker dispensation of the Law. Thus hinting an admonition directly urged by St. Paul, Rom. xiii. 11, 12. Specious, however, as is this latter view, it involves so much harshness, and so disturbs the natural connexion of this whole portion of the chapter, that it canεἴχετε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς· ἡ ἐντολὴ ἡ παλαιὰ, ἔστιν ὁ λόγος ὃν ἠκούσατε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς. [g] πάλιν ἐντολὴν καινὴν γράφω ὑμῖν, 8 ὅ ἐστιν ἀληθὲς ἐν αὐτῷ καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν· ὅτι ἡ σκοτία παρά-γεται, καὶ τὸ φῶς τὸ ἀληθινὸν ἤδη φαίνει. [h] ὁ λέγων ἐν 9 τῷ φωτὶ εἶναι, καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ μισῶν, ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ ἐστὶν ἕως ἄρτι. [i] Ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, ἐν τῷ φωτὶ 10 μένει καὶ σκάνδαλον ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστιν· [k] ὁ δὲ μισῶν τὸν 11 ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ ἐστὶ, καὶ ἐν τῇ σκοτίᾳ περιπατεῖ, καὶ οὐκ οἶδε ποῦ ὑπάγει, ὅτι ἡ σκοτία ἐτύφλωσε τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ. [l] Γράφω ὑμῖν, τεκνία, ὅτι ἀφέων- 12 ται ὑμῖν αἱ ἁμαρτίαι διὰ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ. Γράφω ὑμῖν, 13 πατέρες, ὅτι ἐγνώκατε τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς· γράφω ὑμῖν, νεαg John 1. 9. & 8. 12. & 13. 34. & 15. 12. Rom. 13. 12. 1 Thess. 5. 5, 8.

h 1 Cor. 13. 2. 2 Pet. 1. 19. infra 3, 14, 15.
i John 12. 35. 2 Pet. 1. 10. k Infra 3. 14.
l Luke 24. 47. Acts 4. 12. & 13. 38.

not safely be adopted. The former one is therefore to be preferred, as involving far less difficulty than the other,—especially according to the mode of explanation adopted by Dr. Lücke, who lays down the following statement of the context: 'St. John having said of the imitation of Christ, ver. 6, and of the walking in the light, that this is for his readers an old, long known, yet never an obsolete, but ever a new, commandment, he adds, with reference to this contrast, that this ἐντολὴ is certainly true and established (ἀληθὲς), and that its truth and certainty is grounded, partly on the example of Christ, who thus walked in the light, ver. 6, partly on the experience of his readers. For, as to the latter point, he means to say, that among them (inasmuch as they do now walk in the light) the darkness of error and sin (in which they lived ere they became Christians) is already vanishing (παράγεται), and that the true light of the true knowledge and love of God is now shining forth among them.' According to the above connexion, he adds, vv. 9, 10 will connect well with vv. 6—8. Now, the chief virtue of the Christian life, of the life in the light, and the chief injunction of Christ is, according to St. John, brotherly love: love is also, according to St. Paul, the fulfilment of the law, the bond of perfection, Gal. v. 14. Col. iii. 14. With reference to this principle, and proceeding from that which is general to that which is more special, St. John says, ver. 9, ὁ λέγων ἐν τῷ φωτὶ εἶναι, 'whoever thinks that he is a true Christian, and yet hates his brother, he still is (ἕως ἄρτι) in the darkness of non-Christianity.' As love is the essence of Christianity, its cardinal virtue, and the γνώρισμα of Christians, so hatred also is, according to St. Paul, the chief vice of the heathen, and, in general, of the unredeemed and infidel world. Compare Rom. i. 29, seqq. Tit. iii. 3. 2 Tim. iii. 2, 3, 4.

9—11. Here we have the foregoing sentiment further developed. 'He alone, it is said, who loveth his brother is he who really abideth in light; nor is there any thing in him likely to occasion his falling into offence or sin (with allusion to Ps. cxix. 165); whereas he who hateth his brother is habitually and continually in darkness, not knowing whither he is going; and as men walking in the dark know not the course they are pursuing, nor at what they stumble, so such an one, not aware of the dangers that beset his path, is therefore likely to meet with many σκάνδαλα or stumbling-blocks in the way.' Thus, then, it is meant, that he who loveth not his brother is in utter ignorance of vital religion, and, as far as he is a professor of Christianity, and aims at salvation, he entirely wanders, both in conception and action, from the object he seeks.

12—15. In this portion we may best suppose, with Carpzov and Rosenmuller, that the thesis, or main proposition of the argument, rests in the words at ver. 15, μὴ ἀγαπᾶτε τὸν κόσμον μηδὲ τὰ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. And here, having first, at ver. 12, addressed himself to Christians in general, by the endearing appellation τεκνία, the use of that word seems to have suggested to the Apostle the idea of addressing himself to the several classes of Christians, as distributed according to their age.

13. γράφω ὑμῖν, &c.] In this word γράφω there seems to be, as at ver. 13, a significatio prægnans, the full sense being, 'I tell, or remind you that alone through faith in him, and by virtue of his atonement, are ye,' &c.

— ἐγνώκατε τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς.] Meaning, 'Ye have known that exalted Person Who was from the beginning,' or who has existed from eternity. Thus, as Bp. Middleton observes, by the expression elsewhere, ὁ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς, is denoted 'Him who is in heaven.' 'That τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς (continues he) must mean Jesus Christ, is to be inferred not only from the context, but from the circumstance that there was no occasion to assert the eternity of the Father, who is expressly mentioned in this very verse.' This text, therefore, in common with others, affirms the eternal pre-existence of Christ, and it harmonizes exactly with the language of the same writer in the exordium of the Gospel, 'In the beginning was the Word.'

It is to be observed that at ver. 14 we have a repetition, with somewhat of amplification, of what was said at ver. 13, γράφω ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι, ὅτι νενικήκατε τὸν πονηρόν: for as to the last clause of ver. 13, γράφω ὑμῖν, παιδία, ὅτι ἐγνώκατε τὸν Πατέρα, that, I agree with Lücke, forms a part of the gradation, the classification being only into fathers (masters of families) and young men. Why children, in the literal sense, should here be likewise addressed, and especially as having known the Father, I see not. We may I think, with Lücke, suppose the words γράφω νίσκοι, ὅτι νενικήκατε τὸν πονηρόν. γράφω ὑμῖν, παιδία, 14 ὅτι ἐγνώκατε τὸν Πατέρα. [m] Ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, πατέρες, ὅτι m Eph. 6. 10.

ἐγνώκατε τὸν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς· ἔγραψα ὑμῖν, νεανίσκοι, ὅτι ἰσχυροί ἐστε, καὶ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν μένει, καὶ 15 νενικήκατε τὸν πονηρόν. [n] Μὴ ἀγαπᾶτε τὸν κόσμον μηδὲ n Matt. 6. 24. Rom. 12. 2. τὰ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. ἐάν τις ἀγαπᾷ τὸν κόσμον, οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ Gal. 1. 10. James 4. 4.
16 ἀγάπη τοῦ Πατρὸς ἐν αὐτῷ· [o] ὅτι * πᾶν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, ἡ o Eccles. 5. 11.
ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκὸς καὶ ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν καὶ ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου,—οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ Πατρὸς, ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ ὑμῖν, παιδία, as parallel to γράφω ὑμῖν, τεκνία, at ver. 12, and (as in the case of γράφω ὑμῖν, πατέρες) containing an emphatic repetition with amplification. Indeed Lücke thinks there is a relation between them, namely, that 'the knowledge of the Father, who from love has sent his Son as Saviour into the world, commences and advances along with the consciousness of forgiveness of sins through Christ.'

In his address to the young (meaning generally persons in the flower of life) the Apostle, by the words νενικήκατε τὸν πονηρὸν (which intimate what is to be done by what is supposed to have been done, or to be doing) alludes to those fiery temptations ('darts tempered in hell') which the Evil One levels especially against persons of that time of life. In the repeated address to them at ver. 14, there is an amplification of the proposition,—the sense being, 'For you [I presume] are strong [in the Lord]; and the word (i. e. revelation) of God abideth in you, and [I trust that] you have exerted your strength, and conquered the Evil One.'

15—17. Now follows the weighty admonition, suspended on the preceding verses, and at length introduced in reference to all the three classes of persons just mentioned, The passage is ably treated on by Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit., p. 269, as follows: 'The subject is laid down in a two-fold form: 1. Love not the world; 2. neither love the things of the world. The former injunction is first taken up: "If any one love the world," &c.; the latter is then enforced: "For all that is in the world," &c.; and then the reasons of both injunctions are severally condensed: "For the world passeth away, and the desire thereof;" after which the moral of the whole is most powerfully brought home by the strong antithetical assurance, that "he who doeth the will of God abideth for ever." From the disjunctive form (continues the Bishop) of the commencing words, it is unquestionable that the Apostle intended to draw a marked distinction between "the world" and "the things in the world;" but what is the distinct meaning of each? Probably the world here signifies that entire system of bad pursuits and false enjoyments which fallen man has manufactured for himself; and "the things in the world," the wrong dispositions and propensities which engage men in such pursuits, and plunge them into such enjoyments. He who loves the former must clearly want an abiding principle of love to God; for that system is antagonistically opposed to the word and the will of God: he who loves the latter, loves dispositions proceeding not from God, but from that world opposed to God, which fosters them, and to which they are subservient. These dispositions the Apostle describes by "the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eyes, and the pride of life;" i. e. sensuality, avarice, and ambition. These, and that system to which they minister, are alike transient,—"they pass away;" but "he who doeth the will of God," he who maketh himself a denizen of God's world, "abideth for ever;" eternity is stamped on his enjoyments and pursuits, an eternity which inherently belongs to his own character, formed, as it is, by the grace of God, and by that grace preserved "From the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould."'

Whether, however, the above distinction between the world and the things of the world be as well founded as it is ably supported, may, I think, be doubted. For my own part, I apprehend, no marked distinction is to be supposed in this disjunctive form, μὴ—μηδέ; since it frequently happens in such cases, that the things thus violently disjoined are in effect closely connected, one as resulting from the other: in which case, where the clauses are, as here, very short, they ought not to be separated by a comma (ex. gr. Mark xiii. 11, μὴ προμεριμνᾶτε τί λαλήσητε μηδὲ μελετᾶτε); and in all these instances we may best render by neither—nor. Here the words suspended on the μηδὲ seem added by way of developing the sense intended by κόσμος preceding,—namely, the world and the things that are in it; a sense more plainly expressed at ver. 16 by πᾶν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. Why, then, it may be asked, did not the Apostle here at once write πᾶν τὸ ἐν κόσμῳ? I answer, because the opposition between this love and the love of the Father rather required κόσμος, which is, indeed, in some degree, personified, as in a similar passage of St. James, iv. 4, where it is declared that friendship with the world is enmity with God.

16. ὅτι πᾶν τὸ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ—ἐστί.] These words contain the reason for the foregoing injunction, and the argument itself proceeds on the presumption that the true Christian must be influenced solely by the love of God, and reject whatsoever interferes with it. The words ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκὸς—βίου are, as Tyndal long ago saw, and, since his time, Abp. Newcome and Bp. Jebb, parenthetical; being an enumeration of the constituent parts of the τὸ πᾶν. We may suppose them, with some, to advert to the cardinal vices of the sensual and worldly man; or rather, with Lücke, to the principal sources and chief forms of the worldly sense generally. Certain it is that by ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῆς σαρκὸς is p Ps. 90. 10. Isa. 40. 6. 1 Cor. 7. 31. James 1. 10. & 4. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 24. q Matt. 24. 5, 24. Acts 20. 29. 2 Thess. 2. 3. 2 John 7. r Ps. 41. 10. Acts 20. 30. 1 Cor. 11. 19.

κόσμου ἐστί. [p] Καὶ ὁ κόσμος παράγεται, καὶ ἡ ἐπιθυμία 17 αὐτοῦ· ὁ δὲ ποιῶν τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ, μένει εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα.
[q] Παιδία, ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστί· καὶ, καθὼς ἠκούσατε ὅτι ὁ 18 ἀντίχριστος ἔρχεται, καὶ νῦν ἀντίχριστοι πολλοὶ γεγόνασιν· ὅθεν γινώσκομεν ὅτι ἐσχάτη ὥρα ἐστίν. [r] Ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλ- 19 θον, ἀλλ᾽ οὐκ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν· εἰ γὰρ ἦσαν ἐξ ἡμῶν, μεμενήκεισαν ἂν μεθ᾽ ἡμῶν· ἀλλ᾽ ἵνα φανερωθῶσιν, ὅτι οὐκ εἰσὶ meant sensuality of every kind, the living after the flesh, and not after the Spirit. See Gal. v. 16, seqq. By the expression following, ἡ ἐπιθυμία τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν is commonly supposed to be denoted the vice of covetousness. And that such may be said to be the lust of the eyes is undeniable. So at Eccles. iv. 8, it is said of the covetous that his 'eye is not satisfied with riches.' I am, however, of opinion, with Lücke, that the expression is not to be confined to covetousness, but denotes lust of the eyes of every kind. 'As (says he) the flesh is the source of all sensual desires in man, so the eyes are the inlets of that sensual lust, whose object is the external world (compare 2 Pet. ii. 14, and Note). The eye awakens a desire of the things it sees; and thus in the eyes are reflected greediness, voluptuousness, and every other lust of the flesh.' Hence the words are not to be supposed (as they have been by many) to have reference exclusively to the rich (as might seem borne out by the succeeding particulars); but are to be understood generally of the desire of the carnal mind after whatever gratifies the eye and pleases the heart. See Luke viii. 14, and Note.

By ἡ ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου seems meant an inordinate desire after the external vanities, the ostentatious luxuries, in short, the pomps and vanities of this world,—that ambition of and attachment to show, well expressed by our old English word braverie, which means an ostentatious splendour. So in Polyb. Hist. xi. 8. 4, we have ἡ περὶ τοὺς βίους ἀλαζονεία καὶ πολυτέλεια. Finally, in τοῦ βίου there is a Genitive of object for περὶ τὸν βίον.

17. ὁ κόσμος παράγεται.] So 1 Cor. vii. 31, παράγει τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, and James iv. 14.

18—28. Here the Apostle cautions Christians against those deceivers, who then appeared in great numbers; and points out to them the many advantages which they had for knowing the truth, and the many obligations which they were under to adhere to and practise it. (Benson.) From the perishableness of the world the Apostle is led to advert to the end of it; namely, at the day of judgment, as seems denoted by the expression ἐσχάτη ὥρα; comp. Rom. xiii. 11, seq. 1 Thess. v. 1, seq. 2 Pet. iii. 1, seq. Some, indeed, understand the period here spoken of to be the last period of the Jewish economy, when many false Christs were to appear.

18. ὁ ἀντίχριστος.] On the precise import of this expression no little diversity of opinion exists. One thing is clear, that the Antichrist, as spoken of by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 4, under the terms 'the Man of Sin,' and 'Antichrist,' was yet to come; while the persons called antichrists had already appeared, or were then in existence. Now these antichrists cannot have been (as some suppose) the false Christs predicted by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 23—25; for ἀντι will not here bear such a sense; nor do the characters of the persons in question, as given at iv. 7, and 2 John 7, correspond. Those plainly designate the persons, not as apostates, but opposers of Christ; though it would seem (as Mr. Scott supposes) that the direct and avowed opposers of Christianity, whether Jewish or Heathen, cannot be meant in this place. St. John has rather in view that apostasy from the true faith, by heresy, which St. Paul foretold (1 Tim. iv. 1) would take place in the latter times. An antichrist in this sense may be defined in the words of Mr. Scott (after Beza), as being 'one who opposes Christ, whether he oppose the doctrine of his Deity, or his humanity; or whether he set himself against him, in respect of his priestly office, by substituting other methods of atoning for sin, and finding acceptance with God; his kingly office, by claiming authority to exact laws, in his Church, contrary to his laws, or to dispense with his commandments; or his prophetical office, by claiming authority to add to, alter, or take away from the revelation which he has given in his holy word.' This is very agreeable to the description of antichrist at ver. 22, ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱὸν, and iv. 3. 2 John 7. Perhaps, however, it will be better not to confine it to apostasy or heresy, but extend it also to ungodliness, and the virtual denial of Christ in works. After all, indeed, the expression may be only, as Lücke supposes, a name for an idea, and meant to express the principle of falsehood and heresy, resisting the truth of the Gospel within Christ's Church, by an internal and spiritual enmity; as in like manner by the expression ὁ ἀντικείμενος at 2 Thess. ii. 3, is denoted the external and general enmity of non-Christians against Christianity. Thus the general sentiment here intended may be, as Bp. Warburton expresses it: 'We are fallen into the very dregs of time; as appears from that antichristian spirit which now so pollutes the Churches; for you know it is a common saying, that Antichrist is to come in these wretched days.'

Finally, the καὶ following is not to be taken with καθὼς, but is in correspondence with καὶ in the next clause. Render: 'And as—so now.' In the same manner καὶ occurs in Luke vi. 31, καὶ καθὼς θέλετε ἵνα—καὶ ὑμεῖς ποιεῖτε αὐτοῖς ὁμοίως. There is in these cases an ellipsis of οὕτως, which is expressed at John iii. 14, καὶ καθὼς Μωϋσῆς—οὕτως, &c.

19. ἐξ ἡμῶν ἐξῆλθον, &c.] Meaning, 'They [originally] proceeded from us, but they were never really of us,' i. e. were not sound Christians at heart; 'for if they had been really of us, they would have remained with us, and kept our 20 πάντες ἐξ ἡμῶν. [s] Καὶ ὑμεῖς χρίσμα ἔχετε ἀπὸ τοῦ Ἁγίου, s Ps. 45. 8 & 133. 2.

21 καὶ οἴδατε πάντα. Οὐκ ἔγραψα ὑμῖν ὅτι οὐκ οἴδατε τὴν John 14. 26. & 16. 13.
ἀλήθειαν, ἀλλ' ὅτι οἴδατε αὐτὴν, καὶ ὅτι πᾶν ψεῦδος ἐκ τῆς Heb. 1. 9.
22 ἀληθείας οὐκ ἔστι. [t] Τίς ἐστιν ὁ ψεύστης, εἰ μὴ ὁ ἀρνού- t Infra 4. 3. 2 John 7.
μενος ὅτι Ἰησοῦς οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ Χριστός; οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀντί-23 χριστος, ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱόν. [u] Πᾶς u Luke 12. 9. John 15. 23.
ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Υἱὸν, οὐδὲ τὸν Πατέρα ἔχει· ὁ ὁμολογῶν 2 Tim. 2. 12. infra 4. 15.
24 τὸν Υἱὸν, καὶ Πατέρα ἔχει. Ὑμεῖς οὖν ὃ ἠκούσατε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ἐν ὑμῖν μενέτω. Ἐὰν ἐν ὑμῖν μείνῃ ὃ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ἠκούσατε, καὶ 25 ὑμεῖς ἐν τῷ Υἱῷ καὶ ἐν τῷ Πατρὶ μενεῖτε. Καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἐπαγγελία ἣν αὐτὸς ἐπηγγείλατο ἡμῖν, τὴν ζωὴν τὴν doctrine; but they did not so, and the result was, that they were proved not to have been of us,' i. e. not true Christians.

20. καὶ ὑμεῖς χρίσμα, &c.] In this verse we have a contrast to the last, and consequently the καὶ is adversative; the purpose of the words being that of consolation and assurance to true believers. (Lücke.) The term χρίσμα, occurring here and at ver. 27, has that metaphorical sense by which the verb χρίω is used of communicating the gifts and graces of the Spirit; with allusion to the solemn inauguration of Priests and Kings with oil. Thus it may denote that inauguration of the Holy Spirit which accompanies the use of the Christian sacraments; and that, indeed, is all that many suppose to be here meant. But it seems rather to designate generally, the imparting of the Holy Spirit promised by Christ to all true believers, to lead them into all truth (John xiv. 26. xvi. 13); and that whether by the communication of the supernatural Gifts, or the Graces of the Spirit for sanctification, and imparted through the preaching of the word, the administration of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and other means of grace. Certain it is that oil is often in Scripture represented as typical both of the gifts and of the graces of the Spirit. So in the Parable of the Virgins, Matt. xxv. 4, the oil, enjoined to be taken in the lamps, is evidently the oil of grace to the heart, to keep alive the vigilance and perseverance of professing Christians. See Bp. Sanderson, Serm. p. 365.

By the expression τοῦ Ἁγίου the best Expositors are agreed is meant Christ; see Mark i. 24. Acts iii. 14. Rev. iii. 7. The πάντα must be restricted by the subject matter (as at 1 Cor. ix. 22. xv. 27), to mean, 'all things necessary to salvation.'

21. ἀλλ' ὅτι οἴδ.] Render, 'but [as supposing that] ye know it.' Καὶ ὅτι πᾶν, &c., 'and [as sensible that] every lie, or false doctrine, proceeds not from the truth,' being inconsistent therewith.

22, 23. τίς ἐστιν—ὁ Χριστός;] The Apostle means to say, that this general self-evident proposition is not more certain, than the particular application of it to the delusions of the seducers; whose false doctrines could not proceed from the same source with the truth of God. (Scott.) These words are to be understood comparatè; q. d. 'Who is a deceiver or antichrist (i. e. apostate) if he be not, who denies that Jesus is the Messiah?' See Note supra v. 18. The expressions ὁ ψεύστης and ὁ ἀντίχρ. are to be taken in a generic sense, to denote the class of persons each individually such. The Apostle means, we may suppose, to thus designate the false teachers, or heretical persons, as ψεῦσται and ἀντίχριστοι, and to show why they may be esteemed such; namely, 1. as denying the Messiahship of Jesus, by which we are to understand denying his full Messiahship as it is described in the Scriptures. Such an one is, then, said, by implication, to be an antichrist; and under this description (the Apostle adds) comes 'he that denieth the Father and the Son,' ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱὸν, where the καὶ is very significant. This antichristian spirit is pronounced to be the denying the mysterious connexion between the Father and the Son, according to the relations in which they are represented to us in the Gospel, separating the Son from the Father, and consequently degrading him from his high dignity. On this whole passage see Bp. Bull's Judic. Cathol. Eccl., pp. 16. 14. and 84.

The words following, πᾶς ὁ ἀρνούμενος—ἔχει, serve to further develope the sense, and intimate that this separation is a virtual denial not only of the Son, but of both Father and Son. 'He (says Whitby) that denieth the Son cannot retain the true knowledge of the Father, because he can be known only through the Son; John i. 18. iv. 23, 24. viii. 19. 55. xiv. 6, 7. xvi. 3. Matt. xi. 27.' Nearly allied to ἔχειν Πατέρα here are the expressions elsewhere in this Epistle, κοινωνίαν ἔχειν μετὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ and εἶναι ἐν τῷ Θεῷ. The words following contain an assertion of the contrary truth. They are, indeed, not found in the common text, but they are contained in most of the MSS., almost all the Versions, and very many Fathers; and have been received into the text by Bengel, Griesbach, Matthæi, Knapp, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz. They have, in fact, every evidence of genuineness; for they not only seem to be required by the sense, but are in the manner of St. John; and their omission may far better be imputed to homœoteleuton than their addition have arisen from a marginal scholium.

24, 25. Here the Apostle first gives an exhortation to stedfastness in adhering to the form of faith, which they have been taught at the beginning of their profession of the Gospel; thus intimating (as Lücke observes) that 'sincere faith in the apostolic Gospel is the best safeguard against heretical error.' Then at ver. 25, as an inducement to hold it fast, he points out the blessed effect of such stedfastness, in the communion αἰώνιον. Ταῦτα ἔγραψα ὑμῖν περὶ τῶν πλανώντων ὑμᾶς. 26 x Jer. 31.33, 34. John 14. 26. & 16. 13. Heb. 8. 10, 11. [x] Καὶ ὑμεῖς τὸ χρίσμα ὃ ἐλάβετε ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, ἐν ὑμῖν μένει, 27 καὶ οὐ χρείαν ἔχετε ἵνα τὶς διδάσκῃ ὑμᾶς· ἀλλ', ὡς τὸ αὐτὸ χρίσμα διδάσκει ὑμᾶς περὶ πάντων, καὶ ἀληθές ἐστι, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι ψεῦδος, καὶ καθὼς ἐδίδαξεν ὑμᾶς, μενεῖτε ἐν αὐτῷ.

y Mark 8.38. infra 3. 2. [y] Καὶ νῦν, τεκνία, μένετε ἐν αὐτῷ· ἵνα ὅταν φανερωθῇ, 28 ἔχωμεν παῤῥησίαν, καὶ μὴ αἰσχυνθῶμεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ ἐν τῇ z Infra 3. 7, 10. παρουσίᾳ αὐτοῦ. [z] Ἐὰν εἰδῆτε ὅτι δίκαιός ἐστι, γινώσκετε 29 ὅτι πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην ἐξ αὐτοῦ γεγέννηται.
a John 1.12. & 16. 3. & 17. 25. III. [a] ἼΔΕΤΕ, ποταπὴν ἀγάπην δέδωκεν ἡμῖν ὁ Πατὴρ, 1 ἵνα τέκνα Θεοῦ κληθῶμεν! διὰ τοῦτο ὁ κόσμος οὐ γινώσκει b Isa. 56. 5. John 1. 12. Rom. 8. 15, 18, 29. 1 Cor. 13. 12. & 15. 49. Gal. 3. 26. & 4. 6. Phil. 3. 21. Col. 3. 4. ἡμᾶς, ὅτι οὐκ ἔγνω αὐτόν. [b] Ἀγαπητοὶ, νῦν τέκνα Θεοῦ 2 ἐσμεν· καὶ οὔπω ἐφανερώθη τί ἐσόμεθα. οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι ἐὰν φανερωθῇ, ὅμοιοι αὐτῷ ἐσόμεθα· ὅτι ὀψόμεθα αὐτὸν καθώς ἐστι. Καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἔχων τὴν ἐλπίδα ταύτην ἐπ' αὐτῷ 3 enjoyed with the Son, and with the Father through him. Finally, for their encouragement and confirmation he, at ver. 26, reminds them of the promise given by God to all true believers; namely, that of eternal life.

26. Here the Apostle resumes the exhortation at ver. 24, further enlarging on what was there said. (Lücke.) See Notes on 18, 19, 20. 24.

27. καὶ ὑμεῖς τὸ χρίσμα, &c.] Meaning to say, 'The spirit of truth with which you, as true Christians, are anointed, will, if you preserve it (and that which you have heard from the beginning) faithfully, sufficiently instruct you respecting these heresies, and teach you what course you ought to follow respecting them.' (Lücke.)

— καὶ καθὼς, &c.] The καὶ is not (as it has been supposed) pleonastic, but here corresponds to ὡς a little before. and so stands for οὕτως καὶ, so also, or even so. Thus infra iv. 17, we have ὅτι καθὼς ἐκεῖνός ἐστι, [οὕτως] καὶ ἡμεῖς, &c.; see also Matt. vi. 10. Luke vi. 31. John xiii. 15. Acts vii. 51. Gal. i. 9. At 1 Cor. xi. 12, we have the word οὕτως expressed.

28. Here the Apostle returns to the subject of ver. 18, and concludes this part of the Epistle with an exhortation in reference to the ἐσχάτη ὥρα there spoken of.

— καὶ νῦν, τεκνία, μένετε, &c.] Meaning to say, 'And, now, my children, [to my hope and trust let me add my injunction]: abide [I say] in him, that when he shall appear, we (i. e. not only ye, but myself) may have confidence (i. e. not have cause to be confounded) at his presence, when he cometh.' In the change of persons we may observe great delicacy; the rejection and disgrace of the disciple tending to the discredit of the teacher. So 2 Cor. ix. 4.

29. ἐὰν εἰδῆτε, &c.] Meaning, 'If ye know [as ye must] that He (i. e. God) is righteous, ye know that every one who, habitually and heartily, practises righteousness hath been received into the relation of a son of God, being born anew of Christ by the regeneration of his Spirit.' Compare iii. 1. ii. 2. 9. iv. 7. v. 1. iv. 18.

III. 1. The Apostle now breaks out into admiration of the love of God, in making those who were, by natural generation, sons of fallen Adam, sons of God by adoption and grace. See Eph. i. 5, and Rom. viii. 15.

— ποταπὴν ἀγάπην] 'how vast a proof of love!' By κληθῶμεν is denoted the actually being, as included in the being called.

— διὰ τοῦτο.] This is to be referred to ὅτι following; the meaning being, 'The world, therefore, recognises us not as sons of God, nor comprehends the glory and nature of this filiation, because it doth not acknowledge Him [as God].' Compare Rom. i. 21, οὐχ ὡς Θεὸν ἐδόξασαν.

2. νῦν τέκνα Θεοῦ—ἐστι.] Here we have a solemn repetition of the same assertion, with a weighty truth engrafted thereupon, with respect to our dignity in the future world. The general sense is as follows: '[As to our present state,] now [I repeat] we are already sons of God, and [as to our future one,] it doth not yet appear [even to Christians, much less to the world] what we shall be. However, this we do know, that when he shall appear, we shall be like unto him, for we shall see him as he is;' q. d. (as Lücke expresses it), 'In spite of the world's disowning, we still really are God's children, (how great is that dignity!) and as yet it is not even made manifest (καὶ οὔπω ἐφανερώθη) what we are to be (in what glory we are to have a share hereafter). But this much we do know with certainty, that when this is manifested (when the glory of the children of God is manifested), we shall then be like unto him (of whom we are born); for we shall see him as he is;' i. e. we shall know him indeed, and be in his presence; see Rom. viii. 16, seq. Col. iii. 3, 4. By being like unto him is denoted likeness in holiness and happiness; and by seeing him as he is is meant, seeing him no longer, as now, 'through a glass, darkly, but face to face.' (1 Cor. xiii. 12.)

3. This verse is connected with ii. 29, and developes the train of ideas there commenced. (Lücke.)

— καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἔχων—ἐστι.] Meaning, that 'where there is a true hope of being made like unto him, at his appearance, the person will 4 ἁγνίζει ἑαυτὸν, καθὼς ἐκεῖνος ἁγνός ἐστι. [c] Πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν c Infra 5. 17.

τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, καὶ τὴν ἀνομίαν ποιεῖ· καὶ ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐστὶν 5 ἡ ἀνομία. [d] καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι ἐκεῖνος ἐφανερώθη, ἵνα τὰς d Is. 53. 4, 9. 2 Cor. 5. 21.
6 ἁμαρτίας ἡμῶν ἄρῃ· καὶ ἁμαρτία ἐν αὐτῷ οὐκ ἔστι. [e] Πᾶς 1 Tim. 1. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 22, 24.
ὁ ἐν αὐτῷ μένων, οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει· πᾶς ὁ ἁμαρτάνων, οὐχ e Supra 2. 4. infra 4. 8.
7 ἑώρακεν αὐτὸν, οὐδὲ ἔγνωκεν αὐτόν. [f] Τεκνία, μηδεὶς πλα- 3 John 11. f Supra 2. 29. infra v. 10.
νάτω ὑμᾶς· ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην δίκαιός ἐστι, καθὼς ἐκεῖ-8 νος δίκαιός ἐστιν. [g] Ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, ἐκ τοῦ Διαβόλου g Gen. 3. 15. John 8. 44.
ἐστίν. ὅτι ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὁ Διάβολος ἁμαρτάνει. Εἰς τοῦτο ἐφανερώθη ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα λύσῃ τὰ ἔργα τοῦ Δια-9 βόλου. [h] Πᾶς ὁ γεγεννημένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἁμαρτίαν οὐ h 1 Pet. 1. 23. infra 5. 18.
ποιεῖ, ὅτι σπέρμα αὐτοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ μένει· καὶ οὐ δύναται ἁμαρ-10 τάνειν, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται. [i] Ἐν τούτῳ φανερά ἐστι i Infra 4. 8.

meanwhile strive to imitate his purity, in order to participate in his glory and blessedness;' see Bp. Bull's Harm. Ap., p. 44, and South's Serm., vol. vi. p. 441, seqq. on this text, where, after considering how a man may be said to purify himself even as Christ is pure, he shows, 1. what is implied in that purifying, i. e. by ridding himself of the dominion of sin; 2. how the hope of heaven purifies a man; first, as a special grace, and, secondly, upon a moral account, by suggesting to him arguments for purification.

4. What is here said is founded on the formal difference and the essential identity of the expressions ἁμαρτία and ἀνομία, and directed against the error of those who, misunderstanding the doctrine of Christian liberty, denied and disowned the positive character of the moral law, and the immediate relation of sin thereto, as to a divine prohibition. (Lücke.)

— πᾶς ὁ ποιῶν τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, &c.] Meaning to say, that every fault, every moral stain is a transgression of the Divine law, since God's commandment demands the most perfect righteousness and the most exalted purity. (Lücke.)

5, 6. καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι ἐκεῖνος, &c.] Meaning to say, that the end of redemption, as well as the effective example of the guiltless Saviour, prohibits every one, who lives in communion with the Redeemer, to sin. Every sin that the Christian commits is an elusion of Christ's scheme of redemption, of which the end is the annihilation of sin; it interrupts the progressive communion with the Redeemer, and is a proof of His not having been recognised in His purity and holiness. Only by means of a progressive sanctification can the Christian realize in himself that redemption which, by his faith, he has only ideally appropriated. (Lücke.)

By οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει, all the best Expositors are agreed, is meant, sinneth not habitually, wilfully, and presumptuously, but only from frailty. Whosoever doth so sin (it is added) hath no true knowledge of Him, or conception of his doctrine.

7. μηδεὶς πλανάτω ὑμᾶς, &c.] A solemn warning (like that at 1 Cor. vi. 9—11. Gal. vi. 6—10. Eph. v. 5—7. James i. 22—25. 2 Pet. i. 8, 9) not to let any man deceive them by plausible pretences (upon the loose ethics of half-Christianity, which would make the love of the world consistent with the love of God) into an opinion that they might live in habitual sin, and yet be true Christians. (Scott and Lücke.)

— ὁ ποιῶν τὴν δικαιοσύνην, &c.] Meaning, 'he alone who is habitually righteous, in imitation of his Saviour, is truly righteous;' see Simeon's Hor. Homil. vol. vi. p. 327, who truly says, that the whole scope of the context from ver. 3 sanctions, and, indeed, requires this interpretation.

8. ὁ ποιῶν—ἐστίν.] Here again, as before, ποιεῖν must be understood of habit; the general sense being, 'He who practises sin [must not say he is a son of God; no] he is [a son] of the Devil [and this sonship is established by strong similitude]; for the Devil has been habitually and perpetually sinning.' On this portion, and the inferences from it, see Abp. Secker and Dean Tucker in D'Oyly and Mant. At εἰς τοῦτο—Διαβόλου supply καίτοι, 'and yet.' The omission of such ratiocinative particles is one of the peculiarities of St. John's style. The sentiment corresponds to that at ver. 5.

9. πᾶς ὁ γεγεννημένος—οὐ ποιεῖ.] The sentiment is nearly allied to that at ver. 6 (πᾶς ὁ ἐν αὐτῷ μένων, οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει), sonship and intimate union being cognate ideas. In both passages, then, it is plain that the phrase ἁμαρτίαν ποιεῖ must be taken, like ἁμαρτάνει, of deliberate and habitual sin. Moreover, to understand this passage fully, ὁ γεγενν. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ must be understood as at ii. 29, where see Note. Now of such an one it may be said, in a popular sense, that he cannot sin; since there is effectual grace afforded to him that he shall not; οὐ δύναται being used here as at Hebr. vi. 4, ἀδύνατόν ἐστι—ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν.

By the expression σπέρμα αὐτοῦ we may understand, with Augustine, of the ancients, and, of the moderns, Grotius, Benson, Rosenmuller, and most recent Commentators, the revealed word of God (see 1 Pet. i. 23). But I would rather suppose it to denote, as Carpzov and others explain, the vital principle of the spiritual seed committed to our hearts, like a seedling to the ground; and consisting not in the word of God only, but in the Divine grace by which that word is made effectual; in short, the sanctification of the Spirit spoken of at Gal. v. 22.

10. Because the profane world neither knows nor appreciates the difference between those who τὰ τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὰ τέκνα τοῦ Διαβόλου. Πᾶς ὁ μὴ ποιῶν δικαιοσύνην, οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ. [k] ὅτι αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγγελία ἣν ἠκού- 11 σατε ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ἵνα ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους. [l] οὐ καθὼς Κάϊν 12 ἐκ τοῦ πονηροῦ ἦν, καὶ ἔσφαξε τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ. Καὶ χάριν τίνος ἔσφαξεν αὐτόν; ὅτι τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ πονηρὰ ἦν, τὰ δὲ τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ αὐτοῦ δίκαια. [m] Μὴ θαυμάζετε, ἀδελ- 13 φοί μου, εἰ μισεῖ ὑμᾶς ὁ κόσμος. [n] ἡμεῖς οἴδαμεν ὅτι μετα- 14 βεβήκαμεν ἐκ τοῦ θανάτου εἰς τὴν ζωὴν, ὅτι ἀγαπῶμεν τοὺς ἀδελφούς. ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν μένει ἐν τῷ θανάτῳ. [o] Πᾶς ὁ μισῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἀνθρωποκτόνος 15 ἐστί· καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι πᾶς ἀνθρωποκτόνος οὐκ ἔχει ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἐν αὐτῷ μένουσαν. [p] Ἐν τούτῳ ἐγνώκαμεν τὴν ἀγά- 16 πην, ὅτι ἐκεῖνος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ ἔθηκε· καὶ ἡμεῖς ὀφείλομεν ὑπὲρ τῶν ἀδελφῶν τὰς ψυχὰς τιθέναι. [q] Ὃς 17 δ' ἂν ἔχῃ τὸν βίον τοῦ κόσμου, καὶ θεωρῇ τὸν ἀδελφὸν k John 13. 34. & 15. 12. supra 1. 5. & 2. 7. infra v. 23.

l Gen. 4. 8. Heb. 11. 4. m John 15. 18, 19. & 17. 14. n Lev. 19. 17. supra 2. 9, 10, 11.
o Matt. 5. 21, 22. Gal. 5. 21.
p John 3. 16. & 15. 13. Rom. 5. 8. Eph. 5. 2, 25. infra 4. 9.
q Deut. 15. 7. Luke 3. 11. James 2. 15. infra 4. 20. & 5. 1.

are the children of God and those who are not, the Apostle here subjoins an emphatic repetition of the sentiment, that every one who does not practise righteousness is not of God; and that with the assurance that this is the only test of their being in a state of salvation. On this general position is then engrafted a particular one, respecting that most important branch of our duty to men, which consists in love and kindness to our brethren,—meaning, not only brother-Christians, but brother-men. See 2 Pet. i. 7. Gal. v. 14. Col. iii. 14.

11. From hence to the end of the Chapter the Apostle urges the foregoing exhortation by various arguments; and first, he reminds them that the injunction to love one another was coeval with the Christian religion itself; originating with its Author, and made the distinguishing evidence of being his disciples. Those, therefore, (it is implied) who are destitute of this grace, are no true Christians, but can only be ranked with him who, though professing to be a worshipper of God, showed himself to be not of the family of God, but of the Evil One, by envying, hating, and murdering his brother.

12. οὐ καθὼς Κάϊν, &c.] This may be considered as a brief mode of speaking, for what, more fully expressed, would be: 'And not as Cain, who was a son of the Devil, and murdered his brother [so let us do, by fostering those feelings of hatred, which may tend to murder].' Then, by way of caution, the Apostle in the next words, καὶ χάριν τίνος—δίκαια, suggests the cause of this hatred, namely, envy at his brother's superior goodness and favour with God.

13. μὴ θαυμάζετε—ὁ κόσμος.] In other words, 'Wonder not if the world hate you: it was ever so in the world; the wicked have ever hated and persecuted the good, as Cain did Abel.' Compare ver. 1. John xv. 18, and xvi. 1, seqq. (Lücke.)

14. ἡμεῖς οἴδαμεν, &c.] This suggests, by way of consolation, how it should be so; the meaning being, that 'the enmity of the ungodly against them, as the children of God, was the most unequivocal proof that they had passed from death (from a state of spiritual condemnation) to life,' or a state of acceptance with God; and the proof of their being in such a state was that they loved the brethren.

15. In addition to the assurance that he who hateth his brother is, as it were, under the ban of God, the Apostle adds, that such an one is even a sort of CAIN, of whom he has just spoken; that his disposition and principles are such as tend to murder, and may, as in the case of Cain, produce actual murder. Compare John viii. 44. How short, as Lücke observes, is the step from hatred to murder, experience fully evinces. Moreover (as he adds) 'it is not the mere external action, but the internal disposition of the heart, that is inquired into and judged by the great Searcher of hearts; while man is apt to think lightly of evil thoughts only, and only shudders at grossly criminal acts.'

As, then, murder is utterly inconsistent with a state of salvation, so also must those dispositions, which are the seed of it, prevent any one from being a child of God. Thus even a heathen writer (Virgil, Æn. vi. 607,) places in his Tartarus those 'quibus invisi fratres, dum vita manebat.'

16. ἐν τούτῳ ἐγνώκαμεν, &c.] Meaning, 'By this we [may] know [what] love [is, namely,] that he laid down his life for us; and [thus] ought we to lay down our lives for our brethren.' By τὴν ἀγάπην must be meant the love as exemplified in Christ. On the phrase τιθέναι ψυχὴν see Note at John x. 11. 15.

17. ὃς δ' ἂν ἔχῃ—ἐν αὐτῷ;] Meaning to say, 'But if it be the duty of the Christian to love the brethren, how unlike a Christian, then, does he act, who, being in possession of earthly goods (compare Luke xv. 12. 30. xxi. 4), seeth his brother in distress, and shutteth up his heart to him, how can the love of God, which only by brotherly love can be demonstrated and perfected (compare infra iv. 12, 20) abide in such an one?' (Lücke.) See Luke iii. 11. 2 Cor. viii. 14, compared with Rom.

αὐτοῦ χρείαν ἔχοντα, καὶ κλείσῃ τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ ἀπ' 18 αὐτοῦ, πῶς ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ μένει ἐν αὐτῷ; [r] Τεκνία μου, μὴ ἀγαπῶμεν λόγῳ μηδὲ τῇ γλώσσῃ, ἀλλ' ἐν ἔργῳ 19 καὶ ἀληθείᾳ. Καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν ὅτι ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας 20 ἐσμέν. καὶ ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν, ὅτι ἐὰν καταγινώσκῃ ἡμῶν ἡ καρδία, [ὅτι] μείζων ἐστὶν ὁ Θεὸς 21 τῆς καρδίας ἡμῶν, καὶ γινώσκει πάντα. Ἀγαπητοὶ, ἐὰν ἡ καρδία ἡμῶν μὴ καταγινώσκῃ ἡμῶν, * παῤῥησίαν ἔχομεν πρὸς 22 τὸν Θεόν· [s] καὶ ὃ ἐὰν αἰτῶμεν, λαμβάνομεν παρ' αὐτοῦ· ὅτι τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηροῦμεν, καὶ τὰ ἀρεστὰ ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ 23 ποιοῦμεν. [t] Καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἐντολὴ αὐτοῦ, ἵνα πιστεύσωμεν τῷ ὀνόματι τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ ἀγα-24 πῶμεν ἀλλήλους, καθὼς ἔδωκεν ἐντολὴν ἡμῖν. [u] Καὶ ὁ τηρῶν τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ, ἐν αὐτῷ μένει, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν αὐτῷ. καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν ὅτι μένει ἐν ἡμῖν, ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος οὗ ἡμῖν ἔδωκεν.

1 IV. [a] ἈΓΑΠΗΤΟΙ, μὴ παντὶ πνεύματι πιστεύετε, ἀλλὰ r Ezek. 33. 31. 1 Pet. 1. 22. James 2. 15. s Ps. 10. 17. & 34. 17. & 145. 18. Prov. 15. 29. Jer. 29. 12. Matt. 7. 8. & 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. Luke 11. 9. John 9. 31. & 14. 13. & 15. 7. & 16. 23. James 1. 5. & 5. 16. infra 5. 14.

t Lev. 19. 18. Matt. 22. 39. John 6. 29. & 13. 34. & 15. 12. & 17. 3. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 8. infra 4. 12. supra v. 11.
u John 14. 23. & 15. 10. Rom. 8. 9. infra 4. 13.
a Jer. 29. 8. Matt. 7. 15, 16. & 24. 4, 5, 24. 1 Cor. 14. 29. Eph. 5. 6. Col. 2. 18. 1 Thess. 5. 21. 2 Pet. 2. 1. 2 John 7. Rev. 2. 2.

xii. 9. In κλείειν τὰ σπλάγχνα ἀπό τινὸς we have a figurative mode of expression, to denote the, as it were, barring the heart against compassion, and forbidding it to flow.

At πῶς ἡ ἀγάπη, &c. the interrogation involves a strong negation. So πῶς (on which see Hoogev. Part. p. 548) is equivalent to οὐδαμῶς; for at πῶς is supplied the verb preceding in the Optative with ἂν, 'How should it?'

18. μὴ ἀγαπῶμεν λόγῳ, &c.] So it is said in Theognis, 973. Μή μοι ἀνὴρ εἴη γλώσσῃ φίλος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἔργῳ, and Soph. Antig. 539, λόγοις δ' ἐγὼ φιλοῦσαν οὐ στέργω φίλην.

19. The Apostle now adds, in conclusion, a serious exhortation to that 'love unfeigned' inculcated by St. Paul, Rom. xii. 9.

— καὶ ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν, &c.] The Apostle here applies the test of the reality of this love, by a comparison with that of Christ; q. d. And by this we know whether we be of the truth [in this respect, namely, of love to others]. Similar to ἐκ τῆς ἀληθείας εἶναι we have ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἶναι elsewhere. Opposed to this is ἐκ τοῦ Διαβόλου εἶναι and ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου εἶναι, &c. By τῆς ἀληθείας we must here understand true religion, the truth as it is in Jesus.

20. καὶ ἔμπροσθεν αὐτοῦ πείσομεν τὰς καρδίας ἡμῶν.] Meaning, 'and in the sight of him [our Judge] we may, in this importunt respect, set our hearts at rest;' implying, as Lücke explains, that only the consciousness of genuine brotherly love affords tranquillity of mind and peace with God.

20, 21. Some obscurity and difficulty here exists, arising from extreme brevity: to remove which, Benson and Rosenmuller would supply a clause from the preceding verse, as follows: 'For if our heart condemn us,' as deficient in brotherly love, 'God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things, [and consequently our hearts, instead of being assured before him, will condemn us; on the other hand,] if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God.' With the phrase παῤῥησίαν ἔχειν here, may be compared a similar one of Joseph. Ant. v. 1. 15, παῤῥησίαν λαμβάνει πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, and xv. 10. 3.

22. Here is assigned another reason for cultivating universal righteousness, and particularly mutual love; namely, that then their prayers would be heard, and God would grant them all things expedient for them.

23. καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν—ἡμῖν.] Render, 'And his commandment (the sum of all) is, that we should believe in the Divine mission of his Son Jesus Christ, and love each other, according to the injunction he gave us.' See 1 Tim. i. 5. Gal. v. 6, and John iii. 16.

24. καὶ ὁ τηρῶν—αὐτοῦ.] Render, 'And he who keepeth [habitually] his precepts abideth in Him, and He in him;' implying love, favour, and blessing from God. In the next sentence is given a test of the having this 'abiding of God' in them,—namely, by His imparting to them the Holy Spirit, and its gifts, whether ordinary or extraordinary,—since, in either case, is implied the approbation and favour of God, and, from the presence or absence of which, we may infer our spiritual state; for, as it is well observed by Dr. Glocester Ridley, 'the way of the Spirit is not to be traced: the working of God is not to be perceived. The Divine Author and his operations are hidden from us, but his work is manifest; and though we cannot see God at any time, or feel the motion of the Spirit in our hearts, yet is there a certain evidence whether we are wrought on by him or not; namely, according to this infallible rule given us by St. John, whereby we may know that God by his Spirit dwelleth in us, if we keep his commandments.'

IV. The particular subject of this and the next Chapter is the Incarnation, in which the doctrine of the Atonement is, if rightly understood, included. It is therefore with reason that St. John δοκιμάζετε τὰ πνεύματα, εἰ ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστιν· ὅτι πολλοὶ ψευδοπροφῆται ἐξεληλύθασιν εἰς τὸν κόσμον. [b] Ἐν τούτῳ 2 γινώσκετε τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ Θεοῦ· πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ ὁμολογεῖ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐν σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστι.

[c] καὶ πᾶν πνεῦμα ὃ μὴ ὁμολογεῖ [τὸν] Ἰησοῦν [Χριστὸν] ἐν 3 σαρκὶ ἐληλυθότα, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐκ ἔστι· καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντιχρίστου, ὃ ἀκηκόατε ὅτι ἔρχεται, καὶ νῦν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἐστὶν ἤδη. Ὑμεῖς ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστε, τεκνία, καὶ 4 νενικήκατε αὐτούς· ὅτι μείζων ἐστὶν ὁ ἐν ὑμῖν, ἢ ὁ ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ. [d] Αὐτοὶ ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου εἰσί· διὰ τοῦτο ἐκ τοῦ 5 κόσμου λαλοῦσι, καὶ ὁ κόσμος αὐτῶν ἀκούει. [e] ἡμεῖς ἐκ 6 τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐσμεν· ὁ γινώσκων τὸν Θεὸν, ἀκούει ἡμῶν· ὃς οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, οὐκ ἀκούει ἡμῶν. Ἐκ τούτου γινώσκομεν τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς ἀληθείας καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς πλάνης.
Ἀγαπητοὶ, ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους· ὅτι ἡ ἀγάπη ἐκ τοῦ 7 b 1 Cor. 12. 3. supra 2. 22. & 5. 1. 2 John 7. c 2 Thess. 2. 7. supra 2. 18. 22. d John 3. 31. & 15. 19.

e John 8. 47. & 10. 27.

sets forth this as the cardinal doctrine of Christianity; insomuch that he speaks of the belief of this article as the accomplishment of our Christian warfare; the attainment, at least, of that faith which overcometh the world, inspiring the Christian with fortitude to surmount the temptations of the world, in whatever shape they may assail him. On the other hand, the denial of this great truth, so animating to the believer's hopes, he represents as the beginning of that apostasy, which is to come to its height in the latter ages; in fact, as one of the characteristics of Antichrist. In the present Chapter the Apostle follows up what he has just said, as to the gift of the Spirit being the sign of God's presence and favour, by warning Christians against those who falsely pretended to the Spirit; and he gives certain rules for discriminating true from false spiritual gifts: after which he proceeds again to enjoin brotherly love and charity as the bond of perfectness.

1. παντὶ πνεύματι.] Meaning, 'every one who claims to have a spiritual gift,' or lays claim to inspiration. So at 2 Thess. ii. 2, and 1 Tim. iv. 4, the term is used of those who falsely make the claim.

— ψευδοπροφῆται.] Meaning men falsely pretending to inspiration.

2. The Apostle now applies an infallible touchstone to prove the validity of such claims.

— ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκετε τὸ πνεῦμα, &c.] 'By this ye may know every spirit,' &c.; meaning to say that every such person so claiming to have the Spirit, who openly and fearlessly professes that Jesus Christ was made very man [for our redemption], is from God;' i. e. his pretensions are valid. See 1 Cor. xii. 3. Considering the known opinions of the heretics of that age, which consisted not in a denial of the divinity, but of the humanity of Christ, the best Expositors are agreed that there is reference to the tenets of the Docetæ and others, who held Jesus Christ to have been a mere φάντασμα, destitute of a real body. See Bp. Bull, Jud. Eccl. Cath., p. 17, and Lücke's Introd. Now the Apostle maintains that he came really [clothed] in the flesh, i. e. in a human body. This, however, will by no means prove, what Schliting infers, that Jesus Christ was a mere man; nay (as Mr. Holden observes), 'it plainly implies the contrary, that he might have come in a different manner, even in the form of God;' and the Jewish Doctors, as well as people, believed the Son of God to be himself God, as has been abundantly proved.

3. καὶ τοῦτό ἐστι τὸ τοῦ ἀντ.] Supply πρᾶγμα, or σημεῖον, i. e. 'the mark by which you will know any one to be an antichrist (i. e. an antichristian apostate) or not.' That such is the import of the term ἀντιχ., is plain from ii. 18, where see Note, and also the Note on 2 Thess. ii. 3.

4. ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστε.] Meaning, ye are born of God; his children, as being in his image. So at ver. 7, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστι is interchanged with ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται. Καὶ νενικ. αὐτοὺς, scil. τοὺς ἀντιχρίστους, to be supplied from the preceding. The sense is, 'ye have frustrated all their attempts to pervert you from the purity of the Gospel.' The next words show how this triumph is obtained; namely, 'because superior is he (i. e. Spirit of God) who is in, and influences you, to him (the evil Spirit) who is in the world, and influences it.'

5, 6. What is here said is, as before, founded on the absolute κρίσις between infidel Christianity and genuine Christianity. (Lücke.)

5. αὐτοὶ ἐκ τοῦ κόσμου, &c.] Meaning, 'They (i. e. the teachers in question) are [not of God, but] of the world,' actuated by a worldly spirit. 'In that spirit they speak, and therefore the world hearkens to them.'

6. ἡμεῖς.] Meaning the Apostles and divinely inspired teachers. Ὁ γινώσκων τὸν Θ., 'he who knoweth God aright,' namely, by regeneration and faith. Ἐκ τούτου γιν., 'by this test (i. e. the receiving or the rejecting this doctrine) we may know how to distinguish the spirit of truth from that of error.'

7, 8. After the above digression concerning the Θεοῦ ἐστι, καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἀγαπῶν, ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται, 8 καὶ γινώσκει τὸν Θεόν· [f] ὁ μὴ ἀγαπῶν, οὐκ ἔγνω τὸν Θεὸν, 9 ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστίν. [g] Ἐν τούτῳ ἐφανερώθη ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν, ὅτι τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν μονογενῆ ἀπέσταλκεν ὁ Θεὸς εἰς τὸν κόσμον, ἵνα ζήσωμεν δι' αὐτοῦ.

10 [h] Ἐν τούτῳ ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, οὐχ ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἠγαπήσαμεν τὸν Θεὸν, ἀλλ' ὅτι αὐτὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, καὶ ἀπέστειλε τὸν 11 Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ ἱλασμὸν περὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν. [i] Ἀγαπητοὶ, εἰ οὕτως ὁ Θεὸς ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, καὶ ἡμεῖς ὀφείλομεν ἀλλή-12 λους ἀγαπᾷν. [k] Θεὸν οὐδεὶς πώποτε τεθέαται· ἐὰν ἀγα-πῶμεν ἀλλήλους, ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν μένει, καὶ ἡ ἀγάπη αὐτοῦ 13 τετελειωμένη ἐστὶν ἐν ἡμῖν. [l] Ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν, ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ μένομεν, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν ἡμῖν, ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ δέδωκεν ἡμῖν.
14 [m] Καὶ ἡμεῖς τεθεάμεθα καὶ μαρτυροῦμεν, ὅτι ὁ Πατὴρ f Supra 2. 4. & 3. 6. infra v. 16.

g John 3. 16. Rom. 5. 8. & 8. 32. supra 3. 16.
h John 15. 16. Rom. 3. 24, 25. & 5. 8, 10. 2 Cor. 5. 19. Col. 1. 19. supra 2. 2. i Matt. 18. 33. John 15. 12, 13.
k Ex. 33. 20. Deut. 4. 12. John 1. 18. 1 Tim. 1. 17. & 6. 16. supra 2. 5. & 3. 24.
l John 14. 20. & 17. 21. supra 3. 24.
m John 1. 14. supra 1. 1.

δοκιμασία τῶν πνευμάτων, the Apostle resumes the exhortation commenced at iii. 23 to those who adhered to the true doctrine of Christ, that they would cultivate the most endeared affection towards one another; for this holy, spiritual, and self-denying love 'is of God.' 'God is love, or essential goodness and benevolence. It is, as it were, his very nature to be kind, to communicate life, and impart felicity, and to provide for the happiness of his creatures, in all cases and methods which consist with his infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and holiness; for love must ever be exercised in entire consistency with these attributes, by the perfect Source of all excellence.' (Scott.)

— ἀγαπητοὶ, ἀγαπῶμεν, &c.] Meaning, 'Let us love one another, as those who truly are of God, and rightly know him; for love (brotherly love) is not ἐκ κόσμου, but ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ (it belongs to that life which is of God), it is an essential criterion of a filial relation to God, and of right knowledge of him. (Lücke.)

8. ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστὶν] 'since God is love,' i. e. entirely love, love itself. Comp. ver. 16. Here the Apostle puts the attribute of love as God's essence (in a similar manner as in the Gospel, iv. 24, it is said, πνεῦμα ὁ Θεὸς), because God, in the redemption through Christ, is more specially and most perfectly recognised and felt to be love essentially. (Lücke.) Well is it said of God that 'he is love;' for God can as well cease to be as cease to love. If he should deny that, he would deny himself; and that he will not do, because he cannot, and he cannot do it because he will not. It is impossible for him to whom 'all things are possible' to deny himself. (Bp. Sanderson.)

9, 10. Here we have the same sentiment as at John iii. 16 and supra iii. 16.

9. ἐν τούτῳ ἐφανερώθη, &c.] Thus showing that God can be recognised by us as love, because in this was manifested the love of God, &c. (Lücke.) Τὸν μονογενῆ is here added to τὸν Υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, 'in order (as Macknight suggests) to heighten our idea of God's love to us, in giving a person of such supreme dignity, and so beloved of God, to die for us.' It is supposed that by giving Christ the title of God's only-begotten Son in this passage, the Apostle intended to overturn the heresy of Ebion and Cerinthus, who affirmed that Christ was not God's Son by nature, but that, like some other good men, he was honoured with the title on account of his virtues.

10. οὐχ ὅτι ἡμεῖς ἠγαπήσαμεν, &c.] The Apostle here lays a stress on God's loving us first, since men are more disposed to love those by whom they are first loved. On the term ἱλασμὸν see Note supra ii. 1, 2.

11. Here is drawn the inference from the foregoing position of the free love of God to us; q. d. 'Since God hath so greatly loved us, we also must, in imitation of that love, love one another as brethren in Christ.'

12. Θεὸν οὐδεὶς—ἡμῖν] q. d. 'No man hath, with his bodily eyes, seen God at any time; and therefore we cannot have such visible converse and sensible communion with him as we may have one with another. But if we love one another, we are in the Divine favour, and our love of God is perfect and complete.' (Benson.) q. d. 'Man cannot immediately return to the invisible God that love which he hath shown to us, for no man hath ever seen God (i. e. no man can ever see him); but when we love one another (love the brethren, who are visible), then God remains in us, he is present to us with his favour, and thus the love to God, who is invisible, yet spiritually present (compare ver. 19—21), is accomplished in us through the love to the brethren.' (Lücke.) On the words Θεὸν οὐδεὶς π. τεθ. see John i. 18, and on the expression μένει see supra ii. 5.

13. The connexion and sense is this: 'The love of God is founded on a mutual communion with him, but that communion depends on our consciousness of the Holy Ghost, which we have received from God, operating within us (compare iii. 24), through whose power, and in the faith in the Son of God, as Redeemer of the world, we are God's children.' (Lücke.)

14. καὶ ἡμεῖς τεθεάμεθα] q. d. 'Let no doubt ἀπέσταλκε τὸν Υἱὸν σωτῆρα τοῦ κόσμου. Ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ 15 ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἐστιν ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ μένει, καὶ αὐτὸς ἐν τῷ Θεῷ. [n] Καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐγνώκαμεν καὶ πεπι- 16 στεύκαμεν τὴν ἀγάπην, ἣν ἔχει ὁ Θεὸς ἐν ἡμῖν. ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστὶ, καὶ ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ, ἐν τῷ Θεῷ μένει, καὶ ὁ Θεὸς ἐν αὐτῷ.

[o] Ἐν τούτῳ τετελείωται ἡ ἀγάπη μεθ' ἡμῶν, ἵνα παῤ- 17 ῥησίαν ἔχωμεν ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τῆς κρίσεως, ὅτι καθὼς ἐκεῖνός ἐστι, καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐσμὲν ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ τούτῳ. Φόβος οὐκ ἔστιν 18 ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ, ἀλλ' ἡ τελεία ἀγάπη ἔξω βάλλει τὸν φόβον, ὅτι ὁ φόβος κόλασιν ἔχει· ὁ δὲ φοβούμενος οὐ τετελείωται ἐν τῇ ἀγάπῃ. Ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν αὐτὸν, ὅτι αὐτὸς πρῶτος 19 ἠγάπησεν ἡμᾶς. [p] Ἐάν τις εἴπῃ, Ὅτι ἀγαπῶ τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ 20 τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ μισῇ, ψεύστης ἐστίν· ὁ γὰρ μὴ ἀγαπῶν τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, ὃν ἑώρακε, τὸν Θεὸν, ὃν οὐχ ἑώρακε, πῶς δύναται ἀγαπᾷν; [q] καὶ ταύτην τὴν ἐντολὴν ἔχομεν 21 ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, ἵνα ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν Θεὸν, ἀγαπᾷ καὶ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ.

n Supra ver. 8, 12.

o James 2. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 15. supra 3. 8, 19, 21.

p Supra 2. 4. & 3. 17.

q Lev. 19. 18. Matt. 22. 39. Job 13. 34. & 15. 12. Eph. 5, 2. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 8. supra 3. 11, 23.

be entertained of this proof of the love of God; for we have actually seen,' &c. Σωτῆρα is in apposition with Υἱόν.

15. ὃς ἂν ὁμολογήσῃ—Θεῷ.] Render, 'And [accordingly] whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God (the Saviour sent for our salvation. See John iii. 17), he is really united with God [in mutual love].' The Apostle takes for granted, not only that the profession is sincere, but productive of a suitable conduct.

16. ἐν ἡμῖν] for εἰς ἡμᾶς; or, μένων ἐν ἡμῖν, as at vv. 12, 13. 15. Render, 'And [to induce men so to believe] we can affirm that we do surely know the love which God hath to us.'

17. ἐν τούτῳ τετελείωται—τούτῳ.] Meaning, it may be supposed, 'By this [abiding in love to our brethren] we may know that our love is perfect and sincere, so that we may have confidence [of our acceptance] in the day of judgment; namely, for this reason, that as God is [thus disposed towards us men], so also are we in this word [disposed] towards others;' namely, because we imitate the examples of love, &c. set us by our heavenly Father, and therefore may hope for acceptance, through the mercy of God and the mediation of Christ. So Lücke explains the passage as expressive of the power of brotherly love to give perfect confidence in the day of judgment to those who exercise it according to Christ's example; q. d. 'Therein the highest perfection of our mutual love shows itself—that we (or, then our love is perfect when we) at the day of judgment can have confidence, because (or inasmuch as) we walk in the world as Christ walked, [loving the brethren].'

18. 'Jam a contrariis commendat ejus boni præstantiam.' (Calvin.)

— φόβος οὐκ ἔστιν—κόλασιν ἔχ.] Meaning, 'Slavish fear exists not in this love, but perfect love [such as this] casts aside fear; for [such] fear implies terror, [which is inconsistent with love to God; since] he who so feareth the judgment is not perfected in love,' does not love perfectly and sincerely. Φόβος here signifies the fear, not of displeasing God, but of incurring his punishment, which conscience raises. See my Note on Thucyd. ii, 37.

19. ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν—ἡμᾶς.] Many eminent Commentators from Grotius take ἀγ. in the Subjunctive, 'Let us love;' which is supported by the authority of the Vulg. and Pesch. Syr. Versions. Yet the sense yielded by the Indicative is the more natural one, and the assertion is (as Abp. Newcome says) 'a just and sober one, not requiring too high perfection from human nature.' See Doddridge, and especially Jortin (cited in D'Oyly and Mant).

20. ἐάν τις εἴπῃ, Ὅτι ἀγαπῶ, &c.] The Apostle's argument is this: 'Can you, mistaken man, who are not yet arrived at that inferior stage of benevolence,—the love of your brother, whom you have seen (that is, whom the sense of mutual wants, and the experience of mutual relief, amongst the joint partakers of one common nature, might teach you to love,)—can you pretend to have attained the top and summit of this virtue, the love of God, whom you have not seen; that is, whose wonderful economy, in the system of creation and government, which makes him so amiable, you appear to have no conception of; you, who have not yet learnt that your own low system is supported on the great principle of benevolence? Fear him, flatter him, fight for him, as you blindly dread his power, you may; but to love him, as you know not his nature, is impossible.' (Bp. Warburton.)

21. The Apostle here concludes with the irrefragable argument, that 'it is Christ's distinct commandment, or rather God's through Christ (compare iii. 23), that whosoever loveth God must love his brother also.' See John xiii. 34. Augustin well expresses it: 'Si fratrem non diligis, quo-

1 V. [a] ΠΑΣ ὁ πιστεύων, ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἐστιν ὁ Χριστὸς, ἐκ a John 1. 12, 13.
τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγέννηται· καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἀγαπῶν τὸν γεννήσαντα, supra 2. 22, 23. & 4. 2, 15.
2 ἀγαπᾷ καὶ τὸν γεγεννημένον ἐξ αὐτοῦ. Ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν ὅτι ἀγαπῶμεν τὰ τέκνα τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὅταν τὸν Θεὸν 3 ἀγαπῶμεν καὶ τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν. [b] Αὕτη γάρ b Matt. 11. 29, 30. ἐστιν ἡ ἀγάπη τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ τηρῶμεν· John 14. 15, 21, 23. & 15. 10.
4 καὶ αἱ ἐντολαὶ αὐτοῦ βαρεῖαι οὐκ εἰσίν. [c] ὅτι πᾶν τὸ 2 John 6. c John 16. 33.
γεγεννημένον ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ νικᾷ τὸν κόσμον, καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν 5 ἡ νίκη ἡ νικήσασα τὸν κόσμον, ἡ πίστις ἡμῶν. [d] Τίς ἐστιν d 1 Cor. 15. 57.
ὁ νικῶν τὸν κόσμον, εἰ μὴ ὁ πιστεύων ὅτι Ἰησοῦς ἐστιν ὁ supra 4. 4, 15.
Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ;
6 [e] Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδατος καὶ αἵματος, Ἰησοῦς e John 19. 34.
ὁ Χριστὸς, οὐκ ἐν τῷ ὕδατι μόνον, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ὕδατι καὶ f Matt. 28. 19.
τῷ αἵματι· καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμά ἐστι τὸ μαρτυροῦν ὅτι τὸ John 1. 1. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 7 Πνεῦμά ἐστιν ἡ ἀλήθεια. [f] ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες 5, 6. Rev. 19. 13.

modo Eum diligis, cujus mandatum contemnis?' (Lucke.)

V. The indissoluble connexion between the law of God and of our brother is now placed in another point of view, and illustrated by new motives; since none who is not born of God can believe that Jesus is the Christ (compare supra iv. 5, 6. John viii. 43), it follows that whosoever hath this faith is born of God. (Lücke.)

1. καὶ πᾶς ὁ ἀγαπῶν, &c.] 'But [thus] every one who truly loveth him,' &c. The sentiment has the air of an adage; q. d. 'He who loves the parent will naturally love the child.' It is meant, then, that the genuine love to God's children is grounded on the genuine love of God; and that this latter consists in keeping his commandments.

2. ἐν τούτῳ γινώσκομεν — τηρῶμεν.] The Apostle here argues à generali ad speciale. Since what was said at ver. 1 was universally true, so it holds good particularly of the love of God. (Rosenmuller.) The sense is, 'By this may we know that we love the children of God aright, when we love God, and keep his commandments.'

3. Of this verse the object is to state more precisely the connexion between loving God and keeping his commandments.

— αὕτη γάρ ἐστιν ἡ ἀγάπη, &c.] Meaning, 'this is the proof and evidence of our love to God, that we keep his commandments.' The next words, καὶ αἱ ἐντολαὶ—εἰσίν, seem meant to indirectly contrast (as an encouragement to obedience) the comparatively light injunctions of the Gospel with the heavy burdens of the Law. In proof of which, the Apostle proceeds to show how they are easy,—adverting to those points in which the Gospel is especially superior to the Law,—namely, the love of God, as opposed to the fear of him, and that renewal of the heart by the communication of Divine grace, which the Law did not, and could not, provide.

4. ὅτι πᾶν τὸ γεγεννημένον—τὸν κόσμον] q. d. 'Now, as a proof of this, whosoever is born of God overcometh [the temptations of] the world.' Then is suggested the grand principle by which the victory is obtained, in the words καὶ αὕτη—πίστις ἡμῶν, where, at νίκη, there is a metonymy of the effect for the efficient, and αὕτη is for τοῦτο, as just before: on which subject compare John xvi. 33. xii. 31, sq. Hebr. xii. 1, seq.

5. Instead of further demonstrating this proposition, St. John, addressing himself to the conscience and experience of his readers, exclaims: 'But who, except he that hath faith in Christ, is capable of overcoming the world? Who but he,' &c. So 2 Cor. i. 24, it is said, τῇ γὰρ πίστει ἑστήκατε.

— τίς ἐστὶν ὁ νικῶν, &c.] Here (as at ii. 22) the interrogation is strongly affirmative. To believe Jesus to be the Son of God is to believe that he is God incarnate. Of course the belief must be a vital one, evincing its truth by its fruits, otherwise it will not conquer.

6. By the water and the blood here spoken of we may, with Wells and Carpzov, suppose the Apostle to advert to the sacraments; meaning by water the 'laver of regeneration,' and by blood the Lord's Supper, in which the wine is poured out as a symbol of the blood of the New Covenant—the former as being that by which we are regenerated, and become sons of God; the latter as that whereby we are united with God, and obtain a victory over the world (vv. 4, 5). The connexion and sense of the passage is well stated by Lücke as follows: 'Who can doubt that Jesus is really the Christ, the Son of God? For, as he was to appear in the quality of Messiah, so he has appeared; and what he was to bring, as a purifying and atoning Saviour to the world, that he has brought.'

— οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἐλθὼν—αἵματι.] The words are to be resolved thus: οὗτός (ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ver. 5) ἐστιν Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς, ὁ ἐλθὼν δι' ὕδατος καὶ αἵματος, 'such an one, viz. the Son of God, is Jesus Christ, He who (because he) is come (ἐλθὼν being here, as often, used in the sense of a Pret. Partic., instead of ἐληλυθὼς, like the English came) with water and blood.' (Lücke.)

7, 8. ὅτι τρεῖς εἰσιν—οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἕν εἰσιν.] On a passage like the present, on which volumes have been written by some of the most eminent scholars, it would be presumptuous to attempt, within the compass of a NOTE, even the briefest [ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, ὁ Πατὴρ, ὁ Λόγος, καὶ τὸ ἅγιον Πνεῦμα. καὶ οὗτοι οἱ τρεῖς ἕν εἰσι. καὶ τρεῖς εἰσιν οἱ μαρτυροῦντες 8 ἐν τῇ γῇ,] τὸ πνεῦμα, καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ, καὶ τὸ αἷμα· καὶ οἱ τρεῖς εἰς τὸ ἕν εἰσιν. [g] Εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν τῶν ἀνθρώπων 9 λαμβάνομεν, ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Θεοῦ μείζων ἐστίν· ὅτι αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἣν μεμαρτύρηκε περὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ. [h] Ὁ πιστεύων εἰς τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἔχει τὴν 10 μαρτυρίαν ἐν ἑαυτῷ· ὁ μὴ πιστεύων τῷ Θεῷ, ψεύστην πεποίηκεν αὐτόν, ὅτι οὐ πεπίστευκεν εἰς τὴν μαρτυρίαν, ἣν g John 5. 37. & 8. 17, 18.

h John 3. 16, 33. Rom. 8. 16. Gal. 4. 6.

sketch of the state of a question so extensive in its bearings as that which relates to the authenticity and sense of the disputed passage placed within brackets. Nor can this be necessary, since, I presume, most of my readers possess Mr. Horne's valuable Introduction, which contains a truly able condensed statement of the arguments on both sides of the question. Those, however, who desire to obtain complete information on the subject are referred, FOR the authenticity, to the disquisitions of Bengelius and Ernesti, Bps. Horsley and Middleton, Prof. Knittel, Drs. Nolan and Hales, and Bp. Burgess; AGAINST it, to Prof. Porson, Bp. Marsh, and Crito Cantabrigiensis [Dean Turton]. I must content myself with laying before the reader two paraphrases of the whole passage,—one with and the other without the disputed portion; leaving it to him to decide which way he thinks best. I will only add, that, after a fresh examination of the whole question for this third Edition, I see less reason than ever to receive the words as genuine. Dr. Lücke does not hesitate to say, in regard to their external evidence, that unless all criteria of truth or falsehood, on the writings of the New Test., are deceptive, the words are spurious; and that internal exegetical criticism completely agrees with the results of the external and historical. 'If (continues he) the words are genuine, the whole is in the highest degree obscure and confused; if spurious, the context, the sense, and the phraseology of St. John are clear and easy.' Should this be thought (as it may) asserting too much, we may, at least, safely affirm, that, in the present state of the evidence for and against the passage, the words cannot, with any due regard to those canons of criticism acted upon in all the other writings of the New Testament, be regarded otherwise than as spurious.

On the supposition, however, that the words are genuine, the meaning may be expressed, in the words of Bp. Burgess, as follows: 'This is he that was manifested by his baptism to be the Son of God; and by his death to be the Son of God come in the flesh; manifested not by his baptism only, with which he commenced his ministry on earth, but by his death, with which he finished it; and it is the Spirit that beareth witness that Jesus is the Son of God. Now the Spirit is truth,—a true witness. For he is not alone; there are three that bear record in heaven that Jesus is the Son of God, namely, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; and these three are one in the Divine nature. And there are three that bear witness in earth that the Son of God is come in the flesh; namely, his last breath on the cross, and the blood and water that issued from his side. And these three are one in the Person of Jesus Christ, one united proof of his human nature from the phenomena of his death. By the Jewish Law, the testimony of two or three men is true. If, then, we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater; for this is the witness of God, that he hath testified of his Son.'

On the supposition that the words are not genuine, we may express the sense according to the paraphrase of Sir Isaac Newton as follows: 'This is he that, after the Jews had long expected him, came, first in a mortal body, by baptism of water, and then in an immortal one, by shedding his blood upon the cross, and rising again from the dead; not by water only, but by water and blood; being the Son of God, as well by his resurrection from the dead (Acts xiii. 33) as by his supernatural birth of the Virgin (Luke i. 35). And it is the Spirit also that, together with the water and blood, beareth witness of the truth of his coming; because the Spirit is truth, and so a fit and unexceptionable witness. For there are three that bear record of his coming; the Spirit, which he promised to send, and which was since sent forth upon us in the form of cloven tongues and of various gifts; the baptism of water, wherein God testified "This is my beloved Son;" and the shedding of his blood, accompanied with his resurrection, whereby he became the most faithful martyr or witness of this truth. And these three, the Spirit, the baptism, and passion of Christ, agree in witnessing one and the same thing, [namely, that the Son of God is come]; and therefore their evidence is strong; for the law requires but two consenting witnesses, and here we have three; and if we receive the witness of men, the three-fold witness of God, which he bare of his Son, by declaring at his baptism, "This is my beloved Son," by raising him from the dead, and by pouring out his Spirit on us, is greater, and therefore ought to be more readily received.'

9. εἰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν, &c.] Here we have an elliptical syllogism, à minori ad majus, to be thus resolved: 'If we receive the testimony of men [meaning the declaration of two or three witnesses], how much more must we then receive [the triple and concordant] testimony of God, it being greater, i. e. more probative than any testimony of man? But if we receive God's testimony, we must believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; for this the testimony of God avers.' (Lücke.)

10. ὁ πιστεύων, &c.] '[Accordingly] he who believeth hath the testimony [just spoken] in himself,' i. e. he holdeth it with firm assent.

11 μεμαρτύρηκεν ὁ Θεὸς περὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ. [i] Καὶ αὕτη i John 4. ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτυρία, ὅτι ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἔδωκεν ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς, καὶ 12 αὕτη ἡ ζωὴ ἐν τῷ Υἱῷ αὐτοῦ ἐστιν. [k] ὁ ἔχων τὸν Υἱὸν, k John 3. 36. & 5. 24.
ἔχει τὴν ζωήν· ὁ μὴ ἔχων τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν ζωὴν οὐκ ἔχει.
13 [l] Ταῦτα ἔγραψα ὑμῖν [τοῖς πιστεύουσιν εἰς τὸ ὄνομα l John 20. 31.
τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ,] ἵνα εἰδῆτε ὅτι ζωὴν αἰώνιον ἔχετε, καὶ 14 ἵνα πιστεύητε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ. [m] Καὶ m Jer. 29. 12. Matt. 7. 8. & 21. 22.
αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ παῤῥησία ἣν ἔχομεν πρὸς αὐτὸν, ὅτι ἐάν τι Mark 11. 24. Luke 11. 9.
15 αἰτώμεθα κατὰ τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ, ἀκούει ἡμῶν. καὶ ἐὰν John 14. 13. & 15. 7. & 16. 24.
οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἀκούει ἡμῶν, ὃ ἂν αἰτώμεθα, οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἔχομεν James 1. 5. supra 3. 22.
16 τὰ αἰτήματα ἃ ᾐτήκαμεν παρ᾿ αὐτοῦ. [n] Ἐάν τις ἴδῃ τὸν n Num. 15. 30. ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτάνοντα ἁμαρτίαν μὴ πρὸς θάνατον, 1 Sam. 2. 25. Jer. 15. 1, 2. Matt. 12. 31. αἰτήσει, καὶ δώσει αὐτῷ ζωὴν, τοῖς ἁμαρτάνουσι μὴ πρὸς Mark 3. 29. Luke 12. 10. θάνατον. ἔστιν ἁμαρτία πρὸς θάνατον· οὐ περὶ ἐκείνης Heb. 6. 4. & 10. 26. 2 Pet. 2. 20.

11. καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ μαρτυρία, &c.] Meaning to say, that 'the essential practical substance of this "witness of God" may be divided into two parts; declaring, 1. that God really has given to us eternal life; and, 2. that this eternal life is granted to us in his Son, i. e. through belief in him.' (Lücke.)

12. This verse again is connected with ver. 5, and is a colophon to all that precedes.

13. In this verse we have a sort of vinculum to connect the preceding and following context; since (as Lücke observes) though referring especially to the immediately preceding passage (vv. 6—12), yet it forms the transition to the subsequent section, vv. 14—21.

— ταῦτα ἔγραψα—Θεοῦ.] To remove what might seem tautology, we must take πιστ. in the last clause emphatically, i. e. as denoting reality and heartfelt constancy of profession, as opposed to a cold historical belief.

14, 15. To enforce the foregoing exhortation to constancy in faith, the Apostle points out the high privilege of true believers, in having a confidence of approach unto God in prayer, with assurance of his readiness to answer their supplications, if the requests be made according to his will; i. e. after the prescribed manner, in such a way as may tend to his glory and their own spiritual good, and with the persuasion that, in some sense, the petitions they put up would be granted in the best manner, though it might be not in the exact manner they expected. Here there is an evident allusion to the promise made by our Lord to the Apostles, John xiv. 12—14. xvi. 23.

14. καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ παῤῥησία.] Render, 'And on this (namely, that we know we may expect future salvation) rests our sure confidence in God.'

15. καὶ ἐὰν οἴδαμεν, &c.] These words are best taken in their natural and obvious sense, as follows: 'And knowing, as we do, that he heareth us, in whatever petitions we prefer, we know (i. e. feel sure) that we have (i. e. shall have) from him the petitions we thus (i. e. according to his will) desired of him.' The difficulty, which has perplexed Commentators, may be removed by supposing (with Doddridge) that κατὰ τὸ ϑέλημα is to be supplied from the preceding verse; or at any rate the petitions must be supposed to be κατὰ τὸ ϑέλημα (in the sense that has been just explained); for otherwise the Apostle's own words teach us, that they will not be heard, much less granted.

16, 17. Of this passage the sense will best appear by considering the connexion, which is ably traced by Lücke as follows: 'St. John passes from Christian prayer in general to Christian intercession in particular,—especially for sinful brethren; and as he has shown, vv. 14, 15, that it is only prayer full of confidence, and according to God's will, which is fulfilled, so he here intimates, that the Christian should intercede with God only for that which is capable of being accomplished; and accordingly not περὶ ἁμαρτίας πρὸς ϑάνατον, but only περὶ ἁμαρτίας οὐ πρὸς ϑάνατον. 'In order (continues he) to determine the force of which expressions, we must lay down the following data: 1. that by "sin unto death" is to be understood no single sin in particular, but an entire class of sins; 2. that ἐάν τις ἴδῃ τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ shows that here must be meant a species of sins which can occur only among Christians, and not among those who are not Christians; 3. that the difference between "mortal sin" and "sin not unto death" must be externally perceptible, and not unknown to the persons addressed, otherwise the precept would be without an object, nay dangerous; not to mention that thus the difference would have been stated more precisely. Finally, that as here only moral relations are spoken of, and as, according to the usus loquendi and the fundamental ideas of the Epistle, by ζωὴ can be meant only spiritual life, ζωὴ αἰώνιος (compare iv. 9); the expression πρὸς ϑάνατον, too, cannot have a reference to bodily, but, as supr. iii. 14, only to spiritual death. Upon the whole, it is plain that St. John, by πρὸς ϑάνατον, can have meant, in general, only such sins of which spiritual death is the inevitable consequence, i. e. sins by which, according to the laws of the βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, or of the κοινωνία μετὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ μετὰ τοῦ Υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, the capability for the Christian o Supra 3. 4. λέγω ἵνα ἐρωτήσῃ· [o] πᾶσα ἀδικία ἁμαρτία ἐστὶ, καὶ ἔστιν 17 p Supra 3. 9. James 1. 27. ἁμαρτία οὐ πρὸς θάνατον. [p] Οἴδαμεν ὅτι πᾶς ὁ γεγεννη- 18 μένος ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ, οὐχ ἁμαρτάνει· ἀλλ' ὁ γεννηθεὶς ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ τηρεῖ ἑαυτὸν, καὶ ὁ πονηρὸς οὐχ ἅπτεται αὐτοῦ. οἴδαμεν ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐσμεν, καὶ ὁ κόσμος ὅλος ἐν τῷ 19 q Luke 24. 45. John 17. 3. πονηρῷ κεῖται. [q] Οἴδαμεν δὲ ὅτι ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἥκει· καὶ 20 δέδωκεν ἡμῖν διάνοιαν, ἵνα γινώσκωμεν τὸν ἀληθινόν· καί ἐσμεν ἐν τῷ ἀληθινῷ, ἐν τῷ Υἱῷ αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ.

r 1 Cor. 10. 14. οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ ἀληθινὸς Θεὸς καὶ ἡ ζωὴ αἰώνιος. [r] Τεκνία, 21 φυλάξατε ἑαυτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδώλων. ἀμήν.

ζωὴ is necessarily abolished, and the Christian state of salvation lost. As, according to St. John, the Christian life is acquired, or the passing from death to life effected by faith in Jesus Christ, and entirely accomplished by perfect and genuine brotherly love (which is the root of Christian life), so also by infidelity, worldliness, and Cain-like want of love, the Christian life is again lost, and man repasses, as it were, from life into death, ἐκ τῆς ζωῆς εἰς τὸν θάνατον. Compare supra ii. 17. 25. iii. 11—15. (Lücke.)

At ver. 17 St. John shows that indeed every ἀδικία (every action and every intention which is contrary to the divine law, every infringement on the δικαιοσύνη) is in its essence sin, but that still there exists a difference as to the degree of intensity and effect of sin, between the sin unto death and the sin not unto death. The true Christian can, as such, according to St. John, not sin unto death; he is subject to the sins not unto death, as long as he walketh in the flesh. Compare ii. 1. St. John, therefore, adds this consolation: 'But we [also] know that every one who is born of God does not sin (comp. iii. 9) [in this sense—ἁμαρτ. πρὸς θάνατον], but that (ὅτι being supplied) he who is born of God (being ever intent on sanctifying himself) keepeth himself from so sinning (τηρεῖ ἑαυτὸν, i. e. ἁγνὸν, ἀπὸ τοῦ κόσμου. Compare James i. 27. 1 Tim. v. 22. Wisd. x. 5), and thus is unassailable to the Evil One (compare Wisd. xviii. 20), the prince of this world, who maintains the sway of darkness and death over his own.' Compare Col. i. 15. Eph. vi. 12, seq. (Lücke.)

19. οἴδαμεν—ἐσμεν.] The connexion appears to be as follows: '[And it is no wonder that we, who are true Christians, should thus keep ourselves from sin;] since we assuredly know that we are of God, and are his children, and that the world at large lieth under the dominion of the Evil One.' Thereby implying that sin, though it may be naturally expected from the world, were highly inconsistent in them. The best Commentators are agreed, that τῷ πονηρῷ is masculine, not neuter; a view supported by the authority of the Pesch. Syr. The phrase κεῖσθαι ἔν τινι signifies to be under any one's influence. Comp. 2 Macc. iv. 33.

20. οἴδαμεν δὲ—αἰώνιος.] Of this passage the sense is well illustrated by Bp. Burgess, in his Letters to Mrs. J. Baillie, as follows: 'The confident assurance with which the Apostle maintains his conviction of the truth of the two doctrines concerning the Divinity and the Human Nature of Christ, which pervade the Epistle, and are summarily confirmed in vv. 7, 8, are strikingly expressed in ver. 20: "We know that the Son of God is come;" i. e. We know that Jesus is the Son of God, the Messiah, and that the Son of God is come in the flesh. But whence did the Apostles derive their knowledge that the Son of God is come? Who is meant by "him that is true," and who by the "true God?" When St. Peter confessed Christ to be the Son of God, our Saviour said, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, which is in heaven." (Matt. xvi. 17.) And, on another occasion, "No man can come to me, except the Father draw him." (John vi. 44.) I, therefore, interpret the words, "and hath given us," of the Father, and supply the term "God" by the same ellipsis as in the 16th verse of this chapter. "The true" (τὸν ἀληθινὸν) is a title peculiarly applicable to Jesus Christ,—"the true light," "the true bread," "the true vine," "the true witness." In Revel. iii. 7, he is called (in the original) "the holy, the true." Here it means, as I conceive, "the true [one, the] Messiah." We are in the true Messiah, by believing and obeying him. "This is the true God." Jesus Christ is the subject of the verse, as well as the immediate antecedent to "this." The original term (houtos) is used here as in the second verse of the first chapter of St. John's Gospel, and has the same relation here to Jesus Christ, as it has there to THE WORD, by which Jesus Christ is called God in one passage, and the true God in the other. In the Gospel the original term is rendered, not this, but the same, which expresses more strongly the connexion between the relative and its antecedent: "The same (Jesus Christ) is the true God." I propose, therefore, the following paraphrase of the 20th verse: "We know that the Son of God, the Messiah, is come; and God hath given to us an understanding, that we may know the true Messiah, and we are in—disciples of—the true Messiah, even of the Son of God, and the Eternal Life," that Eternal Life which was with the Father.'

To the authorities in support of this application of τὸν ἀληθ. to Jesus Christ, adduced by the learned Prelate from Athanasius, Bp. Pearson, and Whitby, may be added that of Lampe on John, vol. iii. p. 371, and of Dr. Pye Smith, Script. Test., vol. iii. pp. 127—133.

21. τεκνία.] Render, 'Dear children;' the diminutive being here, as often, expressive of affection. The term is, however, almost confined to St. John, occurring no where else, except in that pathetic passage of St. Paul, Gal. iv. 19, τεκνία μου, οὓς πάλιν ὠδίνω, &c.; though at Mark x. 24, τέκνα is used by our Lord in addressing his disciples.

— φυλάξατε ἑαυτοὺς ἀπὸ τῶν εἰδ.] Meaning to say, 'Such being the case, keep yourselves from idolatry of every kind and degree.'

ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΔΕΥΤΕΡΑ.

---

1 Ὁ ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕΡΟΣ ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ καὶ τοῖς τέκνοις αὐτῆς, οὓς ἐγὼ ἀγαπῶ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, (καὶ οὐκ ἐγὼ μόνος, 2 ἀλλὰ καὶ πάντες οἱ ἐγνωκότες τὴν ἀλήθειαν,) διὰ τὴν ἀλήθειαν τὴν μένουσαν ἐν ἡμῖν, καὶ μεθ' ἡμῶν ἔσται εἰς τὸν 3 αἰῶνα· ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη παρὰ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς, καὶ παρὰ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ Πατρὸς, ἐν ἀληθείᾳ καὶ ἀγάπῃ.

OF the authenticity of this, and the third Epistle of St. John, doubts were at first entertained; but, after due examination, they were, at an early period, received as canonical, and accordingly are quoted as such by writers of the second century; and that they are such has recently been shown by the elaborate researches of Lücke. Indeed, their being at first kept out of the Canon arose, probably, not so much from any opinion of their being spurious, as from their brevity, and being addressed only to individuals, and on comparatively familiar subjects. That they are both from the same hand ('the beloved Apostle') is abundantly clear, both from the manner and style, and from the sentiments; of which those of the second Epistle are very similar to such as are found in the first Epistle. Indeed, the design is nearly the same. After commencing with affectionate salutations, they proceed to commendation, and admonition to stedfastness in the faith, and Christian love and charity; and then conclude with cordial valediction. On the place and date of this and the third Epistle nothing certain is known.

1. ὁ πρεσβ.] As the word πρεσβ. properly denotes senior, and as St. John was then undoubtedly the senior Apostle, and probably the senior Christian, we may suppose him to have been called ὁ πρεσβ. κατ' ἐξοχὴν, which would soon pass into a kind of appellative, as here. And that the Apostle should use this, in preference to his own name, is probable, since he was accustomed, from modesty, to suppress it.

— ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ.] On the object of this address considerable difference of opinion exists. Of the various interpretations that have been proposed, the two following have alone any semblance of truth; 1. that by which ἐκλεκτῇ is taken as an adjective, and rendered, 'to the chosen,' excellent, or truly Christian Lady; 2. that of Grotius, Wolf, Wetstein, and others, who take ἐκλεκτῇ as a subst. and proper name, 'to the Lady Eclecta:' an interpretation also adopted by Bp. Middleton, who urges, that while the former would require τῇ κυρίᾳ τῇ ἐκλεκτῇ, or at least τῇ ἐκλ. κυρίᾳ, this is wholly unexceptionable in point of phraseology; a title of honour following the proper name, and not admitting the Article. The learned Prelate, however, adduces no examples of titles of honour in such a position; but only of names of professions. Moreover, we must thus either understand τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς at the end of the Epistle in a different sense, or suppose another sister of the same name. This difficulty, indeed, Bp. Middleton would remove by cancelling the words, as spurious. But for that there is not the least authority; and until such is produced we must retain the common interpretation, and suppose the Apostle to have omitted the Article; which may very well be accounted for, since where can such sort of brevity be so allowable as in the inscriptions of Epistles? Thus we address to Lord ——, not the Lord; the addition of the proper name supplying the place of the definite Article. It is true that there is here no proper name; but the Apostle might omit that, as having addressed the letter on the outside with the name of the Lady in question. If this be not admitted, we may, with Heumann and Lücke, suppose κυρίᾳ to be a proper name. And that the word was such has been proved by Heumann. But to this ver. 5 is adverse.

The relative οὓς agrees in sense with both τέκνοις and κυρίᾳ. On the phrase ἀγαπῶ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ to denote 'love unfeigned,' compare 1 John iii. 18.

2. διὰ τὴν ἀλήθειαν—αἰῶνα.] Repeat ἡμεῖς ἀγαπῶμεν from the context: 'We [I say] love you because of the truth (i. e. the true religion) which remaineth in us, and will ever remain.'

3. ἔσται.] Future for Optative, by Hebraism. Ἐν ἀληθείᾳ καὶ ἀγ., 'by, or with, knowledge of the truth, and mutual love,' whereby the blessings and graces of God were bestowed and preserved.

Ἐχάρην λίαν, ὅτι εὕρηκα ἐκ τῶν τέκνων σου περιπα- 4 τοῦντας ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, καθὼς ἐντολὴν ἐλάβομεν παρὰ τοῦ Πατρός. [a] Καὶ νῦν ἐρωτῶ σε, κυρία, οὐχ ὡς ἐντολὴν γράφων 5 σοι καινὴν, ἀλλὰ ἣν εἴχομεν ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς, ἵνα ἀγαπῶμεν ἀλλήλους. [b] Καὶ αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἀγάπη, ἵνα περιπατῶμεν κατὰ 6 τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ. Αὕτη ἐστὶν ἡ ἐντολὴ, καθὼς ἠκούσατε ἀπ᾽ ἀρχῆς, ἵνα ἐν αὐτῇ περιπατῆτε. [c] Ὅτι πολλοὶ πλάνοι 7 εἰσῆλθον εἰς τὸν κόσμον, οἱ μὴ ὁμολογοῦντες Ἰησοῦν Χρι-στὸν ἐρχόμενον ἐν σαρκί· οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πλάνος καὶ ὁ ἀντίχριστος. [d] Βλέπετε ἑαυτοὺς, ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσωμεν ἃ 8 εἰργασάμεθα, ἀλλὰ μισθὸν πλήρη ἀπολάβωμεν. [e] Πᾶς ὁ 9 παραβαίνων καὶ μὴ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ Θεὸν οὐκ ἔχει· ὁ μένων ἐν τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, οὗτος καὶ τὸν Πατέρα καὶ τὸν Υἱὸν ἔχει. [f] Εἴ τις ἔρχεται πρὸς ὑμᾶς, 10 καὶ ταύτην τὴν διδαχὴν οὐ φέρει, μὴ λαμβάνετε αὐτὸν εἰς οἰκίαν, καὶ χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε· ὁ γὰρ λέγων αὐτῷ 11 χαίρειν κοινωνεῖ τοῖς ἔργοις αὐτοῦ τοῖς πονηροῖς.
[g] Πολλὰ ἔχων ὑμῖν γράφειν οὐκ ἠβουλήθην διὰ χάρτου 12 καὶ μέλανος· ἀλλὰ ἐλπίζω ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς, καὶ στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλῆσαι, ἵνα ἡ χαρὰ ἡμῶν ᾖ πεπληρωμένη.
Ἀσπάζεταί σε τὰ τέκνα τῆς ἀδελφῆς σου τῆς ἐκλεκτῆς. 14
ἀμήν.

a John 13. 34. & 15. 12. Eph. 5. 2. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 4. 8. 1 John 2. 7, 8. & 3. 11, 23. & 4. 21.
b John 15. 10. 1 John 2. 24. c Matt. 24. 5, 24. 2 Pet. 2. 1. 1 John 2. 18, 22. & 4. 1, 2, 3. d Gal. 3. 4.
e 1 John 2. 23.
f Rom. 16. 17. 1 Cor. 5. 11. & 16. 22. Gal. 1. 8, 9. 2 Tim. 3. 5. Tit. 3. 10. g John 17. 13. 1 John 1. 4. 3 John 13.

4. ἐχάρην λίαν, ὅτι, &c.] Here we have set forth the design of the Epistle. Render, 'I rejoiced greatly, because I found [some] of thy children living in the [profession and practice of] the truth, as we have it revealed to us [through Jesus Christ] by God the Father.'

5. οὐχ ὡς ἐντολὴν γράφων σοι καινήν.] Compare 1 John ii. 7, 8. Ἐρωτῶ ἵνα ἀγαπῶμεν is supposed to be a delicate mode of expression for ἐρωτῶ ἵνα ἀγαπῆτε.

6. ἡ ἀγάπη.] Meaning, as Lücke explains, Christian love, of which the basis is love to God, and whose chief manifestation is love to the brethren.

7. ὅτι πολλοὶ—σαρκί.] This seems to be connected with ver. 3, the intermediate verses being, in some measure, parenthetical; q. d. ['I rejoiced to learn that thou and thy children walked in the truth, and I cannot but exhort you to continue so to do,] for many deceivers are abroad in the world, who will not allow that Jesus Christ has come in the flesh;' i. e. in the real human nature. Οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ πλ.; q. d. 'that kind of person, or every such person, is the deceiver I mean.'

8. βλέπετε ἑ.] for φυλάσσετε ἑ., 'take heed to yourselves;' compare Mark xiii. 9. Ἵνα μὴ ἀπολέσωμεν ἃ εἰργ., 'in order that we [your teachers] may not lose our reward.' Ἀλλὰ μισθὸν πλ. ἀπολάβ. The sense seems to be, 'that we may receive the ample reward which will accrue to us, if ye continue stedfast.' Πλήρη hints at some reward that the teacher would receive in the other case; which, indeed, were but just, since disciples may apostatize, and bring discredit on the master, without his being to blame.

9. See 1 John ii. 23, 24.

10. χαίρειν αὐτῷ μὴ λέγετε.] Χαίρειν λέγειν was, indeed, a form of salutation, expressive of friendly feelings. But as the receiving any such teacher into her house, and addressing such a salutation, could not but imply some degree of approbation and countenance to his doctrines, so it is forbidden by the Apostle; though by no means out of any uncharitable disposition towards such persons as individuals.

12. διὰ χάρτου καὶ μέλανος.] A sort of proverbial phrase, as also is στόμα πρὸς στόμα λαλῆσαι.

ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ ΤΡΙΤΗ.

---

1 Ὁ ΠΡΕΣΒΥΤΕΡΟΣ Γαΐῳ τῷ ἀγαπητῷ, ὃν ἐγὼ ἀγαπῶ
2 ἐν ἀληθείᾳ. Ἀγαπητὲ, περὶ πάντων εὔχομαί σε εὐοδοῦσθαι 3 καὶ ὑγιαίνειν, καθὼς εὐοδοῦταί σου ἡ ψυχή. [a] ἐχάρην γὰρ [a] 2 John 4. λίαν, ἐρχομένων ἀδελφῶν καὶ μαρτυρούντων σου τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, 4 καθὼς σὺ ἐν ἀληθείᾳ περιπατεῖς. Μειζοτέραν τούτων οὐκ ἔχω χαρὰν, ἵνα ἀκούω τὰ ἐμὰ τέκνα ἐν ἀληθείᾳ περιπα-5 τοῦντα. Ἀγαπητὲ, πιστὸν ποιεῖς, ὃ ἐὰν ἐργάσῃ εἰς τοὺς 6 ἀδελφοὺς καὶ εἰς τοὺς ξένους, οἳ ἐμαρτύρησάν σου τῇ ἀγάπῃ ἐνώπιον ἐκκλησίας· οὓς καλῶς ποιήσεις προπέμψας ἀξίως τοῦ 7 Θεοῦ. Ὑπὲρ γὰρ τοῦ ὀνόματος ἐξῆλθον, μηδὲν λαμβάνοντες
8 ἀπὸ τῶν ἐθνῶν. Ἡμεῖς οὖν ὀφείλομεν ἀπολαμβάνειν τοὺς 9 τοιούτους, ἵνα συνεργοὶ γινώμεθα τῇ ἀληθείᾳ. Ἔγραψα τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ· ἀλλ' ὁ φιλοπρωτεύων αὐτῶν Διοτρεφὴς οὐκ

Of the Gaius to whom this Epistle is addressed we know nothing, except from this Epistle. Neither the date nor place of the Epistle is ascertained. The design of it was to commend Gaius for his perseverance in the faith, and his hospitality to some Christian travellers, who had called upon him.

1. See Note at 2 John 1.

2. περὶ πάντων—σου ἡ ψυχή] 'above all things I heartily wish and pray that thou mayest be prospered, and enjoy health of body, even as thy soul prospereth.' The περὶ may be construed either with εὔχομαι, or with εὐοδ.; but the former is the more natural mode. So περὶ is used in Pind. Olymp. vi. 84, περὶ θνητῶν, ante omnes mortales. Εὐοδοῦσθαι properly signifies 'to be set well forward on one's way; 2. to go in one's way aright; 3. to be prosperous;' as here and Rom. i. 10, εἴπως ἤδη ποτὲ εὐοδωθήσομαι. Also Hom. Il. i. 287. Dionys. Hal. Ant. vi. 45. Some Commentators, indeed, would render, 'I wish that thou mayest prosper, as to all things [external], even as thy soul prospers.'

4. τούτων] for τούτου. Ἵνα, for ἢ ἵνα. In μειζοτέραν we have a provincial form for μείζονα.

5. From commending Gaius' conduct in general, St. John adverts in particular to his Christian hospitality to the brethren. (Lücke.)

— πιστὸν ποιεῖς] scil. ἔργον, 'thou actest in a manner worthy of the Gospel.' So in Libanius, cited by the Commentators, we have οὐχ Ἑλληνικὸν τοῦτο ποιεῖς. Or πιστὸν may be taken adverbially for πιστῶς, as sometimes in the Septuagint; or, with Œcumenius, we may take it for ἄξιον πιστοῦ ἀνδρός.

6. ἐκκλησίας.] Meaning the Church at Ephesus.

— καλῶς ποιήσεις προπ.] Of this phrase, also used with a participle following, an example occurs in Josephus, Bell. i. 32. 6, καλῶς δὲ ποιήσεις μνημονεύσας ὧν ὑπέσχον. By προπ. understand, 'sending them forward and helping them on their journey;' see Note at Acts xv. 3. Ἀξίως τοῦ Θεοῦ, in a manner worthy of that God whose servants they are.

7. ὑπὲρ τοῦ ὀνόμ.] 'for his sake and in his cause;' i. e. Christ's. This referring, as it must, to Θεοῦ immediately preceding, Christ is here, as well as elsewhere, termed God. Μηδὲν λαμβ., 'receiving no pay [nothing more than support] from their converts.'

8. ἡμεῖς οὖν, &c.] Conclusio est, quâ rationibus subjicit propositi sui institutum. Porro colligit universale, ut probet speciale (Aretius); q. d. 'Now we [who lead a more quiet life] must readily receive such labourers of the Lord.'

9. ἔγραψα] 'I have written,' viz., an Epistle to the Church at large, of which Gaius was a member; namely, to recommend the brethren above mentioned.

— ὁ φιλοπρωτεύων αὐτῶν.] By αὐτῶν understand the members of the Church. Of the verb φιλοπρωτεύειν no example has been ἐπιδέχεται ἡμᾶς. διὰ τοῦτο, ἐὰν ἔλθω, ὑπομνήσω αὐτοῦ τὰ 10 ἔργα ἃ ποιεῖ, λόγοις πονηροῖς φλυαρῶν ἡμᾶς. Καὶ μὴ ἀρκούμενος ἐπὶ τούτοις, οὔτε αὐτὸς ἐπιδέχεται τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς, καὶ τοὺς βουλομένους κωλύει, καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἐκβάλλει.

[b] Ἀγαπητὲ, μὴ μιμοῦ τὸ κακὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀγαθόν. Ὁ ἀγα- 11 θοποιῶν ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐστιν· ὁ δὲ κακοποιῶν οὐχ ἑώρακε τὸν Θεόν. Δημητρίῳ μεμαρτύρηται ὑπὸ πάντων, καὶ ὑπ᾽ αὐτῆς 12 τῆς ἀληθείας· καὶ ἡμεῖς δὲ μαρτυροῦμεν, καὶ οἴδατε ὅτι ἡ μαρτυρία ἡμῶν ἀληθής ἐστι.
[c] Πολλὰ εἶχον γράφειν, ἀλλ᾽ οὐ θέλω διὰ μέλανος καὶ 13 καλάμου σοι γράψαι· ἐλπίζω δὲ εὐθέως ἰδεῖν σε, καὶ στόμα 14 πρὸς στόμα λαλήσομεν. Εἰρήνη σοι. ἀσπάζονταί σε οἱ 15 φίλοι· ἀσπάζου τοὺς φίλους κατ᾽ ὄνομα.

b Ps. 37. 27. Isa. 1. 16. 1 Pet. 3. 11. 1 John 3. 6, 49.

c 2 John 12.

adduced elsewhere. Φιλόπρωτος, however, is found in Plutarch, Artemidorus, and other later writers. On the subject of this Diotrephes various conjectures have been hazarded; all, however, destitute of any foundation. Οὐκ ἐπιδέχεται ἡμᾶς, i. e. refuses to recognize my authority, or attend to my admonitions.

10. ὑπομνήσω αὐτοῦ τὰ ἔργα.] A softened, and perhaps provincial mode of expressing 'I will make him remember;' namely, by reproving and chastizing him; for, 'I shall remember [to reprove and punish him for] his evil works.' So at Revel. xvi. 19, we have καὶ Βαβυλὼν ἡ μεγάλη ἐμνήσθη ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, δοῦναι αὐτῇ τὸ ποτήριον τοῦ οἴνου τοῦ θυμοῦ τῆς ὀργῆς αὐτοῦ. Similarly it is said, 2 Cor. xiii. 2, ἐὰν ἔλθω, οὐ φείσομαι. The cavil raised upon the sentiment is completely overturned by Whitby. Καὶ ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλ. ἐκβ. As it can hardly be supposed that Diotrephes would excommunicate any one on so frivolous a pretext, it is best, with most recent Commentators, to take the sense of ἐκ τῆς ἐκκλ. ἐκβ. to be, 'refuses to receive them as Christians,' for his thus denying them hospitality compelled them to go elsewhere.

11. μὴ τὸ κακὸν, ἀλλὰ τὸ ἀγαθὸν] 'not the evil example, but the good;' which is then confirmed by a weighty saying, the full sense of which seems to be this: 'He who practises what is good, especially in works of benevolence, is [a son] of God; he who practises any sort of evil doth not [really] know God, because, by his actions, he shows he is not sensible of his obligations to virtue.'

12. μεμαρτ. ὑπὸ πάντων] 'has a good testimony borne to him by all;' see Acts xvi. 2. Hebr. xi. 2. In ὑπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ἀλ. there is an acutè dictum, not to be too much pressed on. It means, as Carpzov explains, re ipsâ. Similarly in Josephus, Antiq. xvi. 8. 4, we have τὸν μὲν ὑπ' αὐτῆς τῆς ἀληθείας ἀναίτιον (re ipsâ innocentem) διαβαλεῖν.

15. οἱ φίλοι—κατ' ὄνομα.] Meaning (as has been shown at large in Rec. Synop.), 'Our friends [here] salute thee. Greet our friends [with thee] by name;' i. e. severally and individually.

OCT.17.1833

ΙΟΥΔΑ ΤΟΥ ΑΠΟΣΤΟΛΟΥ

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΗ.

---

1 [a] ἸΟΥΔΑΣ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ δοῦλος, ἀδελφὸς δὲ Ἰακώ- a Lu. 6. 16. John 17. 11.
βου, τοῖς ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡγιασμένοις, καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ Acts 1. 13. 1 Pet. 1. 5.

THE authenticity of this Epistle was at first called in question; but, after due examination, it was, at an early period, received into the Canon of Scripture, and accordingly is quoted as genuine by Tertullian, Clemens Alex., Origen, and other early Fathers. In short, its authenticity has been placed beyond doubt by various writers.

The writer styles himself the brother of James the Less, who was the Bishop of Jerusalem. Thus he was one of the cousins of Christ. He was son of Alpheus, and was surnamed Thaddæus, or Lebbæus; and one of the twelve Apostles. Of the particulars of his life after his presence with the disciples on the day of Pentecost, we have little or no certain information. It is probable that he remained for some time in Jerusalem, preaching the Gospel to the Jews; but that afterwards, as the troubles of Judæa came on, he quitted his native land, and went to preach the Gospel in foreign countries. Ecclesiastical tradition informs us that he evangelized Arabia, Syria, Mesopotamia, and Persia: indeed the Syrians still claim him as their Apostle. Upon the whole, there seems every reason to suppose that, after his leaving Judæa, he dedicated his evangelical labours chiefly to his own countrymen, and especially those that were called of the Eastern Dispersion; probably treading in the steps of St. Peter, who seems, towards the close of his life, to have devoted himself to that field. In fact, we may reasonably suppose that he was first a coadjutor with, and afterwards the successor to, that Apostle, in evangelizing the Eastern Dispersion; just as St. Thomas, probably passing over from Arabia to Hindoostan, evangelized at least the southern part of that vast region. That St. Jude did occupy the above field, is confirmed by the strong similarity (nay, even coincidence) between this Epistle and that of St. Peter, and will best serve to account for that coincidence, and moreover strengthen the evidence for the authenticity of that Epistle.

Of the place where this Epistle was written we know nothing, and on its exact date the learned are by no means agreed; some, as Dr. Lardner, assigning it to as early a period as A.D. 65; others, as Dr. Mill, to as late as 90; nay, some even towards the close of the first century. It is impossible to fix any precise period; but there is little doubt that the early dates assigned are false and unfounded, and yet the arguments urged by Dr. Mill (from the circumstance of the false teachers mentioned by St. Peter as about to come being described by St. Jude as actually come; and from the coincidence between this Epistle and 2 Pet. ch. ii.) will scarcely authorize so late a date as 90, still less the close of the first century: though, after all, that is far likelier to be the true date than any of the early ones, and we have every reason to think that the Apostle lived to a very advanced age. Such, too, is confirmed by what Abulpharagius tells us, that the Pesch. Syriac Version (probably of the Old Testament) was made in the time of St. Jude, and by his authority for the use of the Oriental Churches, or rather the Eastern Dispersion; among whom, no doubt, the Epistle to the Hebrews in Syro-Chaldee had been circulated, and probably a translation of 2 Peter into the same language. (See the Introduction to that Epistle.)

With respect to the design of this Epistle, it is precisely the same as that of the second Epistle of Peter. As to the disputed question to whom addressed, suffice it to observe, that, from the arguments and examples being chiefly taken from the Jewish Scriptures, there is every reason to suppose (with Estius, Witsius, Hammond, Benson, and Moldenhauer,) that it was, though addressed to Christians generally, intended especially for the Jewish Christians; and, considering that it is written in Greek, it may have been for the Western Dispersion, as well as the Eastern. Yet bearing in mind St. Jude's close connexion with the Eastern Dispersion, it would seem not improbable that he also formed a Syro-Chaldee Version of it for the use of those Jewish Christians who did not understand Greek.

Of this Epistle the style is, upon the whole, pure, though the terms there used are not unfrequently derived from the phraseology of common life. In its character it is, like the Epistles of St. Peter, forcible and touching.

1. τοῖς ἐν Θεῷ Πατρὶ ἡγ.] Equivalent to ἡγιασμένοι ἐν Χριστῷ at 1 Cor. i. 2, 'true Christians.' Τετηρ., 'kept stedfast in the faith' to which they had been called by the grace of τετηρημένοις κλητοῖς· ἔλεος ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ ἀγάπη πλη- 2 θυνθείη.

b Phil. 1. 27. 1 Tim. 1. 18. & 6. 12. 2 Tim. 4. 7.

[b] Ἀγαπητοί, πᾶσαν σπουδὴν ποιούμενος γράφειν ὑμῖν περὶ 3 τῆς κοινῆς σωτηρίας, ἀνάγκην ἔσχον γράψαι ὑμῖν, παρακαλῶν ἐπαγωνίζεσθαι τῇ ἅπαξ παραδοθείσῃ τοῖς ἁγίοις πίστει.

c Rom. 9. 21, 22. Tit. 1. 16. 1 Pet. 2. 8. 2 Pet. 2. 1, 3, 19.

[c] Παρεισέδυσαν γάρ τινες ἄνθρωποι, οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι 4 εἰς τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, ἀσεβεῖς, τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν χάριν μετατιθέντες εἰς ἀσέλγειαν, καὶ τὸν μόνον δεσπότην [Θεὸν] καὶ Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι. [d] Ὑπομνῆσαι 5 δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι, εἰδότας ὑμᾶς, ἅπαξ τοῦτο, ὅτι ὁ Κύριος λαὸν ἐκ γῆς Αἰγύπτου σώσας, τὸ δεύτερον τοὺς μὴ πιστεύ-σαντας ἀπώλεσεν· [e] ἀγγέλους τε τοὺς μὴ τηρήσαντας τὴν 6 ἑαυτῶν ἀρχὴν, ἀλλὰ ἀπολιπόντας τὸ ἴδιον οἰκητήριον, εἰς κρίσιν μεγάλης ἡμέρας, δεσμοῖς ἀϊδίοις ὑπὸ ζόφον τετήρηκεν· d Num. 14. 29, &c. & 26. 64, 65. Ps 106. 26. 1 Cor. 10. 5. Heb. 3. 18, 19.

e John 8. 44. 2 Pet. 2. 4.

God. On κλητ. see Note on Matt. xx. 16. Ver. 2 contains an apostolic salutation, like 1 Pet. i. 2.

3. πᾶσαν σπουδὴν—πίστει.] The sense is: 'When I made it my earnest business to write unto you concerning the common salvation, I thought it needful to insert an exhortation, that you should zealously strive for the preservation of the faith which was formerly delivered to the saints.' With σπουδὴν ποιούμενος compare 2 Pet. i. 5, σπουδὴν πᾶσαν παρεισενέγκαντες.

— τῆς κοινῆς σωτηρίας.] So at 2 Macc. ix. 21 we have ἀναγκαῖον ἡγησάμην φροντίσαι τῆς κοινῆς πάντων ἀσφαλείας. Ἐπαγων. τῇ πίστει is for ἀγων. ἐπὶ τῇ π., 'to strive earnestly for the faith,' here called the common salvation, because the salvation it held out was common to all nations, and all classes or conditions of men. See Note on Philem. 5. On ἅπαξ compare 2 Pet. ii. 21.

4. The Apostle now shows why such care was necessary, to preserve the purity of the faith.

— παρεισέδυσαν γὰρ, &c.] 'have covertly insinuated themselves:' a use of the word not unfrequent in the later writers, and of which examples are adduced by Wetstein from Josephus, Philo, Plutarch, and other writers. Similarly, at Galat. ii. 4 we have οἵτινες παρεισῆλθον κατασκοπῆσαι τὴν ἐλευθερίαν ἡμῶν.

— οἱ πάλαι προγεγραμμένοι.] In προγεγρ. εἰς κρ. we have a forensic mode of expression, denoting 'those cited to trial' by posting up their names, or those whose names were posted up, as required εἰς κρίμα, for condemnation and punishment. So of such it is said, 2 Pet. ii. 3, οἷς τὸ κρῖμα οὐκ ἀργεῖ. The expression, therefore, does not imply any predestination of the persons, but merely imports that they were long since foretold, and thereby designated, as persons who should suffer. Τοῦτο τὸ κρῖμα, i. e. such a punishment as the Apostle proceeds to state, vv. 5—7. 11. 15.

— τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν χάριν μετατιθέντες εἰς ἀσέλγ.] 'who abuse the gracious dispensation of the Gospel [meant to encourage virtue and promote holiness] into an occasion of lasciviousness.' Compare 1 Pet. ii. 16. Μετατ. properly signifies 'to alter any thing from its original purpose,' and, in a figurative sense, to abuse. The persons in question (the false teachers so strongly censured by St. Peter and St. John) abused God's promise of mercy to the penitent, by representing that mercy as having no limits, and as extending even to unrepented and unforsaken sin.

— τὸν μόνον δεσπότην, &c.] If the word Θεὸν here be genuine, the δεσπότην Θεὸν and Κύριον (according to the canon of Mr. Sharp and Bp. Middleton) must be understood of one person (as is done by the Syriac and Coptic Translators), i. e. 'denying our only Lord God, Jesus Christ.' Compare 2 Pet. ii. 1—3, and Note.

5. ὑπομνῆσαι δὲ ὑμᾶς—τοῦτο.] On the construction and sense of ἅπαξ no little difference of opinion exists. Some join it with ὑπομνῆσαι, construing thus: ὑπομνῆσαι δὲ ὑμᾶς βούλομαι ἅπαξ τοῦτο, καίπερ εἰδότας ὑμᾶς, 'I wish once more to remind you of this, though ye know it.' Others join it with εἰδότας, in the sense, 'though you already know it,' which is certainly the more natural construction; but as that signification of ἅπαξ is not fully proved, I prefer the former view, and have pointed accordingly.

— τοὺς μὴ πιστεύσαντας] for ἀπειθήσαντας (compare Heb. iv. 2), unbelief producing disobedience. By ἀπώλεσε it is intimated that God will deal so with false Christian professors.

6. τοὺς μὴ τηρ. τὴν ἑ. ἀ.] Some doubt exists as to the sense of τὴν ἀρχὴν ἑαυτῶν, which the earlier Commentators in general explain 'their first state,' the later ones, 'their primitive dignity as sons of God, and the original excellence in which they were created.' The two senses, however, merge into each other. Again, οἰκητήριον is by some interpreted, 'their proper habitation in heaven];' by others (as Benson and Schleus.) 'their own proper situation, [though aspiring to a higher];' which latter sense is, indeed, very suitable to the context, but destitute of proof. Εἰς κρίσιν μεγάλης ἡμέρας is by hypallage for εἰς ἡμέραν κρίσεως, 2 Pet. ii. 9. So the Pharisees, as Josephus informs us, Ant. xviii. 1. 3, believed that ἐπὶ χθονὸς δικαιώσεις (punishments) καὶ τιμὰς, οἷς ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας ἐπιτήδευσις ἐν τῷ βίῳ γέγονε· καὶ ταῖς μὲν εἱργμὸν ἀΐδιον προστίθεσθαι (are apportioned), ταῖς δὲ ῥαστώνην τοῦ ἀναβιοῦν.

7 [f] ὡς Σόδομα καὶ Γόμοῤῥα, καὶ αἱ περὶ αὐτὰς πόλεις, τὸν ὅμοιον τούτοις τρόπον ἐκπορνεύσασαι, καὶ ἀπελθοῦσαι ὀπίσω σαρκὸς ἑτέρας, πρόκεινται δεῖγμα, πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέ-8 χουσαι. [g] Ὁμοίως μέντοι καὶ οὗτοι, ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι, σάρκα μὲν μιαίνουσι, κυριότητα δὲ ἀθετοῦσι, δόξας δὲ βλασφημοῦσιν.
9 [h] Ὁ δὲ Μιχαὴλ ὁ ἀρχάγγελος, ὅτε τῷ Διαβόλῳ διακρι-νόμενος διελέγετο περὶ τοῦ Μωϋσέως σώματος, οὐκ ἐτόλμησε κρίσιν ἐπενεγκεῖν βλασφημίας, ἀλλ' εἶπεν· Ἐπιτιμήσαι σοι 10 Κύριος! [i] Οὗτοι δὲ, ὅσα μὲν οὐκ οἴδασι, βλασφημοῦσιν· ὅσα δὲ φυσικῶς, ὡς τὰ ἄλογα ζῶα, ἐπίστανται, ἐν τούτοις φθεί-11 ρονται. [k] Οὐαὶ αὐτοῖς! ὅτι τῇ ὁδῷ τοῦ Κάϊν ἐπορεύθησαν, καὶ τῇ πλάνῃ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν, καὶ τῇ ἀντιλογίᾳ τοῦ Κορὲ ἀπώλοντο.
12 [l] Οὗτοί εἰσιν ἐν ταῖς ἀγάπαις ὑμῶν σπιλάδες, συνευωχούμενοι ἀφόβως, ἑαυτοὺς ποιμαίνοντες· νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι, f Gen. 19. 24. Deut. 29. 23. Isa. 13. 19. Jer. 20. 16. & 50. 40. Lam. 4. 6. Ezek. 16. 49. Hos. 11. 8. Amos 4. 11. Luke 17. 29. 2 Pet. 2. 6.

g 2 Pet. 2. 10, 11.
h Dan. 10. 13. & 12. 1. Zach. 3. 2. 2 Pet. 2. 11. Rev. 12. 7.
i 2 Pet. 2. 11.
k Gen. 4. 8. Num. 16. 1. & 21. 7, 21. 2 Pet. 2. 15. 1 John 3. 12. l Prov. 25. 14. 2 Pet. 2. 13, 17.

7. αἱ περὶ αὐτὰς πόλεις.] Meaning the circumjacent cities of Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar. Τούτοις. Referring to the inhabitants of those cities, by the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον.

— ἀπελθοῦσαι ὀπίσω σαρκὸς ἑτ.] These words are explanatory of the preceding term ἐκπορνεύσασαι, &c.; denoting those unnatural vices adverted to by St. Paul, Rom. i. 26. Δεῖγμα, for ὡς παράδειγμα. So it is said in a passage of 3 Macc., cited by Rosenmuller, σὺ—Σοδομίτας πυρὶ καὶ θείῳ κατέφλεξας, παράδειγμα τοῖς ἐπικινουμένοις καταστήσας.

— πυρὸς αἰωνίου δίκην ὑπέχουσαι] 'undergoing punishment,' &c. By the term αἰωνίου (the sense of which has been unwarrantably lowered by several recent Commentators) the Apostle means to represent them as publicly set forth, in their condemnation, for an eternal example of the punishment which God sometimes inflicts for sin in this world; [forming but a faint type of the eternal woe which he hath reserved for the next].'

8. ὁμοίως—βλασφ.] Render, 'In like manner, notwithstanding [such awful examples of punishment are held out] these dreamers defile the flesh [with lewdness], set at nought government, and revile dignities.' See 2 Pet. ii. 10, 11. The best Expositors, from Beza and Grotius down to Laurmann, are justly agreed that ἐνυπνιάζ. must be taken in a figurative sense, denoting the giving way to idle and delusive fancies, promising themselves security and acceptance in courses which the Gospel disallows. I have pointed accordingly, as, indeed, propriety requires; ἐνυπνιαζόμενοι standing for οἳ ἐνυπνιάζονται.

9. ὁ δὲ Μιχαὴλ, &c.] Of these words the purpose is, we may suppose, to show that the Gnostics here imitate the fallen angels in their rebellious speeches and conduct; whereas the Archangel will afford them a better example, who, even under the greatest provocation, refused to pronounce a harsh sentence of condemnation against a fallen spirit. Hence it follows, that to rail against the constituted ecclesiastical authorities, when doing what is right, must be a most aggravated offence.

The circumstance here alluded to is by most recent Commentators supposed to have been derived from an Apocryphal book (now lost) called the ἀνάβασις Μωϋσέως, and to have been merely introduced by St. Jude as an instructive fable, serving to illustrate the doctrine in question, that we ought not to speak evil of dignities. But we should be slow to believe that an inspired Apostle would enforce his doctrine by a mere fable; and, indeed, it is evidently mentioned, not as a fable, but as a fact. See Note on vv. 14, 15.

10. ὅσα δὲ φυσικῶς] scil. ἐπίστανται. Render, 'which they know by natural instinct.' So in Diog. Laërt. x. 137, we have φυσικῶς καὶ χωρὶς λόγου. The sentiment here is the same with that at 2 Pet. ii. 12, where see Note.

11. τῇ πλάνῃ τοῦ Βαλαὰμ μισθοῦ ἐξεχύθησαν.] Meaning, 'they impetuously rush upon the sin committed by Balaam for the lucre of gain;' i. e. as he excited the people to whoredom with the Moabites, so they, through love of lucre, encourage Christians in carnal lusts. In this sense ἐκχ. occurs also in the Classical writers; ex. gr. Plut. Vit. M. Ant. 21, εἰς τὸν ἀκόλαστον βίον ἐκκεχυμένος. Of ἀντιλογία in the sense rebellion or insurrection, an example is adduced by Laurmann, from the Protevang. Jacobi, v. 9. On this whole passage, compare the similar one of 2 Pet. ii. 15. 17, and Notes.

12. οὗτοί εἰσιν ἐν ταῖς, &c.] Meaning to say, 'These persons are spots and a disgrace to your love-feasts, when they feast with you to an excess which shows no reverence to God, or regard to man;' see Luke xviii. 2. The term σπιλάδες is by many learned Commentators understood of those rocks, scarce rising above the surface of the sea, on which vessels are shipwrecked; an apt emblem of those false teachers, who cause others to make shipwreck of their faith; compare 1 Tim. i. 19. This interpretation, however, involves such incongruity of figure, that it is better to retain the sense commonly assigned, spots or stains, what St. Peter, in a similar passage, calls σπῖλοι. With the present description compare that of Ezek. xxxiv. 8.

— νεφέλαι ἄνυδροι] 'waterless clouds:' a fit ὑπὸ ἀνέμων * παραφερόμεναι· δένδρα φθινοπωρινὰ, ἄκαρπα, δὶς ἀποθανόντα, ἐκριζωθέντα· [m] κύματα ἄγρια θαλάσσης, 13 ἐπαφρίζοντα τὰς ἑαυτῶν αἰσχύνας· ἀστέρες πλανῆται, οἷς ὁ ζόφος τοῦ σκότους εἰς [τὸν] αἰῶνα τετήρηται! [n] Προεφή- 14 τευσε δὲ καὶ τούτοις ἕβδομος ἀπὸ Ἀδὰμ, Ἐνὼχ, λέγων· m Isa. 57. 10.

n Gen. 5. 18. Dan. 7. 10. Acts 1. 11. 1 Thess. 1. 10. 2 Thess. 1. 10. Rev 1. 7.

emblem of false teachers, who promise much of evangelical truth and purity, but perform little worthy of the title; q. d. 'As clouds carried about in the air, but devoid of water, do not nourish the earth; so these boasters hurry about, promising much, but performing little, and doing no benefit whatever.' To this purpose is a proverb in Schultens' Antholog., 'Doctus sine opere est ut nubes sine pluvia.' For περιφερόμεναι, many MSS., Versions, and early Editions have παραφ., which I have adopted, in common with almost all the Editors from Wetstein to Scholz.

— δένδρα φθινοπωρινά.] Meaning, trees as they are at the end of autumn, without fruit, or even leaves. There seems to be a climax in the several terms φθινοπωρινὰ, ἄκαρπα, δὶς ἀποθανόντα, and ἐκριζωθέντα. Of these, δὶς ἀποθανόντα is explained by the best Commentators, 'doubly, i. e. altogether, dead.' But there rather seems an allusion to the preceding terms, which denote persons only thus far alive; see Benson and Macknight. In ἐκριζωθέντα we have the apex of the climax; for of trees uprooted there can be no more hope of fruit. Moreover, as ἄκαρπα is explanatory of φθινοπωρινὰ, so is ἐκριζωθέντα of δὶς ἀποθ.; for trees torn up by the roots may be said to be twice dead; i. e. as dead again as those which, though dead, still continue in the ground.

13. κύματα ἄγρια] lit. 'wild waves:' a very unusual expression; though found at Wisd. xiv. 1. Indeed, Commentators remark that ἄγριος is scarcely ever applied to inanimate objects. Yet I have noted another example in Herodotus, viii. 13, νὺξ πολλὸν ἦν ἔτι ἀγριωτέρη, τοσούτῳ ὅσῳ ἐν πελάγει φερομένοισιν ἐπέπιπτε. Ἐπαφρίζοντα is usually rendered despumantes, foaming out (as if it were ἐξαφρ., which occurs in Æschylus, Agam. 1034, αἱματηρὸν ἐξαφροίζεσθαι μένος). I prefer 'foaming up,' viz., on the shore; ἀφρὸς meaning not only the foam of the sea, but (as we find by the Schol. on Hom. Il. O. 626) the ἀπόβλημα, the wreck, i. e. sea-weeds, &c., thrown up on the sea-shore. And this illustrates the term αἰσχύνας just after; for, as the wreck is the refuse of the sea, so were the foolish and obscene discourses (the αἰσχύνας being rightly supposed by Rosenmuller to denote the filthiness and foolish talking mentioned by St. Paul) which those persons spouted forth, their shame. Compare Is. lvii. 20.

Finally, in the expression ἀστέρες πλανῆται (for the more common one ἀστέρες διαθέοντες), we have an allusion to the wandering, unsettled habits of those teachers, (called stars, according to Jewish imagery,) ever on the watch to gratify their appetites.

14, 15. These verses have now been at length proved to be cited from an Apocryphal book of Enoch, often quoted by the Fathers (see Fabr. Cod. Pseud. V. T. vol. i. p. 160), and which was supposed to be lost, but has lately been discovered in an Ethiopic Version, and edited, with a translation, by Abp. Laurence, Oxford, 1821, who refers the composition to the time of Herod the Great. Notwithstanding this, however, Mr. Horne maintains that St. Jude did not quote from any book extant in his day purporting to have been written by Enoch, and thinks 'we may rationally conclude that Jude altered the traditional Antediluvian prophecy of Enoch, under the direction of the infallible Spirit, who was to guide them into all truth.' But nothing surely can be more harsh and far-fetched than this supposition, and the verbal coincidence overturns any such notion. Certainly, the quoting from the book in question will by no means invalidate the genuineness of the Epistle; for the Apostle's quoting from Enoch's, as a work which was received by the Jews as such, will not involve his inspiration; since the promise of preserving the Apostles from error, and guiding them into all truth, must be understood, with limitation, to mean all error of any consequence, and all truth important to the purpose of salvation. Now here the Apostle's quotation gives no currency to imposture; especially if his words be properly interpreted, which, I apprehend, they have not been. The sense seems simply to be: 'To these (i. e. such as these) Enoch (the seventh from Adam) also prophesied (i. e. foretold) the fate of incorrigible sinners in these words, "Behold,"' &c.: the Apostle merely meaning to apply what was said by Enoch to the Antediluvians, to the sinners of his own age; in like manner as our Saviour said unto the Scribes and Pharisees, 'Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written,' &c. And so Caiaphas, the High Priest, is said to have 'prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation' (John xi. 51); because he spoke as truly as if he had prophesied.

As to the passage at ver. 9, there the principle vainly contended for by Mr. Horne here will entirely apply; for there we have certainly no citation at all, nor probably any reference to a book then extant, but merely an allusion to a circumstance recorded in the Traditions of the Jewish Doctors; and the Apostle is no more answerable for the truth of the supposed occurrence, than St. Stephen was answerable for the truth of certain matters brought forward in his Speech to the Jews, and resting on the tradition of their own Doctors. In short, the Apostle merely adverts to this traditionary story (without vouching for its truth) as a popular illustration of the weighty maxim, not to speak evil of dignities; and that from the example of the Archangel, who did not venture to rail even at Satan.

15. As to the alterations here supposed to have been made by the Apostle, it is not certain that he made any at all; for we have not the original, but only an Ethiopic Version; and if that Version was made with no greater exactness than the Ethiopic Version of the New Testament (and we can hardly expect so much), it is slender evidence as to what was in the original Greek, or rather κρίσιν κατὰ πάντων, καὶ ἐξελέγξαι πάντας τοὺς ἀσεβεῖς Matt. 12. 36. & 25. 31.

15 "Ἰδοὺ, ἦλθε Κύριος ἐν * ἁγίαις μυριάσιν αὐτοῦ, [o] ποιῆσαι o Zach. 14. 5.
αὐτῶν περὶ πάντων τῶν ἔργων ἀσεβείας αὐτῶν ὧν ἠσέβησαν, 2 Thess. 1. 7.
καὶ περὶ πάντων τῶν σκληρῶν, ὧν ἐλάλησαν κατ' αὐτοῦ ἁμαρτωλοὶ ἀσεβεῖς."
16 [p] Οὗτοί εἰσι γογγυσταὶ, μεμψίμοιροι, κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας p Ps. 15. 10. 2 Pet. 2. 18.
αὐτῶν πορευόμενοι· καὶ τὸ στόμα αὐτῶν λαλεῖ ὑπέρογκα, 17 θαυμάζοντες πρόσωπα ὠφελείας χάριν. Ὑμεῖς δὲ, ἀγαπητοὶ, μνήσθητε τῶν ῥημάτων τῶν προειρημένων ὑπὸ τῶν ἀπο- q Acts 20. 29.
18 στόλων τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, [q] ὅτι ἔλεγον ὑμῖν, 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Tim. 3. 1. & 4. 3. ὅτι "ἐν ἐσχάτῳ χρόνῳ ἔσονται ἐμπαῖκται, κατὰ τὰς ἑαυτῶν 2 Pet. 2. 1. & 3. 3. ἐπιθυμίας πορευόμενοι τῶν ἀσεβειῶν." r Prov. 18. 1. Ezek. 14. 7. Hos. 4. 14. & 9. 10.
19 [r] Οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἀποδιορίζοντες, ψυχικοὶ, Πνεῦμα μὴ 1 Cor. 2. 14.

Syro-Chaldee. Πάντας was probably not an addition of the Apostle, but rather the word had been inadvertently passed over (as seeming not essential to the sense) by the Translator, who did not perceive the strength and beauty of the antithesis. As to πάντων for αὐτῶν, so far from being an alteration of the Apostle, αὐτῶν, if it was really in the Ethiopic Translator's original, was probably an error of the transcriber for πάντων, which is required by the context; for the point of the warning turns upon the word all, as in Ps. xix. 17, 'the wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget God;' and 2 Thess. ii. 12, ἵνα κριθῶσι πάντες οἱ μὴ πιστεύσαντες τῇ ἀληθείᾳ. The writer meant to say that judgment and condemnation would be given against all such sinners; that their words as well as works would be brought into judgment at the shortly impending advent of the Lord.

— ἁγίαις μυριάσιν.] This, for μυρ. ἁγ., is found in almost all the best MSS. and early Editions, and has been adopted by almost every Editor from Wetstein to Scholz.

— ἀσεβείας αὐτῶν ὧν ἠσέβ.] This is not well rendered in E. V. 'ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed;' which introduces a tautology not to be found in the original. Our Translators here, as often, followed the Vulgate, when they should have followed (if any Version) the Pesch. Syr., 'opera omnia quæ impie fecerunt.' It is plain that τὰ ἔργα ἀσεβείας ἀσεβεῖν is equivalent to ἀσέβειαν ἀσεβεῖν; an idiom very frequent in the Classical writers, on which see Matthiæ, Gr. Gr. § 413. 415.

16. γογγυσταὶ] i. e. 'murmurers and censurers' of their superiors, sparing no dignity. Μεμψίμ. may be literally rendered fault-finders, of which character a spirited sketch is given by Theophrastus. The words κατὰ τὰς ἐπιθυμίας α. πορ. are usually understood as descriptive of their lusts; but, from what precedes, we may rather suppose them to denote persons who care not for the opinion of others, nay, are little solicitous about the favour of God, and follow their own impulses only, the προπετεῖς of 2 Tim. iii. 4. At λαλεῖ ὑπέρογκα sub. ῥήματα, i. e. as Hesych. explains, ὑπέρμετρα. I would compare Æschyl. Theb. 438, ἐς οὐρανὸν Πέμπει—κυμαίνοντ' ἔπη.

The Apostle alludes to their boastful speeches, having, probably, in mind 2 Pet. ii. 18, ὑπέρογκα γὰρ ματαιότητος φθεγγόμενοι.

— θαυμάζοντες πρόσωπα.] An expression occurring in Levit. xix. 15 (and so θαυμάζειν τινα in the Classical writers), denoting 'to pay court to' the great or wealthy, ὠφελείας χάριν, 'for what they could get.' So Thucydides, i. 28, φίλους ποιεῖσθαι, οὓς οὐ βούλονται, ὠφελείας ἕνεκα.

17. The Epistle, as usual, concludes with exhortation. In τῶν ῥημάτων—ἀποστόλων there is doubtless a reference to 2 Pet. iii. 2, 3; but probably also to Acts xx. 29, 30. 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1. 2 Thess. ii. 3—12.

18. By ἐμπαῖκται, as at 2 Pet. iii. 3, are denoted scoffers,—men who made a jest of serious and vital religion, and especially of the doctrines of the advent of Christ to judgment, and the resurrection of the dead. Τῶν ἀσεβειῶν has the force of the adjective ἀσεβεῖς; and we may, with Laurmann, take the whole phrase as at ver. 16, understanding it of a self-willed spirit, which follows its own fancies. So that there was no occasion for Bentley to conjecture ἀσελγειῶν. It was the common interpretation, not the common reading, that wanted rectifying. The epithet ἀσεβεῖς is surely applicable to such persons; since such a spirit could not but lead them to pervert the Gospel, and corrupt it by impure admixtures of Gentile Philosophy or Jewish Tradition.

19. οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἀποδ.] Render '[Ay,] these are the men who [now] are exciting separation and causing schism, both in their own case and that of others.' Ἀποδιορίζω is a very rare word, properly denoting, in a geometrical sense, 'to separate any space, by fixing its limits, from another space.' Two examples are indicated by Boissonade in Steph. Thes. And probably it was used by Barnabas in his Epistle, where we find in the Latin version (for the original Greek is lost): 'Non separatim debetis seducere vos, sed in unum convenientes, &c.'

The word ἑαυτοὺς, found in the common text after ἀποδ., is, doubtless, from the margin, being absent from almost all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions; and hence it has been justly cancelled by Bengel, Wetstein, and Matthæi, though retained by Griesbach and Scholz.

ἔχοντες! Ὑμεῖς δὲ, ἀγαπητοὶ, τῇ ἁγιωτάτῃ ὑμῶν πίστει 20 ἐποικοδομοῦντες ἑαυτοὺς, ἐν Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ προσευχόμενοι, ἑαυτοὺς ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ τηρήσατε, προσδεχόμενοι τὸ ἔλεος 21 τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον. Καὶ 22 s Rev. 3. 4. οὓς μὲν ἐλεεῖτε, διακρινόμενοι· [s] οὓς δὲ ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε, ἐκ 23 τοῦ πυρὸς ἁρπάζοντες· μισοῦντες καὶ τὸν ἀπὸ τῆς σαρκὸς ἐσπιλωμένον χιτῶνα.
t Rom. 16. 25. Eph. 3. 20. [t] Τῷ δὲ δυναμένῳ φυλάξαι * ὑμᾶς ἀπταίστους, καὶ στῆσαι 24 u Rom. 16. 27. 1 Tim. 1. 17. κατενώπιον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἀμώμους ἐν ἀγαλλιάσει, [u] μόνῳ 25 [σοφῷ] Θεῷ σωτῆρι ἡμῶν, δόξα καὶ μεγαλωσύνη, κράτος καὶ ἐξουσία, καὶ νῦν καὶ εἰς πάντας τοὺς αἰῶνας! ἀμήν.

— ψυχικοί.] On this term see Note on 1 Cor. ii. 14. St. Jude seems to have here had in mind 2 Pet. ii. 12.

20. The Apostle now resumes his exhortations, and bids them not only beware of the artifices of the false teachers, but study to advance in religious knowledge and practice; and, to ensure the success of their endeavours, he enjoins them to pray in the Holy Spirit. ~~(Laurmann.)~~

— ἐποικοδομοῦντες.] On the force of the metaphor, see Notes on Acts xx. 32, τῷ δυναμένῳ ἐποικοδομῆσαι, and 1 Cor. iii. 10, and compare 2 Pet. i. 5. Ἁγιωτάτῃ, i. e. 'which was intended to make men most holy.' Ἐν Πνεύμ. ἁγ., for διὰ Πνεύμ. ἁγίου, 'by the aid and influence of the Holy Spirit.' The best comment on this is Rom. viii. 26.

21. ἑαυτοὺς τηρ.] 'Keep yourselves, i. e. each other.' Ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ, 'in love towards God.' Προσδεχ. τὸ ἔλεος τ. Κ., 'expecting and hoping for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ [to bring you] unto salvation.'

22, 23. To the right understanding of these obscure verses, it is necessary to attend to the sense of ἑαυτοὺς ἐν ἀγάπῃ Θεοῦ τηρήσατε before laid down; according to which the meaning here seems to be: '[And in the exercise of this vigilant exertion to keep each in the love of God, remember that ye are not to abandon all those who seem to wander from the true faith; no!] some treat compassionately and mildly, making a distinction [between those and the obstinately perverse] (or, making a distinction between wilful and involuntary error); others [even if the danger seem great, and the chance of saving them small, yet] anxiously endeavour to save; snatching them, as it were, out of the fire;' see 1 Cor. iii. 15. In this sense διακρίνω occurs in Josephus, Bell. i. 18. 4, βασιλεὺς δὲ—διακρίνας τὸ κατὰ τὴν πόλιν πλῆθος, τοὺς μὲν—τοὺς δὲ, ἀνῄρει. Stephens, Thes. in v. διακρίνω, however, renders the expression 'adhibete delectum;' adducing, as an example of this use of διακρίνεσθαι in an active sense, a passage of Herodian, iv. 6. 12, οἱ δὲ στρατιῶται, τοῦ βιάζεσθαί τε καὶ ἁρπάζειν λαβόντας ἐξουσίαν, οὐκ ἔτι διεκρίνοντο τίνες ἦσαν οἱ προπετέστερον φθεγξάμενοι. As an example of this absolute use of the word, I would compare Thucydides, i. 49, καὶ διεκέκριτο οὐδὲν ἔτι. The var. lect. here, διακρινομένους, evidently arose from the scribes being ignorant of the active sense of διακρίνεσθαι, which is, indeed, very rare.

Here, then, on the principle even of a Heathen writer, Marc. Ant. vii. 15, ἴδιον ἀνθρώπου φιλεῖν καὶ τοὺς πταίοντας, 'those who offend,' the Apostle, we may suppose, means to say that some exertions should be made to save even certain of the false teachers themselves; for as the words οὓς μὲν ἐλεεῖτε may have respect to the people seduced, so may the words οὓς δὲ, &c., to certain of the seducers; and to these the expression ἐν φόβῳ σώζετε is highly suitable; meaning, I apprehend, not (as it is commonly explained) 'terrify with denunciations of Divine vengeance,' but 'anxiously strive to save;' implying circumspection and exertion; as Phil. ii. 12 (see also my Note on Thucydides, ii. 37. 11). Similarly it is said in a passage of Liban. Orat. de vita sua, φόβος ἠναγκάζετο πατέρας, τοὺς αὐτῶν καλεῖν παρ' ἑαυτοὺς, ὥσπερ ἐκ πυρὸς, where, I conjecture, should be read ἠνάγκαζε π. υἱοὺς α.; for υἱοὺς expressed in abbreviation and τοὺς might easily be confounded; and τὸ and τοὺς are sometimes interchanged.

— μισοῦντες καὶ τὸν, &c.] Of this sense of μισεῖν for abominari another example occurs in Rev. ii. 6, μισεῖς τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικ., and Josephus, Bell. i. 32. 2; also Barnab. Epist. mentions, as a saying of our Lord, 'Resistamus omni iniquitati, et odio habeamus eum.'

The closing words, μισοῦντες καὶ—χιτῶνα are best explained by Wolf and Benson to mean, 'Let, however, your endeavours to reform them be made with great caution; be careful to avoid being yourselves corrupted by their society, and show a hatred of whatever partakes, in the slightest degree, of iniquity and sin.' There is, I conceive, partly an allusion to the command of the Jewish law, not to touch any thing unclean, and partly to the caution showed in avoiding all contact even with the clothes of persons who have any infectious disease.

24, 25. With the noble doxology which so suitably concludes this fine Epistle, compare similar ones at Rom. xvi. 27. Eph. v. 27. Col. i. 22. 1 Tim. iii. 3. Ἀπταίστους is for ἀπροσκόπους or ἀπτώτους, 'stumbling or falling.' Σωτὴρ is here applied to God the Father, as at 1 Tim. ii. 3. Tit. i. 3. iii. 4. The words διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χρ. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν, added in many MSS. and early Versions (after σωτῆρι ἡμῶν), and inserted in the text by Griesbach and most recent Editors, including Scholz, may have arisen from the margin, and been derived from Rom. xv. 26, or may have been omitted propter homœoteleuton ἡμῶν —ἡμῶν; but the former is more probable.

ΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ

ΙΩΑΝΝΟΥ ΤΟΥ ΘΕΟΛΟΓΟΥ.

1 I. ʼΑΠΟΚΑΛΥΨΙΣ ʼΙΗΣΟΥ ΧΡΙΣΤΟΥ, ἣν ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ ὁ Θεὸς, δεῖξαι τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ ἃ δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν

Of this Book,—which is universally allowed to be the most sublime of all those contained in the New Test.,—the authenticity (namely, that it is a genuine production of St. John) was almost universally admitted in the first two centuries, and if doubts were entertained in the third, they were soon removed, and the origin of them is, with reason, ascribed to the well-meant, but misguided, zeal of certain fanatical Expositors. If, too, it was in the early ages judged not suitable to be read in Churches, that was not from any doubt of its authenticity, but from its very mysterious character; on account of which it was thought unfit to be read publicly. We have here a Revelation from the Lord Jesus Christ, composed of a series of visions representing the future state of the Christian Church. In ch. i.—iii. is made known to St. John the then state of the Church in Asia (the things which are); in the fourth and following Chapters are revealed the things which shall be hereafter—the future destinies of the Church, through its several periods of progress to its final state of glory.

As to its date, the learned are in general agreed in supposing these Revelations to have been communicated about A.D. 96 or 97, and in the isle of Patmos (as we find from i. 6), whither the Apostle had been banished by the persecuting Emperor Domitian.

From the phraseology of this Book being often such as recedes from all rules of Greek usage, though quite reconcileable with those of Hebrew, it is not without reason that some eminent Critics have supposed it to have been originally written in Hebrew; and it has been justly remarked, 'that if this theory of a Hebrew original could be established, it would relieve us from all the difficulties attending the objection that the style of the Apocalypse should so differ from that employed by St. John in his Gospel and Epistles.' After all, however, it is but an hypothesis, and cannot be admitted without the support of historical testimony; not to say that it would be difficult to imagine why it should have been originally written in Hebrew, being intended almost entirely for the use of Jewish converts who understood Greek, or Gentile converts who knew nothing of Hebrew. We may best suppose the Apostle to have put down the substance of the various revelations, as they were imparted to him, in the Syro-Chaldee, and afterwards expressed them more fully in Greek, for the use of the Christian world; though what the Apostle wrote in Greek, we may suppose he perpetually thought out first in Syro-Chaldee. It is obvious that to one whose mind was filled with such high and sublime conceptions, the use of his vernacular tongue would be far better adapted to the free expression of thoughts, which at first would be cramped and confined by a foreign language, though they would afterwards admit of being transfused and more regularly expressed in that language.

On the scope and design of this Book considerable difference of opinion exists. Upon the whole, I must agree with Dean Woodhouse in considering 'that scheme of general interpretation as the best which regards the Apocalypse as a prophetical history of the fate and fortunes of the Christian Church, from the time when it was written to the latest period of the world, which are foretold by the means of symbols and emblematical representations.' Yet no competent, and at the same time unprejudiced, judge will deny that, after all the labour bestowed on its explication, no book of the New Test. has so defied all attempts to settle its interpretation, and especially to ascertain the purport of its prophetical representations. What has increased the difficulty is, that the textus receptus here is in a far worse state than that of any other book in the New Test.; and no wonder, since it was derived by Erasmus from only one MS., and that a very bad one, not only mutilated in some places, but every where corrupted from the Greek Commentaries of Arethas and Andreas: and the errors of that MS. were (as Matthæi observes) multiplied by corruptions introduced from the Latin Versions, as also by the conjectures (or rather corruptions) of Erasmus himself. In after ages much was done towards the formation of a pure text by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz, whose emendations amount to nearly as many as on the whole of the Epistles together. These I have, in most cases, seen reason to adopt, supported as they generally are by the authority of the Editio Princeps; but considering that the limits prescribed to the work were already overrun, I have τάχει· καὶ ἐσήμανεν ἀποστείλας διὰ τοῦ ἀγγέλου αὐτοῦ τῷ δούλῳ αὐτοῦ Ἰωάννῃ· [a] ὃς ἐμαρτύρησε τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ 2 καὶ τὴν μαρτυρίαν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅσα [† τε] εἶδε. [b] Μακά- 3 ριος ὁ ἀναγινώσκων, καὶ οἱ ἀκούοντες τοὺς λόγους τῆς προ-φητείας, καὶ τηροῦντες τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ γεγραμμένα· ὁ γὰρ καιρὸς ἐγγύς.

[c] Ἰωάννης ταῖς ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις ταῖς ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ· χάρις 4 ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ [τοῦ] ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος· καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων ἃ [ἐστιν] ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου αὐτοῦ· [d] καὶ ἀπὸ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς, ὁ 5 a 1 John 1. 1.

b Rom. 13. 11. James 5. 8. 1 Pet. 4. 7. infra 22. 7, 10. c Ex. 3. 14. infra v. 8. & 3. 1. & 4. 5, 8. & 5. 6. & 11. 17. & 16. 5. d Ps. 89. 38. Isa. 55. 4. John 8. 14. Acts 20. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 20. Col. 1. 18. Heb. 9. 12, 14. 1 Pet. 1. 19. 1 John 1. 7, 9. infra 3. 14. & 5. 9. & 17. 14. & 19. 16.

been obliged to forbear, for the most part, assigning (as I had before done) reasons in justification of the emendations adopted from the very eminent Editors above mentioned, especially as the authorities, in MSS., Versions, early Editions, and Critics, are in most instances nearly the same.

1. ἀποκάλυψις Ἰησ. Χρ.] Render, 'a revelation (i. e. a body of revelations) from Jesus Christ' (see Note on Gal. i. 11, 12); meaning, as Dr. Henderson (Lect. on Insp., p. 384) explains, a development of future events directly furnished by the Son of God to the Apostle John in ecstatic vision.

— ἐν τάχει] i. e. 'in a comparatively short period;' which, measured by the language of Scripture,—wherein a thousand years are as one day,—may denote any thing of by no means speedy fulfilment, though that may speedily begin to be fulfilled.

— ἐσήμανε] 'intimated, made known, showed.' The construction (which is harsh) may be resolved either thus: καὶ ἀποστείλας (ὁ Θεὸς or ὁ Ἰησοῦς), scil. τὴν ἀποκάλυψιν, ἐσήμανε διὰ τοῦ ἀγγέλου α.; or thus: καὶ ἀποστείλας (τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ) ἐσήμανε διὰ τοῦτο, &c.

2. ἐμαρτύρησε] 'hath [herein] solemnly testified and recorded.' Τε, which is, in all the MSS., Versions, and early Editions, not found, has been cancelled by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz. It was inserted, Heinrichs thinks, to soften the harshness of the apposition, having the sense even. Yet may not the true reading be ὅσα γε εἶδε? This would yield an excellent sense, and the two words are perpetually confounded. With ὅσα εἶδε we may compare 1 John i. 1.

3. ὁ ἀναγινώσκων καὶ οἱ ἀκ.] This has reference to the ancient custom, when books were scarce, for some one person to read to a considerable number of others, who listened to what was thus read. Τηρ. here denotes the keeping in the heart what was read (see Luke ii. 51), so as to observe the injunctions therein. Ὁ καιρὸς ἐγγὺς, 'the time [of their being fulfilled, or beginning to be fulfilled] is near.'

4. ἀπὸ τοῦ ὁ ὢν, &c.] There would seem slender authority for the τοῦ, which is in very many MSS. not found; yet the reading Θεοῦ, found in two-thirds of the MSS., and edited by Matthæi, but injudiciously, as being an evident gloss, appears to have been founded on it. And considering the great antiquity of Θεοῦ, and that the τοῦ must be still more ancient, it would seem to be genuine, only that it might be suspected of having been inserted to soften the harshness of the solecism existing without it; yet I see not how the Article can here be dispensed with: for though ὁ ὢν, and especially ὁ ἦν, might be used, like I AM in Exod. iii. 14, as an indeclinable title of JEHOVAH (the Hebrew not admitting of inflection in the oblique cases), yet the Article would not be the less necessary. Thus we could say in English, Moses was sent by the I AM, but not, with propriety, by I AM, though our authorized Version has this.

The words following, ἀπὸ τῶν ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων, &c. are, as Scott observes, generally interpreted of the 'Divine Spirit,' with respect to the abundance, sufficiency, and variety of his gifts, graces, and operations; and in relation to 'the seven Churches,' with each of which, and all others, the One and self-same Spirit dwelt, as the Fountain of life, grace, and peace. Others, however, as Grotius, regard the ἑπτὰ πνευμάτων as the same with ἑπτὰ ἄγγελοι mentioned in Tob. xii. 15, as presenting the prayers of the Saints to the throne of grace; or rather, Abp. Newcome supposes, the seven ministering Spirits whom St. John saw discharging separate offices in subsequent revelations made to him. Yet it would hardly seem that any created spirits would be comprehended in the solemn benediction of the Father and the Son which follows. Hence the former interpretation is preferable, which is ably maintained by Wolfius, and before him by Poole in his Synopsis; from whose statements it is evident that this was the way in which the expression was understood by the ancient Commentators, and the generality of the modern ones to nearly the middle of the eighteenth century; since which time the foreign Critics, for the most part, have considered the expression as denoting the virtutes, or attributes, of the Supreme Being. Such a sense, however, is very vague; and there is no reason to desert the ancient and usual interpretation, which is supported by Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Pye Smith, Scrip. Test. iii. 104.

5. ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς] i. e. 'worthy of implicit confidence.' A Witness he was, as coming into the world to bear witness to the truth, and as revealing all that he had received from the Father for that purpose. See John iii. 11. 32. viii. 14—16. xviii. 37. On the expression ὁ πρωτότ. ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν see Col. i. 15. 18, from whence the ἐκ here (only found in a few MSS., and cancelled by most Editors) was doubtless derived. In ὁ ἄρχων τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς we have a designation of his Messiahship; the πρωτότοκος [ἐκ] τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ ὁ ἄρχων τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς. Τῷ * ἀγαπῶντι ἡμᾶς καὶ λούσαντι ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ τῶν 6 ἁμαρτιῶν ἡμῶν ἐν τῷ αἵματι αὐτοῦ, [e] καὶ ἐποίησεν ἡμᾶς e Rom. 12. 1. Heb. 9. 14.

* βασιλείαν [καὶ] ἱερεῖς τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ αὐτοῦ, αὐτῷ ἡ 1 Pet. 1. 19. & 2. 5, 9. δόξα καὶ τὸ κράτος εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν. 1 John 1. 7. infra 5. 10. & 20. 6.
7 [f] Ἰδοὺ, ἔρχεται μετὰ τῶν νεφελῶν, καὶ ὄψεται αὐτὸν f Isa. 3. 13, 14.
πᾶς ὀφθαλμὸς, καὶ οἵτινες αὐτὸν ἐξεκέντησαν· καὶ κόψον- Dan. 7. 13. Zach. 12. 10. Matt. 24. 30.
ται ἐπ᾽ αὐτὸν πᾶσαι αἱ φυλαὶ τῆς γῆς. ναὶ, ἀμήν. & 25. 31. & 26. 64.
8 [g] ἐγώ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, [ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος,] λέγει [ὁ] John 19. 37. Acts 1. 11. 1 Thess. 1.
Κύριος, ὁ Θεός, ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος, ὁ παντο- 10. 2 Thess. 1. 10. κράτωρ. Jude 14. g Isa. 41. 4.
9 [h] Ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης, ὁ [καὶ] ἀδελφὸς ὑμῶν καὶ συγκοινωνὸς & 44. 6. & 48. 12.
ἐν τῇ θλίψει καὶ [ἐν τῇ] βασιλείᾳ καὶ ὑπομονῇ Ἰησοῦ supra v. 4. infra 21. 6. & 22. 13.
Χριστοῦ, ἐγενόμην ἐν τῇ νήσῳ τῇ καλουμένῃ Πάτμῳ, διὰ h Rom. 8. 17. Phil. 1. 7. & 4. 14.
τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ διὰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν Ἰησοῦ Χρι- 2 Tim. 1. 8. & 2. 12.
10 στοῦ. [i] Ἐγενόμην ἐν Πνεύματι ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ ἡμέρᾳ· καὶ i Infra 4. 2.
11 ἤκουσα ὀπίσω μου φωνὴν μεγάλην ὡς σάλπιγγος, [k] λεγούσης· k Infra 2. 8. & 22. 13.
[Ἐγώ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος· καὶ,] Messiah being, as Commentators remark, called Elioun, most high, in Ps. lxxxix. 27. We may, moreover, suppose the Apostle to have here had in mind the substance of the second Psalm, where the Messiah is designated as 'the Ruler of the kings of the earth.'

I have here, with Abp. Newcome, followed the punctuation of our common Version and that of Tyndal, by placing (as the context requires) a full point after γῆs. As to the seeming grammatical inaccuracy at ὁ μάρτυs, I am inclined to regard the words up to γῆs, with the Eclectic Reviewer (Dec. 1832), 'as forming a separate clause (and in some degree parenthetical), containing a proclamation, as it were, of the divine and sovereign titles of the Messiah.'

— τῷ ἀγαπῶντι ἡμᾶs καὶ λούσαντι.] These words are to be connected with those which follow, αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα. And we have here (as Mr. Scott observes) 'a sublime burst, in which, animated with a view of the glory of his beloved Lord, and contrasting it with the vastness of his condescension and the depth of his self-abasement, he breaks out into praises to Him who loveth them,' &c.

6. καὶ ἐποίησεν] for τῷ ποιήσαντι, by Hebraism.

— βασιλείαν.] Vulg. βασιλεῖs καὶ, no doubt from a marginal explanation, as is plain from Andreas Cret. (the most ancient Greek Commentator on this book) and the Scholiasts. Almost all the Editors are agreed in adopting this reading, and with reason; since it is supported by strong evidence, both external and internal, since, in its very harshness, it bears the stamp of truth. Βασιλεία here means, not kingdom, but people; τῷ Θεῷ, which follows, being here supplied. By this we have denoted that innumerable company of saints and angels spoken of at Hebr. xii. 22, who are supposed to constitute a holy state seated in the heavenly Jerusalem, under the government, not of man, but of God. On this verse compare 1 Pet. ii. 5. 9. 1 Cor. iv. 8. vi. 2, 3.

7. It is plain from this verse that the glory and power in ver. 6 are ascribed to Christ. (Burton.) Compare Dan. vii. 13. Καὶ οἵτινεs, 'even they who.' Ἐξεκέντησαν. See John xix. 37. Even they, it is implied, were to acknowledge his majesty. Καὶ κόψ., &c. See Zech. xii. 10—14.

8. ἐγώ εἰμι—παντοκράτωρ.] By most recent Commentators these words are understood of God the Father, but the context (see vv. 7. 17, 18, and ii. 8) plainly shows that they relate to God the Son, who, indeed, applies those titles to himself, xxi. 6. xxii. 13; which fully establishes the Deity of Christ. It is finely remarked by Philo, de Mundo, Οὐδὲν παρὰ Θεῷ μέλλον, τῷ καὶ τὰ τῶν χρόνων ὑπηγμένῳ πέρατα.

In the above alterations in the text I am supported by the highest authority of MSS. and Critics.

9. The writer now proceeds to mention the manner in which he had received the revelations that he was about to deliver. By τῇ θλίψει—καὶ ὑπομονῇ 'I. Χρ. are denoted afflictions and troubles to be endured for the sake, and in the cause of Christ; 'I. Χριστοῦ being a genitive of similitude; and the interposed βασιλ. intimates that he is to be partaker with them in the kingdom prepared for them, and alluded to supra ver. 6; for the whole may be regarded as a Synchysis, for ἐν τῇ θλίψει καὶ ὑπομονῇ 'I. Χρ. καὶ βασιλ. αὐτοῦ. The best comment on this passage is 2 Tim. ii. 12, εἰ ὑπομένομεν, καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν. See also Rom. viii. 17.

10. ἐγενόμην ἐν Πνεύμ.] Meaning, that he was the subject of the extraordinary operations of the Holy Ghost. See Dr. Henderson, Lect. on Inspir. p. 26. The expression is equivalent to ἐν ἐκστάσει γενέσθαι at Acts xxii. 17, and is for ἔκστασιs ἔπεσεν εἰs ἐμέ.

Ὃ βλέπεις γράψον εἰς βιβλίον, καὶ πέμψον ταῖς ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησίαις [ταῖς ἐν Ἀσίᾳ], εἰς Ἔφεσον, καὶ εἰς Σμύρναν, καὶ εἰς Πέργαμον, καὶ εἰς Θυάτειρα, καὶ εἰς Σάρδεις, καὶ εἰς Φιλαδέλφειαν, καὶ εἰς Λαοδίκειαν. Καὶ ἐπέστρεψα 12 βλέπειν τὴν φωνὴν ἥτις * ἐλάλει μετ' ἐμοῦ· καὶ ἐπιστρέψας εἶδον ἑπτὰ λυχνίας χρυσᾶς, [l] καὶ ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἑπτὰ 13 λυχνιῶν ὅμοιον Υἱῷ ἀνθρώπου, ἐνδεδυμένον ποδήρη, καὶ περιεζωσμένον πρὸς τοῖς μαστοῖς ζώνην χρυσῆν· [m] ἡ δὲ 14 κεφαλὴ αὐτοῦ καὶ αἱ τρίχες λευκαὶ ὡσ[εὶ] ἔριον λευκὸν, ὡς χιών· καὶ οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ ὡς φλὸξ πυρός· [n] καὶ οἱ πόδες 15 αὐτοῦ ὅμοιοι χαλκολιβάνῳ, ὡς ἐν καμίνῳ πεπυρωμένοι· καὶ ἡ φωνὴ αὐτοῦ ὡς φωνὴ ὑδάτων πολλῶν· [o] καὶ ἔχων ἐν 16 τῇ δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ χειρὶ ἀστέρας ἑπτά· καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ ῥομφαία δίστομος ὀξεῖα ἐκπορευομένη· καὶ ἡ ὄψις αὐτοῦ, ὡς ὁ ἥλιος φαίνει ἐν τῇ δυνάμει αὐτοῦ. [p] Καὶ ὅτε εἶδον αὐτὸν 17 ἔπεσα πρὸς τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ ὡς νεκρός. καὶ [ἐπ]έθηκε τὴν δεξιὰν αὐτοῦ [χεῖρα] ἐπ' ἐμὲ, λέγων [μοι]· Μὴ φοβοῦ· l Ezek. 1. 26. Dan. 7. 13. infra 2. 1. & 14. 14. & 15. 6. m Dan. 7. 9. infra 19. 12.

n Infra 14. 2.
o Isa. 49. 2. Eph. 6. 17. Heb. 4. 12. infra v. 20. & 2. 1, 12. & 3. 1. & 19. 15, 21. p Esa. 41. 4. & 44. 6. & 48. 12. Dan. 8. 18. & 10. 10. supra v. 11. infra 2. 8.

11. τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω.] i. e. 'the First and the Last;' as v. 17, and xxii. 13. An expression supposed to have been borrowed from Jewish phraseology (see Is. xliv. 6), but I have found it in the Classical writers; ex. gr. Theocr. Idyll. xvii. 3, where king Ptolemy is called ἀνδρῶν ἐν πρώτοισιν καὶ πύματος καὶ μέσος, and Orpheus, Hymn xiv. 7, Ζεῦ, ἀρχὴ πάντων, πάντων τε τελετή, and frag. vi. 9, Ζεὺς πρῶτος ἐγένετο—Ζεὺς ὕστατος. So Butherus in Stobæi Eclog. Phys. t. i. p. 14, Heer., τὸ ἓν οὐσία καὶ νοῦς, καὶ πλήρωμα· ἀρχὴν γὰρ, καὶ μέσον, καὶ πέρας ἔχον.

12. βλέπειν τὴν φωνήν.] The full sense is: 'I turned about [to discover] who it was that had uttered the voice.' Ἑπτὰ λ. χρ. One among the many allusions to the Jewish worship; there being in the Temple a golden lamp with seven branches. These are, as appears from ver. 20, a symbolical designation of the seven Churches. It is well observed by Iaspis, that the mode of teaching by emblems was very usual in ancient times. For ἐλάλησε many MSS. have ἐλάλει, which is edited by Matthæi.

13. ὅμοιον Υἱῷ ἀνθρ.] Most recent Commentators, arguing from the absence of the Article, render 'a son of man;' i. e. a human being. Yet the absence of the Article will not prove this to be the sense intended; and though Dean Woodhouse adopts this interpretation, and ingeniously accounts for the expression being used of Jesus Christ, yet there is no reason to abandon the opinion of the ancient and most modern Commentators, that it means the Son of Man. See Note on Heb. i. 2; the Article being implied, though not expressed, since the title corresponds to that at Dan. vii. 13, where the Sept. closely follows the Hebrew, which could not express the Article. See Bp. Middleton. Πρὸς τοῖς μαστοῖς, for περὶ τὰ στήθη, 'about the breasts.' At ποδήρη supply χιτῶνα, denoting a robe descending to the feet, such as was worn by persons of dignity, especially priests, Exod. xxviii. 27; and so the word is used in Josephus and Philo.

14. ἡ δὲ κεφαλὴ—πυρός.] All characteristics of a Divine nature, and suited to the Messiah. Comp. Ezek. viii. 2, and Dan. vii. 9. x. 6. By this imagery is denoted shining splendour; and, therefore, the whiteness is not to be understood of age. Here, for ὡσεὶ, Griesbach, Scholz, &c. edit, from the best MSS., ὡς. We may suppose the former to have arisen from the margin; being intended partly to remove the tautology, and partly suggested by what is said at Matt. xxviii. 3, λευκὸν ὡσεὶ χιών, where similarly some of the most ancient MSS. have ὡς.

15. χαλκολιβάνῳ.] A word no where else occurring, and of which even the derivation is uncertain. The learned are not agreed whether it denotes smelting brass, from χαλκὸς and λείβω or κλίβανος, or χαλκὸς and Λίβανος, Mount Libanus, what is called aurichalcum; as Hesiod, Scut. 12, describes Hercules as having feet of ὀρείχαλκος, a sort of fine brass more valuable than gold: be that as it may, the expression happily designates the irresistible power and might of Christ, as the φωνὴ ὑδ. πολλῶν is a most noble image of his grandeur and majesty.

16. In his having in his hand (or rather on his hand) seven stars, there may be an allusion to the custom of wearing many rings on the fingers, each studded with a diamond, or other sparkling gem. By these stars or brilliants are (as we find from ver. 20) designated the angels, or bishops, of the Seven Churches; intimating, not only that they were to be burning and shining lights (as the planets in the night; see ii. 12, and Note), but that when really such, by the faithful discharge of their sacred office, they were exceedingly precious in the sight of God. Ῥομφ. δίστ. Metaphorically denoting the word of God, the doctrine of the Gospel. See Luke ii. 35. Heb. iv. 12, compared with Is. xi. 4. xlix. 2. 2 Thess. ii. 8. 12, also Dan. x. 5, 6. vii. 9. Ezek. viii. 2.

18 ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, [q] καὶ ὁ ζῶν, καὶ ἐγε- q Job 12.14. Ps. 68. 21.
νόμην νεκρός· καὶ ἰδοὺ ζῶν εἰμι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώ- Isa. 22. 22. Rom. 6. 9. infra 3. 7. νων, [ἀμήν·] καὶ ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς τοῦ ᾅδου καὶ τοῦ θανάτου. & 20. 1.
19 Γράψον οὖν ἃ εἶδες, καὶ ἅ εἰσι, καὶ ἃ μέλλει γίνεσθαι μετὰ 20 ταῦτα· [r] τὸ μυστήριον τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀστέρων, ὧν εἶδες ἐπὶ τῆς r Mal. 2. 7. supra v. 16.
δεξιᾶς μου, καὶ τὰς ἑπτὰ λυχνίας τὰς χρυσᾶς. Οἱ ἑπτὰ infra 2. 1. ἀστέρες ἄγγελοι τῶν ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησιῶν εἰσι· καὶ * λυχνίαι αἱ ἑπτὰ [ἃς εἶδες], ἑπτὰ ἐκκλησίαι εἰσί.
1 II. [a] ΤΩι ἀγγέλῳ τῆς * ἐν Ἐφέσῳ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· a Supra 1. 13, 16, 20.
Τάδε λέγει ὁ κρατῶν τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἀστέρας ἐν τῇ δεξιᾷ αὐτοῦ, ὁ περιπατῶν ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἑπτὰ λυχνιῶν τῶν χρυσῶν· 2 [b] Οἶδα τὰ ἔργα σου, καὶ τὸν κόπον σου καὶ τὴν ὑπομονήν b 1 John 4. 2. infra v. 9, σου, καὶ ὅτι οὐ δύνῃ βαστάσαι κακούς· καὶ * ἐπείρασας τοὺς 13, 19.

18. τὰς κλεῖς—θαν.] i. e. 'power over death and the dead, to unlock the gates of Hades and make my disciples triumph over it, by giving them both life and salvation.' On the expression ᾅδης see Doddridge in loco, and especially Stuart in his Exegetical Essays on the several terms expressive of future punishment, pp. 128—135, who shows that in the New Test. ᾅδης signifies, not hell, but the region of the dead, the domains of death, or of him who hath the power of death, Satan. He observes, that 'in the Apocalypse the writer not only represents Hades as the region of the dead, but Death as being king of it, and governing those that dwell therein.' He then assigns the following as the general sense of the words ἔχω τὰς κλεῖς τοῦ ᾅδου καὶ τοῦ θανάτου, 'Mine is the power to unlock the gates of Hades, to open the doors of this prison, from which none could escape. I have entered the region of Hades (compare Acts ii. 17. 31), and am come forth living; yea, in possession of everlasting life.'

19. οὖν.] This has been passed over in our translation; though, as Grotius and Woodhouse observe, the particle has great force.

— ἅ εἰσι, καὶ ἃ μέλλει γ. μ. τ.] The subject-matter, which the Prophet is commissioned to deliver, is divided into two parts: 1. the scene at that time before him, with the addresses to the Churches, revealing to them, and commenting upon their present internal state; 2. the events which were to happen to the Church universal in future times. (Woodhouse.)

20. τὸ μυστ.] i. e. the mystical meaning: that concealed under figurative resemblances. See xvii. 7. In ἄγγελοι τῶν ἑπτὰ ἐκκλ. there is an allusion to the Jewish œconomy, wherein the priests, or rulers of the synagogues, were styled by this name, as bringing the commands of God to the people, and conveying their prayers to God. Abp. Newcome, however, explains ἄγγελοι to denote either the ministering Spirits employed in the invisible government of these Churches, or their visible governors who presided over them.

II. In this and the next Chapter are contained the seven messages to the seven Churches of Asia, and certain predictions, whose fulfilment is verified by the testimony of Ecclesiastical history, and attested by the present state of these Churches as described by Mr. Arundell, in his interesting work containing an account of his visits to the seven Churches, which, it is singular, are mentioned supra ver. 11, in the very order in which any one would take them, who intended to visit them in rotation, beginning at Ephesus. These messages are both admonitory and consolatory, and though immediately addressed, as the case might require, to the seven Churches (viz. through the medium of their presidents, who represented them: see Ezek. xxv. 3. xxvii. 3. xxviii. 2. xxix. 2. xxxi. 2), were, nevertheless, meant for the benefit of the Church Catholic in all succeeding ages.

1. τῷ ἀγγέλῳ, &c.] By ἄγγελος is here denoted the presiding minister of the Ephesian Church, whether bishop, or by whatever other name called. This name was borrowed from the synagogue, where the chief officer was so called, and also Episcopus. The phrase τάδε λέγει is said to be formed on the Heb. כה אמר יהוה, so often found in the prophetical books of the Old Test. It may rather be said to be Oriental in its character, being the form used in the East as a preface to orders given by monarchs, or to Epistles on general business. So in Thucyd. i. 129, Xerxes begins his letter to Pausanias with Ὧδε λέγει Βασιλεὺς Ξέρξης Παυσανίᾳ. Thus the phrase is in the Old Test. often used by kings in the very same manner. So 1 Kings xx. 2. xxii. 27. 2 Kings ix. 18. xviii. 19.

— ὁ κρατῶν.] Render, 'who holds in charge.' Ὁ περιπατῶν — χρυσῶν. This figuratively represents Christ as walking amidst the Church for observation as well as support and direction.

2. οἶδα τὰ ἔργα σου] 'I know [and approve of] thy works,' namely, those of faith and love. The next words are exegetical: 'even, or especially, thy labour and patient endurance [of afflictions].' Οὐ δύνῃ βαστ., 'thou canst not bear with, endure.' This expression and ἐβάστασας, οἶδα τὸν κόπον σου and οὐ κεκοπίακας, are antithetically opposed to each other.

— ἐπείρασας] 'thou hast put to the proof,' or trial. So 1 John iv. 1, δοκιμάζετε τὰ πνεύματα. The reading adopted at ver. 3, is found in the best MSS., and has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz.

* λέγοντας ἑαυτοὺς ἀποστόλους εἶναι, καὶ οὐκ εἰσὶ, καὶ εὗρες αὐτοὺς ψευδεῖς. καὶ ὑπομονὴν ἔχεις, καὶ ἐβάστασας, διὰ 3 τὸ ὄνομά μου, καὶ οὐ κεκοπίακας. Ἀλλ' ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ, 4 ὅτι τὴν ἀγάπην σου τὴν πρώτην ἀφῆκας. Μνημόνευε 5 οὖν πόθεν [ἐκ]πέπτωκας, καὶ μετανόησον, καὶ τὰ πρῶτα ἔργα ποίησον· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ἔρχομαί σοι ταχὺ, καὶ κινήσω τὴν λυχνίαν σου ἐκ τοῦ τόπου αὐτῆς, ἐὰν μὴ μετανοήσῃς.
c Infra v. 15. [c] Ἀλλὰ τοῦτο ἔχεις, ὅτι μισεῖς τὰ ἔργα τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν· 6 d Matt. 11. 15. & 13. 9. Gen. 2. 9. infra 22. 2. ἃ κἀγὼ μισῶ. [d] Ὁ ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα 7 λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις· "Τῷ νικῶντι δώσω αὐτῷ φαγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς, ὅ ἐστιν ἐν [μέσῳ] * τῷ παραδείσῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου."
e Isa. 41. 4. & 44. 6. supra 1. 8, 11, 17, 18. [e] Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς * ἐν Σμύρνῃ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· 8 Τάδε λέγει ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος, ὃς ἐγένετο νεκρὸς f Supra v. 2. infra v. 13, 19. καὶ ἔζησεν· [f] Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα, καὶ τὴν θλίψιν καὶ τὴν 9 πτωχείαν, (ἀλλὰ πλούσιος [δὲ] εἶ,) καὶ τὴν βλασφημίαν ἐκ τῶν λεγόντων Ἰουδαίους εἶναι ἑαυτοὺς, καὶ οὐκ εἰσὶν, ἀλλὰ g 1 Cor. 9. 25. 2 Tim. 2. 5. & 4. 7, 8. James 1. 12. συναγωγὴ τοῦ Σατανᾶ. [g] Μηδὲν φοβοῦ ἃ μέλλεις πάσχειν. 10 ἰδοὺ, μέλλει βαλεῖν ἐξ ὑμῶν ὁ Διάβολος εἰς φυλακὴν, ἵνα πειρασθῆτε· καὶ ἕξετε θλίψιν ἡμερῶν δέκα. Γίνου πιστὸς h Matt. 13. 9. supra v. 7. infra 20. 14. & 21. 8. ἄχρι θανάτου, καὶ δώσω σοι τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς. [h] Ὁ 11 ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις· "Ὁ νικῶν οὐ μὴ ἀδικηθῇ ἐκ τοῦ θανάτου τοῦ δευτέρου."

4. ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ.] See Note on Acts xix. 38. Τὴν ἀγάπην—ἀφῆκας, 'thou remittest [part] of thy first love [to me and obedience to my religion].'

5. τὰ πρῶτα ἔργα] for τὰ ἔργα τῆς πρώτης ἀγάπης: compare Hebr. iii. 14. By κινήσω τὴν λ. is meant, 'I will remove thee from being a Church, by taking away the preaching of the Gospel:' a most alarming and rousing denunciation.

6. ἀλλὰ τοῦτο ἔχεις, &c.] 'but thou hast this [praise]—that of hating the practices of the Nicolaitans,' who were a branch of the Gnostics, and held it to be lawful to eat meats offered to idols, and practised fornication. Μισεῖς, 'strongly disapprovest of,' as in Josephus, Bell. i. 6. 4, κατηντιβόλουν (scil. αὐτὸν) μισῆσαι τὴν Ἀριστοβούλου βίαν.

7. τῷ νικῶντι] 'who overcometh [the temptations of the world, the flesh, and the Devil].'

— φαγεῖν ἐκ τοῦ ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς, &c.] Here ξύλον, by a usage derived from the Sept., denotes tree; which, by a common metonymy, is put for the fruit. The words contain a figurative designation of that eternal life which was lost by our first parents, and restored by Christ. This life is here compared to Paradise, in order to intimate its felicity, and denominated the Paradise of God, to denote the heavenly Paradise. So Jalkut Rubeni, cited by Schoettgen: 'Deus—animam educit in paradisum, eique gustandam præbet arborem vitæ.'

8. ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος.] Periphrasis Messiæ, ex cap. i. 17, 18, huic potissimum loco apta, ubi id agebatur, ut solamen adhiberetur Smernensibus, probis et castis, sed Judæorum malevolentia et invidia lacessitis. (Heinrichs.)

9. καὶ τὴν θλ. καὶ τὴν πτ.] 'even thy,' &c.; see v. 2. 2 Cor. viii. 2. Πλούσιος, i. e. spiritually rich; see Matt. vi. 20, and 2 Cor. vi. 10. By τῶν λεγόντων—εἰσὶν it is denied that they are Jews in the true and spiritual sense; they dishonour the name by adopting it; see Rom. ii. 24. By βλασφ., &c., is meant, that they yet claimed to be exclusively the people of God, but are the synagogue, or people, of Satan; συναγ. being for λαὸς, as the Hebr. קהל for עם, in Levit. xvi. 17; compare John viii. 39—45. Why they are so called is well shown by Bp. Bull, Def. Fid. p. 178.

10. ὁ Διάβολος.] Namely, by his instruments, the devilish Jewish persecutors; see John viii. 44. Ἵνα πειρασθῆτε, 'that ye may be put to the proof, and purified [in the furnace of affliction].' Ἡμερῶν δέκα. Some take these days for years (as usual in prophecy); others, to denote a very short space (as Gen. xxiv. 55. Num. xi. 19. 1 Sam. xxv. 38); which might be justified by history; see Daubuz and Newton. Τὸν στέφανον τ. ζ.; see 1 Cor. ix. 25. James i. 12. 1 Pet. v. 4, and Notes.

11. οὐ μὴ ἀδικηθῇ ἐκ, &c.] 'shall by no means be hurt by the second death;' in other words, 'he may be hurt even unto death by the malice of the 12 [i] Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς ἐν Περγάμῳ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· i Supra 1. 16.

Τάδε λέγει ὁ ἔχων τὴν ῥομφαίαν τὴν δίστομον τὴν ὀξεῖαν· infra v. 16.
13 Οἶδα τὰ ἔργα σου, καὶ ποῦ κατοικεῖς· ὅπου ὁ θρόνος τοῦ Σατανᾶ· καὶ κρατεῖς τὸ ὄνομά μου, καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσω τὴν πίστιν μου, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις [ἐν] αἷς Ἀντίπας ὁ μάρτυς μου ὁ πιστὸς, ὃς ἀπεκτάνθη παρ' ὑμῖν, ὅπου ὁ Σατανᾶς κατ-14 οικεῖ. [j] Ἀλλ' ἔχω κατὰ σοῦ ὀλίγα, ὅτι ἔχεις ἐκεῖ κρα- j Num. 24 14. & 25. 1. & 31. 16 τοῦντας τὴν διδαχὴν Βαλαὰμ, ὃς ἐδίδασκεν τὸν Βαλὰκ βαλεῖν σκάνδαλον ἐνώπιον τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ, φαγεῖν εἰδω-15 λόθυτα καὶ πορνεῦσαι. οὕτως ἔχεις καὶ σὺ κρατοῦντας τὴν 16 διδαχὴν τῶν Νικολαϊτῶν * ὁμοίως. [k] Μετανόησον οὖν· εἰ k Isa. 11. 4. & 49. 2. Eph. 6. 17.
δὲ μὴ, ἔρχομαί σοι ταχὺ, καὶ πολεμήσω μετ' αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ 2 Thess. 2. 8. Heb. 4. 12.
17 ῥομφαίᾳ τοῦ στόματός μου. [l] Ὁ ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί supra 1. 16. infra 19. 15, 21.
τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις· "Τῷ νικῶντι δώσω αὐτῷ l Matt. 13. 9. supra v. 7, 11.
[φαγεῖν ἀπὸ] τοῦ μάννα τοῦ κεκρυμμένου, καὶ δώσω αὐτῷ infra 3. 12.
ψῆφον λευκὴν, καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν ψῆφον ὄνομα καινὸν γεγραμμένον, ὃ οὐδεὶς * οἶδεν εἰ μὴ ὁ λαμβάνων."

Jews; but he shall not be hurt as regards the second death,' even the death, i. e. perdition, of the soul; compare Matt. x. 28. That the gehenna, implied in the loss of the soul, is here meant, is plain from xx. 14. xxi. 8, where the second death is said to be the lake of fire.

12. τὴν ῥομφαίαν—ὀξεῖαν] i. e. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ver. 16, and i. 16. Heb. iv. 12. Heinrichs, however, thinks there is reference to the immedicabile vulnus inflicted by the false teachers, and which required that the diseased flesh should be cut out with a knife or lancet.

13. ὅπου ὁ θρόνος τ. Σ.] 'where is the seat of Satan;' so called from being, as we learn from Arethas, more given to idolatry (and consequently vice) than any other place in Asia. Κρατεῖς τὸ ὄνομά μου, i. e. 'adherest firmly to me and my religion.' At ἐν αἷς Ἀντ. supply ἦν, which, or something equivalent, the writer probably intended to have expressed at the end of the sentence; but, from the length of the suspended clauses, omitted to do it. Μάρτυς μου ὁ πιστός. Render, 'faithful witness;' a phrase often occurring in Scripture; see Ps. lxxxix. 37. Prov. xiv. 5. Jer. xlii. 5, and supra i. 5. iii. 14. Antipas is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in the recent persecution under Diocletian.

14. κρατοῦντας] 'some who hold or maintain;' see Jude 10. Τὴν διδ. Βαλ., i. e. such doctrines as, like Balaam's suggestion to Balak, breed iniquity among the people of God, by turning the grace of God into lasciviousness, which is in 2 Pet. ii. 10—15, and Jude 4, called 'the way, or sinful course, of Balaam.' The next words advert to the points of similitude.

15. ὁμοίως.] This reading, for ὃ μισῶ (found in almost all MSS., Versions, and early Editions), has been justly adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz.

16. ῥομφ. τ. στόμ.] See Note supra, v. 12.

17. τῷ νικῶντι] i. e. quantum in se; see Note supra, v. 7. What follows, on giving him of the hidden manna and the white stone, may be regarded as a periphrasis of the simple idea of making him partaker of God's kingdom in heaven.

— τοῦ μάννα τ. κεκρ.] i. e. the bread of life in its spiritual sense, as indicated by our Lord at John vi. 32, seqq., of which the manna, hidden and laid up in the tabernacle, free from corruption, was a type; namely, the benefits derived to the faithful followers of Christ by the offering of his body,—forgiveness of sins, and life everlasting. (Woodhouse.) The manna of the Tabernacle was so far hidden, that, as Schoettgen shows, it was never seen but by the High Priest. And the spiritual manna may be said to be hidden, as being enjoyed in the heart of the true Christian. So 1 Pet. iii. 4, ὁ κρυπτὸς τῆς καρδίας ἄνθρωπος.

— ψῆφον λευκήν.] Namely, according to some, as a token of acquittal; in allusion to the white and black stones used at elections or trials; the former to denote acquittal, or approbation; the latter, condemnation, or rejection. According to others, it alludes to the white stone given as a warrant for receiving the prize at the Grecian Games; see Lowman and Doddridge. But I rather coincide in the opinion of Dr. Ward (Dissertation on passages of Scripture), Heinrichs, and Professor Lee, that there is an allusion to the tessera hospitalitatis usual in ancient times, which was, as Professor Lee observes, 'a sort of carte blanche, entitling the person who showed it to ask for and receive what he might want.' On which point of Antiquities, see more in Horne's Introd. vol. iii. 415.

— ὄνομα καινόν.] The best Expositors are agreed that this has reference to the Oriental custom of giving new names to persons advanced to great dignity; probably adopted from the favoured servants of God, as Abram and Jacob, having often new names bestowed on them, when placed in new circumstances. Thus is here designated high spiritual favour, that supreme felicity m Supra 1. 14, 15.

n 1 Kings 16. 31. 2 Kings 9. 7. Acts 15. 20. 1 Cor. 10. 19, 20.

o 1 Sam. 16. 7. 1 Chron. 28. 9. & 29. 17. Ps. 7. 10. & 32. 19. & 62. 13. Jer. 11. 20. & 17. 10. Matt. 16. 27. John. 2. 24, 25. Acts 1. 24. Rom. 2. 6. & 14. 12. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Gal. 6. 5. infra 20 12.

p Infra 3. 11.

[m] ΚΑΙ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς ἐν Θυατείροις ἐκκλησίας γράψον· 18 Τάδε λέγει ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὁ ἔχων τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ ὡς φλόγα πυρὸς, καὶ οἱ πόδες αὐτοῦ ὅμοιοι χαλκολιβάνῳ· Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην καὶ τὴν δια- 19 κονίαν, καὶ τὴν πίστιν καὶ τὴν ὑπομονήν σου· καὶ τὰ ἔργα σου [καὶ] τὰ ἔσχατα πλείονα τῶν πρώτων. [n] Ἀλλ' ἔχω 20 κατὰ σοῦ [ὀλίγα], ὅτι * ἀφεῖς τὴν γυναῖκα Ἰεζαβὲλ, * ἡ ‡ λέγουσα ἑαυτὴν προφῆτιν, * καὶ διδάσκει καὶ πλανᾷ τοὺς ἐμοὺς δούλους πορνεῦσαι καὶ εἰδωλόθυτα φαγεῖν. Καὶ 21 ἔδωκα αὐτῇ χρόνον ἵνα μετανοήσῃ [ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς]· καὶ οὐ * θέλει μετανοῆσαι ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς. Ἰδοὺ [ἐγὼ] βάλλω 22 αὐτὴν εἰς κλίνην, καὶ τοὺς μοιχεύοντας μετ' αὐτῆς εἰς θλίψιν μεγάλην, ἐὰν μὴ μετανοήσωσιν ἐκ τῶν ἔργων * αὐτῆς· [o] καὶ τὰ τέκνα αὐτῆς ἀποκτενῶ ἐν θανάτῳ. Καὶ γνώσονται 23 πᾶσαι αἱ ἐκκλησίαι, ὅτι ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ἐρευνῶν νεφροὺς καὶ καρδίας· καὶ δώσω ὑμῖν, ἑκάστῳ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ὑμῶν. Ὑμῖν 24 δὲ λέγω [καὶ] τοῖς λοιποῖς τοῖς ἐν Θυατείροις, ὅσοι οὐκ ἔχουσι τὴν διδαχὴν ταύτην, [καὶ] οἵτινες οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὰ βαθέα τοῦ Σατανᾶ (ὡς λέγουσιν)· Οὐ * βάλλω ἐφ' ὑμᾶς ἄλλο βάρος, [p] πλὴν, ὃ ἔχετε, κρατήσατε ἄχρις οὗ ἂν ἥξω. 25 laid up in heaven for the righteous. Ὃ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν—λαμβ. is well explained, with Abp. Newcome, 'at the time when it is given, secret and mysterious to all men but to him who receives it.'

18. ὁ ἔχων τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς—πυρός.] See Note at i. 14. So Euripides, Hec. 1255, πύρσ' ἔχουσα δέργματα, where the Scholium explains by πυρώδεις ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχουσα.

19. καὶ τὰ—ἔσχατα πλείονα τῶν πρώτων.] The reverse of what is said at 2 Pet. ii. 20.

20. The alterations of the common reading in this verse and the next are all founded on the strongest authority, and have been adopted by all the best Editors. Nevertheless, it is probable that λέγει, not λέγουσα, is the true reading. Many Critics and Editors, on the authority of several MSS., insert σοῦ after γυναῖκα. This, however, produces much incongruity; and the σοῦ was not unlikely to be inserted by the scribes, or even the librarii; but that it should have been omitted by them is very improbable. Thus our common Version rightly renders woman, as also the Vulgate, and Tertullian. By Jezebel some female heresiarch seems to be meant; though by the expression may be designated such kind of persons under the character of the leader; see Woodhouse. This is supported by the opinion of Bp. Bull, Exam. p. 85, who thinks that by Jezebel is to be understood mystically the Gnostic Faction, whose monstrous doctrines 'virgineam Christi Ecclesiam, recens ab Apostolis ipsis desponsatam, stupraverant.'

21, 22. In these verses fornication and adultery are interchanged; both denoting the spiritual fornication, or adultery, of apostasy from the truth by heresy. Τοὺς μοιχ. μετ' αὐτῆς, i. e. those who hold her heretical doctrines.

— αὐτῆς.] Vulg. αὐτῶν. The 'casting upon a bed' denotes afflicting with severe sickness, or pains and afflictions similar thereto, as a punishment of heresy; for βάλλειν ἐπὶ κλίνην is, as Heinrichs observes, a Syriac phrase, to signify, 'morbum immittere,' 2 Sam. xiii. 5; and persons confined to their bed by sickness are called κλινοπετεῖς.

23. ἐγώ εἰμι ὁ ἐρευνῶν νεφ. καὶ κ.] A title peculiar to Deity, and here taken by the Son of God. Ὑμῖν ἑκάστῳ, for ὑμῶν ἑκάστῳ.

24. ὅσοι οὐκ ἔχουσι] for ὅσοι οὐκ ἔχετε, by an idiom common in the prophetic style. By τοῖς λοιποῖς are meant the [great] number which remained, when separated from the bad. Τὴν διδ. τ., 'this doctrine,' namely, on the lawfulness of eating idol meats and of adultery. At οἵτινες —Σατ. there is a repetition of the sentiment, with a substitution for διδ. of a phrase expressing the nature of the doctrines in question, and formed (as appears from the ὡς λέγουσι) on a favourite phrase of the professors of them. They called their doctrines τὰ βάθη τοῦ Θεοῦ (a phrase perhaps borrowed from St. Paul, 1 Cor. ii. 10), 'the deep mysteries of God;' whereas such mysteries of iniquity were rather the deep mysteries of Satan.

— οὐ βάλλω—βάρος, πλὴν, ὃ ἔχ., &c.] Of these words the full sense (expressed with extreme brevity) seems to be this: 'I lay no other injunction, except what ye have already received [from my ministers] (see Acts xv. 28); that that faith, which ye have, ye hold fast till I come;' i. e. till the day of judgment, or of death, as being tantamount to it.

I have pointed, as above, βάρος, because this is required by the construction, there being after πλὴν an ellipsis of τούτου, which word is

26 [q] Καὶ ὁ νικῶν, καὶ ὁ τηρῶν ἄχρι τέλους τὰ ἔργα μου, δώσω 27 αὐτῷ ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τῶν ἐθνῶν. — [r] καὶ ποιμανεῖ αὐτοὺς ἐν ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ, ὡς τὰ σκεύη τὰ κεραμικὰ συντρίβεται·—ὡς κἀγὼ εἴληφα παρὰ τοῦ Πατρός μου· 28 καὶ δώσω αὐτῷ τὸν ἀστέρα τὸν πρωϊνόν. [s] Ὁ ἔχων οὖς 29 ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις.
1 III. [a] Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς ἐν Σάρδεσιν ἐκκλησίας γράψον· Τάδε λέγει ὁ ἔχων τὰ ἑπτὰ πνεύματα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοὺς ἑπτὰ ἀστέρας· Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα, ὅτι [τὸ] ὄνομα 2 ἔχεις ὅτι ζῇς, καὶ νεκρὸς εἶ. Γίνου γρηγορῶν, καὶ στήριξον τὰ λοιπὰ, ἃ ‡ ἔμελλον ‡ ἀποθανεῖν. οὐ γὰρ εὕρηκά σου τὰ 3 ἔργα πεπληρωμένα ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ μου. [b] Μνημόνευε οὖν πῶς εἴληφας καὶ ἤκουσας, καὶ τήρει καὶ μετανόησον.
Ἐὰν οὖν μὴ γρηγορήσῃς, ἥξω ἐπὶ σὲ ὡς κλέπτης, καὶ οὐ μὴ
4 γνῷς ποίαν ὥραν ἥξω ἐπὶ σέ. [c] Ἀλλ' ἔχεις ὀλίγα ὀνόματα [καὶ] ἐν Σάρδεσιν, ἃ οὐκ ἐμόλυναν τὰ ἱμάτια αὐτῶν· καὶ 5 περιπατήσουσι μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν λευκοῖς, ὅτι ἄξιοί εἰσιν. [d] Ὁ νικῶν, οὗτος περιβαλεῖται ἐν ἱματίοις λευκοῖς· καὶ οὐ μὴ q Ps. 2. 8. Matt. 19. 28. Luke 22. 29. 1 Cor. 6. 3, infra 3. 21. r Ps. 2. 8, 9. & 49. 15. s Supra v. 7, 11, 17.

a Supra 1. 4, 16, 20. & 2. 1. infra 4. 5. & 5. 6. b Infra v. 19 Matt. 24. 42, 43. Luke 12. 39. 40. 1 Thess. 5. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 10. infra 16. 15. c Infra 4. 4. & 6. 11. & 7. 9, 13.
d Ex. 32. 32. Ps. 69. 29. Matt. 10. 32. Luke 12. 8. Phil 4. 3. infra 13. 8. & 20. 12. & 21. 27.

expressed in the similar passage of Acts xv. 28, ἔδοξε—μηδὲν πλέον ἐπιτίθεσθαι ὑμῖν βάρος, πλὴν τῶν, &c.

26—28. To perseverance in the faith of Christ, and in the works arising thence, is promised 'power over the nations;' i. e. over the yet unconverted Gentiles; see Matt. xix. 28, compared with Dan. vii. 22. 27. And this, in the verse following, is explained to be the same power which the Saviour himself had received over them, and which is expressed in words nearly resembling those prophetical of Christ, in the second Psalm. (Woodhouse.)

26. ὁ νικῶν, καὶ ὁ τηρῶν, &c.] Meaning, according to some, that 'he who overcometh the world shall participate in the blessings of that spiritual kingdom of Christ, which shall ultimately prevail over the idolatry and wickedness of the heathen nations.' Others, however, as Daubuz and Newcome, understand ἐξουσίαν of a temporal dominion over the unconverted nations, when Christ shall reign on earth. But it would rather seem only to denote advantage over the heathen, by being admitted into heaven; while they are figuratively broken in pieces like a potter's vessel, by being consigned to utter destruction; see Scott. The quotation is as nearly from the Sept. of Ps. ii. 9, as the application of the passage will permit. The anacoluthon in ὁ νικῶν δώσω αὐτῷ is one frequent in Scripture, and also found in the Classical writers; see Glass, Phil. S. p. 446. By ὁ τηρῶν τὰ ἔργα μου is meant, 'he who keepeth or observeth the works which I require.' For τὰ σκεύη τὰ κεραμικὰ, ver. 27, the Sept. has σκεῦος κεραμέως. But the New Test. reading is defended by Plut. viii. 327. 1. Reiske, where we have κεραμικοὶ τροχοί.

28. δώσω αὐτῷ τὸν ἀστέρα τὸν πρωϊνόν.] Expositors are not agreed on the reference in ἀστέρα. Since Christ, xxii. 16, calls himself the bright morning star, some assign the same sense here; q. d. that 'he will give himself, i. e. his light and truth.' It is, however, the general opinion of learned Commentators, that the sense is, 'I will give him glories of which that star is an emblem' (Dan. xii. 3); i. e. (in the words of Scott) the ineffable glory, with which he will invest his victorious disciples, in the presence and enjoyment of him their Lord and Saviour, and in conformity to his glory.

III. 1. ὁ ἔχων τὰ ἑπτὰ πν. τ. Θ.] Meaning either, 'whose commands the Seven Spirits obey;' or, 'who giveth the Holy Spirit;' the interpretation here depending upon that at i. 4; see also i. 16. 20.

— ὄνομα ἔχεις ὅτι, &c.] Ὄνομα is here, as often in the Classical writers, used in opposition to ἔργον, to denote semblance as opposed to reality. Νεκρὸς εἶ. Meaning, 'art spiritually dead [in trespasses and sins], devoid of Divine grace.'

2. τὰ λοιπὰ] i. e. 'the remaining principles [of piety and holiness]'. Ἔμελλον, Vulg. μέλλει. Perhaps, however, the true reading is ἔμελλες ἀποβαλεῖν, which is edited by Matthæi. Πεπληρ., for τέλεια, meaning, 'completely answering' to what God requires. See Col. iv. 12, and Note.

3. In πῶς (for ποῖα) εἴληφας καὶ ἤκουσας the former term refers to doctrines, the latter to precepts. Ἥξω ὡς κλέπτης: a comparison used by our Lord, and from him by St. Paul, St. Peter, and St. John.

4. ὀνόματα] 'persons,' as xiv. 4, and Acts i. 15. In ἐμόλυναν there is a common metaphor, by which sin is designated as defilement. Τὰ ἱμάτια is added for adaptation to the following image, designating high honour and happiness. With περιπατ. ἐν λευκοῖς (occurring in John xx. 12) Heinrichs compares from Arrian, Epict. iii. 22, περιπατεῖν ἐν κοκκίνοις.

5. οὐ μὴ ἐξαλείψω—ζωῆς.] The metaphor here is probably the same as in Phil. iv. 3, where ἐξαλείψω τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἐκ τῆς βίβλου τῆς ζωῆς· καὶ [ἐξ]ομολογήσομαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Πατρός μου καὶ ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀγγέλων αὐτοῦ. Ὁ ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί 6 τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις.

e Infra v 14. Job 12. 14. Isa. 22. 22. supra 1. 18.

[e] Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς ἐν Φιλαδελφείᾳ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· 7
Τάδε λέγει ὁ Ἅγιος ὁ ἀληθινός· ὁ ἔχων τὴν * κλεῖν τοῦ Δαυῒδ, ὁ ἀνοίγων καὶ οὐδεὶς κλείει, καὶ κλείει καὶ οὐδεὶς ἀνοίγει· Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα· ἰδοὺ, δέδωκα 8 ἐνώπιόν σου θύραν ἀνεῳγμένην, * ἣν οὐδεὶς δύναται κλεῖσαι αὐτήν· ὅτι μικρὰν ἔχεις δύναμιν, καὶ ἐτήρησάς μου τὸν f Supra 2. 9.

λόγον, καὶ οὐκ ἠρνήσω τὸ ὄνομά μου. [f] Ἰδοὺ, δίδωμι ἐκ 9 τῆς συναγωγῆς τοῦ Σατανᾶ τῶν λεγόντων ἑαυτοὺς Ἰου-δαίους εἶναι, καὶ οὐκ εἰσὶν, ἀλλὰ ψεύδονται· ἰδοὺ, ποιήσω αὐτοὺς ἵνα ἥξωσι καὶ προσκυνήσωσιν ἐνώπιον τῶν ποδῶν σου, καὶ γνῶσιν ὅτι ἐγὼ ἠγάπησά σε. Ὅτι ἐτήρησας 10 τὸν λόγον τῆς ὑπομονῆς μου, κἀγὼ σὲ τηρήσω ἐκ τῆς ὥρας τοῦ πειρασμοῦ τῆς μελλούσης ἔρχεσθαι ἐπὶ τῆς οἰκου-μένης ὅλης, πειράσαι τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.

g Phil. 4. 5. supra 1. 3. & 2. 25. infra 22. 7, 12.
h 1 Kings 7. 21. Gal. 4. 26. Heb. 12. 22. supra 2. 17. infra 21. 2, 10. & 22. 4.

[g] [Ἰδοὺ,] ἔρχομαι ταχύ· κράτει ὃ ἔχεις, ἵνα μηδεὶς λάβῃ 11 τὸν στέφανόν σου. [h] Ὁ νικῶν, ποιήσω αὐτὸν στύλον ἐν τῷ 12 ναῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, καὶ ἔξω οὐ μὴ ἐξέλθῃ ἔτι, καὶ γράψω ἐπ᾽ αὐτὸν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τῆς πόλεως τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, τῆς καινῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ, ἡ * καταβαίνουσα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ μου, καὶ τὸ ὄνομά μου τὸ καινόν. Ὁ ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς 13 ἐκκλησίαις.

see Note; though it is by most Expositors thought to contain an allusion to a custom, not of civil life, but of military, by which the names of those on the muster-roll, who were cashiered for misconduct, were expunged therefrom. Compare Dan. xii. 1—4. We may suppose the expression to be founded on that at Exod. xxxii. 31, ἐξάλειψόν με ἐκ τῆς βίβλου ἧς ἔγραψας. Similarly in a passage of Josephus, Bell. i. 30. 7, we have τὸν Ἡρώδην—τῆς διαθήκης ἐξήλειψεν.

7. ὁ Ἅγιος, ὁ ἀληθινός.] Render, 'the Holy One and the True One,' or rather, 'the Holy and True One:' an epithet belonging appropriately to the Deity (Exod. xxviii. 36. Isaiah vi. 3), but also pertaining to the only-begotten Son, as partaking of the nature of the Father.

— ὁ ἔχων τὴν κλεῖν τοῦ Δ.] i. e. 'has the power of shutting out, or receiving into the spiritual kingdom,' which, as the Son of David, as the Messiah, he established, i. 8; compare Acts iii. 14. 1 John v. 20. (Holden.) By key is meant the ensign of regal power.

8. θύραν ἀνεῳγμ.] i. e. an opportunity of preaching the Gospel, as 1 Cor. xvi. 9. 2 Cor. ii. 12. Μικρὰν δύν. Meaning, as Newcome explains, 'has not numbers, wealth, and power to repel persecution.'

9. δίδωμι ἐκ.] This is regarded as put for ποιήσω. But there is rather a significatio prægnans; and Dr. Burton well paraphrases: 'I will give some of these persons into your power, and cause them to come,' &c., viz. to come over to Christianity, and thus honour thee. This is confirmed by what Professor Lee says, who regards this verse as a remarkable instance of the language used under the old Dispensation being applied even to the New; for the present passage is (he adds) taken from Is. xlix. 23, or rather lx. 14, which belongs exclusively, from first to last, to the times of the Christian Dispensation.

10—12. These verses contain a promise of honour and glory in the eternal temple in heaven to those who persevere in the faith, i. 3. ii. 15. 17. Gal. ii. 9. (Holden.)

10. τὸν λόγον τῆς ὑπομονῆς μου.] Meaning, as Heinrichs explains, 'doctrinam meam, quæ inter præcepta alia et ὑπομονὴν injungit, et quidem ὑπομονήν μου; i. e. talem, qualem ipse præstiti, i. 9.' See also Vater.

12. ποιήσω αὐτὸν στύλον ἐν τ. ν.] A metaphor denoting high dignity and trust; see Gal. ii. 9; compare also Isaiah xxii. 17—26. In the next words the metaphor is abandoned, and the sense is, that 'he shall not be put from that house;'

14 [i] Καὶ τῷ ἀγγέλῳ τῆς * ἐν Λαοδικείᾳ ἐκκλησίας γράψον· i Col. 1. 15. supra 1. 5, 6.
Τάδε λέγει ὁ Ἀμὴν, ὁ μάρτυς ὁ πιστὸς καὶ ἀληθινὸς, ἡ & 3. 7.
15 ἀρχὴ τῆς κτίσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ. Οἶδά σου τὰ ἔργα, ὅτι οὔτε ψυχρὸς εἶ οὔτε ζεστός· ὄφελον ψυχρὸς * ἦς ἢ ζεστός!
16 Οὕτως, ὅτι χλιαρὸς εἶ, καὶ οὔτε ψυχρὸς οὔτε ζεστὸς, μέλλω 17 σε ἐμέσαι ἐκ τοῦ στόματός μου. [k] ὅτι λέγεις· Ὅτι πλούσιός k 1 Cor. 4. 8.
εἰμι, καὶ πεπλούτηκα, καὶ οὐδενὸς χρείαν ἔχω, καὶ οὐκ οἶδας ὅτι σὺ εἶ ὁ ταλαίπωρος καὶ ἐλεεινὸς, καὶ πτωχὸς 18 καὶ τυφλὸς καὶ γυμνός. [l] συμβουλεύω σοι ἀγοράσαι παρ' l 2 Cor. 5. 3. infra 7. 13.
ἐμοῦ χρυσίον πεπυρωμένον ἐκ πυρὸς, ἵνα πλουτήσῃς· καὶ & 16. 15. & 19. 8. ἱμάτια λευκὰ, ἵνα περιβάλῃ, καὶ μὴ φανερωθῇ ἡ αἰσχύνη τῆς γυμνότητός σου· καὶ κολλούριον, ἵνα ἐγχρίσῃ τοὺς ὀφθαλ-19 μούς σου, ἵνα βλέπῃς. [m] Ἐγὼ ὅσους ἐὰν φιλῶ, ἐλέγχω m Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11, 12.
20 καὶ παιδεύω· * ζήλευε οὖν καὶ μετανόησον. [n] Ἰδοὺ, ἕστηκα Heb. 12. 5, 6. James 1 12.
ἐπὶ τὴν θύραν καὶ κρούω. ἐάν τις ἀκούσῃ τῆς φωνῆς μου, n Cant. 5. 2. John 14. 21, καὶ ἀνοίξῃ τὴν θύραν, καὶ εἰσελεύσομαι πρὸς αὐτὸν, καὶ &c.
21 δειπνήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὐτὸς μετ' ἐμοῦ. [o] Ὁ νικῶν, o Matt. 19. 28.
δώσω αὐτῷ καθίσαι μετ' ἐμοῦ ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ μου, ὡς κἀγὼ Luke 22. 30. 1 Cor. 6. 2. ἐνίκησα, καὶ ἐκάθισα μετὰ τοῦ Πατρός μου ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ 2 Tim. 2. 12. supra 2. 26, 27.
22 αὐτοῦ. [p] Ὁ ἔχων οὖς ἀκουσάτω τί τὸ Πνεῦμα λέγει ταῖς p Supra 2. 7, 11, 17, ἐκκλησίαις. & 3. 6, 13.

implying, as Daubuz remarks, an eternal state to be enjoyed in the New Jerusalem. Καταβαίνουσα. Vulg. καταβαίνει. On τὸ ὄνομά μου τὸ καινὸν, see xix. 6.

14. τῆς ἐν Λαοδ. ἐκκλησίας.] Vulg. τῆς ἐκκλ. Λαοδικέων. Ὁ Ἀμὴν, i. e. the Truth itself, as God is called in the Old Test. the God of truth, אָמֵן; see also 2 Cor. i. 20, compared with John viii. 12—19. Ὁ μάρτυς ὁ π.; see Note at i. 5. Ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κτ.; see Col. i. 15—18, and compare John i. 3.

15. οὔτε ψυχρὸς εἶ οὔτε ζ.] i. e. lukewarm and indifferent as to religion, neither wholly abandoning, nor fully observing it.

— ὄφελον—ζεστός!] By the cold (observes Woodhouse) is meant, not persons devoid of all warm feelings and affections, but who, having their passions absorbed by worldly objects, have hitherto been cold to religious affection. But (continues he) of such persons there is hope and expectation that the time may come, when, from experience of the vanity of mere worldly pursuits, they may listen to the suggestions of the Spirit, and turn their affections to their proper objects,—God, and his works and promises. For, as Dr. Henry More (cited by Abp. Newcome) says, 'Coldness, though not better in itself than lukewarmness, might have sooner led the Church of Laodicæa to repentance.' So our Lord said that the Publicans, and even characters decidedly vicious, would go to heaven sooner than the Pharisees, and that the kingdom of heaven is taken by force.

16. μέλλω σε ἐμέσαι ἐκ τοῦ στόμ. μου.] By the same metaphor it is said at Levit. xviii. 28, 'spued out the nations that were before you;' where Symmachus has ἐξήμεσεν. So also in Aristophanes, Ach. 6, we have τοῖς πέντε ταλάντοις, οἷς Κλέων ἐξήμεσεν.

17. πτωχὸς—τυφλὸς—γυμνός.] These three defects and their remedies are mentioned in ver. 18. (Burton.) 'Ταλαίπ. et ἐλ. universim, singula miseriæ genera sequuntur; ver. 18 ad eadem respicitur.' (Vater.) The Article has an intensive force.

18. We have here a continuation of the allegory, and that in words similar to those at Matt. vi. 20.

— συμβουλεύω σοι ἀγοράσαι, &c.] Compare Isaiah lv. 1, 2. Ἐμοῦ is, as Heinrichs observes, meant to be emphatic, Christ being the dispenser of true riches. 'Here, then,' as Iaspis remarks, 'we have these several things respectively opposed,—to poverty, fine gold; to nakedness, white raiment; to blindness, eye-salve.' Thus, to supply their poverty, they are to have recourse to Him, from whom they may receive gold tried in the fire (i. e. gold of the purest sort, tried in the fire and assayed; see Prov. viii. 10. 19; meaning Gospel truth); to remedy their nakedness, they are to seek to be clothed in the white garment of Christian righteousness; and to remove their blindness, they are to seek the ointment of Christ, that they may see the true light of the Gospel.

19—21. See Hebr. xii. 5—12. Luke xii. 37. John iii. 29. vi. 35. For ζήλωσον, Wetstein, Matthæi, and others, have edited ζήλευε; for which there is strong internal evidence in the rarity of the form.

20. αὐτὸς μετ' ἐμοῦ] scil. δειπνήσει, i. e. 'I will invite him to a heavenly banquet.' See Note at John xiv. 23.

a Supra 1. 10. IV. [a] ΜΕΤΑ ταῦτα εἶδον· καὶ ἰδοὺ θύρα ἀνεῳγμένη ἐν 1 τῷ οὐρανῷ· καὶ ἡ φωνὴ ἡ πρώτη, ἣν ἤκουσα, ὡς σάλπιγγος λαλούσης μετ' ἐμοῦ, * λέγων· Ἀνάβα ὧδε, καὶ δείξω σοι, ἃ b Ezek. 1. 26. & 10. 1. supra 1. 10. δεῖ γενέσθαι μετὰ ταῦτα. [b] Καὶ εὐθέως ἐγενόμην ἐν Πνεύ- 2 ματι· καὶ ἰδοὺ, θρόνος ἔκειτο ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου καθήμενος· καὶ ὁ καθήμενος [ἦν] ὅμοιος ὁράσει 3 λίθῳ ἰάσπιδι καὶ σαρδίῳ· καὶ ἶρις κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου * ὁμοία ὁράσει σμαραγδίνῳ. Καὶ κυκλόθεν τοῦ θρόνου θρόνοι 4 εἴκοσι [καὶ] τέσσαρες· καὶ ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους [εἶδον] τοὺς εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρας πρεσβυτέρους καθημένους, περιβεβλημένους ἐν ἱματίοις λευκοῖς, καὶ [ἔσχον] ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς c Supra 1. 4. & 3. 1. infra 5. 6. αὐτῶν στεφάνους χρυσοῦς. [c] Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου ἐκπορεύ- 5 ονται ἀστραπαὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ φωναί. καὶ ἑπτὰ λαμπάδες πυρὸς καιόμεναι ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου, αἵ εἰσι τὰ d Infra 15. 2. ἑπτὰ πνεύματα τοῦ Θεοῦ. [d] καὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου θά- 6 λασσα ὑαλίνη ὁμοία κρυστάλλῳ. καὶ ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ θρόνου

IV. After the first terrestrial vision, others, still more amazing, were vouchsafed to the enraptured Apostle, by successive openings in heaven, affording new and more extended prospects of futurity; 1. a door was opened in heaven, which gave him a view of the spiritual Church and worship, Rev. iv. 1; 2. the spiritual sanctuary was opened, xi. 19; 3. again, xv. 5; and 4thly, heaven itself was fully opened, xix. 11. Hence the remainder of the book naturally resolves itself into four celestial visions. The first and grand vision begins at chap. iv. and ends at xi. 18; the second begins at xi. 19, and ends at xiv. 20; the third begins at xv., and ends at xix. 10; and the fourth begins at xix. 11, and ends at xxii. 5. (Dr. Hales.)

This and the next Chapter form an introduction to the prophetical part of the Book. In the present Chapter is represented St. John's Vision of the Heaven opened, with the Almighty seated on an exalted throne surrounded by four-and-twenty Elders and four Living Creatures, who adore him as the Creator and Lord of all.

1. μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον.] The sense is, 'After this I had another vision,' or a continuation of the first. I have pointed accordingly, with the Latin Vulgate. This is confirmed by Primasius, 'Postea, inquit, vidi. Post ipsam utique visionem se alteram memorat vidisse.' This expression, which is of frequent occurrence in the present Book and the Prophets, is intended to intimate that something remarkable in the way of revelation took place; and accordingly it is a fit preface to announcements of prophecy or revelation. Θύρα ἀνεῳγμένη ἐν τῷ οὐρ., 'a door [as it were] was opened;' see Ezek. i. 1. Matt. iii. 16. Acts vii. 56, and Daubuz in loc. Ἡ πρώτη. This is justly supposed by Dr. Burton to be an allusion to i. 10; q. d. 'Lo! the heavens were opened, and lo! there was the former voice, which I had heard as of a trumpet speaking to me; and it said,' &c.

2. ἐγεν. ἐν Πνεύμ.] See Note supra i. 10.

— καθήμενος] scil. ἦν. The Person here spoken of is (as Daubuz remarks), by his attributes, plainly Jehovah, God the Father. 'We are not to imagine (says Doddridge) that the Person sitting on the throne [or the Lamb], or the four-and-twenty elders, or the four animals, were real beings, existing in nature; though they represented, in a figurative manner, things that did really exist.' On the thing signified by each symbol, reference is made to the tabernacle and temple service; see Abp. Newcome, Dean Woodhouse, and Professor Lee. The πρεσβ., ver. 4, are supposed by some to denote the ministers of the Christian Church, double the number of the Jewish tribes; by others, the Jewish and Christian Churches, or the twelve Patriarchs, and the twelve Apostles; which seems the most probable opinion. 'The rest of the Chapter (says Professor Lee) seems to mark out the majesty of Almighty God, attended by his ministers, who are prepared to execute his purposes, and before they do so, they ascribe praise to him, as the Creator of all things.'

3. λίθῳ ἰάσπιδι καὶ σαρδίῳ.] By the former is supposed to be meant the diamond; by the latter is denoted a precious stone of a red colour, called σαρδ., as brought from Sardinia. Both are supposed to be symbolical of the splendid purity and awful glory of the Divine nature. The ἶρις is symbolical of God's mercy and faithfulness, to be shown to Christians, as formerly they were to the Antediluvian world. (Gen. ix. 9—17.)

4. θρόνοι.] Not seats, but thrones. The καὶ is absent from most of the best MSS., and was probably from the margin.

5. ἀστραπαὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ φωναί.] Agreeably to the terrific homage attendant on the majesty of God on Mount Sinai. The 'seven lamps of fire' are supposed to correspond to the seven lights of the Candlestick on the Tabernacle.

— τὰ ἑπτὰ πνεύματα] 'the seven spirits.' See Note on i. 4.

6. The sea or laver of glass (analogous to that καὶ κύκλῳ τοῦ θρόνου τέσσαρα ζῶα γέμοντα ὀφθαλμῶν 7 ἔμπροσθεν καὶ ὄπισθεν. Καὶ τὸ ζῶον τὸ πρῶτον ὅμοιον λέοντι, καὶ τὸ δεύτερον ζῶον ὅμοιον μόσχῳ, καὶ τὸ τρίτον ζῶον ἔχον τὸ πρόσωπον ‡ ὡς ἄνθρωπος, καὶ τὸ τέταρτον 8 ζῶον ὅμοιον ἀετῷ πετομένῳ. [e] Καὶ τέσσαρα ζῶα, ἓν καθ' e Is. 6. 2, 3 supra 1. 4, 8.

ἑαυτὸ, εἶχον ἀνὰ πτέρυγας ἓξ, κυκλόθεν καὶ ἔσωθεν * γέμου- infra 11. 17. & 16. 5.
σιν ὀφθαλμῶν· καὶ ἀνάπαυσιν οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς λέγοντα· "Ἅγιος, ἅγιος, ἅγιος Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ 9 παντοκράτωρ, ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος!" Καὶ ὅταν δώσουσι τὰ ζῶα δόξαν καὶ τιμὴν καὶ εὐχαριστίαν τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, τῷ ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν 10 αἰώνων, πεσοῦνται οἱ εἴκοσι καὶ τέσσαρες πρεσβύτεροι ἐνώ-πιον τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ προσκυνήσουσι τῷ ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, καὶ βαλοῦσι τοὺς στε-11 φάνους αὐτῶν ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου, λέγοντες· [f] "Ἄξιος εἶ, f Infra 5. 12.
Κύριε, λαβεῖν τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν καὶ τὴν δύναμιν· ὅτι σὺ ἔκτισας τὰ πάντα, καὶ διὰ τὸ θέλημά σου * ἦσαν, καὶ ἐκτίσθησαν.

1 V. [a] Καὶ εἶδον ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιὰν τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ a Ezek. 2. 9, 10.
θρόνου βιβλίον γεγραμμένον ἔσωθεν καὶ * ἔξωθεν, κατε- Is. 29. 11. Dan. 12. 4.

of brass under the Law) is supposed to be symbolical of the spiritual purity necessary for exaltation in heaven. (See Heb. x. 22.)

— τέσσαρα ζῶα.] Render, 'four living creatures' (not beasts). So Heinrichs renders it: 'animantia, naturæ animantes [et quidem intelligentes]; sicuti depinguntur infra v. 8; C. vi. 1. 3. 5. 7, et præ aliis naturis angelorum instar eminentes, significantesque vim et celeritatem, qua operatur Numen, in cujus regno immenso nihil vacuum est aut mortuum.' So Bulkeley adduces several examples of ζῶον to denote, not only creature, but even a human being; especially one from Origen, who uses it of our Lord Jesus, calling him πάντων ζώων καθαρώτερον. These 'living creatures' are supposed to represent, either the highest order of angelic beings, whose qualities and offices are figuratively described; or, as Newcome explains, 'the whole body of the Church of God, who serve him in heaven with strength of affection, with perseverance, with reason, and with swiftness of obedience;' qualities which seem to be signified by the emblems in ver. 7. The epithet 'full of eyes,' denotes their knowledge, wisdom, prudence, and foresight. The imagery is, with reason, supposed to be formed on Ezek. i. 5, seqq. See Irenæus, lib. iii. 11. 8, cited by Heinrichs.

8. ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός.] Said per anthropopathiam, to denote 'continually, at all fit times.' Ὁ ἦν—ἐρχ. An expression denoting the eternity of the Deity.

9. The Futures δώσουσι, προσκυνήσουσι, &c., are used like the Aorist in the Classical writers, to designate what is customary.

10. βαλοῦσι τοὺς στεφ., &c.] in sign of deep reverence and perfect subservience. On this Chorus of the angels here and at ver. 12, see Bp. Bull, Primit. Ap. Trad. p. 40.

11. τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν, &c.] The Article has here what Bp. Middleton calls the force of notoriety; being used similarly as at Acts xii. 23 (where see Note), and Matt. vi. 13, ὅτι σοῦ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ δόξα, &c.

— ἦσαν, καὶ ἐκτίσθησαν.] Meaning, 'were brought into being, and have been created;' i. e. implying their remaining, by the same will, such as they were at their creation. For εἰσι, ἦσαν has been adopted by the best Editors, on the strongest external authority and internal evidence.

V. 1. ἐπὶ τὴν δεξιὰν] for ἐπὶ τῇ δεξιᾷ, elsewhere. Under this image are denoted the prophecies which follow. This volume of prophecy is said to be 'in the right hand of God,' as being of Divine original, and infallibly true: it is written 'within and without,' as being abundant and perfect in matter; and 'sealed with seven seals,' as having its fulfilment in successive times. No one, either in heaven or earth, was worthy to unfold this volume of prophecy, except the Lamb of God, the Saviour of the world, vv. 2—6; and as no other could explain the scheme of the Divine administration, when he took the book into his hand for this purpose, the living creatures and elders, i. e. the angelic host, and the Church of the redeemed triumphant in heaven, pay him a glad and willing homage, vv. 7—14. (Holden.)

— γεγραμμ. ἔσωθεν καὶ ἔξωθεν.] The long rolls of parchment used by the ancients, which we call books, were seldom written but on one side; namely, that which was in rolling turned inwards. Any one written on both sides was σφραγισμένον σφραγῖσιν ἑπτά. Καὶ εἶδον ἄγγελον ἰσχυ- 2 ρὸν, κηρύσσοντα ἐν φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· Τίς [ἐστιν] ἄξιος ἀνοῖξαι τὸ βιβλίον καὶ λῦσαι τὰς σφραγῖδας αὐτοῦ; [b] Καὶ οὐδεὶς 3 ἠδύνατο ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, οὐδὲ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, οὐδὲ ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς, ἀνοῖξαι τὸ βιβλίον, οὐδὲ βλέπειν αὐτό. Καὶ ἐγὼ 4 ἔκλαιον πολλὰ, ὅτι οὐδεὶς ἄξιος εὑρέθη ἀνοῖξαι [καὶ ἀναγνῶ-ναι] τὸ βιβλίον, οὔτε βλέπειν αὐτό. [c] Καὶ εἷς ἐκ τῶν 5 πρεσβυτέρων λέγει μοι· Μὴ κλαῖε· ἰδοὺ, ἐνίκησεν ὁ λέων ὁ [ὢν] ἐκ τῆς φυλῆς Ἰούδα, ἡ ῥίζα Δαυῒδ, ἀνοῖξαι τὸ βιβλίον καὶ [λῦσαι] τὰς ἑπτὰ σφραγῖδας αὐτοῦ. [d] Καὶ 6 εἶδον, [καὶ ἰδοὺ] ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ θρόνου καὶ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων, καὶ ἐν μέσῳ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, ἀρνίον ἑστηκὸς ὡς ἐσφαγμένον, ἔχον κέρατα ἑπτὰ καὶ ὀφθαλμοὺς ἑπτὰ, * ἅ εἰσι τὰ ἑπτὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ πνεύματα τὰ ἀπεσταλμένα εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν. Καὶ ἦλθε καὶ εἴληφε [τὸ βιβλίον] ἐκ τῆς δεξιᾶς 7 τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου. [e] Καὶ ὅτε ἔλαβε τὸ βιβλίον, 8 τὰ τέσσαρα ζῶα καὶ οἱ εἰκοσιτέσσαρες πρεσβύτεροι ἔπεσον ἐνώπιον τοῦ ἀρνίου, ἔχοντες ἕκαστος κιθάρας, καὶ φιάλας χρυσᾶς γεμούσας θυμιαμάτων, αἵ εἰσιν αἱ προσευχαὶ τῶν ἁγίων· [f] καὶ ᾄδουσιν ᾠδὴν καινὴν, λέγοντες· Ἄξιος εἶ 9 λαβεῖν τὸ βιβλίον, καὶ ἀνοῖξαι τὰς σφραγῖδας αὐτοῦ· ὅτι ἐσφάγης, καὶ ἠγόρασας τῷ Θεῷ ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ αἵματί σου ἐκ πάσης φυλῆς καὶ γλώσσης, καὶ λαοῦ καὶ ἔθνους, [g] καὶ 10 ἐποίησας * αὐτοὺς τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν βασιλεῖς καὶ ἱερεῖς, καὶ * βασιλεύσουσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. [h] Καὶ εἶδον καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν 11 ἀγγέλων πολλῶν * κύκλῳ τοῦ θρόνου καὶ τῶν ζώων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων· καὶ ἦν ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτῶν μυριάδες μυρ-ιάδων καὶ χιλιάδες χιλιάδων, [i] λέγοντες φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· 12 Ἄξιόν ἐστι τὸ ἀρνίον τὸ ἐσφαγμένον λαβεῖν τὴν δύναμιν b Phil. 2. 10. infra v. 13. c Gen. 49. 9, 10. Isa. 11. 1, 10. Rom. 15. 12. infra 22. 16. & 6. 1. d John 1. 29, 36. 1 Pet. 1. 19. infra 13. 8. Zech. 3. 9. & 4. 10. infra 4. 5.

e Ps. 141. 2. infra 8. 3, 4. & 14. 2.
f Infra 14. 3. Ps. 40. 3. & 96. 1. supra 4. 11. Acts 20. 28. 1 Cor. 6. 20. & 7. 23. Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. 2 Pet. 2. 1. 1 John 1. 7. Dan 4. 1. & 6. 25. infra 7. 9. & 11. 9.
g Ex. 19. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. supra 1. 6. infra 20. 6.
h Dan. 7. 10.
i Supra 4. 11.

called ὀπισθόγραφος. By this circumstance is here denoted the copiousness of the matter. Κατεσφρ., 'sealed down;' the seals (as Dr. Burton observes) being placed on the last fold, so that the roll could not be opened without breaking them.

2. κηρύσσοντα] 'proclaiming, as a herald,' such as the Rabbins supposed to be in heaven.

3. ἠδύνατο] i. e. 'could undertake it,' as being of dignity competent thereto; explained by ἄξιος εὑρέθη just after.

— οὐδὲ βλέπειν αὐτό.] Οὐδὲ here signifies nequidem, as Matt. vi. 29. viii. 10, and elsewhere.

5. ἐνίκησεν—ἀνοῖξαι] i. e. 'hath so prevailed as to open;' for ἐξενίκησεν. 'Ο λέων—'Ιούδα. So called in allusion to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 9. 'Η ῥίζα Δ. So Isaiah, xi. 10, calls Christ ἡ ῥίζα τοῦ 'Ιεσσαί.

6. ἀρνίον ἐστ. ὡς ἐσφαγμ.] 'as if newly slain:' an emblematical representation of the Saviour's High Priesthood before God, in our nature, as risen from the dead, through the merit of his sacrifice in behalf of 'all who come to the Father through him.' (Scott.) 'Οφθ. ἑπτά. So Zech. iv. 10, ἑπτὰ οὗτοι ὀφθαλμοί εἰσιν οἱ ἐπιβλέποντες ἐπὶ πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν. On the ἑπτὰ πν. see Note supra i. 4. It is observed by Newcome, that horns and eyes are emblems of power and wisdom.

8. φιάλας.] Not vials, but cups, pateras; something like our dishes; see Schweigh. on Herodot. ii. 151. Αἵ εἰσιν αἱ προσ. τῶν ἁγ., denoting that the prayers of God's true worshippers are highly acceptable spiritual sacrifices.

9. ᾠδὴν καινήν.] So called because adapted to a new occasion. So ὄνομα καινὸν, ii. 17. iii. 12. (Newcome.) Ἄξιος εἶ, &c. A sort of acclamation, usual in ancient times, and often employed to hail a newly-elected Emperor.

11. τῶν ζώων.] This is governed not by κύκλῳ, but by φωνὴν, thus: 'I heard the voices of the angels round the throne, and of the ζῶα, and of the elders.' (Burton.)

12. λαβεῖν τὴν δύναμιν—εὐλογίαν.] This καὶ τὸν πλοῦτον, καὶ σοφίαν καὶ ἰσχὺν, καὶ τιμὴν καὶ 13 δόξαν καὶ εὐλογίαν. [k] Καὶ πᾶν κτίσμα, ὅ [ἐστιν] ἐν τῷ k Phil. 2. 10. infra v. 3. οὐρανῷ καὶ * ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, καὶ ὑποκάτω τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἐπὶ 1 Chron. 29. Rom. 9. 5.

τῆς θαλάσσης ἅ ἐστι, καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς, * πάντας ἤκουσα 1 Tim. 6. 16. infra 7 10.
λέγοντας· "Τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου καὶ τῷ ἀρνίῳ ἡ εὐλογία καὶ ἡ τιμὴ καὶ ἡ δόξα καὶ τὸ κράτος εἰς τοὺς 14 αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων!" Καὶ τὰ τέσσαρα ζῶα ἔλεγον· Ἀμήν· καὶ οἱ [εἰκοσιτέσσαρες] πρεσβύτεροι ἔπεσαν καὶ προσεκύνησαν [ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων].
1 VI. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὸ ἀρνίον μίαν ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ a Infra 5, 6, 7.
σφραγίδων, καὶ ἤκουσα ἑνὸς ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων λέγον-2 τος ὡς * φωνὴ βροντῆς· Ἔρχου καὶ ἴδε. [b] Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ b Infra 19. 11.
ἰδοὺ, ἵππος λευκὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἔχων Zech. 6. 3. Ps. 45. 3—5. infra 14. 14.
τόξον· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ στέφανος, καὶ ἐξῆλθε νικῶν, καὶ ἵνα νικήσῃ.
3 Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν δευτέραν σφραγῖδα, ἤκουσα τοῦ δευ-4 τέρου ζώου λέγοντος· Ἔρχου! [καὶ βλέπε.] [c] καὶ ἐξῆλθεν c Zech. 6. 2.
ἄλλος ἵππος πυῤῥός· καὶ τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἐδόθη αὐτῷ λαβεῖν τὴν εἰρήνην [ἀπὸ] τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἵνα ἀλλήλους 5 σφάξωσι· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ μάχαιρα μεγάλη. [d] Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε d Zech. 6. 2. τὴν * σφραγῖδα τὴν τρίτην, ἤκουσα τοῦ τρίτου ζώου λέγοντος· Ἔρχου καὶ βλέπε! καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ἵππος μέλας, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ' * αὐτὸν ἔχων ζυγὸν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ 6 αὐτοῦ. [e] Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν ἐν μέσῳ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων e Infra 9. 4. supra 4. 7.

seven-fold praise is supposed to correspond to the seven-fold attributes above.

13. τὰ ἐν αὐτοῖς] i. e. things in the sea as well as in the earth; the dead committed to them. (Newcome.) On the force here of the Article see Note supra iv. 11.

VI. 1. μίαν] for πρώτην. A common Hebrew idiom. 'Each (says Lowman) of the prophetical descriptions is, in part, some figurative or hieroglyphical picture, or some representation in the style and figurative expressions of ancient prophecy, describing certain particular dispensations of Providence, proper and peculiar to the several successive states of the Church and empire during the space of time contained in this period.'

— ἔρχου καὶ ἴδε.] A form of speaking to excite any one to attention, occurring in Ezek. viii. 9, and often in the Rabbinical writers. The Lamb now breaks the seals of the book of the counsels of God, and discloses a series of symbolical prophecies illustrative of the history of the Church. The first seal evidently refers to the triumph of Christianity over both Judaism and Paganism. The others are more or less obscure and disputed.

The bow, the white horse, and the crown, are emblems of victory, triumph, and royalty, accompanying the final triumph of the Gospel over all opposition. The imagery here is similar to that at Zech. vi. 1—6. See also Ps. xlv. 3—5. In νικῶν, ἵνα νικήσῃ, ver. 2, there is a Hellenistic idiom, the sense being, 'that he should gain victory after victory.'

3, 4. ἵππος πυῤῥὸς—μεγ.] A symbol borrowed from Zech. vi. 2, of wars, seditions, and blood-shedding, though on the event referred to Interpreters are not agreed.

5, 6. ἵππος μέλας.] An emblem of woe, the colour being of evil omen. On the sense and reference in ζυγὸν Expositors very much differ. The common Version, 'a pair of balances,' may, however, be retained, and the expression be understood (with Newcome, Heinrichs, and Iaspis,) of scales for exactly weighing out the corn: an apt designation of famine; corn being usually measured. The chœnix was about as much as our quart, and was considered a sufficient portion for a man's support for a day. See Herodot. vii. 186. The price then mentioned (which has been proved to be enormous, nearly twenty times the usual one) is meant to intimate the excessive scarcity and dearness of the article. By σίτου is meant [bread] corn, i. e. wheat; and the proportion between the quality of wheat and of barley was, it seems, an usual one. On the purport of the subjoined words, τὸ ἔλαιον—μὴ ἀδικ., Commentators are not agreed whether there is herein contained a command not to injure the wine and oil, or an injunction not to do wrong in respect to them. The latter view seems preferable. Perhaps, λέγουσαν· “Χοῖνιξ σίτου δηναρίου, καὶ τρεῖς χοίνικες κριθῆς δηναρίου·” καί· “τὸ ἔλαιον καὶ τὸν οἶνον μὴ ἀδικήσῃς.” Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν σφραγῖδα τὴν τετάρτην, ἤκουσα [φωνὴν] 7 τοῦ τετάρτου ζώου λέγουσαν· Ἔρχου καὶ βλέπε. [f] καὶ εἶδον, 8 καὶ ἰδοὺ ἵππος χλωρὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ ὄνομα αὐτῷ [ὁ] Θάνατος· καὶ ὁ ᾅδης ἀκολουθεῖ μετ' αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς ἐξουσία ἀποκτεῖναι, ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῆς γῆς, ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ καὶ ἐν λιμῷ καὶ ἐν θανάτῳ, καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων τῆς γῆς.

f Zech. 6. 3. Ezek. 14. 13, 21. 2 Esd. 15. 5. Levit. 26. 22.

[g] Καὶ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν πέμπτην σφραγῖδα, εἶδον ὑποκάτω 9 τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν ἐσφαγμένων διὰ τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ διὰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν ἣν εἶχον. [h] καὶ * ἔκραξαν 10 φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέγοντες· “Ἕως πότε, ὁ δεσπότης ὁ ἅγιος καὶ [ὁ] ἀληθινὸς, οὐ κρίνεις καὶ ἐκδικεῖς τὸ αἷμα ἡμῶν ‡ ἀπὸ g Infra 8. 3. & 9. 13. & 14. 18. & 19. 10. & 20. 4. h Zech. 1. 12. 2 Esd. 15. 8.

however, there is no occasion to suppose an ellipsis of κατά; but we may suppose μὴ ἀδικ. to mean, 'See that thou dost not adulterate it:' a figurative sense not harsher than many in this Book, and even some in the Classical writers. Here the four articles are adverted to which (according to the simplicity of living in the East) formed the main support of life.

8. χλωρὸς] 'of a pale or yellowish colour:' an emblem of mortality, such as is caused by pestilence and death (pallida mors) stalking about, or that sallow hue incident to fear, according to the Homeric ἐμὲ δὲ χλωρὸν δέος εἷλε.

— ὁ ᾅδης.] Meaning, not, as elsewhere in the New Test., the under-world, or region of the dead, but its inhabitants, who are regarded as the subjects of Death. The next words follow up the general idea of death and the grave by the more special ones, of what is most destructive of the human race,—war, famine, and pestilence.

Here, for ἐξουσία ἀποκτεῖναι ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τ. γ., several MSS. have ἐξουσία ἐπὶ τὸ τέταρτον τῆς γῆς ἀποκτεῖναι, which reading has been adopted by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz, but wrongly; such being evidently a mere alteration, for the sake of making the sense more obvious; and the common reading is sufficiently defended by a similar passage of Ezek. xiv. 21, where are denounced four sore judgments upon Jerusalem. By ἐπὶ τὸ τέτ. τῆς γῆς is meant, 'unto the fourth part of the inhabitants of the earth.' So in another similar passage of Ezek. v. 11, 12, we have τὸ τέταρτόν σου ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ πεσοῦνται.

By θανάτῳ we may understand pestilence, which, indeed, usually follows in the train of war. So in an ancient Oracle in Thucyd. ii. 54, we have ἥξει Δωριακὸς πόλεμος, καὶ λοιμὸς ἅμ' αὐτῷ.

— καὶ ὑπὸ τῶν θηρίων τῆς γῆς.] Render, 'by the means, or instrumentality, of the beasts.' A very appropriate addition; for, as Abp. Newcome observes, 'wild beasts increase where destructive calamities thin mankind.' So Exod. xxiii. 29, οὐκ ἐκβαλῶ αὐτοὺς ἐν ἐνιαυτῷ ἑνὶ, ἵνα μὴ γένηται ἡ γῆ ἔρημος, καὶ πολλὰ γένηται ἐπὶ σὲ τὰ θηρία τῆς γῆς. And in point of fact, the histories of the period in question attest that in various parts the wild beasts so increased upon the small residue of the inhabitants left by war, famine, and pestilence, that they were compelled to wage war with them, to keep them under, though with great difficulty and loss of life. One account records the entrance of 500 wolves at once into a depopulated city.

9—11. This, as also the subsequent seal, derives no light, like the former, from the living creatures as to the time of the commencement; for here we have not a prophecy concerning new events, but this is meant to minister consolation under the scandal of the Cross, and has reference to the preceding persecutions, which were of long continuance. (Hardy.)

9. τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου.] Meaning, not, as some have supposed, the golden altar for incense within the Holy of Holies, but (as the subject requires) the altar of burnt-offering in the court of the priests; for there is a tacit comparison of the martyrs to the victims in the Temple Service. 'These (observes Scott) appeared as sacrifices newly offered, to show their fellowship with Christ in his sufferings, and the acceptableness of their faithfulness unto death, through his propitiatory oblation.'

— διὰ τὸν λόγον—εἶχον] 'in the cause of God's word [the Gospel], and for the testimony which they had borne [to its truth].'

10. λέγοντες] for λέγουσαι, by the figure πρὸς τὸ σημαινόμενον.

— ἕως πότε, &c.] Hardy (after the older Commentators) remarks that this is an 'ecphonesis impatienter a brachio fortiori vindictam expetentium.' But it is well remarked by Iaspis, 'Martyres illi non vindictæ cupiditate incensi hanc quæstionem proponunt, sed modo sciscitantur, quando vaticinia eventum habitura sint.' The same applies to the words infra xix. 17, seqq. Compare a very similar passage of 2 Esdr. xiv. 8.

— ὁ ἅγιος καὶ ὁ ἀληθ.] Render, 'the Holy and True One.' For ἀπὸ many MSS. and early Editions have ἐκ, which is edited by Bengel and Matthæi, and may be supported from Gen. ix. 5, ἐκ χειρὸς ἀνθρώπου ἀδελφοῦ ἐκζητήσω τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου.

11 τῶν κατοικούντων ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς;" [i] Καὶ * ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς i Supra 3. 5. infra 7. 9, 14. Heb. 11. 40.
* στολὴ λευκή· καὶ ἐῤῥέθη * αὐτοῖς ἵνα ἀναπαύσωνται ἔτι χρόνον [μικρὸν], ἕως [οὗ] ‡ πληρωθῶσι καὶ οἱ σύνδουλοι αὐτῶν καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτῶν, οἱ μέλλοντες ἀποκτείνεσθαι ὡς καὶ αὐτοί.
12 [k] Καὶ εἶδον ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν σφραγῖδα τὴν ἕκτην· καὶ ἰδοὺ k Infra 16. 18. Joel 2. 10, 31. & 3. 15. Matt. 24. 29. Acts 2. 20.
σεισμὸς μέγας ἐγένετο· καὶ ὁ ἥλιος ἐγένετο μέλας ὡς σάκκος 13 τρίχινος, καὶ ἡ σελήνη [ὅλη] ἐγένετο ὡς αἷμα, καὶ οἱ ἀστέρες τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἔπεσαν εἰς τὴν γῆν, ὡς συκῆ βάλλει τοὺς ὀλύν-14 θους αὐτῆς ὑπὸ μεγάλου ἀνέμου σειομένη, [l] καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς l Ps. 102. 27. Isa. 34. 4. Heb. 1. 12. infra 16. 20.
ἀπεχωρίσθη ὡς βιβλίον εἰλισσόμενον, καὶ πᾶν ὄρος 15 καὶ νῆσος ἐκ τῶν τόπων αὐτῶν ἐκινήθησαν· [m] καὶ οἱ βασι- m Isa. 2. 19.
λεῖς τῆς γῆς καὶ οἱ μεγιστᾶνες καὶ οἱ χιλίαρχοι, καὶ οἱ πλούσιοι καὶ οἱ * ἰσχυροί, καὶ πᾶς δοῦλος καὶ πᾶς ἐλεύθερος, ἔκρυψαν ἑαυτοὺς εἰς τὰ σπήλαια καὶ εἰς τὰς πέτρας 16 τῶν ὀρέων, [n] καὶ λέγουσι τοῖς ὄρεσι καὶ ταῖς πέτραις· "Πέ- n Isa. 2. 19. Hos. 10. 8. Luke 23. 30. infra 9. 6.
σετε ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ κρύψατε ἡμᾶς ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ καθη-17 μένου ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ὀργῆς τοῦ Ἀρνίου· [o] ὅτι o Isa. 13. 6. Joel 2. 11. Zeph. 1. 14. Ps. 76. 7 ἦλθεν ἡ ἡμέρα ἡ μεγάλη τῆς ὀργῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ τίς δύναται σταθῆναι;"

11. ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς στολὴ λευκή.] Such, instead of the common reading ἐδόθησαν ἑκάστοις στολαὶ λευκαὶ, is the reading of nearly the whole of the MSS. and early Editions, and which has been adopted by all the most eminent Editors. The gift of a white robe was a symbol of Divine acceptance.

— ἕως οὗ πληρωθῶσι.] Render, 'until the number ordained by God be completed, by their fellow-servants being also added to the list of martyrs.' For the common reading πληρώσονται most MSS. have πληρώσωσι, but some, with the Edit. Princ., πληρωθῶσι, which is adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, and Tittman; the other by Griesbach, Matthæi, Vater, and Scholz. The latter would seem preferable; for although the above Critics urge that πληρώσωσι is the more difficult reading, and an uncommon form, yet it may be doubted whether this be really a form at all, or only a mere error of the scribes; for σ and θ are perpetually confounded, both in writing and in pronunciation.

12—17. This sixth seal is generally understood to refer to the downfall of Paganism, and the establishment of Christianity in the reign of Constantine; and thus the earthquake, and other natural commotions and phenomena, as they often denote revolutions and changes of religious systems, so they are here supposed to mark the violent commotions which agitated the empire from the reign of Maximilian to that of Constantine. Dean Woodhouse, however, supposes this vision to relate to the end of the world, and the final triumph of the Gospel over its enemies. Compare Matt. xxiv. 29.

12. σάκκος τρίχινος.] Meaning a sort of coarse hair-cloth of a blackish colour, then in common use. See Matt. xi. 21 and Note.

— ἡ σελήνη.] After this many MSS. have ὅλη, which has been adopted by most Editors, as Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz. But may we not suspect it to have come from the margin?

13. ὡς συκῆ βάλλει τοὺς ὀλύνθους.] A most striking image, and such as attests accurate observation; violent winds shaking off the unripe and late-formed figs in great numbers, though they would otherwise remain for a later gathering.

14. ὁ οὐρανὸς—εἰλισσ.] 'the heaven (i. e. the ethereal, or the firmament,) was parted off, or separated in the midst, and the part removed, as a scroll is rolled up.' So Is. xxxiv. 4, καὶ εἱλιγήσεται ὁ οὐρανὸς ὡς βιβλίον, imitated in the Orac. Sibyll., cited by Heinrichs, ὁπόταν θεὸς αἰθέρι ναίων Οὐρανὸν εἱλίξει, καθάπερ βιβλίον εἰλεῖται.

— ἐκ τῶν τόπων αὐτῶν ἐκινήθησαν.] Heinrichs aptly compares Plin. Epist. vi. 16 (of an earthquake), 'omnia quasi emota sedibus suis.'

15. καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς, &c.] Here are finely described the effects of this catastrophe,—in the vain endeavours to escape the wrath of omnipotence, by persons of whatever rank, from the highest to the lowest,—from those who occupy thrones to those who are in the lowest estate.

— ἔκρυψαν ἑαυτοὺς εἰς τὰ σπήλαια, &c.] Similarly it is said in a passage of Procop. p. 197 (which seems imitated from the present), φημὶ δὲ ὑμῖν ἀφίξεσθαι χρόνον, ἡνίκα ὑπὸ ταῖς ἀκάνθαις βουλόμενοι τὰς κεφαλὰς κρύπτεσθαι, οὐδαμῇ ἕξεται. See also Eurip. Hippol. 285, sqq. For the common reading δυνατοὶ, the most eminent Editors have adopted, on the strongest evidence, external and internal, ἰσχυροί.

a Dan. 7. 2. VII. [a] ΚΑΙ μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον τέσσαρας ἀγγέλους ἑστῶ- 1 τας ἐπὶ τὰς τέσσαρας γωνίας τῆς γῆς, κρατοῦντας τοὺς τέσσαρας ἀνέμους τῆς γῆς, ἵνα μὴ πνέῃ ἄνεμος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς b Infra 14. 1. μήτε ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης, μήτε † ἐπὶ πᾶν δένδρον. [b] Καὶ 2 εἶδον ἄλλον ἄγγελον * ἀναβαίνοντα ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἡλίου, ἔχοντα σφραγῖδα Θεοῦ ζῶντος· καὶ ἔκραξε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ τοῖς τέσσαρσιν ἀγγέλοις οἷς ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς ἀδικῆσαι τὴν γῆν c Supra 6. 6. infra 9. 4. Ezek. 9. 4. καὶ τὴν θάλασσαν, [c] λέγων· "Μὴ ἀδικήσητε τὴν γῆν μήτε 3 τὴν θάλασσαν, μήτε τὰ δένδρα, ἄχρις οὗ σφραγίσωμεν τοὺς d Infra 14. 1. δούλους τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν ἐπὶ τῶν μετώπων αὐτῶν." [d] Καὶ 4 ἤκουσα τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῶν ἐσφραγισμένων, ρμδ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφρα-γισμένοι ἐκ πάσης φυλῆς υἱῶν Ἰσραήλ· ἐκ φυλῆς Ἰούδα, 5 ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Ῥουβὴν, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Γὰδ, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Ἀσὴρ, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Νε- 6 φθαλεὶμ, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Μανασσῆ, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Συμεὼν, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες 7 ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Λευῒ, ιβ΄ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι·

VII. This Chapter is admitted to be a continuation of the preceding vision, and of course is explained according to the view adopted of that. Those who suppose it to have reference to the downfall of Paganism, and the establishment of Christianity, maintain that by the four angels are meant the pretorian prefects appointed by Constantine over the four great provinces; and by the fifth angel, Constantine himself, who had the seal of the living God by being converted to Christianity, and through whom the persecutions against the Church ceased. See Eichhorn, Rosenmuller, and Heinrichs. Others, however, as Dean Woodhouse, assign a more general reference, and suppose that this is a sequel to the preceding, and contains a representation of the gathering of God's elect servants from the wrath to come, and the consequent triumph of men and angels.

1. τὰς τέσσαρας γωνίας τ. γ.] 'the four quarters,' corresponding to the four cardinal points. The ἀγγέλους must be understood according to the general view above adverted to.

— μήτε ἐπὶ πᾶν δένδρον.] This is rendered, 'nor on any tree.' But that would require δένδρου, which is, indeed, found in one MS., but doubtless from emendation. Moreover the sense thus arising is not a little jejune; and as the MSS. of this Book are well known to be very incorrect, I cannot but suspect a corruption, and for ἐπὶ πᾶν I conjecture ἐπισείειν, to stir. Thus the words μήτε—δένδρου will be exegetical of the expression, and be a carrying still further what was said,—namely, that 'there should not be a breath of wind, no not to stir the foliage of a tree.' Similar to the illustration of what is said at Matt. x. 29, of the preservation of the life of man, from that of the sparrows, 'of which not one of them falleth to the ground without the providence of God.' Certainly the error in question might easily arise in ill-written MSS., especially with the abbreviations; for πᾶν is not unlike σείειν written in abbreviation thus, [abbreviation]: for σ and π are often interchanged, as are ει and α, and η and ν, or H and N. If, however, it should be thought, as it may, that ἐπὶ would not be applicable here, and that the genuineness of the πᾶν (for which the τι of many MSS. is manifestly a correction) is attested by its strongly Hebraic character, and a similar use at ix. 4, ἐῤῥέθη αὐταῖς ἵνα μὴ ἀδικήσωσι τὸν χόρτον τῆς γῆς, οὐδὲ πᾶν χλωρὸν, οὐδὲ πᾶν δένδρον, then I would propose, for ἐπὶ, simply to read σείῃ, between which words, in Manuscript abbreviations, the difference is not great. This conjecture is strongly confirmed by what occurs only a few verses before, vi. 13, ὡς συκῆ βάλλει τοὺς ὀλύνθους αὐτῆς, ὑπὸ μεγάλου ἀνέμου σειομένη. We may further observe, that in the imagery of both these passages, there is something truly graphic,—with which similar ones might be adduced from the Classical writers. Suffice it to point out a similar use of σείω in Hesych. in v. συκοφαντῶ, Τῶν τὰ ἀκρόδρυα σειόντων, '[said] of those who shake the fruit-trees,' that the fruit may fall.

2. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῆς ἡλ.] The chief cardinal point, as being that from which the sun rises; insomuch that omens from the East were thought favourable.

3. σφραγίσωμεν.] As denoting that they belonged to God; for, as it is shown by the Commentators, slaves were marked with the mark of their master. Comp. Exod. xii. 7. 13.

4. Here the 144,000 is admitted to be a great and indefinite number, denoting the great numbers of those converted from the Jewish to the Christian faith. The tribe of Dan is omitted for reasons which we can only conjecture; either, it is supposed, from its idolatry, or because it had become extinct. Joseph is here put for Ephraim. Levi is mentioned, because equally participating in the benefits of Christ.

8 ἐκ φυλῆς Ἰσαχὰρ, ιβʹ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Ζαβουλὼν, ιβʹ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Ἰωσὴφ, ιβʹ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι· ἐκ φυλῆς Βενιαμὶν, ιβʹ χιλιάδες ἐσφραγισμένοι.
9 [e] ΜΕΤΑ ταῦτα εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ ὄχλος πολὺς, ὃν ἀριθμῆ- e Supra 3. 5, 18. & 6. 11. infra v. 14.
σαι αὐτὸν οὐδεὶς ἠδύνατο, ἐκ παντὸς ἔθνους καὶ φυλῶν καὶ λαῶν καὶ γλωσσῶν, ἑστῶτες ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου καὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Ἀρνίου, ‡ περιβεβλημένοι στολὰς λευκὰς, καὶ φοίνικες 10 ἐν ταῖς χερσὶν αὐτῶν· [f] καὶ * κράζουσι φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέ- f Ps. 3. 9. Isa. 43. 11. Jer. 3. 23. Hos. 13. 4. γοντες· "Ἡ σωτηρία τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπὶ τοῦ 11 θρόνου καὶ τῷ Ἀρνίῳ!" Καὶ πάντες οἱ ἄγγελοι ἑστήκεσαν κύκλῳ τοῦ θρόνου καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων καὶ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων, καὶ ἔπεσον ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου ἐπὶ * τὰ πρόσωπα 12 αὐτῶν, καὶ προσεκύνησαν τῷ Θεῷ, λέγοντες· "Ἀμήν· ἡ εὐλογία καὶ ἡ δόξα καὶ ἡ σοφία καὶ ἡ εὐχαριστία καὶ ἡ τιμὴ καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ ἰσχὺς τῷ Θεῷ ἡμῶν εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας 13 τῶν αἰώνων! ἀμήν." Καὶ ἀπεκρίθη εἷς ἐκ τῶν πρεσβυτέ-ρων, λέγων μοι· Οὗτοι οἱ περιβεβλημένοι τὰς στολὰς τὰς 14 λευκὰς, τίνες εἰσὶ, καὶ πόθεν ἦλθον; [g] καὶ εἴρηκα αὐτῷ· g Isa. 1. 18. Heb. 9. 14. 1 John 1. 7. supra 1. 5. & 6. 9. infra 17. 6.
Κύριε, σὺ οἶδας. Καὶ εἶπέ μοι· Οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἐρχόμενοι ἐκ τῆς θλίψεως τῆς μεγάλης, καὶ ἔπλυναν τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν 15 καὶ ἐλεύκαναν στολὰς αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ αἵματι τοῦ Ἀρνίου. [h] Διὰ h Isa. 4. 5, 6. Ps. 121. 6.
τοῦτό εἰσιν ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ λατρεύουσιν

9. ὄχλος πολὺς—ἠδύνατο.] Compare 2 Esd. ii. 42. By this ὄχλος some understand the Gentile converts to the Gospel; others, those composing, together with the preceding, the universal and visible Church of Christ; others, again, the spirits of just men made perfect, and received into glory, especially the martyrs and confessors of the primitive Church. By their being clothed in white robes, and having palm branches, are denoted their spiritual victory, justification, and sanctification. For περιβεβλημένοι many MSS. have περιβεβλημένους, which is adopted by Bengel, Wetstein, Matthæi, Griesbach, Vater, and Scholz, who suppose the common reading to have arisen from emendation, to remove the anacoluthon in ἑστῶτες. A principle, however, so far distrusted by Matthæi, that he has, from some MSS., altered ἑστῶτες into ἑστῶτας. Yet that reading seems to have originated in mere emendation, to adapt it to περιβεβλημένους (for otherwise there would be an anomaly of expression unparalleled even in this Book); and I suspect that the ους in περιβεβλημένους arose from blending the end of the word with the beginning of the next. As to the anacoluthon, we are not to bring in irregularities causelessly.

10. ἡ σωτηρία—Ἀρνίῳ!] A sublime chorus of the heavenly host, in which the Article at σωτ. is supposed by Dean Woodhouse to be emphatic,—'the salvation;' but it would rather seem to be used according to that canon of Bp. Middleton (ch. v. § 1), by which abstract nouns (i. e. nouns used in their most abstract sense) take the Article to express that abstraction. And so John iv. 22, ἡ σωτηρία ἐκ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἐστὶν, 'salvation is from the Jews,' and Acts iv. 12, ἐν ἄλλῳ οὐδενὶ ἡ σωτηρία. See also Revel. xii. 10. xix. 1, and compare v. 12.

13—17. Here are described the glory and felicity of the Church.

13. ἀπεκρίθη] 'addressed.' Τίνες εἰσὶ—ἦλθον; A question, as Daubuz observes, not asked for want of knowledge, but in order to excite attention.

14. καὶ ἐλεύκαναν στολὰς αὐτῶν.] The words στολὰς αὐτῶν are in many MSS. not found, while in others αὐτὰς is put instead. The former reading is adopted by Matthæi; the latter, by Griesbach, Tittman, and Scholz. But both classes of Editors are, I apprehend, wrong; since nothing is more obvious than that those two readings are only alterations of the early Critics, attesting the two ways in which those tasteless Aristarchs sought to remove the tautology; which is, however, quite in the manner of the sacred writers, especially in cases where the feelings of the writer are strongly moved, as in the present passage, which may be said to inculcate most forcibly the cardinal doctrine of the Atonement by the blood of Jesus.

15. διὰ τοῦτό εἰσιν ἐνώπιον, &c.] With this I would compare a fine passage in Theocrit. Idyll. xvii. 16—25, containing the ἀποθέωσις of the Ptolemies of Egypt.

αὐτῷ ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς ἐν τῷ ναῷ αὐτοῦ· καὶ ὁ καθήμενος i Ps. 121. 6. Isa. 49. 10. ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου σκηνώσει ἐπ᾽ αὐτούς. [i] Οὐ πεινάσουσιν ἔτι, 16 οὐδὲ διψήσουσιν ἔτι, οὐδὲ μὴ πέσῃ ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς ὁ ἥλιος, οὐδὲ k Ps. 23. 1. Isa. 25. 8. John 10. 11. infra 21. 4. πᾶν καῦμα· [k] ὅτι τὸ Ἀρνίον τὸ ἀνὰ μέσον τοῦ θρόνου 17 ποιμανεῖ αὐτοὺς, καὶ ὁδηγήσει αὐτοὺς ἐπὶ ζώσας πηγὰς ὑδάτων, καὶ ἐξαλείψει ὁ Θεὸς πᾶν δάκρυον * ἐκ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν.

VIII. ΚΑΙ ὅτε ἤνοιξε τὴν σφραγῖδα τὴν ἑβδόμην, 1 a Tob 12. 15. Luke 1. 19. 2 Chron. 29. 25—28. ἐγένετο σιγὴ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ ὡς ἡμιώριον. [a] Καὶ εἶδον τοὺς 2 ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλους, οἳ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἑστήκασι, καὶ ἐδόθη-b Supra 5. 8. & 6. 9. infra 9. 13. & 14. 18. σαν αὐτοῖς ἑπτὰ σάλπιγγες. [b] Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος ἦλθε, 3 καὶ ἐστάθη ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον ἔχων λιβανωτὸν χρυσοῦν· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ θυμιάματα πολλὰ, ἵνα δώσῃ ταῖς προσευ-— λατρεύουσιν — ναῷ αὐτοῦ.] Namely, as priests (see i. 6), though a priesthood far more august than the Levitical. Σκηνώσει ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς, i. e. as Iaspis explains, 'will ever cheer them with his presence, and defend and protect them from harm.' And he compares Num. ix. 18, 22, where σκηνοῦν is, in this sense, interchanged with σκιάζειν. See Ezek. xliii. 9, and infra xxi. 3.

16, 17. The general sentiment here is, that 'they shall be delivered from all the evils and miseries under which they laboured;' and this is expressed by imagery of the most beautiful kind (often found in the Old Test. See Is. xlix. 9, 10. lv. 1. Ps. xxiii. 2), designating both the evils from which they shall be everlastingly delivered, and the positive good in which they shall eternally rest.

16. οὐδὲ μὴ πέσῃ ἐπ᾽ αὐτούς.] Namely, so as to injure them.

17. ζώσας.] The best Editors, from Wetstein to Scholz, all adopt, from several MSS. and the Editio Princeps, and the Vulgate, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions, ζωῆς, but without sufficient reason. The latter reading (as might be expected from the quarter it issues from) is an altered one, while the common reading carries with it the stamp of authenticity in its simplicity, and is supported not only by the bulk of the MSS. and the Pesch. Syr. Version, but also by the passages of Scripture probably in the mind of the writer, Jerem. ii. 13. xvii. 13. Finally, so at John iv. 10 we have ἔδωκεν ἄν σοι ὕδωρ ζῶν.

— ἐξαλείψει ὁ Θεὸς, &c.] So it is finely observed by a heathen writer, εἰ ἕξομεν Κἀκεῖ μερίμνας οἱ θανούμενοι βροτῶν, Οὐκ οἶδ᾽ ὅποι τις τρέψεται· τὸ γὰρ θανεῖν Κακῶν μέγιστον φάρμακον νομίζεται. Eurip. Heracl. 593—6.

VIII. 'Here the writer (after the episode contained in the last Chapter) returns to the subject treated of at ch. vi. and unlooses the seventh and last seal; thus opening out, not an emblematical picture, but the book or roll itself, written on both sides, and filled with matter of the most mournful kind, of which the events are supposed to be already accomplished, and the return itself of the Messiah is regarded as if seen with the eyes.' (Heinrichs.)

The opening of the seventh seal introduces the period of the seven trumpets, which is, like the former, variously viewed by different Commentators, whose expositions are chiefly threefold: 1. That of Grotius, Lightfoot, and Hammond, which supposes these prophecies to have been fulfilled in the Jewish wars, &c., and the destruction of Jerusalem; 2. That of Mede, Bishop Newton, and others; of which see a full detail in Woodhouse. 3. That of Vitringa and some eminent foreign Commentators, adopted by Dean Woodhouse, which distinguishes the prophetic history of the seals from that of the trumpets, the latter not being allowed as a continuation of the former in a regular line of succession. 'The emblems (observes Dean Woodhouse) under the seals are understood to exhibit a general history of the greater changes which were to take place in the world, more especially in the Christian Church, until the end; while those under the trumpets are supposed to foretel and recount the history of the same times, but much more particularly and minutely, and under different characters. The seals foretel the history of the Christian Church; and the first six contain a short, rapid, and general sketch of the progress of Christianity from its first establishment in the world to that time, yet future, when the enemies of Christ shall be separated for punishment, and his faithful servants for heavenly favour and rewards.'

1. ἐγένετο σιγὴ — ἡμιώριον.] This is generally supposed to be an allusion to a ceremony in Jewish worship, of silence for secret prayer, while incense was offered on the golden altar in the Sanctuary. It seems better, however, to suppose the awful silence merely as suspending the gratification of holy curiosity, and as a solemn pause preparatory and introductory to yet more august representations; such as, to use the words of Hor. Od. ii. 13. 29, 'sacro digna silentio,' things not only worthy to be heard in, but to be ushered in by, deep silence.

3. ἄλλος ἄγγελος] i. e. the great Angel of the Covenant, the Lord Jesus, as most Commentators explain. To this, however, well-founded objections have been made by Dean Woodhouse, who supposes that the angel represents the Christian priesthood in general, exercised in subordination to the great High-Priest.

χαῖς τῶν ἁγίων πάντων ἐπὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον τὸ χρυσοῦν τὸ 4 ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου. [c] Καὶ ἀνέβη ὁ καπνὸς τῶν θυμιαμάτων c Ps. 141. 2. Luke 1. 10.
ταῖς προσευχαῖς τῶν ἁγίων ἐκ χειρὸς τοῦ ἀγγέλου ἐνώπιον 5 τοῦ Θεοῦ. καὶ εἴληφεν ὁ ἄγγελος τὸν λιβανωτὸν, καὶ ἐγέ-μισεν αὐτὸν ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ ἐγένοντο φωναὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ ἀστραπαὶ καὶ σεισμός.
6 Καὶ οἱ ἑπτὰ ἄγγελοι οἱ ἔχοντες τὰς ἑπτὰ σάλπιγγας 7 ἡτοίμασαν ἑαυτοὺς ἵνα σαλπίσωσι. [d] Καὶ ὁ πρῶτος [ἄγγελος] d Ezek. 38. 22. Is. 2. 13. infra 9. 4. & 16. 2. ἐσάλπισε, καὶ ἐγένετο χάλαζα καὶ πῦρ μεμιγμένα ἐν αἵματι καὶ ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν γῆν· καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεκάη, καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῶν δένδρων κατεκάη, καὶ πᾶς χόρτος χλωρὸς κατε-8 κάη. [e] Καὶ ὁ δεύτερος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε, καὶ ὡς ὄρος μέγα e Jer. 51. 25. Amos 7. 4. infra 16. 3.
[πυρὶ] καιόμενον ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ ἐγένετο τὸ — ἵνα δώσῃ—ἁγίων] 'that he might give it to the prayers of the saints,' i. e. that he might give the effect of incense to the prayers of the saints. (Vitringa and Burton.) Thus showing, by an expressive emblem, that the prayers of the saints are acceptable to God. Λιβανωτὸν properly signifies frankincense, but here the censer in which it is offered.

5. εἴληφεν—τὸν λιβανωτὸν—καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν γῆν.] This preparatory vision may, with Dean Woodhouse, be supposed to concern the Christian Church, and the burning incense be understood, with him, to denote the Christian worship and religion, pure and heavenly in its origin and nature, but which, being sent down to earth, and mixing with the passions of sinful men, produces signal commotions. It begins in pure incense, which is offered up purely for a time, till, mingling with human corruptions, it becomes the instrument of discord and violence. After this, the general view, are in the sequel of this seal more particularly depicted the heresies and commotions which, under the name of Christianity, afflicted the Christian world, and almost banished from it true religion. The symbolical action of casting the contents of the golden censer upon the earth naturally paves the way for the representation of the effects of the Gospel thus sent, in producing commotions upon earth, agreeably to our Lord's words, Luke xii. 49, πῦρ ἦλθον βαλεῖν εἰς τὴν γῆν, i. e. divisions and discords.

6. On the intent of these trumpets great difference of opinion exists. The best founded view seems to be that of Dean Woodhouse, who supposes them to designate hostile attacks, and thinks that throughout the object is the same—the pure Christian Church, and that the assailants are not only its infidel and acknowledged foes, but also those, its most formidable enemies, who, professing to belong to its body, have taught doctrines, and pursued measures, contrary to its purity, destructive of its peace, and almost of its existence,—the heretics and antichristian corrupters. 'A view (continues he) confirmed by the fact, that in those visions of the trumpets whose meaning can be most accurately ascertained, the Christian Church is evidently the object of assault. Such it is seen to be in the fifth and sixth trumpets, and yet more clearly and confessedly in the seventh, where (xi. 15) upon the angel's sounding, the heavenly voices immediately proclaim the victory, and award the kingdoms of the world to Christ; and that this Church is to partake the happiness and glory of his victory and reign, is apparent from the subsequent song of the elders, and indeed from all holy writ. In this seventh and last conflict the contending powers are fully declared, and we may reasonably suppose them the same in all the stages of the warfare, under the four first trumpets, as well as under the three last.'

7. ἐγένετο—αἵματι.] Compare Isaiah ix. 18, 19. xxix. 17—24. Exod. ix. 23, 24. Ezek. xxvi. 15, 16; whence it is plain that the ἐν has been here rightly inserted, from many MSS. and early Editions, by the most eminent Editors, who also, on the best authority, insert καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατεκάη. The omission, no doubt, arose from the recurrence of κατεκάη. The whole imagery here is such as is often adopted to denote great calamity, as χάλαζα is a symbol of Divine wrath, infra xi. 19. xvi. 21. Εἰς τὴν γῆν, 'upon the land,' as distinguished from the sea at ver. 8. So Dr. Woodhouse, who also takes τὴν γῆν to denote Jewish Christians; and τὴν θάλασσαν at ver. 8, the Gentile Christians. By the trees he understands genuine Christians, many of them (τὸ τρίτον denoting a considerable part) destroyed by the fire of persecution; by the green grass, those Christians who make a fair show, but in time of persecution fall away. Finally, he considers the imagery of the remainder of this Chapter, as symbolically designating the corruptions of the Gospel by heretics, and the darkness and ignorance subsequent to that corruption. It must, however, be confessed that here, at least, the other hypotheses above adverted to are more probable.

8. ὄρος—καιόμενον, &c.] This Heinrichs and Iaspis regard in the same light as that of a star falling into the sea, which was thought an ill omen. Professor Lee supposes the figure to be taken from Jer. li. 25, where it is used of the destruction of the Babylonian empire.

τρίτον τῆς θαλάσσης αἷμα. καὶ ἀπέθανε τὸ τρίτον τῶν 9 κτισμάτων τῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ τὰ ἔχοντα ψυχὰς, καὶ τὸ f Isa. 14. 12. infra 16. 4. τρίτον τῶν πλοίων διεφθάρη. [f] Καὶ ὁ τρίτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλ- 10 πισε, καὶ ἔπεσεν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀστὴρ μέγας καιόμενος ὡς λαμπὰς, καὶ ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τὸ τρίτον τῶν ποταμῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ g Ruth 1. 20. Ex. 15. 23. Jer. 9. 15. τὰς πηγὰς τῶν ὑδάτων. [g] καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ ἀστέρος λέγε- 11 ται ἄψινθος, καὶ γίνεται τὸ τρίτον τῶν ὑδάτων εἰς ἄψιν-θον· καὶ πολλοὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀπέθανον ἐκ τῶν ὑδάτων, ὅτι ἐπικράνθησαν. Καὶ ὁ τέταρτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε, καὶ 12 ἐπλήγη τὸ τρίτον τοῦ ἡλίου καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς σελήνης καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῶν ἀστέρων· ἵνα σκοτισθῇ τὸ τρίτον αὐτῶν, καὶ ἡ ἡμέρα μὴ φαίνῃ τὸ τρίτον αὐτῆς, καὶ ἡ νὺξ ὁμοίως.
Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἤκουσα ἑνὸς * ἀετοῦ πετομένου ἐν μεσουρα- 13 νήματι λέγοντος φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· "Οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ τοῖς κατ-οικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἐκ τῶν λοιπῶν φωνῶν τῆς σάλπιγγος a Luke 8. 31. & 10. 18. infra 17. 8. τῶν τριῶν ἀγγέλων τῶν μελλόντων σαλπίζειν!" IX. [a] Καὶ 1 ὁ πέμπτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε· καὶ εἶδον ἀστέρα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ πεπτωκότα εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἡ κλεὶς τοῦ φρέατος τῆς ἀβύσσου· καὶ ἤνοιξε τὸ φρέαρ τῆς ἀβύσσου· 2 καὶ ἀνέβη καπνὸς ἐκ τοῦ φρέατος ὡς καπνὸς καμίνου μεγά-λης· καὶ ἐσκοτίσθη ὁ ἥλιος καὶ ὁ ἀὴρ ἐκ τοῦ καπνοῦ τοῦ φρέατος. Καὶ ἐκ τοῦ καπνοῦ ἐξῆλθον ἀκρίδες εἰς τὴν γῆν, 3 καὶ ἐδόθη αὐταῖς ἐξουσία, ὡς ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν οἱ σκορπίοι

10, 11. The idea of the falling star seems to be taken from Is. xiv. 12, where the fall of Babylon is predicted; and as Babylon appears in this book to be put for heathen Rome, the fall of the latter is here undoubtedly had in view by the Apocalypse. The star is further called wormwood, to denote, perhaps, the sorrows inflicted by that people, wherever they went. See Ruth, i. 20. Exod. xv. 30. (Lee.)

12. A better comment on this passage than Isaiah viii. 21, 22. ix. 1—7, cannot be given; which is a direct prophecy of these times. Another such prophecy is to be found in Zech. xiv.; and vv. 6, 7, mark out the particulars here mentioned. (Lee.)

13. ἀετοῦ] for ἀγγέλου, ὡς ἀετοῦ, who rent the air like an eagle. The common reading, ἀγγέλου, is plainly from the margin. Dr. Robinson, Lex. in voc., supposes the word to be the symbolical designation of an angel, here and infra xi. 1; and he compares Luke x. 18. Μεσουρανήματι may be rendered, the 'mid-heaven,' or the space between heaven and earth, and answering to the ethereal heaven, or the sky. The word occurs only in the later writers.

— οὐαὶ, οὐαὶ—σαλπίζειν!] The sense may be thus expressed, with Iaspis: 'Ferri adhuc poterant, quæ vidisti, omina; sed tria illa mala, nunc ingruentia, funestissimum afferent exitum.' The exact reference in these woes will be according to the hypothesis adopted; and to any of the above it is very suitable. Dean Woodhouse observes, that under the four first trumpets, which have their beginning from this period, the storm increases; and under the three last, it advances to its maturity, and produces the most special and desolating effects, by three distinct explosions. The three woes correspond to the three last trumpets, which, or the woe-trumpets, are generally regarded as predicting the miserable state of the Church in the dark ages. See also Bp. Newton.

IX. 1. ἀστέρα.] It is generally agreed, that this must denote, agreeably to the symbolical language of prophecy, a teacher, as in viii. 10; and that, no doubt, a false teacher pretending to a Divine Legation. Most Expositors fix on Mahomet; but good reasons are given by Dean Woodhouse why it may be supposed to denote Satan, the instigator to all heresy, and the great Heresiarch. Τοῦ φρέατος τῆς ἀβύσσου means, as Professor Lee explains, the well of the abyss of waters in the bowels of the earth. He also compares Ezek. xxvi. 19, from which he thinks that here by opening the great deep is implied the letting loose of some power to take vengeance similar to that in the passage of the Prophet. The subsequent expressions, καπνὸς, ἐσκοτίσθη, and ἀκρίδες, have all assigned to them, by Woodhouse, a mystical sense. Others, however, take a very different view, according to the hypothesis they adopt. See Pyle and Professor Lee.

3. ὡς ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν οἱ σκορπ.] i. e. power not to kill, but to torture and inflict misery.

4 τῆς γῆς. [b] καὶ ἐῤῥέθη αὐταῖς ἵνα μὴ ἀδικήσωσι τὸν χόρτον b Ezek. 9. 4. supra 6. 6. & 7. 3.
τῆς γῆς, οὐδὲ πᾶν χλωρὸν, οὐδὲ πᾶν δένδρον, εἰ μὴ τοὺς ἀνθρώπους [μόνους], οἵτινες οὐκ ἔχουσι τὴν σφραγῖδα τοῦ 5 Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τῶν μετώπων αὐτῶν. Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐταῖς ἵνα μὴ ἀποκτείνωσιν αὐτοὺς, ἀλλ' ἵνα βασανισθῶσι μῆνας πέντε· καὶ ὁ βασανισμὸς αὐτῶν ὡς βασανισμὸς σκορπίου, ὅταν 6 παίσῃ ἄνθρωπον. [c] Καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις ἐκείναις ζητήσουσιν c Isa. 2. 19. Jer. 8. 3. Hos. 10. 8. Luke 23. 30. supra 6. 16.
οἱ ἄνθρωποι τὸν θάνατον, καὶ * οὐ μὴ εὑρήσουσιν αὐτόν· καὶ ἐπιθυμήσουσιν ἀποθανεῖν, καὶ φεύξεται ὁ θάνατος ἀπ' αὐτῶν.
7 [d] Καὶ τὰ ὁμοιώματα τῶν ἀκρίδων ὅμοια ἵπποις ἡτοιμασμένοις d Exod. 10. 4. Wisd. 16. 9. Joel 2. 4.
εἰς πόλεμον· καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν ὡς στέφανοι ὅμοιοι 8 χρυσῷ, καὶ τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν ὡς πρόσωπα ἀνθρώπων, [e] καὶ e Joel 1. 6. εἶχον τρίχας ὡς τρίχας γυναικῶν, καὶ οἱ ὀδόντες αὐτῶν ὡς 9 λεόντων ἦσαν. καὶ εἶχον θώρακας ὡς θώρακας σιδηροῦς· καὶ ἡ φωνὴ τῶν πτερύγων αὐτῶν ὡς φωνὴ ἁρμάτων ἵππων 10 πολλῶν τρεχόντων εἰς πόλεμον. καὶ ἔχουσιν οὐρὰς ὁμοίας σκορπίοις, καὶ κέντρα ἦν ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν· καὶ ἡ 11 ἐξουσία αὐτῶν ἀδικῆσαι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους μῆνας πέντε. [f] [Καὶ] f Supra v.1. ἔχουσιν ἐφ' αὐτῶν βασιλέα τὸν ἄγγελον τῆς ἀβύσσου, ὄνομα αὐτῷ Ἑβραϊστὶ Ἀβαδδὼν, ‡ καὶ ἐν τῇ Ἑλληνικῇ ὄνομα ἔχει

4. οὐκ ἔχουσι—αὐτῶν.] This must denote true Christians, as opposed to heterodox believers or hypocritical professors.

5. μῆνας πέντε.] With allusion, it is supposed to the very period of existence of these ephemeral creatures, which are hatched in spring, and die at the end of the summer.

6. ζητήσουσι—ἀπ' αὐτῶν.] A very expressive, and, by the parallelism, yet more energetic, mode of expressing an utter weariness of life. Compare Luke xxiii. 29, sq. xxi. 26, and the Classical citations in Wetstein, and Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit. p. 315, fin.

7—10. These figurative locusts are now described, representing a formidable army; compare Joel ii. 4, seqq. The description has many striking points of similarity in the Arabians, who are generally supposed to be here meant; they being always famed for horsemanship. Thus the crowns will correspond to the turbans of that people; and their having the hair of women is explained by the Arabian custom of wearing long hair. By the 'teeth of lions,' they are aptly designated as strong to devour. The breast-plates allude to the scales of the locusts; and the sound of their wings, to the rapidity of their conquests. The description, however, I apprehend, would be quite as applicable to some other Eastern nations as to the Arabians; and certainly there are many characteristics which suit the Zelotæ, according to the hypothesis of many learned Commentators. So Josephus, Bell. Jud. iv. 9. 10, cited by Heinrichs, γυναικιζόμενοι δὲ τὰς ὄψεις, ἐφόνων ταῖς δεξιαῖς· θρυπτόμενοι δὲ τοῖς βαδίσμασιν, ἐπιόντες ἐξαπίνης ἐγένοντο πολεμισταί. There are, Bp. Newton thinks, some things here said in allusion to the properties of natural locusts, which well designate horsemen; their heads resembling a horse's head; whence the Italians call them cavallette. So the army of Thracians, under Sitalces, going to the aid of the Athenians against Macedonia, spoken of by Thucydides, ii. 98, are thus alluded to by Aristoph. Acharn. 137, Ὅσον τὸ χρῆμα παρνόπων προσέρχεται! In either case there is a strong figure, to denote immense multitudes and insatiable rapacity.

9. ἁρμάτων ἵππων πολλῶν] 'chariots of many horses;' i. e. in which are harnessed many horses. A Genitive of consequence. On the thing itself, see Pliny, Hist. Nat. ii. 29.

10. κέντρα ἦν ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς α.] This is meant to show that they were pugnacious, ever ready to hurt as well as to spoil. So Pliny, Hist. xi. 25, cited by Heinrichs, says of scorpions, 'Semper cauda in ictu est, nulloque momento meditari cessat, ne quando desit occasioni.' Ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν, scil. ἦν, τοῦ, &c.; equivalent to ἐδόθη αὐταῖς, supra ver. 5. Thus ἐξουσία is used, as infra ver. 19, of the virtue or power with which nature endues animals

11. 'Αβαδδών.] Hebr. אבדון, literally, the destroyer. There is perhaps allusion to Job xxvi. 6. xxviii. 22. and Prov. xv. 11; for there it is joined with שאול and מות so as to correspond to the Greek 'Αΐδης. It may here designate Satan, as the instigator of heresy. Professor Lee, however, thinks it designates some tremendous earthly power; and, for many reasons which he assigns, that of Rome, comparing Dan. ix. 25.

— ἐν τῇ Ἑλληνικῇ.] For καὶ ἐν many MSS. have ἐν δὲ, which has been adopted by most Editors; but injudiciously; for it has the appearance of being a mere emendation.

g Supra 8. 13. Ἀπολλύων. [g] Ἡ οὐαὶ ἡ μία ἀπῆλθεν· ἰδοὺ, ἔρχονται ἔτι 12 δύο οὐαὶ μετὰ ταῦτα.
Καὶ ὁ ἕκτος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε· καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν μίαν 13 ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων κεράτων τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου τοῦ χρυσοῦ τοῦ h Supra 7. 1. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, [h] λέγουσαν τῷ ἕκτῳ ἀγγέλῳ, ὁ ἔχων τὴν 14 σάλπιγγα· Λῦσον τοὺς τέσσαρας ἀγγέλους τοὺς δεδεμένους ἐπὶ τῷ ποταμῷ τῷ μεγάλῳ Εὐφράτῃ. Καὶ ἐλύθησαν οἱ 15 τέσσαρες ἄγγελοι οἱ ἡτοιμασμένοι εἰς τὴν ὥραν καὶ ἡμέραν καὶ μῆνα καὶ ἐνιαυτὸν, ἵνα ἀποκτείνωσι τὸ τρίτον τῶν ἀν-i Ps. 68. 17. Dan. 7. 10. θρώπων. [i] Καὶ ὁ ἀριθμὸς τῶν στρατευμάτων τοῦ ἱππικοῦ 16 δύο μυριάδες μυριάδων· [καὶ] ἤκουσα τὸν ἀριθμὸν αὐτῶν.
k Isa. 5. 28, 29. 1 Chron. 12. 8. [k] Καὶ οὕτως εἶδον τοὺς ἵππους ἐν τῇ ὁράσει, καὶ τοὺς καθη- 17 μένους ἐπ' αὐτῶν, ἔχοντας θώρακας πυρίνους καὶ ὑακινθίνους καὶ θειώδεις· καὶ αἱ κεφαλαὶ τῶν ἵππων ὡς κεφαλαὶ λεόν-των· καὶ ἐκ τῶν στομάτων αὐτῶν ἐκπορεύεται πῦρ καὶ καπνὸς καὶ θεῖον. * Ἀπὸ τῶν τριῶν τούτων ἀπεκτάνθησαν τὸ 18 τρίτον τῶν ἀνθρώπων, ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς καὶ [ἐκ] τοῦ καπνοῦ καὶ [ἐκ] τοῦ θείου τοῦ ἐκπορευομένου ἐκ τῶν στομάτων αὐτῶν.
* ἡ γὰρ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν * ἐστι, καὶ ἐν 19 ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν· αἱ γὰρ οὐραὶ αὐτῶν ὅμοιαι ὄφεσιν, ἔχουl Lev. 17. 7. Deut. 32. 17. Ps. 106. 37. & 115. 5, &c. & 135. 5. σαι κεφαλὰς, καὶ ἐν αὐταῖς ἀδικοῦσι. [l] Καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ τῶν 20 ἀνθρώπων, οἳ οὐκ ἀπεκτάνθησαν ἐν ταῖς πληγαῖς ταύταις, † οὔτε μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν ἔργων τῶν χειρῶν αὐτῶν, ἵνα μὴ προσκυνήσωσι τὰ δαιμόνια, καὶ τὰ εἴδωλα τὰ χρυσᾶ καὶ τὰ ἀργυρᾶ καὶ τὰ χαλκᾶ, καὶ τὰ λίθινα καὶ τὰ ξύλινα, ἃ οὔτε βλέπειν δύναται, οὔτε ἀκούειν, οὔτε περιπατεῖν· καὶ οὐ 21 μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν φόνων αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῶν φαρμακειῶν αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῆς πορνείας αὐτῶν, οὔτε ἐκ τῶν κλεμμάτων αὐτῶν.

12. ἡ οὐαὶ—ταῦτα.] This is supposed by some to be meant to distinguish the woes, and to suggest that some time will elapse between the first, and the second and third. The words may be regarded, with Heinrichs, as those of the angel exclaiming aloud in the mid-heaven.

13—21. This is by one class of Interpreters referred to the victories of Vespasian; by others, to those of the Mahometans; the first woe being, they think, of the Arabian locusts; and the next, of the Euphratean horsemen. Dean Woodhouse, while he admits that this vision may be fitly applied to the irruption of particular Mahometan nations, yet suggests that the symbols of this vision, although more strictly applicable to the first grand irruption by Mahomet and his Saracens, may not unfitly be so applied as to comprehend them all. Professor Lee, however, refers the idea of the four angels to Dan. vii. 2; and he thinks the angels setting these spirits, or ministers, at liberty, is neither more nor less than an interpretation of the prediction in Daniel. He regards the power spoken of in Dan. vii. 17—26, as beyond all doubt the Roman power.

20, 21. Whatever hypothesis be adopted respecting this vision, it seems evident that these verses designate the state of the Christian world during the period in question, whatever that may be. It seems to mean, that the foregoing plagues of Divine wrath on the corrupt Christian world did not produce reformation; the remnant not abandoning their senseless and idolatrous superstitions, and the vices attendant thereon.

20. οὔτε μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν ἔργων, &c.] For οὔτε, many MSS. and the Editio Princeps, and Arethas and Andreas, have οὐ, which has been adopted by the recent Editors; but injudiciously. I suspect that οὐδὲ ('ne tunc quidem') was written by St. John.

— τὰ δαιμόνια.] Meaning the spirits of departed saints.

21. φόνων.] Namely, of those who opposed their superstitions. By φαρμ. may be meant either exorcisms, or pretended miracles (see Gal.

1 X. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον ἄλλον ἄγγελον ἰσχυρὸν καταβαίνοντα a Matt. 17. 2. supra 1. 15, 16.
ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, περιβεβλημένον νεφέλην· καὶ ἡ ἶρις ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς· καὶ τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ ὡς ὁ ἥλιος, καὶ οἱ 2 πόδες αὐτοῦ ὡς στύλοι πυρός· [b] καὶ ἔχων ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ b Matt. 28. 18.
βιβλαρίδιον ἀνεῳγμένον· καὶ ἔθηκε τὸν πόδα αὐτοῦ τὸν δεξιὸν Amos 1. 2. supra 4. 5. & 8. 5.
3 ἐπὶ * τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸν δὲ εὐώνυμον ἐπὶ * τῆς γῆς· καὶ ἔκραξε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, ὥσπερ λέων μυκᾶται. Καὶ ὅτε ἔκραξεν, 4 ἐλάλησαν [αἱ] ἑπτὰ βρονταὶ τὰς ἑαυτῶν φωνάς. [c] καὶ ὅτε c Dan. 8. 26. & 12. 4, 9. ἐλάλησαν αἱ ἑπτὰ βρονταὶ τὰς φωνὰς ἑαυτῶν, ἔμελλον γράφειν. Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, λέγουσάν [μοι]· Σφράγισον ἃ ἐλάλησαν αἱ ἑπτὰ βρονταὶ, καὶ μὴ ταῦτα γρά-5 ψῃς. [d] Καὶ ὁ ἄγγελος, ὃν εἶδον ἑστῶτα ἐπὶ τῆς θαλάσσης d Dan. 12. 7.
καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ἦρε τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ [τὴν δεξιὰν] εἰς 6 τὸν οὐρανὸν, [e] καὶ ὤμοσεν ἐν τῷ ζῶντι εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν e Infra 16. 17.
αἰώνων, ὃς ἔκτισε τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῷ, καὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ, καὶ τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ, ὅτι 7 χρόνος * οὐκέτι ἔσται· [f] ἀλλὰ ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς φωνῆς f Infra 11. 15.
τοῦ ἑβδόμου ἀγγέλου, ὅταν μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν, καὶ * ἐτελέσθη

v. 20), or the poisoning of their opposers. Πορν. and κλεμμ. may, with Bp. Newton, be understood of the tolerating of public brothels, and of exactions and impositions.

X. 1. ἄγγελον—στύλοι πυρός.] This description was pronounced by Sir William Jones to be 'superior to any thing ever produced by an uninspired writer.' The person described by such sublime imagery has been generally supposed to be either Christ himself, or an emblematical display of his glory. Dean Woodhouse, however, supposes this to be the same kind of Divine messenger as before, but coming with a more dignified commission.

2. βιβλαρίδιον.] It has been not a little debated what portion of the subsequent matter may be supposed to constitute the contents of this book. Mr. Valpy, partly from Woodhouse, supposes it to contain no more than the former part of this Chapter, which is an important appendix to the preceding, as it gives a general account of the state of the Western Church, during the period of the 5th and 6th trumpets. Then the former subject proceeds, the 7th trumpet is sounded, and a compendious view is given of the subsequent events to the end of the world.

— ἔθηκε τὸν πόδα—γῆς.] Namely, to denote his sovereign authority over the whole terraqueous globe; and also to intimate his intention of spreading the Gospel through every part of it. (Scott.)

4. τὰς φωνὰς ἑαυτῶν.] These words,—not found in several ancient MSS., Versions, and Fathers,—have been cancelled by Matthæi, Griesbach, Tittman, Vater, and Scholz; but, I apprehend, wrongly. See Note supra vii. 14.

— σφράγισον ἃ ἐλάλησαν—γράψῃς] i. e. place them among those so sealed by Daniel, viii. 26. xii. 9. (Professor Lee.) Of σφραγ. in this sense, 'to keep silence, to make not known,' an example occurs in Stobæus, Serm. p. 215, Σφράγισον τοὺς μὲν λόγους σιγῇ.

This silence is enjoined, since the prophecies in question were only proper for the knowledge of the Apostle, not for that of the Church. See Abp. Newcome.

5. ἦρε τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ, &c.] A gesture anciently used in swearing. See Gen. xiv. 22.

6. ὅτι χρόνος οὐκέτι ἔσται.] I cannot but entirely agree with Professor Scholefield, that neither the common translation, nor another which has been proposed ('that the time should not be'), gives a satisfactory sense; and that the words ought to be rendered, 'that there should be no more delay;' the scope of the passage being, that without any further delay, upon the sounding of the seventh angel, 'the mystery of God should be finished.' Such, too, is the view of the sense adopted by Heinrichs and Iaspis, meaning (says Professor Lee) that 'that dispensation which was temporal shall now come to a close;' see Deut. xxxii. 40. 43, and compare Dan. xii. 5—7; also supra i. 8, and the passage of Philo, there adduced. Yet this sense of delay cannot, I think, be proved to exist, as they imagine, in the term χρόνος. It would rather seem to rest on the ἔσται, which is probably used provincially for ἔνεσται. So Thucyd. i. 80, εἰ δὲ μελετήσομεν καὶ ἀντιπαρεσκευασόμεθα, χρόνος ἔνεσται, 'time must intervene;' to omit other passages which might be adduced; though it is not improbable that St. John wrote οὐκέτ' ἔνεσται. For the common reading ἔτι οὐκ there is little or no authority; and internal evidence is against it; since it seems to have been an alteration, made to elicit the sense contained in our common Version.

7. καὶ ἐτελέσθη.] Bp. Middleton would here render, 'and [rather than] the mystery of God shall be finished.' This, he shows, is according τό μυστήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ὡς εὐηγγέλισε ‡ τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ ‡ δούλοις τοῖς προφήταις.

g Supra v. 4. [g] Καὶ ἡ φωνὴ ἣν ἤκουσα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, πάλιν λαλοῦσα 8 μετ᾽ ἐμοῦ, καὶ λέγουσα· Ὕπαγε, λάβε τὸ βιβλαρίδιον τὸ ἠνεῳγμένον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τοῦ ἀγγέλου τοῦ ἑστῶτος ἐπὶ τῆς h Ezek. 3. 1—3. & 2. 10. θαλάσσης καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. [h] Καὶ ἀπῆλθον πρὸς τὸν ἄγ- 9 γελον, λέγων αὐτῷ δοῦναί μοι τὸ βιβλαρίδιον. καὶ λέγει μοι· Λάβε καὶ κατάφαγε αὐτό· καὶ πικρανεῖ σου τὴν κοιi Ezek. 3. 3. & 2. 10. λίαν, ἀλλ᾽ ἐν τῷ στόματί σου ἔσται γλυκὺ ὡς μέλι. [i] καὶ 10 ἔλαβον τὸ βιβλαρίδιον ἐκ τῆς χειρὸς τοῦ ἀγγέλου, καὶ κατέφαγον αὐτό· καὶ ἦν ἐν τῷ στόματί μου ὡς μέλι γλυκύ· καὶ ὅτε ἔφαγον αὐτὸ, ἐπικράνθη ἡ κοιλία μου. Καὶ λέγει 11 μοι· Δεῖ σε πάλιν προφητεῦσαι ἐπὶ λαοῖς καὶ ἔθνεσι καὶ γλώσσαις καὶ βασιλεῦσι πολλοῖς.

a Ezek. 40. 3, &c. & 41. & 42. & 43. infra 21. 15. XI. [a] Καὶ ἐδόθη μοι κάλαμος ὅμοιος ῥάβδῳ, [καὶ ὁ 1 ἄγγελος εἱστήκει] λέγων· Ἔγειραι καὶ μέτρησον τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὸ θυσιαστήριον, καὶ τοὺς προσκυνοῦντας ἐν αὐτῷ· b Ezek. 40. 17, 19, 20. infra 13. 5. Ps. 79. 1. Luke 21. 24. [b] καὶ τὴν αὐλὴν τὴν ἔξωθεν τοῦ ναοῦ ἔκβαλε ἔξω, καὶ μὴ αὐτὴν 2 μετρήσῃς, ὅτι ἐδόθη τοῖς ἔθνεσι· καὶ τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγίαν c Infra 20. 4. & 12. 6, 14. πατήσουσι μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα δύο. [c] Καὶ δώσω τοῖς δυσὶ 3 μάρτυσί μου, καὶ προφητεύσουσιν ἡμέρας χιλίας διακοσίας to the Hebrew idiom of giving to a past tense the sense of a Future, when a Vau Conversive. Thus Judges, iv. 8, 'if thou wilt go with me, then I will go,' literally, 'and I went.'

8. ἠνεωγμένον.] Here we have an example of the triple augment in verbs, sometimes found in the later writers. On which see Winer, Gr. Gr., and Alt, Gr. Gr.

9. κατάφαγε αὐτὸ] i. e. 'meditate on and digest its matter,' so as to be able to prophesy still further concerning peoples, &c. The words following denote, that the contents would occasion partly comfort, and partly sorrow,—meaning (in the words of Professor Lee) that 'it shall give pleasure, peace, and blessedness to the believer in its declarations; but, as to its trials, it foretels them as bitter things indeed; many of them shall be slain, and otherwise tried.' See Jer. xv. 16—18. Ezek. ii. 8—10. iii. 1—3. 14.

XI. 1—14. On these verses there has been much debate; some supposing them to be the contents of the little book; others, to contain prophecies of events in the Christian Church under the 6th trumpet, which were posterior to the taking of Constantinople; others, again, regard them as a symbolical declaration of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem. All, however, are agreed that the symbolical representation in question is formed on what is found in Ezek. xl.—xliv.

1. λέγων.] Before this word the common text has καὶ ὁ ἄγγελος εἱστήκει, which, however, are found in very few MSS., and were evidently supplied to furnish a Nominative case to λέγων; though, as Dean Woodhouse truly observes, it does not require one, since we may refer it either to 'the mighty angel' who gave to St. John the little book, or to 'the voice from heaven,' by which he had been called and directed in the last chapter.

—τὸν ναὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ.] Meaning 'the Church,' or body of true believers, as Dr. Woodhouse explains. Others, however, interpret differently, according to the particular hypothesis adopted by them.

2. ἔκβαλε ἔξω] i. e. 'put out of your measurement, take no account of it.' Τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἁγ., i. e. the Christian Church. Πατήσουσι. Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Burton object to our common Version, 'they shall tread under foot,' and take the sense to be, 'shall walk in,' or frequent, as Isaiah i. 12, compared with Ps. xlv. 4. But the most learned Commentators (and recently Heinrichs and Iaspis) take πατ. for καταπατ. or ὑβρίσουσι, as did our Translators; which interpretation is confirmed by the Peschito Syriac ܢܕܘܫܘܢ, trample under foot; the very same expression as that used by the same Translator at Matt. vii. 6, of the trampling under foot of the pearls by the swine. The word is used of what is overturned and destroyed in wars and tumults (see Luke xxi. 24. 1 Macc. iv. 60); also of the profanation of things sacred, as 1 Macc. iii. 45, and Dan. viii. 13. ix. 27.

3. τοῖς δυσὶ μάρτ. μου] Namely, as the early Commentators supposed, Enoch and Elias. The general opinion, however, is now, that this does not relate to two particular persons, but to all 4 ἑξήκοντα περιβεβλημένοι σάκκους. [d] Οὗτοί εἰσιν αἱ δύο ἐλαῖαι d Zech. 4. 2, 3, 11, 14.

καὶ αἱ δύο λυχνίαι αἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ * Κυρίου τῆς γῆς ἑστῶσαι.
5 Καὶ εἴ τις αὐτοὺς θέλει ἀδικῆσαι, πῦρ ἐκπορεύεται ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτῶν, καὶ κατεσθίει τοὺς ἐχθροὺς αὐτῶν· καὶ εἴ τις αὐτοὺς θέλει ἀδικῆσαι, οὕτω δεῖ αὐτὸν ἀποκτανθῆναι.
6 [e] Οὗτοι ἔχουσιν ἐξουσίαν κλεῖσαι τὸν οὐρανὸν, ἵνα μὴ ὑετὸς e Exod. 7. & 8. & 9.
βρέχῃ ἐν ἡμέραις αὐτῶν τῆς προφητείας· καὶ ἐξουσίαν & 10. & 12. 1 Kings 17. 1. ἔχουσιν ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων στρέφειν αὐτὰ εἰς αἷμα, καὶ πατάξαι 7 τὴν γῆν πάσῃ πληγῇ ὁσάκις ἐὰν θελήσωσι. [f] Καὶ ὅταν f Dan. 7. 21. infra 13. 1, τελέσωσι τὴν μαρτυρίαν αὐτῶν, τὸ θηρίον τὸ ἀναβαῖνον ἐκ 7, 11. & 17. 8.
τῆς ἀβύσσου ποιήσει πόλεμον μετ᾿ αὐτῶν, καὶ νικήσει αὐτοὺς 8 καὶ ἀποκτενεῖ αὐτούς. [g] Καὶ τὰ πτώματα αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῆς g Infra 17. 2, 5. πλατείας τῆς πόλεως τῆς μεγάλης, ἥτις καλεῖται πνευμα- & 18. 10.
τικῶς Σόδομα καὶ Αἴγυπτος, ὅπου καὶ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν ἐσταυ-9 ρώθη. Καὶ βλέπουσιν ἐκ τῶν λαῶν καὶ φυλῶν καὶ γλωσσῶν καὶ ἐθνῶν * τὸ πτῶμα αὐτῶν ἡμέρας τρεῖς καὶ ἥμισυ, καὶ 10 τὰ πτώματα αὐτῶν οὐκ ἀφήσουσι τεθῆναι εἰς * μνῆμα. Καὶ οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς ‡ χαροῦσιν ἐπ᾿ αὐτοῖς καὶ εὐφρανθήσονται· καὶ δῶρα πέμψουσιν ἀλλήλοις, ὅτι οὗτοι οἱ δύο προφῆται ἐβασάνισαν τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐπὶ τῆς 11 γῆς. Καὶ μετὰ τὰς τρεῖς ἡμέρας καὶ ἥμισυ πνεῦμα ζωῆς ἐκ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰσῆλθεν ἐπ᾿ αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἔστησαν ἐπὶ τοὺς who testify to the truth, i. e. profess a pure religion during the period in question, supposed to be the middle ages. Yet see Professor Lee. Περιβεβ. σάκκους. More Prophetico. See Heinrichs. Δώσω τοῖς δυσὶ—καὶ προφητ. is Hebrew-Greek for δώσω τοῖς—ἵνα προφητ.

4. αἱ δύο ἐλαῖαι.] By these some suppose Zerubbabel and Joshua to be denoted; others, Enoch and Elias. Professor Lee understands the Law and the Gospel.

— αἱ δύο λυχνίαι] which being fed by the oil of the olive-trees gave a constant light. (Newcome.)

6. οὗτοι ἔχουσιν—οὐρανόν.] The best Expositors are agreed that by this is figuratively denoted, that their prayers will bring down judgments on their persecutors; and, generally, that they will have as great an influence in heaven, as the most eminent of the prophets had on earth. See 1 Kings xvii. 1, and xviii. 1.

7. ὅταν τελέσωσι τὴν μαρτυρίαν] i. e. when this succession of witnesses shall have continued as long as the Providence of God may think fit. (Newcome.) When they shall have given their testimony completely; i. e. shall have called in the remnant of Israel, and vast numbers from among the heathen. (Lee.) By the Beast here mentioned the ancient and some eminent modern Commentators (including Professor Lee) understand the Roman power (alluded to by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 4), and the persecution by which the saints shall be brought so near to utter destruction (being considered dead, though not actually buried), to be the tenth and last general persecution, 'which (says the author of the Universal History, vol. xv. p. 502) broke out A. D. 303, and raged ten whole years with a fury hardly to be expressed; and in which such numbers of Christians suffered death in all the provinces, that the tyrants, imagining they had compassed their wicked intent, and entirely abolished Christianity, told the world in a pompous, but lying inscription, that they had extinguished the Christian name and superstition, and every where restored the worship of the gods to its former purity and lustre.'

8. τὰ πτώματα αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τῆς πλατ. τ. πόλ.] An example of the greatest brutality and indignity. Καλεῖται πνευμ., 'is mystically called.' So πνευματικὸν at 1 Pet. ii. 5. Σόδ. καὶ Αἰγ. Both are fit emblems; the former of lewdness, the latter of intemperance.

9—13. On the prophetical sense of these verses, see Dean Woodhouse and Mr. Scott.

10. δῶρα πέμψ. ἀλλ.] A custom of expressing great joy; see Esth. ix. 22, from which this expression seems taken. 'Εβασάνισαν, viz., by drawing God's judgments on them, vv. 5, 6. Some suppose an allusion to 1 Kings xviii. 17. (Newcome.) On the events which were to take place after the 1268 days, as stated in vv. 7—13, interpreters are by no means agreed. With the accomplishment of these the 2nd woe-trumpet terminates; and the 7th trumpet, or the 3d woe-trumpet, begins to sound, as described in vv. 14—18. On the purport, however, of these, equal diversity of opinion exists. It would seem, as Dr. Burton supposes, that they refer to a future extension of the Gospel.

πόδας αὐτῶν, καὶ φόβος μέγας ἔπεσεν ἐπὶ τοὺς θεωροῦντας αὐτούς. Καὶ ἤκουσαν φωνὴν μεγάλην ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λέ- 12 γουσαν αὐτοῖς· Ἀνάβητε ὧδε! καὶ ἀνέβησαν εἰς τὸν οὐρανὸν ἐν τῇ νεφέλῃ, καὶ ἐθεώρησαν αὐτοὺς οἱ ἐχθροὶ αὐτῶν.
Καὶ ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ὥρᾳ ἐγένετο σεισμὸς μέγας, καὶ τὸ δέκα- 13 τον τῆς πόλεως ἔπεσε, καὶ ἀπεκτάνθησαν ἐν τῷ σεισμῷ ὀνόματα ἀνθρώπων χιλιάδες ἑπτά· καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἔμφοβοι h Supra 8. 13. & 9. 12. infra 15. 1. ἐγένοντο, καὶ ἔδωκαν δόξαν τῷ Θεῷ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ. [h] Ἡ 14 οὐαὶ ἡ δευτέρα ἀπῆλθεν· ἰδού, ἡ οὐαὶ ἡ τρίτη ἔρχεται ταχύ.
i Supra 10. 7. [i] Καὶ ὁ ἕβδομος ἄγγελος ἐσάλπισε· καὶ ἐγένοντο φωναὶ 15 μεγάλαι ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, * λέγοντες· Ἐγένοντο αἱ βασιλεῖαι τοῦ κόσμου, τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ, καὶ k Supra 4. 4, 10. & 5. 8. βασιλεύσει εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! [k] Καὶ οἱ εἴκοσι 16 [καὶ] τέσσαρες πρεσβύτεροι οἱ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καθήμενοι ἐπὶ τοὺς θρόνους αὐτῶν, ἔπεσαν ἐπὶ τὰ πρόσωπα αὐτῶν, καὶ l Supra 1. 4, 8. infra 16. 5. & 19. 6. προσεκύνησαν τῷ Θεῷ, [l] λέγοντες· Εὐχαριστοῦμέν σοι, 17 Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ, ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν [καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος]· ὅτι εἴληφας τὴν δύναμίν σου τὴν μεγάλην καὶ ἐβασίλευσας! Καὶ τὰ ἔθνη ὠργίσθησαν, καὶ ἦλθεν ἡ ὀργή σου, 18 καὶ ὁ καιρὸς τῶν νεκρῶν κριθῆναι, καὶ δοῦναι τὸν μισθὸν τοῖς δούλοις σου τοῖς προφήταις καὶ τοῖς ἁγίοις, καὶ τοῖς φοβουμένοις τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς μικροῖς καὶ τοῖς μεγάλοις, καὶ διαφθεῖραι τοὺς διαφθείροντας τὴν γῆν.
m Infra 15. 5. [m] ΚΑΙ ἠνοίγη ὁ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, καὶ ὤφθη 19 ἡ κιβωτὸς τῆς διαθήκης τοῦ Κυρίου ἐν τῷ ναῷ αὐτοῦ· καὶ ἐγένοντο ἀστραπαὶ καὶ φωναὶ καὶ βρονταὶ καὶ σεισμὸς καὶ χάλαζα μεγάλη. XII. Καὶ σημεῖον μέγα ὤφθη ἐν τῷ 1 οὐρανῷ· γυνὴ περιβεβλημένη τὸν ἥλιον, καὶ ἡ σελήνη

17. εἴληφας τὴν δύν.] 'thou hast taken to thee this great strength.' So Isaiah li. 9, ἐνδύσας τὴν ἰσχὺν τοῦ βραχίονός σου.

18. ὠργίσθησαν] 'they were rebellious and contumacious.' Ps. xcviii. 1, Sept. Ἦλθεν ἡ ὀργή σου, &c. Supply ἐπ' αὐτά. The imagery seems derived from Ps. ii. 2, seqq., applied in a similar manner at Acts iv. 25, seqq. It is well observed by Heinrichs that the σου is emphatical; q. d. 'ultionem meditatus est Jova, et ejus ὀργὴ contra illorum ὀργὴν insurrexit, per paronomasiam, ut infra διαφθεῖραι τοὺς διαφθ.' In the words following, the construction is harsh, and the mode of expression obscurely brief. The sense, when fully evolved, will be as follows: καιρός ἐστι, νεκροῖς μὲν (δούλοις σου) τοῦ κριθῆναι, σοὶ δὲ, ὁ Θεός, καιρός ἐστι τοῦ δοῦναι τὸν μισθὸν αὐτοῖς, καὶ σοί ἐστι καιρὸς τοῦ διαφθεῖραι τοὺς διαφθείροντας. It is not clear whether διαφθείροντας is to be taken of destruction by wars and persecutions, or figuratively, of corrupting by false doctrines and evil examples.

XII. 1. With this ought to have been joined the 19th verse of the preceding Chapter, as being introductory of a new subject, 'containing (observes Prof. Lee) another exhibition of the difficulties, judgment, &c., attendant on the propagation of the Gospel.' Of that verse the first clause probably has reference to a Jewish opinion, as to what should take place at the coming of the Messiah; but the sentiment (expressed graphically) is this,—that 'now there is an universal access to the favour of God, and the highest rewards in heaven await the pious worshippers of Him.' In the second clause the purport of the sublime imagery introduced is not clear. See Bp. Newton.

— περιβεβλημένη τὸν ἥλιον—δώδεκα.] By γυνὴ some suppose to be meant the Jewish Church; but it would rather seem to be, as others think, the Christian Church, whose heavenly origin is designated by the sublimely figurative phraseology subjoined, which is supposed to be derived from Gen. xxxvii. 9; see Reiff on Artemid. iv. 49, No. 1, and Gal. iv. 19. Or these emblems ὑποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν αὐτῆς, καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτῆς 2 στέφανος ἀστέρων δώδεκα· καὶ ἐν γαστρὶ ἔχουσα κράζει 3 ὠδίνουσα καὶ βασανιζομένη τεκεῖν. Καὶ ὤφθη ἄλλο σημεῖον ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· καὶ ἰδοὺ δράκων μέγας πυῤῥὸς, ἔχων κε-φαλὰς ἑπτὰ καὶ κέρατα δέκα, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτοῦ 4 διαδήματα ἑπτά· καὶ ἡ οὐρὰ αὐτοῦ σύρει τὸ τρίτον τῶν ἀστέρων τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ ἔβαλεν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὴν γῆν. Καὶ ὁ δράκων ἕστηκεν ἐνώπιον τῆς γυναικὸς τῆς μελλούσης 5 τεκεῖν· ἵνα, ὅταν τέκῃ, τὸ τέκνον αὐτῆς καταφάγῃ. [a] Καὶ a Ps. 2. 9. supra 2. 27. infra 19. 15.

ἔτεκεν υἱὸν ἄῤῥενα, ὃς μέλλει ποιμαίνειν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη ἐν ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ· καὶ ἡρπάσθη τὸ τέκνον αὐτῆς πρὸς τὸν 6 Θεὸν καὶ πρὸς τὸν θρόνον αὐτοῦ. [b] Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἔφυγεν εἰς b Supra 11. 3.
τὴν ἔρημον, ὅπου ἔχει ἐκεῖ τόπον ἡτοιμασμένον ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἵνα ἐκεῖ τρέφωσιν αὐτὴν, ἡμέρας χιλίας διακοσίας ἑξήκοντα.
7 [c] Καὶ ἐγένετο πόλεμος ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· ὁ Μιχαὴλ καὶ οἱ c Dan. 10. 13, 21. & 12. 1. Jude 9. ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ ‡ ἐπολέμησαν κατὰ τοῦ δράκοντος, καὶ ὁ 8 δράκων ἐπολέμησε καὶ οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ· [d] καὶ οὐκ ἴσχυσαν, d Dan. 2. 35.
9 οὐδὲ τόπος εὑρέθη αὐτῶν ἔτι ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. [e] Καὶ ἐβλήθη e Gen. 3. 1, 4. Luke 10. 18. John 12. 31. 1 Cor. 11. 3. infra 20. 2.
ὁ δράκων ὁ μέγας, ὁ ὄφις ὁ ἀρχαῖος, ὁ καλούμενος Διάβολος, καὶ ὁ Σατανᾶς, ὁ πλανῶν τὴν οἰκουμένην ὅλην, ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν γῆν, καὶ οἱ ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ μετ' αὐτοῦ may, as Abp. Newcome thinks, denote the light of truth, the subjection of all sublunary things, and a bright and everlasting crown. The twelve stars are, with reason, thought to have a reference to the twelve Apostles, xxi. 14.

2. ὠδίνουσα.] The Church may be viewed from its first beginning, when the promise of a Redeemer was given to our first parents; and the expectation of this promise being fulfilled is expressed in this verse. See Micah v. 3. Rom. viii. 22. (Woodhouse and Burton.)

3. ἔχων κεφαλὰς—διαδήματα.] All meant to suggest mighty power among the kingdoms of the earth.

4. In ἡ οὐρὰ αὐτοῦ σύρει—οὐρανοῦ there seems to be an allusion to the notion of a comet proceeding across the heaven. Ἵνα καταφάγῃ, 'that he may utterly destroy.'

5. ποιμαίνειν—ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ] i. e. finally subdue all her enemies, on some of whom God will execute signal vengeance. (Newcome.)

6. ἔφυγεν εἰς τὴν ἔρ.] A circumstance supposed to be derived from the flight of the Virgin Mary into Egypt with the infant Jesus. The mystical sense is disputed. But, after all, Professor Lee may be nearest the truth in supposing 'nothing more to be meant than God's faithfulness in never losing sight of his promise.'

7—9. We have here a visionary scene presented to the mind of St. John, of which the allegory is variously interpreted; but perhaps best by Mede, Newton, Newcome, and Bp. Horsley, as representing the vehement struggles between Christianity and Paganism during the first ages of the Gospel. 'The angels (observes Bp. Horsley) of the two opposite armies represent, in a figurative description, two opposite parties in the Roman State, at the time which the vision more particularly regards. Michael's angels are the party who espoused the side of the Christian religion, the friends of which had, for many years, been numerous, and became very powerful under Constantine: the dragon's angels are the party which endeavoured to support the old idolatry.' Dr. Burton, however, renders καὶ ἐγένετο πόλ., 'Now there had been war;' and thinks that vv. 7—13 are parenthetical, and relate to an event prior to that in the preceding verses. 'It accounts (he says) for the hostility of Satan to the Church of Christ.' In this view I am inclined to acquiesce, and have divided accordingly.

For ἐπολέμησαν several MSS. have πολεμῆσαι, which has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz; but without reason; for σαι and σαν are so nearly alike in MSS. as scarcely to be distinguished; and the ε is often faintly visible. And when once πολεμῆσαι had crept in, τοῦ would easily arise from του preceding. Supposing the latter reading to be genuine, there will be an ellipsis of ἦσαν, and we may render, 'were at war.' Yet even this, when compared with the context, involves a harshness perhaps unprecedented in any writer.

9. καὶ ἐβλήθη, &c.] An animated symbolical representation of the complete victory of Christianity over Heathenism.

f Job 1. 9. & 2. 5. Zech. 3. 1. supra 11. 15.

ἐβλήθησαν. [f] Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνὴν μεγάλην ‡ λέγουσαν ἐν 10 τῷ οὐρανῷ· Ἄρτι ἐγένετο ἡ σωτηρία καὶ ἡ δύναμις καὶ ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, καὶ ἡ ἐξουσία τοῦ Χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ! ὅτι κατεβλήθη ὁ κατήγορος τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἡμῶν, ὁ κατηγορῶν αὐτῶν ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν ἡμέρας καὶ νυ-

g Rom. 8. 33, 34, 37. & 16. 20.

κτός. [g] καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐνίκησαν αὐτὸν διὰ τὸ αἷμα τοῦ Ἀρνίου 11 καὶ διὰ τὸν λόγον τῆς μαρτυρίας αὐτῶν· καὶ οὐκ ἠγάπησαν h Ps. 96. 11. Isa. 49. 13. supra 8. 13.

τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτῶν ἄχρι θανάτου. [h] Διὰ τοῦτο εὐφραίνεσθε 12 οἱ οὐρανοὶ καὶ οἱ ἐν αὐτοῖς σκηνοῦντες. οὐαὶ [τοῖς κατοι-κοῦσι] τῇ γῇ καὶ τῇ θαλάσσῃ! ὅτι κατέβη ὁ Διάβολος πρὸς ὑμᾶς ἔχων θυμὸν μέγαν, εἰδὼς ὅτι ὀλίγον καιρὸν ἔχει. Καὶ 13 ὅτε εἶδεν ὁ δράκων, ὅτι ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν γῆν, ἐδίωξε τὴν γυναῖκα ἥτις ἔτεκε τὸν ἄρρενα.

i Dan. 7. 25. & 12. 7. supra v. 6.

[i] Καὶ ἐδόθησαν τῇ γυναικὶ δύο πτέρυγες τοῦ ἀετοῦ τοῦ 14 μεγάλου, ἵνα πέτηται εἰς τὴν ἔρημον εἰς τὸν τόπον αὐτῆς, ὅπου τρέφεται ἐκεῖ καιρὸν καὶ καιροὺς, καὶ ἥμισυ καιροῦ, ἀπὸ προσώπου τοῦ ὄφεως. Καὶ ἔβαλεν ὁ ὄφις ‡ ὀπίσω 15 τῆς γυναικὸς ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ ὕδωρ ὡς ποταμὸν, ἵνα ταύτην ποταμοφόρητον ποιήσῃ. καὶ ἐβοήθησεν ἡ γῆ 16 τῇ γυναικί· καὶ ἤνοιξεν ἡ γῆ τὸ στόμα αὐτῆς καὶ κατέπιε τὸν ποταμὸν ὃν ἔβαλεν ὁ δράκων ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ.

k 1 John 5. 10.

[k] Καὶ ὠργίσθη ὁ δράκων ἐπὶ τῇ γυναικὶ, καὶ ἀπῆλθε ποιῆσαι 17 πόλεμον μετὰ τῶν λοιπῶν τοῦ σπέρματος αὐτῆς, τῶν τηρούντων τὰς ἐντολὰς τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἐχόντων τὴν μαρτυρίαν [τοῦ] Ἰησοῦ [Χριστοῦ].

10. ὁ κατήγορος τῶν ἀδ. ἡ.] See James ii. 7, and Notes. For κατήγορος the Alexandrian MS. has κατήγωρ, which is edited by Griesbach, Knapp, and Scholz; but rashly; for though it may seem more likely to be true, as presenting a very uncommon form, yet the vast preponderance of external evidence (namely, that of all the other MSS.) must forbid its being received. Besides, internal evidence may be urged for κατήγορος; since it is not improbable, that in the MS. from which the Alexandrian was transcribed, the termination had been inadvertently omitted, or was faded away, or eaten away by a worm. I have myself observed in the Cambridge MSS. of Thucydides, which I have collated, that sometimes the terminations of words, often expressed above the last letter of the syllable preceding, have been omitted through inadvertence, or because not found in the original. Besides, the anomalies in this book are not so much in the forms of words, as in their constructions. I must not omit to observe, that as to Griesbach and Matthæi's cancelling the κατ in κατεβλήθη, it might arise from the κατ following; but it is probably genuine; and the writer, as he is in other places antithetical, so here he seems to have intended a paronomasia between κατεβλήθη and κατήγορος. So St. Paul (Acts xxiii. 3), on the High Priest's ordering his apparitors to 'smite him on the mouth,' says, 'God shall smite thee, thou whited wall.'

11. οὐκ ἠγάπησαν τὴν ψυχὴν α. ἄ. θ.] The phraseology is Hebraic, and obscure from brevity. The sense is, 'they were careless of life, even unto hazarding death.' Bp. Middleton cannot imagine why our Translators used the uncouth phrase, 'unto the death,' especially as they were not led to it by the original. Had the learned Prelate been as conversant with our old English authors as he was with the Classical writers, he would have been at no loss to see why the Article should here have been used. It was an idiom in frequent use in the time of Tyndal, from whom our Translators derived it. So Hackluyt says, of Chancellor's voyage to Russia, and the attempt to bring about a commercial treaty with Great Britain, 'he resolved either to bring that to passe, or els to die the death.'

15—17. Of these verses (which have been variously interpreted) the sense seems simply to be, that 'The enemies of unadulterated Christian truth took different ways to subdue it; and particularly by endeavouring to, as it were, drown it by a flood of opposition and persecution, direct and indirect. But God raised up, from time to time, many who supported the faithful disciples of Christ.'

18 Καὶ ἐστάθην ἐπὶ τὴν ἄμμον τῆς θαλάσσης· XIII. [a] καὶ a Dan. 7. 7. infra 17. 3. 9, 12.
εἶδον ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης θηρίον ἀναβαῖνον, ἔχον κεφαλὰς ἑπτὰ καὶ κέρατα δέκα, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν κεράτων αὐτοῦ δέκα διαδήματα, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτοῦ ὄνομα βλασφημίας.
2 [b] Καὶ τὸ θηρίον ὃ εἶδον, ἦν ὅμοιον παρδάλει, καὶ οἱ πόδες b Supra 12. 9.
αὐτοῦ ὡς ‡ ἄρκτου, καὶ τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ ὡς στόμα λέοντος.
καὶ ἔδωκεν αὐτῷ ὁ δράκων τὴν δύναμιν αὐτοῦ καὶ τὸν θρόνον 3 αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐξουσίαν μεγάλην. [c] Καὶ [εἶδον] μίαν τῶν κεφα- c Infra 17. 8.
λῶν αὐτοῦ ὡς ἐσφαγμένην εἰς θάνατον· καὶ ἡ πληγὴ τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ ἐθεραπεύθη. Καὶ ἐθαύμασεν ὅλη ἡ γῆ 4 ὀπίσω τοῦ θηρίου, [d] καὶ προσεκύνησαν * τῷ δράκοντι, ὅτι d Infra 18. 18.
ἔδωκεν ἐξουσίαν τῷ θηρίῳ, καὶ προσεκύνησαν * τῷ θηρίῳ, λέγοντες· Τίς ὅμοιος τῷ θηρίῳ; τίς δύναται πολεμῆσαι 5 μετ' αὐτοῦ; [e] Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ στόμα λαλοῦν μεγάλα καὶ e Dan. 7. 8, 11. & 11. 36.
βλασφημίας· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἐξουσία [πόλεμον] ποιῆσαι supra 11. 2, 9.
6 μῆνας τεσσαράκοντα δύο. καὶ ἤνοιξε τὸ στόμα αὐτοῦ εἰς βλασφημίαν πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, βλασφημῆσαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν σκηνὴν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τοὺς ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ σκηνοῦντας.
7 [f] Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ πόλεμον ποιῆσαι μετὰ τῶν ἁγίων καὶ f Dan. 7. 21. supra 11. 7.
νικῆσαι αὐτούς· καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ἐξουσία ἐπὶ πᾶσαν φυλὴν καὶ λαὸν καὶ γλῶσσαν καὶ ἔθνος.
8 [g] Καὶ προσκυνήσουσιν ‡ αὐτῷ πάντες οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ g Exod. 32, 33. Philip. 4 3. τῆς γῆς, ὧν οὐ γέγραπται * τὸ * ὄνομα ἐν τῇ βίβλῳ τῆς supra 3. 5. infra 17. 8.
ζωῆς τοῦ Ἀρνίου [τοῦ] ἐσφαγμένου ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου. & 20. 12. & 21. 27.

XIII. On the contents of this and the next Chapter, considerable diversity of opinion exists; especially as to the explanation of particular symbols, and their application to particular events. The best Expositors, however, are in general agreed that there is a reference to Papal Rome and the Papal religion, as opposed to the pure Church of Christ. The reader is here referred to Professor Lee's remarks on this Chapter, who adduces reasons for regarding it as 'a recital of the attacks to be made upon the Church and people of God by Daniel's fourth monarchy.' The beast rising out of the sea, he thinks, beyond all doubt, nothing more than Daniel's fourth beast, vii. 7; see also viii. 25. xi. 36—38.—Of course, he understands the whole of the Roman power, civil and religious, as associated to destroy Christianity.

1. ὄνομα.] For this many MSS. have ὀνόματα, which has been edited by Griesbach, Matthæi, and Scholz, and is supported by the use of the plural in a similar passage infra xvii. 3, θηρίον—γέμον ὀνομάτων βλασφημίας, ἔχον κεφαλὰς ἑπτὰ καὶ κέρατα δέκα. But the singular is sufficiently defended by another passage, xvii. 5, καὶ (ἔχον) ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον αὐτῆς ὄνομα γεγραμμένον· Μυστήριον. The above reading doubtless arose from the alteration of certain Critics, who thought the plural necessary, on account of κεφαλάς. Such, however, is not the case; the sense intended being, that 'on each of these heads was written the name blasphemy.'

3. ἐθαύμασε—θηρίου.] Here we have a blending of two forms of expression; the full sense being, 'the whole world surveyed the beast with admiration, and went after him.' So John xii. 19, ὁ κόσμος [ὅλος, added in many MSS. and Versions,] ὀπίσω αὐτοῦ ἀπῆλθεν.

For ὅτι many MSS. have ὃς, which has been edited by Matthæi, Griesbach, and Scholz. I have thought proper to retain the common reading; the other being evidently a mere alteration, to obtain an easier sense.

5. πόλεμον ποιῆσαι.] The recent Editors all cancel πόλεμον, on the authority of several MSS., but without sufficient reason; and the sense thus arising is so crippled, that we cannot reasonably suppose it the sense intended by the writer. We have here, I suspect, an accidental omission, occasioned by the existence, in some ancient MSS., of two readings,—πόλεμον ποιῆσαι, and ποιῆσαι πόλεμον,—as at ver. 7. Now, as the librarii could not well tell where to place it, the scribes chose to place it no where.

6. ἤνοιξε τὸ στόμα α. εἰς βλασφ.] Namely, for the utterance of blasphemy. See Note on Acts vi. 11, and infra xvi. 9; and on σκην. in the sense 'dwelling,' see my Note on Thucyd. i. 89, 8.

8. καὶ προσκυνήσουσιν αὐτῷ, &c.] Meaning, that 'the world shall be divided between his kingdom and that of Christ, the names of whose h Supra 2. 7. i Gen. 9. 6. Isa. 33. 1. Matt. 26. 52. infra 14. 12.

[h] Εἴ τις ἔχει οὖς, ἀκουσάτω. [i] Εἴ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν συνάγει, 9,10 εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὑπάγει· εἴ τις ἐν μαχαίρᾳ ἀποκτενεῖ, δεῖ αὐτὸν ἐν μαχαίρᾳ ἀποκτανθῆναι. ὧδέ ἐστιν ἡ ὑπομονὴ καὶ ἡ πίστις τῶν ἁγίων.

k Supra 11. 7. l Supra v. 3. infra 19. 20.

[k] Καὶ εἶδον ἄλλο θηρίον ἀναβαῖνον ἐκ τῆς γῆς, καὶ εἶχε 11 κέρατα δύο ὅμοια ἀρνίῳ· καὶ ἐλάλει ὡς δράκων. [l] καὶ τὴν 12 ἐξουσίαν τοῦ πρώτου θηρίου πᾶσαν ποιεῖ ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ· καὶ ποιεῖ τὴν γῆν καὶ τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐν αὐτῇ, ἵνα προσκυνήσωσι τὸ θηρίον τὸ πρῶτον, οὗ ἐθεραπεύθη ἡ πληγὴ m Matt. 24. 24. 2 Thess. 2. 9. infra 16. 14. n Infra 16. 14. & 19. 20.

τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ. [m] Καὶ ποιεῖ σημεῖα μεγάλα, * καὶ 13 πῦρ ἵνα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ καταβαίνῃ εἰς τὴν γῆν ἐνώπιον τῶν ἀνθρώπων. [n] καὶ πλανᾷ τοὺς κατοικοῦντας ἐπὶ τῆς 14 γῆς, διὰ τὰ σημεῖα ἃ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ ποιῆσαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ θηρίου, λέγων τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ποιῆσαι εἰκόνα τῷ θηρίῳ, ὃ ἔχει τὴν πληγὴν τῆς μαχαίρας καὶ ἔζησε.

o Infra 19. 20. & 16. 2

[o] Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ δοῦναι πνεῦμα τῇ εἰκόνι τοῦ θηρίου, ἵνα 15 καὶ λαλήσῃ ἡ εἰκὼν τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ ποιήσῃ, ὅσοι ἂν μὴ προσκυνήσωσι ‡ τὴν εἰκόνα τοῦ θηρίου, ἵνα ἀποκτανθῶσι.

p Infra 19. 20. & 20. 4. q Infra 14. 11. & 15. 2.

[p] Καὶ ποιεῖ πάντας, τοὺς μικροὺς καὶ τοὺς μεγάλους, καὶ 16 τοὺς πλουσίους καὶ τοὺς πτωχοὺς, καὶ τοὺς ἐλευθέρους καὶ τοὺς δούλους, ἵνα * δῶσιν αὐτοῖς χάραγμα ἐπὶ τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν τῆς δεξιᾶς, ἢ ἐπὶ * τὸ μέτωπον αὐτῶν· [q] καὶ ἵνα μή τις 17 δύνηται ἀγοράσαι ἢ πωλῆσαι, εἰ μὴ ὁ ἔχων τὸ χάραγμα, [ἢ] τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ θηρίου, ἢ τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ ὀνόματος r Infra 17. 9.

αὐτοῦ. [r] Ὧδε ἡ σοφία ἐστίν· ὁ ἔχων [τὸν] νοῦν, ψηφισάτω 18 τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ θηρίου· ἀριθμὸς γὰρ ἀνθρώπου ἐστὶ, καὶ ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτοῦ χξϛ΄.

a Supra 5. 5. & 7. 4.

XIV. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ τὸ Ἀρνίον ἑστηκὸς ἐπὶ τὸ 1 faithful followers are written in the book of life (see Dan. xii. 1. Phil. iv. 3) of the Lamb slain from,' &c.

10. εἴ τις αἰχμαλωσίαν, &c.] Meaning, that he (this power) that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword (Is. xxxiii. 1.), which, it is added, is a theme for the faith and patience of THE SAINTS. (Lee.)

— εἴ τις αἰχμ. συνάγει] 'if any man collect a number of captives.' See Eph. iv. 8. The instruction suggested is, that 'the truly good will keep themselves uncorrupted by this idolatrous power, and that the cruelties exercised by these persecutors will be retaliated on them.' Ὧδέ ἐστιν—ἁγίων, 'Here, in this matter, in resisting this enemy (see ver. 7) is scope for the exercise of faith and patience in holy men.' (Newcome.)

11, 12. ἄλλο θηρίον.] This is supposed to be emblematical of the Romish hierarchy; the two horns denoting the regular and the secular clergy. Many points of similarity in the following verses with the Romish hierarchy and ecclesiastics have been traced, with more or less probability, by Commentators.

17. καὶ ἵνα μή τις δύν. ἀγορ.] 'and that men might not [have the power to] buy;' simply denoting a deprivation of political privileges. So Thucyd. v. 34, ὥστε μήτε πριαμένους τι ἢ πωλοῦντας κυρίους εἶναι.

— τὸν ἀριθμὸν τοῦ ὀν.] Meaning, 'the number which the letters of the name make up.' 'This passage (says Heinrichs) is to be explained from the Cabala of the Jews. It means "the number which is made up, by reducing the numeral power of each of the letters of which the name is composed, and bringing it to a sum total." That art, now held in merited contempt, was, in the time of the Apostle, in great honour, not only among the Jews, but also the Greeks, as we may collect from Artemid. Oneir. i. 12.'

18. ὧδε ἡ σοφία ἐστίν.] Meaning, 'Herein is wisdom to be shown,' 'herein is a test of wisdom, or sagacity.' Similarly as it is said, ver. 10, ὧδέ ἐστιν ἡ ὑπομονὴ καὶ ἡ πίστις τῶν ἁγίων, i. e. 'Herein is a fit occasion for evincing the patience and faith of the saints.'

ὄρος Σιὼν, καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ ἑκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες χιλιάδες, ἔχουσαι τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Πατρὸς 2 αὐτοῦ γεγραμμένον ἐπὶ τῶν μετώπων αὐτῶν. [b] Καὶ ἤκουσα b Supra 1. 15. & 5. 8. infra 19. 6.
φωνὴν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ὡς φωνὴν ὑδάτων πολλῶν, καὶ ὡς φωνὴν βροντῆς μεγάλης. καὶ * ἡ φωνὴ ἣν ἤκουσα ὡς 3 κιθαρῳδῶν κιθαριζόντων ἐν ταῖς κιθάραις αὐτῶν. [c] Καὶ c Supra 5. 9. Heb. 12. 23.
ᾄδουσιν [ὡς] ᾠδὴν καινὴν ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου, καὶ ἐνώπιον τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων· καὶ οὐδεὶς ἠδύνατο μαθεῖν τὴν ᾠδὴν, εἰ μὴ αἱ ἑκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες 4 χιλιάδες οἱ ἠγορασμένοι ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς. [d] Οὗτοί εἰσιν οἳ μετὰ d 1 Cor. 6. 20. 2 Cor. 11. 2. James 1. 18. supra 3. 4. & 5. 9.
γυναικῶν οὐκ ἐμολύνθησαν· παρθένοι γάρ εἰσιν· οὗτοί εἰσιν οἱ ἀκολουθοῦντες τῷ Ἀρνίῳ ὅπου ἂν ὑπάγῃ. οὗτοι ἠγορά-σθησαν ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἀπαρχὴ τῷ Θεῷ καὶ τῷ Ἀρνίῳ· 5 [e] καὶ ἐν τῷ στόματι αὐτῶν οὐχ εὑρέθη * ψεῦδος· e Psal. 32. 2. Zeph. 3. 13. Eph. 5. 27. Jude 24.
ἄμωμοι γάρ εἰσιν [ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ].
6 [f] Καὶ εἶδον ἄλλον ἄγγελον πετόμενον ἐν μεσουρανήματι, f Supra 8.13.
ἔχοντα εὐαγγέλιον αἰώνιον εὐαγγελίσαι τοὺς * καθημένους ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, καὶ πᾶν ἔθνος καὶ φυλὴν καὶ γλῶσσαν καὶ 7 λαὸν, [g] * λέγων ἐν φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· “Φοβήθητε τὸν Θεὸν καὶ g Gen. 1. 1. Psal. 33. 6. & 124. 8. & 146. 6. Acts 14. 14. & 17. 24.
δότε αὐτῷ δόξαν, ὅτι ἦλθεν ἡ ὥρα τῆς κρίσεως αὐτοῦ· καὶ προσκυνήσατε τῷ ποιήσαντι τὸν οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν καὶ 8 τὴν θάλασσαν καὶ πηγὰς ὑδάτων!” [h] Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος h Isa. 21. 9. Jer. 51. 8. infra 18. 2, 3, 10, 21. & 16. 19. & 17. 2, 5. ἠκολούθησε, λέγων· Ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε Βαβυλὼν [ἡ πόλις] ἡ μεγάλη! ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου [τοῦ θυμοῦ] τῆς πορ-9 νείας αὐτῆς πεπότικε πάντα ἔθνη! Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος τρίτος ἠκολούθησεν αὐτοῖς, λέγων ἐν φωνῇ μεγάλῃ· “Εἴ τις τὸ θηρίον προσκυνεῖ καὶ τὴν εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ, καὶ λαμ- i Ps. 75. 8. Isa. 51. 17. Jer. 25. 15. infra 16. 19. & 19. 20. & 20. 10.
βάνει χάραγμα ἐπὶ τοῦ μετώπου αὐτοῦ, ἢ ἐπὶ τὴν χεῖρα 10 αὐτοῦ· [i] καὶ αὐτὸς πίεται ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου τοῦ θυμοῦ

XIV. 1. ἑκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατέσσαρες χιλιάδες, &c.] These represent the true members of Christ's Church. Compare supra vii. 4. They are, as Mede calls them, the legitimate and undegenerate offspring of the twelve Apostles. (Abp. Newcome.) With this whole passage compare that at Heb. xii. 22—24. On the several disputed points, as to particulars, see the Notes of Scott, Woodhouse, and Lee.

6, 7. See Note on Acts xiii. 32, and Bp. Bull's Jud. Eccl. p. 62.

6. ἐν μεσουρανήματι.] See Note supra viii. 13.

— εὐαγγέλιον αἰών.] Our English Version, 'the everlasting Gospel,' says rather more than does the original Greek, and more than the context requires. (Middleton.)

7. δότε αὐτῷ δόξαν.] 'Δοῦναι δόξαν Θεῷ solennis formula apud Judæos, qua increpabant secus sentientes agentesque, quos ad rectum Jovæ cultum revocare volebant. Joh. ix. 24. [Compare also Nehem. ix. 5, 6.] Peropportune igitur et h. l. hæc formula paganos alloquitur fecialis: Reverentiam adhibeatis vero Numini et ab impio adversus ejus cultores odio et insolentia desistite.' (Heinrichs.) On ἦλθεν ἡ ὥρα τῆς κρίσεως see supra vi. 17.

8. By Βαβυλὼν is meant, as the best Expositors are agreed, the mystical Babylon, ROME, the metropolis of apostasy. In ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου—ἔθνη there is an almost lyrically bold expression of mad and unbounded idolatry, which is compared to a harlot alluring to lasciviousness. Heinrichs compares a similar image in the Tabula Cebetis: Ἀπάτη καλεῖται, ἣ πάντας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους —ποτίζει τῇ ἑαυτῆς δυνάμει. Comp. Rom. i. 24. 26. 28.

10, 11. The heaviest punishments here and hereafter are threatened. (Newcome.) In καὶ αὐτὸς πίεται there is, as Heinrichs remarks, an antanaclasis; q. d. 'He had before a cup of inebriating sweetness, but now he will drink the cup of Divine wrath in full draught.' See Jer.

τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦ κεκερασμένου ἀκράτου ἐν τῷ πο-τηρίῳ τῆς ὀργῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ βασανισθήσεται ἐν πυρὶ καὶ θείῳ ἐνώπιον τῶν ἁγίων ἀγγέλων καὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ k Isa. 34. 10. infra 19. 3. Ἀρνίου. [k] Καὶ ὁ καπνὸς τοῦ βασανισμοῦ αὐτῶν ἀναβαίνει 11 εἰς αἰῶνας αἰώνων· καὶ οὐκ ἔχουσιν ἀνάπαυσιν ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς οἱ προσκυνοῦντες τὸ θηρίον καὶ τὴν εἰκόνα αὐτοῦ, καὶ εἴ τις λαμβάνει τὸ χάραγμα τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ.”
l Supra 13. 10. [l] Ὧδε ὑπομονὴ τῶν ἁγίων ἐστίν· [ὧδε] οἱ τηροῦντες τὰς 12 m 1 Cor. 15. 18. 1 Thess. 4. 14. ἐντολὰς τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τὴν πίστιν Ἰησοῦ. [m] Καὶ ἤκουσα 13 φωνῆς ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λεγούσης [μοι]· Γράψον· Μακάριοι οἱ νεκροὶ οἱ ἐν Κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκοντες ἀπάρτι. Ναὶ, λέγει τὸ Πνεῦμα, ἵνα ἀναπαύσωνται ἐκ τῶν κόπων αὐτῶν· τὰ δὲ ἔργα αὐτῶν ἀκολουθεῖ μετ᾽ αὐτῶν.
n Ezek. 1. 26. Dan. 7. 13. supra 1. 13. & 6. 2. [n] Καὶ εἶδον, καὶ ἰδοὺ νεφέλη λευκὴ, καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν νεφέλην 14 καθήμενος ὅμοιος Υἱῷ ἀνθρώπου, ἔχων ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ στέφανον χρυσοῦν, καὶ ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ δρέπανον ὀξύ.
o infra 16. 17. Joel 3. 13. Matt. 13. 39. Jer. 51. 33. [o] Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ κράζων ἐν μεγάλῃ 15 φωνῇ τῷ καθημένῳ ἐπὶ τῆς νεφέλης· Πέμψον τὸ δρέπανόν σου καὶ θέρισον, ὅτι ἦλθέ [σοι] ἡ ὥρα τοῦ θερίσαι, ὅτι xxv. 15. Is. li. 17, 22. Κεκερασμ. ἀκράτου. The best Commentators are agreed that this denotes pure wine made yet stronger by a mixture of powerful ingredients. See Lowth on Isaiah, ch. i. Wakef. Crit. iii. 186, and Woodhouse in loc. So Ps. lxxiv. 8 (Sept.), ποτήριον οἴνου ἀκράτου πλῆρες κεράσματος.

11. ὁ καπνὸς τοῦ βασανισμοῦ.] Meaning, 'the smoke of the fire in which they are consumed.'

— καὶ εἴ τις λαμβάνει.] Render, 'and whosoever receiveth,' &c.

12. ὧδε—ἐστίν.] Meaning, 'In these circumstances will be the trial of the patience and perseverance of Christ's faithful disciples.' (Newc.)

13. ἐν Κυρίῳ.] Supply ὄντες. For ἀπάρτι, some read ἄπαρτὶ, construing the word with μακάριοι; but thus arises a sense not a little frigid. The expression may be taken simply as standing for ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν, 'from this period;' or rather it may be said to denote continuity, with reference to all times. See Note on John i. 51.

— ἵνα ἀναπαύσωνται.] The ἵνα is, as Heinrichs observes, used ἐκβατικῶς, being nearly equivalent to ὅτι.

— τὰ δὲ ἔργα—αὐτῶν.] In ἀκολουθεῖ μετ᾽ αὐτῶν we have a Hebraism, for ἀκολ. αὐτοῖς, scil. ἀποθνήσκουσι, 'follow them after death,' and accompany them to the judgment-seat of God. Similarly it is said in a passage of Soph. Phil. 1437 (cited by Wetstein), οὐ γὰρ εὐσέβεια συνθνήσκει βρότοις.

14—20. Here again the judgments of God upon [Babylon and] the adherents of the beast are foretold, and graphically represented under the figures of harvest and vintage, which are often, both in the Scriptural and Classical writers, symbolical of destruction. See Joel iii. 13. Isa. xvii. 5. Hom. Il. λ. 67. Virg. Æn. x. 513. The Messiah is represented under the similitude of a husbandman committing the work of reaping to his labourers, and holding in his own hand a sickle, as a symbol of punishment, the execution of the judgment committed to him by the Father, John v. 22. The figure in ἐπὶ τὴν νεφ. καθ. is found also in Dan. vii. 13, and Virg. Æn. ix. 640. (Heinrichs.)

14. καθήμενος ὅμοιος.] Here I have thought proper to retain the common reading καθήμενος ὅμοιος, notwithstanding that the best Editors, from Wetstein to Scholz, have adopted καθήμενον ὅμοιον from some MSS.; for surely so harsh an anacoluthon as this ought not to be obtruded without much stronger evidence of MSS. It may very well be supposed that the scribes mistook ς for ν (as in numerous other instances), being led into this error by the εἶδον just before, after which they expected an accusative governed by it. Finally, the Nominative is strongly confirmed by the parallel passage of Dan. vii. 13.

15. ὅτι ἦλθε, &c. ὅτι ἐξηράνθη.] It is well observed by Bp. Jebb, Sacr. Lit., p. 387, that these two clauses are not [as they may seem] synonymous in sense; the reasons for reaping being distinct and progressive: 1. the proper season for reaping is come; 2. the harvest of the earth is withered, and therefore demands the sickle. At ver. 17—ult. there is, as Heinrichs observes, the other part of the image; q. d. 'Not only is the harvest ripe, but the vintage is ready;' the image being similar to that at Is. lxiii. 3, and Jer. vi. 9. It may seem strange that a sickle should be mentioned for the vintage, but it seems that grapes were sometimes not gathered by the hand, but cut off by a hooked knife of a sickle-like form.

16 ἐξηράνθη ὁ θερισμὸς τῆς γῆς. καὶ ἔβαλεν ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τὴν νεφέλην τὸ δρέπανον αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν, καὶ ἐθερίσθη ἡ γῆ.
17 Καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ τοῦ ἐν τῷ 18 οὐρανῷ ἔχων καὶ αὐτὸς δρέπανον ὀξύ. [p] καὶ ἄλλος ἄγγελος p Infra 16. 8. Joel 3. 13.
ἐξῆλθεν ἐκ τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου ἔχων ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τοῦ πυρὸς, καὶ ἐφώνησε κραυγῇ μεγάλῃ τῷ ἔχοντι τὸ δρέπανον τὸ ὀξὺ, λέγων· Πέμψον σου τὸ δρέπανον τὸ ὀξὺ, καὶ τρύγησον τοὺς βότρυας τῆς ἀμπέλου τῆς γῆς, ὅτι ἤκμασαν αἱ σταφυλαὶ 19 αὐτῆς. [q] Καὶ ἔβαλεν ὁ ἄγγελος τὸ δρέπανον αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν q Infra 19. 15.
γῆν, καὶ ἐτρύγησε τὴν ἄμπελον τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς 20 τὴν ληνὸν τοῦ θυμοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ * τὸν μέγαν. [r] Καὶ ἐπα- r Isa. 63. 3. Lam. 1. 15. supra 11. 8. infra 19. 14.
τήθη ἡ ληνὸς * ἔξωθεν τῆς πόλεως, καὶ ἐξῆλθε αἷμα ἐκ τῆς ληνοῦ ἄχρι τῶν χαλινῶν τῶν ἵππων, ἀπὸ σταδίων χιλίων ἑξακοσίων.

1 XV. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον ἄλλο σημεῖον ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ μέγα a Supra 12. 1, 3. & 14. 10. & 16. 1.
καὶ θαυμαστὸν, ἀγγέλους ἑπτὰ ἔχοντας πληγὰς ἑπτὰ τὰς 2 ἐσχάτας, ὅτι ἐν αὐταῖς ἐτελέσθη ὁ θυμὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ. [b] Καὶ b Supra 4. 6. & 5. 8. & 13. 15, 17. & 14. 2. infra 21. 18. Matt. 3. 11.
εἶδον ὡς θάλασσαν ὑαλίνην μεμιγμένην πυρί· καὶ τοὺς νικῶντας ἐκ τοῦ θηρίου καὶ ἐκ τῆς εἰκόνος αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τοῦ [χαράγματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τοῦ] ἀριθμοῦ τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ, ἑστῶτας ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσαν τὴν ὑαλίνην, ἔχοντας κιθάρας 3 τοῦ Θεοῦ. [c] καὶ ᾄδουσι τὴν ᾠδὴν Μωϋσέως δούλου τοῦ Θεοῦ, c Exod. 15. 1. Ps. 111. 2. & 139. 14 & 145. 17 καὶ τὴν ᾠδὴν τοῦ Ἀρνίου, λέγοντες· Μεγάλα καὶ θαυμαστὰ τὰ ἔργα σου, Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ· δίκαιαι καὶ

20. In ἐξῆλθε αἷμα ἐκ τῆς ληνοῦ there is, as often, a blending of the thing itself with the thing thereby signified; and, indeed, αἷμα might be used of the juice as figuring the blood of the grape. See Gen. xlix. 11. In ἄχρι τῶν χαλ. there is a noble hyperbole, of which examples are adduced by the Commentators.

XV. Up to this Chapter we have proceeded, under the guidance of past events, with considerable satisfaction, but here that direction almost wholly fails us. Destitute of this, we need not wonder at the evident inability of Expositors to make any regular or consistent application of the subsequent Chapters, except as coincident with those things which have been already considered.

The present Chapter introduces the seven Vials, all of which fall under the seventh Trumpet, as the seven trumpets were included under the seventh seal; for they contain the seven last plagues, in which the wrath of God is filled up, or accomplished, on the persecuting idolatrous power assuming the name of Christian. These plagues must, therefore, be coincident with the last woe-trumpet, in great measure, at least. Before he sees the effects of the ministry of the seven angels, who had it in charge to inflict the seven last plagues, the Apostle records an introductory vision, representing the joy and triumph which the Church would express on that occasion. (Scott.)

2. θάλασσαν ὑαλίνην] i. e. a large crystalline laver, like a pellucid pavement, similar to the sea in Solomon's Temple. The fire in it (also part of the temple-furniture) is supposed to denote the anger of God about to be displayed. By νικῶντας ἐκ τοῦ θηρίου, Heinrichs proves, is meant, not victorious over the beast, but victorious after having escaped the power of the beast,—there being a constructio prægnans, thus to be resolved: νικῶντας (for νενικηκότας) τὸ θηρίον, καὶ σωθέντας ἐξ αὐτοῦ.—Ἐπὶ τὴν θάλασσ. may best be rendered, 'by the sea.' Κιθάρας τοῦ Θεοῦ. Meaning harps for the praises of God.

3, 4. ᾠδὴν Μωϋσ.] i. e. a song of triumph similar to that sung by Moses on the children of Israel being delivered from Egyptian bondage, Exod. xv. (Heinrichs), and formed chiefly from phrases in Ps. lxxxvi. 9. cxi. 2. cxxxix. 14. Deut. xxxii. 4. Jer. x. 7. Ἐθνῶν for ἁγίων is adopted by almost all Editors, on strong evidence, external and internal. The ᾠδὴ τοῦ Ἀρνίου is generally supposed to designate the 'new song' above-mentioned, in honour of the Lamb.

d Isa. 66. 23. Jer. 10. 7. ἀληθιναὶ αἱ ὁδοί σου, ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν * ἐθνῶν. [d] τίς οὐ μὴ 4 φοβηθῇ σε, Κύριε, καὶ δοξάσῃ τὸ ὄνομά σου; ὅτι μόνος ὅσιος· ὅτι πάντα τὰ ἔθνη ἥξουσι καὶ προσκυνήσουσιν ἐνώπιόν σου· ὅτι τὰ δικαιώματά σου ἐφανερώθησαν.
e Num. 1. 50. supra 11. 19. [e] Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον· [καὶ] [ἰδοὺ] ἠνοίγη ὁ ναὸς τῆς 5 f Supra 1. 13. Exod. 28. 6, 8. Ezek. 44. 17, 18. σκηνῆς τοῦ μαρτυρίου ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ· [f] καὶ ἐξῆλθον οἱ ἑπτὰ 6 ἄγγελοι, οἱ ἔχοντες τὰς ἑπτὰ πληγὰς, ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ, ἐνδεδυμένοι λίνον καθαρὸν [καὶ] λαμπρόν· καὶ περιεζωσμένοι περὶ τὰ στήθη ζώνας χρυσᾶς· καὶ ἓν ἐκ τῶν τεσσάρων ζώων 7 ἔδωκε τοῖς ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλοις ἑπτὰ φιάλας χρυσᾶς, γεμούσας τοῦ θυμοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζῶντος εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώ-g Exod. 40. 34. 1 Kings 8. 10. Isa. 6. 4. 2 Thess. 1. 9. νων. [g] Καὶ ἐγεμίσθη ὁ ναὸς καπνοῦ ἐκ τῆς δόξης τοῦ Θεοῦ, 8 καὶ ἐκ τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ· καὶ οὐδεὶς ἠδύνατο εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὸν ναὸν, ἄχρι τελεσθῶσιν αἱ ἑπτὰ πληγαὶ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων.
XVI. ΚΑΙ ἤκουσα φωνῆς μεγάλης ἐκ τοῦ ναοῦ, λε- 1 γούσης τοῖς ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλοις· Ὑπάγετε καὶ ἐκχέατε τὰς a Exod. 9. 9, 10, 11. supra 13. 14, 16, 17. ἑπτὰ φιάλας τοῦ θυμοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ εἰς τὴν γῆν! [a] Καὶ ἀπῆλ- 2 θεν ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν· καὶ ἐγένετο ἕλκος κακὸν καὶ πονηρὸν εἰς τοὺς ἀνθρώπους τοὺς ἔχοντας τὸ χάραγμα τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ τοὺς τῇ εἰκόνι b Exod. 7. 17, 20. supra 8. 8, 9. αὐτοῦ προσκυνοῦντας. [b] Καὶ ὁ δεύτερος ἄγγελος ἐξέχεε 3 τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν· καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα ὡς νεκροῦ· καὶ πᾶσα ψυχὴ [ζῶσα] ἀπέθανεν ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ.
Καὶ [ὁ] τρίτος ἄγγελος ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ εἰς τοὺς 4

4. τίς οὐ μὴ φοβ. σε;] Render, 'who would not greatly fear thee?' Μόνος ὅσιος. On this expression see Note at Rom. xvi. 17. Ὅτι, since.

5. σκηνῆς τοῦ μαρτ.] See Note on Heb. ix. 2.

6. καθαρὸν καὶ λαμπρόν.] Namely, as those who had purified themselves were accustomed to do. So J. Pollux, i. 25, τὸ δὲ προσιέναι—ὑπὸ νεουργῷ στολῇ, ὑπὸ νεοπλυνεῖ ἐσθῆτι.

6—8. The seven angels coming forth from the tabernacle of God in the Temple showed that these judgments would be executed on the enemies of the Church, in mercy to the people of God, while the white clothing and golden girdles worn by these ministers of vengeance represented their holiness, and the righteousness and excellency of these awful dispensations. The living creature, an emblem of the Gospel ministry, giving the vials to the angels, implied that the preaching of the truth would be instrumental in bringing the judgments which were written upon antichristian opposers; and the Temple being filled with smoke showed the darkness of those dispensations, and the horror which would envelop the enemies of God whilst these plagues were executing. (Scott.)

XVI. We have here described the pouring out of the seven vials, on which the opinions of Commentators are very various; but, after all, Bp. Newton's view seems to be the best founded, because the most sober,—namely, that 'as the trumpets were so many steps and degrees of the ruin of the Roman empire, so are the vials of the ruin of the Roman church.' See also Dean Woodhouse and Mr. Scott. Prof. Lee, however, is of opinion, that these plagues of the vials seem to be nothing more than a repetition of, and partly a supplement to, those.

1. ἐκχέατε τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας.] A metonymy of the container for that which is contained. By the pouring out of these vials Dean Woodhouse and Dr. Burton understand generally the punishments inflicted upon the enemies and persecutors of the Church.

2. ἐγένετο ἕλκος κακὸν, &c.] Meaning that the calamity will resemble that inflicted on Egypt, as recorded in Exod. ix. 8—11. See also Deut. xxviii. 35.

3. καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα ὡς νεκ.] Compare Exod. vii. 18—21. Here, by a strong figure, is signified great effusion of blood and destruction.

4. πηγὰς τῶν ὑδ.] 'water-springs or fountains.' The expression occurs also at vii. 17. xxi. 6. John iv. 14, and Æschin. Soc. Dial. iii. 20.

ποταμοὺς καὶ εἰς τὰς πηγὰς τῶν ὑδάτων· καὶ ἐγένετο αἷμα.
5 [c] Καὶ ἤκουσα τοῦ ἀγγέλου τῶν ὑδάτων λέγοντος· Δίκαιος c Supra 1. 4, 8. & 4. 8. & 11. 17.
[Κύριε] εἶ, ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν, [καὶ] ὁ Ὅσιος, ὅτι ταῦτα ἔκρι-6 νας· [d] ὅτι αἷμα ἁγίων καὶ προφητῶν ἐξέχεαν, καὶ αἷμα d Is. 49. 26. Matt. 23. 34.
7 αὐτοῖς ἔδωκας πιεῖν· ἄξιοι [γάρ] εἰσι! [e] Καὶ ἤκουσα e Supra 9. 13. & 15. 3.
[ἄλλου ἐκ] τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λέγοντος· Ναὶ, Κύριε ὁ Θεὸς ὁ 8 παντοκράτωρ, ἀληθιναὶ καὶ δίκαιαι αἱ κρίσεις σου! Καὶ ὁ τέταρτος [ἄγγελος] ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὸν ἥλιον· 9 καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῷ καυματίσαι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους ἐν πυρί. [f] καὶ f Infra ver. 11. 21. Dan. v. 22, 23. supra 9. 20.
ἐκαυματίσθησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι καῦμα μέγα· καὶ ἐβλασφήμησαν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἔχοντος ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ τὰς πληγὰς ταύτας· καὶ οὐ μετενόησαν, δοῦναι αὐτῷ δόξαν.
10 [g] Καὶ ὁ πέμπτος [ἄγγελος] ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ g Supra 13. 2. & 9. 2. & 11. 10.
ἐπὶ τὸν θρόνον τοῦ θηρίου· καὶ ἐγένετο ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ ἐσκοτωμένη· καὶ ἐμασσῶντο τὰς γλώσσας αὐτῶν ἐκ τοῦ πόνου, 11 [h] καὶ ἐβλασφήμησαν τὸν Θεὸν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐκ τῶν πόνων h supra 9. 21.
αὐτῶν καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἑλκῶν αὐτῶν· καὶ οὐ μετενόησαν ἐκ τῶν 12 ἔργων αὐτῶν. [i] Καὶ ὁ ἕκτος [ἄγγελος] ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην i Supra 9. 14. Jer. 50. 38. Is. 41. 2, 25.
αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τὸν ποταμὸν τὸν μέγαν τὸν Εὐφράτην· καὶ ἐξηράνθη τὸ ὕδωρ αὐτοῦ, ἵνα ἑτοιμασθῇ ἡ ὁδὸς τῶν βασιλέων 13 τῶν ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν ἡλίου. [k] Καὶ εἶδον ἐκ τοῦ στόματος k 1 John 4. 1, 3. supra 12. 3, 9. infra 19, 20. & 20. 10.
τοῦ δράκοντος, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ ψευδοπροφήτου πνεύματα τρία ἀκάθαρτα, * ὡς l 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Thess. 2. 9 James 3. 15. supra 13. 13, 14. infra 17. 14.
14 βάτραχοι· ([l] εἰσὶ γὰρ πνεύματα δαιμόνων ποιοῦντα σημεῖα,) ἃ ἐκπορεύεται ἐπὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς τῆς [γῆς καὶ τῆς] οἰκουμέ-νης ὅλης, συναγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸν πόλεμον τῆς ἡμέρας m Matt. 24. 44. Luke 12. 39. 2 Cor. 5. 3. 1 Thess. 5. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 10. supra 3. 3, 4. 18.
15 ἐκείνης τῆς μεγάλης τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ παντοκράτορος. ([m] Ἰδοὺ, ἔρχομαι ὡς κλέπτης· μακάριος ὁ γρηγορῶν καὶ τηρῶν τὰ

5. ἀγγέλου τῶν ὑδ.] From the Rabbinical writers it appears that the Jews were accustomed to assign to every part of creation its peculiar angel. Ὅτι ταῦτα ἔκρινας, 'because thou hast thus decreed and executed judgment.' (See Note on Acts xvi. 4.) Δίκαιος—Ὅσιος is well rendered by Abp. Newcome, 'Just art thou—the Being that is and that was,—the Holy One.'

6. αἷμα αὐτοῖς ἔδωκας πιεῖν] q. d. 'thou hast ordained, that they shall have enough of that which they so much loved.' So Queen Tomyris, after defeating and taking prisoner Cyrus, ordered his head to be cut off and thrown into a vessel full of human blood, with the words, 'Satiate thyself with the blood thou thirstedst after.' The same figure of drinking blood, for shedding it, is found not only in the Prophets of the Old Test., but in the Classical writers. So Soph. Elect. 783, τοὐμὸν ἐκπίνουσ' ἀεὶ Ψυχῆς ἄκρατον αἷμα.

10. ἐγένετο ἡ βασιλεία α. ἐσκ.] This is emblematical of distress, calamity, and destruction; q. d. (as Heinrichs expresses it), 'Eheu! periit omnis splendor, et spissis tenebris obvolvebatur.' See supra vi. 12—15. viii. 12, and Exod. x. 21.

— καὶ ἐμασσῶντο τὰς γλ.] A lively and graphic description of desperate and rabid fury.

12. ἵνα ἑτοιμασθῇ—ἡλίου.] The Euphrates is the great natural barrier to Syria and Palestine against any hostile attacks from the more eastern countries of Persia and others.

13. τοῦ ψευδοπ.] Meaning, the θηρίου described at xiii. 11—17. Ὡς βάτραχοι. These seem to designate persons falsely pretending to miracles, and characterized by vain-glory and impudence. So Artemid. ii. 15, cited by Heinrichs, βάτραχοι ἄνδρας γόητας καὶ βωμολόχους προσημαίνουσι.

14. εἰς τὸν πόλεμον—μεγάλης.] The full sense is, 'to go out to war on the great day [of combat] against Almighty God.'

15. ἰδοὺ, ἔρχομαι ὡς κλέπτης—αὐτοῦ.] The predictions are here suspended, in order to inculcate a suitable and weighty admonition,—reminding those whom it concerned,—and, in some measure, all others,—that, in times of such great temptaἱμάτια αὐτοῦ, ἵνα μὴ γυμνὸς περιπατῇ, καὶ βλέπωσι τὴν n Infra 19. 19. ἀσχημοσύνην αὐτοῦ·) [n] καὶ συνήγαγεν αὐτοὺς εἰς τὸν τόπον 16 o Infra 21. 6. τὸν καλούμενον Ἑβραϊστὶ * Ἀρμαγεδών. [o] Καὶ ὁ ἕβδομος 17 [ἄγγελος] ἐξέχεε τὴν φιάλην αὐτοῦ * ἐπὶ τὸν ἀέρα· καὶ ἐξῆλθε φωνὴ μεγάλη ἀπὸ τοῦ ναοῦ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ἀπὸ τοῦ p Supra 4, 5. & 8. 5. θρόνου, λέγουσα· Γέγονε! [p] καὶ ἐγένοντο φωναὶ καὶ βρον- 18 ταὶ καὶ ἀστραπαί, καὶ σεισμὸς ἐγένετο μέγας, οἷος οὐκ ἐγέ-νετο ἀφ' οὗ οἱ ἄνθρωποι ἐγένοντο ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, τηλικοῦτος q Supra 14. 8, 10. σεισμὸς οὕτω μέγας. [q] Καὶ ἐγένετο ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη εἰς 19 infra 18. 5. Is. 51. 22, 23. τρία μέρη· καὶ αἱ πόλεις τῶν ἐθνῶν ἔπεσον· καὶ Βαβυλὼν Jer. 25. 15, 16. ἡ μεγάλη ἐμνήσθη ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, δοῦναι αὐτῇ τὸ ποr Supra 6. 14. τήριον τοῦ οἴνου τοῦ θυμοῦ τῆς ὀργῆς αὐτοῦ. [r] Καὶ πᾶσα 20 s Supra 11. 19. & 16. 9, 11. νῆσος ἔφυγε, καὶ ὄρη οὐχ εὑρέθησαν· [s] καὶ χάλαζα μεγάλη 21 ὡς ταλαντιαία καταβαίνει ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἀνθρώ-t Supra v. 9 & 11. πους· [t] καὶ ἐβλασφήμησαν οἱ ἄνθρωποι τὸν Θεὸν ἐκ τῆς πληγῆς τῆς χαλάζης, ὅτι μεγάλη ἐστὶν ἡ πληγὴ αὐτῆς σφόδρα.

a Jer. 51. 13. Nah. 3. 4. supra 16. 19. infra 18. 3. XVII. [a] ΚΑΙ ἦλθεν εἷς ἐκ τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν 1 ἐχόντων τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας, καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων [μοι]· Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι τὸ κρῖμα τῆς πόρνης τῆς μεγάλης, b Jer. 51. 7. supra 14. 8. infra 18. 3. τῆς καθημένης ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδάτων τῶν πολλῶν· [b] μεθ' ἧς ἐπόρ- 2 tion, the professed servants of Christ are called upon to be more than ordinarily watchful (for watching is their duty, and prayer their strength), expecting his second coming; that they may be found in the garments of salvation, and not be surprised naked, as apostates or hypocrites, and so be put to shame by rejection. See Luke xii. 39, compared with 1 Thess. v. 2. 2 Pet. iii. 10. also Matth. xxiv. 50. xxv. 13. St. John seems here to have had in mind Gen. ix. 22, where Aquila and Symmachus render: εἶδε τὴν ἀσχημοσύνην τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ. Compare also Gen. ix. 22. The usual prophetical formula, λέγει ὁ Κύριος, is here omitted, as easy to be supplied.

16. Ἀρμαγεδών.] This has been variously interpreted; either 'the mountain of Megiddo,' הר מגדו, denoting, figuratively, the mountain of destruction, with allusion to the great slaughter there (Judg. v. 19. 2 Kings xxiii. 29); or 'the dry mountainous tract,' such as the Jews supposed to be the abode of demons.

17. ἐπὶ τὸν ἀέρα] as the seat of the dominion of the Devil, called in Eph. ii. 2, ὁ ἄρχων τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος.

— γέγονε!] 'actum est, fuit urbs!' An awful fiat from Him who 'spake, and it was done; who commanded, and it stood fast.' Ps. xxxiii. 9. 'Here (observes Prof. Lee) the chain of particular prophecy ends. The purposes of God regarding his Church and the heathen are now all fulfilled (see x. 6, 7. xi. 15. xvi. 17. Dan. vii. 7), the full time of THE END is come. The remnant of Israel has been sealed; innumerable multitudes out of ALL NATIONS have been added to the Church (vii. 3—17); the heavens had received Christ, until this glorious restitution of lost man had fully taken place (Acts iii. 21), and now (ver. 15) he comes as a thief, and destroys his adversaries, both Jew and heathen; and his kingdom, which is to last for ever, is firmly established.'

19. ἐμνήσθη] 'was remembered [for visitation and punishment].' See xviii. 5, and 3 John 10.

20, 21. πᾶσα νῆσος—χάλαζα—ὡς ταλ.] Hyperbolical expressions, but denoting the greatness of these Divine judgments.

XVII. This and the next Chapter either may be considered, with some, as a continuation of the prophetic description of the events under the seventh vial; or, with others, as a kind of recapitulation of what concerns 'the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters,' which judgment might be to take place previously. In this latter view Prof. Lee coincides, comparing a similar recapitulation, for illustration, in Dan. ch. xi. He does not, however, with the great majority of Commentators, consider Babylon to designate the great Western apostasy, POPERY; neither does he, with most foreign Commentators, take it to regard the Roman empire only, but heathen Rome, considered in its political as well as religious character; and this he endeavours to prove at large, with considerable ability at least, if not success.

1. καθημένης ἐπὶ τῶν ὑδ. τῶν πολλ.] The sense seems to be, 'at or near much water,' as that of the sea, or a mighty river, like the Euphrates.

νευσαν οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἐμεθύσθησαν οἱ κατοικοῦντες 3 τὴν γῆν ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς. [c] Καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ c Supra 13. 1. infra ver. 7, 8.
με εἰς ἔρημον ἐν πνεύματι· καὶ εἶδον γυναῖκα καθημένην ἐπὶ θηρίον κόκκινον, γέμον ὀνομάτων βλασφημίας, ἔχον κεφαλὰς 4 ἑπτὰ καὶ κέρατα δέκα. [d] Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ ἦν περιβεβλημένη d Infra 18. 12, 16. Dan. 11. 38. Jer. 51. 7.
* πορφύρουν καὶ κοκκίνον, καὶ κεχρυσωμένη χρυσῷ καὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ καὶ μαργαρίταις, ἔχουσα χρυσοῦν ποτήριον ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτῆς γέμον βδελυγμάτων καὶ * τὰ ἀκάθαρτα τῆς πορνείας 5 αὐτῆς· [e] καὶ ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον αὐτῆς ὄνομα γεγραμμένον· e 2 Thess. 2. 7. supra 11. 8. & 14. 8.
Μυστήριον! ΒΑΒΥΛΩΝ Ἡ ΜΕΓΑΛΗ Ἡ ΜΗΤΗΡ
ΤΩΝ ΠΟΡΝΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΩΝ ΒΔΕΛΥΓΜΑΤΩΝ ΤΗΣ 6 ΓΗΣ. [f] Καὶ εἶδον τὴν γυναῖκα μεθύουσαν ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος f Infra 18. 24.
τῶν ἁγίων καὶ ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν μαρτύρων Ἰησοῦ. καὶ ἐθαύμασα, ἰδὼν αὐτὴν, θαῦμα μέγα.
7 Καὶ εἶπέ μοι ὁ ἄγγελος· Διατί ἐθαύμασας; ἐγώ σοι ἐρῶ τὸ μυστήριον τῆς γυναικὸς, καὶ τοῦ θηρίου τοῦ βαστάζοντος αὐτὴν, τοῦ ἔχοντος τὰς ἑπτὰ κεφαλὰς καὶ τὰ δέκα 8 κέρατα. [g] Τὸ θηρίον, ὃ εἶδες, ἦν καὶ οὐκ ἔστι· καὶ μέλλει g Supra 11. 7. & 13. 1, 3, 8, 10.
ἀναβαίνειν ἐκ τῆς ἀβύσσου, καὶ εἰς ἀπώλειαν ὑπάγειν. Καὶ θαυμάσονται οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, ὧν οὐ γέγραπται τὰ ὀνόματα ἐπὶ τὸ βιβλίον τῆς ζωῆς ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου,

The expression seems derived from Jer. li. 13, where Babylon is so described. By this sitting upon many waters, however, would seem, from the angel's own explanation at ver. 15, to be meant 'ruling over many peoples and nations,' and that, it appears, as derived from the power and influence over many nations, which the commanding situation of Babylon, as the Great Emporium of the world, must have given her.

2. μεθ' ἧς ἐπόρν.] i. e. 'imitated her fornication,' or spiritual uncleanness. By οἱ κατοικ. τὴν γῆν seem to be meant those persons, of all nations, whom the commerce of the world brought in great numbers. That these should be intoxicated and maddened with her furious idolatries, was to be expected. The imagery seems derived from Jerem. li. 7.

3. ἐν πνεύματι] scil. ὄντα. Prof. Lee takes the description here to designate regal pomp, at the same time teeming with the doctrines of error and resistance to the true God. By the seven heads and ten horns he understands great wisdom and power. See xii. 3. In ver. 4 he thinks we have the wealth and abomination of this state symbolically depicted; while in ver. 5 its character is so given, as to leave no doubt that the great Head of idolatry is meant; and at ver. 6 the insatiate rage of this state against Christ's followers is intimated.

4. τὰ ἀκάθαρτα τῆς.] The common reading, ἀκαθάρτητος τῆς, has scarcely any authority from MSS., and indeed is contrary to analogy, while the adopted reading, on the other hand, would seem to offend against grammatical construction; but, in reality, τὰ ἀκάθαρτα is not governed of what immediately precedes, but of ἔχον a little before, or rather the Accusative here is in apposition with the Accusatives preceding; the sense being, 'even (καὶ) the impure produce of her fornication.'

5. ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον—γεγρ.] After the custom of harlots, to have their name written on their forehead.

— μυστήριον.] It is justly observed by Heinrichs that this is not a part of the inscription, but is put in apposition with, and is to be construed, in an adjective sense, with ὄνομα, as if it were ὄνομα μυστικὸν or μυστηριῶδες. The name BABYLON, inscribed on her forehead, is not to be understood, properly, of Babylon itself, but, mystically and figuratively (xi. 8), of another city, doubtless Rome. On μυστ. see Note on 2 Thess. ii. 7.

6. μεθύουσαν ἐκ τοῦ αἵματος τῶν ἁγ.] Meaning, 'being satiated to the utmost with the blood of,' &c. So in Herodot. i. 214, we have σὲ δ' ἐγὼ —αἵματος κορέσω. That the word may denote satiety in the physical sense (from which this figurative one is derived) is plain from Hom. Il. P. 390, where he speaks of a bull's hide as μεθύουσα ἀλοιφῇ, 'saturated with oil or grease.'

7. τὸ μυστήριον τῆς γυναικὸς, &c.] i. e. 'the hidden meaning' couched under the representation in question. Τοῦ ἔχοντος—κέρατα. These words clearly point out ROME to be meant.

8. οὐκ ἔστι] i. e. shall soon cease to be. Μέλλει ἀναβαίνειν ἐκ τῆς ἀβ., namely, 'to make war upon the saints.' See ix. 2. xi. 7. The words following contain an impressive mode of expressing the result of that warfare.

— βλεπόντων] scil. αὐτῶν, 'they seeing;' for

* βλεπόντων τὸ θηρίον ὅτι ἦν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι, ‡ καίπερ ἐστὶ, h Supra 13. 1, 18. πάρεσται. [h] Ὧδε ὁ νοῦς ὁ ἔχων σοφίαν. αἱ ἑπτὰ κεφαλαὶ 9 ὄρη εἰσὶν ἑπτὰ, ὅπου ἡ γυνὴ κάθηται ἐπ' αὐτῶν· καὶ βασιλεῖς 10 ἑπτά εἰσιν. οἱ πέντε ἔπεσαν, [καὶ] ὁ εἷς ἐστὶν, ὁ ἄλλος οὔπω i Supra i. 8. ἦλθε, καὶ ὅταν ἔλθῃ, ὀλίγον αὐτὸν δεῖ μεῖναι. [i] Καὶ τὸ 11 θηρίον, ὃ ἦν, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι, καὶ αὐτὸς ὄγδοός ἐστι, καὶ ἐκ k Dan. 7. 20. 21. supra 13. 1. τῶν ἑπτά ἐστι, καὶ εἰς ἀπώλειαν ὑπάγει. [k] Καὶ τὰ δέκα 12 κέρατα, ἃ εἶδες, δέκα βασιλεῖς εἰσιν, οἵτινες βασιλείαν οὔπω ἔλαβον, ἀλλ' ἐξουσίαν ὡς βασιλεῖς μίαν ὥραν λαμβά-νουσι μετὰ τοῦ θηρίου. Οὗτοι μίαν γνώμην ἔχουσι, καὶ τὴν 13 l 1 Tim. 6. 15. supra 16. 14. infra 19. 16. δύναμιν καὶ τὴν ἐξουσίαν ἑαυτῶν τῷ θηρίῳ * διδόασιν. [l] οὗτοι 14 μετὰ τοῦ Ἀρνίου πολεμήσουσι, καὶ τὸ Ἀρνίον νικήσει αὐτοὺς, —ὅτι Κύριος κυρίων ἐστὶ καὶ Βασιλεὺς βασιλέων,—καὶ οἱ μετ' αὐτοῦ, κλητοὶ καὶ ἐκλεκτοὶ καὶ πιστοί.
m Isa. 8. 7. [m] Καὶ λέγει μοι· Τὰ ὕδατα ἃ εἶδες, οὗ ἡ πόρνη κάθηται, 15 n Jerem. 50. 41, 42. Ezek. 16. 38. 44. infra 18. 8. λαοὶ καὶ ὄχλοι εἰσὶ, καὶ ἔθνη καὶ γλῶσσαι. [n] Καὶ τὰ δέκα 16 κέρατα ἃ εἶδες, * καὶ τὸ θηρίον, οὗτοι μισήσουσι τὴν πόρνην, καὶ ἠρημωμένην ποιήσουσιν αὐτὴν καὶ γυμνὴν, καὶ τὰς σάρκας o 2 Thess. 2. 11. supra 10. 7. αὐτῆς φάγονται, καὶ αὐτὴν κατακαύσουσιν ἐν πυρί. [o] ὁ γὰρ 17 Θεὸς ἔδωκεν εἰς τὰς καρδίας αὐτῶν ποιῆσαι τὴν γνώμην αὐτοῦ, καὶ ποιῆσαι μίαν γνώμην, καὶ δοῦναι τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτῶν τῷ θηρίῳ, ἄχρι * τελεσθή[σονται] * οἱ λόγοι τοῦ Θεοῦ.
p Supra 16. 19. & 12. 4. [p] Καὶ ἡ γυνὴ, ἣν εἶδες, ἔστιν ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη ἡ ἔχουσα 18 βασιλείαν ἐπὶ τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς.

XVIII. ΚΑΙ μετὰ ταῦτα εἶδον ἄλλον ἄγγελον κατα- 1 a Isa. 13. 21. & 21. 9. & 34. 11, 14. Jer. 50. 39. & 51. 8, 37. supra 14. 8. βαίνοντα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, ἔχοντα ἐξουσίαν μεγάλην· καὶ ἡ γῆ ἐφωτίσθη ἐκ τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ· [a] καὶ ἔκραξεν ἐν ἰσχυρᾷ 2 φωνῇ [μεγάλῃ], λέγων· Ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε Βαβυλὼν ἡ ὁρώντων, Genitive absolute. The common reading βλέποντες is a mere alteration for plainness' sake.

— καίπερ ἐστίν.] Several MSS. have καὶ πάρεσται, which is adopted by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, and all Editors since their time. But I doubt whether this reading be not, as Prof. Lee supposes, an alteration to remove a difficulty; which, however, is not very great, since the clause may be rendered, with Prof. Lee, 'the beast which was, or has been, but continues not (i. e. shall not continue), although he [now] exists.'

9. ὧδε ὁ νοῦς—σοφίαν.] See supra xiii. 18. xiv. 12. The sense, however, is disputed. It is probably, as Iaspis expresses it, 'In his enodandis cerni potest ingenii acumen.' Heinrichs, however, by ὁ νοῦς, understands the allegorical meaning of this emblem, and in σοφίαν ἔχει ὧδε the ὧδε, he thinks, may be taken for οὕτως or τῆνδε; q. d. 'the interpretation of this, and, indeed, of the following visions, will exercise the ingenuity of the inquirer;' or (if ἔχει be supposed to be, as often, for παρέχει), 'will make thee wise, by affording thee an opportunity of exercising thy ingenuity,' equivalent to what is said at xiii. 18. The fulfilment of the predictions here has been traced variously, according to the hypothesis adopted. See the Notes of Bp. Newton and Prof. Lee.

11. ὃ ἦν—ἔστι] viz. that did exist under his former heads, and does not do so any longer, but exists under another form. (Holden.)

13. μίαν γνώμην ἔχ.] 'will be of one mind.'

14. Κύριος κυρίων, &c.] So in Æschyl. Suppl. 533, ἄναξ ἀνάκτων. Here is plainly asserted the Divinity of the Lord Jesus.

16. Here we have strong metaphors importing utter destruction.

XVIII. In this Chapter we have nothing more than another Revelation, given for the purpose, perhaps, of marking out with greater strength the certain fall of heathen Rome. The terms are in many cases taken from the ancient prophets, as will appear from marginal references in the common Bibles. (Lee.)

1. ἄλλον ἄγγελον.] Or rather Christ himself, or an emblematical representation of him.

μεγάλη! καὶ ἐγένετο κατοικητήριον δαιμόνων, καὶ φυλακὴ παντὸς πνεύματος ἀκαθάρτου, καὶ φυλακὴ παντὸς ὀρνέου 3 ἀκαθάρτου καὶ μεμισημένου· [b] ὅτι ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου τοῦ θυμοῦ [b] Supra 14. 8. & 17. 2. Jer. 51. 7. Nah. 3, 4.
τῆς πορνείας αὐτῆς πέπωκε πάντα τὰ ἔθνη· καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς μετ' αὐτῆς ἐπόρνευσαν, καὶ οἱ ἔμποροι τῆς γῆς ἐκ τῆς δυνάμεως τοῦ στρήνους αὐτῆς ἐπλούτησαν.
4 [c] Καὶ ἤκουσα ἄλλην φωνὴν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ λέγουσαν· [c] Is. 48. 20. & 52. 11. Jer. 50. 8. & 51. 6, 45. 52. 11. 2 Cor. 6. 17.
Ἐξέλθετε ἐξ αὐτῆς, ὁ λαός μου, ἵνα μὴ συγκοινω-νήσητε ταῖς ἁμαρτίαις αὐτῆς, καὶ ἵνα μὴ λάβητε ἐκ τῶν 5 πληγῶν αὐτῆς! [d] ὅτι * ἐκολλήθησαν αὐτῆς αἱ ἁμαρτίαι ἄχρι [d] Gen. 18. 20, 21. Jer. 51. 9. supra 16. 19.
τοῦ οὐρανοῦ· καὶ ἐμνημόνευσεν ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ἀδικήματα αὐτῆς.
6 [e] Ἀπόδοτε αὐτῇ ὡς καὶ αὐτὴ ἀπέδωκεν [ὑμῖν], καὶ διπλώσατε [e] Ps. 137. 8. Jer. 50. 15. supra 13. 10.
αὐτῇ διπλᾶ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῆς· ἐν τῷ ποτηρίῳ ᾧ ἐκέρασε 7 κεράσατε αὐτῇ διπλοῦν· [f] ὅσα ἐδόξασεν ἑαυτὴν καὶ ἐστρη- [f] Isa. 47. 7, 8. νίασε, τοσοῦτον δότε αὐτῇ βασανισμὸν καὶ πένθος. Ὅτι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ αὐτῆς λέγει· Κάθημαι βασίλισσα καὶ χήρα οὐκ 8 εἰμὶ, καὶ πένθος οὐ μὴ ἴδω. [g] διὰ τοῦτο ἐν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ [g] 2 Thess. 2. 8. supra 17. 16.
ἥξουσιν αἱ πληγαὶ αὐτῆς, θάνατος καὶ πένθος καὶ λιμός· καὶ ἐν πυρὶ κατακαυθήσεται· ὅτι ἰσχυρὸς Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ 9 κρίνων αὐτήν. [h] Καὶ κλαύσονται [αὐτὴν] καὶ κόψονται ἐπ' [h] Ezek. 26. 16. supra 17. 2. & 18. 3. infra ver. 18. αὐτῇ οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς οἱ μετ' αὐτῆς πορνεύσαντες καὶ στρηνιάσαντες, ὅταν βλέπωσι τὸν καπνὸν τῆς πυρώσεως 10 αὐτῆς, [i] ἀπὸ μακρόθεν ἑστηκότες, διὰ τὸν φόβον τοῦ βασα- [i] Isa. 21. 9. Jer. 51. 8. supra 14. 8.
νισμοῦ αὐτῆς, λέγοντες· Οὐαὶ, οὐαί! ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη,

2. ἔπεσεν, ἔπεσε, &c.] Compare Is. xxi. 9. The destruction of this spiritual Babylon is vividly represented by imagery derived from what usually accompanies utter destruction in great Oriental capitals; for in the East the desertion of the habitations by man soon makes them the resort of the wild animals of every kind,—partly beasts, but chiefly birds, as the testimony of all travellers in Oriental countries attests; and not only of those, but, according to the notions of the Jews, of evil spirits, which were supposed to choose their habitation in all desert places. Comp. Is. xiii. 20. xxxiv. 11. Φυλακὴ, 'haunt or lurking-place.' Μεμισ., 'hateful;' because the unclean birds were held in especial abhorrence by the Jews.

3. Here is given the reason why this ruin has overtaken the city. Στρήνους. See Note on 1 Tim. v. 11. With this compare a similar passage in Is. xxiii. 8, with respect to Tyre.

4. ἐξέλθετε ἐξ αὐτῆς, &c.] Compare Jer. li. 6. Numb. xv. 26. 2 Cor. vi. 17.

5. ἐκολλήθησαν.] This, for the common reading ἠκολούθησαν, is found in very many MSS. and early Editions, and has been adopted by Wetstein, Griesbach, Matthæi, Tittman, Heinrichs, Vater, and Scholz; and rightly: for though the common reading be not unsuitable, yet the other is the much stronger term, and bears the stamp of truth in its very harshness, which, however, is not without strict propriety. For, as Heinrichs remarks, 'Adhærent illis ad judicem cœlestem proficiscentibus peccata tenacissimè, perpetui comites et accusatores. Vid. Gen. xviii. 20, 21, infra xix. 13, et Odyss. O. 328, τῶν ὕβρις τε, βίη τε, σιδήρεον οὐρανὸν ἧκει. Cf. Jer. li. 18.' Indeed the reading is confirmed by Jer. li. 9, from which passage the whole of the first clause of this verse is taken; since נגע might be rendered ἐκολλήθησαν, but not ἠκολούθησαν. The words, too, might easily be confounded by copyists; who would be likely, as usual, to take the more intelligible term.

— ἐμνημόνευσεν ὁ Θεὸς τὰ ἀδικ. α.] God is said to remember sin by punishing it. See Note supra xvi. 19.

6. Here they are enjoined not only to avoid communication with her, as accursed, but to avenge her fornications and seductions, and that by a double retaliation; which is expressed in strong figures, found also in Jer. l. 15. xvi. 18. For ἀπέδωκε, however, I conjecture should be read ἐπέδωκε, 'gave unto:' a sense not unfrequent.

7. ἐστρηνίασε] 'hath played the lascivious wanton.' See Note on 1 Tim. v. 11. Κάθημαι βασίλισσα—ἴδω. All images of serenity and peace. Comp. Is. xlvii. 7, 8. Ez. xxvii. 3.

8. ἐν μιᾷ ἡμέρᾳ] i. e. suddenly and at once.

Βαβυλὼν ἡ πόλις ἡ ἰσχυρά, ὅτι [ἐν] μιᾷ ὥρᾳ ἦλθεν ἡ κρίσις k Ezek. 27. 36. σου! [k] Καὶ οἱ ἔμποροι τῆς γῆς κλαίουσι καὶ πενθοῦσιν ἐπ' 11 αὐτῇ, ὅτι τὸν γόμον αὐτῶν οὐδεὶς ἀγοράζει οὐκέτι, γόμον 12 χρυσοῦ καὶ ἀργύρου, καὶ λίθου τιμίου καὶ μαργαρίτου, καὶ βύσσου καὶ πορφύρας, καὶ σηρικοῦ καὶ κοκκίνου, καὶ πᾶν ξύλον θύϊνον, καὶ πᾶν σκεῦος ἐλεφάντινον, καὶ πᾶν σκεῦος ἐκ ξύλου τιμιωτάτου, καὶ χαλκοῦ καὶ σιδήρου καὶ μαρμάρου, l Ezek. 27. 13. [l] καὶ κινάμωμον καὶ ἄμωμον καὶ θυμιάματα, καὶ μύρον καὶ 13 λίβανον, καὶ οἶνον καὶ ἔλαιον, καὶ σεμίδαλιν καὶ σῖτον, καὶ κτήνη καὶ πρόβατα, καὶ ἵππων καὶ ῥεδῶν καὶ σωμάτων, καὶ ψυχὰς ἀνθρώπων. Καὶ ἡ ὀπώρα τῆς ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ψυχῆς 14 σου ἀπῆλθεν ἀπὸ σοῦ, καὶ πάντα τὰ λιπαρὰ καὶ τὰ λαμπρὰ * ἀπώλετο ἀπὸ σοῦ· καὶ οὐκέτι οὐ μὴ εὑρήσῃς αὐτά. Οἱ 15 ἔμποροι τούτων, οἱ πλουτήσαντες ἀπ' αὐτῆς, ἀπὸ μακρόθεν στήσονται, διὰ τὸν φόβον τοῦ βασανισμοῦ αὐτῆς, κλαίοντες m Supra 17. 4. καὶ πενθοῦντες, [m] [καὶ] λέγοντες· Οὐαὶ, οὐαί! ἡ πόλις ἡ 16 μεγάλη, ἡ περιβεβλημένη βύσσινον καὶ πορφυροῦν καὶ κόκκινον, καὶ κεχρυσωμένη ἐν χρυσῷ καὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ καὶ μαρ-n Isa. 23. 14. Ezek. 27. 29. γαρίταις· ὅτι μιᾷ ὥρᾳ ἠρημώθη ὁ τοσοῦτος πλοῦτος. [n] Καὶ 17 πᾶς κυβερνήτης καὶ πᾶς ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων [ὁ ὅμιλος], καὶ ναῦται, καὶ ὅσοι τὴν θάλασσαν ἐργάζονται, ἀπὸ μακρόθεν o Supra 5. 9. & 13. 4. ἔστησαν, [o] καὶ ἔκραζον *βλέποντες τὸν καπνὸν τῆς πυρώσεως 18 p Jos. 7. 6. Job 2. 12. αὐτῆς, λέγοντες· Τίς ὁμοία τῇ πόλει τῇ μεγάλῃ; [p] Καὶ 19

11. τὸν γόμον.] The word signifies a freight, or, as here, freighted merchandise. With the whole passage compare Ezek. xxvii.

12. Now follows a list of the various sorts of luxurious merchandise, with which compare a very similar one (introduced for the same purpose) in Is. iii. 16—24. The importation of every kind of luxury from all countries into Rome is well known. And here I would observe that what Pericles (Thucyd. ii. 38) says hyperbolically of Athens, was literally true of Rome: ἐπεισέρχεται δὲ, διὰ μέγεθος τῆς πόλεως, ἐκ πάσης γῆς τὰ πάντα.

— θύϊνον] 'of citron,' or some other such odoriferous wood.

13. καὶ ἄμωμον.] A sort of aromatic perfume, on which see Schleusner's Lex. The word is not found in some MSS., being, no doubt, omitted per homœoteleuton. Σεμίδαλιν, 'the finest flour.'

— καὶ κτήνη καὶ πρόβατα, &c.] Of this use of σῶμα, to denote slave, examples occur both in the Sept. (as Gen. xxxvi. 6, and elsewhere) and the Classical writers, especially the later ones, as Polybius. And the same idiom is found in the Latin corpus. Why the word was so employed was, Epiphanius says, in his treatise de Ancoratu, C. v. 9, 'because all the command a man exercises over his slaves is limited to the body, and cannot reach the soul [though it may oppress the soul, and make it faint. Edit.]; and because bodily service was the thing chiefly looked for in a slave.' It may be added that to this idea of traffic, as respects the σώματα, or slaves, there seems an allusion in the next words, καὶ ψυχὰς ἀνθρώπων, which may be supposed intended to set forth the iniquitous nature of this traffic, by the consideration that it is exercised on their fellow-men, beings endued with a rational soul! And so Heinrichs aptly compares the expression in a strikingly similar passage of Ezekiel xxvii. 13, נפש אדם, ἐνεπορεύοντό σοι ἐν ψυχαῖς ἀνθρώπων, adducing also in illustration the German word seelen-verkäufer, a soul-merchant. Here, then, the καὶ seems highly significant, having, as often, the sense even; and ἀγοράζειν is here to be repeated from the preceding, as also γόμον at the foregoing Genitives.

14. ἡ ὀπώρα] 'the rich fruits.' An emblem of luxury.

17. πᾶς κυβερν.] On the exact force of the term κυβερν. see my Note on Thucydides, vol. i. 163. ii. 126. As to the controverted expression, πᾶς ἐπὶ τῶν πλοίων, it might be shown, by many proofs from the Classical writers (see my Note above, and on Acts xxvii. 11), that the meaning of it must be 'every supercargo.' The words ὁ ὅμιλος after πλοίων have but slender authority, and are evidently (as Matthæi and others suppose) from the margin; notwithstanding the learned demur made by Bp. Middleton. Ὅσοι τὴν θάλασσαν ἐργ. is not a mere Hellenistic phrase, but occurs also in the later Classical writers.

ἔβαλον χοῦν ἐπὶ τὰς κεφαλὰς αὐτῶν, καὶ ἔκραζον κλαίοντες καὶ πενθοῦντες, λέγοντες· Οὐαὶ, οὐαί! ἡ πόλις ἡ μεγάλη, ἐν ᾗ ἐπλούτησαν πάντες οἱ ἔχοντες πλοῖα ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ ἐκ τῆς 20 τιμιότητος αὐτῆς! ὅτι μιᾷ ὥρᾳ ἠρημώθη. [q] Εὐφραίνου ἐπ' q Isa. 44. 23 & 49. 13.
* αὐτῇ, οὐρανὲ, καὶ οἱ ἅγιοι ἀπόστολοι καὶ οἱ προφῆται, ὅτι Jer. 51. 48. infra 19. 2. ἔκρινεν ὁ Θεὸς τὸ κρῖμα ὑμῶν ἐξ αὐτῆς.
21 [r] Καὶ ἦρεν εἷς ἄγγελος ἰσχυρὸς λίθον ὡς μύλον μέγαν, r Jer. 51. 64.
καὶ ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν θάλασσαν, λέγων· Οὕτως ὁρμήματι βλη-θήσεται Βαβυλὼν ἡ μεγάλη πόλις, καὶ οὐ μὴ εὑρεθῇ ἔτι.
22 [s] καὶ φωνὴ κιθαρῳδῶν καὶ μουσικῶν καὶ αὐλητῶν καὶ σαλπι- s Isa. 24. 8. Jer. 7. 34.
στῶν οὐ μὴ ἀκουσθῇ ἐν σοὶ ἔτι· καὶ πᾶς τεχνίτης πάσης & 16. 9 & 25. 10. τέχνης οὐ μὴ εὑρεθῇ ἐν σοὶ ἔτι· καὶ φωνὴ μύλου οὐ μὴ Ezek. 26. 13.
23 ἀκουσθῇ ἐν σοὶ ἔτι· [t] καὶ φῶς λύχνου οὐ μὴ φανῇ ἐν σοὶ t Isa. 23. 8. Jer. 7. 34.
ἔτι, καὶ φωνὴ νυμφίου καὶ νύμφης οὐ μὴ ἀκουσθῇ ἐν σοὶ & 16. 9. & 25. 10.
ἔτι· (ὅτι οἱ ἔμποροί σου ἦσαν οἱ μεγιστᾶνες τῆς γῆς·) ὅτι 24 ἐν τῇ φαρμακείᾳ σου ἐπλανήθησαν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη· [u] καὶ ἐν u Supra 17. 6.
αὐτῇ αἷμα προφητῶν καὶ ἁγίων εὑρέθη, καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐσφαγμένων ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.
1 XIX. [a] [ΚΑΙ] μετὰ ταῦτα ἤκουσα ὡς φωνὴν ὄχλου πολ- a Supra 7. 10. & 12. 10.
λοῦ μεγάλην ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ, λέγοντος· Ἀλληλούϊα! ἡ σω-τηρία καὶ ἡ δόξα [καὶ ἡ τιμὴ] καὶ ἡ δύναμις [Κυρίῳ] τῷ 2 Θεῷ ἡμῶν! [b] ὅτι ἀληθιναὶ καὶ δίκαιαι αἱ κρίσεις αὐτοῦ· ὅτι b Deut. 32. 43.
ἔκρινε τὴν πόρνην τὴν μεγάλην, ἥτις ἔφθειρε τὴν γῆν ἐν supra 15. 3. & 16. 7. τῇ πορνείᾳ αὐτῆς, καὶ ἐξεδίκησε τὸ αἷμα τῶν δούλων αὐτοῦ & 18. 20.
3 ἐκ [τῆς] χειρὸς αὐτῆς. [c] Καὶ δεύτερον εἴρηκαν· Ἀλληλούϊα! c Is. 34. 10. supra 14. 11.
καὶ ὁ καπνὸς αὐτῆς ἀναβαίνει εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων! & 18. 18.
4 [d] Καὶ ἔπεσον οἱ πρεσβύτεροι οἱ εἴκοσι [καὶ] τέσσαρες καὶ d supra 4. 4, 6.
τὰ τέσσαρα ζῶα, καὶ προσεκύνησαν τῷ Θεῷ τῷ καθημένῳ 5 ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, λέγοντες· Ἀμήν· Ἀλληλούϊα! Καὶ φωνὴ ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου ἐξῆλθε, λέγουσα· Αἰνεῖτε τὸν Θεὸν ἡμῶν, πάντες οἱ δοῦλοι αὐτοῦ, καὶ οἱ φοβούμενοι αὐτὸν, [καὶ] οἱ μικροὶ 6 καὶ οἱ μεγάλοι! [e] Καὶ ἤκουσα ὡς φωνὴν ὄχλου πολλοῦ, καὶ e Supra 11. 15, 17.
ὡς φωνὴν ὑδάτων πολλῶν, καὶ ὡς φωνὴν βροντῶν ἰσχυρῶν, & 12. 10.
* λέγοντες· Ἀλληλούϊα! ὅτι ἐβασίλευσε Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ 7 παντοκράτωρ. [f] χαίρωμεν καὶ ἀγαλλιώμεθα, καὶ δῶμεν f Matt. 22. 2. & 25. 10. Luke 14. 16.

19. πάντες—θαλάσσῃ] 'all who had ships [sailing] on the sea,' i. e. on trading voyages.

21. λίθον—ἔβαλεν εἰς τὴν θάλ.] So in Jer. li. 63, 64, the fall of Babylon is signified by a stone cast into the Euphrates. Οὕτως ὁρμ. is (as Heinrichs says) for τοιούτῳ, or τοσούτῳ, ὁρμήματι.

22. πᾶς τεχνίτης πάσης τέχ.] 'artificers of every sort.' Φωνὴ μύλου, i. e. 'the noise of the hand-engine for grinding corn,' of which there must have been an immense number in so vast a city.

23. φῶς λύχνου—σοὶ ἔτι.] This is meant to intimate that there will be an utter end to all the gaieties and luxuries of life; see Bp. Jebb's Sacr. Lit., p. 387. The words ὅτι ἐν τῇ—τὰ ἔθνη suggest the cause of these judgments.

XIX. 1—10. These verses are a song of triumphant congratulation by the redeemed saints in heaven, and angelic beings, in consequence of the just overthrow of the mystic Babylon.

2. ἐξεδίκησε τὸ αἷμα, &c.] I would compare a similar phrase in Lycophron, Cassand. 1397, ἀδελφῆς αἷμα τιμωρούμενος. See Bp. Jebb's Sacr. Lit. p. 387.

τὴν δόξαν αὐτῷ· ὅτι ἦλθεν ὁ γάμος τοῦ Ἀρνίου, καὶ ἡ γυνὴ αὐτοῦ ἡτοίμασεν ἑαυτήν. [g] Καὶ ἐδόθη αὐτῇ ἵνα περιβάληται 8 βύσσινον καθαρὸν καὶ λαμπρόν· (τὸ γὰρ βύσσινον τὰ δικαιώματά ἐστι τῶν ἁγίων.)
[h] Καὶ λέγει μοι· Γράψον· Μακάριοι οἱ εἰς τὸ δεῖπνον 9 τοῦ γάμου τοῦ Ἀρνίου κεκλημένοι. καὶ λέγει μοι· Οὗτοι οἱ λόγοι ἀληθινοί εἰσι τοῦ Θεοῦ. [i] Καὶ ἔπεσον ἔμπροσθεν 10 τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ προσκυνῆσαι αὐτῷ· καὶ λέγει μοι· Ὅρα μή·—σύνδουλός σου εἰμὶ, καὶ τῶν ἀδελφῶν σου τῶν ἐχόντων τὴν μαρτυρίαν τοῦ Ἰησοῦ· τῷ Θεῷ προσκύνησον· (ἡ γὰρ μαρτυρία τοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐστι τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς προφητείας.) [k] Καὶ εἶδον τὸν οὐρανὸν ἀνεῳγμένον· καὶ ἰδοὺ, ἵππος 11 λευκὸς, καὶ ὁ καθήμενος ἐπ᾽ αὐτὸν, καλούμενος πιστὸς καὶ ἀληθινὸς, καὶ ἐν δικαιοσύνῃ κρίνει καὶ πολεμεῖ. [l] Οἱ δὲ 12 ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτοῦ ὡς φλὸξ πυρὸς, καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν κεφαλὴν αὐτοῦ διαδήματα πολλά· ἔχων ὄνομα γεγραμμένον ὃ οὐδεὶς οἶδεν εἰ μὴ αὐτός· [m] καὶ περιβεβλημένος ἱμάτιον βεβαμμέ- 13 νον αἵματι· καὶ καλεῖται τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ· Ὁ ΛΟΓΟΣ ΤΟΥ ΘΕΟΥ. [n] Καὶ τὰ στρατεύματα τὰ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ 14 ἠκολούθει αὐτῷ ἐφ᾽ ἵπποις λευκοῖς, ἐνδεδυμένοι βύσσινον λευκὸν [καὶ] καθαρόν. [o] καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ ἐκπο- 15 ρεύεται ῥομφαία ὀξεῖα, ἵνα ἐν αὐτῇ πατάσσῃ τὰ ἔθνη· καὶ αὐτὸς ποιμανεῖ αὐτοὺς ἐν ῥάβδῳ σιδηρᾷ· καὶ αὐτὸς πατεῖ τὴν ληνὸν τοῦ οἴνου τοῦ θυμοῦ καὶ τῆς ὀργῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ παντοκράτορος· [p] καὶ ἔχει ἐπὶ τὸ ἱμάτιον καὶ ἐπὶ 16 τὸν μηρὸν αὐτοῦ [τὸ] ὄνομα γεγραμμένον· ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΝ ΚΑΙ ΚΥΡΙΟΣ ΚΥΡΙΩΝ. [q] Καὶ εἶδον ἕνα 17 ἄγγελον ἑστῶτα ἐν τῷ ἡλίῳ· καὶ ἔκραξε φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, λέγων πᾶσι τοῖς ὀρνέοις τοῖς πετομένοις ἐν μεσουρανήματι· Δεῦτε καὶ * συνάχθητε εἰς τὸ δεῖπνον * τὸ μέγα τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἵνα φάγητε σάρκας βασιλέων, καὶ σάρκας χιλιάρχων, καὶ 18 g Psal. 45. 14, 15. Ezek. 16. 10. h Matt. 22. 2. Luke 14. 16. infra 21. 5. i Acts 10. 26. & 14. 4. 1 John 5. 10. supra 12 17. infra 22. 8.

k Supra 3. 14. & 6. 2.
l Supra 1. 14. & 2. 18.
m Isa. 63. 2, 3. John 1. 1. 1 John 1. 1.
n Matt. 28. 3. supra 4. 4. & 7. 9.
o Psal. 2. 9. & 76. 13. Isa. 11. 4. & 63. 3. 2 Thess. 2. 8. supra 2. 16 27. & 12. 5. & 14. 19, 20. infra v. 21. p 1 Tim. 6. 15. supra 17. 14. q Jer. 12. 9. Ezek. 39. 17.

7. ἦλθεν ὁ γάμος—ἑαυτήν.] A most beautiful representation, by imagery elsewhere occurring in the New Test. (as 2 Cor. xi. 2, and Eph. v. 22—32), of the spiritual union between Christ and his Church, consisting of his faithful disciples of every age.

8. δικαιώματα.] Render, 'justifications,' i. e. justificatory robes. See Note on Matt. xvii. 12.

10. προσκυνῆσαι αὐτῷ.] Intending merely an act of civil honour, or homage. But the angel declined it with humility, and with a wise and prophetic caution. (Abp. Newcome.) See Bp. Bull's Def. Fid., pp. 30, 31.

— ἡ γὰρ μαρτυρία—τῆς προφητείας.] The best interpretation I have seen of this passage is that of J. F. à Stade, given by Wolfius; it supposes the angel to say: 'Do not offer me the worship due to God; I am unworthy of the honour, since I am not superior to yourself, but exercise the same function. We both testify of Christ; you to the present generation, I to posterity. Wherefore, love me as a brother and fellow-labourer, but do not worship me as God.' If this be the meaning of a text which has created much dispute, and nothing, I think, can be more clear and satisfactory, we have here a convertible proposition. 'Ἡ μαρτυρία τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, the office of an Apostle which you fill, says the angel, and τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς προφητείας exercised by me, are not different in value or dignity, but are one and the same thing.' (Bp. Middleton.) See Note on John xvi. 13, and John v. 39.

11—21. Here our Lord is introduced as enabling his followers to triumph in their last combat with the anti-christian powers, and is described in various characters, which respect his attributes and Atonement.

17, 18. By the image of a supper, and eating, σάρκας ἰσχυρῶν, καὶ σάρκας ἵππων καὶ τῶν καθημένων ἐπ' αὐτῶν, καὶ σάρκας πάντων ἐλευθέρων τε καὶ δούλων, 19 καὶ μικρῶν καὶ μεγάλων. Καὶ εἶδον τὸ θηρίον, καὶ τοὺς βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς, καὶ τὰ στρατεύματα αὐτῶν συνηγμένα ποιῆσαι πόλεμον μετὰ τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ ἵππου καὶ μετὰ 20 τοῦ στρατεύματος αὐτοῦ. [r] Καὶ ἐπιάσθη τὸ θηρίον, καὶ ὁ

* μετ' αὐτοῦ ὁ ψευδοπροφήτης ὁ ποιήσας τὰ σημεῖα ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ, ἐν οἷς ἐπλάνησε τοὺς λαβόντας τὸ χάραγμα τοῦ θηρίου, καὶ τοὺς προσκυνοῦντας τῇ εἰκόνι αὐτοῦ· ζῶντες ἐβλήθησαν οἱ δύο εἰς τὴν λίμνην τοῦ πυρὸς τὴν καιομένην 21 ἐν [τῷ] θείῳ. Καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ ἀπεκτάνθησαν ἐν τῇ ῥομφαίᾳ τοῦ καθημένου ἐπὶ τοῦ ἵππου, τῇ ἐκπορευομένῃ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος αὐτοῦ· καὶ πάντα τὰ ὄρνεα ἐχορτάσθησαν ἐκ τῶν σαρκῶν αὐτῶν.

r Deut. 13. 1. Dan. 7. 11. Matt. 24. 24. supra 13. 12, &c. & 14. 10. & 16. 14. infra 20. 10.

1 XX. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον ἄγγελον καταβαίνοντα ἐκ τοῦ οὐρα-νοῦ ἔχοντα τὴν κλεῖδα τῆς ἀβύσσου, καὶ ἅλυσιν μεγάλην 2 ἐπὶ τὴν χεῖρα αὐτοῦ. [b] καὶ ἐκράτησε τὸν δράκοντα τὸν ὄφιν τὸν ἀρχαῖον, ὅς ἐστι Διάβολος, καὶ Σατανᾶς· καὶ ἔδησεν 3 αὐτὸν χίλια ἔτη· [c] καὶ ἔβαλεν αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν ἄβυσσον, καὶ ἔκλεισεν [αὐτὸν] καὶ ἐσφράγισεν ἐπάνω αὐτοῦ, ἵνα μὴ πλα-νήσῃ τὰ ἔθνη ἔτι, ἄχρι τελεσθῇ τὰ χίλια ἔτη· καὶ μετὰ 4 ταῦτα δεῖ αὐτὸν λυθῆναι μικρὸν χρόνον. [d] Καὶ εἶδον θρόνους· καὶ ἐκάθισαν ἐπ' αὐτούς, καὶ κρῖμα ἐδόθη αὐτοῖς· καὶ τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν πεπελεκισμένων διὰ τὴν μαρτυρίαν Ἰησοῦ καὶ διὰ τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ οἵτινες οὐ προσεκύνησαν τῷ θηρίῳ οὔτε τῇ εἰκόνι αὐτοῦ, καὶ οὐκ ἔλαβον τὸ χάραγμα ἐπὶ τὸ μέτωπον [αὐτῶν] καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν χεῖρα αὐτῶν. καὶ 5 ἔζησαν καὶ ἐβασίλευσαν μετὰ Χριστοῦ χίλια ἔτη· οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν οὐκ [ἀν]έζησαν * ἄχρι τελεσθῇ τὰ χίλια 6 ἔτη. αὕτη ἡ ἀνάστασις ἡ πρώτη. [e] Μακάριος καὶ ἅγιος ὁ ἔχων μέρος ἐν τῇ ἀναστάσει τῇ πρώτῃ· ἐπὶ τούτων ὁ θάνατος ὁ δεύτερος οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν· ἀλλ' ἔσονται ἱερεῖς τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ βασιλεύσουσι μετ' αὐτοῦ χίλια ἔτη.

a Supra 1. 18.

b 2 Pet. 2. 4. supra 12. 9.

c Supra 16. 14, 16. infra v. 8.

d Dan. 7. 9, 22, 27. Matt. 19. 28. Luke 22. 30. Rom. 8. 17. 1 Cor. 6. 2. 3. 2 Tim. 2. 12. supra 3. 16. & 5. 10. & 6. 9, 10, 11. & 13. 12. &c.

e Isa. 61. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 9. supra i. 6. & 2. 11. & 5. 10.

&c., is represented a great slaughter of, and a complete victory over his enemies; and in vv. 19—21, the nature of that victory, together with the advantages resulting from it. (Holden.)

XX. 1—3. In the foregoing Chapter the termination of all open opposition to the Gospel, and the dreadful punishment of all those who had introduced, supported, or concurred in the idolatrous corruptions before described, are most clearly predicted. But while the instruments of mischief had been cut off, the great agent was still at liberty; and he would surely excite fresh disturbances, or produce new delusions, if not prevented. The Apostle had, therefore, a vision emblematical of the restraints which would be laid on Satan himself. It is here implied that Christ, with omnipotence and absolute authority, will restrain 'the devil and his angels,' even all his legions of evil spirits, from deceiving mankind in general, or any part of them, into idolatry, impiety, heresy, and wickedness, as he has hitherto done. (Scott.)

4. καὶ ἐκάθ.] Supply τινες.

— καὶ τὰς ψυχάς.] Repeat εἶδον. Καὶ οἵτινες οὐ προσεκ. This is well rendered by Professor Scholefield, 'and whosoever worshipped not.' Compare ii. 24.

Καὶ ὅταν τελεσθῇ τὰ χίλια ἔτη, λυθήσεται ὁ Σατανᾶς 7 f Ezek. 38. 2. & 39. 1. supra 16. 14.

ἐκ τῆς φυλακῆς αὐτοῦ, [f] καὶ ἐξελεύσεται πλανῆσαι τὰ ἔθνη 8 τὰ ἐν ταῖς τέσσαρσι γωνίαις τῆς γῆς, τὸν Γὼγ καὶ τὸν Μαγὼγ, συναγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς εἰς πόλεμον, ὧν ὁ ἀριθμὸς αὐτῶν ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης. Καὶ ἀνέβησαν ἐπὶ τὸ πλά- 9 τος τῆς γῆς, καὶ ἐκύκλωσαν τὴν παρεμβολὴν τῶν ἁγίων καὶ g Dan. 7. 11. supra 19. 20. & 14. 10, 11.

τὴν πόλιν τὴν ἠγαπημένην· [g] καὶ κατέβη πῦρ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, καὶ κατέφαγεν αὐτούς· καὶ ὁ Διάβολος ὁ 10 πλανῶν αὐτοὺς ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν λίμνην τοῦ πυρὸς καὶ θείου, ὅπου καὶ τὸ θηρίον καὶ ὁ ψευδοπροφήτης· καὶ βασανισθήσονται ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτὸς εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων.

h 2 Pet. 3. 10.

[h] Καὶ εἶδον θρόνον λευκὸν μέγαν, καὶ τὸν καθήμενον ἐπ' 11 αὐτοῦ· οὗ ἀπὸ προσώπου ἔφυγεν ἡ γῆ καὶ ὁ οὐρανὸς, καὶ i Exod. 32. 32. Psal. 62. 13. & 69. 29. Jer. 17. 10. & 32. 19. Dan. 7. 10. Matt. 16. 27. Rom. 2. 6. & 14. 12. 1 Cor. 3. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Gal. 6. 5. Phil. 4 3. supra 2. 23. & 3. 5. & 13. 8. infra 21. 27. & 22. 12.

τόπος οὐχ εὑρέθη αὐτοῖς. [i] καὶ εἶδον τοὺς νεκροὺς, μικροὺς 12 καὶ μεγάλους, ἑστῶτας ἐνώπιον τοῦ * θρόνου, καὶ βιβλία ἠνεῴχθησαν· καὶ ἄλλο βιβλίον ἠνεῴχθη, ὅ ἐστι τῆς ζωῆς· καὶ ἐκρίθησαν οἱ νεκροὶ ἐκ τῶν γεγραμμένων ἐν τοῖς βιβλίοις κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν. Καὶ ἔδωκεν ἡ θάλασσα τοὺς ἐν αὐτῇ 13 νεκροὺς, καὶ ὁ Θάνατος καὶ ὁ ᾍδης ἔδωκαν τοὺς νεκροὺς τοὺς ἐν αὐτοῖς· καὶ ἐκρίθησαν ἕκαστος κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν. [k] καὶ 14

k 1 Cor. 15. 26, 54, 55.

ὁ Θάνατος καὶ ὁ ᾍδης ἐβλήθησαν εἰς τὴν λίμνην τοῦ πυρός· οὗτος ὁ δεύτερος θάνατός ἐστι. Καὶ εἴ τις οὐχ εὑρέθη ἐν τῇ 15 βίβλῳ τῆς ζωῆς γεγραμμένος, ἐβλήθη εἰς τὴν λίμνην τοῦ πυρός.

a Isa 65. 17. & 66. 22 2 Pet. 3. 13.

XXI. [a] ΚΑΙ εἶδον οὐρανὸν καινὸν καὶ γῆν καινήν· ὁ γὰρ 1 πρῶτος οὐρανὸς καὶ ἡ πρώτη γῆ παρῆλθε· καὶ ἡ θάλασσα b 2 Cor. 11. 2. Gal. 4 26. Heb. 11. 10. & 12. 22. & 13. 14. supra 3. 12. infra v. 10.

οὐκ ἔστιν ἔτι. [b] Καὶ [ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης] εἶδον τὴν πόλιν τὴν 2 ἁγίαν, Ἱερουσαλὴμ καινὴν, καταβαίνουσαν ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡτοιμασμένην ὡς νύμφην κεκοσμημένην τῷ

8. τὸν Γὼγ καὶ τὸν Μαγώγ.] An allusion, it is supposed, to Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. What nations are here meant, Expositors are wholly unable to ascertain. It is, however, probable, that no particular nations are meant; but that these are only names designating certain classes of men, inimical to the Gospel.

14. ὁ Θάνατος καὶ ὁ ᾍδης.] Render, 'Death and hades;' in other words, 'the death which consists in the separation of the soul from the body, and the state of souls intervening between death and judgment, shall be no more.' To the wicked these shall be succeeded by a more terrible death, the second death, the damnation of Gehenna, hell, properly so called. Indeed, in this sacred book, the commencement, as well as the destruction, of this intermediate state, are so clearly marked, as to render it almost impossible to mistake them. In vi. 8, we learn that hades follows close at the heels of death; and from this passage that both are involved in one common ruin at the universal judgment. (Campbell.)

XXI. In this and the following Chapter is described in glowing imagery (formed on that of the Prophets of the Old Test.) the bliss of the righteous in heaven, after the resurrection and judgment; unless, with some Expositors (especially those who maintain a literal resurrection at the beginning of the Millennium, and the personal reign of Christ on earth for a thousand years), we understand these concluding Chapters of the state of the Church during the MILLENNIUM. The best Expositors, however, are, in general, agreed that the only passage of Scripture which speaks of this Millennium (namely, xx. 4—6) is to be taken in a figurative acceptation; and, consequently, the present Chapters are to be understood of time subsequent to the general judgment. This, I think, has been proved by several Interpreters, but by no one more ably than by Mr. Scott. Thus, as Newcome observes, 'the new heaven and earth, and the new Jerusalem, are emblematical of the glory and happiness which will be the reward and happiness of good men for ever.'

3 ἀνδρὶ αὐτῆς. [c] Καὶ ἤκουσα φωνῆς μεγάλης ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, c Ezek. 43. 7 λεγούσης· Ἰδοὺ, ἡ σκηνὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ τῶν ἀν-θρώπων, καὶ σκηνώσει μετ' αὐτῶν· καὶ αὐτοὶ λαὸς αὐτοῦ ἔσονται, καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ Θεὸς ἔσται μετ' 4 αὐτῶν Θεὸς αὐτῶν· [d] καὶ ἐξαλείψει [ὁ Θεὸς] πᾶν d Isa. 25. 8. & 35. 10.
δάκρυον ἀπὸ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν αὐτῶν· καὶ ὁ θάνατος 1 Cor. 15. 26. 54. οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι, οὔτε πένθος οὔτε κραυγὴ οὔτε πόνος οὐκ ἔσται supra 7. 17.
5 ἔτι· ὅτι τὰ πρῶτα ἀπῆλθον. [e] Καὶ εἶπεν ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ e Isa 43. 19. 2 Cor. 5. 17 τοῦ θρόνου· Ἰδοὺ, καινὰ πάντα ποιῶ. καὶ λέγει μοι· supra 4. 2. & 19. 9. & 20. 11.
Γράψον· Ὅτι οὗτοι οἱ λόγοι ἀληθινοὶ καὶ πιστοί εἰσι.
6 [f] καὶ εἶπέ μοι· Γέγονε. ἐγώ εἰμι τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, ἡ ἀρχὴ f Isa. 12. 3. & 41. 4. & 44. 6. καὶ τὸ τέλος. ἐγὼ τῷ διψῶντι δώσω ἐκ τῆς πηγῆς & 55. 1. John 4. 10, 7 τοῦ ὕδατος τῆς ζωῆς δωρεάν. [g] ὁ νικῶν κληρονομήσει 14. & 7. 37. supra i. 8. & 16. 17.
* ταῦτα, καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ Θεὸς, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται μοι ὁ infra 22. 13, 17.
8 υἱός. [h] * τοῖς δὲ δειλοῖς καὶ ἀπίστοις, καὶ ἁμαρτωλοῖς καὶ g Zach. 8. 8. Heb. 8. 10. ἐβδελυγμένοις, καὶ φονεῦσι καὶ πόρνοις, καὶ * φαρμακοῖς καὶ h 1 Cor. 6. 9. Gal. 5. 21.
εἰδωλολάτραις καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς ψευδέσι, τὸ μέρος αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ Eph. 5. 5. 1 Tim 1. 9. λίμνῃ τῇ καιομένῃ πυρὶ καὶ θείῳ· ὅ ἐστι * ὁ θάνατος ὁ Heb. 12. 14. supra 20. 14, 15.
δεύτερος. infra 22. 15.
9 [i] Καὶ ἦλθε [πρός με] εἷς τῶν ἑπτὰ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἐχόν- i Supra 15. 1, 6, 7. & 19. 7.
των τὰς ἑπτὰ φιάλας τὰς γεμούσας τῶν ἑπτὰ πληγῶν τῶν ἐσχάτων· καὶ ἐλάλησε μετ' ἐμοῦ, λέγων· Δεῦρο, δείξω σοι 10 τὴν νύμφην, τοῦ Ἀρνίου τὴν γυναῖκα. [k] καὶ ἀπήνεγκέ με k Gal. 4. 26. Heb. 12. 22.
ἐν πνεύματι ἐπ' ὄρος μέγα καὶ ὑψηλὸν, καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι τὴν supra 1. 10. & 3. 12. & 21. 2.
πόλιν [τὴν μεγάλην] τὴν ἁγίαν Ἱερουσαλὴμ, καταβαίνουσαν 11 ἐκ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἔχουσαν τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ· [καὶ] ὁ φωστὴρ αὐτῆς ὅμοιος λίθῳ τιμιωτάτῳ, ὡς λίθῳ 12 ἰάσπιδι κρυσταλλίζοντι· [l] ἔχουσάν [τε] τεῖχος μέγα καὶ l Ezek. 48. 31.

4. τὰ πρῶτα.] Meaning, 'the first or former state.' See Matt. xii. 45, and 2 Pet. ii. 20.

5. ὁ καθήμενος ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου.] Meaning, either the Father, or his great representative.

— ἰδοὺ, καινὰ πάντα ποιῶ.] See Note on Matt. xvii. 11.

6. Compare Chapters i. and ii. Γέγονε. Equivalent to τετέλεσται, 'all things are brought to a consummation.' Τῆς πηγῆς τοῦ ὕδ. τ. ζ. A perennial spring of running water, as Newcome observes, is a fit emblem of happiness and immortality.

8. δειλοῖς.] Meaning, as Bp. Taylor explains, 'those who fear men more than God; who will do any thing, but suffer nothing; that fall away in persecution.'

After ἀπίστοις καὶ very many of the best MSS. have ἁμαρτωλοῖς καὶ, which has been adopted by Wetstein, Matthæi, Scholz, &c. And so in a kindred passage of 1 Tim. i. 9, we have ἁμαρτωλοῖς—καὶ βεβήλοις, where βεβήλοις answers to ἐβδελυγμένοις here. Finally, in thus closely connecting the words φονεῦσι καὶ πόρνοις I am supported by the similar combination, in the same passage, ἀνδροφόνοις, πόρνοις; and in closely connecting φαρμακοῖς καὶ εἰδωλολάτραις, by Gal. i. 20, εἰδωλολατρεία, φαρμακεία.

— ψευδέσι] for ψεύσταις in 1 Tim. i. 9, 'false towards God, wicked, ungodly.'

9. τὴν νύμφην, &c.] Meaning the Church of Christ in a state of glory and bliss.

11. τὴν δόξαν τοῦ Θεοῦ] the Shechinah. On the description which follows, see Bp. Newton, Dean Woodhouse, and Bp. Lowth, on Isaiah liv. 11. At ver. 14, the θεμελίους δώδεκα denote twelve courses of foundation stones, called by Aristophanes, Av. 1136, θεμέλιοι λίθοι. They were sometimes called δόμοι. Thus in Herodotus's description of the manner in which the walls of Babylon were built, it is said, i. 179, ὀρύσσοντες ἅμα τὴν τάφρον, ἐπλίνθευον τὴν γῆν τὴν ἐκ τοῦ ὀρύγματος ἐκφερομένην· ἑλκύσαντες δὲ πλίνθους ἱκανὰς, ὤπτησαν αὐτὰς ἐν καμίνοισι. μετὰ δὲ, τέλματι χρεώμενοι ἀσφάλτῳ θερμῇ, καὶ διὰ τριήκοντα δόμων πλίνθου, ταρσοὺς καλάμων διαστοιβάζοντες, ἔδειμαν τῆς τάφρου τὰ χείλεα.

ὑψηλὸν, ἔχουσαν πυλῶνας δώδεκα, καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς πυλῶσιν ἀγ-γέλους δώδεκα, καὶ ὀνόματα ἐπιγεγραμμένα, ἅ ἐστι τῶν δώδεκα φυλῶν τῶν υἱῶν Ἰσραήλ. Ἀπ' ἀνατολῆς πυλῶνες 13 τρεῖς, ἀπὸ βοῤῥᾶ πυλῶνες τρεῖς, ἀπὸ νότου πυλῶνες τρεῖς, m Matt. 16. 18. Eph. 2. 19, 20. ἀπὸ δυσμῶν πυλῶνες τρεῖς. [m] καὶ τὸ τεῖχος τῆς πόλεως 14 ἔχον θεμελίους δώδεκα, καὶ ἐν αὐτοῖς ὀνόματα τῶν δώδεκα n Ezek. 40. 3. Zach. 2. 1. ἀποστόλων τοῦ Ἀρνίου. [n] Καὶ ὁ λαλῶν μετ' ἐμοῦ εἶχε μέ- 15 τρον κάλαμον χρυσοῦν, ἵνα μετρήσῃ τὴν πόλιν καὶ τοὺς o Eph. 3. 18. πυλῶνας αὐτῆς καὶ τὸ τεῖχος αὐτῆς·—[o] καὶ ἡ πόλις τετρά- 16 γωνος κεῖται, καὶ τὸ μῆκος αὐτῆς [τοσοῦτόν ἐστιν] ‡ ὅσον καὶ τὸ πλάτος. καὶ ἐμέτρησε τὴν πόλιν τῷ καλάμῳ ἐπὶ σταδίων δώδεκα χιλιάδων· τὸ μῆκος καὶ τὸ πλάτος καὶ τὸ ὕψος αὐτῆς ἶσα ἐστι. καὶ ἐμέτρησε τὸ τεῖχος αὐτῆς ἑκα- 17 τὸν τεσσαρακοντατεσσάρων πηχῶν, μέτρον ἀνθρώπου, ὅ ἐστιν ἀγγέλου. Καὶ ἦν ἡ ἐνδόμησις τοῦ τείχους αὐτῆς 18 ἴασπις· καὶ ἡ πόλις χρυσίον καθαρὸν ὁμοία ὑάλῳ καθαρῷ.
καὶ οἱ θεμέλιοι τοῦ τείχους τῆς πόλεως παντὶ λίθῳ τιμίῳ 19 κεκοσμημένοι· ὁ θεμέλιος ὁ πρῶτος ἴασπις, ὁ δεύτερος σάπ-φειρος, ὁ τρίτος χαλκηδὼν, ὁ τέταρτος σμάραγδος, ὁ πέμ- 20 πτος σαρδόνυξ, ὁ ἕκτος σάρδιος, ὁ ἕβδομος χρυσόλιθος, ὁ ὄγδοος βήρυλλος, ὁ ἔννατος τοπάζιον, ὁ δέκατος χρυσόπρασος, ὁ ἑνδέκατος ὑάκινθος, ὁ δωδέκατος ἀμέθυστος. Καὶ οἱ 21 δώδεκα πυλῶνες, δώδεκα μαργαρίται· ἀνὰ εἷς ἕκαστος τῶν πυλώνων ἦν ἐξ ἑνὸς μαργαρίτου. καὶ ἡ πλατεῖα τῆς πόλεως χρυσίον καθαρὸν ὡς ὕαλος διαυγής. Καὶ ναὸν οὐκ εἶδον ἐν 22 αὐτῇ· ὁ γὰρ Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ ναὸς αὐτῆς ἐστι, p Isa. 60. 19. Zach. 14. 7. infra 22. 5. καὶ τὸ Ἀρνίον. [p] καὶ ἡ πόλις οὐ χρείαν ἔχει τοῦ ἡλίου 23 οὐδὲ τῆς σελήνης, ἵνα φαίνωσιν [ἐν] αὐτῇ· ἡ γὰρ δόξα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐφώτισεν αὐτὴν, καὶ ὁ λύχνος αὐτῆς τὸ Ἀρνίον.
q Isa. 60. 3. r Isa. 60. 11, 20. Zach. 14. 7. supra 3. 8. infra 22. 5. s Exod. 32. 32. Ps 69. 29. Isa. 35. 8. Joel 3. 17. Phil. 4. 3. supra 3. 5. & 13. 8. & 20. 12. infra 22. 14, 15. [q] Καὶ τὰ ἔθνη [τῶν σωζομένων] ἐν τῷ φωτὶ αὐτῆς περιπα- 24 τήσουσι. Καὶ οἱ βασιλεῖς τῆς γῆς φέρουσι τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν αὐτῶν εἰς αὐτήν. [r] καὶ οἱ πυλῶνες αὐτῆς οὐ μὴ 25 κλεισθῶσιν ἡμέρας, (νὺξ γὰρ οὐκ ἔσται ἐκεῖ·) καὶ οἴσουσι 26 τὴν δόξαν καὶ τὴν τιμὴν τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰς αὐτήν. [s] Καὶ 27 οὐ μὴ εἰσέλθῃ εἰς αὐτὴν πᾶν * κοινὸν, καὶ ποιοῦν βδέλυγμα καὶ ψεῦδος, εἰ μὴ οἱ γεγραμμένοι ἐν τῷ βιβλίῳ τῆς

16. ἐπὶ] 'up to,' 'about,' as used of measure or extent upon. So Ælian, Var. Hist. iii. 1, we have τὸ μῆκος ἐπὶ τέσσαρ. διήκει σταδίους. See Winer, Gr. Gr. § 53.

17. μέτρον ἀνθρώπου.] Meaning, 'such a measure as is usual among men;' similarly as it is said, Isaiah viii. 1, 'the pen of a man.'

19. σάπφειρος.] A precious stone, next in value to the diamond, mostly of a blue colour, and variegated.

20. σμάραγδος.] A name under which the ancients comprehended all gems of a fine green colour, including the emerald.

— σάρδιος.] A precious stone of a blood-red, or sometimes flesh colour, commonly called carnelian.

22. ναὸν οὐκ εἶδον ἐν α.] as being now unnecessary in the immediate presence of God.

24. ἐν τῷ φωτὶ αὐτῆς περιπατ.] So it is said, Ps. xxxvi. 9, 'in thy light shall we see light.'

25. οἱ πυλῶνες α. οὐ μὴ κλεισθ.] An emblem of peace. So Horace, 'Apertis otia portis.'

1 ζωῆς τοῦ Ἀρνίου. XXII. [a] Καὶ ἔδειξέ μοι [καθαρὸν] a Ezek. 47. 1. Zach. 14. 8. ποταμὸν ὕδατος ζωῆς λαμπρὸν ὡς κρύσταλλον, ἐκπορευό-2 μενον ἐκ τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Ἀρνίου. [b] Ἐν μέσῳ b Gen. 2. 9. Ezek. 47. 12. τῆς πλατείας αὐτῆς καὶ τοῦ ποταμοῦ ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐν- supra 2. 7. & 21. 21.
τεῦθεν ξύλον ζωῆς, ποιοῦν καρποὺς δώδεκα, κατὰ μῆνα ἕνα ἕκαστον ἀποδιδοῦν τὸν καρπὸν αὐτοῦ· καὶ τὰ φύλλα τοῦ 3 ξύλου εἰς θεραπείαν τῶν ἐθνῶν. [c] Καὶ πᾶν * κατάθεμα c Zach. 14. 11.
οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι· καὶ ὁ θρόνος τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ τοῦ Ἀρνίου ἐν 4 αὐτῇ ἔσται· καὶ οἱ δοῦλοι αὐτοῦ λατρεύσουσιν αὐτῷ, [d] καὶ d Matt. 5. 8. 1 Cor. 13. 12.
ὄψονται τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ τῶν 1 John 3. 2. supra 3. 12.
5 μετώπων αὐτῶν. [e] Καὶ νὺξ οὐκ ἔσται ἐκεῖ· καὶ χρείαν οὐκ e Ps. 36. 10. Isa. 60. 19, 20. ἔχουσι λύχνου καὶ φωτὸς ἡλίου, ὅτι Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς * φωτιεῖ Zach. 14. 6, 7. ἐπ' αὐτούς· καὶ βασιλεύσουσιν εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων. supra 21. 23.
6 [f] Καὶ εἶπέ μοι· Οὗτοι οἱ λόγοι πιστοὶ καὶ ἀληθινοί· f Supra 1. 1. & 19. 9. & 21. 5.
καὶ Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς τῶν πνευμάτων τῶν [ἁγίων] προφητῶν ἀπέστειλε τὸν ἄγγελον αὐτοῦ δεῖξαι τοῖς δούλοις αὐτοῦ ἃ 7 δεῖ γενέσθαι ἐν τάχει. [g] Καὶ ἰδοὺ, ἔρχομαι ταχύ· μακάριος g Supra 1. 3. & 3. 11.
ὁ τηρῶν τοὺς λόγους τῆς προφητείας τοῦ βιβλίου τούτου.
8 [h] Καὶ ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης ὁ βλέπων ταῦτα καὶ ἀκούων. Καὶ ὅτε h Acts 10. 26. & 14. 14.
ἤκουσα καὶ ἔβλεψα, ἔπεσα προσκυνῆσαι ἔμπροσθεν τῶν supra 19. 10.
9 ποδῶν τοῦ ἀγγέλου τοῦ δεικνύοντός μοι ταῦτα. καὶ λέγει μοι· Ὅρα μή·—σύνδουλός σου [γάρ] εἰμι, καὶ τῶν ἀδελφῶν σου τῶν προφητῶν, καὶ τῶν τηρούντων τοὺς λόγους τοῦ 10 βιβλίου τούτου. τῷ Θεῷ προσκύνησον. [i] Καὶ λέγει μοι· i Dan. 8. 26. & 12. 4.
Μὴ σφραγίσῃς τοὺς λόγους τῆς προφητείας τοῦ βιβλίου supra 1. 3.
11 τούτου· ὅτι ὁ καιρὸς ἐγγύς ἐστιν· [k] ὁ ἀδικῶν ἀδικησάτω ἔτι, k 2 Tim. 3. 23.
καὶ ὁ * ῥυπαρὸς ῥυπαρευθήτω ἔτι· καὶ ὁ δίκαιος δικαιωθήτω 12 ἔτι, καὶ ὁ ἅγιος ἁγιασθήτω ἔτι. [[l] Καὶ] ἰδοὺ, ἔρχομαι l Isa. 40. 10. & 62. 11.
ταχὺ, καὶ ὁ μισθός μου μετ' ἐμοῦ, ἀποδοῦναι ἑκάστῳ ὡς vid. supra 20. 12.

XXII. 1. ποταμόν.] See Note at xxi. 6.

2. ξύλον ζωῆς.] Professor Scholefield follows Bp. Middleton in rendering 'was a tree of life;' and this, as he observes, to avoid the inconsistency of saying that the ONE tree was on each side of the river. 'Another interpretation, however, (continues he), has been advanced by Dr. Owen, which is entitled to some consideration: "And the river being on either side of it." And this might be carried even a little further: "In the midst of the street of it and of the river, being (viz. both the street and the river being) on either side of it," [the tree].' Ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντ. Like the Latin hinc illinc, 'on every side.'

3. πᾶν κατάθ.] for ἀνάθεμα. Here Abp. Newcome and Dr. Burton justly suppose an allusion to the curse connected with the tree of life and the garden of Eden; the general sense being: 'the fatal effects of the first curse, pronounced in consequence of the first transgression, shall cease; the displeasure of God will be here unknown.'

5. βασιλ. εἰς—αἰώνων.] In heaven, of which the New Jerusalem is a type. 'For ever and ever' is opposed to the millenary reign. (Newcome.) Here terminates the prophetic portion of the Apostle's sublime representation of the destinies of the Church, from its origin to its consummation; and the remainder of the Book is confirmatory and hortatory, demanding a due attention to its sublime contents, and conformity in their practice.

6, 7. See vv. 1—3 and Notes, and Note on Luke i. 70.

11. ὁ ἀδικῶν ἀδικ. ἔτι] q. d. 'If he persists in his unrighteousness, he will reap the consequences of it.' The mode of expression is authoritative. (Newcome.)

m Isa. 41. 4. & 44. 6. & 48. 11. supra 1. 8, 11. & 21. 6.

τὸ ἔργον αὐτοῦ ἔσται. [m] Ἐγώ [εἰμι] τὸ Α καὶ τὸ Ω, 13 ἀρχὴ καὶ τέλος, ὁ πρῶτος καὶ ὁ ἔσχατος.

n 1 John 3. 23.

[n] Μακάριοι οἱ ποιοῦντες τὰς ἐντολὰς αὐτοῦ, ἵνα ἔσται 14 ἡ ἐξουσία αὐτῶν ἐπὶ τὸ ξύλον τῆς ζωῆς, καὶ τοῖς πυλῶσιν εἰσέλθωσιν εἰς τὴν πόλιν. [o] Ἔξω [δὲ] οἱ κύνες καὶ οἱ φαρ- 15 μακοὶ, καὶ οἱ πόρνοι καὶ οἱ φονεῖς, καὶ οἱ εἰδωλολάτραι, καὶ πᾶς ὁ φιλῶν καὶ ποιῶν ψεῦδος.

o 1 Cor. 6. 10. Eph. 5. 5. Phil. 3. 2. Col. 3. 6. supra 21. 8.

p Num. 24. 17. Isa. 11. 10. Rom. 15. 12. 2 Pet. 1. 19. supra 1. 1. & 5. 5.

[p] Ἐγὼ Ἰησοῦς ἔπεμψα τὸν ἄγγελόν μου μαρτυρῆσαι 16 ὑμῖν ταῦτα ἐπὶ ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις· ἐγώ εἰμι ἡ ῥίζα καὶ τὸ γένος [τοῦ] Δαυὶδ, ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ λαμπρὸς καὶ * πρωϊνός.

q Isa. 55. 1. John 7. 37. supra 21. 6.

[q] Καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα καὶ ἡ νύμφη λέγουσιν· Ἔρχου· καὶ ὁ 17 ἀκούων εἰπάτω· Ἔρχου. Καὶ ὁ διψῶν ἐρχέσθω, καὶ ὁ θέλων λαμβανέτω τὸ ὕδωρ ζωῆς δωρεάν.

[Συμ]μαρτυροῦμαι ἐγὼ [γὰρ] παντὶ ἀκούοντι τοὺς λόγους 18 τῆς προφητείας τοῦ βιβλίου τούτου· ἐάν τις ἐπιτιθῇ * ἐπ' αὐτὰ, ἐπιθήσει ὁ Θεὸς ἐπ' αὐτὸν τὰς πληγὰς τὰς γεγραμμένας ἐν βιβλίῳ τούτῳ. [r] Καὶ ἐάν τις ἀφέλῃ ἀπὸ τῶν λόγων 19 βίβλου τῆς προφητείας ταύτης, ἀφαιρήσει ὁ Θεὸς τὸ μέρος αὐτοῦ ἀπὸ * ξύλου τῆς ζωῆς, καὶ ἐκ τῆς πόλεως τῆς ἁγίας [καὶ] τῶν γεγραμμένων ἐν βιβλίῳ τούτῳ. Λέγει ὁ μαρ- 20 τυρῶν ταῦτα· Ναὶ ἔρχομαι ταχύ· ἀμήν. Ναὶ ἔρχου, Κύριε Ἰησοῦ!

r Exod. 32. 33. Deut. 4. 2. & 12. 32. Psal. 69. 29. Prov. 30. 6. supra 3. 5. & 13. 8. & 17. 8. & 20. 12. & 21. 27.

Ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου [ἡμῶν] Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάν- 21 των [ὑμῶν] τῶν ἁγίων. Ἀμήν.

13. ἐγώ εἰμι τὸ Α, &c.] Even He of whom the Scripture saith that he hath 'neither beginning of days nor end of life' (Heb. vii. 3); or, He who is 'the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever' (Heb. xiii. 8); or, as Milton,

'Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end.'

14. ἵνα ἔσται ἡ ἐξουσία.] The ἵνα is by Heinrichs taken as standing for ὅτι, so as to correspond to our inasmuch as, by a use similar to that at 1 Cor. ix. 18. But we may rather suppose it to denote simply result, as when used with the Optative. Render, 'the result being, that theirs shall be the right, or privilege,' &c.

15. οἱ κύνες.] See Phil. iii. 2, and Note.

— ὁ φιλῶν καὶ ποιῶν ψεῦδος.] Render, 'whosoever approveth, as well as he that maketh or forgeth a lie;' meaning, he who does the thing from pleasure and purposely, because he prefers falsehood to truth. So Lucian, in his Tract entitled Philopseudes, § 1, speaks of those who prefer lying to truth, ἡδόμενοι τῷ πράγματι καὶ ἐνδιατρίβοντες ἐπ' οὐδεμιᾷ προφάσει. Or the opposite it is said, Zech. viii. 19, τὴν ἀλήθειαν καὶ εἰρήνην ἀγαπήσατε, meaning the practising of them gladly and cordially.

17. This verse contains the response made to the promise of Christ, 'I come quickly,' ver. 12; and the Holy Ghost and the Church, the spiritual bride of Christ, are represented as inviting all to participate in the blessings of the Gospel.

19. ἀφαιρήσει ὁ Θεὸς—ζωῆς.] In this expression there seems a double allusion,—first to the keeping of an account-book, in which every one's μέρος or portion is entered down, and crossed out when taken away; 2. to the βίβλος of a will, from which any one's name being removed, disinherits him. So Josephus, Ant. xvii. 4. 2, τὸν υἱὸν αὐτῆς—ἐξήλειψε τῶν διαθηκῶν.

20. ἔρχ. τ.] Namely, to destroy her enemies, and establish her in everlasting happiness.

INDEX I.

PRINCIPAL GREEK WORDS AND PHRASES EXPLAINED.

A.

ʼΑβαδδών, ii. 669
ἀβαρής, ii. 247
ʼΑββᾶ, ii. 276. ʼΑββᾶ ὁ Πατήρ, i. 246; ii. 52 ἄβυσσος, i. 302; ii. 68. τὸ φρέαρ τῆς ἀβύσσου, ii. 668 ἄγαθος, on the application of this word to God, and also to Christ, i. 110; distinguished from δίκαιος, ii. 33. 45. ἄγαθα denoting goods generally, i. 324. τὸ ἄγαθον, ii. 460 ἀγαθωσύνη, ii. 292. 397 ἀγαλλίασις, i. 260. 540; ii. 470 ἀγαλλιάω, i. 24. 264; distinguished from χαίρω, 450 ἄγαμος, ii. 135
ἀγαπάω, i. 229; opposed to μισέω, 36. ἀγαπᾶτε τοὺς ἐχθρούς, 31 ἀγάπη, i. 143; ii. 57. 81. 90. 174. 292. ἀγ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ii. 57. ἀγ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, 621 ἀγαπητός for μονογενής, i. 16 Ἄγαρ, ii. 284
ἀγγαρεύω, i. 30. 173
ἀγγεῖα, i. 150
ἄγγελος, i. 178. 566; ii. 162. 472. 651. ἄγγ. Κυρίου, i. 6. 600. ἄγγ. Σατὰν, ii. 252 ἀγενεαλόγητος, ii. 499 ἁγιάζω, i. 34. 463. 503, 4; ii. 131. 136. 476. 522. 592. ἡγιασμένος, i. 657; ii. 136. 440. 521 ἁγιασμός, ii. 385. 543 ἅγιος, i. 503; ii. 45. 298. ὁ Ἅγιος, 625. ὁ Ἅγιος καὶ Δίκαιος, i. 542. τὸ ἅγιον, 39. ἡ ἁγία πόλις, 17. οἱ ἅγιοι, i. 581. 683; ii. 129. 384. ἐν ἁγίῳ τόπῳ, i. 143. τὰ ἅγια, ii. 505 ἀγκύρας ἐκτείνειν, i. 692. ῥίπτειν, ib.
ἁγνίζω, i. 470. ἁγνίζομαι, 661. 675 ἀγνοέω, ii. 152. 186. 487. ἀγνοούμενος, obscure, 229 ἀγνόημα, ii. 487. 511
ἁγνότης, ii. 228
ἀγνωσία, ii. 587
ʼΑγνώστῳ Θεῷ, i. 637, 8 ἀγοραί, i. 62
ἀγοράζεσθαι τιμῆς, ii. 133 ἀγόραιος, i. 632. ἀγόραιοι, scil. ἡμέραι, 651 ἄγρα, i. 285
ἀγράμματος, i. 547
ἀγραυλέω, i. 270
ἀγρεύω, i. 238
ἀγριέλαιος, ii. 75
ἀγρός, i. 128. 550
ἀγρυπνέω, ii. 551
ἀγρυπνία, ii. 228
ἄγω, used as a pastoral term, i. 460; for εἰσάγω, 653. ἄγομαι, ii. 51 ἀγωγή for ἀναστροφή, ii. 443 ἀγών, ii. 363. 377
ἀγωνία, i. 371
ἀγωνίζομαι, i. 331; ii. 362. 372. 431 ἀδελφός, meaning of, i. 72; denoting 'any one,' 26; 'countrymen,' 31 ἀδελφότης, ii. 588
ἄδηλος φωνή, ii. 180
οὐκ ἀδήλως, ii. 151
ᾅδης, i. 62. 345; ii. 651. 662 ἀδιάλειπτος μνεία, ii. 434 ἀδιαλείπτως, ii. 374. 391 ἀδικέω, ii. 130. ἀδικούμενος, i. 564 ἀδίκημα, i. 642
ἀδικία, falsehood, i. 434; injury, ii. 254; denoting vice and iniquity in general, 11 ἄδικος, i. 352; ii. 495; distinguished from ἄνομος, i. 153 ἀδόκιμος, ii. 11. 151. 256. 494 ἄδολος, ii. 584
ʼΑδραμυττεῖον, i. 686
ʼΑδρίας, i. 691
ἀδύνατος, i. 112. 613; ii. 92. 492, 3 ἡμέραι τῶν ἀζύμων, i. 597 ἀθέμιτος, i. 590
ἄθεος, ii. 305
ἄθεσμος, ii. 616
ἀθετέω, i. 210. 297; ii. 273. 426 ἀθέτησις, ii. 502
νομίμως ἀθλεῖν, ii. 436 ἄθλησις παθημάτων, ii. 525 ἀθῶος, i. 169
αἴγεια δέρματα, ii. 538
αἰγιαλός, i. 693
Αἰθίοψ ἀνήρ, i. 575
αἷμα, 'kindred,' i. 639. αἷμα ἀθῶον, 169. αἷμα τοῦ σταυροῦ, ii. 361. ἡ σελήνη εἰς αἷμα, i. 534. αἷμα καὶ πῦρ, ib. αἷμα καὶ πῦρ ἐξῆλθεν, 514. αἵματα, denoting degrees of consanguinity, 390 αἱματεκχυσία, ii. 516
αἴνιγμα, ii. 177
αἵρεσις, i. 553. 674
αἱρετίζω, i. 67
αἱρετικός, ii. 457
αἴρω, i. 357. ἐπὶ χειρῶν ἀροῦσί σε, 18. ἄρατε τὸν ζυγόν μου, 64. αἴρων τὴν ἁμαρτίαν, 393, 4; 'to destroy' a city or country, 469; opposed to καθαίρω, 489; a nautical term, 688 αἴσθησις, ii. 333
αἰσθητήριον, ii. 490
αἰσχροκερδῶς, ii. 598
αἰσχρότης, ii. 319
αἰτεῖν εἰρηνήν, i. 600. αἰτ. distinguished from ἀπαιτέω, 292. αἰτέομαι, 568 αἰτία, i. 108, 9. 173
αἰτιάομαι, ii. 22
αἴτιος, i. 374; effector, ii. 489 αἰχμαλωτεύω, ii. 442. ᾐχμαλώτευσεν αἰχμαλωσίαν, 312 αἰών, i. 80. 226. ἀπ' αἰῶνος, 267. ἐκ τοῦ αἰῶνος, 454. κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου, ii. 303. οἱ αἰῶνες, 467. τὰ τέλη τῶν αἰώνων, 154. γενεὰ τοῦ αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων, 311. αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων, 493 αἰώνιος, i. 155. 226. 491; ii. 552. 643 ἀκαθαρσία, i. 138; ii. 10. 41. 319. 368. 377, 8 ἄκακος, ii. 99. 464. 504 ἄκαρπος, ii. 321
ἀκατάκριτος, i. 630
ἀκατάπαυστος ἁμαρτίας, ii. 612 ἀκαταστασία, i. 363. 365; ii. 185. 228. 255 ἀκέραιος, i. 56; ii. 343 ἀκλινής, ii. 523
ἀκμήν, even yet, i. 89 ἀκοή, i. 21. 476; ii. 70. ἀκοὴ πίστεως, ii. 270. ἀκοαί, i. 636 ἀκούω, i. 421. 580. ἀκούειν ἀκοῇ, 76. ἀκ. βαρέως, ib.
ἀκρατής, ii. 441
ἀκρίβεια, i. 663
ἀκριβέστατος, i. 682
ἀκριβόω, i. 9
ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖν, ii. 322, 323 ἀκρίδες, i. 13

ἀκροατήριον, i. 681
ἀκροβυστία τῆς σαρκός, ii. 365. τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἀκροβυστίας, 265 ἀκρογωνίαιον, ii. 306
ἀκροθίνιον, ii. 499
ἄκρον, ii. 533
ἀλάβαστρον μύρου, i. 156 ἀλαζονεῖαι, ii. 573. ἀλαζονεία τοῦ βίου, 624 ἀλαζών, ii. 441
ἀλαλάζω, i. 206
ἅλας τῆς γῆς, i. 24
ἀλήθεια, i. 405. 484; ii. 127. 256. 629. ἡ ἀλήθεια τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 10 ἀληθεύω, ii. 281. ἀληθεύειν ἐν ἀγάπῃ, 314 ἀληθής, i. 130. 443; ii. 532 ἁλιεῖς ἀνθρώπων, i. 20 ἁλίζομαι, i. 24. ἁλισθήσεται πυρί, 227 ἀλισγήματα τῶν εἰδώλων, i. 620 ἀλλά, hortative, i. 589; ii. 236; imo vero, i. 619; ii. 54. 260. 519; nevertheless, i. 547; whereas, ii. 131; for εἰ μή, i. 117. ἀλλὰ γάρ, ii. 239. ἀλλὰ καί, 38 ἀλλάσσειν τὴν φωνήν, ii. 282. ἀλλάσσομαι, 198 ἀλληγορούμενα, ii. 283
ἄλλος for ἀλλότριος, ii. 159 ἀλλοτριοεπίσκοπος, ii. 597 ἀλλόφυλος, i. 590
ἀλοάω, ii. 148
ἀλόη, i. 515
ἐν ἁλύσει, ii. 330
ἀλυσιτελής, ii. 552
ἅλων, i. 15
ἅμα πρωΐ, i. 114
ἀμαθής, ii. 616
ἀμαράντινος, ii. 599
ἀμάραντος, ii. 579
ἁμαρτάνω, i. 105. 417
ἁμαρτία, i. 393, 4. 441. 444. 448. ἁμαρτία νεκρά, ii. 45. 481. χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας ὀφθήσεται, 518 ἀμάρτυρος, i. 615 ἁμαρτωλοί, 'heathens,' i. 49 ἀμελέω, ii. 507
ἄμεμπτος, ii. 506
ἀμέριμνος, ii. 140. ἀμερίμνους ποιεῖν, i. 180 ἀμετάθετον τῆς βουλῆς αὐτοῦ, ii. 496 ἀμετακίνητος, ii. 199
ἀμεταμέλητον, ii. 234
ἀμετανόητος, ii. 14
ἀμήν, i. 25; ii. 181. ὁ Ἀμήν, 657. ἀμὴν ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, 456 ἀμίαντος, ii. 504. 579
ἀμύνομαι, difference of meaning when used with dat. or accus. i. 564 ἀμφίβληστρον, i. 20
ἄμφοδος, i. 234
ἄμωμον, ii. 688
ἄμωμος, ii. 298. 361
ἀνά, a-piece, i. 305
ἀναβαθμός, i. 662
ἀναβαίνω, i. 383. εἰς τὸ πλοῖον, 86. 92. εἰς τὸν οὐρανόν, 403. εἰς καρδίαν, ii. 111 ἀναβάλλω, i. 676
ἀναβιβάζω, i. 81
ἀναβλέπω, i. 219. 452. 664 ἀναβολὴν ποιεῖν, i. 680 ἀνάγαιον, i. 244
ἀναγινώσκω, ii. 208
ἀναγκάζω, i. 85. 335. 627; ii. 263, 4. 266. 295 οἱ ἀνάγκαιοι φίλοι, i. 590; ἀναγκαιότερόν ἐστι, ii. 336 ἀναγκαστῶς, ii. 598
ἀνάγκη for θλίψις, i. 364; ii. 138 ἀνάγνωσις, ii. 423
ἀνάγω, i. 626. ἀνάγειν θυσίαν, 567. ἀνήχθη ὑπὸ τοῦ Πνεύματος, 16 ἀναδείκνυμι, i. 530
ἀνάδειξις, i. 268
ἀναδέχομαι, i. 696; ii. 533 ἀναζάω, i. 339
ἀναζητέω, i. 275
ἀναζώννυμι, ii. 582 ἀναζωπυρέω, ii. 434
ἀναθάλλω, ii. 352
ἀνάθεμα and ἀνάθημα, ii. 260. ἀνάθεμα εἶναι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 59 ἀναθεματίζω, i. 669
ἀναθεωρέω, ii. 549
ἀνάθημα, i. 363. ἀνάθημα and ἀνάθεμα, ii. 260 ἀναίδεια, i. 317
ἀναιρέομαι, i. 564
ἀνακαινίζειν εἰς μετάνοιαν, ii. 492. 494 ἀνακαινοῦμαι, ii. 221
ἀνακεφαλαιόω, ii. 86. 299 ἀνακλίνω, i. 43. 269
ἀνακόπτω, ii. 286
ἀνακρίνω, i. 633. 673; ii. 120. 147 ἀνάκρισις, i. 681
ἀνακύπτω, i. 366
ἀνάληψις, i. 310
ἀναλίσκω, i. 310
κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως, ii. 81 ἀναλογίζομαι, ii. 540
ἀναλὸν γενέσθαι, i. 24
ἀναλύω, i. 326; ii. 336 ἀναμάρτητος, i. 441
ἀνάμνησις, ii. 519
ἀνανήφω, ii. 440, 1
ἀναντιῤῥήτως, i. 590
ἀνάπαυσις, i. 64
ἀναπαύω, i. 324; ii. 202. 235 ἀναπέμπω, i. 374
ἀναπληροῦν τὸν τόπον, ii. 181 ἀνάψαντες πυράν, i. 694 ἀνασείω, i. 250. 633
ἀνασκευάζω, i. 622
ἀνάστασις, i. 131. 274. 635; ii. 186. 491 ἀναστατόω, i. 633
ἀνασταυρόω, ii. 494
ἀναστρέφω, i. 102; ii. 208 ἀναστροφή, ii. 261. 423. 587. 589 ἀνατέλλω, i. 20. 31; ii. 501 ἀνατίθεναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ii. 263 ἀνατολή, i. 9. ἐξ ὕψους, 268. ἀπὸ ἀνατολῶν, 145 ἀνατρέφω. ἀνατεθραμμένος πρὸς τοὺς πόδας, i. 663 ἀναφαίνω, i. 658
ἀναφέρω, ii. 504, 5. 565. 589 ἀνάψυξις, i. 543
ἀναψύχω, ii. 436
ἀνδραποδιστής, ii. 409
ἀνδρίζω, ii. 202
ἀνέγκλητος, ii. 450
ἀνεκδιήγητος δωρεά, ii. 242 ἀνέκλειπτος, i. 325
ἀνελεήμων, ii. 12
ἀνεμίζομαι, ii. 555
ἄνεμος, ii. 314
ἀνένδεκτόν ἐστι, i. 346
ἀνεξίκακος, ii. 440
ἀνεξιχνίαστος, ii. 308
ἀνεπίληπτος, ii. 416
ἄνεσις, ii. 238. ἔχειν ἄνεσιν, i. 676 ἀνετάζω, i. 666, 7
ἀνέχω, i. 308; ii. 248. ἀνέχομαι, i. 308. 643; ii. 123. 249 ἀνήκω. ὡς ἀνῆκε, ii. 371 ἀνήμερος, ii. 442
ἄνδρες, denoting persons of both sexes, i. 545 ἀνθίστημι, i. 30; ii. 266 ἀνθομολογέομαι, i. 275
ἀνθρακιά, i. 507
ἀνθρωπάρεσκος, ii. 327
ἀνθρωποκτόνος, i. 447
ἄνθρωπος for ἕκαστος, ii. 119. ἄνθ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, 430. 445. ἄνθ. τῆς ἁμαρτίας, 398. ὁ ἔσω ἄνθ. 46, 47. κατὰ ἄνθρωπον, 148. 194 ἀνθύπατος, i. 602. 651
ἀνίεμαι, i. 629. ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπείλην, ii. 327 ἀνίστημι, ii. 501. ἀνάστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, 322 ἀνόητος, i. 382; ii. 269. 456 ἀνοίγω, i. 23. 266. ἀνεῴχθησαν οἱ οὐρανοί, 16. τάφος ἀνεῳγμένος, ii. 23 ἄνοια, i. 289; ii. 443
ἀνομία, ii. 41. 400
ἄνομος, ii. 150. 409; distinguished from ἄδικος, i. 153 ἀνόμως, ii. 16
ἀνόσιος, ii. 409. 441
ἀνοχὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 26
ἀντάλλαγμα, i. 98
ἀνταναπληρόω, ii. 362
ἀνταπόδομα, ii. 73
ἀνταποκρίνομαι, ii. 64
ἀντέχομαι, i. 36; ii. 451 ἀντί, ii. 540. ἀνθ' ὧν, i. 601 ἀντιβάλλω, i. 381
ἀντίδικος, i. 27
ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ψευδωνόμου γνώσεως, ii. 432 ἀντικεῖμαι, ii. 399
ἀντιλαμβάνω, i, 265. 657 ἀντιλέγω, i. 274; ii. 453 ἀντίληψις, ii. 173
ἀντιλογία, ii. 540. 643

ἀντίλυτρον, ii. 413
ἀντιμισθία, ii. 11
ἀντιπαρέρχομαι, i. 315
ἀντιπίπτω, i. 569
ἀντιτάσσομαι, i. 641; ii. 85
ἀντίτυπος, ii. 517
ἀντίχριστος, ii. 624, 5. 630 ἄντλημα, i. 409
ἀντοφθαλμέω, i. 689
ἀνυπότακτος, ii. 409. 451 ἄνωθεν, i. 511; denoting 'from the earliest age,' 682. ἄν. γεννᾶσθαι, 402 ἄξιος for ἀντάξιος, ii. 52 ἀόρατος, ii. 410
ἀπάγχομαι, i. 169
ἀπάγω, i. 120. 148. 166. 168. 600; ii. 168 ἀπαίδευτος, ii. 440
ἀπαιτέω and αἰτέω, distinction between, i. 292 ἀπαλγέω. ἀπηλγηκώς, ii. 315 ἀπαλλάσσω, ii. 477. ἀπαλλάττεσθαι ἀπό τινος, i. 328 ἀπαλλοτριόομαι, ii. 305. 315. 361 ἅπαξ, ii. 517. 547. 642. ἅπαξ καὶ δίς, 334. 354. 382 ἀπαρνέομαι, i. 97
ἀπαρχή, ii. 75. 200. ἀπαρχὴ τῶν κτισμάτων, 559 ἅπας and πᾶς, distinction between, i. 206 ἀπάτη τοῦ πλούτου, i. 198. ἀπ. κενή, ii. 364 ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ii. 499 ἀπαύγασμα, ii. 468
ἀπειθέω, i. 408; ii. 585. ἀπειθεῖν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, 15. ἀπειθεῖν τῷ λόγῳ, 589 ἀπειθής, ii. 456
ἀπειλέομαι, followed by infin. i. 547 ἀπειλή, ii. 327
ἀπεκδέχομαι, ii. 103. 286. 350 ἀπεκδύομαι, ii. 366
ἀπελεγμός, i. 648
ἀπελεύθερος, ii. 138
ἀπελπίζω, i. 292
ἀπέραντοι γενεαλογίαι, ii. 407 ἀπερισπάστως, ii. 141 ἀπερίτμητος τῇ καρδίᾳ, i. 569 ἀπέχω, i. 32; ii. 354. ἀπέχει, i. 246 ἀπιστία, 'deficiency of faith,' i. 101. 224 ἄπιστος, i. 518; ii. 136. γενεὰ ἄπιστος, i. 101 απλότης, ii. 235. 246. ἁπλ. τῆς κοινωνίας, 242. ἐν ἁπλ. τῆς καρδίας, 327 ἁπλοῦς ὀφθαλμός, i. 36
ἁπλῶς, ii. 555
ἀπό, back or ago, ii. 237; for ὑπό, i. 355. 520. 594; intensive, ii. 71; distinguished from ἐξ, 378; in composition, i. 32; ii. 594 ἀποβάλλω, ii. 526
ἀποβολή, ii. 75
ἀπογραφή, i. 269
ἀπογράφω, i. 269. ἀπογεγραμμένος, ii. 546 ἀποδείκνυμι, i. 137; ii. 121 ἀποδεκατόω, i. 137; ii. 500 ἀπόδεκτος, ii. 412
ἀποδέχομαι, i. 303. 538. 672 ἀποδίδωμι, to sell, i. 551 ἀποδιορίζω, ii. 645
ἀποδοκιμάζομαι, i. 220; ii. 585 ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, ii. 410 ἀποθήκη, i. 15; distinguished from ταμεῖον, 325 ἀποθνήσκω, ii. 35. ἀποθνήσκει ἑαυτῷ, 89. ἀποθνήσκοντες ἄνθρωποι, 500 ἀποκαθίστημι, i. 66. 100. 194. 527 ἀποκαλύπτομαι, ii. 580 ἀποκάλυψις, ii. 179. 184. 251. ἀποκ. τοῦ Κυρίου, 103. 580. ἀποκ. τοῦ Κυρίου ἀπ' οὐρανοῦ, 395 ἀποκαραδοκία, ii. 335
ἀποκαταλλάσσω, ii. 306
ἀποκατάστασις, i. 544
ἀπόκειμαι, ii. 447. 517 ἀπόκριμα τοῦ θανάτου ἔχειν, ii. 207 ἀποκρίνομαι, to address, ii. 665 ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν, ii. 306 ἀποκυέω, ii. 559
ἀπόλλυμι, i. 187
Ἀπολλώς, i. 644
ἀπολογέομαι, i. 650. 681
ἀπολογία, ii. 147
ἀπολούω, ii. 131
ἀπολύτρωσις, i. 366; ii. 25. 537 ἀπολύω, i. 6. 90. 273. 623; distinguished from κρίνω and καταδικάζω, 292 ἀποπλανάω, i. 242
ἀπορία, i. 365
ἀπορφανίζομαι, ii. 382
ἀποσκευάζομαι, i. 659
ἀποσκίασμα τροπῆς, ii. 558 ἀποσπάομαι, i. 370. 657 ἀποστασία, i. 660; ii. 397. 398. 420 ἀποστάσιον, i. 28
ἀποστεγάζειν τὴν στέγην, i. 189 ἀποστερέω, i. 229; ii. 130 ἀπόστολος, i. 53; ii. 98. 344. ἀπόστολοι ἐκκλησιῶν, ii. 239 ἀποστοματίζω, i. 322 ἀποστρέφομαι, ii. 547. ἀποστρέφεσθαι τὴν ἀλήθειαν, ii. 452 ἀποστυγέω, ii. 82
ἀποσυνάγωγος, i. 453
ἀποτάσσομαι, i. 212. 311. 336 ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς, ii. 216 ἀποτολμάω, ii. 71
ἀποτόμως, ii. 452
ἀποφθέγγομαι, i. 531
ἀποψύχω, i. 365
ἀπρόσκοπος, i. 675; ii. 159. 333 ἄπταιστος, ii. 646
ἅπτομαι, i. 517
ἀπωθέομαι, ii. 72
ἄρα, then, ii. 287. inde sequitur, 541. ἄραγε, itaque, i. 41. ἄρα οὖν, ii. 294. 306 ἀργός, i. 70; distinguished from κενός, ii. 70 ἀργύριον, i. 180. 647. τὸ ἀργ. σου σὺν σοὶ εἴη, 574 ἀργυροκόπος, i. 648
ἀρέσκεια, ii. 358
ἀρέσκω, ii. 378. μὴ ἀρέσκειν Θεῷ, 381 οὐκ ἀρεστόν ἐστι, i. 557 ἀρετή, ii. 603; derivation and meaning of, 605. ἀρεταί, ii. 586. διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς, 602 ἀριστάω, i. 320. 521
ἄριστον, i. 128. 521
Ἀρμαγεδών, ii. 684
ἁρμόζομαι, ii. 246
ἁρπαγμός, ii. 340
ἁρπάζω, i. 578
ἅρπαξ, i. 352; ii. 131
ἀῤῥαβών, ii. 209
ἄῤῥητος, ii. 252
ἀρτέμων, i. 693
ἀρτιγέννητος, ii. 584
ἄρτος, denoting all the necessaries of life, i. 34. ἄρτοι, 17. ἄρτοι τῆς προθέσεως, 64. ἄρτοι κριθινοί, i. 423 ἀρχαῖοι, i. 26. ἀφ' ἡμερῶν ἀρχαίων, i. 618 ἀρχὴ κτίσεως, i. 228. ἀρχὴν λαβών, ii. 473. ἄρχαι, i. 588; ii. 57. ἄρχαι καὶ ἐξουσίαι, i. 322; ii. 308. κατ' ἄρχας, 471 ἀρχηγός, ii. 540; for αἴτιος, 475. ὁ ἀρχηγὸς τῆς ζωῆς, i. 542. ἀρχ. καὶ σωτήρ, 555. ἄρχηγος τῆς πίστεως, ii. 540 ἐκ γένους ἀρχιερατίκου, i. 546 ἀρχιερεύς, i. 646. ἀρχιερεῖς, 472. 554. ἀρχ. καὶ γραμματεῖς, i. 8 ἀρχισυνάγωγος, i. 204
ἀρχιτέκτων, ii. 115
ἀρχιτελώνης, i. 354
ἀρχιτρίκλινος, i. 397
ἄρχομαι, i. 333. 526
ὁ ἄρχων τοῦ κόσμου, i. 475. 495. ὁ ἄρχων τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος, ii. 303. ἄρχοντες, i. 628; ii. 110. ὁ ἄρχων τῶν βασιλέων τῆς γῆς, 648 ἀσέβεια, ii. 8. 645 τὰ ἔργα ἀσεβείας ἀσεβεῖν, ii. 645 ἀσέλγεια, i. 215; ii. 595 ἀσθένεια, ii. 252. ἀσθ. τῆς σαρκός, 281. ἀσθένειαι, i. 45; ii. 54 ἀσθενέω, i. 416; ii. 49. 88. 576 ἀσθενήματα, ii. 92
ἀσθενής, i. 464; ii. 33. 122. 244
Ἀσιαρχαί, i. 649
ἀσιτία, i. 691
ἄσιτοι διατελεῖτε, i. 692
ἀσκοί, i. 50
ἀσπάζομαι, i. 55. 651. 658. 680 ἄσπιλος, ii. 561
ἄσπονδος, ii. 12
ἆσσον, i. 689
ἀσταστέω, ii. 122

ἀστεῖος, ii. 534. ἀστεῖος τῷ Θεῷ, i. 564 ἀστήρικτος, ii. 616
ἄστοργος, ii. 12. 441
ἄστος, distinguished from ξένος, i. 638 ἀστοχέω, ii. 408
ἀστραπή, i. 320
ἀστράπτω, i. 379
ἀσύνετος, ii. 12. 71
ἀσύνθετος, ii. 12
τὸ ἀσφαλές, i. 662
ἀσφαλῶς, i. 246
ἀσχημονέω, ii. 176
ἀσωτία, ii. 323. 451
ἀσώτως, i. 338
ἄτακτος, ii. 391
ἀτάκτως, ii. 404
ἀτενίζω, i. 372. 527
ἀτιμάω, i. 237
ἀτμὶς καπνοῦ, i. 534
ἄτοπος, i. 695; ii. 402 αὐθάδης, ii. 450. 611
αὐθεντέω, ii. 415
αὐλέω, i. 62
αὐλή, i. 156. 166. αὐλὴ τῶν προβάτων, 456 αὐλίζομαι, i. 156
αὐξάνω, ii. 616
αὔξειν τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 367 αὔριον, i. 38
αὐστηρός, i. 357
αὐτάρκης, ii. 353
αὐτοκατάκριτος, ii. 458 αὐτόματος, i. 199. 599
αὐτόπτης and ἐπόπτης, ii. 607 αὐτὸς for οὗτος, i. 6. 246. αὐτοὶ οὗτοι, 675 ἀφαιρεῖν ἁμαρτίας, ii. 519 ἀφανίζω, i. 55. 608
ἐγγὺς ἀφανισμοῦ, ii. 508 ἀφεδρών, i. 90
ἀφειδία σώματος, ii. 368 ἀφελότης, i. 540
ἄφεσις, i. 282
ἀφθαρσία, ii. 15. 330
ἀφίημι, i. 445. 448; ii. 136. ἀφίεναι ὀφειλήματα, i. 34. ἀφ. φωνήν, 251. ἀφῆκε τὸ πνεῦμα, 176 ἀφιλάγαθος, ii. 442
ἀφιλάργυρος, ii. 417
ἀφίστημι, i. 556
ἀφοράω, ii. 539
ἀφορίζω, i. 295. 602; ii. 261 ἀφορμή, ii. 288. ἀφ. ἐκκόπτειν, 248 ἀφροσύνη, i. 216
ἄφρων, ii. 195. 323
ἀφυπνίζω, i. 302
ἀφυπνόω, i. 302
ἄφωνος, ii. 180
Ἀχαΐα, ii. 240
ἀχρεῖος, i. 154
ἀχρειόω, ii. 23
ἄχρηστος, ii. 460
ἄχρι, distinguished from μέχρι, i. 603; ii. 34. ἄχρι καιροῦ, i. 603 ἄχρις, within, i. 652
ἄχυρον, i. 15
ὁ ἀψευδὴς Θεός, ii. 450

B.

Βάαλ, ii. 72
Βαβυλών, ii. 600. 679
βαθμὸς καλός, ii. 418
τὰ βάθη τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 112. 654 βαθύς, used with words denoting time, i. 379 βαΐα τῶν φοινίκων, i. 472 βαλάντιον, i. 325
βάλλω, infundo, i. 50; for καταβάλλω, 153. βάλλειν εἰς τὴν καρδίαν, 478. ἐβέβλητο, jacebat, 343. βάλλειν ἐπὶ κλίνην, ii. 654 βαπτίζω, i. 13. 526. βαπτίζειν ἐν Πνεύμ. ἁγίῳ καὶ πυρί, 14. βαπτίζεσθαι εἰς τὸν Ἰορδάνην, 185. ἐπὶ τῷ ὀνόμ. Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 537. εἰς τὸν θάνατον Χριστοῦ, ii. 37. εἰς τὸν Μωϋσῆν, 152. ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, 193 βάπτισμα Ἰωάννου, i. 124. βάπτισμα μετανοίας, 645 βαπτισμοί, ii. 491. 512
ὁ βαπτιστής, a name of office, i. 12 βάρβαρος, ii. 180. 369, 370. οἱ βάρβαροι, i. 694 βάρος, applied to laws, &c. i. 622. βάρος δόξης, ii. 221. ἐν βάρει εἶναι, 379 Βαρτίμαιος, i. 233
βαρύς, authoritative, ii. 244 βαρύτιμος, i. 157
βασανίζομαι, i. 43. 86. 187. 212 βασανιστής, i. 107
βάσανος, i. 21
βασιλεία, denoting people, ii. 649. ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 12. 21. 38. 366. 402. ἡ βασ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ, ii. 320. ἡ βασ. τῶν οὐρανῶν, 12. 26 ὁ Βασιλεὺς τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, i. 396. ὁ Βασ. τῶν αἰώνων, ii. 410. ὁ Βασ. τῶν βασιλευόντων, 431. Βασ. δικαιοσύνης, 499. Βασ. εἰρήνης, ib.
βασιλεύω, i. 11
βασιλικός, i. 414; ii. 563 βάσις, i. 541
βασκάνω, ii. 269
βαστάζω, i. 44. 463. 471. 495. 516. 582. 662; ii. 92; for περιφέρω, ii. 296. βαστάζειν τὰ ὑποδήματα, i. 14 βάτραχος, ii. 683
βαττολογέω, i. 33
βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως, i. 143 βέβαιος, ii. 472
βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, ii. 94. βεβαιοῦν τὴν καρδίαν, 550 βέβηλος, ii. 409. 422. 544
Βεελζεβούλ, i. 57
Βελίαρ, ii. 231
Βερνίκη, i. 680
Βηθαβαρά, i. 393
Βηθανία πέραν τοῦ Ἰορδάνου, i. 393 Βηθεσδά, i. 415
βῆμα, i. 600
βιάζομαι, i. 61
βιασταί, i. 61
βιβλίον, i. 281
βίβλος, i. 3. τῶν προφητῶν, 567 βίος, means of living, i. 338 βλασφημέω, i. 48. 412
βλασφημία, i. 215; ii. 318. τοῦ Πνεύματος, i. 69 βλάσφημος, ii. 441
βλέπω for ἐπιβλέπω, i. 27. βλέπειν τὴν φωνήν, ii. 650 βόαι, cattle, i. 399
βοάω i. 351
Βοανεργές, i. 195
βοήθεια, i. 690
βοηθέω, i. 661
βόθυνος, i. 89
βολίζω, i. 691
βόσκω, i. 521
βοτάνη, ii. 494
βουλαὶ τῶν καρδιῶν, ii. 120 βραβεύω, ii. 370
βραδυπλοέω, i. 687
βραδὺς τῇ καρδίᾳ, i. 382 βραχίων, i. 476
βροχή, i. 41
βρόχος, ii. 141
βρώματα καὶ πόματα, ii. 491. 512 βρῶσις, i. 36
βυθίζειν εἰς ὄλεθρον, ii. 430 βυρσεύς, i. 587

Γ.

Γαβριήλ, i. 261. 573
χώρα τῶν Γαδαρηνῶν, i. 46
γάζα, i. 576
γάμος, i. 127. 326. 396
γάρ, nempe, i. 5. 309; ii. 475; although, 114; sanè, 454; for οὖν, 622; exempli gratia, i. 90; ii. 249. 283; referring to a clause omitted, i. 7. 65. 91. 171, &c.; ii. 20. 29. 30. 40, &c.
Γέεννα, i. 26
Γεθσημανῆ, i. 162
γενεά, i. 5
γενεαλογίαι, ii. 457. ἀπέραντοι, 407 γενέσια, i. 83
γενήματα, produce, i. 324 γεννάω, used in genealogies, i. 3, 4; to convert, ii. 460 γεννήματα ἐχιδνῶν, i. 13. τῆς δικαιοσύνης, ii. 241 γένη γλωσσῶν, ii. 171. 174 χώρα τῶν Γεργεσηνῶν, i. 46 γερουσία, i. 553
γεύομαι, ii. 493. γεύεσθαι θανάτου, i. 98 γεώργιον, ii. 115
ἡ γῆ, denoting Judæa, i. 365. γῆ Ἰούδα, 8. γῆ Ζαβουλών, 19. γῆ Νεφθαλείμ, ib. γίνομαι for ἄγομαι, i. 156; for κτίζομαι, 388; for ποιοῦμαι, 539. γίνεσθαι εἰς οὐδέν, 556. γενόμενος, descended, ii. 4. γενόμ. ἐκ γυναικός, 276 γινώσκω, i. 7. 462; ii. 124 γλεῦκος, i. 533

γλῶσσαι πυρός, i. 531. λαλεῖν γλωσσαῖς, 645 γλωσσόκομον, i. 471
γναφεύς, i. 221
γνήσιον τέκνον, ii. 407. 450 γνησίως, ii. 344
γνωρίζω, ii. 168. 187. 261. 336 γνῶσις, ii. 179. 228. 605 γνωστός, used as a substantive, i. 276 γογγύζω, i. 427
γογγυσμός, i. 432; ii. 343
γογγυστής, ii. 625
Γολγοθᾶ, i. 173
γόμος, ii. 688
γράμμα, bond or contract, i. 341. γράμματα, literæ, learning, 433 γραμματεύς, i. 8. 82. 650; distinguished from νομικός, 132 γραπτός, ii. 17
γραφή, Scripture, i. 577; ii. 571; denoting the Holy Spirit, ii. 271. γραφὴ πᾶσα, 444 γράφω, to enact, i. 238 γραώδης, ii. 422
γρηγορέω, i. 148; ii. 102. 551 γύμναζε σεαυτὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν, ii. 422 γυμνασία, ii. 422
γυμνός, i. 144. 155
γυνή, a matron, i. 640. γύναι, used as a form of address, 397. γυνὴ χήρα, 283. ἀδελφὴ γυνή, ii. 147 γωνίαι τῶν πλατειῶν, i. 33

Δ.

δαιμονίζομαι, i. 21 δαιμόνιον ἔχειν, i. 434; in the sense of δαίμων, 635. δαιμόνια, evil demons, ii. 156; the spirits of departed saints, 670. διδασκαλίαι δαιμονίων, 421 δαίμων, i. 635; distinguished from θεοί, ib. δανείζω, i. 30
δέ, imo vero, ii. 71; explicatory, 24. δὲ καί, 104 δεδεμένος τῷ πνεύματι, i. 654 δέησις, i. 528; ii. 332. 412 δεῖ, i. 546. 660. ἔδει, ii. 517 δειγματίζω, ii. 366
δείκνυμι, i. 18. 419. 463 δειλός, ii. 693
ὁ δεῖνα, i. 158
δεισιδαιμονέστερος, i. 636 δεισιδαιμονία, i. 680
δέκα, used as a round number, i. 150. 356 δεκτὸς for ἀρεστός, i. 282 δελεάζομαι, ii. 557
δεξιολάβοι, i. 670
δεξιὸς ὀφθαλμός, i. 27. δεξιὰν δοῦναι, ii. 265 δεόμενος τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 586 δέρω, i. 126. 150. δέρων ἀέρα, ii. 151. δέρω εἰς πρόσωπον, ii. 249 δέσμιος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ii. 459 Δεσπότης, i. 273
δεῦρο, i. 468
δεῦτε, i. 20
δευτεραῖος, i. 697
σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, i. 288 δέχομαι, i. 61; ii. 380 δέω, i. 96. δέδεσαι γυναικί, ii. 139 δημογορέω, i. 600
δῆμος, i. 600. 632
διά, post, i. 189. 675. διὰ τοῦ τείχους, 583 διαβάλλομαι, i. 17. 340 Διάβολος, i. 17; ii. 441. ἐμπίπτειν εἰς κρίμα τοῦ Διαβ., 417. παγὶς τοῦ Διαβ., 418 διαγείρομαι, i. 424
διαγενόμενος, i. 253
διαγινώσκω, i. 670
διάγνωσις, i. 680
διαδέχομαι, i. 568
διαθήκη, i. 161; ii. 161. 273. 503. 514. διαθ. περιτομῆς, i. 562. διαθῆκαι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, ii. 305 διακονέω, i. 18. 44. 300. 316. 557; ii. 581. 596 διακονία, i. 557; ii. 81. 169. 174. 228 διάκονος, i. 258; ii. 97. distinguished from δοῦλος, i. 118 διακούομαι, i. 672
διακρίνω, i. 123. 593; ii. 31. 167. 562. 646. μηδὲν διακρ., i. 589; ii. 555. οὐδὲν διακρ., i. 618. διακρίνεσθαι πρός τινα, 593 διακρίσεις πνευμάτων, ii. 171 διακωλύω, i. 15
διαλέγομαι, i. 632
διάλεκτος, i. 532
διαλλάττομαι, i. 27
διαλογισμός, i. 274; ii. 118. 343 διαλύομαι, i. 556
διαμαρτύρομαι, i. 346. 538. 575. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 427 διαμερίζομαι, i. 531
διανέμομαι, i. 547
διανεύω, i. 261
διάνοια καρδίας, i. 265 διανοίγω, i. 632. διαν. τὴν καρδίαν, 627 διαπαντός, i. 586
διαπλέω, i. 687
διαπονέομαι, i. 545
διαπορέω, i. 532
διαπρίομαι, i. 555
διασείσητε μηδένα, i. 278 διασκορπίζω, i. 265. 338. 340 διασπορά, i. 437; ii. 554 διαστολή, ii. 25. 69
διαστρέφω, i. 101. 602. 656 διαταγή, ii. 85. διαταγαὶ τῶν ἀγγέλων, i. 569. 570 διατάσσω, i. 59. 278. 570; ii. 149 διατίθημι, i. 369; διατίθεσθαι διαθήκην, ii. 507. διαθεμένος, 514, 515 διατροφή, ii. 429
διαφέρομαι, i. 691
διαφημίζω, i. 52. 189
διαφθείρομαι, ii. 221
διαφθορὰν εἴδειν, i. 536 διαφόροι βαπτισμοί, ii. 512 διαφορώτερος, ii. 468
διαχειρίζομαι, i. 554
διδακτικός, ii. 417
διδακτὸς for δεδιδαγμένος, i. 428 διδασκαλία, ii. 445. διδασκαλίαι δαιμονίων, 421 διδάσκαλος, i. 601; ii. 274. 313. ὁ διδάσκ., a title applied to Christ, i. 403; distinguished from προφήτης, ii. 173 διδάσκων, ii. 81
διδαχή, i. 42. 187. 433
τὰ δίδραχμα, i. 102
Δίδυμος, whether a cognomen, i. 466 δίδωμι, to suffer, i. 535; to inflict, ii. 252; equivalent to παραδίδωμι, i. 104. διδόναι καρπόν, 75. δὸς ἐργασίαν, 328. δὸς τόπον, 333. δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ, ii. 84. δοῦναι ψυχήν, i. 118. δοῦναι μετάνοιαν, 555. μὴ δοῦναι ἑαυτὸν εἰς τὸ θέατρον, 649. δίδοναι τόπον τῷ Διαβόλῳ, ii. 317. διδοὺς νόμον, 507 διέξοδοι τῶν ὁδῶν, i. 128 διέρχομαι, ii. 34
διερωτάω, i. 589
διετής, i. 10
διθάλασσος, i. 693
διϊσχυρίζομαι, i. 373. 559 δικαιοκρισία, ii. 15
δίκαιος, i. 5. 59. 171, 172. 337. 503; ii. 26. 451. 529. 574. 620; distinguished from εὐλαβής, i. 272; from ἀγαθός, ii. 33. 45. ὁ Δίκαιος, applied to the Messiah, i. 569 δικαιοσύνη, i. 15. 23. 26. 267. 495; ii. 40. 108. 241. 248. 440. ἡ δικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 38; ii. 7. 67 δικαιόω, i. 342; ii. 38. 131. δικαιοῦν τὸν Θεόν, i. 297 δικαίωμα, i. 259. δικ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 13. δικ. τοῦ νόμου, 19. 49. δικαιώματα λατρείας, 508. δικαιώματα, 690 δικαίως and ὁσίως, ii. 380 δικαίωσις, ii. 56. δικ. ζωῆς, 36 δικαστής, i. 565; distinguished from μεριστής, 323 δική, i. 695; for καταδική, 680 δίκτυον, i. 20. 285
δίλογος, ii. 418

Διοπετής, i. 650
διόρθωσις, ii. 512
διορύσσω, i. 36
Διόσκουροι, i. 696
διότι, siquidem, ii. 8; quia, ii. 24 διπλόος, ii. 555; for πολύς, 427 διπλότερον, i. 136
διστάζω, i. 86. 180
μάχαιρα δίστομος, ii. 485 διϋλίζω, i. 137
διχάζω, i. 58
διχοστασία, ζῆλος, and ἔρις, distinction between, ii. 114 διχοτομέω, i. 149
δίψυχος, ii. 555
διωγμός, ii. 57
διώκω, i. 24 bis; ii. 178. 285. 391. 430 δοκεῖ, ii. 185
δοκέω, i. 622; ii. 118. 121. 143; never pleonastic, i. 232. 301 δοκιμάζω, ii. 11. 18. 321. 333. 392 δοκιμασία, ii. 392
δοκιμή, ii. 32. 256
δοκίμιον, ii. 554
δόκιμος, ii. 91. 98. 557
δοκός, i. 38
δόλος, i. 215. ii. 377, 378 δόξα, i. 37. 501; ii. 15. 163. 196. 468; salvation, 475. ἀπὸ δόξης εἰς δόξαν, 217. δόξα Θεοῦ, i. 570. 579; ii. 25. 32. 693. Κυρίου, i. 271. δόξα ἀνδρός, i. e. ἡ γυνή, ii. 162. διὰ δόξης καὶ ἀρετῆς, 602. δοῦναι δόξαν Θεῷ, 679 δοξάζω, i. 25. 473. 501. 610 δουλαγωγέω, ii. 151 δουλεύειν δι' ἀγάπης, ii. 289 δοῦλος, i. 106; derivation of, ii. 4; distinguished from διάκονος, i. 118; used as adjective, ii. 41. δοῦλος Θεοῦ, i. 628; ii. 4 δουλοῦσθαι τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ, ii. 40 δύναμαι, i, 207. 636; ii. 482 δύναμις, i. 260. 526, 527; ii. 124. 229; for ὁ Θεός, i. 167. δυνάμεις, i. 83; ii. 57. 473. δυνάμεις τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, i. 146. δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, ii. 493 δυνάστης, i. 265. 576
δυνατέω, ii. 256
δυνατός, i. 145. 381. 564. 644; ii. 76. 89. 92. ὁ Δύνατος, the Almighty, i. 264. οἱ δυνατοί, 678 δύο δύο, i. 208
δυσερμήνευτος, ii. 489
δυσκόλως, i. 112
δωδεκάφυλον, i. 682
δῶμα, i. 144
δωρεά, i. 538; ii. 35
δωρεάν, i. 88. 493; ii. 269 δῶρα καὶ θυσίαι, ii. 487. 505. 512 δώρημα, ii. 35

E.

ἔα, i. 187
ἐὰν for ἄν, i. 55. 108. 114. for ὅτ' ἄν, 475. ἐὰν οὖν, now if, ii. 182 ἐάω, i. 615
Ἑβραῖοι, i. 557. Ἑβραῖος ἐξ Ἑβραίων, ii. 249. 347; distinguished from Ἰσραηλῖται, 249 Ἑβραϊστί, Syro-Chaldee, i. 415 ἐγγίζειν τῷ Θεῷ, ii. 502 ἔγγυος, ii. 503
ἐγείρω, to lift out, i. 66; to heal, 188. ἐγείρομαι, applied to the birth of eminent persons, 60 ἐγκάθετος, i. 361
ἐγκαινίζω, ii. 516. 522 τὰ ἐγκαίνια, i. 461 ἐγκαλείτωσαν ἀλλήλοις, i. 651 ἐγκαταλείπομαι, ii. 219 ἐγκεντρίζω, ii. 75, 76
ἐγκομβόομαι, ii. 599
ἐγκόπτω, i. 672; ii. 287. 382 ἐγκράτεια, i. 677; ii. 292. 605 ἐγκρατεύομαι, ii. 151
ἐδαφίζω, i. 359 ἑδραῖος, ii. 142. 199, 200 ἐθελοθρησκεία, ii. 366. 368 ἔθος, i. 682
εἰ, i. 526; with Indic., 109. 350; imprecatory, i. 218; for πότερον, i. 331; num? 372; affirmative, ii. 338; si quidem, i. 546. 594. 683; for ὅτι, i. 685; ii. 348. εἰ ἄρα, i. 574. εἰ δέ, 37. εἰ μὴ for ἀλλά, i. 64; ii. 260; preceded by a negative sentence, i. 282. εἴ τι for ὅ τι, ii. 235. εἴγε, since, 307. 316. εἴπερ, si modo, 50; siquidem, 395. εἴπως for ἵνα, 348 εἶδος, ii. 392
εἴδω, i. 151. 473. ἴδειν θάνατον, 273. διαφθοράν, 536. περὶ τοῦ λόγου, 618 εἰδωλεῖον, ii. 145
εἰδωλόθυτα, ii. 142
εἰδωλολάτρειαι, ii. 595
εἰδωλολάτρης, ii. 128
εἴδωλον, ii. 144. εἴδωλα τὰ ἄφωνα, 168 εἰκῇ, i. 26; ii. 188
εἰκών, ii. 197. 518. εἰκὼν Θεοῦ applied to Christ, 218. 359. εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ, i. e. ἀνήρ, 161 εἰλικρίνεια, ii. 127
εἰλικρινής, ii. 333. 614
εἶναι μετά τινος, i. 168. παρά τινος, 195. 226. οὐκ εἶναι, 'to be dead,' 11 εἰρήνη, i. 498. 584. 623; ii. 536. εἰρ. ὑμῖν, i. 518. ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης, ii. 392 εἰρηνικός, ii. 542 εἰρηνοποιέω, ii. 361
εἰρηνοποιός, i. 23
εἷς for τις, i. 45. 51. 110. εἷς καθ' εἷς, 245. εἷς τὸν ἕνα, ii. 390. ἕν, denoting enumeration, i. 197 εἰς, with adjectives of the comparative degree, i. 205. εἰς τὸ for ὥστε, ii. 236. 273 εἰσακούομαι, i. 259; ii. 488 εἰσδέχομαι, ii. 231
εἰσέρχομαι, i. 164; ii. 34 εἴσοδος, denoting entrance on an office, i. 606 ἐκ for ἀπὸ or ὑπό, i. 267; ii. 336 ἐκβάλλω, i. 53. 70. 82. 291. 631; ii. 566. 640. ἐκβάλλομαι, i. 52. 475 ἔκβασις τῆς ἀναστροφῆς, ii. 549 ἐκβολὴν ποιεῖν, i. 690
ἔκγονα, ii. 424
ἐκδαπανάομαι, ii. 254
ἐκδέχομαι, i. 416; ii. 167. 522. 531 ἐκδημεῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου, ii. 223 ἐκδίδομαι, i. 125
ἐκδίκησις, ii. 234
ἔκδικος, ii. 85
ἐκδιώκω, ii. 381
ἔκδοτον λαβεῖν, i. 535
ἐκεῖ for ἐκεῖσε, i. 11; ellipsis of after verbs of motion, 678 ἐκζητέω, ii. 581. ἐκζητεῖν τὸν Κύριον, i. 620 ἐκθαμβέομαι, i. 222
ἔκθετα ποιεῖν, i. 564
ἐκκαθαίρω, ii. 440
ἐκκακέω, i. 350; ii. 217. 294. 309. 404 ἐκκλησία, i. 96. 566; ii. 164. 476 ἐκκομίζω, i. 295
ἐκκόπτειν ἀφορμήν, ii. 248 ἐκκρεμάομαι, i. 359
ἐκλέγομαι, i. 491
ἐκλείπειν, scil. τὸν βίον, i. 342 ἐκλεκτῇ κυρίᾳ, whether a proper name, ii. 537. ἐκλεκτοί, i. 144; ii. 437. 450. 578. ἐκλ. ἄγγελοι, ii. 427. ἐκλεκτοί, distinguished from κλητοί, i. 116. ἐκλεκτόν, ii. 585 ἐκλογή, ii. 72. 375. 606 ἐκλύομαι, i. 92; ii. 294 ἐκμάσσω, i. 471
ἐκνέω, ἐκνεύω, i. 417
ἐκνήφω, ii. 195
ἑκουσίως ἁμαρτάνειν, ii. 492 ἐκπειράζω, i. 18. 314
ἐκπετάννυμι, ii. 71
ἐκπίπτω, ii. 61. 177
ἐκπλησσόμενος ἐπὶ τῇ διδαχῇ τοῦ Κυρίου, i. 603 ἐκπτύω, ii. 281
ἔκστασις, i. 287. 587
ἐκταράσσω, i. 629
ἐκτενής, i. 598; ii. 595 ἐκτίθημι, i. 644
ἐκτιναξάμενος τὰ ἱμάτια, i. 642 ἐκτός, ii. 192

ἐκτρέπω, ii. 408
ἔκτρωμα, ii. 189
ἐκφέρω, ii. 494
ἔκφοβος, i. 677
ἐκχέω, i. 399. 533
ἐλάχιστος, i. 25. ἐλαχιστότερος, ii. 308 ἔλεγχος, ii. 445. 528
ἐλέγχω, i. 448. 494, 495; ii. 321 ἐλεέω, i. 23; ii. 81. 217 ἐλεημοσύνη, i. 32. 541
ἔλεος, i. 50. 65. 265. 268; ii. 486 ἐλευθερία, ii. 613
ἑλκόω. ἡλκωμένος, i. 344
ἑλκύω, i. 427
ἕλκω, i. 628
Ἕλληνες, i. 216. 473; ii. 107. Ἑλλ. καὶ Βάρβαροι, ii. 6 Ἑλληνισταί, i. 557. 595
ἐλλογέομαι, ii. 34
Ἐλύμας, derivation and meaning of, i. 602 ἐμβατεύω, ii. 367
ἐμβλέπω, i. 37. 112. 394 ἐμβριμάομαι, i. 52. 189. 467 ἐμμαίνομαι, i. 683
Ἐμμαούς, i. 380
ἐμμένω, ii. 272
ἐμπαίζω, i. 10
ἐμπαίκτης, ii. 645
ἐμπίπτειν εἰς χεῖρά τινος, ii. 525 ἐμπνέω, i. 579
ἐμπορεύομαι, ii. 610
ἔμπορος ἄνθρωπος, i. 81 ἐμφανίζω, i. 670. 672; ii. 517 ἔμφοβος, i. 677
λόγος ἔμφυτος, ii. 560
ἐν for ἕνεκα, i. 33; per, 53; by virtue of, 124; at or by, 329; for εἰς, 295. 446; on the authority of, 554; for σύν, 563; de, 324; for κατά, 10; for διά, 467; in respect to, 180; ἐν τοῖς ποσίν, under foot, i. 39
ἐναγκαλίζομαι, i. 225
ἐνδημέω, ii. 223
ἐνδοξάζεσθαί τινι, ii. 396 ἔνδυμα γάμου, i. 129. ἀπὸ τριχῶν καμήλου, 12. ἐνδύματα προβάτων, 40 ἐνδυναμόω, ii. 436
ἐνδύω, i. 384; ii. 87. 198 ἐνεργέω, ii. 265. 303. ἐνεργέομαι, ii. 43. 220. 380. 577 ἐνέργημα, ii. 169. δυνάμεως, 171 ἐνεργής, ii. 201
ἐνέχω, i. 209; ii. 285
ἐνθυμέομαι, i. 6
ἐννεός, i. 580
ἑνότης τῆς πίστεως, ii. 314 ἐνοχλέω, ii. 544
ἔνοχος for ἐνεχόμενος, ii. 477. ἔνοχος τοῦ σώματος καὶ αἵματος τοῦ Κυρίου, 166. ἔνοχος θανάτου, i. 167. ἔνοχος τῇ κρίσει, 26 ἐντάλματα ἀνθρώπων, i. 89 ἐνταφιάζω, i. 157. 515
ἐντεῦθεν καὶ ἐντεῦθεν, ii. 695 ἔντευξις, ii. 412
ἐντολή, i. 461; ii. 372 ἐντόπιος, i. 659
ἐντρέπω, i. 126; ii. 123. ἐντρέπομαι, ii. 541 ἐντρεχόμενος τοῖς λόγοις τῆς πίστεως, ii. 421 ἔντρομος, i. 677
ἐντροπή, ii. 130
ἐντρυφάω, ii. 612
ἐντυγχάνω, ii. 503. ἐντυγχάνειν τινί, i. 681; ii. 72 ἐνυβρίζω, ii. 525
ἐνυπνιάζομαι, ii. 643
ἐνύπνιον, i. 534
ἐνώπιον, i. 338. ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 259; ii. 234 ἐνωτίζομαι, i. 533
ἐξ, distinguished from ἀπό, ii. 378 ἐξαγγέλλω, ii. 586
ἐξαγοράζω, ii. 272. ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρόν, 322 ἐξαιρέομαι, i. 684; ii. 259 ἐξαιτέομαι, i. 369
ἐξακολουθέω, ii. 607
ἐξαλείφω, i. 543; ii. 366
ἐξάλλομαι, i. 541
ἐξανάστασις τῶν νεκρῶν, ii. 348 ἐξανίστημι, i. 617
ἐξαπατάω, ii. 45
ἐξάπινα, i. 221
ἐξαπορέομαι, ii. 206
ἐξαποστέλλω, ii. 276
ἐξαρτίζειν ἡμέρας, i. 658 ἐξαυτῆς for παραυτίκα, i. 210 ἐξεγείρω, ii. 63
ἐξέλκομαι, ii. 557
ἐξέραμα, ii. 613
ἐξερευνάω, ii. 581
ἐξέρχομαι, to be born, i. 9; to expel, 284. 300. ἐξέρχ. ἐπί, 291. ἐξελθεῖν δόγμα, 268. ἐξέρχ. ἐκ τῆς ὀσφύος τινός, ii. 500 ἐξετάζω, i. 9
ἐξηγέομαι, i. 392
ἐξηχέομαι, ii. 576
ἕξις, ii. 490
ἐξίστημι, i. 67. 382. 573; ii. 224 ἔξοδος, i. 307
ἐξομολογέω, i. 13. 63. 367; ii. 341 ἐξορκίζω, i. 166
ἐξορκισταί, i. 646
ἐξορύσσω, i. 190
ἐξουθενέω, i. 374
ἐξουσία, i. 390; ii. 145. πνευματῶν, i. 53. τοῦ πηλοῦ, ii. 64. τοῦ σκότους, 358. γυνὴ ὀφείλει ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς, ii. 162. ἐξουσίαι, i. 322; ii. 84 ἐξωθεῖν τὸ πλοῖον, i. 693 ἑορτή, i. 156
ἐπαγγελίαι, ii. 59. 496. 500 ἐπαγγέλλομαι, ii. 414. 547 ἐπαγγέλματα, ii. 602
ἐπάγειν ἐπί τινα, i. 554 ἐπαγωνίζεσθαι τῇ πίστει, ii. 542 ἔπαινος, ii. 85. 120
ἐπαίρω, i. 480
οὐκ ἐπαισχύνομαι, ii. 532 ἐπακολουθέω, ii. 425
ἐπακούω, ii. 227
ἐπάναγκες, i. 622
ἐπαναπαύεσθαι τῷ νόμῳ, ii. 18 ἐπανίστημι, i. 56
ἐπανόρθωσις, ii. 445
ἐπάνω, i. 356; derivation and meaning of, 173; for πλεῖον, ii. 188 ἐπαρκεῖν θλιβομένοις, ii. 425 ἐπαρχία and ἐπιτροπή, i. 678 ἔπαυλις, i. 529
ἐπαφρίζω, ii. 644
ἐπεί, ii. 519
ἐπείδω, i. 262
ἐπεισαγωγή, ii. 502
ἐπέκεινα, i. e. μέρη, i. 568 ἐπεκτείνω, ii. 348
ἐπενδύτης, i. 520
ἐπέρχομαι, i. 365
ἐπερωτάω, i. 93
ἐπέχω, i. 333. 647
ἐπηρεάζω, i. 31
ἐπί, with adjectives of comparative degree, i. 205; with verbs of motion, 337; force of in composition, 34; against, 372; concerning, 555; ii. 411; apud, coram, 180; quod attinet ad, 505; præter, 512; up to, about, 694. ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτό, i. 540. ἐπ' ἀληθείας for ἐν ἀληθείᾳ, 283 ἐπιβάλλω, i. 337. ἐπιβάλλειν τὰς χεῖρας, 597. ἐπιβαλὼν ἔκλαιε, 249 ἐπιβαρέω, ii. 210
ἐπιβλέπω, ii. 562
ἐπίβλημα for ἐπίῤῥαμμα, i. 50 ἐπιγαμβρεύω, i. 131
τὰ ἐπίγεια, i. 403
ἐπιγενομένου νότου, i. 697 ἐπιγινώσκω, i. 63. 547; ii. 229. 412 ἐπίγνωσις, ii. 24. 333. 357. 412. 602 ἐπιδιατάσσομαι, ii. 273 ἐπιδίδωμι, i. 623
ἐπιδιορθόομαι. ii. 450
ἐπιείκεια, i. 673
τὸ ἐπιεικές, ii. 351
ἐπιζητέω, i. 71
ἐπιθανάτιος, ii. 121
ἐπίθεσις χειρῶν, i. 109; ii. 491 ἐπιθυμέω, i. 338. 344; ii. 570. ἐπιθυμεῖν ἐπιθυμίᾳ, i. 368 ἐπιθυμητὴς κακῶν, ii. 153 ἐπιθυμία, i. 27. 447; ii. 289. 443. 446. 595; personified, 557, 8. τῆς σαρκός, 623; τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν, 624 ἐπικαλέομαι, i. 680; ii. 102 ἐπικαλύπτω, ii. 28
ἐπικατάρατοι, i. 439
ἐπέκειντο φωναῖς μεγάλαις, i. 376. ἐπικείμενος, ii. 512 Ἐπικούρειοι, i. 634
ἐπικρίνω, i. 376
ἐπιλαμβάνω, ii. 507. ἐπιλαμ-βάνειν τῆς χειρός, i. 670. ἐπιλαμβάνομαι, 361. 583 ἐπιλανθανόμενος, ii. 348 ἐπίλυσις, ii. 609

ἐπιλύω, i. 201
ἐπιμέλεια, i. 687
ἐπιμελέομαι, i. 315
ἐπιμένω, i. 441
ἐπίνοια, i. 574
ἐπιοικοδομέω, i. 657
ἐπιορκέω, i. 29
ἐπιούσιος, i. 34
ἐπιπίπτω, i. 573
ἐπιποθεῖν ὑμᾶς, ii. 242. ἐπιπ. πρὸς φθόνον, 571 ἐπιπόθητος, ii. 351
ἐπιποθία, ii. 96
ἐπιῤῥίπτω, ii. 599
ἐπίσημος, i. 171
ἐπισιτισμός, i. 306
ἐπισκέπτομαι, i. 155. 266. 557. 674 ἐπισκιάζω, i. 100. 221. 263 ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπισκοπῆς, ii. 587 ἐπίσκοπος, i. 624. 654; ii. 313. 331. 416. ἐπίσκ. and πρεσβύτερος, 450 ἐπισπάω, ii. 137
ἐπιστάτης, i. 285
ἐπιστέλλω, i. 661
ἐπιστήμων, ii. 569
ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ, denoting the Gospel, ii. 213. ἐπιστολαὶ συστατικαί, ib.
ἐπιστρέφω, i. 543; ii. 376 ἐπιστροφή, conversion, i. 617 ἐπισυνάγω, i. 139
ἐπισυναγωγή, ii. 398. 523 ἐπισύστασις, i. 674
ἐπισωρεύω, ii. 446
ἐπιταγή, ii. 407. 455
ἐπιτίθημι, i. 314. 558. 696 ἐπιτιμάω, i. 46. 97. 120 ἐπιτροπὴ and ἐπαρχία, i. 678 ἐπίτροπος, i. 115. 300. 340. 678; ii. 277; distinguished from ἡγεμών, i. 168 ἐπιφαίνομαι, ii. 454 ἐπιφάνεια, ii. 401. 435 ἐπιφαύω, ii. 322
ἐπιφέρω, ii. 334. ἐπιφέρειν αἰτίαν, i. 680. τὴν ὀργήν, ii. 21 ἐπιφωνεῖν τινι, i. 666
ἐπιφώσκω, i. 379
ἐπιχειρέω, i. 257
ἐπιχέω, i. 315
ἐπιχορηγέω, ii. 603
ἐπιχωρηγία τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ii. 335 ἐποπτεύω, ii. 587
ἐπόπτης and αὐτόπτης, ii. 607 ἐπουράνια, i. 403; ii. 298. 301. 308. δωρεὰ ἐπουράνιος, 393 ἑπτά, an indefinite number, i. 72 ἑπτάκις for πολλάκις, i. 346 εἰπεῖν λόγῳ, i. 43. 295. εἰπεῖν and λέγειν, 240. ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, ii. 500 ἐργάζομαι, i. 41. 425. 591; ii. 149. 294. ἐργάζεσθαι δικαιοσύνην, 536 ἐργασία, i. 628
ἐργάτης, i. 332. 648; ii. 248. 438; distinguished from τεχνίτης, i. 648 ἔργον τοῦ νόμου, ii. 17. τοῦ Θεοῦ, 91. τοῦ Κυρίου, 200. τῆς πίστεως, 375. ἔργα, miracles, i. 421. ἔργα τῆς σαρκός, ii. 290 ἐρεύγομαι, i. 79
ἐρευνάω, ii. 112
ἔρημος τῆς Ἰουδαίας, i. 12. αἱ ἔρημοι, 268 ἔρις, distinguished from ζῆλος and διχοστασία, ii. 114 ἑρμηνεία γλωσσῶν, ii. 171 ἐῤῥίζεσθαι ἐν ἀγάπῃ, ii. 310 ἔῤῥωσο, i. 671
Ἐρυθρὰ θαλασσή, i. 566; ii. 535 ἐρχόμενος ἐπ' αὐτόν, i. 16. εἰς ἑαυτόν, 338. ἐρχόμενος ὀπίσω, 391. ὁ ἐρχόμενος, 59. 389; ii. 527. ἔρχομαι for φέρομαι, i. 199; for ἀνέρχομαι, 452 ἐρωτάω, i. 197. 373
ἔσοπτρον, ii. 177
ἔσχατος, i. 121. 442. ἔσχαται ἡμέραι, ii. 441. 467 ἑταῖρε, i. 115. 165
ἑτεροδιδασκαλέω, ii. 407
ἑτεροζυγέω, ii. 230
ἑτοιμάζειν τὴν ὁδόν, i. 12 εὐαγγελίζομαι, i. 607. εὐαγγελίζεσθαι εἰρήνην, 591; ii. 306 εὐαγγέλιον, i. 3. εὐαγγ. ἀκροβυστίας, ii. 265. τῆς σωτηρίας, 300 εὐαγγελιστής, ii. 313
εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ, ii. 91
εὐγενέστερος, i. 633
εὐδοκέω, ii. 106. 153. 253. 379. 401 εὐδοκία ἀγαθωσύνης, ii. 397. κατὰ τὴν εὐδ. τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ, 298 εὐεργετής, i. 369
εὔθετος, ii. 494
εὐθυδρομέω, i. 626
ῥύμη Εὐθεῖα, i. 581
εὐκαιρέω, i. 636
εὔκαιρος ἡμέρα, i. 209
εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως, ii. 446 εὐλάβεια, ii. 488. 548
εὐλαβέομαι, i. 669; ii. 530 εὐλαβής, distinguished from δίκαιος, i. 272; from εὐσεβής, 531 εὐλογέω, i. 31. 306; ii. 123. 498. εὐλ. ἐν πάσῃ εὐλογίᾳ, 298. εὐλογημένη ἐν γυναιξίν, i. 262 ὁ Εὐλόγητος, scil. Θεός, i. 248 εὐλογία, ii. 99. 240. ἐπ' εὐλογίαις, 241 εὐμετάδοτος, ii. 432
εὐνουχίζω, i. 109
εὐνοῦχος, i. 575
εὐοδοῦμαι, ii. 5. 201. 639 εὐπερίστατος, ii. 539
εὐπορέομαι, i. 597
εὐπορία, i. 648
εὐπροσεδρεύω, ii. 141
εὐπροσωπέω, ii. 295
εὑρίσκω, to procure, i. 306; ii. 513; to convict after trial, i. 374. εὑρεῖν χάριν, 262 εὐσέβεια, ii. 422. 605. εὐσέβειαι, 615 εὐσεβεῖν τινα, i. 638. εὐσεβεῖν τὸν οἶκον; ii. 424 εὐσεβὴς and εὐλαβής, i. 531 εὔσημος for εὔδηλος, ii. 180 εὔσπλαγχνος, ii. 319
εὐσχημόνως, ii. 186. 387
εὐσχήμων, i. 252. 612
εὐτόνως, i. 374
εὐτραπελία, ii. 319
εὐφορέω, i. 324
εὐφραίνομαι, i. 324 εὐχαριστῶ, ii. 104. 207. 324 εὐχαριστία, ii. 181. 320. 412 εὐχάριστος, ii. 370
εὔχομαι, i. 685
εὐωδία, ii. 212
ἐφάλλομαι, i. 647
ἐφάπαξ, ii. 505. 513. 521 ἐφευρετὴς κακῶν, ii. 12 ἐφημερία, i. 258
ἐφίστημι, i. 270. 545; ii. 445 Ἐφραΐμ, i. 470
ἐφφαθά, i. 217
ἔχιδνα, i. 695
ἐχόμενος, neighbouring, i. 188 ἔχω for γαμέω, i. 83; for ἀπέχω, 528; for κατέχω, ii. 497; ago, transigo, i. 466; 'to be united in conjugal union,' ii. 124; 'to have in mind,' i. 487. ἔχειν τέλος, 370. βρῶσιν ἔχ., 413. ἔχ. ἡλικίαν, 453. ἔχ. ἁμαρτίαν, 456. ἔχ. ἐσχάτως, 204. ἑτοίμως ἔχ., 659. ἔχεσθαι σωτηρίας, ii. 495. ἔχειν χάριν, 548 ἕως, i. 284. 661

Z.

ζάω, i. 428. 438. 486. 653; ii. 384. ζῆν ἑαυτῷ, 89. ζῆν Θεῷ, 268. ζῶν ὕδωρ, i. 409. ζῶν ὕδωρ, running water, ii. 693 ζεῦγος, used of birds, i. 272 ζευκτηρία, i. 693
ζῆλος, i. 553; distinguished from ἔρις and διχοστασία, ii. 114. ζῆλος Θεοῦ, 67. πυρὸς ζῆλος, 524 ζηλόω, ii. 174. ζηλοῦν τινα, 281 ζηλωτὴς νόμου, ii. 261
ζημία, i. 688
ζημιόω, ii. 117
ζητέω, to call a council, i. 367. ζητεῖν τὴν ψυχήν, 11. ζητεῖν τὸν Κύριον, 639 ζήτημα, i. 682
ζήτησις, i. 406; ii. 429. 457 ζιζάνια, i. 78
ζυγόν, ii. 661

ζυμή, i. 79. 219; ii. 126. ζυμὴ τῶν Φαρισαίων, i. 322 ζωγρέω, i. 286
ζωή, i. 324. 388. 484. 553; ii. 220. ζωὴ ἐκ νεκρῶν, ii. 75. ἡ ζωὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 315. ἡ ζωή, applied to Christ, 618 ζῶν, ii. 525. 579. ζῶν ὕδωρ, i. 409; ii. 693. ζῶν καὶ ἐνεργής, 485 ζώνη δερματίνη, i. 13. ζῶναι, 54 ζωογονέω, i. 349
ζῶα, ii. 659
ζωοποιέω, ii. 214

H.

ἢ for μᾶλλον ἤ, i. 387
ἦ μήν, ii. 496
ὁ ἠγαπημένος, a title of our Lord, ii. 299 ἡγεμὼν and ἐπίτροπος, i. 168 ὁ ἡγούμενος τοῦ λόγου, i. 614. ἡγούμ. ἄνδρες, 621. οἱ ἡγούμενοι, ii. 549 ἤδη ποτὲ for ὀψέ ποτε, ii. 5 ἡλικία, i. 37. 276; ii. 314 ἡμέραι, denoting time, i. 269; judgment, ii. 120. ἡμέρα κρίσεως, i. 55. μεγάλη ἡ ἡμ., 514. ἡ ἡμ. ἡ πονηρά, ii. 329. ἡ ἡμ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 332. 398. ἐκείνην τὴν ἡμ., 435. ἡμ. δηλώσει, 116. ἡμ. ἐπισκοπῆς, 587. ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας, 611. ἡμέρας καὶ νυκτός, 659 ἤπιος, ii. 379
ἤρεμος, ii. 412
ἡσυχάζω, ii. 387
ἡσυχία, ii. 415
ἡσύχιος, ii. 412
ἡττάομαι, ii. 254
ἥττημα, ii. 74. 130

Θ.

ϑαλάσσῃ ὑαλίνῃ, ii. 681
ϑάμβος, i. 283
ϑάνατος, ii. 447; denoting pestilence, 662; ϑάνατον ϑεωρεῖν, i. 449 ϑαρσέω, i. 499
ϑαυμάζω, i. 207. 434; ii. 674. ϑαυμ. εἰ—, i. 252. ϑαυμ. ἐπί—, 282. ϑαυμ. πρόσωπα, ii. 645 ϑεάομαι, i. 390; ii. 618 ϑεατρίζομαι, ii. 525
ϑέλημα, i. 105; ii. 142. ϑελ. τοῦ Θεοῦ, i. 433; ii. 101. ϑελήματα τῶν διανοιῶν, ii. 303 ϑέλω, to delight, i. 174; to choose, 288 ὁ ϑεμέλιος τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 439 ϑεοδίδακτος, ii. 386
Θεός, in what sense said to be πνεῦμα, i. 411. ὁ Θεὸς τῆς δόξης, 561. ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ii. 301 ὁ ϑεὸς αἰῶνος τούτου, ii. 218; distinction between ϑεοὶ and δαίμονες, i. 635 ϑεοσέβεια, ii. 414
ϑεοστυγής, ii. 12
Θεόφιλος, whether a feigned name, i. 258 ϑεραπεία, household, i. 149 ϑεραπεύω, i. 639
ϑεράπων, ii. 479
ϑέρος, i. 147
Θευδᾶς, i. 555
ϑηριομαχέω, ii. 194
ϑηρίον, i. 695
ϑησαυρίζω, ii. 14
ϑησαυρός, i. 9. 36
ϑλίβομαι, ii. 219
ϑλίψις, i. 142; ii. 525 ϑορυβέω, i. 52. 632
ϑρῆνος, i. 496
ϑρησκεία, i. 682. ϑρησκεία τῶν ἀγγέλων, ii. 366 ϑρῆσκος, ii. 561
ϑριαμβεύω, ii. 211
ϑρόνοι, ii. 360
ϑροοῦμαι, ii. 398
ἡ ϑυγάτηρ Σιών, i. e. Jerusalem, i. 121 ξύλον ϑύϊνον, ii. 688
ϑυμιατήριον, ii. 510
ϑυμομαχέω, i. 600
ϑύρα, i. 252. 457. ϑύρα πίστεως, 616 ϑυρίς, i. 583. 652
ϑυρωρός, i. 243. 456. 507 ϑυσία, i. 50. 65. δῶρα καὶ ϑυσίαι, ii. 487. 505. 512 ϑυσιαστήριον, i. 139; ii. 550. 662 ϑύω, i. 128. 339. 367. 589

I.

Ἰαννῆς καὶ Ἰαμβρῆς, ii. 443 ἴασπις, ii. 658
ἰδέα, i. 179
ἴδιος, distinguished from οἰκεῖος, ii. 425. οἱ ἴδιοι, i. 548. τὰ ἴδια, 389 ἰδιώτης, i. 547; ii. 181, 182. 246 ἰδού, i. 6
ἱερατεύω, i. 259
ὁ ἱερεύς, the High Priest, i. 554 ἱερόν, distinguished from ναός, i. 123 ἱεροπρεπής, ii. 453
ἱερουργεῖν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ii. 95 Ἰησοῦς, i. 5
ἱκανός, i. 14; for ἄξιος, 43. ἱκανόν ἐστι, 370. ἱκανὸν λαβεῖν, 633 ἱκανόω, ii. 358
ἱκετηρίαι, ii. 488
ἱλάσκομαι, ii. 477
ἱλασμὸς for ἱλαστής, ii. 620 ἱλαστήριον, ii. 25. 511 ἵλεώς σοι, i. 97
ἱμάς, i. 185. 666
ἱμάτιον, i. 144. 478; distinguished from χιτών, 30 ἱματισμός, i. 657
ἵνα for ὥστε, i. 309; for ὅτι, 473. 490; eventual, 6. 476. 506. 509. 513 Ἰούδα, i. 263
ἡ Ἰουδαία γῆ, i. 405
Ἰουδαΐζω, ii. 266
Ἰουδαϊσμός, ii. 261
ἰσάγγελος, i. 362
Ἰσκαριώτης, i. 54
ἴσος, i. 247. ἴσα εἶναι Θεῷ, ii. 340 ἰσότης, ii. 371
ἰσότιμος, ii. 602
ἰσόψυχος, ii. 344
Ἰσραὴλ κατὰ σάρκα, ii. 156
Ἰσραηλῖται and Ἑβραῖοι, distinction between, ii. 249 ἱστάω, ἵστημι, i. 157. 168. 284. 367. 530. 571; ii. 337. 600 ἱστορεῖν τινα, ii. 262 ἰσχυρός, ii. 122. 488
ἴσχυσε κατ' αὐτῶν, i. 647 ἴσως, i. 360
ἰῶτα, i. 25

K.

καθαιρέω, i. 251. 265
καθαίρω, i. 489
καθάπτω, i. 695
καθαρίζω, i. 42. 589; ii. 517 καθαρισμός, i. 406
καθαρός, i. 489. καθαροὶ τῇ καρδίᾳ, i. 23. καθαρὰ καρδία, ii. 408 καθεξῆς, i. 258
κάθημαι, i. 19. 366. 613 καθίζω, i. 23. 512. 604. 642; ii. 130. 154 καθίστημι, i. 634
καθ' ὅτι for καθώς, ii. 200 καθώς, when, i. 363; for ὡς, 619; quemadmodum, ii. 271. 291 καί, and yet, i. 37. 498. 553; and then, 272; et sane, 266; yea, 166; when, 250; nay, 214; scilicet, 561; verily, ii. 336; prefixed to interrogative sentences, 487. 668; for καίπερ, 304; for ἀλλά, i. 62; for ἀλλὰ καί, ii. 545; for ὅτι, i. 551 καίτοι, nempe, ii. 483 καινὴ ἐντολή, i. 482; ii. 621. καινὴ κτίσις, ii. 226. ὄνομα καινόν, 653. ᾠδὴ καινή, 660 καιρός, distinguished from χρόνος, i. 526 καίω, accendo, i. 24. καίομαι, 383 κακία, i. 38; ii. 12. 588. περισσεία κακίας, 559 κακοήθεια, ii. 12
κακολογέω, i. 88
κακόν, ii. 91
κακοπαθεία, ii. 575
κακοπαθέω, ii. 436
κακὸς and πονηρός, distinction between, i. 153

κακοῦργος, i. 377
κακόω, i. 612
κάκωσις, i. 566
κάλαμος, i. 175
καλέω, i. 128; ii. 56. 158. καλέομαι, i. 262. 272. 531. 566 καλός, ii. 408. 573. καλὰ ἔργα, 458 κάλυμμα τοῦ ναοῦ, ii. 497 καλύπτομαι, i. 46
καλῶς, i. 214. 410; ii. 76. καλῶς ποιεῖν, i. 31 κάμηλος, on the meaning of (at Matt. xxiii. 24), i. 137 καμμύω, i. 76
κάμπτειν τὰ γόνατα, ii. 309 κανών, ii. 245. 295
Καπερναοὺμ ἡ παραθαλασσία, i. 19 καπηλεύω, ii. 212
καρδία, i. 605. 618. καρδία τῆς γῆς, 71. καρδία ἀληθινή, ii. 523 καρδιογνώστης, i. 530. 618 καρπὸν ποιεῖν, i. 14. 40. καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος, ii. 291. καρπὸς τῆς δικαιοσύνης, 570 καρτερέω, ii. 535
κάρφος, i. 38
κατά, in composition, i. 298; for πρός, 397; near to, 532; because of, ii. 14; towards, i. 575. 625; down, 48; in, 593 καταβολή, i. 79. ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κοσμοῦ, 154; ii. 483. εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος, 531 καταβραβεύω, ii. 366
καταγελάω, i. 52
καταδέω, i. 315
κατάδηλον, ii. 501
καταδικάζω, i. 38. 292
καταδιώκω, i. 188
καταδουλόω, ii. 249. 264 καταισχύνω, ii. 161. οὐ μὴ καταισχυνθῇ, 585 κατακαυχάομαι, ii. 564 κατακεῖμαι, i. 188. 416; ii. 145 κατακόπτω, i. 202
κατακρημνίζω, i. 283
κατακρίνω, i. 116; ii. 49. κατακρίνομαι, as opposed to σώζομαι, i. 254 καταλαλιά, ii. 255
κατάλαλος, ii. 12
καταλαμβάνομαι, i. 547
καταλέγομαι, ii. 425
κατάλειμμα, ii. 65
καταλείπω, ii. 450
καταλλαγή, ii. 34. 75. 226 καταλλάττομαι, ii. 33
καταλύω, i. 25. 140. 305; ii. 222. 268 καταμανθάνω, i. 37
καταναρκάω, ii. 247
κατανοέω, i. 565; ii. 478. 523 καταντάω, i. 624
κατανύξεως πνεῦμα, ii. 73
κατανύσσομαι, i. 537
καταπατέω, ii. 525
κατάπαυσις, ii. 483
καταπέτασμα, i. 176; ii. 497. 522 καταπίνω, i. 137
καταπονούμενος, ii. 611 κατάρα, ii. 272. κατάρας ἐγγύς, 494. κατάρας τέκνα, 612 καταράομαι, i. 31
καταργέω, i. 329; ii. 38. 42. 108. 110. 176. 215. 400. καταργεῖν τινα, 476. καταργεῖν θανατόν, 435. καταργεῖσθαι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 286 καταρτίζω, ii. 257. 293 κατάρτισις, ii. 257
καταρτισμὸς τῶν ἁγίων, ii. 313 κατασείω, i. 599
κατασκάπτω, i. 620; ii. 72 κατασκευάζω, ii. 530
κατασκήνωσις, i. 45
κατασοφισάμενος τὸ γένος ἡμῶν, i. 563 καταστέλλω, i. 650, 1
κατάστημα, ii. 453
καταστρηνιάω, ii. 426
καταστροφῇ κατακρίνειν, ii. 611 καταστρώννυμι, ii. 153
κατασύρω, i. 328
κατασφραγίζω, ii. 660 κατάσχεσις, i. 561
κατατίθεσθαι χάριτας, i. 678 κατατομή, ii. 346
καταφάγω, ii. 674. καταφάγομαι, i. 399. καταφαγὼν τὸν βίον, 340 καταφέρειν ψῆφον, i. 683. καταφερόμενος ὕπνῳ, 652 καταφιλέω, i. 165. 298
καταφρονέω, ii. 14. 165 καταφρονητός, i. 608
καταχθόνιος, ii. 341
καταχράομαι, ii. 149
κατείδωλον, i. 634
κατεξουσιάζω, i. 233
κατεργάζομαι, ii. 32. 125. 223. 329 κατεσθίω, i. 135; ii. 249 κατευθύνειν τὴν ὁδόν, ii. 384 κατεφίστημι, i. 642 κατέχω, ii. 8
τὸ κατέχον, ii. 400
κατηχέω, i. 258. 660; ii. 293 κατοικεῖν εἰς πόλιν, i. 11 κατορθόω, i. 672
κατόρθωμα, i. 672
τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς, ii. 313 εἰς καῦσιν, ii. 454
καύσων, i. 115; ii. 556 καυτηριάζειν συνείδησιν, ii. 421 καυχάομαι, ii. 240. καυχ. ἐν Θεῷ, 18 καύχημα, ii. 343. κ. τῆς ἐλπίδος, 480 καύχησις, ii. 207
Κέδρων, i. 505
κεῖμαι, ii. 216. 383. κεῖσθαι ἔν τινι, 636 κειρίαι, i. 469
κέλευσμα, ii. 389
κελεύω, to counsel, urge, i. 555 κενόδοξος, ii. 292
κενός, i. 237; ii. 565; distinguished from ἀργός, ii. 30 οὐ κενός, 377. κενοὶ λόγοι, 320 κενοφωνία, ii. 432
κενόω, ii. 341
κέντρον, ii. 199
κεραία, i. 25
κέρας σωτηρίας, i. 267
κεράτιον, i. 338
κερδεῖν ὕβριν καὶ ζημίαν, i. 691. κερδεῖν Χριστόν, ii. 347 κέρμα, i. 399
κερματιστής, i. 122. 399 κεφάλαιον, i. 666; ii. 505 κεφαλαιόω, i. 237
κεφαλή, meaning of, thrice changed within three verses, ii. 161. κεφ. γωνίας, i. 126. κεφ. τῆς ἐκκλησίας, ii. 325 κεφαλὶς βιβλίου, ii. 520 κῆνσος, i. 102
κηπουρός, i. 516
κήρυγμα, the Gospel, ii. 448 κῆρυξ δικαιοσύνης, ii. 611 κηρύσσω, i. 12; ii. 273
κῆτος, i. 71
Κηφᾶς, i. 95
κιβωτός, ii. 530
κινέομαι, i. 661
κλάσις ἄρτου, i. 85. 539 κλάσματα, i. 85
κλᾶν ἄρτον, i. 540. 652 κλείειν τὰ σπλάγχνα ἀπό τινος, ii. 629 κλέπτης distinguished from λῃστής, i. 456 κλέπτω, i. 180
Κλήμενς, ii. 351
κληρονομέω, ii. 197. 496 κληρονόμος, ii. 467
κλῆρος, i. 529; ii. 599 κλῆσις, ii. 56. 107. 606 κλητός, ii. 4. κλητοὶ and ἐκλεκτοί, i. 116. κλητοὶ ἅγιοι, ii. 102 κλίμα, ii. 96
κλινή, i. 199. 552
κλίνω used with ἡμέρα, i. 305 κνηθόμενος τὴν ἀκοήν, ii. 446 κοιλία, i. 438
κοιμάομαι, i. 371. 465; ii. 167. 387 κοινός, i. 539. 589; opposed to ἅγιος, 213. κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν, ii. 450 κοινωνέω, ii. 293
κοινωνία, i. 539; ii. 332. 618, 9. κοιν. τοῦ Υἱοῦ, 103. κοιν. πνεύματος, 338. κοιν. τῶν παθημάτων, 348 κοίνωσις τῆς πίστεως, ii. 459 ἡ κοίτη, denoting marriage, ii. 549 κοκκίνη and πορφύρα, i. 172 κόκκος σινάπεως, i. 101. 200 κολαφίζω, i. 162; ii. 122 κολλάομαι, i. 338. 552. 576. 640; ii. 82 κολλυβιστής, i. 122
κολοβόω, i. 144
κολυμβήθρα, i. 415

κομίζω, i. 153; ii. 224. 533 κομψότερον, i. 415
κονιάω, i. 138
κονιορτὸν βάλλων εἰς τὸν ἀέρα, i. 665 κοπάζω, i. 87
κοπετός, i. 571
κοπή, ii. 498
κοπιάω, i. 414
κόπος τῆς ἀγαπῆς, ii. 375. κόπος καὶ μόχθος, 380. κόπους παρέχειν, 296 κόπτομαι, i. 304. 376
κορβανᾶν, i. 169
κοσμέω, i. 151. κεκοσμημένος, 72. 319 τὸ Ἅγιον κοσμικόν, ii. 508 κοσμοκράτωρ, ii. 328
κόσμος, i. 18. 404; ii. 29. 295 κουστωδία, i. 178
κόφινος, i. 85
κράββατος, i. 190. 417. 552 κράζω, i. 436; ii. 65. κράξας φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, i. 176 κράσπεδον, i. 51
κραταιόω, ii. 202
κρατέω, i. 195. 221. 542; ii. 497. κρατεῖν προθέσεως, i. 688. κρατεῖν τὰς παραδόσεις, ii. 402 κράτος τῆς ἰσχύος, ii. 328 κρίμα, i. 455; ii. 85. ἐμπίπτειν εἰς κρίμα τοῦ Διαβόλου, ii. 417. κρίμα αἰωνίον, 491 κρίνω, i. 30. 38. 292. 443. 477. 562. 606. 686; ii. 19. 129. 128—130. 158. 401. 525 κρίσις, i. 26. 67. 443. κρίσις τοῦ κόσμου, 474 κριτήριον, ii. 130
κρούσας τὴν θύραν, i. 599 κρυπτή, crypta, i. 320 τὰ κρυπτὰ τῆς αἰσχύνης, ii. 217 κρώβυλος, ii. 414
κτάομαι, i. 54. 364; ii. 385 κτῆμα, i. 539
κτῆνος, i. 315
κτίσις, i. 52. 228; ii. 53. 57. 587 κτίσμα, ii. 421
κυβεία, ii. 314
κυβέρνησις, ii. 173
κυβερνήτης, i. 688
κυλίομαι, i. 223
κύλισμα βορβόρου, ii. 613 κυλλός, i. 91
κύματα ἄγρια, ii. 644
κύμβαλον, ii. 174
κύμινον, i. 137
κυνάριον, i. 91
κυριακὸν δεῖπνον, ii. 164
Κύριος, i. 133. 681; ii. 341. Κύριος ὁ Θεός, i. 260. ὁ Κύριος μετὰ σοῦ, 262. Κύριος πάντων, 591. Κύριος τῶν κυριευόντων, ii. 431. Κύριος κυρίων, 686 κυρόω, ii. 211
βλέπετε κύνας, ii. 346
κῶλον, ii. 482
κωλύω, i. 593
κῶμαι, towns and villages, i. 153 κωμόπολις, i. 188
κῶμος, ii. 291
κώνωψ, i. 137
κωφός, i. 91. 261

Λ.

λαγχάνω, i. 529
λαίλαψ, i. 46. 201
ἐλάκησε μέσος, i. 529
λαλέω, i. 544. 627; ii. 381. 559. λαλεῖν εἰς ἀέρα, 180 λαμβάνειν τὸν σταυρόν, i. 58. λαμβ. πρόσωπον, 361. λαμβάνειν ἑαυτῷ, ii. 488. λαμβάνεσθαι ἐν αὐτοφώρῳ, i. 440 λαμπάς, i. 150. 505
λαμπρός, i. 591; ii. 562 Λασαία, i. 687
λατρεία, i. 493; ii. 59. 508. 511 λατρεύω, i. 18. 275. 493. 691; ii. 5. 514 λάχανον, i. 79; distinguished from δένδρον, 200 Λεγεών, i. 203
λέγω, to mean, i. 431; for ἐπιτάσσω, ii. 180; distinguished from εἰπεῖν, i. 240. λέγειν ἀνάθεμά τινα, ii. 168. λέγομαι, to be interpreted, i. 173; for καλέομαι, i. 4; ii. 501 λειτουργέω, i. 601
λειτουργία, i. 261. 601 λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, ii. 472 λειτουργός, ii. 95
λέντιον, i. 478
λεπτόν, i. 240
λευκός, i. 413
ληνός, i. 125
λῃστής, i. 122. 174. 377; distinguished from κλέπτης, 456 λίβανος, i. 9
λιβανωτόν, ii. 667
ἡ συναγωγὴ τῶν Λιβερτίνων, i. 558 λίθος προσκόμματος, ii. 585. λίθου βολή, i. 371. οἱ λίθοι κεκράξονται, 358 Λιθόστρωτον, i. 512
λιμοὶ καὶ λοιμοί, i. 142 λίτρα, i. 515
λογία, ii. 200
λογίζομαι, ii. 27. 52. 214. 242 λογικὴ λατρεία, ii. 79
λόγιον, i. 566. λόγια τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 490 λόγιος, i. 644; ii. 20
λογισμός, ii. 243
ὁ Λόγος, i. 388. ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 618 λόγος, denoting 'doctrine,' i. 284. 501. 591; 'the Gospel,' 258; 'account,' 340; ii. 66; 'history,' i. 526; 'matter,' or 'thing,' 574; 'a complaint,' 651; 'ground,' or 'purpose,' ii. 188; 'consolation,' 402; 'prophecy,' 199. λόγος ἀκοῆς, 380. 483. τῆς ἀληθείας, 438. 559. λόγος καὶ γνῶσις, 102. γνώσεως, 170. δικαιοσύνης, 490. ἐλευθερίας, 560. ἔμφυτος, ib. τοῦ Θεοῦ, 362. 485. τῆς καταλλαγῆς, 226. σοφίας, 170. πλαστός, 610. τοῦ σταυροῦ, 105. τῆς ὑπομονῆς, 656. τῆς χάριτος, i. 657. ἄνευ λόγου, ii. 589 τοῦ λοιποῦ, ii. 296
διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας, ii. 456 λούω, distinguished from νίπτω, i. 452. 479. ἔλουσεν ἀπὸ τῶν πληγῶν, 630. λελουμένος, ii. 523 Λυκαονιστί, i. 613
λυμαίνομαι, i. 571
λυπέομαι, i. 84; ii. 90 λύπη καταποθῇ, ii. 211. λύπη τοῦ κοσμοῦ, 234. λύπην ἐπὶ λύπῃ ἔχειν, 345 λύτρον, i. 118. 460
λυτρόω, ii. 455 λυτρωτής, i. 566
λύχνος τοῦ σώματος, i. 36. ὁ λύχνος ὁ καιόμενος, 421 λύω, to neglect or transgress, i. 25; to permit, 96; to abrogate a law, 463. λύομαι, 694. λελύσθαι ἀπὸ γυναικός, ii. 139

M.

Μαγδαληνή, i. 300
μαγεύω, i. 572
μάγοι, i. 7. 572
μαθήτρια, i. 585
μαίνομαι, i. 685
μακαρίζω, i. 264
μακράν, i. 48; ii. 305
μακροθυμέω, i. 107. 351; ii. 575 μακροθυμία, ii. 575
μακροθύμως, i. 682
μαλακία, i. 21
μαλακός, i. 60
μᾶλλον, intensive use of, i. 171; with comparative, 217; πολλῷ μᾶλλον κρεῖσσον, ii. 336 μαμωνᾶς, μαμμωνᾶς, i. 37; μαμωνᾶς τῆς ἀδικίας, 341 μανθάνω, i. 82. ἔμαθε τὴν ὑπακοήν, ii. 489 μάννα, i. 425. μάννα κεκρυμμένον, ii. 653 μαρὰν ἀθά, ii. 203
μαργαρίτης, i. 81; ii. 414 μαρτυρέω, i. 462. 624; ii. 285. 380. 529. μαρτυρεῖν τινι, i. 282. 480. 618. 664; ii. 67 μαρτυρία, reputation, ii. 418 μαρτύρομαι and μαρτυρέομαι, i. 685 μάστιξ, i. 194. 296
ματαιόλογος, ii. 451
μάταιος, ii. 583. τὰ μάταια, i. 614 ματαιότης, ii. 613. ματ. τοῦ νοοῦ, 315 ματαιόω, ii. 9

μάτην, i. 89
μάχαιρα, i. 58. 165. 506 μάχομαι, ii. 440
μεγαλειότης, i. 309
μεγαλύνω, i. 264; ii. 245 μέγας, ii. 554. ἀρχιερεὺς μέγας, 486 μεγάλη οἰκία, denoting the visible Church, ii. 439 μεγιστᾶνες, i. 209
μεθίστημι, i. 340. 648; ii. 358 μεθοδεία τῆς πλάνης, ii. 314. μεθ. τοῦ Διαβόλου, 328 μεθόριον, i. 90. 216
μεθύω, i. 398; ii. 165
μειζότερος, ii. 639
μελετάω, i. 241; ii. 423, 424 μέλι ἄγριον, i. 13
Μελίτη, i. 694
μεμψίμοιρος, ii. 645
μὲν οὖν, i. 538; ii. 344. 508 μενοῦνγε, i. 319; ii. 64 μένω, i. 394. 489. 654. μένειν εἰς διηνεκές, ii. 501 μερίζομαι, i. 195; ii. 141 μέριμνα, i. 71
μεριμνάω, i. 37. 56
μερίς, i. 316
μερισμοὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου, ii. 473 μεριστὴς and δικαστής, i. 323 μέρος, denoting 'employment,' i. 648 μεσιτεύειν ὅρκῳ, ii. 496 μεσίτης, ii. 274. 413. 497. 506. 514, 515 μεσότοιχος, ii. 306
μεστὸς μοιχαλίδος, ii. 612 μετά, at, after, i. 4; amidst, 654; in the manner of, ii. 531; as well as, ib.
μετάβασις, i. 477
μεταδίδοναι τὶ τινὶ, ii. 5. 379 μετακινέομαι, ii. 361
μεταλαβὼν καιρόν, i. 677 οὐ μεταμέλομαι, ii. 233. 503 μεταμορφῶμαι, i. 99; ii. 80 μετανοέω, i. 12. 537. 543. 640. ii. 491 μετάνοια, i. 337. 594. 626; ii. 234. 491. 544 εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον, i. 609 μεταστρέφω, ii. 260
μετασχηματίζω, ii. 120. 248. 350 μετατίθεμαι, ii. 259. 501. 529. 642 μετέχω, ii. 501. μετέχειν ἐξουσίας, 148. μετ. τραπέζης Κυρίου, 157 μετεωρίζω, i. 37. 325 μετοικεσία, i. 4
μετοικίζω, i. 568
μέτοικος, i. 636
μέτοχοι τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ii. 481 μετρητής, i. 397
μετριοπαθέω, ii. 487
μέχρι, distinguished from ἄχρι, i. 603; ii. 34 μή, i. 593; instead of οὐκ—ἀλλά, ii. 414; μὴ γάρ, i. 438 μηλωτή, ii. 538
μήπως, with indicative, ii. 260 μικρὸν ὅσον ὅσον, ii. 527 μισθαποδοσία, ii. 472. 526 μίσθιος, used as a substantive, i. 338 μισθόω, i. 114
μίσθωμα, i. 698
μισέω, i. 36; ii. 646. 652 μνημεῖον, i. 179. 252. 379 μνημόσυνον, i. 157
μνηστεύομαι, i. 262
μογιλάλος, i. 217
μοιχαλίς, i. 71; ii. 571 μοιχός, ii. 571
ἡ σκηνὴ τοῦ Μολόχ, i. 567
μολυσμὸς σαρκός, ii. 232 μοναὶ πολλαί, i. 483
ὁ μονογενής, ii. 299; added to ὁ Υἱὸς Θεοῦ, 631. μονογ. παρά, i. 390 μόνον, modo, ii. 400
μόνος σόφος Θεός, ii. 100. 410, 411. 431 ἐν μορφῇ Θεοῦ, ii. 339
μόρφωσις, ii. 18
μυέομαι, ii. 354
μύθοι, ii. 407. 422
μυκτηρίζω, i. 342
μύλος, ii. 689. μύλος ὀνικός, i. 104 μύλων, i. 148
μυριάδες, i. 322
μυστήριον, i. 75; ii. 77. 198. 362, 363. 420. μυστ. τοῦ θελήματος Θεοῦ, ii. 299. τὸ μυστ. τῆς ἀνομίας, 400. μυστ. τῆς πίστεως, 418 μυωπάζω, ii. 606
μωραίνομαι, i. 24
μωρία, ii. 105, 106
μωρός, i. 24. 26. 118. 136

N.

Ναζωραῖος, i. 11
ναί, derivation of, ii. 351. ναὶ, Κύριε, i. 91. ναὶ ναὶ, οὒ οὔ, 29; ii. 209 ὁ ναός, the Sanctuary, i. 259. ναοὶ ἀργυροῖ Ἀρτέμιδος, 648. ὁ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, ii. 672 ναυαγέω, ii. 411
ναύκληρος, i. 687
νεανίας, i. 570
νεανίσκος, i. 551; ii. 622 νεκρός, i. 339; ii. 302 νεόφυτος, ii. 417
νεύω, i. 481
νεφέλη φωτεινή, i. 100
νεωκόρος, i. 650
νεωτερικός, ii. 440
νεώτεροι, i. 551; ii. 599. νεώτεραι, ii. 426 νήπιος, ii. 275
νηστεία, i. 688
νηφαλίος, ii. 417
νήφω, ii. 582
νικάω, to frustrate, i. 499 νίπτω, distinguished from λούω, i. 452. 479 νοέω, i. 143
νόημα, ii. 243. νοήματα, 246 νομίζομαι, i. 279; ii. 138 νομικοί, i. 8. 132. 321 νομίμως, ii. 408. 436
νόμισμα τοῦ κήνσου, i. 130 νομοδιδάσκαλος, ii. 408 νομοθεσία, ii. 59
νομοθετέω, ii. 506
νόμος, i. 40. 475. 511; ii. 16. 19. 42. 182. 347. 409; meaning of in the Gospels and in the Acts, i. 25; νόμος πίστεως, ii. 26. νόμος βασιλικός, i. 40; ii. 463 νόσος, i. 21. 45
νοσσία, brood, i. 332 νοσφίζεσθαι ἀπὸ τῆς τιμῆς, i. 550 νουθεσία, ii. 327
νουθετέω, ii. 390
νῦν, sane, profecto, i. 320; for τότε, 144 νύκτος καὶ ἡμέρας, ii. 380 νυστάζω, i. 150; ii. 610 νυχθήμερον, ii. 249
νωθρός, ii. 495. νωθ. ταῖς ἀκοαῖς, 489

Ξ.

ξενία, i. 698
ξενίζω, i. 587. 636. 697; ii. 548. 595. 597 ξενοδοχέω, ii. 425
ξένος, distinguished from ἀστός, i. 636; from πάροικος, ii. 306. οἱ ξένοι (Matt. xxvii. 7), who meant by the term, i. 170 ξέσται, i. 214
ξηραίνομαι, i. 223
ξηρὰ χείρ, i. 65
ξύλον, i. 554; ii. 652; distinguished from χόρτος, i. 37. ξύλα, clubs, 164

O.

ὄγκος, ii. 539
ὁδηγέω, i. 576
ἡ ὁδός, used κατ' ἐξοχήν, i. 676; denoting 'way of thinking,' 579; for ὁδοποιός, 483; for ἐπιτήδευμα, ii. 556. ὁδὸς θαλάσσης, i. 19. ὁδὸς δικαιοσύνης, 125. ὁδὸς τοῦ Κυρίου, 603. 644. ὁδὸς τῆς ἀληθείας, ii. 610 ὀδύνη, ii. 430
ὀδυρμός, ii. 233
ὅθεν, i. 616
ὀθόνη, i. 588
οἴδαμεν, ii. 23
οἰκεῖος, ii. 294; distinguished from ἴδιος, 425 οἴκημα for δεσμωτήριον, i. 598 οἰκητήριον, ii. 222
οἰκίαι, goods, i. 135

οἰκοδομέω, i. 584; ii. 143. 145. 268. 390 οἰκοδομή, ii. 222. 313
οἰκονομία, ii. 299. 362 οἰκονόμος, i. 340; ii. 277. οἰκ. μυστηρίων Θεοῦ, 119. οἰκ. Θεοῦ, 451 οἶκος, i. 139. 356; ii. 104; distinguished from πατριά, i. 269. οἶκος τοῦ Θεοῦ, 64; ii. 523. οἶκος Ἰσραήλ, i. 537 πᾶσα ἡ οἰκουμένη, i. 268. ὅλη ἡ οἰκ., 143. 596. ἡ οἰκ. ἡ μέλλουσα, ii. 473 οἰκουρός, ii. 453
οἰκτιρμὸς and ἔλεος, i. 268 οἰκτίρμων, i. 292
οἰνοφλυγίαι, ii. 595
μὴ ὀκνῆσαι, i. 585
περιτομὴ ὀκταήμερος, ii. 346 ὄλεθρος αἰώνιος, ii. 396 ὀλιγόψυχος, ii. 391
ὀλοθρευτής, ii. 154
ὁλοκληρία, i. 542
ὁλόκληρος, ii. 393; distinguished from τέλειος and ὁλοτελής, 554 ὁλοτελής, distinguished from ὁλόκληρος and τέλειος, ii. 554 ὁμιλέω, i. 380. 653
ὤμοσε and ὤμ. ὅρκῳ, as applied to God, i. 536; ii. 482. 496 ὁμοθυμαδόν, i. 528. 552. 600 ὁμοιάζω, i. 248
ὁμοιοπαθής, i. 614
ὁμοίωμα, ii. 341
ὁμολογέω, i. 41. 58; ii. 551 ὁμολογία, ii. 478. ὁμολ. τῆς ἐλπίδος, 523 ὁμοφρονέω, ii. 591
ὅμως for ὁμοίως, ii. 179; quamvis, 273 ὄναρ, i. 69. 171
μὴ ὀνειδίζων, ii. 555
ὀνειδισμός, ii. 525. ὀνειδ. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 535. 551 ὄνειδος, i. 262
μύλος ὀνικός, i. 104
ὄνομα, i. 41. 66. 502. 528. 541. 547; ii. 341. 397. 655. ὀνόματα, persons, 655 ὄξος μετὰ χολῆς, i. 173 ὀπαὶ τῆς γῆς, ii. 538
ὀπίσω μου ἔλθειν, i. 20. 97 ὅπλα ἀδικίας, ii. 39. δικαιοσύνης, ib. τοῦ φωτός, 87 ὁπλίζω, ii. 594
ὅπου, whereas, ii. 114
ὀπτανόμενος, i. 526
ὄπτομαι, i. 684. ὄψονται τὸν Θεόν, 23 ὅπως ἄν, i. 543
ὅρασις, i. 534
ὁράω, i. 93. 392. 421. 446 ὀργή, i. 13. 193; ii. 30 ὀργίζομαι, ii. 674
ὀργυιά, i. 691
ὀρθοποδέω, ii. 266
ὀρθοτομέω, ii. 438
ὀρθρίζω, i. 367
ὄρθρος, i. 379. 553
ὁρίζω, i. 597; ii. 4
ὁρκίζω, i. 166. 202
ὁρκωμοσία, ii. 503
ὁρμή, i. 613; ii. 567
ὀρφανός, i. 486
ὁ Ὅσιος, i. 536
ὅσιος, ii. 504. τὰ ὅσια τὰ πιστά, i. 607. ὅσιαι χεῖρες, ii. 414 ὁσιότης, i. 267
ὁσίως and δικαίως, ii. 380 ὀσμὴ τῆς γνώσεως, ii. 212. εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, 319 ὅσος, used indefinitely, i. 549; with genitive, 544 ἐν ὀστρακίνοις σκεύεσιν, ii. 219 οὐ μή, i. 26. οὐ γάρ, 631. οὐκ — ἀλλά, non tam—quam, 487 οὐά, i. 251
οὐαὶ ὑμῖν, i. 291
οὐρανὸς for Θεός, i. 338. οὐρ. καὶ ἡ γῆ, 25. οὐρανοί, denoting the aërial heavens, ii. 614 οὔτε—οὔτε—οὔτε, i. 362 οὕτως, itane? siccine? i. 163 οὐχί, i. 266. 329
ὀφειλέτης, i. 329; ii. 6. 51 ὀφειλήματα, i. 34
ὄφελος, ii. 194
ὀφθαλμοδουλεία, ii. 327
ὀφθαλμὸς ἁπλοῦς, i. 36. 215. ὀφθ. πονηρός, ib. ὀχλέομαι, i. 290
ὀχύρωμα, ii. 243
ὀψάριον, i. 423. 521
ὀψὲ σαββάτων, i. 178
ὀψία, i. 44. 84
κατ' ὄψιν, i. 435
ὀψώνια, i. 278; ii. 42

Π.

παγιδεύω, i. 129
παγίς, i. 366; ii. 418
παθητός, i. 685
πάθος, ii. 368
παιδαγωγός, i. 25; ii. 276 παιδάριον, i. 423
παιδεία, ii. 327. 445. 541 παιδεύω, i. 375; ii. 167. 229 παιδίον, a term of kindness, i. 520 παιδίσκη, i. 168. 599. 628 παίζω, ii. 154
παῖς, a servant, i. 43; the Messiah spoken of under the name of, 67. παῖδες applied to male children, 10; denoting 'friends' or 'officers of a court,' 82 πάλαι, i. 62. 252; ii. 467 παλαιόω, ii. 508
πάλη, ii. 328
παλιγγενεσία, i. 113. 402; ii. 456 πανδοχεῖον, i. 315
πανήγυρις, ii. 546
πανουργία, ii. 217
εἰς τὸ παντελές, ii. 503 παντοκράτωρ, ii. 231
πάντοτε, i. 350; ii. 102 πάντως, i. 282; ii. 150 παραβαίνω, i. 530
παράβασις, ii. 274. 472 παραβάτης νόμου, ii. 563 παραβιάζομαι, i. 627
παραβολή, i. 73. 89. 147. 333. ἐν παραβολῇ, ii. 533 παραβουλεύεσθαι τῇ ψυχῇ, ii. 345 παραγγελία, ii. 385. 408 παραγίνομαι, i. 12
παράγω, i. 49; ii. 622
παραδειγματίζω, i. 6
παράδεισος, i. 378
παραδιατριβαί, ii. 429
παραδίδωμι, i. 18. 102. 257. 514; ii. 126. 165. 315 παράδοξον, i. 287
παράδοσις, i. 87. 364. 402; ii. 160 παραζηλόω, ii. 157
παραθεωρέω, i. 557
παραθήκη, ii. 435
παραιτέομαι, i. 334; ii. 422 παρακαλέω, i. 23. 623. 631; ii. 81. 123. 205. 402. 481. 524 παράκειμαι, ii. 47
παράκλησις, i. 604. 623; ii. 378. 497. παρακλ. τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, i. e. the Messiah, i. 273 παράκλητος, i. 485; ii. 504. 620 παρακοή, ii. 472
παρακολουθέω, i. 258; ii. 422. 443, 444 παρακύπτω, i. 380; ii. 560. 582 παραλαμβάνω, i. 6. 17. 201; ii. 165. 260. 364 παραλέγομαι, 'to coast along,' i. 687. 689 παραλλαγή, ii. 558
παραλογίζομαι, ii. 363
παραλύομαι, ii. 543
παραμένω, ii. 503. 560
παραμυθέομαι, ii. 380
παραμύθιον ἀγαπῆς, ii. 338 παραπικρασμός, ii. 480
παραπίπτομαι, ii. 492. 494 παραπλήσιον for παραπλησίως, ii. 345 παραπλησίως, ii. 476 παραπορεύομαι, i. 192. 225 παράπτωμα, ii. 299
παραῤῥύω, ii. 472
παράσημον, i. 696
παρασκευή, i. 177. παρασκευὴ τοῦ πάσχα, 512 παρασκεύω, ii. 240
παρατηρέω, i. 193; ii. 280 παρατήρησις, i. 348
παρατίθημι, i. 78. 616. 632 παραυτίκα, ii. 221
παραφέρομαι, ii. 550
παραφρονέω, ii. 249
παραχειμάζω, i. 688; ii. 201 παρεισάγω, ii. 610
παρεισακτός, ii. 264
παρεισεδύω, ii. 542
παρεισέρχομαι, ii. 36
σπουδὴν παρεισφέρειν, ii. 602 παρεμβολή, i. 662; ii. 537 παρενοχλέω, i. 620 παρεπίδημος, ii. 532. 578. 586

παρέρχομαι, i. 163. 625 παρέχω, i. 157. 640. 648. 663; ii. 407 χεῖρες παρειμέναι, ii. 543 παριστάνω, i. 261. 272. 526. 585. 674; ii. 79. 97. 145. 325. 447 παροικέω, i. 381; ii. 531 πάροικος, ii. 586; distinguished from ξένος, ii. 306 παροιμία, i. 457. 497
πάροινος, ii. 417
παροξύνομαι, ii. 176
παροξυσμός, i. 624; ii. 523 παροργίζω, ii. 327
παῤῥησία, i. 207. 220. 432. 470. 495; ii. 215. 232. 330. 460. 479. 522 παῤῥησιαζόμενος ἐπὶ τῷ Κυρίῳ, i. 612 πᾶς distinguished from ἅπας, i. 206. πᾶσα σάρξ, i. 533. πάντες, many, 13. 56. 406. 544. 571; ii. 344. 447; sometimes applied to a small number, 259. πᾶσα χαρά, 554 πάσχα, i. 156. 598
πάσχω, ii. 270
πατάσσω, i. 564. 598. 600 πατέω for καταπατέω, ii. 672. πατέομαι, i. 364 ὁ Πατὴρ τῶν οἰκτιρμῶν, ii. 205. τῆς δόξης, 301. τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 309. τῶν φώτων, 558 πατέρες, denoting 'the Sanhedrim,' i. 561; 'the Patriarchs,' ii. 60; both parents, 534 πατριὰ and οἶκος, i. 269 πατριαρχαί, i. 562
πατρῷος Θεός, i. 674
παχύνω, i. 76
πεδινὸς τόπος, i. 290
πεζεύω, i. 653
πεζῇ, i. 84. 211
πειθαρχέω, i. 554
πειθός, ii. 109
πείθω, i. 180; ii. 494. πείθειν τινά, i. 641 πεῖραν λαμβάνειν, ii. 535. 537 πειράζω, i. 16. 93. 132; ii. 154. 486. 537, 538. 651. πειρ. τὸ Πνεῦμα Κυρίου, i. 551. πειρ. Θεόν, 618 πειρασμοί, ii. 554
πεισμονή, ii. 287
πέλαγος τῆς θαλάσσης, i. 104 πενθέω, i. 23; ii. 125
πέντε, denoting few, ii. 182 Πεντηκοστή, i. 530
πεποίθησις, ii. 240
πεπυρωμένα βέλη, ii. 329 ἐκ τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς, i. 71 περιάγω, i. 20; ii. 147 περιαιρέω, i. 691. 693
περιβαλὼν αὐτὸν ἐσθῆτα, i. 374 περιβόλαιον, ii. 163. 471 περιεργάζομαι, ii. 404
περίεργος, i. 647
περιέρχομαι, i. 696
περιέχω, i. 285
περικάθαρμα τοῦ κόσμου, ii. 123 περικεῖσθαι ἀσθένειαν, ii. 487 περικυκλόω, i. 359
περιούσιος, ii. 455
περιοχή, i. 576
περιπατέω, i. 430; ii. 87. 243 περιπείρω, ii. 430
περιπίπτω, ii. 554
περιποιέομαι, i. 656
περιποίησις, ii. 528
περιῤῥήγνυμι, i. 629
περισπάω, i. 316
περισσεία, ii. 235. περισσεία κακίας, 559 περισσεύω, i. 26; ii. 21. 145. 200. 221. 235. 241. 364. περ. τινί, 324 περιστερά, i. 16
περιτίθημι, i. 513
περιτομὴ ὀκταήμερος, ii. 346. σημεῖον περιτομῆς, 29 περιτρέπω, i. 685
περίχωρος τῆς Γαλιλαίας, i. 187 περίψημα, ii. 123
περιωθέομαι, ii. 122
περπερεύομαι, derivation and meaning of, ii. 176 ἀπὸ πέρυσι, ii. 237. 240 πετεινὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, i. 37 Πέτρος, i. 95
τὰ πετρώδη, scil. χωρία, i. 74 πηγὴ τοῦ αἵματος, i. 205. πηγαὶ τῶν ὑδάτων, ii. 682. 693 πήρα, i. 55
πιάζω, i. 436
πιθανολογία, ii. 363
μὴ πικραίνεσθε, ii. 371 ῥίζα πικρίας, ii. 544
πινακίδιον, i. 266
πίναξ, i. 83
πίνειν ποτήριον Κυρίου, ii. 156. πίνειν αἷμα, 683 πεπραμένος ὑπὸ ἁμαρτίαν, ii. 46 πίπτω, ii. 89
πιστεύω, i. 400
πιστικός, i. 243
πίστις, i. 43. 171. 270. 304. 356. 421. 423. 440. 443. 446 πιστόομαι, ii. 444
πιστός, ii. 620. πιστὸς τῷ Κυρίῳ, i. 627. τέκνα πιστά, ii. 450 πλάνη, ii. 11
πλάνος, i. 178; ii. 229. 421 πλανῶντες καὶ πλανώμενοι, ii. 444 πλατύνειν φυλακτήρια, i. 134 πλέγματα, ii. 414
πλεονεκτέω, ii. 232. 386
πλεονέκτης, ii. 131. 320 πλεονεξία, i. 215. 324; ii. 12. 240. 319. 369 πλῆθος, i. 374. 619
πληθύνω, i. 557. πληθύνων πληθυνῶ σε, ii. 496 πληκτής, ii. 417
πλημμύρα, i. 294
πλήρης Πνεύματος ἁγίου, i. 557. πλήρ. ἀγαθῶν ἔργων, 585 πληροφορέω, i. 257
πληροφορία, ii. 375. 555
πληρόω, i. 407. 616. πεπλήρωται ὁ καιρός, 186. πεπληρωκέναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον, ii. 95. πλ. τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, 362. πληροῦν τὴν καρδίαν τινός, i. 550. πληρ. τὸν δρόμον, 606. πλησθεὶς Πνεύματος ἁγίου, 603; ii. 324 πλήρωμα, i. 192. 391; ii. 74. 276. 302. 313. 360, 1. πλήρ. τῆς γῆς, 158. τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 314 ὁ πλησίον, i. 30. 133. 314 πλησμονή, ii. 368
πλοιάριον, i. 194
πλοῖον, i. 20. 686
πλουσίως, ii. 370
πλοῦτος δόξης, ii. 65. πλ. ἁπλότητος, 235 πλουτῶν εἰς Θεόν, i. 324 πνεῦμα, summary of the various senses of, in New Test., i. 5. πνεῦμα ἁγιωσύνης, 4. τῆς ἀληθείας, 486. ἀσθενείας, 320. κατανύξεως, ii. 73. τοῦ κόσμου, 112. τοῦ νοοῦ, 316. τῆς πίστεως, 220. σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως, 301 καρπὸς τοῦ Πνεύματος, ii. 291. Πνεῦμα αἰώνιον, 513. Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος, 525. γενέσθαι ἐν Πνεύματι, 649 πνευματικός, ii. 113. 293 πνευματικῶς, mystically, ii. 673 πνίγω, i. 107. 203
τὸ πνικτόν, i. 621. 623 ποιέω, to acquire by traffic, i. 152; to appoint, 194; to suffer, 523; to pass, ii. 249; to practise, 627. ἔξω ποιῆσαι, to remove, i. 555. ποιεῖν ἐν αὐτῷ, 101. τὴν ἀλήθειαν, 405. 619. ἐκδίκησιν, 564. ἐλεημοσύνας, 675. κρίσιν, 419. μονήν, 487. ὁδόν, 192. οὐδένος λόγον, 654. πάσχα, 158. ποιήσας χρόνον, 623 ὁ ποιμήν, i. 459; ii. 313 ποῖος for τίς, i. 111
πόλις, ii. 450
πολιτάρχης, i. 632
πολιτεία, ii. 305
πολίτευμα, ii. 350
πολιτεύομαι, i. 667
πολλαπλασίονα, i. 354 πολλοὶ for πάντες, i. 119. 161 πολυλογία, i. 13
πολυμέρως καὶ πολυτρόπως, ii. 466 πολυποίκιλος, ii. 309
πολὺς ὁ λόγος, ii. 489
πονηρία, i. 130. 215; ii. 12 πονηρός, i. 632; distinguished from κακός, 153. τοῦ πονηροῦ, whether denoting evil, or the Evil one, i. 29. 34. 79. 503; ii. 403 πορεία, ii. 556
πορθέω, ii. 261

πορνεία, i. 28. 447. 620; ii. 12. 124. 319. 368 πορνεύω, ii. 154
πόρνη, ii. 536
πορφύρα and κοκκίνη, i. 172 πορφυρόπωλις, i. 627
ποταπός, i. 46
ποτὲ for ποτέραν, ii. 261 ποτήριον τῆς εὐλογίας, ii. 155 ποτίζω with two accusatives, i. 59 ποῦ—; ποῦ—; ii. 105
πρᾶγμα, a suit, ii. 128. πράγματα τοῦ βίου, 436 πραγματεύω, i. 356
πραιτώριον, i. 172. 672; ii. 326 πράκτωρ, i. 27. 328
πρᾶος, i. 23. 64
πρασιά, i. 211
πράσσω, to exact, i. 278. 357 πραΰς, i. 121
πραΰτης σοφίας, ii. 569 πρέπει, ii. 475
πρεσβεύω, ii. 330
πρεσβυτέριον τοῦ λαοῦ, i. 373 πρεσβύτερος, i. 97. 424. 442. 597. 654; ii. 416. 576. 637 πρεσβύτης, ii. 452. 460 πρεσβῦτις, ii. 425. 452 πρηνής, i. 169. 529
πρὸ προσώπου, i. 606
προάγω, i. 598
προαιρεῖσθαι ἐν καρδίᾳ, ii. 241 προαιτιάομαι, ii. 22
προβάλλω, i. 649
πρόβατον, i. 457; ii. 57 προβιβάζω, i. 83. 649
προγινώσκω, ii. 55. 583 πρόγνωσις, decree, i. 535 προγράφω, ii. 269. προγεγραμμένος εἰς κρῖμα, 642 πρόδηλον, ii. 501
πρόδρομος, ii. 497
προελπίζω, ii. 300
προεπαγγέλλομαι, ii. 4 προετοιμάζειν εἰς δόξαν, ii. 65 προευαγγελίζομαι, ii. 271 πρόθεσις, ii. 54. 62. 309. 435. 443. πρόθ. τῆς καρδίας, i. 595. πρόθ. τῶν ἄρτων, 510 προθυμία τοῦ θέλειν, ii. 257 προΐσταμαι, ii. 390. 457 προκηρύσσω, i. 606; ii. 273 προκόπτω, i. 276; ii. 261 πρόκριμα, ii. 427
προλαμβάνω, i. 244; ii. 165 προνοούμενος καλά, ii. 83 προοράομαι, i. 535
προορίζω, ii. 55
προπέμπω, i. 634; ii. 639 προπετής, i. 651; ii. 442 πρός, respecting, i. 351; ii. 71. 470; used with nouns of time, i. 383 προσάββατον, i. 252
προσαγορευθείς, ii. 489 προσάγω, ii. 593. προσάγειν αὐτοῖς χώραν, i. 691 προσαγωγή, ii. 32. 306
προσανατίθεμαι, ii. 262 προσδέχομαι, i. 337; ii. 526. 646 προσεδρεύω, ii. 141
προσέρχομαι, i. 552. 590; ii. 428. 523. 530. 545. 585 προσευχή, i. 289. 558. 626; ii. 412 προσέχω, i. 572. προσέχειν ἀπό τινος, i. 40 πρόσκαιρος, i. 77
προσκαλέω, i. 602. 625; ii. 292 προσκαρτερέω, i. 194. 528. 540. 587; ii. 371 προσκαρτέρησις, ii. 330 τὸ προσκεφάλαιον, i. 201 προσεκληρώθησαν τῷ Παύλῳ, i. 632 προσκλίνομαι, i. 556
κατὰ πρόσκλισιν, ii. 427 προσκολλάω, i. 108. 556 πρόσκομμα, ii. 228. 585 προσκόπτω, ii. 91
προσκυνέω, i. 8. 18. 51. 412. 590 προσλαμβάνω, i. 97. 644. 694; ii. 88. 460 προσμένω, i. 595
προσορμίζω, i. 212
προσοχθίζω, ii. 480
πρόσπεινος, i. 587
προσποιέομαι, i. 382
προστάτις, ii. 97
προστίθημι, i. 538. 608; ii. 25; with the Infinitive, i. 597 προσφάγιον, i. 520
προσφάτως, i. 641
προσφέρω, i. 9. 27. 493; ii. 487, 8. 505. 518. 533. 541 προσφιλής, ii. 352
προσφορά, i. 661. 675; ii. 319 πρόσχυσις τοῦ αἵματος, ii. 535 προσωποληπτέω, ii. 563
προσωπολήπτης, i. 591
προσωποληψία, ii. 16. προσωποληψίαι, 561 πρόσωπον πρὸς πρόσωπον, ii. 177. πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως, 560 προτείνω, i. 666
πρότερον used adjectively, ii. 525 προτίθημι, ii. 25
προτρέπομαι, i. 644
ἐν προφάσει πλεονεξίας, ii. 378 προφητεία, i. 534; ii. 171. 392. 411 προφητεύω, i. 40, 41. 88. 659; ii. 160. 266. 469. 533; a play on the double sense of, i. 167 προφήτης, i. 11. 40. 59. 139. 298. 596; ii. 80. 173. 306. 313. 451 προφῆτις, i. 274
προχειρίζειν τινά τινι, i. 543. προχειρίζομαι, 684 πρύμνη, i. 201
πρωτοκαθεδρία, i. 135 πρωτοκλισία, i. 135. 333 πρῶτον for πρότερον, i. 491 πρῶτος, the best, i, 339; most considerable, 626; principal, 696. πρώτη ἐντολή, ii. 326 πρωτοστάτης, i. 673
πρωτοτόκος, i. 7; ii. 359. 469. πρωτοτόκοι, 546 πταίω, ii. 606
πτερύγιον, i. 18
πτόησις, ii. 590
πτύον, i. 15
πτύρομαι, ii. 337
πτωχοί, i. 282
πυγμῇ, i. 213
Πύθων, i. 628
πύλαι ᾅδου, i. 96
πῦρ, difference of meaning when used with and without the Article, i. 223. πυρὸς ζῆλος, ii. 524 πύργος, i. 336
πύρετος, i. 696
πυροῦμαι, ii. 250
πύρωσις πρὸς πειρασμόν, ii. 597 πωρόομαι, ii. 73
πώρωσις, ii. 315
πῶς for ὅτι, ii. 322

P.

Ῥαββουνί, i. 233
ῥᾳδιούργημα, i. 642
ῥᾳδιουργία, i. 602
Ῥακά, i. 26
ῥαντίζω, ii. 513. ἐῤῥαντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς, ii. 523 ῥαπίζω, i. 30; distinguished from κολαφίζω, 167 ῥαφίς, i. 112
Ῥεμφάν, i. 567
ῥηγνύω, i. 223
ῥῆμα, i. 17. 106. 263. 271. 276. 285. 574; ii. 468. 493 ῥήτωρ, i. 672
ῥίζα, i. 14
ῥιζοῦσθαι ἐν ἀγάπῃ, ii. 310 ῥιπίζομαι, ii. 555
ῥίπτω, i. 53. 665
ῥοιζηδόν, ii. 615
ῥύμη, i. 335
ῥύομαι, i. 174
ῥυπαρία, ii. 559
ῥυπαρός, ii. 562

Σ.

σαββατισμός, ii. 484
σαββάτου ὁδός, i. 528. τὰ σάββατα, denoting 'one sabbath,' 187 σαγήνη, i. 81
σαίνομαι, ii. 383
σαλεύω, i. 146. 535. 549. 633; ii. 398 σάλπιγξ, i. 147
Σαμαρείτης, i. 449
σαπρός, i. 40. 81; ii. 317 σάπφειρος, ii. 694
σαργάνη, ii. 251
σάρδιος, ii. 658. 694
κατὰ νόμον ἐντολῆς σαρκικῆς, ii. 502 σάρξ, denoting person, ii. 196.

233. σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα, i. 94; ii. 262. κατὰ σάρκα, ii. 243. 283. ἐν σαρκί, 243. ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκός, 488 Σατανᾶ, i. 97
μὴ σβέννυτε τὸ Πνεῦμα, ii. 392 σέβασμα, i. 399; ii. 637 Σεβαστός, i. 680
σεβόμενος τὸν Θεόν, i. 627 σείομαι for κινέομαι, i. 122 σειραὶ ζόφου, ii. 610
σεισμός, i. 46. 142. 178 σεληνιάζομαι, i. 21. 101 σεμίδαλις, ii. 688
σεμνότης, ii. 412
σημαίνω, i. 475. 596; ii. 648 σημεῖον, i. 146. 274. 398; ii. 254. σημ. περιτομῆς, ii. 27. 29 σήμερον, ii. 480. σήμ. καὶ αὔριον, i. 332 σικάριος, i. 633
σίκερα, i. 260
Σιλουανός, ii. 374
σιμικίνθιον, i. 646
σίναπι, i. 101
σινδών, i. 177. 247
σινιάζω, i. 369
σιτιστά, i. 128
σῖτος, i. 563. 691. 693 σκανδαλίζω, i. 27. 60. 77. 103; ii. 91 σκάνδαλον, i. 60. 80. 366 σκεπάσματα, ii. 429
σκευή, i. 691
σκεῦος, i. 235. 581. 588. 690; ii. 65. 385. applied to woman, 590 σκηνή, i. 100. 568. 620; ii. 513. 674. ἡ πρώτη σκηνή, 511 σκηνοπηγία, i. 431
σκηνοποιός, i. 641
σκῆνος, ii. 222
σκηνόω, i. 390; ii. 666 σκήνωμα, denoting the human body, ii. 606 σκιά, ii. 506. 518
σκιρτάω, i. 264
σκληροκαρδία, i. 109
σκληρός, i. 152. 429. 580; ii. 567 σκληροτράχηλος, i. 569 σκληρύνω, ii. 63. σκληρύνομαι, 481 σκολιός, i. 538; ii. 588 σκόλοψ τῇ σαρκί, ii. 252 σκορπίζω, i. 68; ii. 241 σκοτία, i. 389
σκοτίζομαι, ii. 315
σκότος, i. 19. σκότος τὸ ἐξώτερον, 154 σκύβαλον, ii. 347
Σκύθης, ii. 369
σκυθρωπός, i. 35
σκύλλομαι, i. 53
σκῦλα, i. 319
σμάραγδος, ii. 694
σμύρνη, i. 515
Σολομῶνος στοά, i. 461
σορός, i. 295
σουδάριον, i. 356. 469
σοφία, i. 62. 297. 557; ii. 118. 554; distinguished from σύνεσις, ii. 105 σεσοφισμένοι μῦθοι, ii. 607 σοφός, ii. 15. 569; distinguished from συνετός, i. 63 σπαράσσω, i. 187
σπαργανόω, i. 269
σπαταλάω, ii. 425
σπεῖρα, i. 505. 586. 686 σπείρω, to bestow, ii. 240 σπεκουλάτωρ, i. 210
σπένδομαι, ii. 446
σπέρμα, i. 131; ii. 66. 273 σπερμολόγος, i. 635
σπεύδω, ii. 615
σπήλαια, ii. 538
σπιλάδες, ii. 643
σπῖλος, ii. 325. 645
σπιλόω, ii. 567
σπλαγχνίζομαι, i. 53
σπλάγχνα, ii. 230. 460. σπλάγχνα ἐλέους, i. 268 σπουδάζω, ii. 615
σπουδή, ii. 82. 234. 236. 238 στάσις, i. 617. 651. στάσιν ἔχειν, ii. 511 σταυρός, i. 173; ii. 295
στάχυς, i. 199
στέγω, ii. 148. 176
στέλλομαι, ii. 239. 404
στεναγμοί, ii. 54
μὴ στενάζετε, ii. 575
στενοχωρέω, ii. 219. 230 στενοχωρία, ii. 228
στερεὰ τροφή, ii. 490
στέφανος ἐξ ἀκανθῶν, i. 172. στέφ. τῆς ζωῆς, ii. 557 στεφανόω, ii. 474
στήκω, ii. 89
στηρίζω, ii. 600
στιγμὴ χρόνου, i. 280
στοά, i. 416
στοιβάς, i. 234
στοιχέω, i. 661
στοιχεῖα, ii. 615. στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, 277. 364. τῆς ἀρχῆς, 490 στολή, i. 240
στόμα μαχαίρας, i. 364 στράτευμα, i. 374. 669. 671 στρατεύω, ii. 570
στρατηγοί, i. 367
στρατιὰ τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, i. 567 στρηνιάζω, ii. 687
στυγητός, ii. 456
στυγνάζω, i. 93. 230
στύλος, ii. 265. στύλος καὶ ἑδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, 419 Στωϊκοί, i. 634
συγγνώμη, ii. 135
συγκατάθεσις, ii. 231
συγκατατίθεμαι, i. 378
συγκαταψηφίζω, i. 530
συγκεράννυμι, ii. 173
συγκλείω, ii. 78. 276
συγκοινωνεῖν τοῖς ἔργοις, ii. 321 συγκομίζω, i. 57
συγκύπτω, i. 330
συγχέω, i. 661
συγχράομαι, i. 409
συγχύνομαι, i. 532
συζητεῖν αὐτῷ, i. 218
συζήτησις, i. 617, 618
συζητητὴς τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, ii. 106 σύζυγος, ii. 351
συκάμινος, i. 347
συκομορέα, i. 355
συκοφαντέω, i. 278
συλαγωγέω, ii. 364
συλάω, ii. 247
συλλαμβάνομαι, i. 285
συμβαίνω, i. 232
συμβάλλω, i. 272. 644
συμβασιλεύω, ii. 437
συμβιβάζω, i. 582. 625; ii. 113. 363 συμμέτοχος, ii. 320
σύμμορφος, ii. 350
συμπαρακαλέομαι, ii. 6
συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις ἡμῶν, ii. 486. συμπ. τοῖς δεσμοῖς, 526 συμπεριλαμβάνω, i. 652
συμπληροῦμαι, i. 310
συμπρεσβύτερος, ii. 598 συμπόσια συμπόσια, i. 211 συμφέρω, ii. 237
σύμφημι, ii. 46
συμφυλέτης, ii. 381
σύμφυτος, ii. 37
συμφύω, i. 300
σύμψυχος, ii. 339
συνάγω, i. 68. 596
συναγωγή, ii. 562. συναγωγὴ τοῦ Σατανᾶ, 652 συναθλέω, ii. 351
συναλίζομαι, i. 526
συναναμίγνυμι, ii. 405
συναντιλαμβάνομαι, i. 316; ii. 54 συναπάγομαι, ii. 83. 616 συναρμολογέομαι, ii. 307 σύνδεσμος, i. 575; ii. 311. 370 συνδρομή, i. 662
συνέδριον, i. 56. 553
συνείδησις, ii. 85. 158. 513. 519. συνείδ. πονηρά, 523. διὰ συνείδησιν Θεοῦ, 588 συνείδω, i. 613
συνέκδημος, i. 649
συνελαύνω, i. 565
συνεργέω, ii. 565
συνεργός, ii. 115. 459
συνελθεῖν αὐτούς, i. 5
συνεσθίω, i. 337; ii. 128. 266 σύνεσις, i. 276; ii. 308; distinguished from σοφία, ii. 105 συνετός, i. 602; distinguished from σοφός, 63 συνευδοκῶν τῇ ἀναιρέσει, i. 571 συνέχω, i. 21. 327. 570. 641. 696; ii. 225. 336 συνζεύγνυμι, i. 108
συνήδομαι, ii. 47
συνθρύπτω, i. 659
συνίημι, i. 77 bis; ii. 22 συνίστημι, ii. 21. 228. 245. 68. 360 συνομορέω, i. 642
συνοχή, i. 365; ii. 211 συνταφεὶς ἐν βαπτίσματι, ii. 365 συντέλεια τοῦ αἰῶνος, i. 79, 80. 141. συντέλεια τῶν αἰώνων, ii. 517 συντηρέω, i. 209

συντίθεμαι, i. 453
συντόνως, i. 673
συντρίβω, i. 243. 282
σύντροφος, i. 601
συνυποκρίνομαι, ii. 226
γύνη Συροφοίνισσα, i. 90 Σύρτις, i. 690
σύρω, i. 572. 615
σύσσημον, i. 246
σύσσωμος, ii. 308
συστατικαὶ ἐπιστολαί, ii. 213 συστέλλω, i. 551; ii. 139 συστρατιώτης, ii. 344
συστρέφω, i. 694
συστροφή, i. 651. 669
Συχάρ, i. 408
σφραγίζω, i. 178. 407. 425; to keep silence, ii. 671. σφραγίζεσθαι τῷ Πνεύματι ἁγίῳ, 308. σφραγισάμενος ἡμᾶς, 209 σφραγίς, ii. 29. 147. 439 σφυρόν, i. 541
τὸ σχῆμα τοῦ κόσμου, ii. 140 σχίζομαι, i. 612
σχίσμα, i. 438; ii. 104. 164 σχολάζων, i. 72
σχολὴ Τυράννου, i. 646
σώζω, i. 51. 254. 331. 540. 546; ii. 137. 410. 434. 456; summary of the various meanings of, according to Bp. Maltby, i. 6 σῶμα τῆς ἁμαρτίας, ii. 38. σώματα, denoting persons, ii. 79; slaves, 688 σωματικῶς, ii. 365
Σωσθένης, ii. 101
Σωτήρ, applied to God the Father, ii. 646 σωτηρία, i. 267. 546; ii. 335 σωτήριος, ii. 454
σωφρονέω, ii. 224
σωφρονίζω, ii. 453
σωφρονισμός, ii. 434
σωφροσύνη, ii. 416
σώφρων, ii. 417

T.

τάλαντον, i. 106
ταμεῖον, i. 33. 145. 325 τάξις, ii. 364
ταπεινοῦμαι, i. 277; ii. 354 ταπεινοφροσύνη, ii. 366. 368 ταπείνωσις, i. 264
ταράσσω, i. 622; ii. 260. 287 ταρταρώσας, ii. 610
τάσσομαι, i. 608. 610. 698 ταχέως, ii. 398
τεκμήριον, i. 526
τεκνία, i. 482. 520. 622. 636 τέκνα, denoting 'inhabitants,' i. 139. τέκνα Θεοῦ, 390. τέκνα τῆς ἐπαγγελίας, ii. 61. 284. τέκνα ὀργῆς, 304 τεκνοτροφέω, ii. 425 τέκτων, i. 81
τέλειος, i. 32. 111; ii. 110. 314. 349. 490. 558. τέλ. ἐν Χριστῷ, 362. τέλ. ταῖς φρεσί, 182; distinguished from ὁλόκληρος and ὁλοτελής, 554 τελειότης, ii. 491
τελειόω, ii. 502. 522. τελειοῦν τὸν δρόμον, i. 654. τελειοῦν τινα, ii. 475. τελειοῦμαι, i. 332; ii. 348. 489. 519. τετελειωμένος, 505. 546 τελείως, ii. 582
τελείωσις, i. 264
τελειωτής, ii. 540
τελεσφορέω, i. 301
τελευτᾷν θανάτῳ, i. 88
τέλος, denoting 'final punishment,' ii. 248. τέλος νόμου Χριστός, 67. τὸ τέλος, 192. τὸ τέλος Κυρίου, 275 τέλος, ii. 41; distinguished from φόρος, 86. τελῆ ἢ κῆνσον, i. 102 τελώνιον, i. 49
τετράδιον, i. 598
τετράμηνος, i. 413
τετράποδα, i. 588
τεχνίτης, ii. 689. τεχν. and ἐργάτης, i. 648 τηλαυγῶς, i. 220
τήρησις, i. 545
τίθημι, i. 491; ii. 173; for ἀποτίθ., i. 478; for κατατίθ., ii. 457. τίθεναι ψυχήν, i. 459. τίθ. παρὰ —, 549. τίθεσθαι ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ, i. 266. 550. ἔθετο ἐν πνεύματι, 647. τίθεναι βουλήν, 688 τίκτω, i. 497
τίλλω, i. 64
τιμάω, to support, ii. 424. τιμάομαι, 'to have a price set on one's head,' i. 170 τιμή, i. 696; ii. 15. 82. 368. 487. 585. 591 τίμιος, ii. 116
τις, in citation, ii. 497; used for numeral, i. 296. τίς for ποῖος, 355. 475; ii. 115. τίς εἶ; i. 392. τί οὖν ἐστι; 660. τί ἐμοὶ καὶ σοί; 397. τί ἡμῖν καὶ σοί; 47. τί πρὸς σέ; 523. τί οὖν; 392 τίτλος, i. 512
τό, in reference to a sentence, i. 111. 224. 309. 367; a sign of vocative, 224 τοῖχε κεκονιαμένε, i. 668 τόκος, i. 153
τόπον ἀπολογίας λαμβάνειν, i. 680. τόπος μετανοίας, ii. 544 τότε (Heb. אז) ii. 520
τοῦτο μὲν—τοῦτο δέ, ii. 526 τράπεζα, i. 357. 557
τραπεζῖται, i. 153
τραχηλίζομαι, ii. 485
τραχεῖς τόποι, i. 692
Τρεῖς ταβέρναι, i. 697
τρέφειν τὰς καρδίας, ii. 574 τρίβολος, i. 40
τρίς, used of an uncertain number, ii. 253 τρίστεγος, i. 652
σάκκος τρίχινος, ii. 663 τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα, ii. 558 τρόπος for ἦθος, ii. 549 τροφή, i. 55
τροφοφορέω, i. 604
τρόχος τῆς γενέσεως, ii. 567 τρυμαλιά, i. 230
τρυφή, i. 296
τρώγων, i. 480
τυμπανίζομαι, ii. 537
τύπος, ii. 18. τύπος τοῦ μέλλοντος, 35 τύπτω, ii. 146
Τυράννου σχολή, i. 646
τυρβάζω, i. 316
τυφλός, i. 282
τυφοῦμαι, i. 67; ii. 428 ἄνεμος τυφωνικός, i. 689 ἐπιμελείας τυχεῖν, i. 687

Υ.

θαλάσση ὑαλίνη, ii. 681
ὕβρις, i. 688; ii. 253
ὑγιαίνοντες λόγοι, ii. 428. 435 λόγος ὑγιής, ii. 453
ὑδρία, i. 397
ὕδατα πολλά, i. 405
υἱοθεσία, ii. 52. 59. 298
Υἱὸς Ὑψίστου, i. 262. υἱὸς Θεοῦ, 17. 45. 87. 176. 511. υἱὸς Δαυΐδ, 52. 67. Υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, 45. 193. 419. Υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθ., difference of meaning when used with Article, 65. Υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθ. and ὁ Χριστός, whether synonymous terms, 475. Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ and ὁ Χριστός, distinction between the appellatives, 94. 430. Υἱὸς παρακλήσεως, 550 υἱός, 'a descendant,' i. 3. υἱὸς Διαβόλου, 603. υἱὸς γεέννης, 136. ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀληθείας, 502. υἱοί, denoting 'family in general,' 409. υἱοὶ τῆς ἀπειθείας, ii. 303. 369. υἱοὶ τῆς βασιλείας, i. 44. υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος, 50. υἱοὶ τῶν προφητῶν, 544. υἱοὶ τοῦ Ὑψίστου, 292. υἱοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ, 23. 31 ὕλη, ii. 567
ὕμνος, ii. 324
ὑμνοῦν τὸν Θεόν, i. 629
ὑπάγω, i. 81. 111. 472. 491. 520 ὑπακοὴ τῷ Χριστῷ, ii. 243. εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως, 5 ὑπακούω, i. 558. 599
ὕπανδρος, ii. 42
ὕπαρξις, i. 539; ii. 526 ὑπέρ, for πλέον, ii. 249; for μᾶλλον ἤ, 254; for περί, 398. ὑπὲρ ἐκ περισσοῦ, 311. 391 ὑπεραιρόμενος, ii. 399
ὑπέρακμος, ii. 142
ὑπερβαίνω, ii. 386

ὑπερβολὴ τῆς δυνάμεως, ii. 219. καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολήν, 221. καθ' ὑπερβολήν, 261 ὑπερείδω, i. 640
ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ, ii. 311. 391 ὑπερεκτείνω, ii. 245
ὑπερεκχέω, i. 293
ὑπερεντυγχάνω, i. 486
ὑπερέχων πάντα νοῦν, ii. 352 ὑπερηφανία, i. 216
ὑπερήφανος, ii. 441. 571
ὑπερλίαν, ii. 246
ὑπερνικάω, ii. 57
καθ' ὑπεροχήν, ii. 109
ὑπερυψόω, ii. 341
ὑπερῷον, i. 33. 528
ὑπηρετέω, i. 608. 677
ὑπηρέτης, i. 27. 258. 282. 684 ὑποβάλλω, i. 559
ὑπογραμμός, ii. 589
ὑπόδειγμα, ii. 506
ὑποδέχομαι, i. 633; ii. 566 ὑποδήματα, i. 14. 55
ὑποζύγιον, i. 121
ὑποζώννυντες τὸ πλοῖον, i. 690 ὑπόκρισις, ii. 421
ὑποκριτής, i. 32
ὑπολαμβάνω, i. 314. 533
ὑπολήνιον, i. 125
ὑπομένω, ii. 541
ὑπομονή, ii. 54. 375. 539. 605 ὑπόνοιαι πονηραί, ii. 429
ὑποπλέω, i. 687
ὑπόστασις, ii. 240. 468. 528 ὑποστέλλομαι, ii. 527, 8 ὑποτάσσομαι, i. 276; ii. 541 ὑποτίθεμαι, ii. 421
ὑποτρέχω, i. 689
ὑποτύπωσις, ii. 410. 435 ὑπωπιάζω, i. 350; ii. 151 ὑσσώπῳ περιθέντες, i. 513 ὑστερέω, ii. 25. 145. 247. 354; ii. 483. 543 ὑστέροις καιροῖς, ii. 420 ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν, ii. 504 ὑψηλοφρονέω, ii. 432
ὁ ὕψιστος applied to the Deity, i. 202. ἐν τοῖς ὑψίστοις, 122. 271 ὑψόω, i. 604. ὑψωθῆναι τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, 475

Φ.

φαιλόνη or φελόνη, ii. 447 φανεροῦμαι, ii. 224
φανός, i. 505
φαντασία, i. 681
φάντασμα, i. 86
φαρμακεία, ii. 290. 670
φάσις for φήμη, i. 662
φάτνη, i. 270
φελόνη or φαιλόνη, ii. 447 φέρομαι, i. 531. 689, 690; ii. 516; used of inspiration, 609 φθάνω, i. 68; ii. 245 φθαρτὸς στέφανος, ii. 151 φθινοπωρινός, ii. 644
φθόνος, i. 171; ii. 291
φθορά, ii. 53
φιάλαι, ii. 660
φιλάγαθος, ii. 442. 451
φιλαδελφία, ii. 548. 605 φιλάργυρος, ii. 441
φίλαυτος, ii. 441
φιλέω, soleo, i. 33
φιλήδονος, ii. 442
φιλία τοῦ κόσμου, ii. 571 φιλοξενία, ii. 548
φιλόξενος, ii. 417
φιλοπρωτεύω, ii. 639
φιλόστοργος, ii. 82
φιλοτιμοῦμαι, ii. 96. 224. 386 φιμόω, applied to persons, i. 132 φλογίζω, ii. 567
φλόξ, i. 345. ἐν πυρὶ φλογός, ii. 395 φλύαρος, ii. 426
φοβερὰ ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως, ii. 524 φοβέω, i. 204; ii. 483. 588 φόβητρον, i. 363
φόβος, i. 539; ii. 85, 86. φόβος Θεοῦ, 232. μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου, 235. 342 Φοῖνιξ, i. 688
φονεύω, ii. 575
φόνος, ii. 291
φόρος distinguished from τέλος, ii. 86 φορτίον βαστάζειν, ii. 293 φραγέλλιον ἐκ σχοινίων, i. 399 φραγελλόω, i. 172
φραγμός, i. 335
φράττω, ii. 24. 247
φρεναπατάω, ii. 293
φρεναπάτης, ii. 451
φρονέω, ii. 368. φρονεῖν τά τινος, i. 97; ii. 50. φρον. τὸ αὐτό, 257 φρονιμός, i. 56
φρουρούμενος, ii. 579
φρυάσσω, i. 548
φρύγανον, i. 694
φυλακή, i. 149. 598
φυλακίζω, i. 665
φυλακτηρίον, i. 134
φυλάσσω, ii. 616. φυλάσσειν ἀπὸ—, i. 324 αἱ φύλαι τῆς γῆς, i. 146 φύραμα, ii. 75. 126 φυσικός, ii. 612
φυσιόομαι, ii. 123. 367 φύσις, ii. 163. 303. 567, 8 φυσίωσις, ii. 255
φυτεία, i. 89
φωλεός, i. 45
φωνέω, i. 162. 334
φωνή, i. 457. 474. 606
φῶς, i. 19. 36. 388; ii. 358; for πῦρ, i. 247. φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ii. 432. φῶς, i. e. Jesus Christ, i. 477. τὸ φῶς τοῦ κόσμου, 24. 442. 451, 2. 465. τὸ φῶς τῆς ζωῆς, 442. ὁ Πατὴρ τῶν φώτων, 558 φωστῆρες ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ, ii. 343 φωτίζω, ii. 120. 308. 435. 493 φωτισμός, ii. 218

Χ.

χαῖρε, i. 172. χαίρετε, 24. 179. χαίρω, ii. 82; distinguished from ἀγαλλιάω, 450. χαίρειν, a form of salutation, i. 622; ii. 554 χαλάω, i. 90. 285. 690
χαλεπός, i. 47
χαλκολίβανος, ii. 650
χαλκὸς ἠχῶν, ii. 174
Χαναάν, i. 563
γυνὴ Χαναναία, i. 90
χαρά, i. 292
χαρακτήρ, ii. 468
χάραξ, i. 359
χαρίζομαι, i. 296. 542. 679, 80. 691 χάρις, i. 292. 645; ii. 318. 486. χάρις Θεοῦ, i. 275. 595. 609; ii. 235. 543. 599, 600. χάρις ἀντὶ χάριτος, 391. χάρις ζωῆς, 591 χάρισμα, ii. 5. 35. 42. 434. χαρίσματα, 168—170 χαριτόω, i. 262; ii. 299 χάσμα, i. 345
χεῖλος τῆς θαλάσσης, ii. 532 χείμαῤῥος, i. 505
χειμών, i. 461
χείρ, handwriting, ii. 203. χεὶρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἐπὶ σέ, i. 603 χειροποίητος, i. 248; ii. 513 χειροτονέω, i. 616; ii. 238 Χερουβὶμ δόξης, ii. 511
χήρα, ii. 424
χιτὼν and ἱμάτιον, i. 30 χλάμυς, i. 172
χλευάζω, i. 532
χλωρός, ii. 662
χολάω, i. 435
χολή, i. 173
χορτάζομαι, i. 23
χόρτασμα, i. 563
χόρτος, i. 37. 85. 199. 211 χρηματίζω, i. 9. 273. 596; ii. 547 χρηματισμός, ii. 72
χρηστεύομαι, ii. 176
χρηστολογία, ii. 99
χρηστός, i. 64; ii. 319
χρηστότης, ii. 292 χρίσμα, ii. 625
χριστίανοι, i. 596
Χριστός, i. 5. 226. 281. 582; distinguished from ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ, 94. 430. Χριστὸς and ὁ Υἱὸς τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, whether synonymous, 475 χρίω, i. 592; ii. 470 χρόνος, distinguished from καιρός, i. 526. ἔσχατοι χρόνοι, ii. 467 χρυσοδακτύλιος, ii. 562 χωλός, i. 613
χώρα for ἀγρός, i. 324. χώρα καὶ σκία θανάτου, 20 χωρέω, i. 109. 446
κεχωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, ii. 504

χωρία, estates, i. 695 χωρὶς for ἄνευ, ii. 460

Ψ.

ψάλλω, ii. 181
ψαλμός, ii. 183. 324
ψευδάδελφος, ii. 250
ψευδολόγος, ii. 421
ψεύδομαι, i. 550. ψεύδεσθαι κατὰ τῆς ἀληθείας, ii. 569 ψευδοπροφήτης, i. 602. 630 ψεῦδος, ii. 10. 316. 401. 693 ψεύσμα, ii. 21
ψηλαφάω, ii. 545. 618
ψηφίζω, i. 336
ψῆφον καταφέρειν, i. 683
ψιθυρισμός, ii. 255
ψιθυριστής, ii. 12
ψιχία, i. 91. 344
ψυχή, i. 57. 538; ii. 84. 197; for ζωή, i. 11. ψυχὴ καὶ πνεῦμα, ii. 485 ψυχικός, ii. 113. 196. 569 ψυχρός, i. 59; ii. 657
ψωμίζω, ii. 175
ψωμίον, i. 481
ψώχω, i. 288

Ω.

τὰ ὧδε, ii. 372
ᾠδαὶ πνευματικαί, ii. 324 ὠδίν, i. 142. λύσας τὰς ὠδῖνας τοῦ θανάτου, 535 ὠδίνω, ii. 282
ὥρα denoting time, i. 44. 147. 313. 368. 494. 497. 499 θύρα ἡ λεγομένη Ὡραία, i. 541 ὡραῖος, ii. 70
ὡρισμένη βούλη τοῦ Θέου, i. 535 ὡς, even as, i. 34; for ὅτι, ii. 434; for ὥστε, i. 283. ὡς ἄν, as soon as, ii. 344. ὡς ἄν, for ὡσεί, 244. ὡς ἐπί, i. 634. ὥς τε for καὶ ὡς, ii. 43 Ὡσαννά, i. 122
ὥστε, so then, ii. 351; for ἅτε or ὥσπερ, 281 ὠτίον, i. 165

INDEX II.

MATTERS.

A.

Abaddon, derivation and meaning of, ii. 669

"Abba, Father;" origin and force of the expression, i. 246; ii. 52. 276

Abel, on the faith of, ii. 529. How the Divine approbation of his gifts was manifested, 490. The blood of his sacrifice (Heb. xii. 24), 507

Abiathar, on the difficulty involved in the allusion to him, Mark ii. 26, i. 192

"Abomination of desolation," meaning of, i. 143

Abraham, on the difference between his behaviour and that of Zechariah, i. 261. Accepted as righteous in consequence of his belief, ii. 27. Promise to him of the heavenly inheritance, nature of it, 29. The constancy of his faith commended, 455. His inferiority to Melchizedek, 459. Observations on his faith, 492

Achaia (2 Cor. ix. 2), the part of Greece so designated, ii. 240

Acts of the Apostles, an appendix to the Gospels, and an introduction to the Epistles, i. 525; Author, date, and object, ib.

"Adam, the First and Last;" import of, ii. 197

Adultery, woman taken in, on the authenticity of the account of, i. 439

Agapæ, i. 539, 540. 597; ii. 164, 165

Agar, what mount intended by this name, ii. 284

Agonistic contests, St. Paul's allusions to them, ii. 150. 286. 422. 436

Agrippa, the question discussed, whether he was serious in his address to St. Paul, i. 685

Alabaster box of spikenard, remarks on, i. 156. 243

All, often employed in the sense of many, i. 13. 56. 406. 544. 571; ii. 344. 447

Allegory and Type, difference between, ii. 283

"Altar of incense," meaning of the words so translated, Heb. ix. 3, ii. 470

Anacoluthon, exemplification of, i. 39. 205. 236. 240. 667; ii. 15. 206. 655

Ananias and Sapphira, nature of the offence committed by, i. 550, 551

"Anathema, let him be," observations on, ii. 168. 203. 260

Anchor, a symbol of Hope, ii. 497

Ancients, method of reference employed by the, ii. 484

"Angel of the Lord," meaning of, i. 6

Angelic appearances, on the time of their ceasing, i. 259

Angels, guardian, on the offices assigned them according to the tenets of the Jews, i. 104.599. On their doxology, 271. "Disposition of angels" (Acts vii. 53), 569. Judging the angels, what? ii. 129. "Tongues of angels" (1 Cor. xiii. 1), 174. Their inferiority to Christ, 468

"Angry, be ye, and sin not," meaning of the expression, ii. 316

Anna, the prophetess, remarks on, i. 275

Annas, on the tenure of the High-priesthood of, i. 277

Antanaclasis, example of, ii. 90

Antichrist, meaning of the term, ii. 624, 625, 630

Aorist tense, frequently employed to denote custom, i. 16. 55. 249. 468. 490. 535; ii. 217. 470

Apollos succeeds St. Paul at Corinth, ii. 101

"Apostasy," and "Man of Sin," opinions respecting, ii. 398. 442. Danger of Apostasy, 492. 613

Apostles. [See Disciples.]

Apphia (Philem. 1), who supposed to be, ii. 459

Areopagus, decline of its influence in the time of the Apostles, i. 635

Arians, their suspected corruption of Acts xvi. 7, i. 625

"Arm," by a Hebrew figure, denoting power, i. 265

Armagedon, derivation and meaning of, ii. 684

Asia, how to be understood at Acts xvi. 6, i. 624

Asiarchs, origin and nature of their office, i. 649

Assurance, doctrine of, untenable by the passage of 1 John ii. 3, ii. 621

Asyndeton, examples of, i. 201; ii. 541

Athens, its excessive devotion to a plurality of gods, i. 637. On the altar there, adverted to by St. Paul, 637. Its tolerant character, ib.

Atonement, Scriptural doctrine of, i. 118. 460; ii. 55. 227

Auricular confession, groundlessly built upon James v. 16, ii. 577

B.

Babylon, in what sense to be understood, ii. 600. 679

Balaam, on the crime of, ii. 612. 643

Baptism, its general use among the Jewish and Oriental nations, i. 12. Nature and Origin of, among the Jews, 13. "Baptism" denoting affliction, 117. Infant Baptism, its analogy to circumcision, 181; mode of administering the rite, ib. 214. 327. 578. 593. "I have a baptism to be baptized with," meaning of, 327. Supposed allusion to the delay of administering the rite in early times, 578. Rarely administered by the Apostles, 593. No visible token of pardon ordinarily vouchsafed, in the Apostolic times, until after baptism, 664. Applied by St. Paul, under the similitude of death and resurrection, to denote the cultivation of Christian virtue, ii. 37. Allusion to the rite, 1 Cor. vi. 11, 131. Followed in the Apostolic times by the laying on of hands, why? 491. Baptism of John, observations on the, i. 124. 393. Nature of it, 646, 7. Baptism with Fire, what? i. 14. Baptism of our Lord by John, nature and design of, 15

Baptismal Regeneration, nature of, ii. 456

"Baptized in Jordan," meaning of, i. 185. "Baptized into Moses," the sense of the expression discussed, ii. 152. "Baptized for the dead," these words explained, ii. 193

Barbarian, origin and import of the word, i. 694. "Barbarian" and "Scythian" (Coloss. iii. 11), ii. 369

"Bearing sins," import of the phrase, i. 393; ii. 518

"Beautiful," gate so called, discussion as to which it is, i. 541

Beelzebub, signification of, i. 57. Our Lord blasphemously charged by the Pharisees with being in league with him, 68, 69

Beheading, considered the most ignominious death among the Jews, i. 597

Belial, derivation and meaning of, ii. 231

Bethany or Bethabara, situation of, i. 120. 393

Bethesda, pool of, on the miraculous cures wrought there, i. 415

Bethphage, situation of, i. 120

Bethulia, situation of, i. 24

Binding and loosing, the power of, granted to St. Peter, observations on, i. 96, 97. 106

Bishop, origin and import of the term, i. 330. 624. 653, 654. Existence of the office in the Apostolic times, ii. 331. The three orders in the ministry inferred from 1 Thess. v. 12—14, 390

Black, an emblem of woe, ii. 661

Blasphemy, meaning of the term, i. 48. 167. How understood by the Jews, 559. Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, nature of the sin, 68

"Blood, born not of," observations on this expression, i. 394. "Blood of the Covenant," meaning of the expression, ii. 525. "The moon shall be turned into blood," meaning of, i. 534. No redemption without shedding of blood, ii. 514

Bloody sweat, on our Lord's suffering under it, i. 371

Boanerges, derivation and meaning of, i. 195

Body, "whosoever eateth my body, and drinketh my blood," whether alluding to the Eucharist, i. 428, 9. The body compared by the Pythagoreans to a habitation, and by the Platonists to a garment, ii. 222

"Book" (βίβλος, Heb. ספר), Matth. i. 1, meaning of, i. 3. "Book of the prophets," import of the term, 567. "Names written in the book of life," the allusion in these words, ii. 351

"Born again," import of the expression, i. 402

Bow, an emblem of victory, ii. 661

Bread, by an Oriental figure, denoting the necessaries of life, i. 34. "Breaking bread," whether to be understood of the Eucharist, 539. 653

"Bridegroom," a title applied by the Hebrews to the Messiah, i. 50. Christ compared to a bridegroom by John the Baptist, 406

Burials, among the Jews and Heathens, outside of cities and towns, i. 295. The interval between death and burial short, 551

"Burn, did not our hearts?" remarks on, i. 383. "Whose end is to be burnt," the allusion explained, ii. 494

Burning of incense in the Temple, the office determined by lot, i. 259

C.

Cæsarea Philippi, how distinguishable from Cæsarea of Palestine, i. 584

Caiaphas, observations on his tenure of the High-priesthood, i. 277. On his prophetical declaration respecting the death of our Lord, 470

"Called" and "chosen," sense in which these terms are employed, i. 116

Calvinists their interpretation of John vi. 37, i. 426. Their concession with reference to Eph. i. 5, ii. 298

Camel's hair, girdle of, what? i. 12

Canaan, derivation and meaning of the word, i. 563. A woman of Canaan (Matt. xv. 22), her character and country, i. 90. 216

Canaanites, called Phœnicians by the Greeks, i. 90

Catholic Epistles, why so called, ii. 553

Cedron, the brook, i. 505

Cephas (Peter), ground of the attachment to him of the party at Corinth called by his name, ii. 104

Cerinthus, nature of the heresy maintained by him, ii. 631

"Chaff," meaning of the word so rendered, i. 15

Charity, its superiority to all other virtues, ii. 175. 603. Enjoined by Christ, i. 278

Cherubim, symbolical emblems of the Divine nature, ii. 511

"Child-bearing, she shall be saved in" (1 Tim. ii. 15), the meaning of the words, ii. 415

CHRIST, signification and origin of the name, i. 5. 281. Whether a proper name, or an appellative, 226. Why he condescended to be baptized by John, 15. Predicts his crucifixion, 116. His consummate wisdom in his replies to the Pharisees, 124. Whether he celebrated the Passover before his crucifixion? 158. His agony in the Garden, 163. On the subornation of false witnesses against him, 166. His bloody sweat, 371. His exclamation, when nailed to the cross, 175. His commission to his Apostles to evangelize the world, 181. His Omnipresence, ibid. God's testimony as to his being his Son, 100. Brought up to a handicraft occupation, 207. In what sense it is said (Mark vi. 5), that he "could do no miracles," ibid. External actions used by him in the cure of diseases and infirmities, why? 217. Nature of his promise to his persecuted followers, 231. Probable meaning of his promise to the penitent malefactor, 378. His sudden disappearance from the disciples, who were journeying to Emmaus, 383. The way in which his disciples saw his glory, 390. On the number of Passovers attended by Christ during his ministry, 399. His conversation with Nicodemus, 400. His crucifixion typified by the brazen serpent, 404. Why he did not himself baptize, 405. Why he revealed himself more fully to the Samaritans than to the Jews, 412. His subordination to, and co-equality with, the Father, 418; ii. 160. In what sense the Father is said to "give men" to him, i. 426. Purpose of his journey to Jerusalem at the Feast of Tabernacles, 431. Reason assigned for his not accompanying his disciples to the Feast, 432. His Discourse on the last great day of the Feast, 437. Why he taught in Parables, 73. 456. Glory of Christ, in what it probably consists, 473. The purpose of his Passion, 460. His death voluntary, ibid. His procession from God, 498. His union with the Father, 486. His prayer for his disciples, 499. Distinction between his proceeding from, and being sent by, the Father, 501. Appearances to his disciples, and conversations with them, after his resurrection, 526. Parallel between him and Moses, 544. In what respect his intercession differs from that of the Holy Spirit, ii. 54. How said to be the Author of our Justification, Sanctification, and Redemption, 108. Resignation of his Mediatorial office, 192. His humiliation and exaltation, 341. 473. "Brought life and immortality to light," 435. His titles, 466. In what sense he is said to be begotten, as the Son of God, 469. Said to be "a little lower than the angels," meaning of this, 474. Contrasted with Moses, 479. Shown to be the true High-Priest, 487. "Was heard in that he feared," explained, 488. His priesthood superior to the Levitical, 500, 501. 503. 508. In what sense he is to be called an "Intercessor," 504. In what sense "the Mediator of the New Covenant," 514. The Expiation made by him neither requires nor admits of repetition, 521. His body typified by the Veil of the Temple, 522. Set forth as an example of suffering, 551. "Preached to the spirits in prison," (1 Pet. iii. 19.) 593. In what sense called our "Shepherd," 589

Christian Liberty, its nature and limits, ii. 587

Christians, the early ones universally hated by the Pagans, i. 142. Origin of the name, 596. Obliged by their persecutors to pronounce certain forms, expressive of abuse of Christ, 683

Church (ἐκκλησία), import of the term in the Apostolic age, ii. 164. Promise of the foundation being laid by St. Peter, i. 95. "The Church in their house," the meaning of the expression discussed, ii. 202. In what sense called "The pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. iii. 15), 419

Circumcision, its analogy to Infant Baptism, i. 181. Whether instituted before or after the Sabbath, 435. On the performance of the rite on the Sabbath, 434, 435. Put for the whole ritual law, 616. A seal, of what and how? ii. 29. Earnestly denounced by St. Paul, 323

Circumspection and prudence, remarkable terms in which these virtues are recommended to the Ephesians and Colossians, ii. 323

Classical Greek contrasted with Hellenistic, i. 104. 148. 152. 165. 192. 204. 212. 244. 259. 350. 398. 597. 633; ii. 5. 40. 149. 202. 237. 334. 390, 391. 487

Clay, why used by our Saviour in restoring the sight of the blind man, i. 451

Clement, mentioned Phil. iv. 3, whether Clemens Romanus, ii. 351

Clothing, emblematical of moral habits, ii. 599

Cloud, a symbol of the Divine presence, i. 408; a small one looked on, in the East, as the forerunner of wind and rain, 327

Cock-crowing, meaning of the expression, i. 161. Apparent discrepancy between the account in Matt. xxvi. 34, and Mark xiv. 30, ib.

Coins, the most ancient, usually square, i. 399

Collections for the Saints, why made weekly, and on the Sabbath, ii. 200

Colossians, Epistle to, date and design of it, ii. 355

"Cometh, he that," a title of the Messiah, i. 14. 122. 140. 389

"Commandment, a new," why so called, i. 482

"Common," the correlative word to "Holy," i. 213. 589

Communion with God, meaning of, ii. 619

Conscience, a law to the Gentiles, ii. 17. Power of an evil one, 477. The Law unable to quiet it, 512

Corban, meaning of, i. 88

Corinth, state of society there when visited by St. Paul, ii. 100. The Christian converts tinctured with the Sadducean spirit, 186. Importance of the station, 239

Corinthians, First Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 100

Corinthians, Second Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 204. Effects produced by it, ib.

Cornelius, whether a mere Gentile, or a proselyte of the gate, i. 586

"Creation of all things," the phrase never used in Scripture in a moral sense, ii. 359

Crete, probable period of the first preaching of Christianity there, ii. 449. Character of the inhabitants, 451, 452

Cross, on the form of the, i. 173. On the manner of inscription on, ib.

Crown of thorns, observations on, i. 172

Crucifixion, nature of the punishment, i. 173. 522. Nature and extent of the darkness during it, 174. Whether twice described by Mark as having taken place, 250. Discrepancy between him and John as to the hour, 251

Cup, denial of it to the laity by the Church of Rome, a bold infraction of the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, i. 160

"Cup, drink of the," origin and force of this phrase, i. 117. "Cup of blessing," origin and import of the expression, ii. 155

"Cut off the hand," meaning of the expression, i. 27

D.

Dalmanutha, situation of, i. 92

Darkness at our Lord's crucifixion, nature and extent of it, i. 174. Darkness employed in Scripture as an image of ignorance, 389. An emblem of evil, ii. 321. Darkness, outer, the allusion to it explained, i. 44

"David, son of," a title of the Messiah, i. 52

Day of Judgment, sublime description of it, i. 154

"Day of the Lord," meaning of the expression, ii. 399

Deaconesses, whether the same as widows in the primitive Church, ii. 424

Deacons, nature of their office, i. 557

Dead, the, on the custom of wailing for, i. 51

"Dead works," meaning of, ii. 513

"Death, he shall never see," (John viii. 51) remark on the phrase, i. 449. On the expression, "Ye shall not see me," 496. "Death of the righteous," ii. 167. The "Second Death," how to be understood, 692

Dedication of the Temple, feast of, its celebration not confined to Jerusalem, i. 461

Demoniacal possession, præternatural character of it, i. 21. 52. 202. 296. 330

Desert, nature of the place so called in the Gospels, i. 12. Deserts of Judæa described, 105

Devil, origin and signification of the term, i. 17. Acknowledges the Messiah in order to impede his ministry, 284. "Stood not in the truth," 447. Called God (not Lord) of this world, why? ii. 218. Assumes the fairest appearance for the worst of purposes, 248. His agency groundlessly questioned by recent Commentators, 328

"Devour widows' houses," the expression explained, i. 135, 136
"Died in faith," meaning of the phrase, ii. 532 Disciples, their inquiry respecting the coming of Christ and the end of the world, i. 140, 141. Our Lord's warning respecting the sacrifices to which they who would become his disciples must necessarily be subject, 231. Their erroneous notions of the nature of the Messiah's kingdom, 496. 527. In what sense they are to be understood as having had "all things common," Acts ii. 44, 539 Disease and sin, the ideas of, connected by the Jews, i. 45 Disobedience to parents, on the heinousness of the offence, ii. 441
Divinity of Christ, facts and arguments in proof of it, i. 68. 86, 87. 94. 181. 260. 271. 309. 384. 388, 389. 396. 400. 418. 450. 462, 463. 496. 498. 501. 519. 534. 612; ii. 60. 69. 102. 154. 197. 218. 226. 237. 253. 259. 320. 340, 341. 359. 454. 513
Divorce, doctrines of, as maintained by the schools of Hillel and Shammai, i. 27, 28. 108. Why permitted by Moses, 109. Not permitted by the Divine law, 108. 228. Terms by which it was anciently expressed, ii. 136
Docetæ, their tenets, i. 514; ii. 630. Fact recorded by St. John in refutation of them, i. 514 Dogs and swine symbolical of profane persons, i. 39. Dogs (Phil. iii. 2), who meant by the term, ii. 346
"Door, to enter in by the," import of, i. 456 Doubt, often the consequence of very joyful and sudden events, i. 384 Dove, descent of the Spirit like, at the baptism of our Lord, i. 16 Doxology at the end of the Lord's Prayer, its genuineness disputed, i. 34. The angels' doxology, remarks on it, 271 Dreams, prophetical, a very ancient channel of Divine revelation, i. 6. Ceased after the time of Malachi, and restored in the prophetic dream of Joseph, the husband of Mary, ib. Pharaoh's dream, why doubled, 589
"Dry tree, what shall be done in the," a proverbial expression, i. 376 Dying to oneself, import of the phrase (Rom. xiv. 7), ii. 89

E.

Eagles, who meant by this term, i. 145
"Ear, mine, hast thou opened," this expression in the Hebrew equivalent to "a body hast thou prepared me" (Hebr. x. 5), ii. 520
"Earthly things" (John iii. 12), import of the expression, i. 403
Ebionites, nature of the heresy maintained by them, ii. 631
Egypt, its fitness as a place of refuge for our Lord in his infancy, i. 10. Its ancient reputation for wisdom, 563, 4. Its excessive devotion to idolatry, 635. The Philosophers acquainted with the doctrine of the unity of the Godhead, 638
Egyptian hieroglyphic expressive of impossibility, i. 86
Elder, (πρεσβύτερος,) import of the term, i. 653 Election, on the doctrine of, i. 116; ii. 62 370. 375. No allusion to particular election in Eph. i. 5. 298
Elias, the coming of, spoken of by the scribes, i. 61. 100. 260
Elijah, a type of John the Baptist, i. 62. 100. 260. Tenet of the Jews respecting him, 392
Elymas, derivation and meaning of, i. 602
Embalming, ancient mode of, i. 515
Emmaus, two places of this name, i. 380 Enemies, who so termed by the Jews, i. 31
Engrafting, allusion to the ancient mode of, ii. 75
Enoch, translation of, ii. 529
Enoch, on the Apocryphal Book of, ii. 644
Ephesians, Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 297. Its general character, ib.
Ephesus, reply of the disciples there to St. Paul's inquiry respecting their baptism, i. 645. Chief resort of astrologers, 647. Silver shrines of Diana at, 648
Ephraim, probable situation of, i. 470
Epicureans, their religious tenets, i. 634; ii. 186
Episcopacy, origin of, i. 654; ii. 450
Essenes, their practices with respect to oaths, ii. 576 Eucharist, on the origin of the term, and whence so named, i. 160. Probably alluded to in John vi. 51, 428. Considered as a feast upon Sacrifice, ii. 156
Eunuchs, on the offices anciently filled by, i. 575, 576 Euroclydon, derivation and signification of the word, i. 689
Evangelists, in the primitive Church, their office and qualification, ii. 313 Evening, twofold sense assigned to the term, i. 44. 84
Evil, moral and natural, specimens of his power over both exhibited by our Lord while on earth, i. 22. 52. Classification of evil passions and habits, 215. "Inventors of evil things," meaning of the words, ii. 12 Excommunication among the Jews, first degree of it, i. 291. Second, 453. 493. The notion of mourning connected with it, ii. 125 Extreme Unction, not sanctioned by the passage of James v. 14, ii. 576 "Eye, right, pluck out the," this expression illustrated, i. 27. "Evil Eye," meaning of the expression, 27. 36. 116. 215. "Single Eye," 36. "Mote and beam in the eye," remarks on these expressions, 38. 116. The word eye employed to denote what is most precious, ii. 281

F.

Face, falling on the, indicative of reverence and fear, i. 100. "Setting the face," import of the phrase, 310. "Face to face," ii. 177
Fair Havens, situation of, i. 687
Faith, description of, ii. 528. Inefficacy of it, when unaccompanied by works, 564. Justification by Faith, i. 608; ii. 271. "From faith to faith," import of the expression, ii. 7. Its efficacy deduced from the Old Test., 271. The origin of all virtues, 603 False Christs and false Prophets, distinction between them, i. 145. On their giving signs and wonders, 144
False teachers, in the Apostolic times, their principles and conduct, ii. 334
Fast-days among the Jews, i. 352
Feast, governor of the, nature of his office, i. 397

Felix, his motives for dismissing St. Paul, i. 677 Festivals, the three great Jewish, periods at which executions of great malefactors generally took place, i. 156. Females not required to attend, 275
"Few saved," this question discussed, i. 331
Fig-tree, the barren, observations on the cursing of it, i. 123. 234. Conversation, meditation, and prayer under fig-trees by the ancient Jews, 396
Final Perseverance, on the doctrine of, ii. 527
Fire, baptism with, what? i. 14
Fire, an emblem of what, i. 327
"First-born," a title of the Messiah, ii. 469
"Fishers of men," this expression illustrated by citations from the Classical writers, i. 20. 285
Five, meaning very few, ii. 182
"Flesh, ye judge according to the," note on this, i. 443. "Flesh and blood," meaning of this expression, i. 94; ii. 262. "Flesh in the," "according to the flesh," meanings of these phrases, ii. 27. 243
"Follow me," import of the expression, i. 395
Fornication, taken in a spiritual sense, i. 447. Why interdicted in the Decree of the Council of Jerusalem, 621
"Fruits," meaning of the term, i. 40 Fulfilled, Time, when said to be, i. 186

G.

Gabriel, meaning of the word, i. 573
Gadara, situation of, i. 46
Galatians, Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 258. In what sense said to be large (chap. vi. 11), 294 Galilæans, whose blood Pilate mingled with the sacrifices, observations on this transaction, i. 329 Galilee, character of the inhabitants of, i. 20. Language of, whether different from that at Judæa, 532
"Galilee of the Gentiles," meaning of, i. 19
"Galilee, out of, ariseth no prophet," this observation explained, i. 439 Gamaliel, the descent of, i. 555
Garments, rending of, mode and intent of, i. 167
Gehenna, derivation and meaning of the term, i. 26
Gemara, its origin and contents, i. 87
Gentiles, their admission into the Church predicted, i. 460. 610. 573. How discriminated in the Greek Test. from Jews, 471. The dictates of their consciences a law to them, ii. 17. St. Paul vindicates his divine commission to preach to them, 69. Their general conversion to follow the conversion and restoration of the Jews, 74 Gergesa, situation of, i. 46.
German Neologists, their unwarrantable misinterpretation of passages of Scripture censured, i. 15, 16. 52. 176, 177. 551. 579, 580. 600. 669; ii. 168
Gethsemane, derivation of the name, and situation of the place, i. 162. Our Lord's agony there, ib.
Gifts and Offices in the Primitive Church, ii. 81. 167. 169. 236. 312 "Son of Man to be glorified," in what the glory probably consists, i. 473. To "glorify God," meaning of, ii. 9
"Glory of the Lord," meaning of the expression, i. 271. "Give glory to God," import of, 411
Gnostics, their doctrine of the mediation of angels, ii. 367
God, in what sense said to be a Spirit, i. 411. The different ways in which he has revealed himself to man, 587. "In the form of God," the phrase explained, ii. 339. In what sense "God the Father" is said (1 Tim. i. 1) to be "our Saviour," 407
"God of this world," in what sense Satan is said to be such, ii. 218 Gog and Magog, ii. 692
Golden censer, solution of a difficulty respecting it, ii. 510
"Golgotha," derivation and meaning of the word, i. 173 Gospel, signification and origin of the word, i. 3. Preached to the poor, 60. Its superiority to the Law, 391; ii. 214. Does not make void the Law, ii. 42. Corruption of it by "vain philosophy," 364. Immortality brought to light by it, how? 435. Its different effect on different persons, 494 Gospels, the Four, hypotheses with respect to their origin and order, i. 182. Coincidences and discrepancies between them accounted for, 183, 184
"Grace of God," general import of the expression, i. 275. Not irresistible, 427. "Grace for grace" (John i. 16), the phrase explained, 391. Grace and debt contrasted, ground of the allusion implied in the terms, ii. 42. Human co-operation with it necessary to salvation, 342. 403. "The throne of grace," the allusion explained, 486
Grecians, discussion as to who are meant by this term at Acts vi. 1, and xi. 20, i. 557. 595
Greece, bipartite division of, by Augustus, ii. 240
Greek language, traces of its Oriental origin, i. 566 Greek Article, exemplifications of Bp. Middleton's canon respecting, i. 54. 80. 83. 86. 89. 91. 122. 160. 169. 177. 223. 240. 262. 319. 352. 403, 420. 434. 500. 549. 614. 651
Greeks, Heathens sometimes called by the name of, i. 216 Grief, excessive, its soporific tendency, i. 371
"Grieve the Holy Spirit," meaning of the expression, ii. 318

H.

Hades, opinions concerning, i. 345; ii. 651. Descent into, remarks on, ii. 68
Hand, the withered (Matt. xii. 10), nature of the affection, i. 65 Hands, imposition of, a very ancient rite, i. 109. 558; ii. 491. Import of it in the early Christian Church, i. 558. 573. And immediately after Baptism, why? ii. 491
"Have thou authority," &c. (Luke xix. 17), this allusion explained and exemplified, i. 356 Head, covering of the, enjoined upon women in public worship, ground of the precept, ii. 160
"Head stone of the corner," meaning of the allusion, i. 126 Heathen, their distrust of Providence alluded to, i. 38 Heaven opened at the Baptism of Christ, observations on the circumstance, i. 15, 16. The joys of heaven anciently represented under the image of a banquet, 43, 44. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," meaning of this, 61. Jewish notions concerning heaven, 271;

ii. 486. To "ascend into heaven," import of the phrase, 68
"Heavenly things" (John iii. 12), import of the expression, i. 403
Hebraisms in the New Testament, examples of, i. 105, 106. 108. 126. 144. 148. 172. 207. 247. 263. 265. 267. 273. 282. 310. 315. 341. 346. 499. 634. 657; ii. 200. 494
"Hebrew, a, of the Hebrews," explained, ii. 249. 347
Hebrews (Ἑβραῖοι), the Jews of Palestine, so called in the New Test., i. 556. Distinction between "Hebrews" and "Israelites," ii. 249
Hebrews, Epistle to, date, design, and authorship of, ii. 462. To whom addressed, ib. Supposed by some to have been originally written in Hebrew, ib.
Hebrew Scriptures, discrepancies between them and the Septuagint and the New Testament, i. 79. 89. 123. 161. 219. 282. 472. 492. 545. 561. 563. 568. 577. 608. 619; ii. 111. 520. 526
Hell, meaning of the word thus rendered, i. 302. Opinions of the learned concerning, 345. Remarks on descent into, ii. 68
Hellenists, opinions respecting them, i. 557. 594
"Hem," of the garment, meaning of the word so rendered, i. 51
Herculaneum and Pompeii, disclosures there made, confirm the character which St. Paul has given of the wickedness of the heathen world, ii. 10
Heresy, of the time of St. John, consisted in the denial not of the Divinity, but of the Humanity of Christ, ii. 630
Herod, difficulty respecting the real force of the word rendered his birth-day (Matt. xiv. 6), i. 83
Herodians, origin and principles of, i. 130
High Priest, Jewish, the Mediator under the Mosaic Covenant, i. 458. Christ contrasted with him, ib.; ii. 486. In what sense the words in John x. 8 are to be understood of the High Priests, i. 458. Character of the High Priests under the second temple, ib.
High priesthood, changes made in its power and mode of appointment, under the Roman government of Judæa, i. 277
Hinnom, valley of, i. 26
"Holy and Just One," a cognomen of the Messiah, i. 542. 569
"Holy City," Jerusalem why so called, i. 17
HOLY GHOST, blasphemy against him, what? i. 69. Proofs of his Personality and Divinity, 486. 495. 551. 601; ii. 169. 300. 318. 513. 525. On the nature of the Spirit's operation, 629. Necessity and effects of his advent, i. 494. The allusion to him in Acts xvi. 7, sought to be destroyed by the Arians and Socinians, 625. His intercession different from that of our Lord, ii. 54
Honey, wild, opinions respecting it, i. 13
Honey-comb, anciently the food of such as aimed at abstemiousness of diet, i. 384 "Honour thy father and thy mother," in what manner understood by the Jews, i. 87
Horeb and Sinai, whether the same mountain, i. 565
"Horn," meaning of the term in the Old and New Testament, i. 267 Hosanna, derivation and meaning of the word, i. 122
House-top, the word thus translated, how explained, i. 57. 144
Hyssop, nature and use of the plant, i. 175. 513

I.

Idol-meats, eating of, how far lawful and unlawful, ii. 155. 158
Idols, notions of the heathen respecting, i. 648 Idolatry, origin of it, ii. 10
Idumæa, situation of, i. 532
"I know you not," import of the expression, i. 151. 331, 2 Imposition of hands, a very ancient rite, i. 109. 558; ii. 491. Import of, in the early Christian Church, i. 558. 573. Employed immediately after Baptism, ii. 491 Impossibility, moral, its nature, ii. 492
Infant Baptism, its lawfulness argued, and observations on, i. 110. 181
Infidelity, the origin of all sins, ii. 482 Intercommunity of goods in the infancy of the Christian Church, true extent of it, i. 539
Isaac, persecution of him by Ishmael, ii. 284
Iscariot, signification of the term as applied tc Judas, i. 54 Israel, a type of Christ, i. 10 "Israelite, a true," import of the expression, i. 395. Distinction between the terms "Israelites" and "Hebrews," ii. 249

J.

James, St., account of him, ii. 553. Style, date, and design of his Epistle, ib.
Jannes and Jambres, who were they, ii. 443 Jeremiah, difficulties attending the citation from him in Matt. xxvii. 9, 10; i. 170
"Jerusalem, those of," meaning of the expression, i. 87 Jerusalem, why called "The Daughter of Sion," i. 121. Testimony of Josephus to the completeness of its destruction, 140. 376. 387. Prophecy of its destruction, 365, 6. 376. First Council there, 617
"JESUS," signification and origin of the name, i. 5 Jews, division of their tribes into "thousands," i. 8. Their law and custom respecting retaliation, 30. Called all heathens their enemies, 31. Connected the ideas of sin and disease, 45. Taught by our Lord in Parables, 75. Observations on their imprecation at the condemnation of our Lord, 172. Obliged by their law to learn some handicraft occupation, 207. 275. Their form of citing Scripture, 238. Their notions concerning heaven, 271. Their mode of instruction by interrogation, 276. 373. Their customs respecting the reception of guests, 299. Their tenet respecting Elijah, 392. Their hatred of the Samaritans, 409. Correct ideas of the spirituality of God held by the wiser Jews, 411. Their custom of using apophthegms, 418. Species of learning cultivated by them, 433. 547. The interval short, with them, between death and burial, 466. 408. Discussion of the question, Whether, at the time of our Lord's crucifixion, the Jews had the power of inflicting capital punishment? 508. The hope of the resurrection held by all the Jews, except the Sadducees, 682. Their conversion to be followed by a renewal of the genuine spirit of Christianity, ii. 74. Their mode of computing the duration of the world, 154. Their notions respecting the dominion exercised in the air by dæmons, 303. Their antisocial spirit towards other nations, 381. Nature of the literary pursuits of the young, 422. Two Dispersions; the Eastern and Western; extent of them, 463. 554. Languages respectively used by them, ib.

JOHN, the Evangelist, some account of, i. 386. Discrepancy between him and Mark, as to the hour of the crucifixion, 251. Records chiefly the discourses of Christ, 385. Design of his Gospel, 387. Date of it, 386, 387. A list of words peculiar to him, 386. Apparent discrepancy between him and the other Evangelists, chap. xviii. 12, 13, 506; again, chap. xix. 14, 512. Distinguished by the term "That other disciple," from Peter, 507. The design of his attestation, xix. 34, 514. Lived to witness the completion of Christ's judgments on the Jewish nation, 523

John, First Epistle of, v. 5, inconclusive reasoning respecting its genuineness, i. 35. Its date, design, and style, ii. 617, sq.

John, Second Epistle of, on the authenticity of, and that of the Third Epistle, ii. 637

John, Third Epistle of, design of, ii. 639

John, Apocalypse of, its authenticity, ii. 646. Date and design of it, ib. Whether originally written in Hebrew, ib. State of the common Text, ib. Difficulties of an exposition of it, ib.

John the Baptist, design of his message to our Lord, Matt. xi. 3, i. 59. His resemblance to Elijah, 62. Circumstances connected with his birth, 259. On his abode in the wilderness, 268. On the nature of his baptism, 393. Supposed design of his removing to Ænon, 405. On the character of his ministry, 429

Jubilee, the year of, allusion to it, i. 282

Judas Iscariot, our Lord's designation of him as the traitor, discussed, i. 159. Supposed by some to have entertained the opinion that our Lord would, after his apprehension, have delivered himself, 169. On his suicide, 169. 529. In what sense Satan is said to have entered into him, 367

Jude, Epistle of, its authenticity, ii. 641. Account of the author, ib. Its date and design, ib.

"Jupiter, the image that fell down from," observations on, i. 650

Justification by faith in Christ, fulness of it, i. 608. Fruits of it, ii. 32.

K.

Keys, power of the, nature of it discussed, i. 96

"Kingdom of Heaven," meaning of the expression, i. 12. 26

Kings, often styled Shepherds by Homer and Æschylus, i. 459

"Kiss of peace," origin and design of it, ii. 98. Early laid aside, ib.

Knowledge compared to food, a frequent figure with the Jews, ii. 490

L.

"Lamb of God," import of the expression, i. 393

Laodiceans, Epistle to, conjectures of the learned respecting it, ii. 373

"Last days," import of this expression, ii. 441

Latinisms in the New Testament, examples of, i. 169. 315. 334. 592. 660

"Latter times," in what sense to be understood, ii. 420

Law, moral and ceremonial, fulfilled by and in Christ, i. 25. The ceremonial Law may be dispensed with in cases of necessity, 64

Law, various meanings in which the word is used in St. Paul's Epistles, ii. 16. Design of the Mosaic Law, 36. Law contrasted with Grace, 40. Not made void by the Gospel, 42. How "weak," 502. The true use of it, 407. Its abrogation inferred from the Scriptures by St. Paul, 500. Its inefficacy for salvation, 502. Contrasted with the Gospel, 545. Its abolition predicted and accomplished, 584

Lawyers, sense of their office, i. 8. 133. Whether, in dignity, superior to the Scribes and Pharisees, 321

Lazarus, on the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, i. 343

Learning, species of, anciently cultivated in Judæa, i. 433. 547

Left hand, placing at the, import of the expression, i. 154

"Lend, hoping for nothing again," this precept illustrated by a reference to a heathen custom, i. 292.

Letters of introduction and recommendation in the Primitive Church, origin and nature of, ii. 213

Libertines, synagogue of, discussion as to who are meant by the term, i. 558

Life and immortality brought to light by the Gospel, ii. 435

"Life from the dead," meaning of, ii. 75

"Light and Life," import of the terms in Scripture, i. 388. 452

"Lighteth a candle" (Luke xv. 8), necessity for this in ancient times, i. 377

"Lion of the tribe of Judah," on the application of this title to Christ, ii. 660

Lions, who are spoken of under this term, ii. 448

Living to oneself, import of the phrase, ii. 89

"Living water," import of the phrase, i. 409

Loaves, nature of them amongst the Jews, i. 85

Locusts permitted to be eaten by the Law, i. 13

Logos, the, import and origin of the term, i. 388

Long life, in what sense to be understood as the reward of filial obedience, ii. 326

LORD, import of the term, i. 133; ii. 69

Lord's Supper (Κυριακὸν δεῖπνον, 1 Cor. xi. 20), import of the expression, ii. 164. On the rite, and effect of it, 155, 156

Lots, ancient mode of casting, i. 530

Love, Christian, on the Divine principle of, ii. 175. 177, 178

Loving our neighbour as ourselves, extent of the precept, i. 133

LUKE, St., his genealogy reconciled with that of St. Matthew, i. 3. Less observant of chronological order than Mark and Matthew, 119. 369. His Gospel believed to be prior to that of St. Mark, 183. Account of him, 256. Date of the publication of his Gospel, ib. Authenticity of the first two chapters groundlessly impugned, ib. Design of his Gospel, ib.

Lycaonia, language of, respecting its nature and character, i. 613

M.

Magdalene, Mary, opinions respecting her, i. 300

Magi, visit of the, its chronology discussed, i. 7. Origin and meaning of the word, ib.

Malefactors crucified with our Lord, probable nature of their offence, i. 377 Malta, where St. Paul was shipwrecked, not the Illyrian, but the African Malta, i. 694 Mammon, meaning of, i. 37
"Man, I speak as a," meaning of this, ii. 21
"Man of God," force of the expression, ii. 430
"Man of Sin," observations on, ii. 398. 442 Manger, import of the word so rendered, i. 270
Manichæans, the Divine legation of Moses and the Prophets denied by, i. 457 Manna, its nature, i. 425, 6. Derivation of the name, ib. Ingenious remark of Theodoret respecting it, ii. 238. In what sense said to be hidden, 653
MARK, St., date of his Gospel, i. 182. 184. Short account of him, 182. Whether he made use of St. Luke's Gospel, 184. Whether he made use of St. Matthew's, 182—184. Design of his Gospel, 183, 184. He and St. Matthew more observant of chronological order than St. Luke, 119. 369 Marriage, doctrine of the Scripture respecting it, i. 108. Laws and customs of antiquity respecting the newly married, 335. Oriental marriage customs alluded to, Ephes. v. 27, ii. 325
Mary, the Virgin, her song similar to that of Hannah, i. 264. Reason assigned for her attendance at Bethlehem to be enrolled, 269. Her conduct at the marriage in Cana, 397
MATTHEW, St., Gospel of, its date, i. 1. 183. Whether written originally in Hebrew, i. 2; ii. 422. Two Editions (in Hebrew, and in the Greek) believed to have been written by him, 2. His genealogy reconciled with that of St. Luke, 3. Apparent discrepancy between his citation, chap. iv. 15, 16, accounted for, 19. He and St. Mark more observant of chronology than St. Luke, 119. 369. Apparent discrepancies between him and the other Evangelists, 119. 121. 183
"Measure, given by," import of, i. 407
"Meat and Drink," understood in a figurative sense, i. 413 Mediation of Christ, manner in which it was effected, ii. 506. 514 Melchizedek, "priest after the order of," ii. 488. Comparison of his priesthood with that of Christ, ib. His priesthood a type of that of Christ, 498. Conjectures respecting him, ib. His superiority to Abraham, 499 Metempsychosis, doctrine of, held by the Pharisees, i. 451. Impugned by our Saviour, 362 MESSIAH, the, opinions of the Jews concerning, i. 94. 167. 309. 436. On the term as applied to Christ, 511. Called the Vine by the Rabbins, 489. His dispensation acknowledged by the Jews to be of a higher order than that of Moses, ii. 473
Mill-stone (Matt. xviii. 6), meaning of, i. 104 Millennium, remarks on the, ii. 692 "Ministry," import of the term, Rom. xii. 7; ii. 81 Ministry, the Christian, entitled to provision, i. 147, sq.; ii. 426 Miracle, definition of, i. 398. Striking difference between the manner in which they were performed by Christ, and that by his Apostles, 541
Mischna, its origin and contents, i. 87; ii. 407
Moloch, tabernacle of, i. 567
Moses, prophesied of Christ, i. 382. Parallel between him and Christ, 544. Styled eloquent by St. Stephen, in what sense? 564. St. Paul's allusion to the veil on his face, ii. 216. On the title of Mediator given to him by the Rabbins, 274. Nature of his commission, 475. Parallel between the state of the family of Moses (the Jews in the wilderness) and that of the family of Christ (Christians under the Gospel), 480. Grounds assigned by Josephus and Philo for the anticipations of his future eminence, 534
"Moses and the Prophets," import of the words, i. 346 Mountains in Judæa, places of refuge in times of public danger, i. 145. The tops of mountains, why selected as places for worship, 411
Mustard seed, on the species of plant which springs from it, i. 200 Myrrh, nature and mode of collecting it, 515
"Mystery," meaning of the term, i. 75; ii. 77. 198. "Mystery of iniquity," import of the expression, ii. 400

N.

"Names, your, are written in heaven," this allusion illustrated and explained, i. 313 Nathanael, whether the same with Bartholomew, i. 395
Natural religion, duties deducible from, ii. 604 Nature, human, original corruption of, ii. 303 Nazarites, usual among the Jews to participate with them in their vows, and pay their expenses, i. 661
Negatives, intense accumulation of, i. 313. Triple negative, 144 Neighbour, who are to be understood by the term, i. 30, 31. 314. Our duty to love him, measure of, ii. 84
Neuter verbs used for Passive, i. 268. 284. 300. 572. Neuter adjectives used for masculine, ii. 500
"New creature," nature of the change implied by this expression, as respects the Jews and the Gentiles respectively, ii. 226. "New commandment," why so called, i. 482; ii. 621. "New covenant," 507. "New Name," 653 Nicodemus, our Lord's conversation with, i. 400. His character, ib. His motive for seeking a private interview, ib.
Noah, in what sense he is said to have "condemned the world," ii. 530. Exposition of the words in 1 Pet. iii. 19 concerning him, 593. The immense size of his ark, 530
Nominative Case, used for Vocative, i. 63. 172, 304. 519

O.

Oath of adjuration, its nature, 167. Our Lord answers under the appeal, ib.
Oath of God, Heb. vi. 17, ii. 496
Oaths, doctrine of the Pharisees respecting them, i. 29. Prohibition of, 136; ii. 576 Obedience must be universal, ii. 393 "Offences, it must needs be that they come," the nature of this necessity discussed, i. 104 Offices and gifts in the Primitive Church, ii. 81 Oil, anointing with, in what sense employed by the Apostles in healing the sick, i. 208; ii. 576
"Old time, those of," explanation of the phrase, i. 26 Ordination, ecclesiastical, in the time of the Apostles, i. 616. Extended to three distinct orders, ii. 390
Oxymoron, instance of, i. 556

P.

Palestine, state of the weather there in seed time, i. 74. Fertility of the soil of, 75

Papal supremacy groundlessly inferred from Matt. xvi. 18, 19, i. 95—97

Parable, signification of the term, i. 73. Why used by Christ, 73. Why the Jews were addressed in, 75. Twofold nature of the parables, 73. 456. Rules for their interpretation, ib.

Paraclete, the, on the nature of his office, i. 485

Paradise, in what sense our Lord's promise of admission into it to the penitent thief is to be understood, i. 378

Paronomasia, instances of, i. 95. 228; ii. 489

Paschal Lamb, a type of Christ, observations on, i. 514

Passive Voice used for Middle, i. 320. 538

Passover, whether our Lord celebrated it before his crucifixion, i. 158. The originally appointed posture (standing) altered by the Jewish doctors to the reclining, 159. The number of passovers attended by our Lord during his ministry, 399. Number of victims usually slain, ib. Two washings at the Paschal Supper, according to the Rabbins, 478

Patience, on our need of, ii. 526

Patriarchs, why so called, i. 562

Patriarchal sabbath supposed to have been on the first day of the week, i. 178

Paul, St., on the conversion of, i. 579. On his blindness, 580. On his fasting, 581. Occasion of the change of his name from that of Saul, 602. In what sense he was enabled to call himself a Roman citizen, 631. Observations on his address to the Athenians, 636—640. Supposed allusion by him to a passage in Plato, 639. In what sense his ignorance of the presence of the High Priest (Acts xxiii. 5) is to be understood, 668. His address to Felix, 677. Reasons for his appeal to Cæsar, 679. His voyage to Rome, 686. Lands at Malta, 694. His style similar to that of Thucydides, ii. 2. General character of his style, 2, 3. Vindicates his Divine commission to preach to the Gentiles, 69. Impresses on the Jews the dignity of his apostleship, 95. Probably visited Spain, 96. His method of preaching the Gospel at Corinth, 109. In what sense his injunction concerning divorce (1 Cor. vii. 10, 11) is to be understood, as contradistinguished from the injunctions of our Lord, 136. Necessary that he should see the risen Saviour, 146. "Fought with beasts at Ephesus," explained, 194. Confidence manifested by him in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, 204. His allusions to his bodily infirmities, 219. 244. His voluntary remission of his right to a maintenance, 247. On the dangers he underwent, 250. Apparent discrepancy between him and St. Luke, 251. His subjection to the passion of pride, 252. Conjectures respecting the thorn in the flesh, ib. His journey into Arabia not mentioned by St. Luke, 262. His ministry not wholly exercised among the Gentiles, 264. On his enumeration of human vices (Gal. v. 19—21), 290. Dictated his Epistles to a Scribe, why? 294. His earnest denunciation of circumcision, 346. Whether he wrote an Epistle to the Laodiceans, 373. His views concerning the general resurrection, 387. Demonstrably the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, 463, 464. Arguments from Scripture in proof of the abrogation of the law, 501

Pavement, the, nature and origin of, i. 512

Pearls, precepts of wisdom so called by the Jews, i. 39

"Perfect, be ye," meaning of this precept, i. 32. 111

Perfect Tense often put for the Present, i. 502

Persecution, religious, benefits resulting from, ii. 334

Perseverance, final, doctrine of, not deducible from Scripture, i. 462

Peschito Syriac Version of the New Testament, its authority, i. 35

Peter, St., no supremacy of dignity conferred upon him, i. 54. 95—97. 253. On his words, "Depart from me —— O Lord," 285. On his conduct, when our Lord washed the disciples' feet, 479. Date and place of his martyrdom and burial, ii. 578

Peter, First Epistle of, date, design, and style of it, ii. 579

Peter, Second Epistle of, its authenticity questioned in early times, ii. 601. Its date and design, ib.

Pharaoh, illustration of the artful policy of, i. 564. Remarks on the hardening of his heart, ii. 63

Pharisees, their doctrines respecting oaths, i. 29; and respecting the resurrection, 131. 334. Their tenet respecting the baptism of Jews, and concerning the punishment reserved for self-murderers, 444. Held the doctrine of Metempsychosis, 451

Philemon, character of, ii. 459. 461. Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 459

Philippians, Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 331. Origin of the Church at Philippi, ib.

Phœnicians and Canaanites, these terms used promiscuously by the Greeks, i. 90

Phylacteries, origin and nature of them, i. 134

Pilate's wife's dream, observations on, i. 171. Whether Pilate's washing his hands, upon our Lord's condemnation, was a Jewish or a Gentile custom? ib. Import of the action, ib. Mingles the blood of the Galilæans with their sacrifices, 328. On his words, "What is truth?" 510. Josephus' account of him, ib.

"Pinnacle" of the Temple, difficulty of assigning the sense of the word so rendered, i. 18

Pleroma of the Gnostics, observations on, ii. 457

Pluperfect tense Passive, in the Middle, or Deponent sense, i. 453

Pot of manna, observations on, ii. 511

"Potters' Field," remarks on, i. 169

Prætorium, import of the term, i. 172. The same with the Pavement, John xix. 13, 512

Prayer, the Lord's, remark on it, i. 33, sq. The genuineness of the doxology questioned, 34. Prayer, usual time of, among the Jews, i. 587

Praying for the dead, erroneously supposed to be sanctioned by St. Paul (2 Tim. i. 18), ii. 448

Precepts, affirmative and negative; the latter absolute, the former subject to limitation, i. 35

Precepts, ritual, works performed by Divine virtue exempted from them, i. 42

Predestination, doctrine of, passages supposed to countenance it, i. 154. 610

Presbyter, remarks on the import of the term, i. 597; ii. 331. 424. 450

Presbyterians, their vain gloss upon Titus i. 5, ii. 450

Present Tense, peculiar use of it unperceived by Commentators, ii. 159. Use of the present for the Future, i. 147. 139. 496, 497 Priests, Chief, their office, i. 8. Named along with the "Scribes," in denoting the Sanhedrim, ib.

"Prisoner of Jesus Christ," import of the expression, ii. 459 Property, arbitrary disposal of it under the Jewish law, not permitted to a father, i. 337
"Prophecy, a more sure word of," these words explained, ii. 607. "Not of private interpretation," 608
"Prophecy," definition of the word, ii. 609. In what sense employed in the New Test., i. 88. 267. The gift of prophecy sometimes imparted even to bad men, 469 Prophetical office in the primitive Church, nature of it, ii. 184
"Prophets, the, were until John," sense of this passage, i. 61
Propitiation, Scriptural import of the term, ii. 477
Proseuchæ, observations on, i. 626
Prudence and circumspection, remarkable terms in which these virtues are recommended to the Ephesians and Colossians, ii. 323 Psalm lxxix. 5, erroneous rendering of, in the Authorized Translation, ii. 157. Psalm xvi. whether it has a double sense, i. 535. Psalm viii. 6, remarks on, 474. Psalm xxii., its acknowledged reference to the Messiah, 174. 476. "Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs," these terms explained, 324
"Psalms," denoting the Hagiographia, i. 384 Public worship, importance of, ii. 524 Punishments, future, eternal in duration, i. 155. 226. Description of them, 226 Purification, on the days of, i. 272. Before the Paschal feast, observations on, 470 Purple garments, why used by the noble and rich, i. 343

R.

Rahab, on the true sense of the terms זונה and πόρνη, applied to her, ii. 536
Ravens, remarkable instinct in them, i. 325
Reclining, the posture of, less ancient than that of sitting, i. 159
"Redeeming the time," &c., meaning of the phrase, ii. 322 Redemption, universality of, i. 119; ii. 225. 423
Red Sea, why so called, i. 566; ii. 535
"Reed shaken with the wind," import of the expression, i. 60
Reference, method of, amongst the ancients, ii. 484 Regeneration, nature and necessity of, i. 113. Baptismal regeneration, its nature, ii. 456 Rent, most ancient mode of paying, i. 125, 126
Repentance, Scriptural, import of, i. 12. 537. "Renew to repentance," Heb. vi. 6, observations on, ii. 492
Rest, reserved for the people of God, its nature, ii. 482 Resurrection, notions of the Sadducees and Pharisees respecting, i. 131. 682; and of the Jewish Rabbins, 131 Our Lord's arguments in proof of the Resurrection, 118. Resurrection of the saints at the Crucifixion, 176. St. Paul's argument from the Resurrection of Christ, 608; ii. 186, 187. His views concerning the general resurrection, 388 Retaliation, law and custom of the Jews respecting, i. 30 Riches, danger of, i. 112 Righteousness, imputed, remarks on, with reference to Abraham, ii. 27
"Right hand, let not your, know what your left hand doeth," remarks on, i. 32. "Right hand, sitting on the," import of the phrase, i. 134. Right hand, placing at the, import of the expression, 154
"Rivers of living water," the phrase explained and illustrated, i. 438 Rock. "Upon this Rock I will build my Church," in what sense to be understood, i. 95
Romans, Epistle to the, date and design of it, ii. 3 Romans, limitation of their principle of toleration, i. 629. Nature and extent of their privilege of appealing to Cæsar, 679. Their custody of prisoners, its nature, 697
Rome, Church at, supposed origin of, i. 641; ii. 3
Rome, Church of, its unwarrantable ascription of a supremacy of dignity to the Apostle Peter, i. 54. 95—97. Passage upon which it grounds the practice of offering prayers and masses for the dead, ii. 448
"Root of bitterness," the phrase explained and illustrated, ii. 544 Rudders, two anciently used by the ancients with large ships of burden, i. 693

S.

Sabbath, change of it to the first day of the week, i. 178. Patriarchal Sabbath, ib. 193. "The Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath," meaning of this, ib. "The second Sabbath after the first" (Luke vi. 1), signification of the expression, 288. Works of mercy and necessity performed on the Sabbath by the Jews, 330. Anciently a day of feasting and entertainment with them, 333. Our Lord defends his performing works of mercy on it, 417. A type of the heavenly rest, ii. 484. Whether instituted prior to circumcision? i. 435
Sabbath day's journey, distance of, i. 528 Sacrilege, sense in which it is to be understood in the New Test., ii. 18. Punishment of, by the law, i. 665 Sadducees, their tenets respecting the Resurrection, i. 131, 132. 682. Whence borrowed, ii. 186
Salem, whether the same as Jerusalem, ii. 498
Salt, its loss of savour, remarks on, i. 24. "Seasoned with salt" (Col. iv. 6), ii. 372
"Salted with fire," meaning of this expression, i. 227 Salvation, how to be obtained, i. 268. A summary of the doctrines of, ii. 457 Samaritans, a disputed point among the Rabbins, whether they were to be regarded as Gentiles, i. 348. Enmity between them and the Jews, 409. Reason assigned by them for their reverence for Mount Gerizim, 410. Import of our Lord's rebuke of them (John iv. 22), 411. Correct ideas of the Messiah's character probably entertained by them, 412. The word Samaritan employed as a term of reproach, 449
Sanctify, Scriptural import of the term, i. 503. In what sense the unbelieving husband or wife is said (1 Cor. vii. 14) to be sanctified by the believing partner, ii. 136
"Sandals, take off thy," remarks on these words, i. 565

Sanhedrim, on the alarm felt by them respecting the miracles wrought by our Lord, i. 469. Their authority with foreign Jews, 579
Satan as lightning falling from heaven, on the import of the words, i. 313 Scandals in the Church, duty of avoiding, ii. 98 Schism, nature of the offence, ii. 457
"Schoolmaster," the Law incorrectly so styled in the authorized Version (Gal. iii. 24), ii. 276 Scourging, nature of the punishment amongst the Romans, i. 172. 375. 536. 666. Nature of it amongst the Jews, 556; ii. 249
Scribes, their office, i. 8
Scriptures, form of citing, among the Jewish doctors, i. 238. Mode of reading them in the Jewish synagogues, 281
Scripture, a loose mode of interpreting, censured, ii. 515 Sea, walking on the, a property of the Deity, i. 86 Sealing, on the ancient custom of, i. 178. Figurative sense of the action, 407
"Sealed by the Holy Ghost," import of, ii. 300
"See God," force of this expression, i. 23
"Seeing, they see not," a proverbial expression, i. 197
Self-deception, observations on, ii. 444
Self-murderers, tenet of the Pharisees respecting, i. 444 Septuagint, discrepancies between it and the Hebrew, and the New Test., i. 19. 66. 79. 89. 108. 121. 161. 282. 577. 619; ii. 520. 527. Used by the Jews of the Western Dispersion, 463
Sepulchral monuments in the East, remarks on, i. 202 Serpent, the brazen, whether a type of Christ, i. 404
"Servant of God," import of the expression, ii. 4 Seven, the number, observations on, i. 106. Sometimes put for an indefinite number, 72. 346
"Seventy, the," remarks on, i. 311
Shaking the head, denoting what, i. 174
Shechinah, allusion to it in the New Test., i. 100. 271. 390. 570. 579
Sheep, the fact of their, anciently, preceding the shepherd, implied in the name (πρόβατον), i. 457 Sheep's clothing, worn by the false teachers among the Pharisees, i. 40
Sheep-market, import of the term thus rendered, i. 415
Shepherds, in the East, precede their flocks, i. 457 Shew-bread, why so denominated, ii. 510
"Shoes, to bear," anciently implied the most servile office, i. 14 Signs and gifts promised to believers, i. 255
"Signs and wonders" (Matt. xxiv. 24), whether real or pretended? i. 145 Siloam, on the tower of, i. 329. On the fountain of, 452
Simeon's Nunc Dimittis, remarks on it, i. 273
Simon, meaning of the name, i. 95
Simon Magus, import of the epithet applied to him, i. 572 Sin and disease, the ideas of, connected by the Jews, i. 45. Sin personified as a tyrant, ii. 39. The cause of unbelief, 401. "Sin unto death," observations on, 635
Sinai, Mount, ancient appellation of, ii. 284. Whether the same as Horeb, i. 565
"Sinneth not," force of this expression, ii. 627
Sitting, the posture of, more ancient than that of reclining, i. 159
Sleep, the term figuratively employed to denote death, i. 465 Socinians, their misinterpretation of John i. 2, i. 388. Strong argument against their views respecting the Trinity, 496. Their misconstruction of the confession of St. Thomas, 519. Their disingenuous treatment of Acts xvi. 7, 625. Their futile objections to the orthodox interpretation of Rom. ix. 5, 60. Their gloss upon Col. i. 15, 359. Their heretical notions completely overturned by the two first chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrews, 471
Solomon's porch, what, and why so called, i. 461
"Son," on the application of the term to Timothy by St. Paul, ii. 407
"Son of God," meaning of the expression, i. 17. 511. "Sons of God," angels so called, and why, 362
"Son of man," a title of the Messiah, origin and nature of the appellation, i. 45. 193. Observations on, 419. Emendation of the English Version of the text, John xii. 34, 475
"Son of David," a title of the Messiah, observations on, i. 52
Sosthenes (1 Cor. i. 1), conjectures respecting, ii. 101 Soul, may have perception when out of the body, ii. 251 Spirit, (πνεῦμα,) Bishop's Middleton's enumeration of the meanings of the word in the N. T., i. 5. "In spirit and in truth," the phrase explained, 411 Spiritual gifts, the nature and use of them, ii. 167. 237 Standing, the usual posture of the Jews in prayer, i. 33. 351
"Stars falling from heaven," meaning of the expression, i. 146
Stephen, St., remarks on his address to the Jews, i. 560. His allusion to Jewish traditions, 561. Apparent discrepancies in his address noticed, 560—62
Stoics, their religious tenets, i. 634; ii. 186
Stone's throw, a, observations on the phrase, i. 371
Stoning, its mode of infliction determined by the Law, as well as the crimes for which it was appointed, i. 360. Ancient mode of inflicting the punishment, 441. Different modes of infliction among the Jews, 127
Strangled, why the eating of animals so killed was forbidden, i. 621. 623
Subjunctive mood employed for the Future Indicative, i. 138
Suicide, tenet of the Pharisees respecting the punishment reserved for it, i. 444
Sun, darkening of the, meaning of this, i. 146 Swear, in what sense God is said to, i. 536; ii. 483 Swine, the feeding of, deemed amongst the vilest employments, i. 338 Sword, the term used symbolically of war and civil commotion, i. 58. Our Lord's advice to his disciples, to provide a sword, explained, 370
Sychar, originally called Sychem, why altered by the Jews, i. 408
Symbolical actions prevalent in the early ages, i. 103. 659
Synagogue, ruler of, nature of his office, i. 204
Syria (Gal. i. 21), district so called, where situate, ii. 263.

T.

Tabernacle of witness, why so called, i. 568 Tabernacles, feast of, purpose of our Lord in attending it before his death, i. 431. The last great day of, origin of its institution, 437
"Take the Cross," meaning of the expression, i. 58
Talmud, origin and contents of it, i. 87
To taste, used anciently in the sense of to have experience of, ii. 493 Temple, expulsion of the buyers and sellers from the, on the day after our Lord's public entry into Jerusalem, i. 122. Testimony of Josephus respecting the magnitude of the stones with which it was built, 241. Rebuilding of it by Zorobabel and Herod, 400
Temple service, manner and intent of it, ii. 508
Temptation and Trial, benefits of, ii. 556. The nature of those which may be ascribed to God, 557 Temptation of our Lord, remarks on, i. 16. Parallelism between it and that of Adam and Eve in Paradise, ib. Difference in the order of the temptations, as recorded by Matthew and Luke, 17. 280. On deliverance from temptation, ii. 155
Ten, used as a round number, i. 150. 356
"Testament," the word διαθήκη erroneously so rendered (Matt. xxvi. 28), i. 160; (Heb. ix. 15,) ii. 514
Testimonies, Judicial, Jewish classification of, i. 247
Thanksgiving, on the duty of, ii. 324
Thessalonians, First Epistle to, date and design of it, ii. 374. Origin and character of the church, ib.
Thessalonians, Second Epistle to, its date and design, ii. 394 Theudas, opinions respecting him, i. 555
Thomas, St., on his words, "My Lord, and my God," i. 519 Thoughts, evil, defiling nature of, held by the heathen moralists, i. 27
Three, that number anciently emphatical, i. 589. Used as an uncertain number, ii. 253
"Thy sins be forgiven thee," remarks on these words, i. 49
Time, mode of reckoning among the Jews and Greeks, i. 71
"Time, fulness of," meaning of the expression, i. 186
Timothy, why circumcised by St. Paul, i. 624
Timothy, First Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 406
Timothy, Second Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 433. 449 Tithes, remote antiquity of, asserted and demonstrated by Spelman and Selden, ii. 499 Titus, account of him, ii. 448. Why not circumcised, 263. Plainly invested by St. Paul with Episcopal authority, 450
Titus, Epistle to, date and design of, ii. 449
"To-day and to-morrow," import of this phrase, i. 332. "To-day," meaning of, ii. 484
Tombs, uses to which they were occasionally applied both by Jews and Heathens, i. 202 Tongue, difficulty and importance of governing it, ii. 566 Tongues, gift of, i. 531. Tongues of fire, ib.
"Tongues, interpretation of," nature of the gift, ii. 171 Town-clerk (Acts xix. 35), import of the term, i. 650
Transfiguration of our Lord, obss. on the, i. 99 Tribute-money ("the didrachmas"), nature and amount of the tax, i. 102 Trinity, doctrine of, arguments in proof of it, i. 181. 496; ii. 169. 278
"Trumpet, thou shalt not sound a," meaning of this interdiction, i. 32. "At the last trump," explained, ii. 198 Truth, observations on, ii. 316
Type and Allegory, difference between them, ii. 283 Tyrannus, school of, conjectures respecting, i. 646

U.

Unbelief originates in enmity of heart to God, i. 405. The cause of sin, ii. 401. 481
"Unction from the Holy One," meaning of, ii. 625
"Undergirding the ship" (Acts xxvii. 17), meaning of the phrase, i. 690 Unitarians, their groundless objections to the genuineness of the two first chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel, i. 2. Refutation of their perversion of Isa. xxx. 5, 45. Their unfounded inferences from Matt. xxiv. 36, 148. Their wrong notions respecting the Logos, 388. Their erroneous translation of the words Υἱὸς Ὑψίστου, 262. Their abuse of the words of Christ (John xiv. 28), 388. Their cause not served by Eph. i. 17, ii. 301. 488. Their erroneous interpretation of 1 Tim. i. 17, 411. Their perversion of the sense of 1 Tim. ii. 5, 412. Their erroneous conceptions of the manner in which the mediation of Christ was effected, 506

V.

Veil of the Temple rent at the Crucifixion, remarks on, i. 176 Vices, observations on the mode in which they are classified by St. Paul, ii. 290. 409
"Vine, I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the," sense of this passage, i. 161 Vinegar mingled with gall, administered to our Lord, remarks on, i. 173. Discrepancy between Matthew and Mark respecting this transaction, ib.
Virtues, Christian, enumeration of, ii. 604 Visions, why sometimes thrice repeated, i. 589
"Volume of the book," the phrase explained, ii. 520
Vulgate, the, of little authority when unsupported by the ancient Italic, i. 536

W.

Washing the hands, symbolical of what, i. 171. Washing of the feet, on the custom of, 478
Watchfulness, Christian, observations on, i. 163
"Way, the," the Christian religion anciently so denominated, i. 579. 676 Wedding-garment, observations on, i. 129
White, a symbol of purity, i. 129. 179; ii. 663. White Stone (Rev. ii. 17), how to be understood, 653
Whited sepulchres, origin and meaning of the expression, i. 138 Widows, their offices in the primitive church, ii. 424
Widowhood, virtuous, held in great honour among the Jews, i. 275

Wine, in the Paschal feast, mixed with water, i. 160. Wine in the East, red, 161. Wine and oil employed in Palestine for the cleansing and healing of wounds, 314
" Wisdom of God, the" (Luke xi. 49), by many interpreted of Christ, i. 321 Wisdom of the people of this world " in their generation," i. 341
" Witchcraft," import of the term erroneously so rendered Gal. v. 20, ii. 290, 291
" Wo unto you" (Luke vi. 25), the import of this expression declarative, not imprecative, i. 291 Women, public duties discharged by them in the Primitive Church, ii. 97. 424. Enjoined to have their heads covered in public worship, ground of the precept, 160. Jerome's observation, that all heresies begin with them, 442
Word of God, the corruption of it alluded to 2 Cor. ii. 17, explained, ii. 212
" Word of truth, rightly dividing the," meaning of this, ii. 438
" Word of wisdom, the" (1 Cor. xii. 8), nature of the gift, ii. 170 Words, omission of difficult ones, Critical canon respecting, i. 457
" World, the whole," probable import of the term so rendered in Luke ii. 1, i. 268. Jewish mode of computing its duration, ii. 154
" World to come, the," meaning of the expression, ii. 473

Y.

" Yea, yea" (2 Cor. i. 17), import of the expression, ii. 209

Z.

Zacchæus, not a Gentile, as supposed by some Commentators, i. 355
Zacharias, son of Barachias, opinions of Commentators respecting the person so called, i. 139 Zacharias, Father of John the Baptist, not the High Priest, i. 258. Supposed nature of his prayer in the Temple, 259. Marked difference between his conduct and that of Abraham, 261. His Hymn expressed in the language which the Prophets have employed in describing the times of the Messiah, 262
Zelotæ, on the enormities perpetrated by, i. 493

THE END.

GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS, ST. JOHN'S SQUARE, LONDON.

There is : now no condemnation to them who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit

BS2341 .B655 1845 v.2
[He kaine diatheke], the Greek Princeton Theological Seminary–Speer Library 1 1012 00054 9859